Note: Senate Report No. 91-552 not included. SSA-related amendments added during Senate debate.

NOTICE OF CONSIDERATION OF SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

Mr. MANSFIELD. Now, Mr. President, it is the intention of the leadership to ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1443, H.R. 17550, Social Security Amendments of 1970: that it be laid before the Senate and made the pending business.

When that measure is pending, the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) will then proceed, I understand, for approximately 2 hours.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1443, H.R. 17550. I do this so that it will become the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the Senator, does he ask unanimous consent or move?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I move, yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) to what I am about to say.

I ask unanimous consent that the following members of the staff of the Legislative Reference Service, Education and Public Welfare Division, be granted the privileges of the floor during the debate on the Social Security Amendments of 1970, H.R. 17550:

Mr. Fred Arner, Mrs. Frances Crowley, Mr. Joe DeHumphries, and Miss Margaret Malone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I wonder if the Senator would include in that unanimous consent Mr. Taggert Adams of my staff, to have the privilege of the floor during the consideration of the family assistance provision.

Mr. JAVITS. Would the Senator add the name of Kenneth Guenther and John Scales?

Mr. LONG. Are they not on the Senator's staff?

Mr. JAVITS. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in the event that it should become necessary to clear the floor of legislative assistants, I ask unanimous consent that two persons from the staff of the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) be permitted the privilege of the floor, and one from the staff of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF).

Mr. MONDALE. Would the Senator include the name of Ruth Johnstone?

Mr. LONG. One from the staff of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Janus and Mr. Blumenthal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for me to make a unanimous-consent request? It will not take 10 seconds.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to Senators who wish to ask unanimous consent, reserving my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550), an act to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, H.R. 17550, the social security amendments of 1970, is truly a monumental bill. In terms of dollars, the $10 billion of benefits provided by this bill make it the most significant social insurance legislation Congress has ever considered. In terms of people, the impact of the bill—considered as a whole—is even more impressive. Not only does the measure directly affect the lives of 26 million social security beneficiaries but also it provides welfare increases for 3 million aged, blind, and disabled welfare recipients and pension increases for 1,600,000 needy veterans and their widows.

In addition, through the trade amendments included in this bill more than 2,500,000 textile and shoe employees will receive a sense of job security directly from the bill and tens of millions more employees will find comfort in the new rules governing Tariff Commission investigations of injury resulting from increased imports.

Under the amendments to upgrade the work incentive plan, the bill offers the hope of independence to 2 million persons who today are unable to qualify for gainful employment and must suffer the indignity of dependence on welfare to sustain themselves and their families.

Mr. President, the Committee on Finance has added important new titles to the bill—one dealing with international trade matters, and another which includes a substantial test of various alternatives to the welfare mess and offers significant reforms in the programs of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled. This latter part of the bill also reaffirms the intent of Congress in several areas regarding eligibility for welfare—areas where the courts have misconstrued the welfare statutes with resulting large increases in welfare caseloads.

These new titles are added to the bill with a single thought in mind—to expedite the legislative process. It is axiomatic that one bill can be acted on in less time than three. The committee was advised that amendments to add the trade bill and amendments to add the family assistance plan to this bill would be offered during the debate on the bill. They all look on this social security bill as a measure that is going to be presented to the President and that fact makes the bill a prime target for controversial amendments late in the session.

There are Senators on the Finance Committee who favored these amendments and there are others who oppose them. We spent considerable time discussing procedures for acting on the bill and in the final analysis it was agreed that we would vote on the questions in committee. The crucial motion to add the family assistance plan was rejected by a 6-to-10 vote of the committee. The crucial vote on the trade bill came as a motion to separate it from the social security bill. The motion failed by a vote of 6 to 11.

So the bill as reported by the committee does not include the family assistance plan but it does include the trade bill. The basic matters covered by the trade amendment are not new to the Senate. Nonetheless, the committee decided unanimously to interrupt its executive sessions and hold public hearings on the trade amendments before we voted on them.

I had been urged previously by 15 or so Senators to hold hearings on this bill before the committee acted. Among those signing the request was the senior Senator from New York. During our 2 days of hearings the committee heard from the Office of Special Trade Representative, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of State, the Director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and a number of broad-based trade associations who had expressed interest in testifying. While we did not have time to hear all those whom we would have wished to hear, the committee members did get a clear indication of the administration's position on this bill and also of the position of many interested parties.

The committee members studied intently the massive volume of statements submitted for the record. We also had available to us 16 volumes of House hearings on this matter, which took over 1 month of public testimony, the hearings of the Committee on Finance held in 1967, which covered some 1,200 pages of testimony, and the committee's oversight review of U.S. trade policy in 1968 covering another 1,000 pages of submitted documents.

Considering the features of the bill which revise the social security tax structure, it is a fair statement that H.R. 17550 literally reaches into every home in America.

The following chart indicates the value of benefits included in H.R. 17550 as reported by the Committee on Finance, and the number of persons affected by them.

CHART 1.—INCREASED BENEFITS UNDER H.R. 17550

Total value of benefits in H.R. 17550	10,000,000,000

Let me now describe the significant features of the committee bill, and I shall submit for the record a more detailed summary of the provisions of the bill.

The committee bill provides $6,500,000,000 of additional benefits under the cash portion of the social security program.

INCREASE IN SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

Under the committee bill, social security payments to the nearly 26 million beneficiaries on the rolls at the end of January 1971, and to those who come on the rolls after that date, would be increased by 10 percent, with a new minimum benefit of $100.

The House-passed bill would have increased benefits by 5 percent, with a minimum benefit of $67.20. The committee increased the minimum social security benefit from the $67.20 in the House bill to $100 in order to provide substantial help for those who have the greatest need—those whose social security benefits are so low that if they have no other income—and most do not—they are unable to meet their basic everyday needs for food and shelter.

Under present law monthly benefits for workers who retire at age 65 in 1971 now range from $64 to $193.70; under the House-passed bill they would range from $67.20 to $203.40; under the committee bill they would range from $100 to $213.10. Benefits for a couple in January 1971 would average $198 under present law; under the House-passed bill they would average $217; under the committee bill they would be increased to $233. For a widowed mother with two children, the average benefit for January 1971 under present law would be $295; under the House-passed bill it would be $311; under the committee bill it would be $331. The benefit increase would mean additional benefit payments of $5,000,000,000 in the first year.

Although the benefit increase will be effective for January 1971, the Social Security Administration advises us that legislation this late in the year makes it impossible to get the increased benefits into the hands of the beneficiaries with the regular check that goes out on February 3. They need about 3 months to adjust their records and computers before they can pay at the new rates.

Therefore, the first check at the new rates will be sent out on April 3, and later in the month another check representing the retroactive increase for January and February will be sent out. This is the same procedure followed last year when a benefit increase was effective for January, but was not paid until April.

Mr. President, this chart compares the benefits under the committee bill with the benefits available under present law and those which would have applied under the House bill for a single person and a married couple with various levels of earnings.

INCREASE IN FAMILY MAXIMUMS

The committee bill also corrects a discrimination under which families already on the rolls at the time of enactment of a social security increase get the increase while those coming on the rolls in the future are denied it. Under our bill, all families will benefit from this increase and from future increases without regard to when they become eligible for benefits.

COST-OF LIVING INCREASES

Once the benefits are brought up to date, they need to be kept up to date. And while the Congress has in the past acted to maintain social security benefits at realistic and adequate levels, there have been lags in legislation during times of rapidly rising prices. The automatic cost-of-living increases provided in H.R. 17550 will insure that such lags in benefit increases will not occur in the future.

While the committee is in agreement with the sense of the House bill as to the desirability of an automatic adjustment in social security benefits, the committee bill revises the House text to stress the role of the Congress in setting social security tax and benefit levels. Under the committee bill, social security benefits would rise automatically as the cost of living goes up in the event Congress failed to legislate on social security benefits or taxes. The full cost of the automatic benefit increases would be met equally by increases in tax rates and in the tax base which would go into effect at the same time that benefits are increased, with the strictly actuarial function of determining the base and the rates being performed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

The committee bill provides that the automatic increases would go into effect unless Congress acts otherwise to effect a change in social security benefit levels, a change in the schedule of social security tax rates, or a change in the social security tax base. In effect, we are guaranteeing that congressional inaction will not prevent automatic social security hikes in periods of rising prices.

SPECIAL PAYMENTS TO PEOPLE AGE 72 AND OLDER

Under present law, special payments of $46 a month for an individual and $69 for a couple are made to people age 72 and over who have not worked under the program long enough to qualify for regular cash benefits. This is the so-called Prouty amendment of 1966. Under the committee bill, as under the House bill, the payments would be increased January 1, 1971, by 5 percent, to $48.30 a month for an individual and $72.50 for a couple.

LIBERALIZATION OF THE RETIREMENT TEST

Another important feature of the committee bill makes significant improvements in the retirement test. These improvements—which were also in the House bill—provide an increase from $1,680 to $2,000 in the amount a beneficiary under age 72 may earn in a year and still be paid full social security benefits for that year. The change reflects increases in earnings levels that have occurred since the present amount of $1,680 was set in 1967. The bill also provides for automatic upward adjustments of the amount in the future as earnings levels rise, thereby making it unnecessary for Congress to act in the future to keep the earnings exemption in line with raises in wage levels generally.

Under present law, each $2 earned between $1,680 and $2,880 results in a $1 reduction in benefits; each dollar earned above $2,880 reduces benefits by $1. This dollar-for-dollar reduction that applies to earnings above $2,880 reduces incentives for beneficiaries to work. The committee bill would provide for a $1 reduction for each $2 earned with respect to all earnings above $2,000, so that the more a beneficiary works and earns, the more spendable income he would have. The bill would also increase from $140 to $166.66 the amount of wages the beneficiary may earn in a given month and get benefits for that month, regardless of his annual earnings.

In 1971 about 650,000 beneficiaries would receive additional benefits, and about 380,000 persons who would receive no benefit under present law would receive some benefits as a result of the retirement test liberalizations. The additional benefit payments for the first full year would be about $404,000,000.

INCREASED WIDOW'S AND WIDOWER'S INSURANCE BENEFITS

Both the House bill and the committee bill are aimed at providing benefits to a widow equal to the benefits the widow's deceased husband was receiving or would have received. Unfortunately, the way the House bill was written a widow could actually receive a benefit substantially higher than her husband received before his death. Generally, under the committee bill the widow would receive either 100 percent of the benefit her husband was actually receiving at the time of his death, or, if he was not receiving benefits, 100 percent of the benefit he would have been eligible for at age 65.

About 2,700,000 widows and widowers on the rolls at the end of January 1971 would receive additional benefits, and $649,000,000 additional benefit payments would be made in the first full year.

AGE 62 COMPUTATION POINT FOR MEN

Under the present law, the method of computing benefits for men and women differs in that years up to age 65 must be taken into account in determining average earnings for men, while for women only years up to age 62 must be taken into account. Also, benefit eligibility is figured up to age 65 for men and up to age 62 for women. These differences, which provide special advantages for women, would be eliminated by applying the same rules to men as now apply to women.

Under the committee's bill, there would be a gradual transition to the new procedures. The age 62 computation would apply only to those becoming entitled to benefits in the future; the number of years used in determining insured status and in computing benefits for men would be reduced in three steps so that men reaching age 62 in 1973 and later would have only years up to age 62 taken into account in determining insured status and average earnings.

In the first full year, an additional $6,000,000 in benefits would be paid out under this provision. This amount will scale upward in future years, eventually involving $1,000,000,000. Under the change in benefit eligibility requirements for men, some 2,000 people—workers, their dependents and survivors not eligible under present law—would be added to the rolls in the first year.

ADOPTIONS

The committee simplified the adoption rules in present law so that eligibility of children adopted by retired workers and children adopted by disabled workers would be determined under common rules. Under the committee bill, a child who is adopted after a worker is entitled to benefits would be able to get child's benefits based on the worker's earnings if: First, the adoption was decreed by a court of competent jurisdiction within the United States; second, the child lived with the worker in the United States for the year before the worker became disabled or entitled to an old-age or disability insurance benefit; three, the child received at least one-half of his support from the worker for that year; and fourth, the child was under age 18 at the time he began living with the worker.

These simplified rules will bring considerable equity to a very complex area of the law and eliminate the need for many special purpose amendments in the future.

PROVISIONS RELATING TO DISABILITY

Under present law, there is a 6-month waiting period before a disabled person is eligible for social security disability insurance benefits. However, the month of disablement does not count as part of the waiting period. Also, the check for the month following the waiting period is not paid until the next month. This has caused considerable hardship to disabled people, particularly those suffering a terminal illness. The committee's bill would reduce the waiting period from 6 months to 4 months. About 140,000 people—disabled workers and their dependents and disabled widows and widowers—would be able to receive a benefit for January 1971 as a result of this provision. About $185 million in additional benefits would be paid out during the first full year.

DISABILITY OFFSET

The committee deleted the provision in the House bill which would have raised the ceiling on income from combined workmen's compensation and social security disability insurance benefits from 80 percent to 100 percent of the disabled worker's average current earnings before the onset of his disability. The objective of the offset provisions is to avoid the payment of combined amounts of social security benefits and workmen's compensation payments that would be excessive in comparison with the beneficiary's earnings before he became disabled. Although the committee agrees with the compassionate objective of the House bill, it feared the combination of First, payments equal to past wages, plus, second, tax exemption for these amounts, could result in payments in excess of prior take-home pay and this could jeopardize efforts to rehabilitate the worker and restore him to gainful employment. The committee was of the opinion that the best interest of the disabled worker in his own rehabilitation.

MEDICARE AND MEDICAID

During the past 2 years, the committee has devoted an extensive and almost disproportionate share of its time to determining and evaluating the many problems in the huge medicare and medicaid programs.

Parenthetically, it might be worthwhile to mention that during our years of work we have shared with the Committee on Ways and Means information we have developed. The Committee on Ways and Means, in turn, has given us the benefit of their efforts.

The medicare and medicaid programs are here to stay. With that in mind, it was more important than ever for the committee to act to correct the problems which our work revealed. The House, in its bill, attempted to and did develop solutions to some of the important problems. We accepted, and in some instances, improved upon amendments in the House bill designed to bring medicare and medicaid costs under control. We have also added amendments to further achieve the common objectives of both the House and Senate—reasonable and equitable controls on the costs and utilization of health care services with the minimum amount of redtape.

We believe the amendments of the House and those added by the Finance Committee will go a very long way toward assuring the taxpayers and the millions of citizens who depend upon medicare and medicaid that those programs will function more effectively and economically in delivering quality health care.

Let me describe the more important features of this part of the committee's bill.

PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW ORGANIZATIONS

My distinguished colleague from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) has worked very hard on the provision in the committee's bill that provides for the establishment and use of professional standards review organizations. I would not wish to let this opportunity go by without recognizing his outstanding efforts in developing this provision.

Under this provision, professional standards review organizations would be established to review the utilization of health care provided under the medicare and medicaid programs. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would, after consultation with national and local health professions and agencies, designate appropriate areas throughout the Nation for which professional standards review organizations would be established. Areas may cover an entire State or parts of a State, but generally a minimum of 300 practicing doctors would be included within one area.

Organizations representing substantial numbers of physicians in an area, such as medical foundations and societies, would be invited and encouraged to participate. Where the Secretary finds that such organizations are not willing or cannot reasonably be expected to develop capabilities to carry out professional standards review organization functions in an effective, economical, and timely manner, he would enter into agreements with such other agencies or organizations with professional competence as he finds are willing and capable of carrying out such functions.

The Secretary would approve those organizations which can reasonably be expected to improve and expand the professional review process. The initial approval would be made on a conditional basis, not to exceed 2 years, with the review organizations operating concurrently with the present review system. During the transitional period, medicare carriers and intermediaries are expected to abide by the decision of the professional standards review organization where the professional standards review organization has acted. This reliance will permit a more complete appraisal of the effectiveness of the conditionally approved professional standards review organization. Where performance of an organization is unsatisfactory, and the Secretary's efforts to bring about prompt necessary improvement fail, he could terminate its participation.

Provider, physician, and patient profiles and other relevant data would be collected and reviewed on an ongoing basis to the maximum extent feasible to identify persons and institutions that provide services requiring more extensive review. Regional norms of care would be used in the review process as routine checkpoints in determining when excessive services may have been provided. The norms would be used in determining the point at which physician certification of need for continued institutional care would be made and reviewed. Initial priority in assembling and using data and profiles would be assigned to those areas most productive in pinpointing problems so as to conserve physician time and maximize the productivity of physician review.

The professional standards review organization would be permitted to employ the services of qualified personnel, such as registered nurses, who could, under the direction and control of physicians, aid in assuring effective and timely review. They would also be authorized to use the services of effective hospital utilization review committees and local medical society review committees in performing their tasks.

Where advance approval by the review organizations for institutional admission is required, such approval would provide the basis for a presumption of medical necessity for purposes of medicare and medicaid benefit payments. Failure of a physician, institution, or other health care supplier to seek advance approval, where required, could be considered cause for disallowance of affected claims.

In addition to acting on their own initiative, the review organizations would report on matters referred to them by the Secretary. They would also recommend appropriate action against persons responsible for gross or continued overuse of services, use of services in an unnecessarily costly manner, or for inadequate quality of services and would act to the extent of their authority or influence to correct improper activities.

A National Professional Standards Review Council would be established by the Secretary to review the operations of the local area review organizations, advise the Secretary on their effectiveness, and make recommendations for their improvement. The Council would be composed of physicians, a majority of whom would be selected from nominees of national organizations representing practicing physicians. Other physicians on the Council would be recommended by consumers and other health care interests.

INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR HEALTH ADMINISTRATION

We on the committee have been increasingly concerned about making sure that the medicare and medicaid programs operate effectively and as Congress intends. I know other Members of the Congress and the people who administer these programs have been concerned, too. But these programs are very complex and far reaching and sometimes the review processes being used cannot identify problems or discrepancies as soon as we all would like. And sometimes there is no way to promptly correct the problems that have been found.

I want to commend two distinguished members of the committee—the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), and the Senator from Delaware (Mr. WILLIAMS)—who sponsored a provision in the committee bill that will go a long way to alleviate our concern about these difficulties. The provision will establish an Office of Inspector General for Health Administration within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

His responsibilities will be patterned after the successful approach by the Agency for International Development and the investigative responsibilities, with respect to congressional requests, required of the U.S. Tariff Commission. In carrying out his responsibilites, he will not be under the control of any officer of Health, Education, and Welfare other than the Secretary, and he will be provided with sufficient authority to make sure that medicare and medicaid function as Congress intends. He will continuously review these programs, and any other health programs established under social secruity, to determine their efficiency and economy of administration, their compliance with the law, and the extent to which the objectives and purposes for which they were established are being realized.

He will recommend ways to correct deficiencies or to improve these programs. And he will have the authority to suspend regulations, or practices or procedures which he finds not in harmony with congressional intent or which will lead to inefficiency and waste. It is important to have a mechanism for dynamic and ongoing review of these programs, and that the person with this responsibility be at a level where he can promptly call attention to problems and deal with them in a timely and effective fashion. Armed with the authority provided under this provision, I believe the voice of the Inspector General will be effective in improving the efficiency and economy with which the medicare and medicaid programs of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare are administered.

WAIVER OF NURSING REQUIREMENTS IN RURAL HOSPITALS

Several members of the committee were concerned about the problem created by the need to assure the availability of hospital services of adequate quality in rural areas and the fact that existing shortages of qualified nursing personnel generally make it difficult for some rural hospitals to meet the nursing staff requirements in present law. The committee has attempted to resolve this problem by including in the bill a provision that would allow the Secretary, under certain conditions, to waive the medicare requirement that a hospital have registered professional nurses on duty around the clock. This requirement could be waived only if, First, the hospital has at least a registered nurse on the daytime shift, Second, has made, and is continuing to make, a real effort to hire enough nurses to meet the requirements, and Third, is unable to employ qualified personnel because of nursing shortages in the area. Also, the hospital must be located in an isolated geographical area in which hospital facilities are in short supply and the closest other facilities are not easily accessible to people of the area. And finally, it must be known that nonparticipation of the hospital would seriously reduce the availability of hospital services to medicare beneficiaries living in the area.

The Secretary would, of course, regularly review the situation with respect to each of these hospitals and the waiver would be granted on an annual basis for a period of only one year. This waiver would apply only to the nursing staff requirements and would expire on December 31, 1975.

PROFICIENCY TESTING OF HEALTH PERSONNEL

In 1967 the committee recommended that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare consult with appropriate professional health organizations and State health agencies to explore, develop, and apply appropriate means—including testing procedures—for determining the proficiency of health care personnel otherwise disqualified or limited in responsibility under regulations of the Secretary.

The Department has taken little or no action, except with respect to directors of clinical laboratories, in developing proficiency testing and training courses. The personnel problems which existed in 1967 and which the committee sought to correct have been aggravated as a result of the Department's continued inaction.

We are all aware of the acute shortage of nursing personnel in America. This has forced many hundreds of nursing homes to cover some shifts with "waived" practical nurses. These are practical nurses, who do not have the required formal training, and who, in many States, have been licensed on a waivered basis. Undoubtedly, a substantial proportion of these practical nurses, who have years of experience, are competent, but they do not meet the medicare and medicaid charge-nurse requirements. Therefore, unfortunately, many otherwise-qualified nursing homes are being or soon may be forced out of the medicare program be cause of the unavailability of a registered nurse or a licensed practical nurse who meets the medicare requirements. Similar problems exist with respect to physical therapists, medical technologists, and psychiatric technicians.

The committee has therefore added to the House bill a provision which requires the Secretary to explore, develop, and apply appropriate means of determining the proficiency of health personnel disqualified or limited in responsibility under present regulations. The committee expects that the Secretary will regularly report to it and to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives concerning the progress in this area.

REIMBURSEMENT OF PHYSICIANS IN TEACHING HOSPITALS

The committee is aware that a major problem—of almost scandalous proportions—in medicare administration is the payment under part B on a fee-for-service basis for the services of "supervisory" physicians in teaching hospitals—services which in many instances were never rendered by the physician in whose name they were billed. We estimate these payments to be more than $100,000,000 annually and in general, such payments were not made prior to medicare. It certainly was not the intent of Congress that medicare cover noncustomary charges. The Comptroller General of the United States has sent several disturbing reports to the committee that document and detail the problems in this area.

The House bill attempts to deal with this problem by providing for payment under part B—physician's bills—for services of certain teaching physicians on a cost rather than a charge basis. Payment on a fee-for-service basis would only be made if there is general billing for such services to all patients and collection from those able to pay.

The committee believes, and has amended the House bill to provide, that payments for services furnished by supervisory physicians in teaching hospitals should be made on a cost basis under part A—hospital insurance—unless the patient is truly a private patient or unless the hospital since 1965 has charged all patients in full, including the medicare deductible and coinsurance amounts, and has collected from at least half of them. For donated services of teaching physicians a salary cost would be imputed equal to the average cost of salaried physicians.

LIMITS FOR DETERMINING REASONABLE CHARGES FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES

Another specific concern of the committee has been the threat that continuing increases in physicians' fees pose to the effectivness of the medicare program. We certainly recognize that there are complex reasons for these increases. Part of the problem is that more and more people are seeking medical care and the number of doctors is not increasing fast enough to keep up with the demand. But something must be done.

The House bill which the committee approves without change moves in the direction of an approach to reimbursement of physicians that ties recognition of fee increases to some reasonable index that reflects what is happening in the rest of the economy, thereby limiting recognition of increases in charges to amounts that economic data indicate would be fair to all concerned. Under this approach, recognition of fee increases would continue, but only in relation to things that are happening in other parts of the economy that have a bearing on the physician's cost of doing business. What is proposed is not a limit on what a physician may charge under the medicare program, but rather a limit on what the program will recognize as the prevailing fee in the locality. Thus, a limitation would be imposed only where a physician's charges are significantly higher than the usual or prevailing charge in the locality for the same service, or where a physician raises his customary charge significantly above former levels.

This is not an effort to penalize any group in the health care delivery system or to interfere with anyone's right to receive just compensation for their services. The objective is to move toward a system of determining reasonable charges which will be related to the general state of the economy. Indexes will be developed to give recognition to such things as the cost of producing medical services, costs of living, and earnings of other professional people. This approach should provide the individual physician with an objective measure of the fairness of increases in his charges.

LIMITS ON REIMBURSEMENT FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES

The committee also approved the provision in the House bill that would authorize the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to withhold or reduce reimbursement amounts for depreciation, interest, and other expenses related to capital expenditures for plant and equipment in excess of $100,000 where such expenditures and equipment are determined to be inconsistent with State or local health facility plans. This feature is similar to a provision in the committee bill of 1967. Under this program, the Secretary would make agreements with States to utilize the services of qualified health planning agencies to help in administration of this provision. The agencies will submit findings and recommendations with respect to proposed capital expenditures that are inconsistent with the plans developed by these agencies.

The committee amended the provision to provide for appeal at the State level when negative decisions are made by the planning agencies. This provision would not impede the growth and expansion of hospitals and skilled nursing homes but would provide guidance to assure that future growth is achieved in a sensible, orderly manner. It should have little or no effect on most hospitals and nursing homes since additional facilities are generally constructed only in response to a need of the community. But this provision should discourage a hospital from acting without regard for the needs of the community.

LIMITATION ON COSTS RECOGNIZED AS REASONABLE

Under present law, providers of services are paid on the basis of reasonable cost. However, there are a number of problems that inhibit making a decision that the costs for a particular provider are not reasonable.

The committee is mindful of the fact that costs can and do vary from one institution to another as a result of differences in size, in the nature and scope of services provided, type of patient treated, the location of the institution, and various other factors affecting the efficient delivery of needed health services. It is also true, however, that costs can vary from one institution to another as a result of variations in efficiency of operation, or the provision of amenities in plush surroundings. The committee believes that it is undesirable, to reimburse health care institutions for costs that are the result of gross inefficiency in operation or provision of expensive services that are not medically necessary. These costs cannot properly be considered "reasonable" for purposes of payment under medicare and medicaid.

Accordingly, the committee approves the House provision which would give the Secretary new authority to set limits on costs recognized for certain classes of providers in various service areas. This new authority differs from existing authority in several ways and meets the particular problems identified above. First, it would be exercised on a prospective, rather than retrospective, basis so that the provider would know in advance the limits to Government recognition of incurred costs and have the opportunity to avoid incurring costs tht are not reimbursable. Second, relatively high costs that cannot be justified by the provider as reasonable for the results obtained would not be reimbursable. Third, provision would be made for a provider to charge the beneficiary for the costs of items or services in excess of or more expensive than those that are determined to be necessary in the efficient delivery of needed health services.

ADVANCE APPROVAL OF CARE IN EXTENDED CARE FACILITIES AND HOME HEALTH CARE

One of the key problem areas in medicare has been the substantial number of retroactive denial of benefits for care provided in extended care facilities. I know that I have received many heartbreaking letters from people faced with tremendous bills for services they thought were covered by their medicare insurance.

To deal with the problem, the committee has modified the provision in the House bill which authorizes the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to establish presumptive periods of coverage on the basis of a physician's certification for patients admitted to an extended care facility or started on a home health plan. Under the committee amendment, to the greatest extent possible, prior review and approval of physicians' certifications of patient need for extended care would be required. Unless the doctor's certification was specifically disapproved in advance, medicare coverage would apply and payment would be made for the lesser of: First, the initially certified and approved period, second, until notice of disapproval, or third, 10 days. The committee bill also provides for a similar advance approval approach to the determination of coverage and payment for home health services. The committee hopes that this amendment will help to solve the problem of retroactive denials that have been so burdensome to medicare beneficiaries.

ADDITIONAL SAFEGUARDS

The committee bill adds a number of significant features to the statute to protect the medicare program from abuses. One of these facilitates the recovery of overpayments by authorizing a lien in favor of the Government in the amount of the overpayment.

Another provides specific penalties for fraud and abuse of the program and makes it a criminal offense to solicit, offer, or accept bribes or kickbacks—including the rebating of a portion of a medicare or medicaid fee or charge for a patient referral.

Still another would give the Secretary authority to terminate payment for services rendered by an abusive provider of health and medical services—those who have made a practice of furnishing inferior or harmful supplies or services, engaged in fraudulent activities, or consistently overcharged for their services.

Along with these structural improvements in the medicare program the committee bill proposes new rules governing the reimbursement of physical therapists, speech therapists, occupational therapists, and other specialists such as social workers, medical records, librarians, and dieticians. Under the bill payments to these providers will be limited to a "salary-related" basis. In effect their payment will not be on a fee-for-service basis, but will be limited to the amount generally equal to the salary such a person would reasonably have been paid if he were an employee. Of course, adjustments are authorized for expenses incurred by these people as self-employed persons—office expenses, travel expenses, and the like.

A new system of publicizing deficiencies in health care facilities is also included in the committee bill. This information would enable physicians and patients alike to make sounder judgments about their own use of available facilities in the community and should also serve to speed up the process of correction of the deficiencies.

HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATIONS

The bill as passed by the House would provide medicare beneficiaries with an option to have all covered services furnished or arranged for by a health maintenance organization—a group practice or other prepayment capitation plan. The administration has strongly advocated this approach to health care payment and arrangement, expressing the view that it would provide incentives to hold medicare costs down. Existing prepayment plans such as Kaiser in California and HIP—Health Insurance Plan—in New York have demonstrated an ability to provide comprehensive health care of good quality efficiently and economically. The administration in urging this amendment expressed the hope that it would expand availability to older people of the desirable characteristics of prepaid comprehensive health care.

The committee has been concerned that this new medicare option without sufficient controls could turn out to be an area of potential abuse of the program rather than a new benefit for older people. Therefore, the committee has amended the provision substantially to include safeguards with respect to reimbursement to health maintenance organizations and, of great importance, safeguards to protect and assure that the interests of medicare beneficiaries who choose this option are fully protected.

The committee amendments, generally, speaking, are technical in nature but their combined effect is to plug potential loopholes in the plan before they develop. With these amendments and with the direction to the Inspection General to oversee the implementation of the health maintenance organization's services the committee agrees that the cost-saving potentials of health maintenance organizations should be fully explored.

ADDITIONAL MEDICARE BENEFITS

The committee bill again recommends that the Senate add certain services of optometrists and chiropractors to the benefits available under medicare. In both instances, safeguards are provided to assure no deterioration in the quality of care provided under the program.

In addition, the bill provides that aged persons not eligible for hospital insurance may "buy in" to the program, paying the full cost of this new protection—$27 per month at the beginning. State and local governments could also buy in for their aged employees or retirees.

We have also provided for payment of doctor's bills associated with hospitalization in a Canadian hospital. This change should be quite helpful to people living along the border where local hospitals are not available.

ADMINISTRATIVE SIMPLIFICATION

The committee bill contains several features intended to ease and simplify the administration of the medicare program. An important example of this sort of change is the provision calling for uniform standards for nursing homes under medicare and medicaid. Under this provision a single set of health, safety, environmental, and staffing standards would apply and a single State agency would certify the facility both for medicare and medicaid. This change reflects the essential similarity between the care provided on a short term basis in extended care facilities under medicare and that provided on a long term basis in skilled nursing homes under medicaid.

Another considerable simplification concerns the present complex reimbursement formula for paying extended care facilities on a cost basis, with retroactive adjustments which cut back on allowances and makes everyone mad. Under the committee bill, the medicare program would be authorized to apply medicaid's skilled nursing home reimbursement rules to its own extended care facilities. This rule would be available where medicaid's rates are reasonably related to costs. It will give nursing home operators advance assurance of the amount of pay they can expect to receive for caring for medicare beneficiaries.

The committee bill also provides for experimentation with prospective reimbursement methods which might offer incentives to hold costs down or to produce services in the most efficient and effective manner. If these experiments are successful much of the difficulty with today's retroactive payment rules could be solved.

LIMITATION ON MEDICAID REIMBURSEMENT

Like the House, the Committee on Finance is concerned with the rapidly rising costs of medicaid and the overutilization of medicaid services. However, the approach taken by the House, of cutting off Federal matching funds for long term hospital and nursing home stays, seemed unnecessarily harsh. An alternative suggested by the committee would authorize the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to reduce selectively the Federal matching rates for institutional care where professional review and medical audit procedures are inadequate or ineffective. States employing utilization review and medical audit functions properly would not be affected by this cutback provision. This appears to be a more equitable way of containing the costs of long term institutional care under medicaid than the House provision which would have automatically reduced Federal matching funds now available to the States for financing long term institutional care in general hospitals, mental hospitals, tuberculosis hospitals, and nursing homes without permitting the Secretary to exercise discretionary judgment.

INTERMEDIATE CARE FACILITIES

Another amendment, authorizing intermediate care under medicaid rather than under title XI, as at present, emphasizes that intermediate care facilities are institutions providing health-related services below the level of skilled nursing homes. For the first time, it would make such care, now limited to those receiving or eligible for cash assistance, available under medicaid to the medically indigent. Intermediate care would cover those requiring institutional care beyond residential care and who would, in the absence of such care, require placement in a skilled nursing home or mental hospital. These facilities would be required to have at least one full-time licensed practical nurse on their staffs. Additionally, subject to appropriate requirements, intermediate care would also be available to mentally retarded persons in public institutions. Because the committee felt that present review requirements are insufficient, States would be required to provide assurance to the Secretary that appropriate and effective utilization review and medical audit procedures are being applied to intermediate care, as is already required for patients in skilled nursing homes.

MENTALLY ILL

One area where we have put off too long the provision of Federal aid for badly needed hospital care concerns the treatment of mentally ill children. Many of these poor unfortunates could be helped to a better life if adequate care is provided for them in their youth. I am pleased that the committee agreed with me when I offered an amendment to provide medical treatment for them. Under this amendment Federal matching payments would be authorized under medicaid to States for care of mentally ill children under 21 years of age in public mental institutions. Such funds would be available where States maintained their present fiscal effort, for patients in accredited mental hospitals who are undergoing a program of active medical treatment. Presently, such Federal matching is authorized only for persons 65 or over.

MEDICAID'S UNIFORMITY RULES REVISED

Under present law, all medicaid recipients in a State must be eligible for the same scope of services, and the services must be available throughout the State. Present title XIX requirements for "statewideness" of amount, duration, and scope of benefits have created problems for States who want to contract with organizations, such as neighborhood health centers or prepaid group practices, to provide services to title XIX recipients. The services are often broader in scope than those available under medicaid, but are not available throughout the State.

A committee amendment facilitates arrangements with comprehensive health organizations and health groups offering services different from those in the regular State medicaid plans.

It also makes it possible for States to utilize reasonable uniform deductibles and copayment features in their medicaid plans for the medically indigent without requiring that they also apply to the welfare recipients covered by the plan. This will help make it possible to control excess utilization if a State requires the medically indigent to share a reasonable part of the cost of their own care.

MEDICAID MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT

The committee approved the provision in the House bill to repeal the requirement that all States must move toward a comprehensive medicaid program by 1977. In addition, the committee bill would repeal the provision requiring that States maintain their efforts by not cutting back on the amount they spend for medicaid from 1 year to the next. The committee believes that States should be allowed to decide how extensive a medicaid program they desire.

PROTECTION AGAINST CATASTROPHIC ILLNESS

The Committee on Finance is concerned about the devastating effect which a catastropic illness can have on families unfortunate enough to be affected by such an illness. Over the past decades science and medicine have taken great strides in their ability to sustain and prolong life. Patients with kidney failure, which until recently would have been rapidly fatal, can now be maintained in relative good health for many years with the aid of dialysis and transplantation. Patients with spinal cord injuries and severe strokes can now often be restored to a level of functioning which would have been impossible years ago. Modern burn treatment centers can keep victims of severe burns alive and can offer restorative surgery which can in many instances erase the after effects of such burns.

These are but a few examples of the impact which recent progress in science and medicine has had. This progress, however, has had another impact. These catastrophic illnesses and injuries which heretofore would have been rapidly fatal and hence not too expensive financially, now have an enormous impact on a family's finances.

To deal with this situation, the committee has added to the House bill an amendment which would establish a catastrophic health insurance program beginning in January 1972 for all people under age 65 who are insured under social security, as well as their spouses and minor children. People under 65 who receive monthly social security benefits would also be eligible. People over 65 would not be covered since they have medicare which substantially meets the needs of all but a very small minority of beneficiaries.

It is estimated that only 20 to 30 per cent of our people under 65 have insurance against the costs of catastrophic illness through major medical or comprehensive medical plans. I am very proud to be the sponsor of this amendment which I believe will go a long way towards lifting the financial burden from those who are already carrying the heavy load of sickness and despair.

The benefits provided under the catastrophic health insurance program would be the same as those currently provided under parts A and B of medicare, except that there would be no upper limitations on hospital days, extended care facility days, or home health visits. The major benefits excluded from medicare, and consequently excluded from this proposal, are nursing home care, outpatient prescription drugs, dental care, and full inpatient and outpatient psychiatric coverage.

The deductibles in the plan would parallel the deductibles under parts A and B of medicare. There would be a hospital deductible of 60 days' hospitalization for each person and a supplemental medical deductible initially established at $2,000 per family.

After an individual is hospitalized for 60 days in 1 year, he would become eligible for payments toward his hospital expenses beginning on the sixty-first day of his hospitalization. Any posthospital extended care services which he subsequently received during that year would also be eligible for payment. After the hospital deductible is met, the program would pay hospitals substantially as they are presently paid under medicare, with the individual being responsible for a coinsurance payment equal to one-fourth of the inpatient hospital deductible as determined for medicare purposes. Extended care services would be subject to a daily coinsurance amount equal to one-eighth of the inpatient hospital deductible as determined for medicare purposes. If the program were in effect in January 1971 the coinsurance for a hospital day would be $15 a day, and for extended care services $7.50 a day.

The medical deductible would apply to the entire family. After a family had incurred expenses of $2,000 for physicians' bills, home health visits, physical therapy services, laboratory, and X-ray services, and other covered medical and health services, the family would become eligible for payments toward these expenses. After the $2,000 medical deductible has been met, the program would pay for 80 per centum of eligible expenses, with the patient being responsible for coinsurance of 20 per centum.

As in the medicare program, these coinsurance features are intended to limit program costs and to control the utilization of services.

The program would be administered by using carriers and intermediaries as in the present medicare program. Medicare's quality standards for institutions would also apply. Social security, with the cooperation of carriers and intermediaries, would determine when the deductibles have been satisfied. To keep the paperwork down, bills would not be accepted under the supplemental plan until they totaled $2,000 per family.

The committee estimates that more than 1 million families of the approximately 49 million families in the United States incur medical expenses which will qualify them to receive benefits under the program. The first year's cost of the program is estimated at $2,200,000,000 on a cash basis. A separate catastrophic insurance trust fund with its own employer-employee tax would be established to focus public and congressional attention closely on the cost and the adequacy of the financing of the program. Like the benefits, the tax would become effective January 1, 1972.

For people on public assistance and the medically indigent the catastrophic illness insurance program would be supplemental to the medicaid program in the same way that it will be supplemental to private insurance for other citizens. The benefit structure of medicaid varies from State to State, but in general it is a basic rather than a catastrophic benefit package.

I want to thank my fellow committee members for the very fine cooperation and assistance they have given me on this amendment. I believe this is a major step forward that will benefit all Americans.

FINANACING PROVISIONS

At the present time, the social security cash benefits program is in close actuarial balance, while the hospital insurance program has an actuarial deficiency. Unless hospital insurance taxes are raised substantially, the hospital insurance trust fund will be exhausted in 1972. To meet the cost of the cash benefits program as it would be expanded by the bill and to bring the hospital insurance program into actuarial balance, the contribution rates for the programs would be adjusted and the contribution and benefit base—the maximum amount of annual earnings subject to contributions and used in computing benefits—would be increased.

INCREASE IN THE CONTRIBUTION AND BENEFIT BASE

The bill provides for an increase in the ceiling on taxable and creditable earnings to $9,000, effective for 1971. This increase would take account of the increases in earnings levels that have occurred since 1968, when the $7,800 ceiling on earnings went into effect and would cover the total earnings of an estimated 79 per centum of all workers—the same percentage as the $7,800 base covered when it went into effect.

People earning amounts between $7,800 and $9,000 a year will pay taxes on an additional $1,200 of earnings. In return, of course, they will get credit for more earnings and will thus get higher benefits. The higher creditable earnings resulting from the increase in the ceiling on earnings will make possible benefits that are more reasonably related to the actual earnings of workers at the higher earnings levels. It the base were to remain unchanged, more and more workers would have earnings above the creditable amount and these workers would have benefit protection related to a smaller and smaller part of their full earnings.

CHANGES IN THE CONTRIBUTION RATES

Under the schedule of contribution rates for cash benefits contained in the bill, the contribution rates for employers and employees scheduled for 1971–72 would be decreased from the 4.6 per centum provided for under present law to 4.4 per centum each.

The bill provides for increases in the contribution rate schedule for the hospital insurance program. The contribution rate scheduled for 1971–72 would be increased from 0.6 per centum each for employees, employers, and the self-employed to 0.8 per centum for 1971–72. The additional taxes for this part of the program will go far toward removing the large actuarial deficit of the hospital insurance program and would make that program financially sound.

The bill also provides for a contribution rate schedule to fully finance the catastrophic illness insurance provision added to the bill by the Finance Committee. The contribution rate schedule for catastrophic illness for 1972–74 would be 0.3 per centum each for employees, employers, and the self-employed.

For the benefit of Senators and others who are concerned with the long-range financing aspects of the social security and hospital insurance programs the following charts compare the combined tax rates and maximum tax payable under the committee bill, the present law and the House bill. I call attention to the fact that the rates under present law applies to maximum earnings of $7,800, while both the House bill and the committee bill apply to a wage base of $9,000.

I ask unanimous consent that the chart showing the tax rates and maximum taxes be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. LONG. Let me also note for the record that the combined rate for cash benefits and hospital insurance is the same under the committee bill as under present law for 1971 and 1972 and is less than present law for 1973 and 1974. The catastrophic insurance tax is a new feature, which of course adds to the rate.

We have been assured that the financing provided under the committee bill is adequate to pay for all of the benefits—both the benefits provided under present law and the new benefits provided under the bill. Moreover, each of the separate trust funds will be soundly financed and over the next few years the total income to the program will be nearly $6,000,000,000 more than outgo, as compared with the more than $21,000,000,000 excess which would accrue under present law.

The following table compares the income, and outgo, of the social security funds over the next 3 years under present law and under the committee bill.

I would point out that under the committee bill, the assets and the reserve could gradually grow from $44.9 billion to $47 billion in 1973. I ask unanimous consent that the chart be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FINANCING THE AUTOMATIC PROVISION

Mr. LONG. As I mentioned earlier, benefits would be automatically adjusted to take account of increases in the cost of living. The cost of this increase would be met by increasing both the contribution and benefit base and the contribution rates so that each increase would meet one-half of the cost. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would determine how much the contribution and benefit base would have to be increased in order to finance one-half of the long-range cost of the proposed benefit increase, and how much contribution rates would have to be increased in order to finance one-half of the long-range cost of the proposed benefit increase. The Secretary would then publish in the Federal Register both the new, higher base and the revised contribution rate schedule, to be effective beginning January 1 of the year for which the benefit increase is effective.

Mr. President, now let me describe the additional matters contained in the committee bill.

THE TRADE ACT OF 1970

The committee approved the basic provisions of the House trade bill as an amendment to H.R. 17550, the social security legislation. The principal exceptions concern the export tax incentive called DISC and the repeal of the American selling price system of valuation.

Now, I will discuss the basic provisions of the amendment dealing with the foreign trade which was approved by the committee.

TRADE AGREEMENT AUTHORITY

The first aspect of the amendment deals with the extension of further tariff cutting authority to the President. The President has been without authority to reduce tariffs under the Trade Expansion Act since July 1, 1967. This new authority would not be used to enter into another major round of trade negotiations. None are planned. But, there is another reason why this authority is needed. Under the rules of the game in international trade, whenever one country must increase duties or impose quotas in order to protect a domestic industry which is being injured by imports, that country must also offer compensatory tariff reductions on other imports of equivalent value to the country whose exports would be adversely affected by the increased duty or quota. The alternative would be to face retaliation on the part of those adversely affected countries. It is clear that, under other provisions of this bill, the United States will be imposing some limited restrictions on the imports of other countries. For this reason, it was felt necessary to extend to the President authority—through July 1, 1975—to cut tariffs by 20 percent in two stages. The committee made clear that it does not believe the President should offer "compensation" to countries which themselves have illegal tariff or nontariff barriers against United States exports, for which the United States has not been "compensated". In other words, in those situations we should go to the bargaining table and work out a mutually satisfactory solution to the question of compensation.

REVISE UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICE STATUTES

The trade bill also deals with three unfair trade practice statutes. It revises section 252 of the Trade Expansion Act to give the President further authority to cope with foreign nontariff barriers restricting U.S. exports in industrial as well as agricultural trade. This is what he asked for and the reason is this: Under present law, the authority is confined mainly to agricultural products. This additional authority, requested by the administration, will strengthen the President's hands in negotiating nontariff barriers with other countries. It will serve as a clear warning that the United States is no longer able to turn the other cheek when foreign countries impose new nontariff barriers against U.S. products.

In addition, the Senate amendment agrees with the House that in antidumping and countervailing duty cases, the Treasury should have some time limits imposed upon it in making its determination regarding the imports involved. The Antidumping Act deals with injurious price discrimination, and countervailing duty statute deals with foreign subsidies. In the case of the antidumping statute, the Treasury would have 4 months to reach a tentative decision on the question of whether or not there has been price discrimination, except in extraordinarily complicated cases in which the Secretary may take up to 7 months. In cases under the countervailing duty statutes, the Secretary of the Treasury would have 1 year to make decisions. Both the House and the Senate committee agree that these time limits will give assurance that decisions will be reached promptly on matters of vital concern to domestic industry.

REVISED ESCAPE CLAUSE AND ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROVISION

A third major area which the committee dealt with was in revising the stringent criteria in present law for providing adjustment assistance and tariff adjustment (escape clause) relief to firms, workers, and industries which are seriously injured by import competition. With respect to the escape clause which deals with industrywide injury, present law provides that tariff concessions must be found to be the major cause of increased imports, and increased imports must be found to be the major factor in causing serious injury. These two tests have proven so difficult that only one industry out of over 20 applicants has qualified for relief since 1962. The executive branch agrees that these tests are too rigid.

The Finance Committee substantially altered both tests to make it easier for a domestic industry to receive relief. The Senate amendment would require that increased imports must be related in whole or in part to tariff concessions. This was the same test that existed for 11 years from 1951 to 1962, and it worked well. The committee agrees with the House that a "substantial cause" relationship between increased imports and serious injury was fairer to all than either the present law or the administration's recommendation, of substituting the concept of "primary" cause for "major" cause in the statute.

The committee considered that the "escape clause" had a substantial causetest for 11 years, between 1951 and 1962, and it also worked well. We did not feel that another possible misinterpretation of our intention by using the word "primary" instead of "major" would be worth risking. In fact, it appears there is a distinction without a difference in the two terms.

The committee also felt that the definition of industry should permit separate consideration to be given to those segments of a multiproduct corporation for producing one product which might be seriously injured by imports, even though other product areas may not be. This is called the "segmentation principle" and it too was on the books for 11 years without any difficulties between 1951 and 1962.

Another area in the escape clause which the committee did take action on and which is new, and that is the so-called "acute or severe" injury test. Under the committee's amendment, the Tariff Commission must determine whether on the basis of the substantial cause-test an industry is being seriously injured by imports. That would be the first finding. Having made that determination and assuming it was positive, the Commissioners finding serious injury would also determine whether the injury was acute or severe. The term "acute or severe" denote a degree of injury which is a level higher than serious injury and which could, if not immediately corrected, threaten the very existence of an industry as a viable economic entity in the United States. Now, under either the initial determination of serious injury or the subsequent acute or severe injury determination, the Tariff Commission would recommend a remedy. If only the initial serious injury was found, the President would consider the remedy suggested by the Tariff Commission but would be allowed to proclaim any import restriction he deemed necessary to prevent serious injury, unless he determines it is not in the national interest to impose such restrictions. In the latter case, he must provide adjustment assistance to those firms and workers which are being seriously injured. If there are two affirmative findings by the Tariff Commission—one of serious injury and another of acute or severe injury—the President would have to impose the remedy recommended by a majority of the Tariff Commission making those determinations, unless he determines it is not in the national interest to do so. In other words, the second test puts a little more pressure on the President to accept the Tariff Commission's findings, but the President retains his flexibility. But if he does not accept the Tariff Commission's recommendation he must nevertheless provide adjustment assistance. The committee deemed that this flexibility was necessary.

With respect to adjustment assistance, it is only necessary to determine that imports are contributing to unemployment or underemployment in the case of groups of workers, or to serious injury in the case of firms.

TEXTILES AND FOOTWEAR

Now let me turn to the textile and footwear provisions in the bill.

The textile industry is the largest manufacturing industry in the United States with 2.1 million employees, many of them disadvantaged. The industry moved from the North to the South, and now may move across the Pacific unless relief from low-wage imports is provided. All the European countries have negotiated voluntary agreements with Japan and other Asian textile producers to limit imports of manmade fiber and woolen textiles into the European market. That is the intent of this bill. The United States has been striving to obtain a similar agreement, because we have become the "dumping ground" for cheap imports, and our producers are facing severe hardships. But the Japanese do not appear willing to give us the same consideration that they gave the Europeans.

The nonrubber footwear industry has also been hurt by growing imports. Thus, the bill provides for quantative limitations on the imports of certain textile and footwear articles equal to the average annual imports for the 3 calendar years, 1967 through 1969.

However, there is a great deal of flexibility in the bill. For example, the President is authorized to exempt any products from the statutory import quotas: First, which he determines are not disrupting the United States market, second, when he determines that the national interest requires such action, and, third, when the supply of any article in the domestic market is insufficient to meet the demand at reasonable prices, or, fourth, when voluntary agreements are entered into with foreign producing countries.

The President is specifically authorized to negotiate agreements with foreign countries under which imports of textile and footwear articles would be voluntarily controlled. As I have stated imports covered by such voluntary agreements would be exempt from the mandatory quota provisions of the bill. The main thrust of the legislation, therefore, is to share our market with foreign goods, hopefully on a voluntary basis, so that industry and labor would not be severely injured by foreign competition.

Textile and footwear imports into the United States have been increasing very rapidly. The average imports of manmade fiber amounted to 1,390 million square yards in the 1967–69 base period, and for wool textile products it was 184.5 million square yards. As of June 1970, imports of manmade fiber textiles are running at an alltime record of 2.4 billion square yards. Apparel imports are also sharply up, and in some product areas, such as sweaters and shirts, imports have practically taken over the market. For example, in 1965 imports of sweaters of manmade fiber were 501,000 dozen. In 1969, imports of such sweaters had increased to 6,974,000 dozen. That is more than a tenfold increase in the space of 4 years. Such increases in imports year after year are devastating our textile and apparel firms. Many responsible individuals realize this. In an article appearing in the September issue of Fortune magazine the former Minister of Finance in Japan, the Honorable Nobutane Kuichi made this wise statement:

> Confrontation between us and the world is no good. I'd like to see the growth-rate of our exports decline from last year's 22 percent to no more than 10 percent, ideally 7 percent. I have told this to the Prime Minister and he doesn't like it because everything is geared to exports.

Let us not forget that other countries having much more severe barriers to imports than the United States, face the same problems. Japan, for example, has quotas on 98 products. Western Europe controls its imports through border taxes and variable levies, and, in addition, has quantitative restrictions on Japanese and other Asian textile products, which serve to divert them to the United States. For example, this Nation absorbs 50 percent of Japan's apparel exports; all Western Europe, with more than our population, absorbs only 5 percent.

Under these circumstances, they should not point their finger at us as starting a trade war. We do not want a trade war. But we cannot stand idly by and watch our industries go under and our labor force decimated by foreign imports while nothing is done. These provisions will insure that American industry and American jobs will be protected in a reasonable way while, at the same time, insuring an equitable share of our market for foreign goods.

NATIONAL SECURITY PROVISION

Another area covered by this bill is the revision of the national security provision of the Trade Expansion Act. Under the present law, if the Director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness makes a finding that imports of a particular article are threatening to impair the national security, he shall so report to the President. If the President agrees with this finding, he shall impose whatever restrictions he deems necessary to remedy the situation.

The House believed, and the Finance Committee concurs that wherever national security findings are involved, a quota would be a more suitable device for controlling imports than a tariff. In the first place, the quota would provide assurance that imports could be kept at a level consonant with the national security objectives, whereas no tariff could give that assurance.

If the tariff were set too low, imports would come pouring in to depress our market; if the tariff was very high, it could shut off imports completely or involve very high costs to the U.S. consumer. In the case of oil, there is the additional problem of tanker rates, which are extremely volatile. A tariff set on Monday might be inappropriate on Friday if tanker rates had moved up sharply in the meantime. We cannot adjust our tariffs to accommodate the fickle nature of these tanker rate variations, or to the whims of Arab potentates who have effective control over prices.

The Director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness stated before the Finance Committee that a tariff would tend to increase the cost of oil to the consumer much more than a quota. The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness all agree that a tariff is not a suitable instrument for controlling oil imports, and have so advised the President. The President has accepted that recommendation. The committee bill reflects the same conclusion.

WELFARE AMENDMENTS

INTRODUCTION

The goal of working out progressive and productive proposals in the area of public welfare has occupied the committee for many months.

Looking at the overall structure of our public assistance system, the committee concluded that two different approaches were called for. First, there is no pressing need to throw out completely our present programs for the aged, blind, and disabled and start a new program in that area. These programs, on the whole, have been working well. They have been responsive to the needs of poor people, and the rolls have remained fairly steady. The committee therefore determined to make desirable improvements in these programs, but not at this time to change their basic direction.

The situation with regard to the program of aid to families with dependent children is far different. The AFDC caseload has tripled in the last 10 years, and we now have approximately 9 million AFDC recipients throughout the country. The rate of growth is continuing unabated, and every State is feeling the consequences. Equally disturbing is the nature of the growth in the program. Most of the families being added to the rolls are eligible because of the absence of the father from the home. These are cases largely resulting from desertion, separation, and illegitimacy. Fully three-fourths of the families now receiving AFDC are families in which the father is absent, and this percentage will be increasing if present trends continue.

Faced with this situation, the committee felt compelled to develop workable and greatly needed improvements in those programs created by the Congress to help AFDC families and to get at the root cause of dependency. The bill would make possible immediate improvement in the work incentive and child care programs, thus assisting many families to move toward economic independence. Along with these proposals to solve problems which are amenable to rapid improvement, the committee is advocating a broad program of testing which is aimed at finding long-range solutions to the overall problem of welfare dependency.

At this point I would like to describe in greater detail just what the committee bill includes.

ASSISTANCE TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

First of all, the bill proposes a national minimum income level which would provide a considerably higher level of assistance for a large percentage of recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled. Many of these people, who are among the most hopeless and helpless of all the poor in our country, are currently receiving assistance which is obviously inadequate for their needs.

We think it is urgent that increased assistance be given to those who are living in States where payments are very low. Thus, the bill would require States to provide a level of assistance sufficient to assure persons in these categories a total monthly income of at least $130 for a single person, or $200 for a couple. States would, of course, have the option of maintaining or establishing a higher standard for residents of their State.

To give some idea of the impact of this new minimum, let me point out that in the aged category, this provision would result in increased assistance for eligible single-aged individuals in about 31 States, and for eligible aged couples in about 36 States.

The committee bill would also, in effect, give needy persons in the adult categories more money in lieu of food stamps. We all know that many of them have suffered loss of dignity and pride by having to use food stamps when they go out to the local grocery store to do their shopping. This bill will give them cash, which they can use as they want, and when they want.

In addition, the committee wanted to make sure that those social security beneficiaries who are also public assistance recipients would share in the benefit of the social security increases which are provided in the bill. If present law remained unchanged, any increase in a social security check would mean an offsetting decrease in the recipient's public assistance check. Therefore, the committee bill requires States to raise their standards of need for those in the aged, blind, and disabled categories by $10 per month for a single individual, and $15 for a couple. These recipients would in this way be guaranteed an increase in total income of at least these amounts.

Recognizing that the rapid growth in welfare expenditures in recent years has strained the fiscal capacities of the States, the committee wanted to make sure that the States would not have to bear any additional costs resulting from these new benefits in the adult categories. A certain amount of fiscal relief will accrue to the States to the extent that welfare grants are reduced because of the increases which the bill provides in social security benefits. However, this relief is not necessarily distributed in a way which reflects the relative welfare burdens of the States under present law or under the additional requirements imposed by the bill.

We have worked out a proposal which, generally speaking, would assure all States a 10-percent savings over their expenditures for adult assistance programs in 1970. The Federal Government would pay 100 percent of the cost of additional expenditures for the aged, blind, and disabled which are required by the committee bill.

Mr. President, it is my belief that these changes proposed in the bill will be of enormous benefit to those Americans who are in need because of old age, blindness, or other crippling disability. We have been able to work out a way of increasing the minimum income level above the $110 per person level proposed by the administration and approved by the House, and to make other needed improvements, without going above the amounts which the administration stated it was willing to allocate for these categories of assistance.

TESTING OF WELFARE ALTERNATIVES

Now let me turn to the problem of assistance to needy families with children. I have already outlined, and there is no need to further document, the seriousness of the growth in the AFDC program. The committee has studied the present program. It has studied the proposal, with its many variations, which the administration made for the establishment of a new family assistance plan to be superimposed on the AFDC program.

In all honesty and sincerity, I would say that the committee shares the view of Governor Hearnes of Missouri, who testified during the hearings on FAP. Governor Hearnes summed up his own opinion by stating quite seriously that if you read what the newspapers said about the proposal, you would be for it, but if you read what was actually in the bill, you had to be against it.

We read the administration's bill. We had many weeks of public hearings on it. Nearly everyone who testified endorsed the principles in the proposal, but nearly all the witnesses also pointed out weaknesses.

As legislators, we know that the perfect law is yet to be written. We would not reject a proposal because of minor problems or oversights. These, we know, can be corrected in the course of time.

But when a proposal establishes a new direction, and goals are established which in our honest evaluation are unattainable under the measures provided, then it is our responsibility to require a more thorough examination.

The committee bill would thus require the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to conduct up to five tests of possible alternatives to the AFDC program. One or two of these tests would test a "family assistance" type proposal for welfare, and one or two of the tests would test a "workfare" type proposal. In addition, the bill provides for a test in which a program of rehabilitation of welfare recipients would be administered by vocational rehabilitation personnel.

It is my hope, and the hope of the committee, that these tests would provide a sound basis for rational legislative action in the welfare area. We would also hope that each test would produce data from which there could be estimated for the various types of programs the cost, extent of participation, and effectiveness in reducing dependency on welfare which could be expected if such programs were adopted as a substitute for AFDC. The tests should also provide valuable administrative experience which would facilitate the implementation of any of the test proposals which might eventually be enacted.

The bill would give the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare flexibility in choosing the areas in which the tests are to be conducted. However, it would require that the areas chosen should be broadly representative of the country as a whole so that the data from the tests may serve as a reliable basis for future congressional action.

The tests are also to be conducted in such a way that valid comparisons among the various alternatives can be made. The bill therefore requires that the Department conduct the same number of "workfare" tests as "family assistance" tests—either one or two of each. In each pair of tests the beginning and ending dates of the two tests must be the same, the number of participants must be approximately the same, and the areas in which the two tests are conducted must be comparable as to population, per capita income, unemployment level, and other relevant factors.

Tests would have to be conducted with State cooperation and with State sharing in the costs of the tests.

At all stages in the development of the tests and in their operation, the committee would be kept advised and the Comptroller General would be consulted regarding testing procedures that would be utilized.

Two matters that this Senator would like to see developed by these tests are whether wage subsidies are one effective way of increasing the incomes of the disadvantaged and whether, if they are, the one-check or the two-check approach is preferable. The one-check approach involves passing the subsidy to the employer who includes it in his wage to the worker. The two-check approach envisions a wage supplemented by a payment directly from the welfare office.

Mr. President, we believe this program of testing is both a responsible and a responsive way of meeting our present welfare crisis. We agree that the present system is bad, but we do not agree that it is so bad that any untested alternative would be preferable merely because it is new or different. We want to find some real answers to the welfare problem. And we believe that the way to do this is through careful experimentation.

At the same time, we recognize that there are changes in the present legislation which should be made immediately, and we seek in the bill to correct some of the worst and most obvious defects.

WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAM

The committee and the administration are in substantial agreement as to the obligation of appropriate welfare recipients to work. The thrust of any welfare reform proposal must encompass the basic proposition that able-bodied welfare recipients should be required to work if child care and meaningful manpower training are provided—and that actual jobs must be available for such people after training.

Mr. President, I think the Congress has now reached the point where it is reluctant to support any more training programs that do not result in jobs for participants. Moreover, the disadvantaged people of this country share this disenchantment—they say in increasing numbers "no more training programs without jobs."

The committee bill adopts almost all of the administration's requests for improvement of the work incentive program. It provides more favorable matching for manpower training expenses and for welfare services which support training, including the vitally important day care. It also provides registration with the employment service as a condition of welfare eligibility and puts into effect uniform Federal standards for referral of welfare recipients to WIN. All of these elements have been cited by the administration as crucial deficiencies in the work incentive program.

But the bill goes further—and here, I would be remiss in not pointing to the great contributions of the junior Senator from Georgia, Senator TALMADGE. It comes to grips with some of the basic reasons for the failure of WIN which have been very disturbing to the committee. The Committee on Finance was the principal architect of the WIN program—I believe I was the initial sponsor of that amendment—and was responsible for the basic decision—that the Department of Labor would administer the manpower training program. However, the committee has been greatly disappointed in the implementation of the program.

The points of emphasis the Finance Committee thought were made abundantly clear in the 1967 amendments have been paid lipservice or totally ignored. A meaningful program of on-the-job training continues to be an unfulfilled Labor Department promise. The legally required program of special work projects—public service employment—is a reality in only one State. Lack of Labor Department and Department of Health, Education, and Welfare cooperation and that of their counterparts at the local level has been a major problem in the referral process and in the provision of necessary supportive services for recipients in work and training. The main thrust of the WIN program as it exists today remains in the direction of basic education and classroom training, which our experience with manpower training over the last decade shows does not result in the placement of people in jobs, but rather in a growing skepticism of both welfare recipients and the public as to the worth of such endeavors.

Mr. President, this situation must change. More effective administration must be provided, and WIN's on-the-job training and public service employment components must become a vital part of the program.

It is for this reason the committee bill includes a provision which would require heavy emphasis on these two components. Also, a tax credit mechanism is provided which will link manpower training to the actual provision of jobs.

I might say there has been a severe disappointment in the performance of the Department of Labor in accordance with its duties under the law.

The task of training welfare recipients for jobs and actually placing them in employment on a permanent basis is admittedly one of the most difficult tasks facing Government. The committee believes that the changes it is proposing for WIN are important, albeit some of these could have been made without changes in the statute. But we are also aware that regardless of what the Congress does in this area the ultimate success of the program will, in large measure, be dependent on the dedication of administrators at the Federal, State, and local level and the resources they are allocated. Thus, we believe it is incumbent upon the Department of Labor to show its commitment to WIN and to provide staffing at the Federal level which is commensurate with its responsibilities as the primary administrator of the program. The WIN program must receive the kind of implementation its importance deserves.

CHILD CARE

The bill also includes proposals which would greatly expand the availability of child care resources throughout the Nation. At the present time the lack of adequate child care represents perhaps the single largest impediment to the efforts of poor families, especially those headed by a mother, to achieve economic independence. The committee bill would seek to remove this impediment for the poor, while at the same time promoting child care facilities for all families which need them, by creating a Federal Child Care Corporation.

Although the Committee on Finance and the Congress, through past amendments to the Social Security Act, have attempted to meet the need for child care we have been unable to overcome the great lack of organization, initiative, and know-how which exists in the child care area. We have provided money, but we have found that money alone will not do the job. We need a mechanism at the Federal, State, and local levels which will respond to both national and local needs for child care. We believe the Federal Child Care Corporation will be such a mechanism.

The Corporation would have as its first priority making available child care services to children of parents eligible for such services under the AFDC program, and who need them in order to participate in employment or training. However, it would also have the broader function of making child care available for any family which may need it, regardless of welfare status.

The Corporation would work in an uncomplicated way. Under the committee bill, $50 million would be given to the Corporation to provide initial working capital. This amount would be in the form of a loan by the Secretary of the Treasury and would be placed in a revolving fund. The money would be used by the Corporation to begin arranging for child care services. Initially, the Corporation would contract with existing public, private nonprofit, and proprietary facilities to serve as child care providers. To expand services, the Corporation would also give technical assistance and advice to organizations interested in establishing facilities under contract with the Corporation. In addition, the Corporation could provide child care services in its own facilities.

Fees would be charged for all services provided or arranged for by the Corporation. The fees would go into the revolving fund to provide capital for further development of services and to repay the initial loan. They would be set at a level which would cover the costs to the Corporation of arranging child care.

We have provided in the bill for construction authority for the Corporation, and would authorize the issuance of bonds for this purpose if new construction is needed. We envisage, however, that this authority will be used sparingly, and that every effort will first be made to utilize existing facilities.

I am deeply concerned about the quality of care which children are to receive, and I therefore want to emphasize that the bill includes provision for Federal child care standards, to assure that adequate space, staff, and health requirements are met. In addition, facilities used by the Corporation would have to meet the Life Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association.

The bill includes inservice training authority, and the committee expects that this authority, along with the training programs under the WIN program, will be used to train welfare mothers, insofar as possible, to work in child care programs. This will mean that while some mothers are being freed for work, others will be provided employment directly in child care facilities.

The Corporation, while providing a mechanism for expanding the availability of child care services, would not provide funds to subsidize child care. Those who are able to pay would be charged the full cost of services. The cost of child care needed by families on welfare would be paid by State welfare agencies.

Here, too, the committee bill makes a significant improvement in present law by providing for an increase from 75 percent to 90 percent in the Federal matching share for child care services. The bill would authorize payment of 100 percent of the cost of services for a temporary period if the Secretary determined that necessary services would not otherwise be available. The 90 percent matching rate would be available to the States for child care for families receiving AFDC and also for past and potential recipients.

FAMILY PLANNING SERVICES

Mr. President, the committee bill provides for a major advance in enabling welfare recipients to obtain free family planning services by authorizing 100 percent Federal funding for State family planning programs, including both information and the provision of medical services.

As under present law, States would be required to offer family planning services to all appropriate recipients of AFDC, including, on an optional basis, former recipients and those who are likely to become recipients of welfare. Acceptance of services, as under present law, would be voluntary with the recipient.

A beginning has been made as the result of congressional action in 1967 when 75 percent Federal matching funds was authorized for this purpose. The progress which has been made under those amendments, however, has not met the committee's expectations.

The provisions of the committee bill are consistent with the aims of the administration, as expressed by the President in a speech in July 1969:

> Most of an estimated five million low income women of childbearing age in this country do not have adequate access to family planning assistance, even though their wishes concerning family size are usually the same as those of parents of higher income groups.
> It is my view that no American woman should be denied access to family planning assistance because of her economic condition. I believe, therefore, that we should establish as a national goal the provision of adequate family planning services within the next five years to all those who want them but cannot afford them. This we have the capacity to do.

The committee shares the goal of the President and believes that this is an appropriate step in its fulfillment. It notes that, according to testimony of Planned Parenthood Federation, full family planning services can be provided for about $60 per woman per year. This seems a small price to pay for the personal, social, and economic benefits which can be achieved as the result of an effective nationwide family planning program.

EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE TO MIGRANT FAMILIES

Some of the most disadvantaged citizens in our country can be found among migrant workers. When children are involved, the situation calls even more urgently for action, and this action must be of a national nature which is commensurate with the national problem.

Under existing law, emergency assistance may, at the option of the States, be provided to needy migrant families with children and be provided either statewide or in part of the State. Fifty percent Federal matching is provided.

The committee bill establishes a more meaningful program by amending existing law: first, to require all States to provide such a program; second, to require that it be statewide in application; and, third, to provide Federal matching of its cost at the 75 percent level.

OBLIGATIONS OF DESERTING FATHER

Mr. President, when we discuss welfare reform, we should always remember some of the root causes of the present crisis.

The facts are startling:

In 1969, three out of four families receiving AFDC were eligible because of the father's absence from the home. Think of that—75 percent. One out of six families is on welfare because of the father's desertion. With about 9 million AFDC recipients, this means that about 1,500,000 mothers and children are receiving welfare today because the father of the family has deserted.

An illustration of the impact of desertion on a city's AFDC rolls is New York where between 1961 and 1968 the cases of deserted or informally separated wives grew by 412 percent.

Nationally, the largest single cause of dependency among children is illegitimacy. In 28 percent of the families receiving AFDC, the mother is not married to the father of the child.

Congress, particularly in the 1967 amendments, attempted to deal with this aspect of the dependency problem. These measures, however, have failed to stem the explosive growth of the welfare rolls in the past 3 years, a growth largely consisting of families in which there either never was a father or in which the father has deserted the family or is otherwise separated from the mother.

During the hearings on the welfare bill, Secretary Richardson was asked his opinion about direct Federal action in desertion cases. He replied:

> We would support legislation which made it a Federal crime to cross State lines for the purpose of evading parental responsibility. * * * From the standpoint of our Department to make this a Federal crime would help to reduce the problem, we think, and to that extent we would be for it.

The committee considers the provisions of present law useful and feels they should be retained. However, it is clear that further action is necessary to permit more extensive involvement of the Federal Government in cases where the father is able to avoid his parental responsibilities by crossing State lines.

Thus, the committee bill would make it a Federal misdemeanor for a father to cross State lines in order to avoid his family responsibilities. The penalty under this new amendment would be imprisonment for up to 1 year.

Second, the committee bill would provide that an individual who has deserted or abandoned his spouse, child, or children shall owe a monetary obligation to the United States equal to the Federal share of any welfare payments made to the sopuse or child during the period of desertion or abandonment.

The bill also provides that information regarding the whereabouts of the deserting individual would be furnished, on request, by the Federal Government to the deserted spouse where a judgment for support has been obtained.

Daniel P. Moynihan has stated:

> Now, a working-class or middle-class American who chooses to leave his family is normally required first to go through elaborate legal proceedings and thereafter to devote much of his income to supporting them. Normally speaking, society gives him nothing. The fathers of AFDC families, however, simply disappear. Only a person invincibly prejudiced on behalf of the poor would deny that there are attractions in such freedom of movement.

It is my hope that the measures contained in the committee bill will equate the responsibilities of a father of AFDC children with those of the father of a working-class or middle-class family.

THE COURT AND WELFARE LAW

Some major changes in welfare law have been made in recent years not by the Congress, but by the Judiciary, These decisions have played a major role in the phenonmenal growth of the welfare rolls in the last 3 years. In some cases, the Court decisions have been made on the basis of an interpretation of congressional intent and in some cases the decision has been based on an interpretation of the Constitution. Common to many of these cases seems to be an assumption that welfare is a "property right" rather than a "gratuity" granted as a privilege by the Congress and subject to such eligibility conditions as the Congress, through the legislative process, decides to impose.

Health, Education, and Welfare Secretary Elliot L. Richardson disagrees with this view of welfare as a vested right. Under Secretary Veneman disagrees with this view. The Committee on Finance disagrees with this view. Underlying the committee's action on the welfare amendments in the bill is the fundamental policy that the "right to welfare" is a statutory right, dependent on legislation enacted by the Congress, and not a vested, inherent, or inalienable right to benefits.

The committee's view is that the right to welfare is no more substantial, and has no more legal effect, than any other benefit conferred by a generous legislature. The welfare system as we know it today is authorized under the Social Security Act, and the statutory rights granted under that act can be extended, restricted, altered, amended, or even repealed by the Congress. It is this ability to change the nature of a statutory right which distinguishes it from a property right or any other right considered inviolate under the Constitution.

Consistent with this view the committee bill includes provisions reasserting the intent of Congress with respect to the residency requirements, the man in the house rules, payments of welfare benefits during appeals, the requirement that States seek to establish the paternity of illegitimate children applying for welfare and allowing caseworkers to enter the home of welfare recipients at reasonable times and with reasonable notice.

In addition the bill would prevent the use of Federal funds in financing future efforts to nullify any feature of the Social Security Act.

TAX AMENDMENTS

This bill also contains several tax amendments closely related to the programs dealt with by the bill.

INFORMATION REPORTING

An important feature of the committee bill is the provision calling for information reports to be submitted to the Internal Revenue Service of payments made by insurance companies to health care providers. In the case of federally financed health programs like medicare and medicaid the amendment calls for reports both of payments made direct to the provider and those made to the beneficiary in reimbursement of his bills. In the case of private insurance policies, however, the amendment would require reporting only of payments made direct to the provider.

BRIBES AND KICKBACKS

Another committee amendment corrects an unintended effect of the Tax Reform Act of 1969 allowing a tax deduction for illegal bribes and kickbacks. The 1969 Act required that there be a criminal conviction or guilty plea before such a payment could be disallowed. The committee bill substantially restores the prior law and disallows a deduction if the payment is illegal under Federal or State law. This disallowance rule also applies to medical referral fees under the medicare and medicaid programs since another provision in the bill makes such payments illegal.

RETIREMENT INCOME CREDIT

The committee bill also upgrades the retirement income credit—a tax relief provision for retired persons—by increasing the amount of retirement income eligible for the credit. This action, together with the recent announcement by the Internal Revenue Service that it would compute the retirement income credit for persons who request it, should go far toward making this credit generally more useful.

Mr. President, in connection with that, I want to give credit to the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) for his diligence in this area in assuring that an adequate tax relief provision for retired persons would be a provision of the bill.

WORK INCENTIVE TAX CREDIT

Another amendment recommended by the committee provides for a tax credit for employers of persons trained or placed through the work incentive program. The tax credit will amount to 20 percent of the employee's salary for the first year of employment, but it would be recaptured if the employee should be discharged in the first 2 years of employment. The committee felt that this amendment, part of a comprehensive revision of the work incentive program, would stimulate jobs for people who today must depend on the welfare system for their sustenance.

VETERANS PENSION INCREASE

The Committee on Finance, in its deliberation on this bill, has continued, as in the past, to be mindful of the special needs of veterans. The committee bill includes the text of S. 3385, a pension increase bill introduced by Senator HERMAN E. TALMADGE, chairman of the Subcommittee on Veterans' Legislation. The Talmadge bill, incorporated as a committee amendment, would increase pension benefits by $160,000,000 above present law, effective January 1971.

Pension benefits are related to need. As social security payments are increased, the veterans need for a pension decreases, although by a considerably smaller amount than the rise in social security benefits. The committee amendments substantially offset these reductions.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President this concludes my prepared statement on the committee bill. I urge that it be approved.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a summary of the principal provision of the bill.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

II. SUMMARY OF PRINCIPAL PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

A. SOCIAL SECURITY CASH BENEFITS

1. Provisions of the House bill changed, and new provisions added by the committee

The committee made a number of changes in the provisions of the House-passed bill affecting the social security cash benefit programs. In a number of cases, the committee bill would modify or eliminate provisions of the House bill affecting select groups of beneficiaries; these changes would help make possible a 10-percent across-the-board benefit increase compared with the 5-percent increase in the House bill. Other provisions in the committee bill include a $100 minimum benefit, an increase in the benefits for widows and widowers, an age-62 computation point for men, liberalization of the retirement test, an increase in the maximum benefits payable to a family, a reduction in the waiting period for disability benefits, and other less far-reaching but nonetheless important changes.

Increase in Social Security Benefits

Social security payments to the nearly 26 million beneficiaries on the rolls at the end of January 1971, and to those who come on the rolls after that date, would be increased by 10 percent, with a new minimum benefit of $100. (The House-passed bill would have increased benefits by 5 percent, with a minimum benefit of $67.20.)

The benefit increase would be effective for the month of January 1971, but would not be paid until April, and would mean additional benefit payments of $5.0 billion in the first full year.

Increased Widows' and Widowers' Insurance Benefits

Under present law, when benefits begin at or after age 62 the benefit for a widow (or dependent widower) is equal to 82½ percent of the amount the deceased worker would have received if his benefit had started when he was age 65. A widow can get a benefit at age 60 reduced to take account of the additional 2 years in which she would be getting benefits.

Both the House bill and the committee bill are aimed at providing benefits to a widow equal to the benefits her husband was receiving, or would have received. It was brought to the committee's attention, however, that in some cases the widow, under the House bill, would actually receive a benefit substantially higher than her husband received before his death. Under the House bill, a widow would be entitled to 100% of the amount her deceased husband would receive if he became a beneficiary after reaching age 65. On the other hand, if he actually began receiving benefits before reaching age 65, his benefits would be actuarially reduced. For example, a man eligible for $150 monthly if he retires at age 65 will receive reduced benefits of $135 when he retires 18 months before reaching age 65. Under the House bill, his widow age 65 or older would be eligible for monthly benefits of $150; under the committee bill, she would receive $135, as did her husband. Generally, under the committee bill the widow would receive either 100% of the benefit her husband was actually receiving at the time of his death or, if he was not receiving benefits, 100% of the benefit he would have been eligible for at age 65.

About 2.7 million widows and widowers on the rolls at the end of January 1971 would receive additional benefits, and $649 million in additional benefit payments would be made in the first full year.

Effective date.—January 1, 1971.

Cost-of-Living Increases

The House-passed bill would have provided for cost-of-living increases in benefits and for related increases in the tax base and in the exempt amount under the retirement test which would have subordinated the role of Congress in determining benefit levels. The committee has revised these provisions in order to stress the role of the Congress in setting social security tax and benefit levels. Under the committee bill, social security benefits would rise automatically in the event the cost of living goes up and Congress failed to legislate on social security benefits or taxes. The social security earnings limitation would increase automatically as covered earnings increase. The full cost of these automatic increases would be met equally by increases in tax rates and in the tax base, with the function of determining the base and the rates performed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. The committee bill would provide that the automatic benefit increases would not go into effect if in the year before the year in which the increase was to be effective Congress and the President had approved a change in social security benefit levels, or a change in the schedule of social security tax rates, or a change in the social security tax base.

Age 62 Computation Point for Men

Under present law, the method of computing benefits for men and women differs in that years up to age 65 must be taken into account in determining average earnings for men, while for women, only years up to age 62 must be taken into account. Also, benefit eligibility is figured up to age 65 for men and up to age 62 for women. These differences which provide special advantages for women would be eliminated under the committee bill and under the House-passed bill by applying the same rules to men as now apply to women.

The House-passed change would apply immediately to those already on the rolls as well as to those coming on in the future. Under the committee's bill, there would be a gradual transition to the new procedures so that the provision would apply only to those becoming entitled in benefits in the future; the number of years used in determining insured status and in computing benefits for men would be reduced in 3 steps so that men reaching age 62 in 1973, and later, would have only years up to age 62 taken into account in determining insured status and average earnings.

In the first full year, an additional $6 million in benefits would be paid out under this provision. Under the change in benefit eligibility requirements for men, some 2,000 people—workers, their dependents, and survivors not eligible under present law—would be added to the rolls in the first year.

Effective date.—January 1, 1971.

Increase in Maximum Family Benefits

The committee bill provides that families coming on the rolls after a benefit increase is enacted, as well as families already on the rolls at the time the increase is enacted, would be guaranteed the full amount (10 percent under the committee bill) of the current and future general benefit increases. Under the committee bill, maximum family benefits would range from 1.5 to 1.88 times the worker's benefit amount payable at age 65.

Effective date—January 1, 1971.

Actuarial Reduction for Women

Under present law when a woman applies before age 65 for a retirement benefit based on her own earnings, her benefits are actuarially reduced to take account of the longer period over which benefits will be paid. If she subsequently applies for a wife's benefit after reaching age 65, her wife's benefit is also reduced to reflect the fact that she began to receive benefits before age 65. The House-passed bill would eliminate actuarial reduction in such cases; the committee bill would retain the provisions of present law.

Benefits for Divorced Women

The committee bill retains the provisions of present law which require that in order to qualify for benefits as a divorced wife, divorced widow or a surviving divorced mother a woman must show that: (1) she was receiving at least one-half of her support from her former husband, or (2) she was receiving substantial contributions from her former husband, or (3) there was a court order in effect providing for substantial contributions to her support by her former husband.

The House-passed bill would delete these requirements.

Waiting Period for Disability Benefits

Under present law there is a six-month waiting period before a disabled person is eligible for social security disability insurance benefits. The committee added to the House bill a provision to reduce the waiting period for disability benefits by two months, so that benefits would be payable on the basis of a four-month waiting period, rather than a six-month period.

About 140,000 people—disabled workers and their dependents and disabled widows and widowers—would be able to receive a benefit for January 1971 as a result of this provision. About $185 million in additional benefits would be paid out during the first full year.

Effective date.—January 1, 1971.

Childhood Disability Benefits

The committee bill, like the House bill, would provide childhood disability benefits for the disabled child of an insured retired, deceased, or disabled worker, if his disability began before age 22, rather than before 18 as under present law. The committee added a new provision to permit a person who was entitled to childhood disability benefits to become re-entitled if he again becomes disabled within 7 years after his prior entitlement to such benefits was terminated.

About 13,000 people—disabled children and their mothers—would immediately become eligible for benefits, primarily as a result of extending the age limit to 22. About $13 million in additional benefits would be paid out during the first full year.

Effective date.—January 1, 1971.

Disability Benefits Affected by the Receipt of Workmen's Compensation

The committee deleted the provision in the House bill modifying the workmen's compensation offset provisions to raise the ceiling on income from combined workmen's compensation and disability insurance benefits from 80 percent to 100 percent of the disabled worker's average current earnings before the onset of his disability.

Disability Insurance Benefits for the Blind

The House-passed bill contained a provision which would eliminate the general recency-of-work requirement for people who meet the definition of blindness in the Social Security Act. The committee bill revises the requirements for paying disability insurance benefits to blind people. Under the committee revision, disability insurance benefits would be payable to any blind person (as defined in the law) who has credit for 6 quarters of social security coverage, without regard to his ability to work.

About 225,000 people, blind workers and their dependents, would become immediately eligible for monthly benefits. About $225 million in additional benefits would be paid out during the first full year.

Effective date.—January 1, 1971.

Adoption of Child by Retired or Disabled Worker

The committee broadened the provision of the House-passed bill which would change the provisions of present law relating to the payment of benefits to a child (other than a natural child or a stepchild) who is adopted by a disability insurance beneficiary after the latter becomes entitled to benefits. Under the committee bill, the child, adopted when a disabled or retired worker is entitled to benefits, would be able to get child's benefits based on the worker's earnings if: (1) the adoption was decreed by a court of competent jurisdiction within the United States, (2) the child lived with the worker in the United States for the year before the worker became disabled or entitled to an old-age or disability insurance benefit, (3) the child received at least one-half of his support from the worker for that year, and (4) the child was under age 18 at the time he began living with the worker.

Effective date.—January 1, 1971.

Refund of Social Security Tax to Members of Certain Religious Faiths Opposed to Insurance

Under present law, members of certain religious sects, who have conscientious objections to social security by reason of their adherence to the established teachings of the sect, may be exempt from the social security self-employment tax provided they also waive their eligibility for social security benefits. This exemption was written largely to relieve the Olo Order Amish from having to pay the social security tax when, because of their religious beliefs, they would never draw social security benefits.

The committee bill would extend the exemption (by a refund or credit against income taxes at year end) from social security taxes to members of the sect who are "employees" covered by the Social Security Act as well as the "self-employed" members of the sect. The employee would have to file an application for exemption from the tax and waive his eligibility for social security and medicare benefits as the self-employed members must presently do. The provision specifically provides that there would be no forgiveness of the employer portion of the social security tax as the committee believes this would create an undesirable preference in the statute.

Trust Fund Expenditures for Rehabilitation Services

The committed added to the House bill a provision to authorize an increase in the amount of social security trust fund monies that may be used to pay for the costs of rehabilitating social security disability beneficiaries. The amount would be increased from 1 percent of the previous year's disability benefits to 1¼ percent for fiscal year 1972 and to 1½ percent for fiscal year 1973 and subsequent years.

Underpayments

The committee added a provision to the House bill under which additional relatives (by blood, marriage, or adoption) would be added to the present categories of persons listed in the law who may receive social security cash payments due a deceased beneficiary under title II of the Social Security Act.

Wage Credits for Members of the Uniformed Services

Present law provides for noncontributory social security wage credits of up to $100 a month, in addition to credit for basic pay, for military service performed after 1967. The committee bill, like the House bill, would provide that the additional wage credits would be extended to service in the period from 1957 (when military service was first covered under social security) through 1967. In addition, the committee bill would make a change in the way the additional credit is computed from $100 for each month of service to $300 for each quarter of service. The additional wage credits would affect approximately 130,000 beneficiaries immediately; about $35 million in additional benefits would be paid out in the first full year.

Effective date.—January 1, 1971.

2. Provisions of the House bill that were not changed by the committee

Special Payments to People Age 72 and Older

Under present law the special payments of $46 a month for an individual and $69 for a couple made to people age 72 and over who have not worked under the program long enough to qualify for regular cash benefits. Under the bill, the payments would be increased by 5 percent to $48.30 a month for an individual and $72.50 for a couple.

The benefit increase would be effective for the month of January 1971 but would not be paid until April.

Reduced Benefits for Widowers at Age 60

The 1965 amendments lowered from 62 to 60 the age of eligibility for widows but left the age of eligibility for dependent widowers at age 62. The bill provides that widowers who have attained age 60 would be eligible for reduced benefits, as widows are under present law.

Effective date.—January 1, 1971.

Liberal of the Retirement Test

The committee bill, like the House bill, provides an increase from $1,680 to $2,000 in the amount a beneficiary under age 72 may earn in a year and still be paid full social security benefits for the year.

Under present law, each $2 earned between $1,680 and $2,880 results in a $1 reduction in benefits; each dollar earned above $2,880 reduces benefits by $1. The bill would provide for a $1 reduction for each $2 earned with respect to all earnings above $2,000, not just those between $2,000 and $3,200.

For 1971 about 650,000 beneficiaries would receive additional benefits, and about 380,000 persons who would receive no benefits under present law would receive some benefits. Additional benefit payments for the first full year would be about $404 million.

Effective date.—Taxable years ending after 1970.

Disability Insurance Benefits Applications Filed After Death

The committee bill would permit disability insurance benefits (and dependents' benefits based on the worker's entitlement to disability benefits) to be paid to the disabled worker's survivors if an application for benefits is filed within 3 months after the disabled worker's death.

Effective date.—Deaths in and after year of enactment.

Penalty for Furnishing False Information To Obtain a Social Security Number

Under present law, penalties are not provided for individuals who give false information in order to secure multiple social security numbers with an intent to conceal their true identities. This has led to a number of problems in private industry and in the administration of Government programs. Therefore, the committee bill, like the House bill, would provide criminal penalties if an individual willfully furnishes false information with the intent to deceive the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for the purpose of obtaining more than one social security number or of establishing a social security record under a different name. Upon conviction, an individual shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

Other Cash Benefit Amendments

The committee also deleted the House-passed amendment providing social security coverage for Federal Home Loan Bank employees and adopted amendments relating to widows who remarry, retroactive payments for certain disabled people, temporary employees of the Government of Guam, policemen and firemen in Idaho and policemen in Missouri, certain public hospital employees in New Mexico, registrars of voters in Louisiana, certain U.S. citizens who are self-employed outside the United States and certain part-time and student employees of State and local governments in Nebraska. Other amendments included in the committee's bill relate to the treatment of earnings of self-employed people paying taxes on a fiscal year basis, recomputation of benefits based on combined railroad and social security earnings and payment to a child entitled on the record of more than one worker.

B. MEDICARE AND MEDICAID

1. Provisions of the House bill that were not substantially changed by the committee

Relationship between Medicare and Federal employees benefits

The committee bill would require that effective January 1, 1972, no payment would be made under medicare for the same services covered under a Federal employees health benefits plan, unless in the meantime, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare certifies that the Federal employees health benefits program has been modified to make available coverage supplementary to medicare benefits and that Federal employees and retirees age 65 and over will continue to have the benefit of a Government contribution toward their health insurance premiums.

Hospital Insurance for the Uninsured

People reaching age 65 who are ineligible for hospital insurance benefits under medicare would be able to enroll, on a voluntary basis, for hospital insurance coverage under the same conditions under which people can enroll under the supplementary medical insurance part of medicare. Enrollment for supplementary medical insurance is also required. Those who enroll would pay the full cost of the protection—estimated at $27 a month at the beginning of the program, and rising as hospital costs rise. States and public organizations, through agreements with the Secretary, would be permitted to purchase such protection on a group basis for their retired (or active) employees age 65 or over.

Limitation on Recognition of Physicians' Fee Increases

Charges determined to be reasonable under the present criteria in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health law would be limitd by providing: (a) that after enactment of the bill medical charge levels recognized as prevailing may not be increased beyond the 75th percentile of actual charges in a locality during the previous elapsed calendar year; (b) that for fiscal year 1972 and thereafter the prevailing charge levels recognized for a locality may be increased, in the aggregate, only to the extent justified by indexes reflecting changes in costs of practice of physicians and in earnings levels; and (c) that for medical supplies, equipment, and services that, in the judgment of the Secretary, generally do not vary significantly in quality from one supplier to another, charges allowed as reasonable may not exceed the lower levels at which such supplies, equipment and services are widely available in a locality.

Termination of Payments to Suppliers of Services Who Abuse the Medicare Program

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be given authority to terminate payment for services rendered by a supplier of health and medical services found to be guilty of program abuses. Program review teams would be established to furnish the Secretary professional advice in carrying out this authority.

Repeal of Medicaid Provision Requiring Expanded Programs

The requirement in present law that States have comprehensive medicaid programs by 1977 would be repealed.

State Determination of Reasonable Hospital Costs

States would be permitted to pay hospitals on the basis of their own determination of reasonable cost, provided there is assurance that the medicaid program would pay the actual cost of hospitalization of medicaid recipients.

Government Payment No Higher Than Charges

Payments for institutional services under the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs could not be higher than the charges regularly made for those services.

Federal Matching for Modern Claims Processing Systems

Federal matching at the 90-percent rate would be available under medicaid for the States to set up mechanized claims processing and informational retrieval systems. Federal matching for the continuing operation of such systems would be at the 75-percent rate.

Prohibition of Reassignments

Medicare (part B) and medicaid payments to anyone other than a patient, his physician, or other person providing the service, would generally be prohibited, unless the physician (or, in the case of medicaid, another type of practitioner) is required as a condition of his employment to turn over his fees to his employer or unless there is a contractual arrangement between the physician and the facility in which the services were provided under which the facility bills for all such services.

Utilization Review in Medicaid

Hospitals and skilled nursing homes participating in the medicaid and maternal and child health programs would be required to have the same type of utilization review committee with the same functions as are required in the medicare program. (Any such committee actually performing such functions for medicare purposes would apply these to medicaid cases.)

Medicaid Deductibles for the Medically Indigent

Present law requires medicaid cost sharing provisions for the medically-indigent to vary directly with the amount of the recipient's income.

This has created an impossible administrative situation for States desiring to apply uniform reasonable copayment requirements (for example, 50 cents or $1 per prescription).

The amendment would permit States to employ reasonable cost sharing provisions with respect to health services for the medically indigent without requiring variations because of differences in income levels of different medically indigent recipients.

Terminating Payment Where Hospital Admission Not Necessary Under Medicare

If the utilization review committee of a hospital or extended care facility, in its sample review of admissions, finds a case where institutionalization is no longer necessary, payment would be cut off after 3 days. This provision parallels the provision in present law under which long-stay cases are cut off after 3 days when the utilization review committee determines that institutionalization is no longer required.

Role of State Health Agencies in Medicaid

State health or other appropriate State medicaid agencies would be required to perform certain functions under the medicaid and maternal and child health programs relating to the quality of the health care furnished to recipients.

Retroactive Coverage Under Medicaid

States would be required to cover under medicaid the cost of health care provided to an eligible individual during the 3-month period before the month in which he applied for medicaid.

Certification of Hospitalization for Dental Care

A dentist would be authorized to certify to the necessity for hospitalization to protect the health of a medicare patient who is hospitalized for noncovered dental procedures.

Christian Science Sanatoriums Under Medicaid

Christian Science sanatoriums would be exempted from the medicaid requirement that they have a licensed nursing home administrator and from other inappropriate skilled nursing home requirements.

Grace Period for Paying Medicare Premium

Where there is good cause for a medicare beneficiary's failure to pay supplementary medical insurance premiums, an extended grace period of 90 days would be provided.

Extension of Time for Filing Medicare Claims

The time limit for filing supplementary medical insurance claims would be extended where the medicare beneficiary's delay is due to administrative error.

Waiver of Enrollment Requirements in Cases of Administrative Error

Where an individual's enrollment rights under part B of medicare have been prejudiced because of inaction or error on the part of the Government, the Secretary would be authorized to provide equitable relief to the individual.

Enrollment Under Medicare

Eligible individuals would be permitted to enroll under medicare's supplementary medical insurance program during any prescribed enrollment period. Beneficiaries would no longer be required to enroll within 3 years following first eligibility or a previous withdrawal from the program. Relief would be provided where administrative error has prejudiced an individual's right to enroll in medicare's supplementary medical insurance program.

Waiver of Medicare Overpayment

Where incorrect medicare payments were made to a deceased beneficiary, the liability of survivors for repayment could be waived if the survivors were without fault in incurring the overpayment.

Medicare Fair Hearings

Fair hearings, held by medicare carriers in response to disagreements over amounts paid under supplementary medical insurance, would be conducted only where the amount in controversy is $100 or more.

Collection of Medicare Premium by Railroad Retirement Board

Where a person is entitled to both railroad retirement and social security monthly benefits, his premium payment for supplementary medical insurance benefits would be dededucted from his Railroad Retirement benefit in all cases.

2. Provisions of the House bill modified by the committee

Limitation on Federal Payment for Disapproved Expenditures

Reimbursement amounts to providers of health services under the medicaid, medicare, and maternal and child health programs for capital costs, such as depreciation and interest, would not be made with respect to large capital expenditures which are inconsistent with State or local health facility plans. The committee added a provision which would require States which apply this provision to establish an appeals mechanism at the State level for purposes of considering adverse decisions.

Experiments and Projects in Prospective Reimbursement and Incentives for Economy

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be required to develop experiments and demonstration projects designed to test various methods of making payment to providers of services on a prospective basis under the medicare, medicaid and maternal and child health programs. In addition, the Secretary would be authorized to conduct experiments with methods of payment or reimbursement designed to increase efficiency and economy. The committee added a provision which would allow the Secretary to include in such projects community mental health centers, and ambulatory care facilities.

Limits on Costs Recognized as Reasonable

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be given authority to establish and promulgate limits on provider costs to be recognized as reasonable under medicare based on comparisons of the cost of covered services by various classes of providers in the same geographical area. Hospitals and extended care facilities could charge beneficiaries for the costs of services in excess of those that are necessary to the efficient delivery of needed health services (except in the case of an admission by a physician who has a financial interest in the facility). The committee added a provision which would further define unreasonable costs as including those resulting from gross inefficiency.

Limitation on Federal Medicaid Matching

The House bill provided for a one-third cutback in Federal medicaid matching after a medicaid patient had received 90 days of care in a skilled nursing home or 90 days in a mental hospital or 60 days in a general hospital in a year. The committee substituted for the House section a provision which would authorize the Secretary of HEW to reduce the matching selectively in those States where he finds inadequate medical audit and utilization review. The cutback in matching would be related to the degree of excessive costs resulting from inadequate review and audit.

Payment for Supervisory Physicians in Teaching Hospitals

The committee modified the provision in the House bill which would provide for payment for services of certain teaching physicians on a cost basis and would make fee-for-service reimbursement contingent on general billing for such services to all patients and collection from those able to pay. Under the committee modification, reimbursement of physician time in the teaching serivce would be determined on a cost or cost-equivalent basis. Reimbursement for such services would be made on a reasonable-charge basis if the hospital had, in the 2-year period ending in 1967, and subsequently, customarily charged all patients and collected from a majority of patients on a fee-for-service basis, or if a bonafide private patient relationship had been established.

Institutional Planning and Budgeting

Health institutions under the medicare program would be required to have a written plan reflecting an operating budget and a capital expenditure budget. The committee clarified this provision to stipulate that the operating budget would not have to be a detailed item budget.

Modifications in Extended Care and Home Health Benefits

The committee modified the provisions of the House bill which would authorize the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to establish presumptive periods of coverage on the basis of a physician's certification for patients admitted to an extended care facility or started on a home health plan. The committee provides that, to the extent feasible, pre-admission review of extended care admissions would be required and unless disapproved, coverage upon admission would continue for the lesser of (1) the initially certified period, (2) until notice of disapproval, or (3) 10 days. Where certifications and evidence were provided in a timely basis, any subsequent determination (for purposes of determining medicare payments liability) that the patient no longer required covered care would be effective 2 days after notification to the facility. The committee provides for a similar approach to the determination of coverage of home health services.

Payments to Health Maintenance Organizations

Medicare beneficiaries could choose to have their care provided by a health maintenance organization (a prepaid group health or other capitation plan). Medicare would contract with such organization, and would reimburse them on a capitation basis at a rate equivalent to 95 percent of the per capita costs of medicare beneficiaries in the area with actuarial adjustments taking into account variations in patient mix. Profits accruing to the organization, beyond their retention rate for non-medicare members would be passed to the medicare enrollees in the form of expanded benefits. The committee substantially tightened the provision so as to define more specifically the quality standards and reimbursement mechanisms which would apply to the organizations as well as including additional safeguards against potential abuse and exploitation.

Physical and Other Therapy Services Under Medicare

The committee removed the provision in the House bill which would authorize reimbursement up to $100 for physical therapy services in a therapist's office.

The committee modified the limitation on reimbursement for institutional therapy basis, and also extended the limitation from a "salary equivalent" to a "salary related" basis, and also extended the limitation to apply to other therapists, dieticians, social workers and medical records librarians for their services provided in an institutional setting.

Medicare Benefits for People Living Near U.S. Border

The House bill provides that medicare beneficaries living in the border areas of the United States would be entitled to coveerd inpatient hospital care if the hospital they use is closer to their residence than a comparable U.S. hospital and if it has been accredited by a hospital approval program with standards comparable to medicare standards. The committee added to the House bill a provision extending coverage in these cases to physicians' and ambulance services furnished in conjunction with covered foreign hospital care.

3. New provisions added by the committee

Professional Standards Review Organizations

The committee provided for the establishment of Professional Standards Review Organizations formed by organizations representing substantial numbers of practicing physicians in local areas to assume responsibility for comprehensive and ongoing review of services provided in the medicare and medicaid programs. The purpose of the amendment is to assure proper utilization of care and services provided in medicare and medicaid through a formal professional mechanism representing the broadest possible cross-section of physicians in an area. Appropriate safeguards are included so as to adequately provide for protection of the public interest and to prevent pro forma assumption and carrying out of the vitally important review activities in the two highly-expensive programs. The amendment provides for the use by the PSRO of effective utilization review committees in hospitals and medical organizations.

Conform Medicare and Medicaid Standards for Nursing Facilities

The committee added to the House bill a provision which would require that health, safety, environmental, and staffing standards for extended care facilities be uniform with those established for skilled nursing homes under medicaid.

Inspector General for Health Administration

An Office of Inspector General for Health Administration would be established within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Inspector General would be appointed by the President, would report to the Secretary, and would be responsible for reviewing and auditing the social security health programs on a continuing and comprehensive basis to determine their efficiency, economy, and consonance with the law.

Proficiency Evaluation of Otherwise Disqualified Health Care Personnel

The committee bill would require the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to develop and employ proficiency examinations to determine whether health care personnel, not otherwise meeting specific formal criteria now included in medicare regulations, have sufficient training, experience, and professional competence to be considered qualified personnel for purposes of the medicare program.

Penalty for Fraudulent Acts Under the Medicare and Medicaid Programs

The committee added to the House bill a provision which would broaden the present penalty provisions relating to the making of a false statement or representation of a material fact in any application for medicare payments, to include the soliciting, offering, or acceptance of kickbacks or bribes, including the rebating of a portion of a fee or a charge for a patient referral, by providers of health care services. The penalty for such acts, as well as the acts currently subject to penalty under medicare, would be imprisonment up to one year, a fine of $10,000, or both. In addition, the committee bill provides that similar penalty provisions apply under medicaid.

The committee also provided that anyone who knowingly and willfully makes, or induces the making of, a false statement of material fact with respect to the conditions and operation of a health care facility or home health agency in order to secure medicare or medicaid certification of the facility or agency, would be guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by up to 6 months' imprisonment, a fine of not more than $2,000, or both.

Inclusion of American Samoa and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands Under Title V

The committee bill would include the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and American Samoa as eligible to receive funds under the maternal and child health and crippled children programs (title V).

Provide for Reasonable Approval of Rural Hospitals

The committee added to the House bill a provision which would authorize the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to waive, on an annual basis, the requirement that an access hospital have registered professional nurses on duty around the clock, but only if he finds that the hospital: (a) has made, and is continuing to make, a bona fide effort to comply with the nursing staff requirement but is unable to employ the qualified personnel necessary because of nursing personnel shortages in the area and has an RN on the daytime shift; (b) is located in a geographical area in which hospital facilities are in short supply; and (c) nonparticipation of the "access" hospital would seriously reduce the availability of hospital services to beneficiaries residing in the area. The waiver authority would expire December 31, 1975.

Consultants for Extended Care Facilities

The committee added to the House bill a provision to authorize State agencies to provide consultative services to those extended care facilities which request them in such specialty areas as maintenance of medical records and the formulation of policies governing the provision of dietary and social services. Medicare payment would be made directly to the State agency for the costs incurred in rendering these consultative services. The provision of such services by the State would satisfy the medicare requirements relating to the use of consultants in the appropriate specialty areas.

Public Access to Records Concerning Institutions' Qualifications

The committee added to the House bill a provision under which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be required to make reports of an institution's significant deficiencies (such as deficiencies in the areas of staffing, fire, safety, and sanitation) a matter of public record readily and generally available at social security district offices if, after a reasonable lapse of time (not to exceed 90 days), such deficiencies were not corrected.

Simplified Reimbursement of Extended Care Facilities

The committee provision would authorize the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to adopt (and adjust as specified), as reasonable-cost payments for extended care facilities in any State, the rates developed in that State under medicaid for reimbursement of skilled nursing care, if the Secretary finds that they are based upon reasonable analyses of costs of care in comparable facilities.

Authority for Establishing Liens to Permit Recovery of Overpayments

The committee added a provision to the House bill to facilitate the recoupment of overpayments to providers of services by authorizing the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, when he determines it to be necessary for purposes of recovering an overpayment to a provider, to establish a lien in favor of the Government in the amount of the overpayment, preserving in the course of such action the right of the provider to contest the amount of the overpayment and to seek release of the lien to clear title.

Direct Laboratory Billing

The committee bill woud authorize direct payment to laboratories for diagnostic tests at a negotiated rate provided that such rate does not exceed the amount which is payable under present law.

Refunding of Excess Medicare Premiums

The committee bill would authorize the refunding of excess medicare premiums paid prior to a beneficiary's death.

Waiver of Recovery of Erroneous Payment

The committee provisions would limit medicare's right of recovery of an erroneous payment to a three-year period from the date of the payment, where the institution or person involved acted in good faith. Similarly, the Secretary of H.E.W. would specify a reasonable period of time (not to exceed 3 years) after which medicare would not be required to accept claims for underpayment or nonpayment.

Provider Reimbursement Appeals Board

The committee amendment would establish an appeals board to hear appeals on reimbursement decisions made by intermediaries, under certain conditions, and where the amount at issue was $10,000 or more.

Prosthetic Lenses Furnished by Optometrists

The committee amended the definition of physician in medicare to include a licensed doctor of optometry, but only with respect to establishing the medical necessity of prosthetic lenses.

Chiropractors

The committee amendment would delete the study of chiropractic services called for in the House bill and would substitute a provision which would provide for the coverage under medicare of services involving manipulation of the spine by licensed chiropractors, if the chiropractor meets certain minimum standards established by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. The same limitations on chiropractic services would also be applicable to States providing such care under medicaid.

Colostomy Supplies

The committee provided for the inclusion of materials directly related to the care of colostomies as a reimbursable expense under medicare.

Section 1902(d)

The committee added a provision to the House bill which would repeal section 1902 (d) which requires States to maintain their level of fiscal expenditures from year-to-year in their medicaid programs.

Separately, the committee also provided that the 1902(d) maintenance of fiscal effort provision would not apply to Missouri effective for the year beginning July 1, 1970.

Increase in Maximum Federal Medicaid Matching for Puerto Rico

The $20 million ceiling on Federal medicaid matching for Puerto Rico would be raised to $30 million under the committee provision.

Health Screening of Children

The committee would authorize the Secretary to establish orderly priorities in the implementation of the presently required health care screening for children programs, with initial priority being given to preschool children.

Relationship Between Medicaid and Comprehensive Health Programs

The committee bill would permit a State to make arrangements with comprehensive health care programs for the delivery of services on a pre-paid basis to medicaid recipients, subject to the approval of the Secretary.

Intermediate Care Facilities

Under the committee amendment, the intermediate care provision would be transferred from title XI to title XIX. An ICF would be required to have at least one full-time licensed practical nurse on its staff, and care in ICF's would be subject to professional audit and utilization review requirements. The mentally retarded receiving active treatment in public institutions meeting appropriate standards established by H.E.W. would be eligible for Federal matching funds.

Termination of Nursing Home Administrators Advisory Council

The committee would terminate the Advisory Council on December 31, 1970. Under present law the council would be terminated December 31, 1971.

Coverage of Mentally Ill Children Under Medicaid

The committee bill would authorize coverage of inpatient care in State and local mental institutions for medicaid recipients under age 21, provided that the care consists of active treatment, that is provided in an accredited institution, and that the State maintain its own level of fiscal expenditure for care of the mentally ill under 21.

Definition of "Physician" in Medicaid

The committee bill would define "physician" in title XIX to mean a doctor of medicine or a doctor of osteopathy.

75 Percent Medicaid Matching Funds for Professional Medical Personnel

The present 75 percent Federal medicaid matching rate for professional medical personnel in State agencies would be expanded to also include such personnel who, on a contract or similar basis, undertake independent professional and medical audits of medicaid patients.

C. CATASTROPHIC HEALTH INSURANCE PROGRAM

The committee added to the House bill an amendment which would establish a program of catastrophic health insurance under the Social Security Act for all persons under age 65 who are insured under social security, their spouses and dependent children, as well as all persons under age 65 who are entitled to retirement, survivors, or disability benefits under title II of the act. The health services to be covered, and the applicable exclusions, are the same as under the medicare program, except that there would be no upper limit on covered hospital or extended care days or home health visits. Under the catastrophic health insurance program, benefits would be payable toward the costs of inpatient hospital services and post-hospital extended care services above an annual deductible of 60 days of inpatient hospital care for each individual, subject to a daily coinsurance amount. The program would also cover 80 percent of reasonable costs incurred for home health care and hospital outpatient services, and 80 percent of reasonable charges incurred for other covered medical services above an annual deductible amount which would initially be set at $2,000 per family and which would rise in accordance with any increases in the physicians' services component of the Consumer Price Index. The program could be administered through regular medicare administrative procedures and subject to all utilization, cost, quality and administrative controls applicable under that program. Coverage under the program would be effective beginning January 1, 1972, and the financing provisions necessary to pay for the additional benefits would become effective at the same time.

D. FINANCING OF SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS

In order to pay for the additional costs of the social security changes proposed in the committee bill, including the new catastrophic illness insurance and the existing actuarial deficit in the hospital insurance program, the social security tax base would be increased from $7,800 a year to $9,000 a year, starting January 1, 1971, as in the House-passed bill.

In addition, a new schedule of taxes would be provided. Like the schedule of taxes proposed in the House bill, the committee bill would decrease the taxes paid under the cash benefits program over the next few years, and increase the taxes paid under the hospital insurance program. Also, the committee bill provides an additional tax of 0.3 percent in 1972, rising to 0.4 percent in 1980 to pay for the catastrophic illness insurance provided in the bill.

E. TRADE ACT OF 1970

Purposes

The committee's trade amendment (Title III of this bill) is derived, with changes, from H.R. 18970 which passed the House of Representatives on November 19, 1970.

In brief, the general purposes of the Committee's trade amendment are:

(1) To provide to the President limited tariff-reducing authority for compensatory purposes until July 1, 1975;

(2) To strengthen our unfair trade practice statutes and thus enable industy and workers who are adversely affected by unfair foreign trade practices to receive a fair opportunity for relief;

(3) To revise the adjustment assistance and tariff adjustment procedures and criteria in the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, and provide a fair opportunity for injured industries, firms, and workers to receive adequate and prompt relief;

(4) To establish import quotas on textiles and footwear, unless: (a) the President finds them not to be in the national interest or (b) voluntary agreements limiting such imports are consummated with foreign governments, or (c) the President finds that imports do not disrupt the U.S. market;

(5) To revise the national security provisions of the Trade Expansion Act to preclude the use of duties or tariffs whenever the President has determined that imports of a particular product or material are threatening to impair the national security;

(6) To strengthen the independent status of the U.S. Tariff Commission; and

(7) To make various other changes in our tariff and trade laws which will streamline the procedures dealing with specific import or export problems.

Trade Agreement Authority

The President's trade agreement authority under the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 terminated at the close of June 30, 1967. The President has been without such authority since that time and in his trade message to the Congress, of November 18, 1969, he requested renewal of the authority, including new authority to reduce duties.

The committee amendment would extend the President's authority to enter into new trade agreements under the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 to July 1, 1975. The President is given new authority to reduce duties by 20 percent, or 2 percentage points, below the rates of duty which will exist when the final stage of the Kennedy Round reduction becomes effective on January 1, 1972. The committee amendment would limit the President's authority to enter into and carry out new trade agreements to those situations in which compensatory concessions are necessary to offset the effects of an increase in U.S. duties or imposition of other restrictions by the U.S. Government on the products of a foreign country which were bound under a trade agreement. Should reductions in duty under the new authority be agreed to prior to the final stages of the Kennedy Round, the remaining stages of Kennedy Round reductions and the new reductions agreed to are to be aggregated and made effective in at least two stages.

Other Presidential Authority

Concern has been expressed about the barriers to trade which have developed despite the Kennedy Round of trade negotiation. In 1962, the Committee on Finance added section 252 to the Trade Expansion Act to provide new authority and direction to the President to act against import restrictions or other acts of foreign countries which unjustifiably or unreasonably burden or discriminate against U.S. commerce. The Trade Act of 1970 broadens the President's authority to deal with foreign trade barriers and streamlines the procedures for handling specific complaints.

The Trade Act of 1970 also amends the President's authority to safeguard the national security by providing that any adjustment of imports under the national security authority shall not be accomplished by the imposition or increase of any duty or of any fee or charge having the effect of a duty. In addition, time limitations are imposed on the Director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness in making determinations on applications for action under the national security provision.

Tariff Adjustment and Adjustment Assistance

The need for making less rigid the criteria for determining serious injury from increased imports is met in title III both for tariff adjustment for industries and adjustment assistance in the case of firms or groups of workers.

Tariff Adjustment.—In present law, the criteria for determining serious injury are the same for tariff adjustment for industries and for adjustment assistance for firms and workers. The committee agrees with the House and the Administration that the present criteria are too stringent. Under the new provisions, the Tariff Commission, in the case of tariff adjustment, or the President, in the case of adjustment assistance, is to determine whether increased imports "contribute substantially" toward causing or threatening to cause serious injury. In the case of tariff adjustment, the committee provided that increased imports must be related in whole or in part to the duty or other customs treatment reflecting tariff concessions agreed to by the United States.

If serious injury is found to an industry, those Commissioners finding injury are to make an additional determination under the new provision. This additional determination will be in the affirmative if the Commission finds that imports of the article are: (1) acutely or severely injuring a domestic industry or (2) threatening to acutely or severely injure a domestic industry.

A majority of the Commissioners present and voting is to be required for an affirmative injury determination and a majority of those Commissioners finding injury under the criteria provided must determine the type of import restriction required to remedy the injury.

When the Commission finds and reports to the President an affirmative injury determination, the President is required to take such action as he deems necessary to prevent or remedy the injury so found unless he determines that such action is not in the national interest. In the case of an additional affirmative determination by the Commission on the question of acute or severe injury, the President is required to impose the import restrictions found by the Commission to be necessary to prevent or remedy the acute or severe injury unless he determines that such action would not be in the national interest. As is presently provided, if the President does not make effective the remedy determined by the Tariff Commission, he must report to the Congress within 60 days of the receipt of the Tariff Commission's report and findings. In such case, the existing provisions of law with respect to Congressional implementation of the Tariff Commission finding as to the action necessary to prevent or remedy the injury would continue to apply.

Section 352 of the Trade Expansion Act with regard to orderly marketing agrcements is amended to provide that the President may, at any time, negotiate such agreements on articles subject to tariff adjustment or upon which he has received an affirmative injury determination.

New review procedures on pending tariff adjustment action are provided. In any report by the Tariff Commission reviewing such tariff adjustment actions, it must include information on steps taken by firms in the industry to compete more effectively with imports. In addition, in any review of tariff adjustment actions by the Tariff Commission, as a result of which the President may determine to extend, in whole or in part, or terminate such action, the Commission will be required to determine whether the existing restrictions on imports are sufficient to prevent or remedy injury to the domestic industry.

Adjustment Assistance.—The Trade Act of 1970 also revises the procedures for petitions by firms or groups of workers to provide that petitions by firms or groups of workers are to be made to the President rather than the Tariff Commission. The Tariff Commission will continue to provide the President with a factual report to assist the President in making his determination as to eligibility of firms and groups of workers to apply for adjustment assistance.

The amendment provides increased trade adjustment allowances payable to adversely affected workers. Under existing law, the allowance is 65 percent of the worker's average weekly wage or 65 percent of the average weekly manufacturing wage, whichever is lower. The amendment increases each of these percentages to 75 percent.

The amendment provides that if the President does not provide tariff adjustment for an industry after an affirmative injury determination by the Tariff Commission, he is required to provide that the firms and workers in that industry may request certification of eligibility for adjustment assistance.

The Committee also provided the Tariff Commission with a period of 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act to make the necessary changes in its rules and regulations and to so organize its staff to expeditiously process the tariff adjustment and adjustment assistance petitions filed under the provisions of this Act. No new petition may be filed under section 301(a) of the Trade Expansion Act until the Tariff Commission issues new rules and regulations, which must be within 90 days after enactment.

Quotas on Certain Textile and Footwear Articles

We believe that the tariff adjustment amendments described above will be sufficient to deal with competitive situations facing many domestic producers in the economy. However, the effects of rapidly increasing imports on two basic industries are such as to require extraordinary measures. Part B of title III of this bill deals with the extremely serious threat to the textile and apparel industry and to the nonrubber footwear industry.

Under part B of title III, the total quantities of imports of certain textile and footwear articles are to be limited by category and by country beginning in the year 1971. For that year, imports are to be limited to the annual average quantities imported during the three calendar years 1967 through 1969. For the years after 1971, the total quantity of imports of each category of textile articles or footwear articles is to be limited to the quantity determined for the foreign country for the preceding year plus an increase determined by the President. Any such increase is to be limited to a percentage not over 5 percent of the total quantity permitted to be entered in the immediately preceding year as the President determines to be consistent with the purposes of the quota provisions.

The President is authorized to exempt from quotas imports of articles: (1) which he determines are not disrupting the U.S. market, (2) when he determines that the national interest requires such action, or (3) when he finds that the supply of such articles in the domestic market is insufficient to meet demand at reasonable prices.

In addition, the President is authorized to negotiate agreements under which imports of textiles and footwear would be controlled on a voluntary basis. Imports covered by such agreements would also be exempt from quantitative limitations as would imports of cotton textile articles as a result of the existing Long Term Arrangements on Cotton Textiles.

Determinations with respect to the establishment of or change in quantitative limitations or exemptions from such limitations, other than determinations made by the President for national interest reasons, would be subject to the rulemaking provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act.

The quota limitations provided in the bill would terminate on July 1, 1976, unless the President finds that the extension of the quantitative limitations for periods not to exceed 5 years would be in the national interest.

Other Tariff and Trade Provisions

The magnitude and the nature of U.S. foreign trade has changed remarkably over the past decade. Although both imports and exports separately account for about 4 percent of the gross national product, they now exceed $80 billion. The committee is concerned that the rules of competition governing this volume of trade be fair to all concerned. Consequently, the committee has tightened the domestic procedures with respect to such international trade practices as dumping and subsidization of exports. Greater recognition as to the role of the Tariff Commission as an independent agency is emphasized in amendments made to the Tariff Act of 1930. The committee directs the Executive and the Tariff Commission to conduct a series of studies aimed at developing basic principles of free and fair trade, insuring reciprocity for U.S. commerce, and fair international labor standards. Provision is also made for the solution of specific trade problems which cannot be remedied under existing provisions of law.

Antidumping Act of 1921

The Antidumping Act is amended to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury must take initial action within 4 months after the question of dumping has been presented to him. In exceptional cases the Secretary would have an additional 90 day period to reach such a finding, if he published in the Federal Register, within 60 days after the complaint is received, the reasons why additional time is absolutely necessary. Under the committee amendment, this would require the withholding of appraisement within that period should the Secretary of the Treasury have reason to suspect that sales at less than fair value are, or are likely to be, taking place. Should the Secretary of the Treasury's initial action involve a tentative negative determination, the Secretary would be authorized to withhold appraisement within three months after the notice of negative determination has been made if he should reverse his initial negative determination. In addition, the Antidumping Act is amended to provide criteria for a determination of dumping with regard to imports from State controlled economies. The amendment reflects existing Customs practices.

Countervailing Duty Provision

The countervailing duty provision is amended to require the Secretary of the Treasury to make a determination within 12 months after the question is presented to him as to whether a bounty or grant has been bestowed on imports into the United States.

Under the bill, subsidized duty-free imports are also to be subject to the countervailing duty provisions but only if the Tariff Commission should determine that such subsidized imports are injuring a domestic industry. The countervailing duty provision is also amended to provide the Secretary of the Treasury with discretionary authority with respect to the imposition of a countervailing duty on an article subject to quantitative limitation or subject to agreements under which the volume of exports to the United States is limited. Countervailing duties would be imposed when the Secretary determines that such limitations are not an adequate substitute for a countervailing duty with respect to the article in question.

Tariff Commission

In view of the added investigative and statutory burden on the Tariff Commission which will result from this legislation and in view of the concern of the committee to protect the independent nature of the Tariff Commission, the committee provided, in effect, that the Tariff Commission's budget shall be directly appropriated by the Congress (as is the budget of other independent agencies such as the General Accounting Office), and that the Executive shall not have authority to reorganize the Commission. The committee bill also would direct the Tariff Commission to do a number of studies which could lay the groundwork for a fresh approach to U.S. trade problems and agreements.

Comprehensive Studies by the President and Tariff Commission

There are a number of outstanding problems in the field of international trade which require intensive study. One such problem is the apparent lack of balance and reciprocity in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The presently constituted GATT agreement contains certain provisions that were written in 1947 when the United States had an overwhelmingly dominant position in world trade. They were designed at that time to put more dollars into the hands of the then war-torn European countries. The international economic positions of Europe, Japan, and the United States have changed so radically since the end of World War II that a new executive agreement incorporating the provisions of commercial reciprocity in all trade and investment matters appears to be desirable. As a first step toward the realization of this goal, the committee's bill authorizes and directs the executive branch and the Tariff Commission to conduct a series of studies dealing with the U.S. position in world trade and the rules under which trading nations can freely and fairly compete in world markets. It would be expected that this series of studies will lead to concrete negotiating proposals to the Congress and ultimately to new agreements and machinery for coping with all trade and investment problems.

Foreign Trade Statistics

The committee trade amendment also provides for the collection and publication of U.S. import statistics which will show c.i.f. value and thus include the cost of insurance, freight and other charges associated with c.i.f. value. This is the practice recommended to all countries by the United Nations and the International Monetary Fund for computing balance of trade statistics. Over 100 countries have adopted the so-called c.i.f. basis of measuring imports; only the United States and a few other countries use the free on board (f.o.b.) system, under which imports are tabulated on the basis of their value at the foreign port. The committee felt that the c.i.f. system will be more comparable to the method of publishing import statistics used by most other countries. Moreover, the committee's bill provides that U.S. exports, which are financed directly by Government grants and credits, should be shown separately from other exports on all monthly statistics which are published by the Department of Commerce.

Miscellaneous Trade Provisions

The committee trade amendment also would provide certain tariff-rate quota controls on imports of glycine and related products and on mink furskins.

The committee also provided a quarterly allocation of meat import quotas and closes a loophole concerning "prepared" fresh, chilled, and frozen beef and veal. The committee amendment does not extend the meat quota provisions to any other products not currently under quota.

The committee amendment also provides that additional invoice information will be required from foreign shippers for the purpose of statistical classification of imports.

The committee amendment also would reduce the rate of duty on parts of ski bindings.

A new provision of law would authorize the President to impose a suspension of trade with a nation which permits the uncontrolled or unregulated production of or trafficking in certain drugs in a manner to permit these drugs to fall into illicit commerce for ultimate disposition and use in this country.

F. AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC PROGRAMS AND WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAM

1. Aid to the aged, blind, and disabled

National Minimum Income Standards for the Needy Aged, Blind, and Disabled

The committee bill would establish a national minimum income level for persons who receive cash assistance under federally matched State welfare programs for the needy aged, blind, and disabled. States would be required to provide a level of assistance sufficient to assure persons in these categories a total monthly income from all sources of at least $130 for a single individual or $200 for a couple. In the aged category this provision would result in increased assistance for eligible single aged individuals in about 31 States and for eligible aged couples in about 36 States. Concurrently with establishing these national minimum standards for assistance to the aged, blind, and disabled, the committee bill would make persons receiving such assistance ineligible to participate in the food stamp program. In effect, the bill would give needy persons more cash in lieu of food stamps.

Pass-Along of Social Security Increases to Welfare Recipients

Under other provisions of the bill, social security benefits would be increased by 10 percent, with the minimum basic social security benefit increased to $100 from its present $64 level. If no modification were made in present welfare law, however, many needy aged, blind, and disabled persons would get no benefit from these substantial increases in social security since offsetting reductions would be made in their welfare grants. To assure that such individuals would enjoy at least some benefit from the social security increases, the committee bill requires States to raise their standards of need for those in the aged, blind, and disabled categories by $10 per month for a single individual and $15 per month for a couple. As a result of this provision, recipients of aid to the aged, blind, or disabled, who are also social security beneficiaries, would enjoy an increase in total monthly income of at least $10 ($15 in the case of a couple).

DEFINITIONS OF BLINDNESS AND DISABILITY

The committee bill provides for the establishment of nationally uniform definitions of blindness and disability for purposes of the federally matched programs of assistance to the blind and disabled. The definitions adopted are those already applied in the disability insurance program established under title II of the Social Security Act.

The term "disability" would be defined by the committee bill as "inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity by reason of any medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or has lasted or can be expected to last for a continuous period of not less than 12 months," with further clarification of the meaning of "substantial gainful activity."

The term "blindness" would be defined as "central visual acuity of 20/200 or less in the better eye with the use of correcting lens." Also included in this definition would be the particular sight limitation which is referred to as "tunnel vision."

Under present law each State is free to prescribe its own definition of blindness and disability, and the committee bill would permit States to continue assistance to individuals who are now on the rolls under the existing State definition, but who would not be considered blind or disabled under the new Federal definitions.

Prohibition of Liens in the Program of Aid to the Blind

The committee bill would prohibit any State from imposing a lien on a blind individual's property as a condition of his receiving Federally-matched Aid to the Blind welfare payments. Present law leaves the matter of liens up to the discretion of the States.

Fiscal Relief for the States

The committee bill includes a provision which generally would not require States in future years to spend more for assistance to the aged, blind, and disabled than 90 percent of their expenditures for this purpose in calendar year 1970. The 10 percent savings would be paid from Federal funds as would the full amount of any increased expenditures resulting from mandatory provisions of the bill (such as the $10 pass-along of social security increases and the $130 national minimum standard for assistance to the aged, blind, and disabled). Increases in caseloads resulting from normal program growth would also be fully paid for with Federal funds, but increased expenditures resulting from liberalizations in State welfare programs not required by Federal law would not be covered by the 90 percent limitation. Such optional State liberalizations would be financed in accord with the regular Federal-State matching provisions.

2. Child Care

Although present law includes provisions designed to make child care services available to needy families with children, these services are still unavailable to many who need them. The lack of child care is particularly serious for those who wish to participate in work or training programs, or who undertake employment in an effort to become economically independent. The committee bill would promote the development of additional services both by providing for more favorable matching to the States for child care services and by establishing a new mechanism for the delivery of these services, the Federal Child Care Corporation.

Federal Matching Share

The bill provides for an increase from 75 percent to 90 percent in the Federal matching share for child care services provided by the States under title IV part A of the Social Security Act. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be authorized to pay 100 percent of the cost of child care for a limited period of time in cases where he determined that necessary care would otherwise be unavailable. The 90 percent matching rate would be available to the States for child care for families receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children and also for past and potential recipients, if the State has adopted the optional program for these groups. States would be required to maintain their present efforts so that additional Federal funds would result in expanded child care services.

Federal Child Care Corporation

As a mechanism to expand the availability of child care services, the bill would establish a Federal Child Care Corporation. The Corporation would have as its first priority making available child care services to children of parents eligible for such services under the AFDC program and who need them in order to participate in employment or training. However, it would also have the broader function of making child care available for any family which may need it, regardless of welfare status.

The bill provides for $50 million as initial working capital for the Corporation. This amount would be in the form of a loan by the Secretary of the Treasury and would be placed in a revolving fund. The money would be used by the Corporation to begin arranging for child care services. Intially, the Corporation would contract with existing public, private nonprofit, and proprietary facilities to serve as child care providers. To expand services, the Corporation would also give technical assistance and advice to organizations interested in establishing facilities under contract with the Corporation. In addition, the Corporation could provide child care services in its own facilities.

Fees would be charged for all services provided or arranged for by the Corporation. The fees would go into the revolving fund to provide capital for further development of services and to repay the initial loan. They would be set at a level which would cover the costs to the Corporation of arranging child care.

The bill also includes a provision which authorizes the Corporation to issue bonds for construction if, after the first two years of operation, the Corporation feels that additional funds for capital construction of child care facilities are needed. Up to $50 million in bonds could be issued each year, with an overall limit of $250 million on bonds outstanding. Construction is to be undertaken only if child care services cannot be provided in existing facilities.

Federal child care standards are specified in the amendment to assure that adequate space, staff and health requirements are met. In addition, facilities used by the Corporation would have to meet the Life Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association. Any facility in which child care is provided by the Corporation, either directly or by contract, would have to meet the Federal standards, but would not be subject to any licensing or other requirements imposed by States or localities.

The Corporation, while providing a mechanism for expanding the availability of child care services, would not provide funds to subsidize child care. Those who are able to pay would be charged the full cost of services. The cost of child care needed by families on welfare would be paid by State welfare agencies.

State welfare agencies would be free to use the services of the Corporation in providing child care to welfare recipients, but would not be required to do so.

The Corporation would also have the authority to conduct programs of in-service training, either directly or by contract.

The bill requires the Corporation to submit a report to each Congress on the activities of the Corporation, including the data and information necessary to apprise the Congress of the actions taken to improve the quality of child care services and plans for future improvement.

The Corporation would be headed by a Board of Directors consisting of three members, to be appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate. The members of the Board would hold office for a term of three years.

A National Advisory Council on Child Care would be established to provide advice and recommendations to the Board on matters of general policy and with respect to improvements in the administration of the Corporation. The Council would be composed of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and 12 individuals, appointed by the Board.

3. Improvements in the work incentive program

The Work Incentive Program was created by the Congress as a part of the Social Security Amendments of 1967. It represents an attempt to cope with the problem of rapidly growing dependency on welfare by providing welfare recipients with the training and job opportunities needed to help them become financially independent.

Experience under the program has shown that a number of modifications are desirable. The committee's bill is designed to strengthen and improve the program.

On-the-job training and public service employment

A major criticism of the present Work Incentive Program has been the lack of development of on-the-job training and public service employment. On-the-job training and public service employment offer the best opportunity for employment of welfare recipients because they provide training in actual job situations. Unfortunately, less than two percent of the welfare recipients enrolled in the Work Incentive Program today are participating in on-the-job training and public service employment. The committee amendment would require that at least 40 percent of the funds spent for the Work Incentive Program be used for on-the-job training and public service employment.

The committee bill would also simplify the financing and increase the Federal share of the cost of public service employment (formerly called special work projects) by providing 100 percent Federal funding for the first year and 90 percent Federal sharing of the costs in subsequent years (if the project was in effect less than three years, Federal sharing for the first year would be cut back to 90 percent).

Tax Incentive for Hiring WIN Participants

As an incentive for employers in the private sector to hire individuals placed in employment through the Work Incentive Program, another feature of the amendment would provide a tax credit equal to 20 percent of the wages and salaries of these individuals. The credit would only apply to wages paid to these employees during their first 12 months of employment, and it would be recaptured if the employer terminated employment of an individual during the first 12 months of his employment or before the end of the following 12 months. This recapture provision would not apply if the employee became disabled or left work voluntarily. (The tax credit is described more fully in Part H of this summary.)

Registration of Welfare Recipients and Referral for Work and Training

Under present law, all "appropriate" welfare recipients must be referred by the welfare agency to the Labor Department for participation in the Work Incentive Program. Certain categories of persons are statutorily considered inappropriate. Persons may volunteer to participate in the Work Incentive Program even if the State welfare agency finds them inappropriate for mandatory referral.

Another criticism of the program has been that the State application of those standards of "appropriateness" for the program have resulted in widely differing rates of referrals and program participation. The committee's bill would eliminate this situation with a series of amendments. First, it would require welfare recipients to register with the Labor Department as a condition of welfare eligibility unless they fit within one of the following categories:

1. Children who are under age 16 or attending school;

2. Persons who are ill, incapacitated or of advanced age;

3. Persons so remote from a WIN project that their effective participation is precluded;

4. Persons whose presence in the home is required because of illness or incapacity of another member of the household; and

5. Mothers with children of preschool age.

At least 15 percent of the registrants in each State would be required to be prepared by the welfare agency for training and referred to the Work Incentive Program each year; States failing to meet this percentage would be subject to a decrease in Federal matching funds for aid to families with dependent children. The committee bill would also establish clear statutory direction in determining which individuals would receive employment or training by generally requiring the Department of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare to accord priority in the following order, taking into account employability potential:

1. Unemployed fathers;

2. Dependent children and relatives age 16 and over who are not in school, working or in training;

3. Mothers who volunteer for participation; and

4. All other persons.

Thus, under the amendment, mothers would not be required to participate until every person who volunteered was first placed.

Liberalized Federal Matching for Training

The committee bill increases from 80 percent to 90 percent the rate of Federal matching for WIN training expenditures. Welfare agency expenditures for social, vocational rehabilitation, and medical services which are provided to directly support an individual's participation in WIN would also be matched at the 90 percent rate. Under existing law, these services are now generally matched by the Federal Government at the 75 percent rate.

Labor Market Planning and Program Coordination

The committee bill would require the Secretary of Labor to establish local labor market advisory councils whose function would be to identify present and future local labor market needs. The findings of these councils would have to serve as the basis for local training plans under the Work Incentive Program to assure that training was related to actual labor market demands.

The committee also mandates coordination between the Departments of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare and their counterparts at the local level. The committee bill would require a separate WIN unit in local welfare agencies and joint participation by welfare and manpower agencies in preparing employability plans for WIN participants and in program planning generally.

Earned Income Disregard

Under present law States are required, in determining need for Aid to Families with Dependent Children, to disregard the first $30 monthly earned by an adult plus one-third of additional earnings. Costs related to work (such as transportation costs) are also deducted from earnings in calculating the amount of the welfare benefit.

Two problems have been raised concerning the earned income disregard under present law. First, Federal law neither defines nor limits what may be considered a work-related expense, and this has led to great variation among States and to some cases of abuse. Second, some States have complained that the lack of an upper limit on the earned income disregard has the effect of keeping people on welfare even after they are working full-time at wages well above the poverty line.

The committee bill would deal with both of these problems by modifying the earnings disregard formula and by allowing only day care as a separate deductible work expense (with reasonable limitations on the amount allowable for day care expenses). Under the committee bill, States would be required to disregard the first $60 earned monthly by an individual working full-time ($30 in the case of an individual working part time) plus one-third of the next $300 earned plus one-fifth of amounts earned above this.

4. Family planning services

Under present law, family planning services must be offered all appropriate welfare recipients; 75 percent Federal matching is available in meeting the cost of family planning services. The committee bill would provide 100 percent Federal funding for family planning services offered recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children. In addition, there would be 100 percent Federal funding, at the State's option, for those who were once welfare recipients or who are likely to become welfare recipients.

5. Emergency assistance for migrant families

The bill would require the States to establish State-wide programs to provide emergency assistance to needy migrant families with children. The Federal matching rate would be 75 percent. Under present law the establishment of programs for migrant families is optional with the States, and the Federal share is 50 percent. As under the existing program, assistance could be in the form of money payments or payments in kind. Assistance would be limited to a period not to exceed 30 days in any 12-month period.

6. Obligation of a deserting father

Present law requires that the State welfare agency undertake to establish the paternity of each child receiving welfare who was born out of wedlock and to secure support for him; if the child has been deserted or abandoned by his parent, the welfare agency is required to secure support for the child from the deserting parent, utilizing any reciprocal arrangements adopted with other States to obtain or enforce court orders for support. The State welfare agency is further required to enter into cooperative arrangements with the courts and with law enforcement officials to carry out this program. Access is authorized to both Social Security and Internal Revenue Service records in locating deserting parents.

The committee added to these provisions an amendment which would make it a Federal misdemeanor for a father to cross State lines in order to avoid his family responsibilities.

In addition, the committee bill also provides that an individual who has deserted or abandoned his spouse, child, or children shall owe a monetary obligation to the United States equal to the Federal share of any welfare payments made to the spouse or child during the period of desertion or abandonment. In those cases where a court has issued an order for the support and maintenance of the deserted spouse or children, the obligations of the deserting parent would be limited to the amount specified by the court order. If the State has obtained a court order, the Federal Government would attempt to recover both the Federal and non-Federal share of welfare payments to the deserting father's family. If the State has not obtained a court order, the Federal Government would only attempt to recover the Federal share of the welfare payments. The deserting parent's obligation could be collected in the same manner as any other obligation against the United States.

The bill also would authorize Federal officials knowing the whereabouts of a deserting parent to furnish this information to such parent's spouse (or to the guardian of his child) in cases in which a court order for child support has been issued against him.

7. Clarification of congressional intent regarding welfare statutes

Denial of eligibility for aid to families with dependent children where there is a continuing parent-child relationship

Under present law, aid to families with dependent children is available to children who have been deprived of parental support by reason of the "continued absence from the home" of a parent. In a recently decided opinion, the Supreme Court ruled that a State could not consider a child ineligible for welfare when there was a substitute parent with no legal obligation to support the child. The Court stated: "We believe Congress intended the term 'parent' in section 406(a) of the act * * * to include only those persons with a legal duty of support."

The committee bill would clarify Congressional intent by permitting States to take into account the presence of a man in the house if there exists between the man and the dependent child a continuing parent-child relationship. For purposes of determining whether such relationship exists between a child and an adult individual, only the following factors could be taken into account:

(1) They are frequently seen together in public;

(2) The individual is the parent of a half-brother or half-sister of the child;

(3) The individual exercises parental control over the child;

(4) The individual makes substantial gifts to the child or to members of his family;

(5) The individual claims the child as a dependent for income tax purposes;

(6) The individual arranges for the care of the child when his mother is ill or absent from the home;

(7) The individual assumes responsibility for the child when there occurs in the child's life a crisis such as illness or detention by public authorities;

(8) The individual is listed as the parent or guardian of the child in school records which are designed to indicate the identity of the parents or guardians of children;

(9) The individual makes frequent visits to the place of residence of the child; and

(10) The individual gives or uses as his address the address of such place of residence in dealing with his employer, his creditors, postal authorities, other public authorities, or others with whom he may have dealings, relationships, or obligations.

A child-parent relationship could be determinated to exist only on the basis of an evaluation of these factors taken together with any evidence which may refute any inference related to these factors.

Duration of Residence Requirement

The committee bill requires States to impose a one-year duration of residence requirement in determining eligibility for welfare. However, Federal matching would not be denied solely because a State failed to meet this requirement. If a welfare recipient moved to a State with a one-year duration of residence requirement, his State of origin would be required to continue his welfare payments (as long as he remained eligible) for up to 12 months, by which time the individual could establish eligibility for welfare in his new State of residence.

Limitation on Duration of Welfare Appeals Process

Recently the Supreme Court ruled that assistance payments could not be determined before a recipient is afforded an evidentiary hearing. The committee bill would require that States reach decisions on an individual appeal within 30 days. The committee bill also requires the repayment of amounts which it is determined a recipient was not entitled to receive. Any amounts not repaid could be considered an obligation of the recipient to be withheld from any future assistance payments to which the individual may be entitled.

States Permitted to Seek to Establish Name of Putative Father

A recent court decision held that a mother's refusal to name the father of her illegitimate child could not result in denial of aid to families with dependent children (AFDC). The applicable State regulation was held to be inconsistent with the provision in Federal law that AFDC be "promptly furnished to all eligible individuals" on the grounds that the State regulation imposed an additional condition of eligibility not requred by Federal law. The Court reached this conclusion despite the explicit requirement in Federal law that States attempt to establish paternity when a child is born out of wedlock.

The committee's bill would clarify congressional intent by specifying that the requirement that welfare be furnished "promptly" may not preclude a State from seeking the aid of a mother in identifying the father of a child born out of wedlock.

Requiring Welfare Recipient to Permit Caseworker in the Home

The committee amendment permits States, if they wish, to require as a condition of welfare eligibility that recipients allow a caseworker to visit the home. Home visits would have to be made at a reasonable time and with reasonable advance notice.

8. Regulations of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare

The committee bill would curb the regulatory authority of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in several particulars.

"Declaration Method" of Determining Eligibility Permitted But Not Required

The Committee bill would preclude the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare from requiring by regulation that States use a simplified declaration method in determining eligibility for welfare. As under present law, States would be free to use this method if they so wished, but they could not be required to do so by regulation.

Definition of Unemployment

Under present law, Aid to Families with Dependent Children may be paid to a family headed by an unemployed father, at the option of the State (23 States now offer such assistance). However, there is no Federal definition of "unemployment" in the statute. The committee approved an amendment defining a father as unemployed for welfare purposes if he has worked less than 10 hours in the last week or less than 80 hours in the last 30 days.

9. Use of Federal funds to undermine Federal programs

The committee added a section to the general provisions of the Soical Security Act specifying that no Federal funds may be used to pay, directly or indirectly, the compensation of any individual who in any way participates in Federally supported legal action designed to nullify congressional statutes or policy under the Social Security Act.

10. Use of Social Security numbers

The Committee bill requires that on and after January 1, 1972, State welfare agencies use the social security numbers of each welfare recipient as an identification number in the administration of public assistance programs.

11. Testing of welfare reform alternatives

The committee bill provides for a broad program of testing of various approaches to reform of the welfare system. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be authorized to conduct up to four tests of possible alternatives to the AFDC program. One or two of these tests would involve "family assistance" type programs, and one or two of the tests would involve "workfare" programs. In addition, the bill provides for a pilot project of a program of rehabilitation of welfare recipients to be administered by vocational rehabilitation personnel.

The "family assistance" tests would follow the traditional welfare approach of providing money payments to families with incomes below certain levels, but would extend this assistance to all families with fathers including so-called "working poor"—low-income families headed by a fully employed male—who are not eligible for AFDC. As under AFDC, a portion of earnings would be disregarded to provide work incentives, and nondisabled adults (with certain exemptions) would be required to accept employment or training.

The "workfare" tests would make a sharp distinction between welfare and 'workfare." Families with preschool age children where the father is dead, absent, or disabled would be presumed unemployable and would be eligible for cash welfare payments. Other low income families would not be eligible for such payments but would be guaranteed work opportunity, with training and other preparation for employment where necessary. Participants in these "workfare" programs would have their wages supplemented if they are below the minimum wage. Allowances would also be paid to those in training. Child care and other services would be provided as necessary.

The pilot project to test the administration of welfare programs by vocational rehabilitation personnel would involve assistance payments according to regular AFDC standards. These payments would, however, be administered through the facilities and personnel of the Rehabilitation Services Administration wihch would also apply its rehabilitation techniques to welfare recipients in an attempt to encourage and assist adult individuals with a potential for work to prepare for and obtain employment.

The various tests would run for a minimum of two years, involve State sharing in costs at a level not in excess of State sharing in the costs of AFDC, and involve continuing consultation among the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare which would conduct the tests, the General Accounting Office, and the Congress. Each test would have to cover all eligible families within a State or a part of a State, and for the duration of the test no AFDC payments could be made to families residing in the test area. Each "family assistance" test would have to run concurrently with a "workfare" test and the two test areas would have to be comparable with respect to various relevant factors including population, per capita income, and unemployment rate.

G. VETERANS' PENSION INCREASE

The committee bill incorporates the text of S. 3385, a bill to increase pension benefits to veterans and widows by up to 9 percent. The committee bill would also increase the income limitations, from $2,000 to $2,300 in the case of a veteran or widow alone, and from $3,200 to $3,600 in the case of a married veteran or widow with a child.

H. MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS

1. Tax amendments

Denial of Tax Deduction With Respect to Certain Medical Referral Payments

Present law provides that no tax deduction is to be allowed for illegal bribes or kickbacks where, as a result of the payment, there is successful criminal prosecution. If the bribe or kickback does not constitute a criminal act (presumably even if there is a loss of license), or if the taxpayer is not successfully prosecuted, the deduction is allowable.

This provision deletes the requirement in present law of a criminal conviction in the case of bribes and kickbacks before a deduction for such a payment is denied. In lieu thereof, the provision provides that no deduction is to be allowed for a bribe or kickback which is illegal under either Federal or State law, if these laws subject the party involved to liability for criminal or civil penalties (including the loss of license). In the case of a payment which is illegal under State law, the deduction will be denied on the basis of such illegality only if the law is generally enforced. Other sections of this bill provide that medical referral fees under the medicare or medicaid programs are illegal. It is made clear that referral fees are to be treated as bribes or kickbacks for purposes of this provision.

Required Information Relating to Excess Medicare Tax Payments by Railroad Employees

Present law provides that a railroad employee whose work is covered by railroad retirement and who is also employed in other work covered by social security is entitled to receive a credit or refund of the excess medicare tax he may have paid because of this dual employment status. To enable a railroad employee to claim his excess medicare tax is a credit on his income tax return, all railroad employees are required to include on the W-2 forms given to their employees the amount of compensation covered by railroad retirement and the hospital tax deducted.

Because of the inability of most railroads to furnish the required information by January 31 (primarily because of a broader wage concept under railroad retirement) and the fact that only a relatively few employees are eligible for this refund, this provision changes the requirement that railroad employers supply separate hospital tax information on the W-2 forms for all of their employees. In lieu thereof, the provision requires that railroad employers include on, or with, the W-2 form furnished to its employees, a notice with respect to the allowance of the credit or refund of the tax on railroad-covered wages in those cases where the employee has also received other wages covered under the social security program. Upon the request of an employee, railroad employers are required to furnish to the employee a written statement showing the amount of the railroad tax coverage, the total amount deducted as tax, and the portion of the total amount which is for the financing of the cost of hospitalization insurance under the medicare program.

Reporting of Medical Payments

Present law provides that a person who makes specified kinds of payments in the course of a trade or business to another person, amounting to $600 or more in a calendar year, must file an information return showing the amount paid and the name, address, and identifying number of the recipient. Although, under this general requirement, persons engaged in a trade or business are required to report direct payments to providers of health care services (often described as "assigned" payments), there is no authority under present law to require the reporting of payments made to patients themselves ("unassigned" payments), even though in the normal circumstances, they are paid over to providers of health care services, or represent reimbursement of earlier payments.

The bill provides specifically, in addition to the general requirement of present law, that all payments in the course of a trade or business made to providers of health care services in the case of direct or "assigned" payments must be reported. Further, in the case of "unassigned" or indirect payments, reporting will be required in those cases where the Federal Government administers the health program or funds the program to a substantial extent. The reporting requirement specifically includes professional service corporations, proprietary hospitals, and other payees who may act as conduits for providers of health care services.

The provision also requires the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to study the extent to which "unassigned" and "assigned" claims are used to obtain payments from insurance organizations and to report each year to the Senate Committee on Finance and the House Committee on Ways and Means any significant shift from the use of "assigned" claims to "unassigned" claims. In addition, the provision requires that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare keep records showing the identity of each provider of medical or health care items or services under the medicare or medicaid programs, the types of items or services provided and the aggregate amounts paid to the providers under each program. Health care providers are required to be identified by their taxpayer identifying numbers. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare must submit to the Senate Committee on Finance and the House Committee on Ways and Means annually a report identifying each person who is paid a total of $25,000 or more during the preceding year under the medicare and medicaid programs.

These reports are due to be submitted for the calendar year, beginning with 1970, not later than June 30 of the following calendar year.

Tax Credit for Portion of Salary Paid Participants in Work Incentive Programs

Under present law there are no special tax provisions relating to the costs of employee training programs. These costs are treated as any other business expense and may be deducted if they are ordinary and necessary in carrying on the taxpayer's trade or business.

This provision provides a special tax incentive for employers who hire individuals under a work incentive program (WIN) established under section 432(b)(1) of the Social Security Act. The taxpayer would be allowed, as a credit against his income tax liability, and in addition to his regular business deduction, an amount equal to 20% of the wages and salaries paid to the employee during the first 12 months of his employment. Any unused tax credits could be carried back to the three preceding taxable years (but only to a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1968) and then could be carried forward to the next seven succeeding taxable years.

However, if the taxpayer terminated the employment of the individual at any time during the first 12 months of employment, or at any time during the next 12 months, any tax credit allowed under this provision would be recaptured. The credit would be recaptured by increasing the taxpayer's tax liability, in the year of termination, by an amount equal to previous tax credits allowed with respect to the employee. The recapture provision would not apply if the employee voluntarily left the employment of the taxpayer, or if the employee became disabled. Further, a credit would not be allowed for any expenses of training outside the United States or if the employee is closely related to the taxpayer.

Retirement Income Credit

Present law provides a retirement income credit of 15 percent of eligible retirement income up to a maximum of $1,524 for a single person and $2,286 for married couples where each is fully eligible in his or her own right. The credit is designed to provide comparable tax treatment to those who receive tax-exempt social security benefits and those who receive taxable pensions. Consequently, the maximum base for the credit is reduced by social security benefits received and by earnings in excess of $1,200—a reduction of 50 cents for each dollar of earnings between $1,200 and $1,700 and dollar for dollar for earnings in excess of $1,700.

Because of increases in social security benefits since the present maximum base for the credit was established, this provision increases the base for the credit to more closely approximate the current levels of social security benefits. It increases the $1,524 to $1,872 and the $2,286 to $2,808. In addition, the amount that can be earned without reducing the base for the credit is raised from $1,200 to $1,680 and the range within which the base is reduced 50 cents for each dollar of earnings is raised to $1,680 to $2,880.

2. Other Amendments

The commitee also added provisions relating to the authorization of the managing trustee of the social security trust funds to accept gifts made unconditionally to the Social Security Administration, authorizing loans for the installation of sprinkler systems necessary for facilities to meet medicare standards, increasing the grade level of the Commissioner of Social Security, requiring the consent of the Senate to future appointments to the position of Administrator of Social and Rehabilitation Services, and extension of the provision for disregarding certain social security benefit increases under welfare programs.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I will yield for a question.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana state what he understands the procedure to be on the consideration of the bill? Will it come up in the period from 9 to 3 or in the period from 3 to 9, or does the Senator know? Perhaps we could ask for the attention of the majority leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. I have asked the manager of the bill whether the consideration of this bill would come from 9 to 3 each day or from 3 to 9, or do we know?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It will be in the second shift each day. The pending business from 9 to approximately 3 will be the conference report on the Department of Transportation appropriations bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator intend to ask unanimous consent that the committee bill as reported be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment to the second degree thereafter?

Mr. LONG. I would like to do so, because I know that it would expedite the consideration of the bill. I am led to believe, however, that such a request will be objected to. However, I intend to do it, and just for the purpose of discussion, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be regarded as original text for the purpose of considering further amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have told the Senator from Louisiana that I thought we could get such a request with the exception of three or four major items of the bill which I think deserve a rollcall vote or special attention. As soon as we can get those marked in the bill, we will be able to reach them.

For example, there is a committee amendment that deals with changing the social security benefits from the 5 percent provided in the House bill to the 10 percent which was approved by the Senate Committee.

Another committee amendment changes the minimum of $100 a month limitation.

Then there is the question of whether we do or do not approve an escalating cost-of-living provisions.

Then there is the question of catastrophic health insurance amendment.

I cite those four examples. I am sure that some Senator will want to vote on the Trade Act as well.

I am saying there are four or five of those items, and with the exception of those items which will require rollcall votes we will be able to reach a unanimous-consent agreement.

I have asked the staff to mark up a bill for me with respect to those particular amendments and how much would be included in them so that at the appropriate time we can agree to the consideration of all committee amendments except those. If the Senator wishes to make that request I think I could have that information tomorrow so we could agree. I believe there are about 100 items, and many of them do not amount to much; they are technical amendments. I would say that except for the four or five votes we could get down to business.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has raised the question. I would be inclined to agree to that type procedure if it could be agreed upon. I am sure everyone realizes if we can agree to accept the commitee amendments en block, reserving the right of any Senator to amend in both the first degree and second degree, which is the same as agreeing that the bill simply be regarded—all of it—as being original text, it really preserves to every Senator the right to offer as many amendments as he wants to offer and that is the procedure that is usually adopted. It will help to expedite consideration of the bill.

No one forfeits any right under that arrangement and when that agreement is made it offers to the sponsors of the bill the availability of a motion to table in order to get on with the business, so it confers an advantage on Senators, which everyone should recognize, when that arrangement is agreed to, because if someone is against the bill or if someone is adamantly opposed to its passage, if a particular part of the bill is agreed to then, of course, he would have the right to insist that every amendment be the subject of debate, explanation, and a roll-call vote and insist on the presence of a quorum during all the consideration. While it is not unusual, I believe it would very much expedite procedure on the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, before the Senator yields, will he yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I agree fully with the chairman. I have discussed the matter with him earlier and said I thought we could get this consent agreement. For example, the first committee amendment merely changes the title and renumbers. That amendment is just a routine amendment. The next amendment is a question of whether we raise social security benefits by 5 percent, or to $100. I would suggest we could agree on the first committee amendment, and the next committee amendment could go over until tomorrow. We would know what the next amendment would be and we could have a vote tomorrow.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the first committee amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a unanimous-consent request pending.

Mr. HARRIS. That was withdrawn.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That has been withdrawn.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the first committee amendment be agreed to. It amends the titles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection and the first committee amendment is agreed to.

The first committee amendment was agreed to, as follows:

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, the next committee amendment deals with social security increases. There will be no vote on that tonight. Tomorrow there will be a vote on social security.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Delaware, as well. I understand the position of the Senator from Delaware. I commend him for his willingness to agree later on to portions of the committee bill being amendable in the second degree. There will be objection to title III, the trade portion of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct.

Mr. HARRIS. My intention is that we should try to get a vote this week on the welfare reform bill, the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) and the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), in amendable form, so that I can before its final consideration offer amendments to it, and that we also get down to the social security bill this week.

Would the Senator have any objection at the appropriate time to the welfare section of the committee bill being considered as original text? I understand he would not object to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. When we get to the welfare section?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. As far as I am concerned I do not think there would be objection. I know what the Senator from Oklahoma has in mind, so when it is offered it would be subject to an amendment, and I think it should be.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator is correct, that is, so that the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment will be subject to amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am in agreement with what the Senator seeks to achieve. I do not think there would be objection. I think that is the appropriate way to proceed.

The only exception I was making is that, for example, the trade section would have to be voted on, catastrophic insurance is a section unto itself, and social security insurance would have a vote. I would say there would be a half dozen votes and we would be pretty much down to the serious arguments.

Mr. LONG. If there is no objection to that part of it, I believe in moving ahead any way we can, provided it does not prejudice the rights of anyone. I would not want to prejudice anyone's rights. I do not see how it would prejudice anyone's right if we agreed now on the welfare portion being original text.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. If the Senator will withhold that until tomorrow I think we could work out something that is agreeable, something that would be acceptable. As the Senator knows, they want a vote on the trade section. I can understand their position on that. I have mentioned catastrophic insurance. In a couple of hours we could call the roll on that and perhaps vote tomorrow on that particular point.

I would like to see us proceed and get this out in a proper manner. I would like to complete this matter up or down, one way or another, between now and the end of the year.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may place a statement in the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for the purpose of placing a statement in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I appreciate the answers of the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Delaware. I hope that we will be able to act on this bill, with the exception of title III, dealing with trade, so that we can get a vote on social security and welfare reform, this week.

I am very hopeful the Senate will act promptly to enact much needed increases and improvements in the social security, medicare, and medicaid programs, and real welfare reform. I have worked toward that end in the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, I have set forth my position concerning H.R. 17550 in separate views printed in the committee report, and I ask unanimous consent to have my views printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the separate views of Mr. HARRIS were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPARATE VIEWS OF MR. HARRIS

INTRODUCTION

The initial objectives of H.R. 17550 were to provide more adequate social security benefits and to make needed improvements in medicare, medicaid and maternal and child health programs.

The objective of H.R. 16311 was to effect urgently needed reform of a failing welfare system.

These objectives are highly laudable. However, by the addition of unrelated matters, unwise amendments and weak substitutions for some provisions, these original objectives have been made hostage to other, less noble, aims.

The Trade Act of 1970 was added as an amendment to H.R. 17550.

Various amendments to the present welfare laws were agreed to which can only be characterized as regressive and punitive.

An amendment to establish a Federal Child Care Corporation, which would represent a substantial and objectionable change in child care programs, was adopted.

I, therefore, voted against reporting the bill. My reasons for doing so are here set forth in detail.

SOCIAL SECURITY

A. Increase in benefits and minimums

The committee made several greatly needed improvements in the social security provisions of H.R. 17550.

The 5 percent increase in benefits, adopted by the House, was stepped up to a 10 percent increase. The committee also rightly voted to provide a $100 minimum social security benefit level.

With these increases, H.R. 17550 became an acceptable advance this year toward fairness in our social security program.

B. Workmen's compensation offset

The committee made certain other changes in the House bill provisions regarding social security which were undesirable.

The provision in the House bill, amending present law which requires social security disability benefits to be reduced when workmen's compensation is also payable and when the combined payments exceed 80 percent of average current earnings before disablement, was stricken.

The House bill called for a reduction in benefits by the amount by which the combined payments under both programs exceed 100 percent of average current earnings before disability. This provision should be restored.

C. Financing

When the committee finished its work, it had voted approximately $10 billion in additional benefits. It then turned to financing.

I believe the committee was mistaken in not properly taking into account the presently regressive nature of the social security tax system and in not fully considering the economic impact of the financing arrangements which it approved.

The social security tax system is not as nearly based upon ability to pay as is the Federal income tax. There is an upward limit—presently $7,800, and $9,000 under the committee bill—on the amount of salary which is taxed. The tax is in a flat rate basis; it is not graduated.

I believe that the payroll tax under social security has reached the saturation point. I, therefore, supported an effort to finance a portion of benefits from general revenue. This effort failed.

Alternatively, I offered a financing plan which would make the social security tax system more progressive by raising the wage base to $12,000 in 1971. This allows actuarial soundness with less of an increase in the tax rate over a period of years. The following table shows the financing plan which I offered and which was rejected by the committee. As indicated, in addition to providing actuarial soundness over the long term in each of the funds involved—OASDI, health insurance and the new catastrophic health insurance—the plan which I offered would avoid a cash deficit in any year in any of the funds.

[In percent]

	OASDI	HI	CI	Total
1971	4.1	0.7		4.8
1972-74	4.1	.8	0.3	5.2
1975-79	5.0	.9	.35	6.25
1980-84	5.5	1.0	.35	6.85
1985 plus	5.85	1.0	.4	7.25
	−.15	−.06	+.02

Note: The excesses of income over outgo resulting from this schedule follow:

[In millions of dollars]

	OASDI	HI	CI
Fiscal year 1972	1,079	1,044	589
Calendar year 1971	97	560
Calendar year 1972	1,519	1,303	565
Calendar year 1973	2,843	851	403

The financing plan which I offered would also provide an additional and very important economic impact. It would postpone an increase in the tax rate from 4.8 to 5.2, which is otherwise scheduled to go into effect in January 1971 under present law. Unless this rate increase is postponed, it will have a seriously dampening effect on consumer demand at a time when the economy is much too sluggish and unemployment intolerably high. Stimulation of consumer demand through postponement of the presently scheduled tax rate increase and through increased benefits would not be inflationary by serving to cause expanded production volume, allowing some reduction in unit costs.

The revised manner in which Federal budgets are now made up and presented, taking into account income and expenditures from social security and other trust funds, more clearly points up the fiscal impact of decisions concerning social security benefits and rates.

In addition to the right of social security beneficiaries to more adequate benefits, the payment of increased benefits will provide a much-needed increase in consumer demand, aiding economic recovery. This fiscal impact should not be offset by immediate rate increases, primarily the way in which the automatic adjustment of the benefits vent an annual deficit in the various funds or to provide general actuarial soundness.

D. Cost-of-living increase

The committee worked long and hard on the problem of how to insure that the purchasing power of social security benefits is maintained. On the whole the committee acted wisely in this regard; however, I disagree with some aspects of the automatic adjustment provisions—primarily the way in which the automatic adjustments of the benefits is financed.

The committee made some major changes in the automatic adjustment provisions that were proposed by the administration and passed by the House of Representatives. Many of the changes are reasonable, but some aspects of the provisions agreed to by the committee should be changed if they are to be fully acceptable and are to operate smoothly.

There are two major difficulties with the committee provisions concerning automatic adjustment of social security benefits and automatic financing.

First, the committee bill would require the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to promulgate increases in both social security tax rates and the earnings base in order to finance the automatic increases in benefits, even though such increases in social security taxes would be unnecessary and would greatly over-finance the program. Under the committee bill, whenever an automatic cost-of-living increase in benefit occurs, the Secretary would be required to increase social security taxes. Such increases in taxes would not be necessary because a large part of the cost of the automatic benefit increase would be met from rising earnings levels without increasing either the tax rate or the earnings base.

Second, the provision for automatic increases in the earnings base as wages rise, proposed by the administration and passed by the House, does not constitute a discretionary delegation to the executive branch. The increases would be automatic and the determination of the amount would be routine on the basis of social security wage record statistics.

Under the committee revision, on the other hand, it would be necessary for the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as a part of the automatic provisions, to determine both the short-range and long-range "cost" of each automatic benefit increase, and we would in effect be turning over to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare the tax-setting function of the Congress.

The provision approved by the House would merely carry out automatically the policy which the Congress has been following on an ad hoc basis since 1950—that is, periodically increasing the social security earnings base so as to cover the same proportion of payroll as had been covered earlier, when wage levels were lower. As wages have risen, the $3,600 base that became effective in 1951 has been changed by the Congress, in steps, to $7,800—as it would have been under the automatic provisions. It is important to increase the base to keep up to date with rising wages, not only from the standpoint of the income of the program but to prevent a deterioration in the coverage of the program. For example, a job which paid $3,600 in 1950 pays around $9,000 today. If the base had not been increased over the years the benefits payable to a man in such a job would provide a much smaller proportion of wage replacement than they were originally intended to, and there would have been a major deterioration in the protection afforded by the program. If the base is kept up to date with rising wage levels, there will be little if any need for an increase in the tax rate to cover the cost of the automatic cost-of-living increase.

The House provisions in this regard are, therefore, preferable to the provisions adopted by the Senate, and they should be restored.

The House bill requires the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to increase social security benefits any January, commencing January 1973, if he finds that the cost of living has increased by 3 percent or more between the last July-to-September calendar quarter preceding a secretarially determined benefit increase and the most recent July-to-September quarter. The automatic increases would be in addition to any increases which might be passed by Congress. The taxable wage base would increase automatically every 2 years based on increases in the average taxable wages after 1971.

MEDICARE AND MEDICAID

A. Health maintenance organizations

Medical costs have risen enormously. There are many causes for this. One cause is the greatly increased demand for medical services without a concurrently increased supply in personnel and facilities.

It is imperative that there be a massive increase in medical and paramedical personnel and in medical facilities. The shortages are already acute, and they are growing alarmingly.

It is also vital that there be much better use of existing personnel and facilities. Toward that end, the committee approved the health maintenance organization concept contained in H.R. 17550. Under this provision, medical payments can be made to physicians on a per capita basis, rather than on a fee-for-service basis only.

This provision is an important step forward toward encouraging prepayment for group medical practice and toward greater emphasis on preventative medicine.

B. Professional standards review organization

The committee adopted a proposal to establish professional standards review organizations at local and State levels throughout the country to review such functions as examination of patient and practitioner profiles; independent medical audits; on-site audits; and the development and application of norms of care and treatment.

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be required to enter into agreements with qualified professional standards review organizations, principally local medical societies, to review the totality of care rendered or ordered by physicians for medicare and medicaid patients. Where medical societies are unable or unwilling to undertake the responsibility, the Secretary could contract with States or local health departments or other suitable organizations.

This provision has a laudable purpose: to insure quality care and to hold down unnecessary costs.

However, the proposal contains many unknown and unpredictable factors. Further, there are serious objections that it grants organized medicine too much control over utilization of facilities.

The proposal should be tested before Congress puts it into effect on a total basis as the committee bill would do. I am not satisfied that this proposal will result in the savings which have been claimed by its proponents, nor am I satisfied that the review procedure is the best and most workable which can be devised.

The House provisions on peer review should be strengthened, and the Senate committee provisions should be stricken.

C. State maintenance of effort

Under present law States are required to maintain their present financial efforts in support of medicaid and are required to build toward comprehensive medicaid programs by 1977.

The State of Missouri asked the committee to pass legislation giving it a special one-time exemption from the maintenance of effort requirement. The committee could have granted this special request, based upon unique circumstances, without upsetting the present law.

But the committee went far beyond the Missouri request and repealed the entire section 1902(d) of the present law, under which States are required to maintain their financial efforts under medicaid. The House of Representatives had previously stricken section 1903(e) which requires States to enact comprehensive medicaid programs by 1977.

The repeal of both these sections is most unfortunate. The poor people covered by medicaid are entitled to better medical attention and care—not less. Their needs should not be ignored in order to slow the rising costs of this program and medical care generally. Section 1902(d) and section 1903 (e) should be restored in the bill.

D. Physical therapy

The House bill provides for reimbursement of up to $100 of the cost of physical therapy on an outpatient basis in the office of an independent practitioner under part B of medicare. This provision was rejected by the Senate committee.

A great many beneficiaries need the services of a physical therapist, and these services can often best be performed in the office of the therapist. The limited reimbursement that the House approved, which in effect puts it on a trial basis, should be reinstated in the bill.

E. Blood replacement

The committee rejected a proposal to eliminate the requirement in the present law for a medicare patient to pay for or replace the first three pints of blood used by such patient. This requirement seems unreasonable. It places an undue burden on medicare patients, and it should be eliminated.

F. Medicare premium increases

The premium for part B, supplementary medical insurance, under medicare has increased by more than 80 percent in the last 4 years. Originally the premium was $3 a month per person. It was increased from $4 to $5.30 on July 1, 1970. For those living on social security, this increase is almost prohibitive and it should be eliminated if the aim of the medicare is to be realized.

WELFARE REFORM

A. Need for reform

During the past few years, the need for reform of our welfare system has assumed crisis proportions. Three parallel developments ave dramatized the urgency; sharply increasing welfare rolls, growing recognition of the inefficiency and failures of the system itself, and ever more crippling fiscal burdens on States and localities.

Neither the poor—a group that is widening every day in the current economic climate—the Nation's stability, nor any pretense to sound social policy can wait longer for a rational income maintenance system.

This case has been made so often and so convincingly by mayors, Governors, welfare administrators, recipients, social scientists, and political figures of every persuasion that there is no need for it being made again.

Toward this end, I introduced with seven other Senators the National Basic Income and Incentive Act, S. 3433. This bill calls for the federalization of the presently outdated, unworking, and inhumane welfare system, replacing it with a Federal income maintenance system. It represents a significant departure from our present thinking about welfare and represents true reform.

I had hoped that improvements in H.R. 16311 could be made that would move the family assistance plan closer to the concepts of the National Basic Income and Incentive Act and real reform. Unfortunately, the committee moved in the opposite direction and was willing to approve only a test of various pilot reform programs.

Passage of a test proposal alone will surely delay congressional consideration of real reform for at least 3 years. I do not believe that the Nation can wait.

There is good reason to predict that the number of families and individuals requiring financial aid will continue to increase, that State and local funds crucially needed for programs to reduce dependency will be drained by the demands of public assistance, that the inequities of the present system will continue to demean recipients so as to destroy their incenive, and that the entire Nation will suffer from a welfare system that must be revised.

B. Requirements for real reform

Perhaps if the administration had been willing to make progressive changes in the House-passed version of the family assistance plan, rather than regressive changes during the consideration of the bill by the committee, something more substantial than a test would have been reported by the committee. Elimination of mandatory coverage of families headed by an unemployed father (AFDC–UP) and elimination of the requirement that States maintain current benefit levels for families with income, provisions that were in the President's original welfare reform proposal, weakened support for the bill in the committee by those of us who were advocating more meaningful reform of our welfare system.

A failure to recognize the importance of requiring the minimum or prevailing wage, whichever is higher, also weakened support for the bill.

While I do not believe that the administration has gone as far as it should, I am pleased that it has now agreed to some of the changes in the family assistance plan which Senator McCarthy, Senator Ribicoff and I and others advocated. The changes the administration has now approved are embodied in the amendments offered by Senator Ribicoff and Senator Bennett.

I believe that additional improvements can and should be made.

Recognizing that Congress is not willing to completely federalize the welfare system at this time, a goal should nevertheless be established for moving within a time certain toward a welfare system that is federally financed and administered. Included within the goal should be a commitment to move the level of payment to an adequate income. Our goal is to assist people in getting out of poverty, but a floor at a low level, instead of raising families out of poverty, means only continued poverty with little prospects for breaking out.

Any system of reform should also require that the prevailing or minimum wage, whichever is higher, should be paid for those who are forced to take a job. Otherwise, a captive work force with insufficient standard of wage to be paid will be available to employers, and the effect will be to keep wages so low that millions will remain in poverty though working full time.

Any version of the family assistance plan that is adopted by the Senate should not require mothers with school-age children to work. Mothers should have some control over whether day care centers are good enough for their children.

Furthermore, a provision to provide for cost-of-living increases in payments to recipients should be adopted. We have recognized this principle with regard to those who are receiving social security payments, and the same arguments can be made in support of providing cost-of-living increases for those on public assistance.

Any system of welfare reform should also fully protect the rights of present recipients and of applicants to insure that the new law does not create different classes of citizens.

A national system of income maintenance, recognizing the needs of the working poor, setting uniform national minimums of assistance and removing present barriers to incentive and initiative is desperately needed.

These principles can and must be embodied in real welfare reform, together with programs which assure that, through expanded public service jobs and otherwise, people have a real chance to get a job.

C. Regressive amendments

Unfortunately, the committee adopted a number of amendments to our present system that are regressive.

The most disappointing action of the committee was the barring of legal service lawyers from representing welfare recipients. Much of the work of these lawyers in the past few years has been to secure benefits guaranteed by law, but not received by poor people due to illegal regulations and administrative practice.

During the past 3 years welfare recipients and lawyers associated with federally funded legal service programs have compiled a remarkable record of service to poor people. Significant court decisions have begun to nudge the welfare system toward a more equitable and enlightened program. Cruel and demeaning regulations, irrelevant to the purposes of the Social Security Act, have been overturned in the courts.

The Finance Committee has proposed that this record of progress be nullified. This restrictive amendment, adopted by the committee, should be defeated.

Other undesirable amendments were adopted by the committee.

The committee would make the leaving of a family and moving across State lines a Federal misdemeanor. This is an unwarranted extension of Federal police power into intimate aspects of family life and, in view of the State laws now regulating this subject, would prove to be unworkable.

The action taken by the committee in instituting a 1-year residency requirement for people in need of assistance was likewise regrettable. The committee provision is in conflict with the Supreme Court's opinion in Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, in which it was held that citizens have a constitutional right to travel throughout the States and that welfare eligibility regulations should not impede that right. The committee position would restrict the right to travel precisely in the manner prohibited by the Court.

The committee was also mistaken, in my opinion, in resurrecting the onerous man-in-the-house rule. This rule, knocked down by court decision, would base eligibility not on actual resources but on imagined income from people not legally obligated to support the children involved.

Provisions were also adopted that require the return of amounts paid to welfare recipients who do not prevail at hearings; that eliminate progress made in the declaration system; that cut back on the Federal assistance now available to families with a father in the home; and that provide eligibility requirements wholly unrelated to the need of poor children.

Adoption of these provisions represents a step backward in our efforts to devise a more workable and humane system of welfare—an entrenchment of old myths about welfare and welfare recipients that should have been cast aside years ago.

D. Aid to aged, blind, and disabled

The committee made substantial changes in the House bill with regard to benefits for the aged, blind and disabled. The House bill provided for a minimum of $110 a month for single individuals and $220 for couples. The committee approved $130 for single individuals and $200 for couples, cashing out food stamps.

Taking into consideration the fact that an increase in social security benefits reduces Federal, and State expenditures for the aged, blind and disabled—and considering their great and growing needs—the Senate should provide for a minimum of at least $130 for single individuals and $230 for couples, not cashing out food stamps for these individuals.

E. Catastrophic health insurance plan

A critical problem has arisen because of the rapidly increasing costs of medical care that have left 90 percent of all Americans medically indigent. No one questions the need to provide a better means for the average American citizen to finance his health care.

While I agree with the objective of the catastrophic health insurance plan, I voted against attaching the plan to H.R. 17550. When the plan was presented to the committee for consideration, H.R. 17550 was already heavily loaded with extra, and in some instances nongermane amendments, and it did not seem appropriate to add to the bill such a massive new health program.

The problem which the catastrophic health insurance plan seeks to meet is pressing and must be solved. But it does seem that the problem could be more appropriately solved in a broader context of national health insurance and by considering the whole matter in a more deliberate and careful fashion.

There is little chance that any such new program as this can be adopted this late in the postelection session in any event, and the attachment of the measure to the already overburdened social security bill may tend to defeat the bill to which it is attached.

The chairman is to be congratulated for offering a solution to the crisis and for urging prompt action. With his interest and his strong desire to see legislation enacted, the committee should give this matter prompt attention at the beginning of the next session. At that time there will be full opportunity to give attention to the financing of catastrophic illness costs and to the financing of all health care, including the need for an urgent and massive increase in medical and paramedical personnel and facilities.

F. Federal child care corporation

There is a great shortage of quality child care facilities and services. We need to do more to promote the development of increased facilities and services. But the establishment of a Federal Corporation is not the way to achieve the needed results.

The Corporation under the committee bill would have the responsibility for arranging for child care services in the various communities of each State. Existing public, private nonprofit, and proprietary facilities would be contracted with by the Corporation to serve as child care providers. Pursuant to the terms of the provision adopted by the committee, the Corporation could provide child care services in its own facilities.

A fee would be charged by the Corporation for its services, to be paid either by the consumer of services or by a public agency.

I have grave concern about this approach to quality child care. Child care is a proper subject for local community concern and planning. The Federal Child Care Corporation approaches child care needs from the top.

Parental involvement is crucial in early childhood programs. If the parent is actively involved, there will be a positive overlap in the home and the community. I feel that this would be unlikely under the operation of the Federal Child Care Corporation.

I question whether the standards set out in the bill are high enough. These standards, coupled with the striking down of local and State regulations, could lead to purely custodial child care.

I am also concerned that with a growing number of commercial franchisers entering the day care field, a great tendency would exist for the Federal Child Care Corporation to contract with these franchise operations. If so, this could lead to a depersonalization of child care services and eliminate or reduce community control and parental involvement—the hallmarks of good child care.

Child care has not received proper attention from the Congress. It should be a matter of top priority for the next session of the Congress. We must soon enact major legislation which will provide quality child care on a universal basis, not stigmatized by welfare alone, not controlled by private business, but controlled by the local community and with full involvement of the parents.

The provision in the present bill does not meet these crucial tests.

TRADE ACT OF 1970

I strongly opposed the attachment of the Trade Act of 1970, H.R. 18970, to the social security amendments. Not only did I object to the Trade Act on its merits, but I also thought it unfortunate to reduce the chances of passing much-needed welfare reform and increases in social security by attaching nongermane legislation.

I have general objections to the overall thrust of the Trade Act, as well as specific objections to its provisions. First, I will set forth my general reservations about the act.

A. Balance of trade

It is presently estimated that in 1970 we will have a healthy surplus of over $3 billion in our trade balance. Last year, the surplus was under $1 billion. In other words, this year our exports have been growing considerably more rapidly than imports.

The argument that U.S. industry is becoming increasingly noncompetitive, which is often made in support of the Trade Act of 1970, is invalidated by these figures. This would therefore seem to be an especially poor time to risk loss of export markets by curtailing imports.

Another effect of quotas which would be imposed under this bill would be the retardation of economic growth in developing nations. This is at odds with our larger foreign policy to encourage the strength and growth of these less developed countries.

B. Cost to consumers

Recently, Federal Reserve Board Governor, Andrew Brimmer, said that the textile and shoe quotas in this bill would cost the consumer an extra $3.7 billion, and that these costs would be borne disproportionately by the poor beacuse they must spend a larger share of their income on shoes and clothing than do more affluent citizens. Whatever the merits of the industries' case—and I want to return to this—it would seem that the consumer would have to pay a very heavy price indeed for these quotas.

These costs could multiply if other consumer items were subjected to quotas under the liberalized escape clause.

C. Impact of inflation

Much attention has rightly been focused on the economy in recent weeks. The inflation alert, the President's speech to the NAM—all focus on the real danger of inflation. Mr. Arthur Burns, in speaking on measures to combat inflation last week, suggested the relaxation of existing quotas on imports. This comes at a time when new inflationary quotas would be imposed by the trade bill. We obviously cannot have it both ways. We must draw the line and choose between control of inflation and protectionism.

Another voice raised in opposition to the import restrictions of the bill is that of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. The Chamber has urged that a more constructive course on trade legislation be charted in the next session of Congress.

D. Danger of retaliation

I have also noted in the press an increasing number of statements made by officials of foreign governments, including some of our best customers—Canada, Germany, Latin America, Britain, and Mexico, to name a few—concerning the possible adverse consequences of the enactment of the trade bill. One can, of course, dismiss these statements as bluffing, on the assumption that other countries either could not or would not dare to curtail our exports. But is this assumption necessarily correct? In many instances, other countries would be able to obtain the same goods of comparable quality from alternative sources. Moreover, other countries watch their trade balance with the United States very carefully and would be very prone to reduce their purchases from us if we were to restrict their exports to this country. Finally, I think the element of national pride would be at work here. If they feel—as they seem to—that the textile and shoe quotas, for example, are unjustified, then they will naturally want to strike back. The risk of an old-fashioned trade war is, in my judgment, severe. If that happens, no State will be immune from its effects. In testimony before the Finance Committee, the National Chamber attributed 4 million American jobs to total United States exports. The wheat farmers of western Oklahoma have made Oklahoma the No. 3 wheat exporting State in the Nation. A generation of eastern Oklahomans have pinned high hopes on the Arkansas River Basin project which the late Senator Kerr spent so many years helping to develop into a navigable access to world commerce. All of these stand in real jeopardy in the face of restrictive trade policies.

E. Renewal of textile negotiations

The trade bill was approved by the House Ways and Means Committee after the Secretary of Commerce announced that the United States-Japanese textile negotiations had broken down and that the administration therefore reluctantly supported legislative quotas. In the past weeks, however, these negotiations have been resumed. There is admittedly no assurance that these negotiations will be successful either in the short or long run. But the fact of their resumption is surely significant and affords further reason for pause in considering the trade bill. The Japanese Government feels an early voluntary agreement is desirable because if there is no agreement and no legislation is passed this year, Congress may pass even more restrictive legislation next year.

F. Textile and shoe quota

To the best of my knowledge, there has been no objective determination that imports are causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic textile industry. Of course, the industry itself makes vehement allegations of jobs eliminated and production lost because of imports. But has any reasonable independent body like the United States Tariff Commission ever come to that conclusion? I would emphasize that I am not asserting that there are no parts of the textile industry that may be injured by imports. I am rather asking for evidence that there is a serious import-related problem affecting the entire industry.

In the face of such evidence, action is certainly required. Full use of present legal remedies should be made. Stronger and more agressive diplomatic initiatives by the administration could result in voluntary limitations on specified imports.

However, statistics from the American Textile Manufacturers Institute reflect that annual textile exports have expanded by $200 million over the past 12 years. More U.S. employees are engaged in making textile mill products now than in any year except 1968. The number of employees engaged in apparel manufacturing is at an all time high. Net sales, both in textiles and apparel, are the highest ever, nearly doubling 1960 figures. Taken as a whole, these facts do not support allegations of a severely depressed industry, requiring emergency legislation. In the absence of impartial evidence of harm from imports, I must question the need for, and the wisdom of, unilateral textile quotas, especially in view of their cost to the consumer and the possibility that the United States-Japanese negotiations may be successful.

As for shoes, a task force of the administration itself concluded just several months ago that there is no justification for quotas. Nevertheless, the President has asked the Tariff Commission to determine whether imports are causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic industry. This is the proper way in my judgment to develop a sound basis for informed and intelligent action concerning imports.

G. Escape clause provisions

Another provision of the trade bill that is very troublesome is the amended escape clause, which has traditionally authorized the President to impose higher tariffs or quotas on imports found to be injuring a domestic industry. The following aspects of the new escape clause are open to serious question.

First, under the trade bill the Tariff Commission would have to determine whether imports are a "substantial" cause of serious injury. Instead of "substantial," present law reads "major" and the administration's bill would have substituted "primary." These may sound like semantic quibbles, but the difference between "primary" and "substantial" could spell the difference between a reasonable and a promiscuous use of the escape clause.

Second, the bill resurrects the concept of geographic segmentation, which permits the Tariff Commission to carve up an industry and artificially select just that portion that will maximize the chance of an affirmative finding of injury. The Tariff Commission would be given the license to do so even though it made no economic sense and even though the companies and workers concerned were in fact able to make a successful adjustment to whatever import problem may have existed. One of the important features of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 was its repeal of the geographic segmentation provision. Its resurrection is a major threat to an enlightened foreign trade policy.

H. Foreign import restrictions

The committee has gone even further than the House bill in making section 252 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 a protectionist device. At the present time, section 252 authorizes—but does not require—the President to impose new restrictions on imports from countries that are illegally or unreasonably restricting our exports. The key issue, of course, is who determines whether a foreign import restriction is illegal or unreasonable. The right of any member of the GATT to impose new restrictions is severely restricted by that agreement—as it should be if any order in international trade is to be preserved.

Under the committee's bill, the Secretary of Commerce would determine if a foreign import restriction is illegal or unreasonable. If he made an affirmative finding, the President would be authorized to work out a solution with the foreign country concerned. If he could not in 3 months, then he would have to take retaliatory action. This is—pure and simple—another radical violation of the GATT and another example of a blind attitude that somehow the United States can flout the rules of the game and get away with it.

I. Status of GATT

The committee struck the new separate authorization for appropriations to finance our annual contribution to the GATT. This will probably not seriously jeopardize future appropriations, since there is a general authorization available in the organic legislation of the Department of State. But it is obviously a vote of no confidence in the only international organization that offers any hope of maintaining and strengthening a fair world trading system.

The committee struck the provision on the ground that it would give "statutory recognition of the GATT, which has never been submitted to the Congress for approval." The fact is that the GATT is a valid executive agreement, concluded pursuant to the authority of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930. As a statutory executive agreement, it need not, of course, be submitted to Congress for approval. This question dealt with extensively in a 1956 memorandum of the Legal Adviser of the State Department to the then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee (see H. Rept. 2007, 84th Cong., second sess., 113-131 (1956)).

J. American selling price

The committee struck the provision in the House version that would have provided for the elimination of the American selling price (ASP) system of customs valuation as it relates to benzenoid chemicals. This system has been found to be without justification by both the Johnson and Nixon administrations, and the United States is pledged to seeking its abolition in one of the agreements concluded in the Kennedy Round. If this system is not to be abolished, there is little, if any, hope of making further progress for some years to come in the field of nontariff barriers. Once again, the blind approach is at work: Let other countries remove their nontariff barriers, while we stand pat.

K. Failure to take positive action

Beyond the positive and enormous harm done by the bill, it also fails to seize critical opportunities to move ahead:

(1) Tariff-Reducing Authority.—The House bill by clear legislative history and the committee's bill by express statutory language would give the President new tariff reducing authority only for the purpose of granting compensatory tariff concessions when we increase import restrictions under the escape clause or by some other means. In other words, this is an authority that at best permits us to stand in the same place, but envisages no further net reduction in tariffs.

The Kennedy Round was concluded in 1967 and the last tariff reductions agreed to will take place on January 1, 1972. Isn't it time to give the President the authority to start moving again in lowering trade barriers? How can the momentum of trade liberalization be maintained if the past leader of that effort is powerless? And especially in the trade field, the absence of progress only invites retrogression.

(2) Non-Tariff Barriers.—Even with the provision authorizing the elimination of ASP, the House bill failed to provide for negotiations on nontariff barriers, though everyone agrees that this is the single most serious problem in the trade field. As it stands now, the President must act at his peril if he acts at all. On the one hand, he can negotiate on nontariff barriers without any prior congressional approval and simply hope that the Congress will provide the necessary implementing legislation after the fact. The handling of ASP, of course, affords little encouragement. On the other hand, the President can request specific authority before beginning any particular negotiations on non-tariff barriers. The Congress may then so circumscribe his authority as to render it valueless or give him none at all, since it has not yet seen what reciprocal advantages it might afford the United States.

The only way I can see out of this dilemma is to have the Congress give the President, perhaps in the form of a resolution, the "license" to negotiate, while reserving all of its authority to pass upon any necessary implementing legislation. This would at least give the President the encouragement he does not now have to tackle nontariff barriers and attempt to commence an international negotiation on the subject.

L. Conclusion

The total effect of the trade bill is, in my judgment, antagonistic to constructive ways of dealing with the current problems in international trade. It assumes that the United States can take unjustified and indeed illegal actions and somehow get away with them, without provoking retaliation or undermining the world trading system. This seems to me to be a hopelessly naive and false assumption. It is my opinion that if the Senate will seriously consider how harmful the present trade bill is and how great is the need for a constructive trade bill, then we may still have the time to avert the appalling consequences of a return to protectionism both in this country and throughout the world.

I re-emphasize that I am concerned about the allegations of serious injury resulting from imports being voiced by the textile and other industries. Present law provides for remedies in such cases. Full use of present provisions should be employed where need is indicated. Adjustment assistance should be used to ease the conversion of industries and jobs in cases requiring such relief. Diplomatic negotiotions should be pressed. Lastly, the Congress should carefully and deliberately consider additional thoughtful trade legislation, which is in keeping with our past policies of free trade and which does not violate international agreements which we have previously made.

I attempted twice in the committee to have the trade bill stricken from the social security bill. I will renew this effort on the floor of the Senate. Should this motion fail, I intend to offer a series of amendments to improve the Trade Act.

Final conclusion

All of the legislative proposals included in H.R. 17550 are in need of thoughtful legislative consideration. My opposition to specific proposals in the bill by no means indicated a lack of concern for responsible action on the problems raised thereby. But, it is too late in this post-election Congress to hope for any fruitful action on so many diverse issues placed under the same umbrella.

Therefore it is imperative, as I have set forth in these separate views, that the Senate in the remaining days devote its time to improving our social security and related programs and to meaningful reform of our failing welfare system. The other matters can and should be set aside for consideration by the next Congress.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that certain amendments I intend to propose to H.R. 17550 be printed and lie on the table, and that certain amendments I intend to propose to the welfare reform amendment to be offered by the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) and the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I merely want to state that I fully support the proposal of the Senator from Oklahoma that we try to make the portion of this bill relating to welfare reform original text so that any amendments offered to it will be subject to amendment in the second degree. I hope that procedure can be worked out. I think most of us would like that approach rather than an approach that has no possibility of it being amended. I hope this arrangement will be worked out.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, under the agreement of yesterday, Calendar No. 1443, H.R. 17550, be laid before the Senate and be made the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pursuant to the previous order, the Senator from Delaware is recognized.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, during the further consideration of H.R. 17550 I ask unanimous consent that two members of my staff, Miss Eleanor Lenhart and Mr. Robert Davenport be permitted on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection. it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, the pending amendment deals with the proposed changes in the increase for social security benefits. Under the bill as passed by the House these benefits were increased by 5 percent, which would have cost in 1971 $1.7 billion.

The Finance Committee by a majority vote increased these benefits. Instead of leaving the benefits at 5 percent, they increased them to 10 percent. They raised the minimum social security payment of $100.

The two amendments appear combined in this amendment, and when merged the result of the action of the Finance Committee is a cost of $5 billion over existing law, or $3.3 billion more than that which was provided in the House bill.

That will be the question before the Senate when this particular amendment is voted upon. As indicated yesterday, I tried to get a unanimous consent agreement in order to move along on a consideration of the various features of the bill, some of which I support and some of which I do not. However, I did feel that the Senate had a right to work its will and that after reasonable debate we should be able to proceed to a vote.

That effort is a matter of record and history now.

We were unable to get such a consent agreement. I do not criticize those who felt they could not consent. I am sure they had good and valid reasons.

I am going to make another effort here to get some semblance of reasonable order in consideration of this massive piece of legislation. The bill itself covers 546 pages.

The Finance Committee has worked on this bill for many months.

I have never seen that committee, in the period of my 20 years in which I have been a Member, devote more time to a study and analysis of a bill than it has to the various sections of this bill and all of its ramifications.

The bill is now before the Senate. It has been pointed out that we have a situation here dealing with some very highly controversial measures. We have the question in the bill involving the catastophic insurance. We have the question of the trade act, which is title 3 of the bill. This is something about which Members of the Senate on both sides of the question have very strong feelings. Others have very strong feelings about the family assistance plan.

We are in this situation parliamentary-wise. Any of the amendments—the trade amendment, the family assistance amendment, or any other amendment—could be offered to one of the committee amendments.

The problem is, however, that if they are offered to any committee amendment, that would be an amendment in the second degree. Therefore, it would not be subject to any modification or verification even though in the discussion it may be pointed out to the membership and even the sponsors of the amendment that there should be changes in the amendment.

In the discussion last night with both the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Oklahoma, who had some amendments that he wished to offer to the Bennett-Ribicoff amendment, it was pointed out that he would be precluded from offering them under such a parliamentary situation.

I, too, would have some amendments to offer. I would also be precluded. I think it would be most unfortunate for the Senate to get itself into such a parliamentary situation.

Mr. President, in order to show the Senate what kind of a parliamentary snarl we can get into, and almost got into at this time, I know of at least two proposals that Senators were considering offering as amendments to the first committee amendment on pages 1, 2, 3, and 4. The Committee amendments have no substance. They merely change the section number.

It has been suggested that at the end of that amendment the Trade Act could be offered and would be in order, or the family assistance plan could be offered and would be in order. Neither would be subject to an amendment. They would be voted on on the merits.

Some might say that is simple enough to get a vote. However, after the yeas and nays have been ordered on an amendment to an amendment all any one Senator would have to do would be to stand up and ask for a division. We would then have had exactly 68 votes before we could vote on the amendment. Those committee amendments after the division would require a vote on each line, because they are separable. Each one is to strike out a different line.

True, it does not mean anything, but it would have required a rollcall vote and would have put the Senate in a more silly posture than it is now, if that is possible.

For that reason, last night I made a unanimous-consent request that approved this amendment and prevented the Senate from getting into that ridiculous situation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if I correctly understand the situation, if a Senator wanted to amend the first committee amendment, which would simply strike the table of contents in the bill, he could have insisted on a motion to separate. That would have required the Senate to have a separate vote to strike on every single item in the table of contents. That alone would have required 68 rollcall votes, if it had been insisted on.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The Senator is correct. And after that they would be subject to a quorum call between each one and a motion to table on that. We would have two rollcall votes. So there would be 136 rollcall votes and 136 quorum calls.

I point that out to show how we could get into such a ridiculous picture.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if a Senator wanted to offer an amendment to the simple committee amendment to strike the table of contents, any Senator who did not want that amendment to come to a vote could insist on 136 rollcall votes and 136 quorum calls before we ever got to a vote on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. He could. But it is even simpler than that because whoever offered that amendment to the amendment, whether it be on the trade section or family assistance, would want a rollcall vote and that would be applicable to the entire package; and all they would have to do would be to request a division, and we would have 68 rollcall votes. I hope that will not happen and that we can proceed in an orderly manner. If such an amendment, whether it be for family assistance or an amendment dealing with any other subject, is offered to any committee amendment that is in the second degree it is not subject to any amendment or any variation. This is not good legislative practice.

Last night the chairman mentioned, and it had been mentioned in committee, the possibility of getting unanimous consent to have amendments considered en bloc. In that case any Senator who got recognition could offer his amendment and have it voted on up or down; his amendment then would be subject to amendment in the second degree—the family assistance plan or whatever it might be, would be, in effect, to the original text because that is the way we would be considering it. That would give an opportunity to the Senator from Oklahoma or anyone else who wanted to offer amendments to amendments; they could offer them to the committee bill as we have done many times before.

There are proposals in this measure that I do not like and that I hope will not be agreed to. I shall discuss those in due course. It is in recognition of this fact that I have worked over night and talked with several members, and I think we have somewhat of a concensus of opinion. I have not talked to everyone, but I believe we have somewhat of a concensus of opinion that it would be better for all concerned to have the unanimous consent granted that the committee amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc and as agreed to be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment.

I have asked the Parliamentarian to write out this request so it would be in the usual form. In that manner anyone who has the floor could have his amendment offered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) and I are very anxious to have a definitive vote on the family assistance plan. We recognize the parliamentary situation that if these amendments are not adopted en bloc and made original text that the amendment we would offer would not be subject to amendment. The family assistance plan is so complex and has so many facets that I do not have a feeling of self-righteousness that we should deprive other Senators from offering their own concepts and ideas. I know the Senator from Oklahoma has many thoughts of his own. The Senator from Idaho has many thoughts of his own, and other Senators have thoughts on how this amendment should be reported.

Consequently, in all fairness to the Senate and to this measure, we would hope that the proposal of the Senator from Delaware would be agreed to without objection. If this were the case, then the amendment I would offer—and I would hope to receive recognition from the Chair at the earliest possible moment—would be an amendment in the first degree, giving each Senator an opportunity to offer his amendment and in this way we could have a complete discussion of a most complex subject.

I believe this is the fairest way to handle the proposal and to that end we could go forward to a vote on the family assistance program before we adjourn sine die on January 3.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I will yield in a moment but I do want to point out that I am not doing this necessarily to expedite that particular proposal. As the Senator knows I would just as soon see that proposal defeated. However, I am perfectly willing to take my chances on why I think that proposal would not be good. I am perfectly willing to do that and let the Senate vote.

But in the meantime, if it is going to be adopted it would be better to have it improved if we find improvements can be made. It is better to be in a posture where we can make a change in it, and under the other situation we would be almost locked in.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I appreciate what the Senator has just said. As I said, every Member of the Senate would be on equal footing so he could get recognition and offer whatever amendment he wanted to offer.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, and I would like to ask to yield to anyone else who wants to comment on this without my losing my right to the floor.

I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRIS. I thank the distinguished Senator. The Senator, has, indeed, talked with a number of Senators, including me, and he has indicated his intention to make this request today to adopt the committee amendments en bloc and make them original text. I think that is the orderly way to proceed.

I hope we can pass the social security related matters in the bill and that we can pass welfare reform—real welfare reform—this year, and get the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Utah in amendable form. What the Senator is asking for is a way to do that in an orderly manner; and then, those of us who want to amend various sections of the bill, and strike the trade provision, as I do, would have that opportunity to do so.

I join in the request of the Senator from Delaware and I hope it can be agreed to as the orderly way to proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I thank the Senator. Some Senators, and to be frank, I, personally, was reluctant to enter into this, as the chairman knows during discussions in committee, because there are a few sections on which I wanted direct rollcall votes.

There is this difference which we all recognize. It takes one more vote to strike something from a bill than to put it in. Then, if it is going to rise or fall on one vote I do not know that it is important. The main thing is to get it to a vote.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York on the same conditions.

Mr. JAVITS. I would like to advise the Senator that I shall object to his request and if he will allow me, I would like to state the reasons. Will the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes, I yield without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. I understand.

In the first place, let me state that I was not informed of this unanimous-consent proposal, and that I heard of it because one hears about everything in this Chamber. I hope very much that in the course of the debate on this bill, when there will be lots of things asked for by me and other Senators, that we should really, in all fairness, start the practice of advising Members who other Members know are deeply interested in whatever is going to be proposed.

We were told yesterday by the majority leader there need to be no worry on that score. This is hardly an auspicious beginning.

Second, I did not concoct the plan to include social security, medicare, medicaid, a massive and historic trade bill, and family assistance all in one bill. Nor did I develop the idea of not filing a clean bill, which the committee could have done, but filing a bill which is full of amendments so that you block the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), me, and any other Member who may have an amendment because as the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) mentioned it is all done in the third degree.

So the doctrine of original sin does not make me feel guilty at all. This is the way the Senate Finance Committee wanted it. If the view of the Senate is going to be expressed in a fair way it is going to be fair to both sides. The Senate Finance Committee wanted it this way, this is the way the Committee on Finance reported the bill to the floor. The members of the committee must now be prepared to live with their decision. You asked for every one of these amendments to be voted on. You did; I did not. Therefore, if I require you to adhere to your original intention what is wrong with that? The Members of this Chamber know full well I want the family assistance plan considered as well as social security. But I will not be and I do not think anybody else should be "over weaned"—to use a kind word, because the trade bill is very bad legislation and we are being denied the opportunity to acquaint the country with this fact and being denied the opportunity to consider trade legislation in the way that it should be considered.

With all respect to the Senator, who is trying to make the best of a bad situation, I am compelled to object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. If I may reply, I reply to the Senator from New York, my colleague and friend, with mixed emotions. What he is saying he wants done is exactly what I would like to accomplish, but I do not want to take the responsibility for underwriting a filibuster to defeat the bill. When the trade bill was offered on this bill I voted against it. I thought it was wrong to take a bill which came from the House and add it to the social security bill. I voted that way and will be voting that way on the Senate floor. There is no question about that.

On the other hand, I also voted against attaching the family assistance plan, which was rejected by our committee on three occasions, one time being rejected by a vote of 14 to 1, another time by a vote of 10 to 6, and I forget the rollcall vote the third time, but the majority of the committee refused to approve that bill.

The Senator from New York, much as I respect him, is trying to add the family assistance plan to this bill, which plan was defeated by our committee, but he is not willing to abide by the majority will of the committee which put the other one in. I am willing to abide by the will of the majority of the committee and the Senate in both cases.

I personally know no easier way to defeat the bill—in fact, there is no easier way—than to have a vote on every separate amendment. There are 280-odd amendments in this measure. The Senator can sit down and count them himself.

If the Senator from New York insists I know it will be carried out, because I respect him highly. If that is his wish then I will carry out his instructions, and when we get through we will have had 280 rollcall votes which will be reconsidered, and the number of rollcall votes will double to 560. I hope, if the Senator from New York wants to filibuster the bill he will do it differently than by rollcall votes.

I am only pleading with him to go along. I will support a motion to strike this trade section, and I do not see why he would object. I have been here only 24 years, and I do not claim to know as much about the parliamentary situation as the Senator from New York, but I just might hazard a guess that he might defeat his purpose by insisting on objecting to this request.

I would hate to see us get into such a snarl, and I plead with him to reconsider his position.

Before I yield to the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) let me add that certainly the leadership of the Senate is not necessarily on my side in these matters. The Presiding Officer will be the one to recognize Senators. I shall not control that. I do not have as much control over who is recognized as he will have. I am going to make my brief remarks here today, and I am trying to restore some semblance of order.

I call attention to the fact that yesterday we almost got into the situation where we would have had to have 135 rollcall votes before we got to the measure, just because of what could have happened. I do not want to see the Senate get in a posture which, as I said earlier, would make us appear more silly than that posture in which we are now appearing with five filibusters running at the same time. I would say we are going to have to get hats for the filibusters. We are going to have to get five different hats with different colors, and we are going to have to number the filibusters because we are getting to a situation where we do not know which side we are on and whether we are for them or not. I have never seen such a state of confusion as exists in the Senate today. I know that if this procedure is insisted upon we will be in an even greater state of confusion.

I have said repeatedly I am not going to filibuster this bill. I think there is logic enough in the argument I can present that it will persuade the Senate to defeat the family assistance plan, or what is better referred to as the guaranteed annual income. I am an optimist. I think I can defeat it. I will take my chances, and if I do not I shall congratulate the Senator from Connecticut. But I am perfectly willing to abide by the decision of the Senate. I would consider it an indication of weakness on my part if I were afraid to face the Senate on a vote. I am not. I welcome the opportunity.

My position was sustained in the Finance Committee. The plan was defeated by a 14-to-1 ratio, and each time the Finance Committee overwhelmingly recognized the argument against starting on such an unsound plan as this. The committee sustained my position. I think the Senate will do likewise. If I am wrong I shall congratulate Senators and perhaps go home and, who knows, we may all live on welfare.

I say let us vote. If Senators are not afraid of their positions let us vote. I am not afraid to vote on it. I will vote against it, but I will be there. But I say let us vote, whatever the results.

I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, just to make clear that what the committee has done is the usual way of doing business, may I remind the Senator and the Senate that last year we had a revenue bill in which we had so many amendments that the Senator from Louisiana, the chairman of the committee, asked that the whole bill be drafted as a substitute package for the House-passed bill. We did it that way last year. Some did not agree with that procedure. That is not the usual way of doing business, I must admit.

In that case Senators then proceeded to offer amendments first to the House bill. We had two tiers of amendments, amendments in the first and second degree being offered to the House bill, and then amendments in the first and second degree being offered to the committee bill, with the result that we had two tiers of amendments, each with a second tier on top of them, all of them being subject to to be called up and debated. That proved to be a much more cumbersome way of proceeding than the way that is being proposed.

With regard to revenue bills, the Committee on Finance cannot report out a clean bill because the Constitution does not permit the Senate to originate revenue bills. They must originate in the House. The Senate is limited to the power to amend. What the Senate Finance Committee can do, within the power to which the Senate is limited, is to amend such bills, be it in the nature of a committee substitute or be it through amendments. The bill is subject to amendment, and the amendment is subject to amendment in both tiers, depending on the order in which Senators want to call their amendments up.

So the fact is that on a big revenue bill, one as controversial as this one is, with so many matters to be considered the possibilities of amendments are limitless, and even though we in the committee limit ourselves, we cannot limit Senators. They have a right to offer amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is right. I would like to point this out further, which is a parliamentary fact of life from which we cannot escape. We can proceed any way we wish—the family assistance plan can be offered at the end of some committee amendment at this time or whenever a Senator gets recognized, but there is no possible parliamentary situation that can be obtained in the Senate whereby this bill can pass without Senators standing up and voting on the trade section. There is no way it can be done except by unanimous consent to strike out that section; and we know that consent will not be obtained so there is no possible way to do it.

So if all certain Senators want is a vote on the family assistance plan with the clear understanding and knowledge that it is not going to become law, then they are doing so with tongue in cheek, voting for something they never intend to become law. I say let them stand up and acknowledge their hypocrisy publicly, because that would be the most hypocritical action that could be taken.

I repeat, there is no possible way—and I will yield to any Senator who can challenge that statement—even if the family assistance plan is added to the bill, to get a vote on final passage of the bill without first standing up and voting on the trade and other sections. It cannot be done.

There is no way it can be done. So Senators would not be yielding any rights that they have by this agreement. In my opinion, to proceed otherwise would be to acknowledge that all we want is a vote on the family assistance plan with the full knowledge and consent that it is going down the drain; and I will be a party to no such hypocrisy.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator recognizes, does he not, that simply to agree to the committee amendments en bloc does not mean that the Senate is for the committee amendments? It just means that we will regard them as original text so as to expedite the completion of action on this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Certainly not, because some of the amendments, as the Senator knows, I would be voting against; and I shall be offering amendments to strike out some of these sections, because, as the Senator knows, I do not support some of them, and I have not changed my opinion. When an amendment to strike out the trade section is in order I expect to support it.

But that is not the issue here. We have a right to vote, whether we expect to win or lose, and I can certainly see us getting into a parliamentary snarl here. That is the reason why, as I said before, I arranged to be recognized first here today because I hope I can persuade the Senate of the logic of what I shall suggest.

Whoever the Chair recognizes in the days ahead under this procedure can move to table any amendment that is offered. A Senator can make a motion to lay it on the table immediately after it is offered, and the Chair can recognize the next man.

I shall be frank with the Senator that I do not see where he is gaining much by objecting to this request. I should like to have votes on four or five of committee amendments; and in fact, as I have stated, I shall insist on it. I shall be happy to designate those amendments which I should like to vote on and have a time limitation on the particular amendments; but I can get recorded before this bill is passed by offering an amendment to strike. That is easy, and the only thing I have lost is one vote; and I am optimistic that we have enough votes anyway.

I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, it is ironical to have a supposed enemy of this program, who desires to defeat family assistance, trying to work out a program to give us an opportunity to vote, and the distinguished Senator from New York, who is an outstanding friend and supporter of the family assistance program, putting the Senate in the position where the family assistance program will be defeated.

The Senator from Delaware, from the start, has been consistently against the family assistance program. The Senator from New York has indicated that he desires to be a cosponsor of the family assistance program. The irony of the entire situation is that it is a Republican President who has sent this proposal to Congress, and it is a Democrat on this side who is doing everythinghe can to see that the family assistance program is passed. The Senator from Delaware had been adamant from the start about having a series of votes and using the parliamentary procedure to prevent a vote on the family assistance plan.

After conversation and discussion among many of us who were interested, we tried to work out a method of procedure to give every Member of this body an opportunity to try to perfect this proposal. I know that the Senator from New York would like to see adopted many of the proposals that the Senator from Oklahoma would like to submit. That is my understanding, and if I mistake the Senator from New York I would like to be corrected. I was aware at all times that the Senator from Oklahoma had a series of amendments on which the Senator from New York saw eye to eye with him. I thought, out of fairness to every Member of this body, we had to get ourselves into a parliamentary situation to give the Senator from Oklahoma and every Member of this body an opportunity to have a vote on this amendments, up or down.

Now we are in a situation, of course, where we have come back to where we started. I shall still try to get recognition, if unanimous consent is not agreed to, to offer the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal. If it is done that way, then we can only debate the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal; it is not subject to amendment by any other Member of this body.

I have a telegram that was sent to me, signed by six former Secretaries of Health, Education, and Welfare, Republican and Democratic: Oveta Culp Hobby, Marion B. Folsom, Arthur S. Flemming, John W. Gardner, Wilbur J. Cohen, and Robert H. Finch, telling me that they approve the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal, and they believe it to be a major step toward the urgently needed reform of the current welfare system.

I cannot agree with the Senator from Delaware when he says that this is all a charade. I recognize how slim the chance will be to finally adopt the family assistance program, or any other part of this bill. The clock is indeed running out on us. But here is a program that the President of the United States has had before Congress and the country for a year and a half. It has been a controversial program. Hearings have been held in the House of Representatives and in this body, and much time has been spent.

I believe it becomes very important for the country to find out how the Senate actually feels. I would hope that this bill could be passed in sufficient time for a conference, but if it cannot be passed sufficiently in advance to permit a conference and for final approval by January 3, at least we will have indicated sufficiently to the Nation that Congress with the President of the United States, makes a commitment toward eliminating poverty which would enable us, early in the next session, in January or February, without further hearings, to take up the Social Security and Family Assistance programs.

I would sincerely hope that the distinguished Senator from New York, who does not have to yield to any man in his concern for those in poverty, those people on welfare, and the most unfortunate part of our population, would consider what is happening as a result of his objection. I would hope the Senator would reconsider his objection to permitting these amendments to be adopted en bloc, and then letting the Senate proceed in an orderly way to discuss, to debate, and to amend the family assistance program, and proceed to a final vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I certainly hope the Senator and I can obtain that agreement. I do not see how it can possibly ever get to a vote unless there is some kind of agreement here in the Senate. As I pointed out before, surely we can get to a vote on the family assistance plan. Senators can offer amendments to anything which may come before the Senate. But we cannot get away from the fact that we cannot vote on title IV until after the vote on title III if we follow the regular procedure, or vote on title V until we have disposed of the other four.

I am just trying to get some order and get it where at least we may be able to achieve the results of a vote.

I would like not to be tied up here all of Christmas week, but I am afraid if we do not follow such a procedure that is what is going to happen. I shall yield in a moment to the Senator from Iowa. He is one Senator I have been talking with who has made the point that he did not want any agreement entered into that would preclude him from the right to offer amendments to the Bennett-Ribicoff amendment; and other Senators, if they have amendments to be offered, have a right to be heard and have them considered. I hope we can obtain this agreement.

But I yield now to the Senator from Iowa, without relinquishing my right to the floor.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Delaware. I commend the Senator from Delaware for what he is trying to do. However, in view of the comments from the Senator from New York, I would suggest—and I hope the Senator from New York will comment on it—that instead of going whole hog, so to speak, and asking the Senate to consider all of the committee amendments en bloc, we proceed by asking unanimous consent to consider the committee amendments en bloc by title, so that the concern of the Senator from New York about the trade title can be made manifest in due course.

In the meantime, we can make some progress by taking up the other preceding titles, giving us a chance to debate the family assistance plan and welfare reform, and if the Senator from New York will agree to that, then I think we can start moving.

Of course, if he will not agree to it, we are right back where we started from. I suggest that this may be a midground on which we could all agree.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The difficulty with that is we cannot ask unanimous consent to consider title 4 until we hit title 3, and the Trade Act is in the middle; that cannot be changed. It is there. I can see why the Senator from New York or those who oppose the Trade Act would not want to agree to titles 1 and 2 en bloc, because if we did the Trade Act would immediately be before the Senate. I am not trying to fool anyone on this.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield, without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I have heard with the greatest of interest the views of my colleagues, and I am not obdurate or difficult at all.

As to the gentle irony of the Senator from Connecticut, I respect and admire him greatly, and I yield to no one in my affection for him. But it is not unusual to put the screws on a Member who has the temerity to stand up against other Members who want to do something they want to do. The Senator from Connecticut may not have the same feeling I do about the trade title, which I think could be disastrous to our country. I believe that I cost the aged nothing—indeed, I get them something; because, instead of being tied up in a whole package which is bound to have a disastrous effect, they ultimately will be extracted from it and will have their social security; and I hope very much that we will have that and the family assistance plan for the poor of the country considered, as they should be, alone and on their merits, without being used as a Judas goat for the trade bill.

I understand the feeling of every Senator, and he has an absolute right to say what he does and to make it as tough for me as possible. But every Senator has to obey his conscience as to what he considers to be the highest interests of the people in his State and of the Nation, and I think I have done so in this.

As to the statement made by my friend, the Senator from Delaware, as to the state of confusion, this is war. War is always confused. Yet, somehow or other, great captains have emerged. Somehow or other, when the confusion is over, something decisive has happened. I have deep confidence that something decisive is going to happen here, but there will be a little confusion to start with.

So, with all respect, I am not at all dismayed by these pleas and entreaties. I know that the Senators know they do not have to make them to me. It does not make any difference, anyway But I should like to explain my own position, because I think that is owed to the Senate and is important.

In the first place, I do not stand alone, and I knew nothing about this until this minute, except by rumor. Therefore, the very least—and it is always the most profitable way one could do it—would be to tell a Member such as myself: "We are going to ask for this. We think it is good for you. Call a meeting of your supporters and find out whether or not they agree with you, and come to the floor with a position which is reflective of the view of your side."

This was not done. I am caught flat-footed, as it were. I have to object or not object, or the cow is out of the barn.

Second, this is a lameduck Congress. A new Congress has been elected, which will come into office on January 3. Yet, the attempt is being made to decide massive questions of national policy within a few days, and that is all we have in a lame duck Congress, the meeting of which itself is highly questionable—certainly on such profound issues as those we face now.

It is one thing to complete our business. We have appropriation bills or other bills on which we have been working a long time, which were voted by the House and the Senate and on which the judgment has been made, and we are trying to reconcile differences, and so forth. But these are brand new things, enormous things, of greatest consequence to the future history of our country and, in the case of the trade bill, perhaps the world. Yet, we are now under great pressure. Otherwise, we would be unkind to the poor, who have to live in this world, too, unless we go right along now and vote these things out under limitation of debate of hours or by arrangements such as the Senator suggests, without even an opportunity to consult one's colleagues who are similarly minded.

I would most respectfully suggest that, instead of putting Senators such as myself on the spot, which is not fair, but I will object—I am telling the Senate now that I will object.

I think it is very unwise and unfair, and I think that Senators such as myself should have an opportunity to get together with their fellows and come in tomorrow and say whether we agree or disagree and why, in some kind of coordinated way, instead of being faced with this on the floor; and then there are entreaties and the fact that I, too, am devoted to the FAP, and so forth, on the theory that one has to yield his judgment and his conscience and say, "Yes."

I am terrible sorry, but my people did not send me here to have that kind of brain or that kind of will.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I should like to reply to the Senator from New York.

I am going to make a copy of his speech and use it later when we get into debate on the family assistance plan because he has expressed my sentiments exactly about how unsound it is to bring up proposals which have been rejected by the committee and which are not germane to the bill before the Senate. I thank him, because it is a much better speech than I shall be able to prepare, and I am going to deliver it, with his consent of course, and I will credit him later.

He has made a strong argument against approving the family assistance plan.

As to the question that confusion will result and that the cow will be out of the barn, I will say that if this objection persists I am afraid it will not be a matter of the cow out of the barn but the bulls in the china shop before we get out of here today, because I can see a mess created.

I would repeat this point. We cannot get final passage on the family assistance plan, the social security increases, or any other proposal in this bill until the Senate first calls the roll on the Trade Act. It cannot be done. There is no possible way under Senate Rules unless there is unanimous consent to strike the Trade Act out and there is unanimous consent that no one will offer any amendments dealing with the Trade Act. We know that that is not possible.

If we are going to be on notice that this is going to be filibustered regardless of whatever we do this late in the session I would most respectfully suggest to the leadership to pull this bill down unless we can get an agreement that there is going to be some orderly process here. I would dislike sitting here for the next 12 or 14 days—I will not mind it so much because I have quite a little time ahead of me in which to rest and enjoy it while the rest of the Senators are back here working. I do not see the idea of sitting here the next 12 or 14 days, spinning our wheels at Christmastime, giving the impression to 13 or 14 million elderly people, "We're going to give you a 10-percent increase in your social security benefits; we're going to raise your minimum to a hundred dollars; we're going to give you a cost of living escalation; we're going to give you the family assistance plan," when 100 Senators know that is not going to develop. Let us not kid them. This is Christmas. It is cruel to these people who have no knowledge as to what we are doing; it is cruel to mislead them. I think it is a hoax.

I hope that the Senate in the closing days of this session will have more Christmas spirit in its bones than to promise this to a lot of people who need it and to whom Senators know they will not be able to deliver it.

I say let us lay it aside if we are not going to vote on it. I am willing to vote on it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think it is about time for the Senator to stop, because my heart is beginning to bleed.

All I want to say is that the leadership will not pull this bill down. We will stay with it until a decision, if possible, is reached one way or the other.

In the meantime, because of the time we are wasting and the filibustering going on, and the filibustering within the filibusters, the minutes fly by, the hours are passing, and the days are rapidly fading into the distance of the new year. We have approximately 10 days left in which to attend to this matter and other matters. We have at least six filibusters, perhaps seven now, of various sorts going on. We are looking foolish.

I find no fault in serving in a lameduck Congress, may I say, because every Member is elected to serve as a representative of the people until noon on the 3d of January next year. I do not denigrate any Member who is serving out his last months—in this instance, his last days—because he is carrying out his responsibilities; he is performing his duties as he is supposed to.

I am wholeheartedly in accord with the proposal made by the distinguished Senator from Delaware that the committee amendments be considered and approved en block. In that way, we can make some progress and stand a small chance of disposing of the proposed legislation. Without that, there is no chance.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I do not know that it would serve any purpose, but I should like to try. I am going to suggest the absence of a quorum, if I may, without losing my right to the floor, in order that we may discuss this subject a little further with some Senators, in the hope that we may reach an agreement. But if we cannot, I will call off the quorum and will resume my remarks.

I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to suggest the absence of a quorum without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, without too much hope of getting it agreed to, I send to the desk a unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed unanimous-consent request will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc, and as agreed to be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The unanimous-consent request is not agreed to.

The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I regret very much that we are placed in this position because I think it would have been the most orderly procedure to have offered the amendments as they came before the Senate. I was perfectly willing, as I said before, to debate the family assistance plan when it was before us. Other Senators could have gotten recognition as far as I am concerned immediately after I release the floor, which would have been in very short order, and whoever is recognized could have been recognized. I told the Presiding Officer that the Senator from Connecticut wanted to be recognized next, and he could have presented his family assistance plan and it would have been before the Senate in an orderly manner. In that way it could have been debated, amended, or whatever the Senate saw fit to do. I respect the right of Senators to proceed as they see fit. I would take the same position if I felt as they do. But we are confronted with this situation.

It is obvious we are not going to get this bill enacted until we face the question of what we do or do not do with the trade agreement section. There is no possible parliamentary situation that could develop in the Senate where the Senate could vote on final passage of the bill without first having accepted or stricken from the bill the trade agreement section, which is title III. There is no possible way that could be done so we will have to face this issue first.

The reason I would have liked to have this agreement is that I think it is most unfortunate if the roll were called on the question of raising social security benefits by 10 percent and raising the minimum to $100, together with all the other benefits, and have that news go over the country so that the people would believe they are going to get those increases just a few days before Christmas, when every single Member knows it will not become law under those circumstances unless we can settle the trade issue in the Senate.

Therefore, since this situation has developed, we should face the issue. As I said before, I voted against placing the trade section in this bill. I would hate to see the Senate take that step. I know a majority of the committee, and a substantial majority of the committee, voted to put this section in the bill as title 3. I respect the decision of the majority of the committee. The majority of the committee by a vote of 14 to 1 rejected the family assistance plan on one occasion, by a vote of 10 to 6 on another occasion, and I forgot the vote on a third occasion but it was by a substantial margin. So we have that situation.

I am willing to face all of this but I am a great believer that if we are going to have a lot of filibuster let us have it and get it over and either settle the issue or not.

Therefore, even though I am opposed to and object to the trade section, I am going to submit an amendment to the bill that provides that at the end of the committee amendment we insert an amendment which is the Trade Agreement Act. We will settle that issue right now and then proceed with the rest of the bill in an orderly fashion, I hope.

Therefore, Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to be inserted at the end of the pending committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with. It is just the title of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

* * * * *

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield, with the understanding that I do not lose my right to the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. Yes, with the understanding that the Senator does not lose his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as I heard the amendment read, it did not make any change in the original committee amendment—that the wording is the same as title III of the bill. Therefore, I ask the Chair whether such an amendment is in order. I realize something may be added to it. The Chair has it there for examination. I did not hear that it made any change in the original committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no rule that prevents its being offered. Later, if it appeared to be redundant, a motion could be offered to withdraw it or to strike. The committee amendments are not a part of the bill until they are agreed to on the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. My inquiry is directed to whether a point of order would lie against this amendment because it does not actually amend any part of the committee amendment. The Chair has the amendment before him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that a point of order would not lie at this time.

Mr. JAVITS. Could the Senator from New York have the Chair's reason, according to the Parliamentarian?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, may I comment? It would not lie for the same reason that a point of order would not lie against the family assistance plan. I checked into both of them. I think it would have been better if we had done otherwise, but the Parliamentarian very clearly stated that the amendments are in order. The family assistance plan would be in order as the Senator from Connecticut was going to offer it.

Mr. President, this amendment is being offered on behalf of the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN). I am in this position. I disagree, as I told the Senators, with the trade section in this bill, but I do think that if we are going to have to face it before anything is done, I want it faced head on and I do not want to disillusion a lot of these people. I am reserving the right to vote against this amendment.

I would be willing to withdraw this amendment—and the Senator knows I have bent over backward to get an agreement. This is not a threat; I am not offering it in that way—if we could have unanimous consent to let this go over until tomorrow, when Senators could have time to think this over, and maybe we could get together. I would withdraw this amendment and would be the first to renew my request if we could have that unanimous-consent agreement. I hope it can be done. I think this would be the better way to proceed.

I am caught in the situation. I have no choice, because the minute I release the floor I know the family assistance plan will be offered, which is another unrelated bill, not subject to a point of order again, as the Senator points out.

If we are going to face this decision later let us just face it now.

If we can get unanimous consent to lay this bill aside until tomorrow at the 3 o'clock session with the understanding that I resume my right to the floor so there will be the same parliamentary situation I shall withdraw that amendment and express the hope that with Senators who agree to this trade section we would reach an agreement on the amendments.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I did not ask my question with a view to challenging the Senator. I wanted to get the parliamentary situation for other amendments which I or other Senators may offer.

I might say, as I said earlier, Providence may be leading us by the hand. The trade amendment is the sticking point in the bill, and the Senator has properly tabbed it, and let us have it out. Let the administration face it and let us face it. Let us try to find our way out of this maze. It may be the best thing to do.

I ask nothing from the Senator at all. He has offered an amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield without losing the floor?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The Senator from Delaware has offered an amendment to the pending committee amendment. I ask this as a parliamentary inquiry. For the information of the Senate, is the Senator from Michigan correct that no further amendment may be offered to the trade amendment which the Senator now has before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that this is an amendment in the second degree and is therefore not open to further amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. So if we proceed to a vote on this amendment, we will have to vote it up or down?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I agree with that ruling. That is as I understand it. It is most unfortunate, but that is the situation.

I am only offering this trade amendment to point up the situation we would be in with the family assistance plan. The same thing would be true.

I hope the Senate will not get into this posture on either of these bills. I want them voted up or down.

If the Senator made a motion to strike out this trade section and it were in order I would expect to support it. Any Senator can offer such a motion. It may be amended in a form that both the Senator and I would be supporting. Perhaps we would not.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. I am aware of what the distinguished Senator has in mind, and I would be hopeful, under the complexities of the situation, that he would proceed as he is doing. I do not think the leadership on either side is making any suggestion that we go over until 3 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No. I think we ought to stay on the pending measure. I am sorry that in my absence—not because of my absence—but in my absence the request of the distinguished Senator from Delaware, which would have brought about the acceptance of all committee amendments and would have in effect presented us with a clean bill, was not agreed to. I think that what he suggested was proper and was the appropriate and efficient way to proceed. This way we are getting the cart before the horse.

Frankly, I do not know what position we are getting into, but we ought to get accustomed to being confused. I think we ought to take advantage of whatever hours are left and do what we can to act on the President's program.

Mr. SCOTT. My purpose is to get those measures in the President's program which can be enacted, if at all possible, written into law. I do not see anything to be gained by going over until 3 o'clock on this or any other amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield for an observation, with the understanding that he does not lose the floor and that his speech will not be counted as a second speech?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield with that understanding.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to point out that there are many things in this voluminous bill. There are many improvements in many of our social programs. There are improvements in the medicaid program. There are improvements in the medicare program.

If we labor for days and perfect this bill, and then in the end see it all come to naught because of extended debate on the trade portion of the bill, then the whole Senate has wasted its time. It has labored for nothing. It was held out to the country that certain acts would be taken and certain things would be corrected and certain problems would be solved, but then we would come to the end of the line and there would be no legislation because of the filibuster on the trade bill.

So since that is the only one feature where it appears there might be a filibuster, I think the thing to do is to face up to it now rather than labor here for days, improving or rejecting or approving family assistance and all the other provisions in the bill only to have the entire bill come to naught.

Suppose we got a social security, medicare, and welfare bill that met with the approval of the majority of the Senate, after long hours and days of work; then, face a filibuster over trade, it is better that we face that threat right now. I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding. I believe that it is the interests of the time of all the Senators that we face this issue of the trade portion of this bill. I did not support all of the trade portion. I am inclined to support that which is within or near the purview of that recommended by the administration.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields without losing his right to the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I should like to point out to those who have made comments that the President of the United States, in a letter to the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) dated December 10, 1970, stated that he says he is strongly against this measure.

The President wrote:

> The well-being of the United States requires this trade legislation. I must urge, therefore, that the Senate examine these matters with great care, in an endeavor to put this legislation into acceptable form. I would hope that such legislation could be passed at this session of Congress.

So the President himself, Mr. President, has invited very careful consideration of the matter. He has flagged its critical importance, and, as I said a minute ago, it may very well be that Providence is leading us by the hand in respect to what the exigencies have compelled the Senator from Delaware to do.

I should like to make, in conclusion, just one further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Presiding Officer and the Parliamentarian.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. If this amendment, Mr. President, is rejected either by tabling or by rejection on a vote, does that displace in any way title III of this bill, the so-called trade title?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not.

Mr. JAVITS. So title III would still remain to be voted up or down, no matter what we did about this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague. Now may I say to the Senator from Delaware that though I think, as I say, that Providence may have led us all by the hand in the right direction, I shall nevertheless take the occasion, when, as, and if we adjourn tonight, to gather my colleagues together and, still without any assurance that it may or may not be done, give the Senate our best judgment as to how we think the Senate and its work may be facilitated and our consciences and our principles sustained in respect to this matter. I thank the Senator very much for his kindness in yielding.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CURTIS. Under unanimous consent that he not lose the floor or any of his rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Suppose the amendment now offered by the distinguished Senator from Delaware is agreed to by the Senate, and thereafter, when the committee amendment dealing with trade is presented, it is voted down; does the Williams amendment still remain in the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAXBE). It would remain if thereafter the bill was passed, with the Williams amendment, as agreed to, as a part of the original bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I have checked this point, and I agree with the ruling of the Chair. It would be redundant because to a certain extent it would be repetitious, and since there was nothing in the bill itself when it went to conference, one of the sections could be dropped.

Mr. President, as I said, I regret the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves, but I think we should face this issue. I say again that if, tomorrow when we reconvene, this matter has not been disposed of, and we can get an agreement on these amendments en bloc, I shall be the first to support a withdrawal of this amendment, so that we can proceed in an orderly fashion, because I think it would be much better.

However, since we cannot, I feel that we have no choice here, because I think we had just as well face up to the issue.

To make sure that we do, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment. I yield the floor.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, is this to vote on the pending amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the Senator try to get a time limitation, so we can get on with the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, we do not need a time limitation, because I, too, think we should get on with the bill. I ask that the clerk call the roll.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. JAVITS. I did not hear that. What was the the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am just trying to expedite the work of the Senate. I said, "Let's call the roll."

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 1147

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Senator YARBOROUGH, Senator SAXBE, Senator MATHIAS, Senator HART, Senator HUGHES, Senator MCGOVERN, and Senator MONDALE, I send to the desk an amendment to the catastrophic health insurance provisions of H.R. 17550, and I ask that the amendment may be ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. KENNEDY. The purpose of the amendment is to launch a new Federal "seed" program to improve the Nation's existing health care system, and to help prepare the system to meet the extraordinary new demands that will be made upon it by the catastrophic health insurance program.

The measure to provide Federal insurance against the cost of catastrophic illness is one of the most significant provisions added by the Senate Finance Committee to the social security bill. I share the committee's concern over the critical problem of catastrophic illness. Indeed, I believe that one of the most serious aspects of our national health crisis for millions of our citizens is the very real fear of financial ruin because of serious illness.

At the same time, however, such a program, if enacted by itself, runs the risk of substantially increasing the existing imbalances in our health system. I believe that if a program of insurance against catastrophic illness is to be enacted at this time, it should also include provisions dealing with the equally serious problems of the organization and delivery of health care in the Nation. In other words, I feel that any new major health insurance program cannot be simply a financing mechanism. It cannot be permitted simply to increase the effective demand for health care, without at the same time taking the essential steps that are necessary to insure that the new demand can be met, and that high quality health services will actually be available.

The amendment I have proposed would establish a "Health Resources Development Account" in the Catastrophic Health Insurance Trust Fund, to help solve the critical problems of manpower, facilities, and other resources in the Nation's health care system.

The Health Resources Development Account would be financed by earmarking 10 percent—approximately $220 to $250 million a year, based on present estimates—of the funds in the Catastrophic Health Insurance Trust Fund for the purposes of the account. The funds in the account would be used as "front end" money to supplement other Government health development efforts. They would pay for establishing new group practices, for manpower training and education, for creating and developing new categories and skills in the health field, for strengthening health planning activities in States and localities, and for a wide variety of other innovative programs.

Funds from the account would not replace the regular appropriations for support of ongoing health services, such as aid to medical schools and hospitals. Rather, the funds will be applied as a catalyst for innovation in all parts of the health system. In making this commitment, Congress will recognize its responsibility to the American people to assure the availability of health services, not merely to provide a payment mechanism for such services.

The approach adopted in this amendment has been specifically endorsed by many experts in the health field, including the report last June of the administration's Task Force on Medicaid.

In addition, a similar "resources development fund" approach is contained in part F of S. 4297, the bill that Senator YARBOROUGH, Senator SAXBE, 14 other Senators, and I have introduced in this Congress to establish a program of comprehensive national health insurance for the United States.

At this time, however, I would like to emphasize as strongly as I can that the amendment we are offering today is in no sense tailored to any particular version of Federal health insurance. Rather, it offers a program designed to develop the health resources needed to meet the new demand that will be made on the health systems by any extension of existing Federal health insurance programs, whether it be the catastrophic illness insurance program in the committee bill or any other program.

Mr. President, today's Washington Star carries a perceptive article by Judith Randall emphasizing the importance of including resources development provisions in health insurance legislation. Otherwise, as she states, the reach of such legislation will surely exceed its grasp.

Mr. President, I hope that this amendment will be accepted by Congress as part of the pending legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be printed at this point in the RECORD, together with the article by Miss Randall.

There being no objection, the amendment and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 402, line 11, delete the quotation mark.

On page 402, insert after line 11 the following:

"HEALTH RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT ACCOUNT

"SEC. 2011. (a) There is hereby created in the Federal Catastrophic Health Insurance Trust Fund a Health Resources Development Account.

"(b) (1) For each fiscal year there shall be transferred from the Federal Catastrophic Health Insurance Trust Fund to the Health Resources Development Account 10 per centum of the amount available in such Trust Fund for obligation during that year.

"(2) In addition to the funds made available under paragraph (1) of this subsection, there are hereby appropriated to the Health Resources Development Account in the Federal Catastrophic Health Insurance Trust Fund the amount of $100,000,000 from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund.

"(3) Funds in the Health Resources Development Account shall be used exclusively for the purpose of this section, and shall remain available for such use until expended.

"(c) The purposes of this section are (1) to inaugurate an innovative program to strengthen the nation's resources of health personnel and facilities and its system of organization and delivery of health services, in order to meet the rising demand for health care, (2) to expand and intensify the health planning process throughout the United States, with primary emphasis on preparation of the health delivery system to meet such demand, (3) to provide financial and other assistance in alleviating shortages and maldistributions of health personnel and facilities, in order to increase the supply of services, and (4) to improve the organization of health services in order to increase their accessibility and effective delivery and restrain their increasing cost.

"(d) The Secretary is authorized to carry out the purposes of this section by a program of grants, contracts, loans, or other arrangements, as may be prescribed in regulations. In carrying out such purposes, the Secretary shall give priority to—

"(1) the development and support of a continuous process of health service planning, in coordination with State and local planning agencies, for the purpose of improving the supply and distribution of health personnel and facilities and the organization of health services, including identification of acute shortages and maldistributions of health personnel and facilities and serious deficiencies in the organization or delivery of health services;

"(2) improving and expanding the available resources for, and assuring the accessibility of, health services to ambulatory patients which are furnished as part of coordinated systems of comprehensive health care;

"(3) a program for the recruiting and training of professional, subprofessional, and non-professional health personnel, with emphasis on (A) the development of new kinds of health personnel, (B) the encouragement of persons disadvantaged by poverty, inadequate education, or membership in ethnic minorities to enter the health professions, and (C) the development of health personnel for urban and rural poverty areas.

"(e) Expenditures made to carry out the purposes of this section shall not be used to replace other Federal financial assistance, or to supplement the appropriations for such other assistance except to meet specific needs of programs developed under this section.

NIXON'S TARDY HEALTH PROGRAM

(By Judith Randal)

Why—when no one at last week's televised news conference asked him specifically about the issue—did President Nixon single out health as "one of the highest priority programs" he will submit to Congress next year?

The answer is that, while the White House has ignored the matter for 18 months (ever since the President said in July 1969 that he foresaw a "massive crisis"), the legislators whom it would now bend to its will have not. Accordingly, the administration is in the uncomfortable position of being a late added starter in an already crowded race eager to make up for lost time.

It is apparent, for example, that an insurance proposal for the coverage of the expense of catastrophic illness sponsored by Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., is the same in principle, if not in detail, as a plan the administration is mulling over. Long's bill has little chance of passage before the 91st Congress ends this month, but it will likely be reintroduced by Long in the 92nd Congress, thus casting the President in a "me-too" role.

There is, furthermore, a fundamental difficulty with both proposals which their Republican and Democratic advocates alike will be hard put to explain after their initial political popularity begins to wear off: The measures provide for federal payment of medical bills with no thought whatever of how to control costs, insure quality care or meet the additional demand for services they would create—three matters that already have evoked the nation's concern.

It might seem that this lesson had been learned from medicare, but apparently it has not, for there is nothing in either the $2.5 billion Long bill or anything the administration has said that would indicate more than lip-service interest in measures to augment the supply of health manpower or tend to make the health care system more efficient.

Indeed, to cite just one example, the number of medical students receiving federal loans has dropped by more than 8,000 since the President took office, which hardly bodes well for the easing of the doctor shortage.

The irony of all this is that the administration, after dragging its feet for nearly two years in the health care field, has resisted proposals—like that of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.—for comprehensive national health insurance, arguing that personnel and facilities for such a system are lacking.

As a matter of fact, the Kennedy proposal, which has bipartisan support, makes provisions for the expanded plant, equipment and personnel which national health insurance would require.

A "toolingup" period of three years before the plan went into operation would be devoted to creating—at a total cost of about $800 million—some 2,000 fully staffed and equipped group medical practices and other facilities to care for 60 million people now without adequate medical attention.

After the preparatory period, a portion of the system's revenue would be set aside each year to enable the nation to keep pace with the inevitable growth of its case load. Nothing in either Long's bill or anything the administration is considering is anywhere near so thoroughly thought out from the viewpoint of either resources or costs.

The administration has opposed the measure on the ground, among others, that it is not in the American tradition. It would seem, however, that what Kennedy proposes could easily be justified as "research and development" which, if the space program and atomic energy are any indications, are as American as apple pie.

Even if Congress chooses to ignore the rest of the Kennedy proposal and enacts a catastrophic-illness measure that provides a subsidy only for large medical bills, it should certainly contain something very like the "toolingup period." Without it, the reach of any health care legislation, present or future, will almost surely exceed its grasp.

Meanwhile, the President is going to have to acknowledge, to himself at least, that he has an enormous credibility gap to close when he seeks to play the statesman in the health care field.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SAXBE. I am glad to be associated on this amendment with the Senator from Massachusetts, for the reason that I feel that if we go into an extensive insurance program, however well-intentioned, we will simply add to the already difficult situation of expenses that cannot be avoided today with high-priced hospital beds, and not trying to keep people out of the hospital by preventive medicine, by having preventive facilities, and by having trained personnel who can be available to persons who otherwise would wind up in the hospital.

I feel very strongly that our health distribution method in this country at the present time is sadly in need of review, and that to dump good money after bad on this catastrophic system, without putting money into the training of personnel and the providing of preventive facilities, will not solve any problem; it will simply raise the cost and increase the crowding and the load upon our physicians.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Ohio. Together with Senator YARBOROUGH, he was one of the initial sponsors of our national health insurance program. He realizes that to obtain quality health care, what really to do is to improve the organization and delivery of health care, as well as the financing. If we are going to provide quality health care, we must approach the problem in this multifaceted manner.

I commend the amendment that was offered in the Finance Committee with respect to catastrophic illness insurance, because it does meet one of the extremely critical needs of our health system. Many citizens who have built up savings over the course of their lives are threatened with the loss of their entire savings because of catastrophic illness. We must begin now to attack this problem, but we must also begin to come to grips with the problem of the shortage of health manpower in this country and all the other inadequacies of our health delivery system.

The whole thrust and purpose of this amendment is to take a small but important step forward to try to alleviate that shortage. I think it is a responsible approach. I think it is extremely reasonable in terms of resources. It will not take additional commitments of resources. It will utilize the existing resources that will be raised under the amendment of the Finance Committee with respect to catastrophic illness.

It is not an amendment that will require additional funding for this program. That should be understood at this time. But it is something that will help provide additional manpower and other health resources. As a result, hopefully, we will begin to reduce the inflationary trend that has been rampant in the entire health service area in recent years. Inflation in the health area is between 2 and 3 times as much as it is generally in our economy. I think that one of the principal reasons for this excessive inflation is that in programs like medicare and medicaid, the Federal Government has increased the demand for health care, without providing any means to increase the supply of health services. It is for this reason that the Senator from Ohio and I and other Senators have offered this amendment.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1443, H.R. 17550, under the agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

H.R. 17550, to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Without objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) is now recognized.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please come to order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have not informed the Senator from Delaware what I am about to say, but I had informed the Senator from Georgia and I had mentioned the matter to the Senator from Rhode Island; namely, that I intend to move to table the pending amendment to the committee amendment when the bill is laid before the Senate.

Having made that explanation, Mr. President, I now move that the pending amendment——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield only for a question.

Mr. JAVITS. I ask the Senator this question. In view of the fact that Members have not been notified, and I know of at least one Member who is on his way here, having heard the rumor. Does not the Senator feel some little time, say, 30 minutes, or a small amount of time, should be granted Members who are within reach but cannot get here——

Mr. LONG. I would be willing, if I could obtain unanimous consent to do so, without prejudice to myself or losing my right to the floor, to suggest the absence of a quorum in order that——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, we have debated this long enough. Let us face the issue. I would regret if it were tabled. As I said earlier, I did not support putting this provision in, but the Senate should stand up and vote on this trade proposal and I would hope they would not table it now. We could call the roll immediately and vote on it now.

On a direct vote I will vote against the measure.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. After that, they can offer the family assistance plan which I object to, as Senators know, and we can go to a rollcall on that in a short time. Let us do our business and go home. But if we are going to have to vote on this, let us not hide behind a tabling motion—and I say that with all due respect to the opinions of all. Let us face up to it like men. This is a committee amendment. Let us vote for it on its merits, up or down. I would be willing to call the roll right now to save time.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. LONG. If Senators want to have some additional time, that is all right, but the motion is going to be made, and I will ask it in a moment.

I ask unanimous consent that I might suggest the absence of a quorum without prejudicing the rights of the Senator from Louisiana to the floor, I do not want to lose the floor as it might deny me my right to make my motion.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FANNIN). The Senator from Louisiana could make his motion to table and still call for a quorum.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator wish me to yield to him for a question or a statement?

Mr. MONDALE. I would like to ask the Senator a question prior to making the motion.

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. MONDALE. My question is this: The Senator is aware, I assume, that the amendment which he seeks to table was only offered yesterday afternoon, and that at this point those who oppose the legislation have not had 1 minute to discuss the merits of this revolutionary change in trade legislation. Does not the Senator from Louisiana think, in light of the fact that one side of this major issue has not been heard, that it might make the making of this motion somewhat premature?

Mr. LONG. What the Senator says, of course, has great logic. When I first came to the Senate, I liked to think, on matters of this sort, that an eloquent speech could change the vote. But this measure has been voted on a number of times, so I do not believe the most eloquent speech ever made in the history of this body would change a single vote. Thus, this Senator feels that this matter should be voted on, and if we could have unanimous consent to vote at some particular moment, I would be willing to consider a unanimous-consent request, but we cannot even get consent to accept the committee amendments en bloc, which is customary. So we must proceed the best way we can.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. PASTORE. Would the Senator from Louisiana consider a half hour on agreed time, to take a vote at the termination of the half hour on the merits of this particular amendment as suggested by the Senator from Delaware? We could have a unanimous-consent agreement for one-half hour, with 15 minutes to a side, to discuss this matter just as a recapitulation, because it has been talked to death, and then we would have a vote on the merits. What is wrong with that?

Mr. LONG. Well, Mr. President, if I——

Mr. PASTORE. Then the American people would know—if I may conclude my question please—exactly how the Senate feels about the textile industry.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might make a unanimous-consent request, without prejudice to my rights to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be 1 hour, to be equally divided between the proponents of the Williams amendment and the opponents of the Williams amendment, the time to be controlled by the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Delaware if he desires——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The Senator from Georgia can do that.

Mr. LONG. In favor of the amendment, and the time in opposition to be controlled by the Senator from New York; and at the conclusion of that 1 hour we will vote on the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I will support the motion to table the amendment of the senior Senator from Delaware because I believe it discriminates against other American industries facing similar economic hardships as a result of import policies and increased competition from abroad.

The textile and shoe industries are being seriously hurt by imports, and while I am in sympathy with the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, we must remember there are other American industries and American working men and women suffering financial hardships. I, therefore, believe we should act on their behalf also.

I urge the rejection of the amendment and the adoption of such trade legislation as will fairly protect all industries which are being injured by foreign competition.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I now move that the pending amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asked for the yeas and nays. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) to table the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LONG's motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 1158) of Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware was rejected.

Mr. SCOTT and Mr. LONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOK). The Chair recognizes the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield briefly?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Might I yield first to the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) without losing my right to the floor?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished majority leader, if I may do so without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the Chamber is getting a little crowded, and I would hope that there would be a little clearing out of the Chamber so that Senators can find their way around. I do not like the idea of attachés sitting on the floor in this Chamber. I would suggest that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to make sure that those who have no business here go; the rest can stay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Sergeant at Arms is instructed to follow the order of the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that the clerk read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The legislative clerk read the amendment, as follows:

At the bottom of page 6, insert the following: "at the end of the table proposed to be stricken out."

At the bottom of page 6, insert the following:

"There shall be added to the primary insurance amount of each individual and the maximum amount of benefits payable on the basis of his wages and self-employment income, computed as provided above, amounts equal to those necessary to increase such primary insurance amount and maximum amount, respectively, to the amounts which would result from use of the following table instead of the preceding table:

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, this is a perfecting amendment to the House language proposed to be stricken, and I propose to put into effect a minor change upward to the effected changes by the Senate committee in the social security charts.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) proposes an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to add new language at the end thereof——

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with. The amendment at the desk is the family assistance plan which has been at the desk since December 9, with renumbering of sections.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut a question? Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield for a question.

Mr. MILLER. Do I understand that the way the amendment is now before the Senate, it is an amendment in the second degree and therefore no amendments to it are possible?

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. I object to the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that for a while?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, may we have order so we can hear every word of the amendment being read?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a request? The amendment is at the desk and it is about to be read and it is the pending business. Would the Senator consent to yielding for a moment, and I will ask unanimous consent for a colloquy with the distinguished majority leader on a matter of the highest importance?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Provided that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the distinguished majority leader, because this is a matter of the very greatest interest to all Senators here——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I object to the request. The Senator cannot hold the floor and farm it out. It is all right with me to give consent, but I do not think any Senator can hold the floor while it goes on.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order for the reading of the amendment to be interrupted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk had not started to read the amendment yet.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I can only repeat, this is a matter of the greatest importance, which all Senators will want to hear.

Mr. HANSEN. I am sure they will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the ruling of the Chair that the request for dispensing with the reading of the amendment was made by the Senator from Connecticut and was objected to by the Senator from Iowa. The clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the majority leader be recognized for 2 minutes prior to the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, from the last objection, I understood that the Senator would not consent to dispense with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. LONG. No, I am only asking unanimous consent that prior to the reading of the amendment the majority leader be recognized for 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Will Senators take seats, or at least walk in silence?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the distinguished minority leader and I have had several meetings over the last few days discussing the situation in which the Senate finds itself in the declining days of this Congress.

We are disturbed at the image which this body is showing to the American people, but we are more disturbed at the image we are showing to ourselves. We are facing a most difficult period in the history of the Senate and the Nation—and the two are synonymous—and we think that it is vital that we have a meeting to discuss this impasse, and it is the intention of the distinguished minority leader and me to ask for an executive meeting of the Senate at the conclusion of the vote on cloture tomorrow.

Mr. SCOTT. Which would take place at 11 o'clock, on the assumption that we are convening at 10 a.m. tomorrow, is that correct?

Mr. MANSFIELD. We are convening at 9. The first hour is set aside. Then the vote is to take place at 11 a.m. with the hour commencing at 10 a.m. under controlled time.

The purpose is that the leadership wants to lay the problem before the Senate and seek its advice as to what the Senate wants done to get out of the impasse in which we find ourselves. We will have a list of filibusters now in being and of filibusters proposed, and we will try to lay out to our colleagues just what the consequences will be if we do not get together and do what has to be done collectively. Alone, the leaders have no power—only that grace which Senators give them.

We want your advice and counsel. We are not disturbed about the image outside, but we are very disturbed about the image of the Senate to the Senate itself; and we would hope, on the basis of your considering this matter tonight, that when the meeting is called tomorrow, we will be able to get together and work ourselves, in some fashion, out of the impasse in which this body—and this body alone—finds itself at the present time. I think that the Senate owes the country no less.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, would the distinguished majority leader permit me to make an observation? I simply want to say that I agree. Tomorrow we can meet with the filibusterers and those who would be the busters of the filibusters, and see whether or not it is possible for the Senate to begin to make sense this late in the day

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. May we have 1 more minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. Does not the majority leader think it would be more expeditious that we hold such an executive meeting tonight, before the cloture vote is taken? I am afraid the cloture vote is going to stiffen a situation that is already too stiff: If we could have it before that cloture vote, maybe we could resolve some differences.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 7 o'clock this evening, the Senate go into a closed executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I wish to announce that at the hour of 7 o'clock tonight, I will make a motion that the Senate go into closed session.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may ask the Senator from Connecticut a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. May I have the attention of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Any time is all right with me, if we will just face up to our responsibilities and get away from this charade we have been going through. The Senator from Rhode Island wants it tonight.

Several voices. Five o'clock.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator from Iowa wants it some other time.

Mr. MILLER. No. I want to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question.

Several voices. Right now.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order has been called for, and the clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. STENNIS. The regular order is that the Senator from Montana has the floor.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, did not the Chair rule that unanimous consent had been granted for the Senator from Iowa to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor on the sufferance of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senate, and I wish to announce that at the hour of 5 o'clock there will be an executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CURTIS. What is the status of the Williams amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Williams amendment is a pending amendment. It is a pending amendment, but the amendment by the Senator from Pennsylvania and the one by the Senator from Connecticut take precedence over that amendment at the present time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, do I have unanimous consent to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether he would consider making a unanimous-consent request that his pending amendment be open to amendments, and preferably with a time limitation.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, let me explain to the Senator from Iowa why this cannot be done.

As the Senator realizes, yesterday when the Senator from Delaware made his unanimous-consent request, I was quick to accede to it, after discussions with the Senator from Delaware. I was most anxious to give every Member of this body an opportunity to file amendments and vote on the amendments to the family assistance program.

The unanimous-consent request to the Senator from Delaware was objected to. Then we found ourselves with the trade amendment. Now, if I make this unanimous-consent request, the family assistance program would then be open to any other kind of amendment, so we would be back in the same impasse where we were before.

I was reluctant to be in a position to offer family assistance on a take it-or-leave-it basis, but the attitude of many Members of this body was such that we had no alternative. I have had frequent discussions with my cosponsor, the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT); and I have had frequent discussions with the leadership, and with the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS); and we thought we had worked out a procedure, keeping in mind the interests of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS); but unfortunately what we tried to do we were frustrated in, and we now find that under the parliamentary procedures and the rules, we have no alternative but to follow the procedure that we have followed, in order to try to bring the family assistance program to a vote, and that is why I regret that I am unable to accede to the Senator's request at this time.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, may I ask unanimous consent that I may ask a further question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOK). The Senator's question has been asked and answered, and the clerk will proceed with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, a point of order. Is it not in order for the Chair to entertain a unanimous-consent request concerning the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the clerk had started to read the amendment. Hee should not have been interrupted, and the amendment will be read.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, a point of order. I thought I heard the Chair state that the clerk had not begun reading the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair never had that opportunity, I might say to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, may we have the reporter read back the RECORD on that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Official Reporter may do so.

Mr. LONG. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order having been requested, the regular order is that the clerk shall read the amendment. So the clerk may proceed to read the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Strike out title V of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, may we have the clerk start over again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I think the clerk should be allowed to continue to read where he left off.

(14) Changes in headings.

(15) Pretesting and evaluation of family assistance.

(21) Grants to States for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I am not following the clerk. It appears to me that some parts are being skipped. I think this is a very important bill. Senators are going to be called upon to vote on something about which most of them do not know. All they know is what they have read in the paper. I should like to observe that I think it is important that we follow the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator from Wyoming that in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut certain sections have been stricken out in the amendment as proposed by the Senator, and these appear in the reading by the clerk. If they are not stricken out in the copy that the Senator from Wyoming has, he will consider them as having been stricken out if the clerk does not read them.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HANSEN. Is the section which was just read, "Grants to States for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled," numbered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Wyoming come to the clerk's desk with the clerk and the copy submitted by the Senator from Connecticut?

The Chair might suggest to the Members of the Senate that the Senator from Connecticut has modified his amendment in relation to the amendment that the Senators have on their desks. The clerk is reading the modification.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CURTIS. When the vote comes up on the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, will that vote be limited to voting up or down the language that the clerk has read? We are told that the amendment was to be read in full and that no amendment to the amendment would be allowed. My question is, When the vote is taken, will it be limited to the words that the clerk has read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's assumption is correct—that the vote will take place on the language as read by the clerk in the modified amendment as submitted by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware and Mr. ERVIN addressed the Chair.

Mr. CURTIS. No other language?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. He may modify that amendment himself until the Senate takes some action on it.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is the clerk reading the titles or is he reading the full text?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He is reading the full text of the amendment as submitted by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President——

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the clerk was reading the amendment, and I therefore insist on the regular order because the reading by the clerk is being interrupted to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOK). By unanimous consent it could be, otherwise the clerk will proceed to read the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order having been called for, the clerk will proceed to read the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President——

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

(11) Title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) is amended by adding after part C the following new parts:

"PART D—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 441. For the purpose of providing a basic level of financial assistance throughout the Nation to needy families with children, in a manner which will strengthen family life, encourage work training and self-support, and enhance personal dignity, there is authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year a sum sufficient to carry out this part.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"Eligibility

"SEC. 442. (a) Each family (as defined in section 445)—

"(1) whose income, other than income excluded pursuant to section 443(b), is at a rate of less than—

"(A) $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family, plus

"(B) $300 per year for each additional member, and

"(2) whose resources, other than resources excluded pursuant to section 444, are less than $1,500, shall, in accordance with and subject to the other provisions of this title, be paid a family assistance benefit.

"Amount

"(b) The family assistance benefit for a family shall be payable at the rate of—

"(1) $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family, plus

"(2) $300 per year for each additional member, reduced by the amount of income, not excluded pursuant to section 443(b), of the members of the family.

"Period for Determination of Benefits

"(c)(1) A family's eligibility for and its amount of family assistance benefits shall be determined for each quarter of a calendar year, beginning with the quarter in which application for such benefits is made and within 30 days following the date upon which such application is initially filed. Such determination shall be made on the basis of the Secretary's estimate of the family's income for such quarter, and such estimate shall in turn be based on income for a preceding period unless he has reason to believe that modifications in income have or are likely to occur on the basis of changes in conditions or circumstances. The Secretary shall redetermine eligibility for and amount of benefits of a family for a quarter if at any time during such quarter he has reason to believe that there have been changes affecting such eligibility or amount of benefits and such redetermination shall be effective beginning with the month following the month in which such changes occurred.

"(2) In the case of an application for family assistance benefits which is filed after the first day of a quarter, the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) for such quarter shall be reduced by an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount determined pursuant to such paragraph as the number of days in the quarter preceding the date on which the application was filed bears to the total number of days in such quarter.

"(3) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which income received in one period (or expenses incurred in one period in earning income) shall, for purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits, be considered as received (or incurred) in another period or periods.

"Special Limits on Gross Income

"(d) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the circumstances under which the gross income from a trade or business (including farming) will be considered sufficiently large to make such family ineligible for such benefits. For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'gross income' has the same meaning as when used in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 1 et seq.).

"Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam

"(e) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"INCOME

"Meaning of Income

"SEC. 443. (a) For purposes of this part, income means both earned income and unearned income and—

"(1) earned income means only—

"(A) remuneration for services performed as an employee (as defined in section 210(j)), other than remuneration to which section 209 (b), (c), (d), (f), or (k), or section 211 would apply; and

"(B) net earnings from self-employment, as defined in section 211 (without the application of the second and third sentences following clause (C) of subsection (a)(9)), including earnings for services described in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of subsection (c); and

"(2) unearned income means all other income, including—

"(A) any payments received as an annuity, pension, retirement, or disability benefit, including veteran's or workmen's compensation and old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, railroad retirement, and unemployment benefits;

"(B) support and alimony payments,

"(C) rents, dividends, interest, and royalties; and

"(D) regularly recurring payments excluded from earned income under clause (1)(A), which are intended to replace earned income, whether for a temporary or indefinite period of time.

"Exclusions From Income

"(b) In determining the income of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) subject to limitations (as to amount or otherwise) prescribed by the Secretary, the earned income of each child in the family who is, as determined by the Secretary under regulations, a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment;

"(2)(A) the total unearned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $30 in such quarter, and (B) the total earned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $30 in such quarter;

"(3) an amount of earned income of a member of the family equal to the cost incurred by such member for child care which the Secretary deems necessary to securing or continuing in manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, employment, or self-employment except that such amount may not exceed the cost, established for purposes of section 436(c), of child care of the same type as that provided pursuant to section 436;

"(4) the first $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods) of the total of earned income (not excluded by the preceding paragraphs of this subsection) of all members of the family plus one-half of the remainder thereof;

"(5) food stamps or any other assistance (except veterans' pensions) which is based on need and furnished by any State or political subdivision of a State or any Federal agency, or by any private agency or organization exempt from taxation under section 501(a) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 501(a)) as an organization described in section 501(c) (3) or (4) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 501(c) (3) and (4));

"(6) allowances under section 432(a) or under section 437(d);

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be temporarily suspended——

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware (continuing). In order that I might ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will resume the reading of the amendment.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, is that the only purpose?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is the only purpose.

Mr. LONG. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been heard. The clerk will resume the reading of the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I thought they wanted to vote.

The legislative clerk resumed the reading of the amendment as follows:

"(7) any portion of a scholarship or fellowship received for use in paying the cost of tuition and fees at any educational (including technical or vocational education) institution;

"(8) home produce of a member of the family utilized by the household for its own consumption; and

"(9) any amounts received for the foster care of a child who is living in the same home as the family but is not a member of the family.

"RESOURCES

"Exclusions From Resources

"SEC. 444. (a) In determining the resources of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) the home, household goods, and personal effects; and

"(2) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion.

"Disposition of Resources

"(b) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to the period or periods of time within which, and the manner in which, various kinds of property must be disposed of in order not to be included in determining a family's eligibility for family assistance benefits. Any portion of the family's benefits paid for any such period shall be conditioned upon such disposal; and any benefits so paid shall (at the time of the disposal) be considered overpayments to the extent they would not have been paid had the disposal occurred at the beginning of the period for which such benefits were paid.

"MEANING OF FAMILY AND CHILD

"Composition of Family

"SEC. 445. (a) Two or more individuals—

"(1) who are related by blood, marriage, or adoption,

"(2) who are living in a place of residence maintained by one or more of them as his or their own home,

"(3) who are residents of the United States, and

"(4) at least one of whom is a child who (A) is not married to another of such individuals and (B) is in the care of or dependent upon another of such individuals, shall be regarded as a family for purposes of this part and parts A, C, and E. A parent (of a child living in a place of residence referred to in paragraph (2)), or a spouse of such a parent, who is determined by the Secretary to be temporarily absent from such place of residence for the purpose of engaging in or seeking employment or self-employment (including military service) shall nevertheless be considered (for purposes of paragraph (2)) to be living in such place of residence.

"DEFINITION OF CHILD

"(b) For purposes of this part and parts C and E, the term 'child' means an individual who is (1) under the age of eighteen, or (2) under the age of twenty-one and (as determined by the Secretary under regulations) a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a coure of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment.

"Income and Resources of Noncontributing Individual

"(c) For purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of family assistance benefits for any family there shall be excluded the income and resources of any individual, other than a parent of a child (or a spouse of a parent in cases in which under applicable State law such spouse is responsible for the support of the child), which, is not available to other members of the family; and for such purposes such individual—

"(1) in the case of a child, shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determining the family's eligibility for such benefits but not for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits, and

"(2) in any other case, shall not be considered a member of the family for any purpose.

"Recipients of Aid to the Aged, Blind, and Disabled Ineligible

"(d) If an individual is receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI, or if his needs are taken into account in determining the need of another person receiving such aid, then, for the period for which such aid is received, such individual shall not be regarded as a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the family assistance benefits of the family and his income and resources shall not be counted as income of a family under this part.

"PAYMENTS AND PROCEDURES

"Payments of Benefits

"SEC. 446. (a)(1) Family assistance benefits shall be paid not less frequently than monthly, except that such benefits may be paid quarterly in any case in which the Secretary determines that the amount of such benefits for a quarter will not exceed $30.

"(2) Payment of the family assistance benefits of any family may be made to any one or more members of the family, or, if the Secretary finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing (which shall be held in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as a hearing under section 446(c) (1) and (2)) to the family member or members to whom the family assistance benefits are (or, but for this provision, would be) paid, that such member or members have such inability to manage funds that making payment to such member or members would be contrary to the welfare of the child or children in such family, he may make payment to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interesetd in or concerned with the welfare of the family. If the Secretary makes payment to a person who is not a member of the family, he shall review his finding under the preceding sentence periodically to determine whether the conditions justifying such finding still exist, and, if they do not, he shall discontinue making payments to any person who is not a mmeber of the family. If it appears to the Secretary that such conditions are likely to continue beyond a period specified by him, he shall attempt to secure the appointment of a guardian or other legal representative for the family member with respect to whom such finding is made, and take any other steps he may find appropriate to protect the welfare of the child or children in the family.

"(3) The Secretary may by regulation establish ranges of incomes within which a single amount of family assistance benefit shall apply.

"Overpayments and Underpayments

"(b) Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of family assistance benefits has been paid with respect to any family, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments to the family or by recovery from or payment to any one or more of the individuals who are or were members thereof, unless such adjustment or recovery (in the case of an overpayment) would defeat the purposes of this part, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration of this part.

"Hearings and Review

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall provide reasonable notice and opportunity for a fair hearing to any individual who is or claims to be a member of a family and is in disagreement with any determination under this part with respect to eligibility of the family for family assistance benefits, the number of members of the family, or the amount of the benefits, if such individual requests a hearing on the matter in disagreement within thirty days after notice of such determination is received. Until a determination is made on the basis of such hearing or upon disposition of the matter through default, withdrawal of the request by the individual or revision of the initial determination by the Secretary, any amounts which are payable (or would be payable but for the matter in disagreement) to any individual who has been determined to be a member of such family shall continue to be paid; but any amounts so paid for periods prior to such determination or disposition shall be considered overpayments to the extent they would not have been paid had such determination or disposition occurred at the same time as the Secretary's initial determination on the matter in disagreement if there would have been no matter in disagreement but for the fraudulent statements or willful misstatements of such individual or any other person who has been determined to be a member of a family. For purposes of hearings under this subsection, the Administrative Procedure Act shall not apply.

"(2) Determination on the basis of such hearing shall be made within ninety days after the individual requests the hearing as provided in paragraph (1) or within thirty days following the final day of the hearing, whichever is sooner.

"(3) The final determination of the Secretary after a hearing under paragraph (1) shall be subject to judicial review as provided in section 205(g) to the same extent as the Secretary's final determinations under section 205.

"Procedures; Prohibition of Assignments

"(d) The provisions of sections 206(a) (other than the penultimate sentence thereof) and 207 and subsections (a), (d), (e), and (f) of section 205 shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as they apply in the case of title III.

"Applications and Furnishings of Information by Families

"(e) 1 The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to families or members thereof with respect to the filing of applications the furnishing of other data and material, and the reporting of events and changes in circumstances, as may be necessary to determine eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits.

"(2) In order to encourage prompt reporting of events and changes in circumstances relevant to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, and more accurate estimates of expected income or expenses by members of families for purposes of such eligibility and amount of benefits, the Secretary shall prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which—

"(A) failure to so report or delay in so reporting, or

"(B) inaccuracy of information which is furnished by the members and on which the estimates of income or expenses for such purposes are based, will result in treatment as overpayments of all or any portion of payments of such benefits for the period involved.

"Furnishing of Information by Other Agencies

"(f) The head of any Federal agency shall provide such information as the Secretary needs for purposes of determining eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, or verifying other information with respect thereto.

"Application for Other Benefits or Payments

"(g) For purposes of determining the amount of family assistance benefits to which a family is entitled, the Secretary shall not consider as a member of the family any individual who refuses to take all steps necessary (excluding acceptance of any employment which would not be determined to be suitable for such individual under section 448(b)) to apply for and (if eligible) obtain unemployment benefits, old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, or any other payments of the type enumerated in section 443(a)(2)(A) for which the Secretary determines it is likely that such applicant or family or family member may be eligible.

"REGISTRATION AND REFERRAL OF FAMILY MEMBERS FOR MANPOWER OR REHABILITATION SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 447. (a) Every individual who is a member of a family which is found to be eligible for family assistance benefits, other than a member to whom the Secretary finds paragraph (1), (2), (3), (4), or (5) of subsection (b) applies, shall register for manpower services, training, and employment with the local public employment office of the State as provided by regulations of the Secretary of Labor. If and for so long as any such individual is found by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing (which shall be held in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as a hearing under section 446(c) (1) and (2)), to have failed to so register, he shall be regarded as a member of a family but no family assistance benefits shall be payable to such family with respect to such member. In the case of such a finding such member, or, if there are two or more such members of a family to whom such a finding is applicable at the same time, the first and second members of such family with respect to whom it is so applicable, shall be treated as, respectively, the first member and first and second members of such family for purposes of section 442(b). No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the second sentence of this subsection is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(b) An individual shall not be required to register pursuant to subsection (a) if the Secretary determines that such individual is—

"(1) unable to engage in work or training by reason of illness, incapacity, or advanced age;

"(2) a mother or other relative of a child under the age of six who is caring for such child;

"(3) the mother or other female caretaker of a child, if the father or another adult male relative is in the home and not excluded by paragraph (1), (2), (4), or (5) of this subsection (unless the second sentence of subsection (a), or section 448(a) is applicable to him);

"(4) a child who is under the age of sixteen or meets the requirements of section 445(b)(2); or

"(5) one whose presence in the home on a substantially continuous basis is required because of the illness or incapacity of another member of the household. An individual who would, but for the preceding sentence, be required to register pursuant to subsection (a), may, if he wishes register as provided in such subsection.

"(c) The Secretary shall make provision for the furnishing of child care services in such cases and for so long as he deems appropriate in the case of (1) individuals registered pursuant to subsection (a) who are, pursuant to such registration, participating in manpower services, training, or employment, and (2) individuals referred pursuant to subsection (d) who are, pursuant to such referral, participating in vocational rehabilitation.

"(d) In the case of any member of a family assistance benefits who is not required to register pursuant to subsection (a) because of such member's incapacity, the Secretary shall make provision for referral of such member to the appropriate State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, and for a review of such member's incapacity and his need for and utilization of the rehabilitation services made available to him under such plan as frequently as may be appropriate, as determined by the Secretary taking into consideration the nature of the individual's incapacity and the likelihood of a change in his condition. If and for so long as such member is found by the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing (which shall be held in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as a hearing under section 446(c)(1) and (2)), to have refused without good cause to accept rehabilitation services available to him under such plan, he shall be treated as an individual to whom subsection (a) is applicable by reason of refusal to register for manpower services, training, and employment.

"DENIAL OF BENEFITS IN CASE OF REFUSAL OF MANPOWER OR REHABILITATION SERVICES, TRAINING, OR EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 448. (a) For purposes of determining eligibility for and amounts of family assistance benefits under this part, an individual who has registered as required under section 447(a) shall be treated as an individual to whom section 447(a) applies by reason of refusal to register for manpower services, training, and employment, if and for so long as he has been found by the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing (which shall be held in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as a hearing under section 446(c) (1) and (2)), to have refused without good cause to participate or continue to participate in suitable manpower services, training, or employment, or to have refused without good cause to accept suitable employment in which he is able to engage which is offered through the public employment offices of the State, or is otherwise offered by an employer if the offer of such employer is determined by the Secretary of Labor, after notification by such employer or otherwise, to be a bona fide offer of employment.

"(b)(1) In determining whether any employment is suitable for an individual for purposes of subsection (a) and part C, the Secretary of Labor shall consider the degree of risk to such individual's health and safety, his physical fitness for the work, his prior training and experience, his prior earnings, the length of his unemployment, his realistic prospects for obtaining work based on his potential and the availability of training opportunities, and the distance of the available work from his residence.

"(2) In no event shall any employment be considered suitable for an individual—

"(A) if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lockout, or other labor dispute;

"(B) if the wages, hours, or other terms or conditions of the work offered are contrary to or less than those prescribed by Federal, State, or local law or are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality, or if the wages for the work offered are at an hourly rate of less $1.20; or

"(C) if, as a condition of being employed, the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization.

"(c) No family shall be denied benefits under this part, or have its benefits under this part reduced, because an individual who is a member of such family refuses work, if such individual is the mother, or other relative of a child (which child is a member of the family) who is caring for such child, unless child care provided pursuant to section 436, or child care of the same type and reasonably equivalent cost (as determined in accordance with criteria of the Secretary), is available for such child.

"TRANSFER OF FUNDS FOR ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS

"SEC. 449. The Secretary shall, pursuant to and to the extent provided by agreement with the Secretary of Labor, pay to the Secretary of Labor amounts which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare estimates would be paid as family assistance benefits under this part to individuals participating in public or private employer compensated on-the-job training under a program of the Secretary of Labor if they were not participating in such training. Such amounts shall be available to pay the costs of such programs.

"PART E—STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"PAYMENT UNDER TITLES IV, V, XVI, AND XIX, CONDITIONED ON SUPPLEMENTATION

"SEC. 451. In order for a State to be eligible for payments pursuant to title V, XVI, or XIX, or part A or B of this title, with respect to expenditures for any quarter beginning on or after the date this part becomes effective with respect to such State, it must have in effect an agreement with the Secretary under which it will (1) make supplementary payments, as provided in this part and part F, to any family residing in the State other than a family in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AMOUNT OF SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

"SEC. 452. (a) The amount payable under the agreement with any State under this part to any family described in section 451 shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be no less than the difference between—

"(1) the payment level in such State, and

"(2) the family assistance benefits payable under part D without regard to any reduction in such benefits required by section 447 or 448 plus any other income (earned or unearned) not excluded under section 443 (b) (except paragraph (4) thereof) or under subsection (b) of this section.

The payment level in each State for any family shall be determined by the Secretary after consultation with such State. The payment level so determined shall be so designed that as nearly as practicable, payments under the agreement (when added to benefits payable under part D) to families with no other income will be equal to the maximum payment (exclusive of amounts designed to meet shelter needs) which families of the same size (and which were eligible for no additional payments to meet extraordinary needs, determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary) would have received for November 1970 under the plan of such State: (i) which is in effect for such month (or in effect for January 1971 if the State has adopted prior to November 1, 1970, a change in the amount of such payments effective after November 1970) and (ii) which complies with the requirements for approval under part A as in effect for such month plus a uniform amount to meet shelter needs (adjusted as may be necessary to reflect differences in shelter costs between different areas of the State); except that this section shall not be construed to require a State to make payments with respect to that amount by which its payment level exceeds the poverty level (as defined in section 543(c)) applicable to such family.

"(b) For purposes of an agreement under this part—

"(1) the provisions of, and the rules and regulations under, sections 442(a)(2), and (d), 443(a), 444, 445, 446 (to the extent the Secretary deems appropriate), 447, and 448 shall be applied,

"(2) in the case of earned income to which paragraph (4) of section 443(b) applies, there shall be disregarded $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods), plus one-third of the remainder, and,

"(3) in the case of any State the plan of which, as in effect in December 1970, complies with the standards for approval under part A as then in effect and provides for meeting less than 100 per centum of its standard of need or provides for considering less than 100 per centum of requirements in determining need, there shall be disregarded, with respect to any family, an additional amount of income (whether earned or unearned) equal to the amount which (A) is in excess of the income which would have been disregarded pursuant to section 402(a)(8) as then in effect and (B) could have been received by a family of the same size whose needs were being met in such month under such plan without a resultant reduction in the assistance payment under such plan.

For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"(c) The agreement with a State under this part shall—

"(1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State;

"(2) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to carry out or supervise the carrying out of the agreement in the State;

"(3) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency carrying out the agreement to any individual whose claim for supplementary payments is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(4) provide (A) such methods of administration (including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods) as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the agreement in the State, and (B) for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff, with particular emphasis on the full- or part-time employment of recipients of supplementary payments and other persons of low income, as community services aides, in carrying out the agreement and for the use of nonpaid or partially paid volunteers;

"(5) provide that the State agency carrying out the agreement will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(6) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments to purposes directly connected with the administration of this title;

"(7) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for supplementary payments shall have opportunity to do so, and that supplementary payments shall be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals;

"(8) provide that no lien will be imposed against the property of any member of a family or his estate on account of payments made under the agreement (except pursuant to the judgment of a court on account of payments incorrectly made to such family), and that there will be no adjustment or any recovery of payments correctly made under the agreement; and

"(9) provide—

"(A) (i) for the development and implementation of a program under which the State will attempt—

"(I) in the case of a child born out of wedlock who is receiving assistance to needy families with children, or payments under the agreement, to establish the paternity of such child and secure support for him,

"(II) in the case of any child receiving such assistance or payments who has been deserted or abandoned by his parent, to secure support for such child from such parent (or from any other person legally liable for such support), utilizing reciprocal arrangements adopted with other States to obtain or enforce court orders for support, and

"(III) in the case of any parent (of a child referred to in clause (II)) receiving such assistance or payments who has been deserted or abandoned by his or her spouse, to secure support for such parent from such spouse (or from any other person legally liable for such support), utilizing any reciprocal arrangements adopted with other States to obtain or enforce court orders for support and

"(ii) for the establishment of a single organizational unit in the State agency or local agency carrying out the agreement in each political subdivision which will be responsible for the administration of the program referred to in clause (i);

"(B) for entering into cooperative arrangements with appropriate courts and law enforcement officials (i) to assist in administering the program referred to in clause (A)(i), including the entering into of financial arrangements with such courts and officials in order to assure optimum results under such program, and (ii) with respect to any other matters of common concern to such courts or officials and the State agency or local agency administering such program;

"(C) that the State will report to the Secretary, at such times (not less often than once each calendar quarter) and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe—

"(i) the name, and social security account number, if unknown, of each parent of a child referred to in clause (A)(i)—

"(I) against whom an order for the support and maintenance of such child has been issued by a court of competent jurisdiction but who is not making payments in compliance or partial compliance with such order, or against whom a petition for such an order has been filed in a court having jurisdiction to receive such petition, and

"(II) whom it has been unable to locate after requesting and utilizing information included in the files of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare maintained pursuant to section 205,

"(ii) the last known address of such parent and any information it has with respect to the date on which such parent could last be located at such address, and

"(iii) such other information as the Secretary may specify to assist in carrying out the provisions of section 407;

"(D) that the State will, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, cooperate with any other State carrying out an agreement under this part—

"(i) in locating a parent residing in such State (whether or not permanently) against whom a petition has been filed in a court of competent jurisdiction of such other State for the support and maintenance of his child receiving assistance to needy families with children or payments under the agreement of such other State, and

"(ii) in securing compliance or good faith partial compliance by a parent residing in such State (whether or not permanently) with an order issued by a court of competent jurisdiction against such parent for the support and maintenance of such child;

"(10) provide for arrangements to assure that there will be made a non-Federal contribution to meet the cost of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities provided for individuals registered pursuant to section 447, in cash or kind, equal to 10 per centum of such cost; and

"(11) provide, in the case of any individuals who are members of a family receiving supplementary payments and who refuse—

"(A) to register as required under section 447(a),

"(B) to accept vocational rehabilitation services as required under section 447(d), or

"(C) without good cause, to participate or continue to participate in manpower services, training, or employment, as required under section 448(a), or to accept suitable employment as described in such section, that such supplementary payments will be reduced by an amount which bear the same ratio to such payments as the number of such individuals bears to the total number of members in the family.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 453. (a)(1) The Secretary shall pay to any State which has in effect an agreement under this part, for each fiscal year, an amount equal to 30 per centum of the total amount expended during such year pursuant to its agreement as supplementary payments to families not counting so much of the supplementary payment made to any family as exceeds the amount by which (with respect to the period involved)—

"(A) the family assistance benefit payable to such family under part D, plus any income of such family (earned or unearned) not disregarded in determining the amount of such supplementary payment, is less than

"(B) the applicable poverty level as promulgated and in effect under subsection (c).

"(2) The Secretary shall also pay to each such State an amount equal to—

"(A) the cost of carrying out the requirements of section 452(c)(9), plus

"(B) 50 per centum of its other administrative costs found necessary by the Secretary for carrying out its agreement.

"(b) Payments under subsection (a) shall be made at such time or times, in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in such installments as the Secretary may determine; and shall be made on such conditions as may be necessary to assure the carrying out of the purposes of this title.

"(c)(1) For purposes of this part, the 'poverty level' for a family group of any given size shall be the amount shown for a family group of such size in the following table, adjusted as provided in paragraph (2):

"Family size:	Basic amount
One	$1,920
Two	2,520
Three	3,120
Four	3,720
Five	4,270
Six	4,820
Seven	5,320
Eight	5,820
Nine	6,270
Ten	6,720
Eleven or more	7,170

"(2) As soon after enactment of the Family Assistance Act as may be feasible, and thereafter between July 1 and September 30 of each year, the Secretary (A) shall adjust the amount shown for each size of family group in the table in paragraph (1) by increasing such amount by the percentage by which the average level of the price index for the months in the most recent preceding calendar year exceeds the average level of the price index for months in calendar year 1969, and (B) shall thereupon promulgate the amounts so adjusted as the poverty level for family groups of various sizes which shall be conclusive for purposes of this part for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation.

"(3) As used in this subsection, the term 'price index' means the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"FAILURE BY STATE TO COMPLY WITH AGREEMENT

"SEC. 454. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to a State with which he has an agreement under this part, finds that such State is failing to comply therewith or with any requirement imposed by or pursuant to this part, he shall withhold all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of the payments to which such State is otherwise entitled under this part or Part A or B of this title or under title V, XVI, or XIX, but the amounts so withheld from payments under such part A or B or under title V, XVI, or XIX, shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such part of title. Such withholding shall be affected at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary may deem appropriate.

"SEC. 455. As used in this part, the term 'needy families with children' means families who are receiving family assistance benefits under part D and who (1) are receiving supplementary payments under this part, or (2) would be eligible to receive, under a State plan (approved under part A) as in effect prior to the enactment of part D, aid to families with dependent children as defined in section 406 as it was in effect prior to such enactment, if the State plan had continued in effect; and 'assistance to needy families with children' means family assistance benefits under such part D, paid to such families.

"PART F—ADMINISTRATION

"Agreements With States

"SEC. 461. (a) The Secretary may enter into an agreement with any State under which the Secretary will make, on behalf of the State, the supplementary payments provided for under part E, or will perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon, or both. In any such case, the agreement shall also (1) provide for payment by the State to the Secretary of an amount equal to the supplementary payments made by the Secretary under such agreement, less any payments which would otherwise be made to the State under section 453(a), (2) at the request of the State, provide for joint audit of payments under the agreement, and (3) in the case of an agreement which will become effective at a future date, but not later than two years after the date as of which part D becomes effective for such State, provide for payments of the State's administrative costs found necessary by the Secretary for making supplementary payments pursuant to part E during the period after the execution of the agreement under this section and before its effective date, except that if the State takes any action which prevents such agreement from becoming effective at the end of such two years, the Secretary shall recover (by adjustment of any other amounts due the State under this Act, or otherwise) an amount equal to one-half the administrative costs paid pursuant to this clause (3).

"(b) The Secretary may enter into an agreement with a State under which the Secretary will determine eligibility for medical assistance under such State's plan approved under title XIX, or for surplus food commodities under such State's program conducted pursuant to section 416 of the Act of October 31, 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1431) or administer all or part of such State's food stamp program conducted pursuant to the Food Stamp Act of 1964 (7 U.S.C. 2011, et seq.), with respect to (1) individuals eligible under such State's plan approved under title XVI for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled (and individuals who would be eligible for such aid but for the income and resources requirements of title XVI), but only if the State has entered into an agreement with the Secretary pursuant to section 1605, and (2) all individuals other than those described in clause (1), but only if, in the case of any State required to make supplementary payments pursuant to section 452, the Secretary is carrying out an agreement with such State pursuant to subsection (a) of this section. In any such case, the agreement shall also provide for payment by the State to the Secretary of an amount equal to one-half of the cost of determining eligibility for medical assistance plus the cost of detremining eligibility for surplus food commodities and of administering the food stamp programs, but in computing such costs the Secretary shall include only those costs which are additional to the costs incurred in carrying out part D or in carrying out an agreement under subsection (a) or section 1605.

"(c) In the case of any State which has an agreement with the Secretary under subsection (a) (if the State is required to make supplementary payments pursuant to section 452), under subsection (b) with respect to medical assistance, and under section 1605, the Secretary may further agree to administer all or any part of any other program of such State under which cash benefits are provided on the basis of need, but only to the extent that he determines, with respect to any such program or part thereof which the State seeks to include in the agreement, that administration by him is feasible and will not result in undue administrative burden. In any such case the agreement shall provide for payment by the State to the Secretary of an amount equal to the cash benefits paid by the Secretary, plus the costs of administering any such program or part thereof included in the agreement, but in computing such administrative costs the limitations applicable to computation of administrative costs under subsection (b) shall apply.

"(d) In the case of an agreement, plan, or program, or any portion thereof, which the Secretary administers on behalf of a State under an agreement pursuant to subsection (a) or (b) of this section or pursuant to section 1605, the Secretary may waive any procedural requirements or methods of administration imposed by or pursuant to this or any other Federal statute and substitute the requirements or methods applicable to the administration of part D which serve the same purpose or relate to the same or comparable matters.

"(e) In the case of any State which has entered into—

"(1) an agreement under subsection (a) for the administration by the Secretary of supplementary payments under the State's agreement pursuant to part E, or

"(2) an agreement under section 1605 for payment of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled, the State must maintain such agreement in effect in order to remain eligible for payments under part E of this title or title XVI, respectively, with respect to expenditures for any quarter beginning on or after the date such agreement under subsection (a) or section 1605 becomes effective.

"(f) The Secretary may also enter into an agreement with any State under which such State will make, on behalf of the Secretary, the family assistance benefit payments provided for under part D with respect to all or specified families in the State who are eligible for such benefits or will perform such other functions in connection with the administration of part D as may be agreed upon, or both, except that (1) the Secretary may not enter into any agreement under this subsection which would remain in effect for any period after January 1, 1974, under which any State would determine the eligibility of or make family assistance benefits payments to any family other than a family in which one parent of the child or children is dead, continuously absent from the home, or incapacited, and (2) the Secretary may not enter into an agreement under this subsection with any State if, under the State plan of such State, approved under part A and as in effect for January 1970, the total of the payments for such month as aid under such plan with respect to three dependent children and one relative with whom they were living, all of whom have no other income, would be less than $133.34. The cost of carrying out any such agreement shall be paid to the State by the Secretary in advance or by way of reimbursement and in such installments as may be agreed upon.

"(g)(1) Whenever, in accordance with this Act, the Secretary has agreed to make the supplementary payments provided for under part E to pay aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State's plan approved under title XVI, or to perform any other functions, on behalf of a State, it shall be a condition of such agreement that, notwithstanding any other provision of law, except provisions pertaining to retirement, insurance, health benefits, and length of workweek, arrangements are made, which are found by the Civil Service Commission to be fair and equitable, to provide or continue to provide employment to employees of the State or its political subdivisions whose employment is affected. The terms and conditions of such employment arrangements shall be specified in the agreement.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, welfare reform is the most urgent domestic legislation——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. For a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. No; to get the yeas and nays on the modification.

Mr. RIBICOFF. No, I will not yield to have the yeas and nays on the modification ordered, because it was discussed here during the meeting that there may be other Senators here——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. If not on that amendment can we get the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RIBICOFF. No; I would object to that. I have the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, welfare reform is the most urgent domestic legislation now before Congress.

Men of all persuasions agree that our welfare programs have become a national tragedy. Uncontrollable costs, weak or nonexistent incentives to work and maintain the family structure, and categories which exclude up to one half of our poor, all contribute to the disastrous system now in operation.

The hour is late and it is imperative that the Senate consider this proposal on its merits before adjournment. We will fail our public trust if we allow the present system to be perpetuated any longer.

Therefore, Senator BENNETT and I today are proposing an amendment to the existing welfare system. Our proposal includes the major provisions of the administration's family assistance plan, first proposed 16 months ago and under careful consideration by Congress for almost a year.

Many believe this legislation goes too far; others argue that it does not go far enough. In my own mind, this amendment does not contain everything I believe is ultimately required in our welfare program. But, if this is not a perfect program, it is a necessary program.

Passage of the amendment Senator BENNETT and I propose would be the most important step in three decades toward developing a more workable, more efficient, and more humane public assistance system in the United States.

Under this proposal, fourteen and a half million Americans will be eligible for more assistance than under present law. Two million people will be helped out of poverty. For the first time, every family with a child will be assured a minimum income. Uniform national standards and eligibility criteria will simplify administration and equalize opportunity throughout the country.

Let us be clear about the nature of this amendment. It will not reduce Federal costs or the number of eligible recipients. Family assistance will cost an additional $4.3 billion in the first year of operation. These costs include $600 million for increased day care centers and work training programs, as well as almost $1 billion for the aged, blind, and disabled.

The needs of the poor, the disabled, the blind, and the elderly will not permit us to do less. This country must realize that we cannot save money by wasting lives.

THE PRESENT WELFARE SYSTEM

Welfare in the United States today is a failure.

Assistance payments are insufficient to meet minimal needs. Family and work incentives are lacking. Eligibility is based on arbitrary categories rather than need. While Congress has established a legal right to assistance, it has provided a system which frustrates the exercise of these rights and demeans those who do exercise them.

Under present law, fully half of all poor people, including two out of every three poor children, do not receive any aid.

The aid to families with dependent children program—the largest assistance program—is in reality 54 different programs in 54 different jurisdictions throughout the United States.

No national standards exist for either benefits or eligibility. Payments vary from an average of $46 per month for a family of four in Mississippi to $265 for such a family in New Jersey. This disparity is further aggravated by complicated State variations in criteria for eligibility and methods of administration. Each State has developed its own prescription for need standards, assets tests, incapacity tests, and requirements for school attendance and the age of children who can receive benefits. In addition, the administration of the program has varied widely from State to State and locality to locality in terms of equity and responsiveness to the needs of recipients.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Connecticut yield at an appropriate time?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I am pleased to yield now to the Senator from Michigan, without relinquishing my right to the floor.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I wonder if there is a possibility of getting the yeas and nays on the Senator's amendment, when he has modified it to the extent that he desires, because if that is possible, then we can tell a lot of Senators they can go home. Otherwise, I have been served with notice that there may be a live quorum later in the evening, and I do not know whether to warn Senators or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I have the floor. I will answer the question of the assistant minority leader, and then I shall be pleased to yield to the distinguished Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I would like to have the yeas and nays ordered on both the Scott amendment and the Ribicoff amendment. Then Senators will know that this matter cannot go through on a voice vote but that there will be a rollcall vote.

The Senator has a chance to modify his amendment, and I did not object to that. He has another modification at the desk, and I have no objection to that. But since he has modified it I would like to ask for the yeas and nays on the two amendments tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES). The Chair will instruct the Senator that he cannot request the yeas and nays on the Scott amendment without unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Delaware so that he may request unanimous consent that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays on the Scott amendment?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I personally have no objection. I just want to make my position clear while the majority leader is here. I personally am satisfied with the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment as it stands. The majority and minority leaders asked us to try to work out as many as possible of the controversies. One of the controversies, of course, is that there are certain Senators who would like to amend the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, and under the parliamentary situation this cannot be done. I happen to think it is a good, acceptable amendment as it is, and the only reason that I objected to it was out of consideration for other Senators.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I appreciate the Senator's position, but under the position that we are put in from a parliamentary standpoint and under the rules of the Senate it is not subject to an amendment.

That could mean that 99 Members of the Senate agreeing on an amendment could not get the amendment adopted unless the Senator from Connecticut approved. He is the only man out of the 100 who would have the right to amend this pending amendment. He could listen to the debate and amend it to his own satisfaction, but not the satisfaction of all others.

Mr. President, I do not wish to proceed with that power in the hands of any one Senator or in any one place. I tried hard to get this situation to where we could have the right to amend; but having failed I just want us to vote it up or down, and then we can offer amendments. Therefore, I would ask the Senator's permission to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GOODELL. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor. The Senate will be in order. Objection is heard to the request of the Senator from Delaware, and the Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. It does not require unanimous consent, Mr. President.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York withhold his objection briefly?

Mr. GOODELL. I withhold my objection.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield without yielding his right to the floor, so that I may explain my position?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. My position is that I have no objection, personally, to the yeas and nays on the Scott amendment, because, having introduced it in the form it is, I have not been advised of the desire to modify it. Some Senators may be for it and some against it, but no one has asked to modify it, and under those circumstances, if it will expedite the proceedings, I have no objection to the yeas and nays.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I object to the Senator yielding for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That request will be made again later tonight.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The administrative inefficiencies and redtape associated with welfare programs are notorious. Individual States and localities must develop budgets of need with required close investigation of the economic status of each family. However, these standards are often unrelated to actual State payments and complicated formula, using ratable reductions and maximum payments, are necessary to calculate the final benefits payable to each eligible family. Tiny, but complex adjustments are made to reflect changes in the composition of the family, the ages of its members, its changing economic status, or as special emergencies occur. The resulting paperwork overwhelms the administrative structure. The organization is fraught with error and is largely incomprehensible to recipients and the public alike.

The major defect of AFDC however, which makes it impossible to reform by simply adding national standards or greater administrative efficiencies, is its categorical restriction of eligibility. AFDC does not provide assistance to those families headed by a full-time working man.

The assumption on which AFDC rests—that the income of full-time workers is by definition adequate—is simply not valid for large numbers of families. In 1968, 39 percent of the poor families with children in this country were headed by full-time workers. Their poverty is seldom the result of a defect of character or a failure to try. It is rather the result of the inescapable fact that large numbers of jobs, for a variety of economic reasons, just do not pay an adequate wage—especially for persons with large families.

As a result of this inadequate and inefficient system, welfare has become a costly shambles. Costs and caseloads under AFDC increased by almost 30 percent from June 1969 to June 1970.

The lack of incentives to work and maintain the family structure have meant that the number of children in families with female heads only under AFDC have more than doubled in 10 years.

The facts are very clear. Welfare in the United States has already become a national disgrace.

THE FINANCE COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

It is regrettable that in the face of such chaos a majority of the Finance Committee has chosen not to come to grips with meaningful welfare reform legislation.

I share the view of the committee that far reaching and innovative social legislation should be tested thoroughly before implementation on a nationwide basis.

But, testing alone in a time of urgent need is not enough.

In August, 1969, the President outlined reform legislation which, while not perfect, would take several significant and constructive steps toward a strong welfare system.

The House of Representatives passed legislation embodying the basic principles of the President's proposal—the family assistance plan.

After many weeks of hearings, however, the Senate Finance Committee regrettably refused to consider this plan in detail and substituted an amendment calling merely for 2 years of tests.

Clearly, passage of a 2-year test program requiring more legislation at the end of that test period means no welfare reform until 1974 or beyond. Reform is much more urgent than that.

The proposal Senator BENNETT and I intend to make provides for extensive testing in the period between enactment and the effective date of welfare reform. The most innovative proposal, to assist the working poor, would be tested in several areas for more than a year.

Extensive pretesting of this nature would provide more than adequate time to iron out the problems in organization and administration of family assistance. Furthermore, information gained from careful evaluation of existing working poor programs in six States would be readily available.

THE PRINCIPLES OF REFORM

Welfare is not a subject of interest only to the poor and the welfare worker. The measure of a whole society is taken from the adequacy, equity, and efficiency of its programs for the needy. Their progress is our progress.

The principles of adequate welfare are simple and paramount:

First, assurance to all members of society of an income adequate to meet their basic needs;

Second, incentives and opportunity for the employment of all citizens;

Third, encouragement and support of the basic family structure;

Fourth, a uniform system of national standards supported and financed by the Federal Government; and Fifth, simple and efficient administration dedicated to assisting rather than demeaning the poor.

We are a wealthy people. As the perquisites of citizenship have increased, so too have our responsibilities to our society and our fellow man. As a nation, we can no longer tolerate a system of public assistance which fails to meet the most basic principles of humanity.

THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

The basic principles of family assistance are designed to meet the problems now plaguing welfare. By assuring a minimum payment to all families in need, it is designed to provide uniform national standards and simplified administration.

Most impotrant, the program extends eligibility to those families who have been arbitrarily and unwisely excluded from assistance.

Family assistance will replace the 54 different State and territorial AFDC programs with a single program for families. It would also substitute a single integrated adult welfare system for the more than 150 different programs of aid to the aged, the blind and the disabled.

Americans are becomirg more mobile. Poverty and welfare are national problems requiring national solutions. Foremost in any such national solution must be an effort to assure that citizens who live in differeint States do not receive grossly different treatemnt at the hands of their governments. Family assistance establishes minimum support levels: $1,600 per year—plus about $860 in food stamps—for a family of four, for citizens in all States.

Family assistance insures the provision of a minimum benefit by full Federal financing of that portion of the payment. In addition, the States, assisted by 30-percent Federal matching up to the poverty line, can then assure more adequate total benefits by supplementing the minimum payment.

Nationwide uniform eligibility rules will make possible another vital reform: simplification and streamlining of the notorious welfare paperwork and administrative morass. Family assistance terminates the present practice of basing benefits on minute investigations and computations of family budgets. Eligibility for aid would be determined on a simplified basis, which would include cross-checks of earnings data and a sampling of recipients' reports as protection for the system.

INCLUSION OF THE WORKING POOR

The most important advance proposed by this amendment is the extension of public assistance eligibility to the working poor. This innovative step is supported by several powerful arguments.

First, coverage of the working poor eliminates one of the major inequities in present laws. If we are to require recipients to work, we cannot then make them worse off financially than if they did not work.

Second, aid to the working poor promotes a consistent set of work incentives for the entire program. Recipients will always be better off by working more.

Third, coverage of the working poor is an effective means of combating poverty. Four out of ten poor Americans live in families headed by a full-time worker. Family assistance will move 2 million Americans over the poverty line.

WORK REQUIREMENT AND INCENTIVES

The Ribicoff-Bennett amendment takes a major step to increase work incentives for welfare recipients. To make these incentives increasingly effective there is included a major manpower training and child care program with over $600 million in additional funding; $150 million is required to be spent on a strong program of public service employment.

Recipients under family assistance will be required to register for and accept jobs or work training in order to receive FAP benefits. Benefit levels will be decreased by $500 per famly for a failure to register.

THE REVISED FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

The latest administration revision of family assistance was submitted in October to the Senate Finance Committee. While this was a strong program—there were a number of changes which I felt were necessary to improve the legislation before it was presented to the full Senate. I made these suggestions both in a formal letter to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and in informal conversations. Most of these improvements are contained in the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment.

A NATIONAL GOAL

Today, one in every eight Americans is poor. In the wealthiest nation in history, our poor outnumber the total population of Canada. More than a third of our poor are children. Many of the rest are ill, disabled or elderly.

These people are tragic evidence of our neglect, and lack of commitment to end poverty.

Our growing national affluence has not been fully shared. In a future which promises greater riches, for many, but continued poverty for some, we have, in the words of the President's Commission on Income Maintenance Programs, "the potential for social division unparalleled in our country."

Our failure has been a failure of commitment rather than resources. We have the means to end poverty. Let us resolve to do so.

As a beginning step, Congress must establish a national goal to end poverty in this decade.

UNEMPLOYED PARENT PROGRAM

As passed by the House of Representatives, H.R. 16311 provided for mandatory State supplementation—with Federal sharing—of families headed by an unemployed father—AFDC–UP. Under present law, this is an optional program which exists in 23 States.

In the administration revisions of H.R. 16311, this mandatory AFDC–UP has been deleted.

I strongly support inclusion of this program—as provided by the House of Representatives and the original administration proposal. Restoration of this provision would benefit some 90,000 families, or more than 300,000 poor people.

RESTORATION OF THE REQUIREMENTS IN SECTION 452 OF H.R. 16311 FOR USING "STANDARD OF NEED" FOR FAMILIES WITH INCOME

In August 1969, the President, in his welfare address to the Nation, strongly supported the principle that no recipient would be worse off under his proposal than under existing law. Unfortunately, a subsequent revision of H.R. 16311 would adversely affect families with outside income in 22 States by reducing State supplements. Restoration of the standard-of-need provision in section 452 will remedy this unwise provision.

MINIMUM WAGE LEVELS FOR WELFARE RECIPIENTS TAKING EMPLOYMENT

A universally recognized objective of welfare reform, clearly stated in the President's welfare message, is the great need to move the poor from relief rolls to payrolls. Legisation toward this laudable goal, however, must not sacrifice very basic objections to providing a ready-made pool of forced labor for employers paying substandard wages.

Substandard wages perpetuate poverty. At $1 an hour, a fully employed husband and father of two children falls almost $2,000 below the barest minimum income required for his family.

Therefore, I propose that provisions be added to this reform legislation stipulating that welfare recipients required to accept work be paid a reasonable wage, preferably the basic minimum wage of $1.60 an hour. The Ribicoff-Bennett proposal takes a bajor step in this direction by guaranteeing wages of at least $1.20 an hour.

ADEQUATE SAFEGUARDS FOR STATE AND LOCAL EMPLOYEES ASSIMILATED UNDER FEDERAL PROGRAMS

There must be assurances that State and local welfare employees, who would be encompassed by the new Federal program, are treated fairly with respect to their seniority, salary, and pension rights earned under their previous employers.

FEDERAL ADMINISTRATION OF FULLY FEDERALLY FINANCED WELFARE PROGRAMS

Welfare reform must reduce the major inequities and complexities that result from over 50 different welfare systems with their varied forms, requirements, and regulations. In many States today, the system is operated by three separate levels of government: Federal, State, and local. The redtape, inequities, and sheer complexities of these arrangements must be reduced.

Therefore, I propose that reform legislation include a provision for mandatory Federal administration of all welfare programs which are 100 percent funded by Federal money. This provision will be a major step toward our goal of universally applied standards for all recipients.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT

The major goal of any public assistance program should be the provision of adequate employment opportunities permitting recipients to supplement and eventually replace welfare payments by earned wages.

Regrettably, the original family assistance plan presented to Congress contained not a single job opportunity.

Senator HARRIS and I have suggested an amendment establishing a strong program of public service employment. Such an amendment would complement the training provisions already suggested above by assuring a greater number of jobs at the end of the training cycle.

Therefore, I propose a public service employment program for recipients of FAP benefits or State supplementation.

Under the amendment, the Secretary of Labor would enter into grants or contracts with public or private nonprofit agencies to create jobs in a wide variety of enumerated fields of benefit to the public.

Special provisions were designed to assure that such jobs are not dead-end jobs and that they offer opportunities for career advancement. The Secretary of Labor is required to review each employment record at least once every 6 months.

The jobs provided must meet standards with regard to health, safety, and working conditions, not jeopardize existing employment, and otherwise conform to certain protections. Wages paid must at least equal the Federal minimum wage or, if higher, any applicable State or local minimum wage or the prevailing wage for such jobs in the same labor market area.

In order to encourage movement by participating individuals into regular jobs and to insure that these jobs involve the performance of useful work, provision is made for declining Federal matching over time. Ninety percent matching is provided for the first 24 months during which such employment is provided, and 80 percent thereafter.

The Secretary of Labor is obligated to expend at least $150 million annually on such public service jobs. The funds may come from appropriations pursuant to part C of title IV of the Social Security Act or from any other funds available to the Secretary of the Department of Labor under other acts.

WORK REQUIREMENTS FOR MOTHERS OF SCHOOL-AGE CHILDREN

In 1967, the Senate recognized the inherent social difficulties of forcing mothers of school-age children to accept employment. At that time, the Senate passed an amendment which exempted mothers of school-age children from required employment during the hours children are home from school.

The most cursory examination of history shows that the victims of legislation forcing mothers to work are the children of those mothers. Our own national traditions are based on the belief that the best interests of the child are best protected by its mother. The decision whether to accept employment while the child remains at home should be left solely with the mother.

While not exempting mothers of school-age children from work, the proposal of Senator BENNETT and myself will guarantee that mothers of these children will only be required to work if adequate child care facilities are available. In actual fact, the work priorities practically assure that these mothers of school-age children will not be affected by work requirements.

ADDITIONAL SAFEGUARDS FOR THE LEGAL RIGHTS OF WELFARE RECIPIENTS

The administration's family assistance legislation provided for a marked and regressive change affecting the legal rights of welfare recipients by requiring that stepfathers assume legal responsibility for their stepchildren. Most States do not impose an obligation of support on a stepfather. Generally, our federal system has left matters of domestic relations laws to the wisdom of the States. Thus, the effect of the original FAP provision was to impose a discriminatory obligiation of the stepfathers or poor families.

STATE SAVINGS AND ADULT CATEGORIES

In addition to these provisions, two other provisions of the amendment are of utmost importance.

ADULT CATEGORIES

Senator BENNETT and I propose to assure minimum payments to the aged, blind and disabled of $130 a month for an individual and $230 a month for a couple. This provision will increase payments to approximately 1.5 million recipients. For an individual old-age recipient, the amendment would increase payment levels in 31 States; for a couple, and it would increase payments in 47 States.

In addition, our amendment retains the uniform eligibility rules for all recipients under the adult categories. This provision extends the simplified administration concept proposed under the family assistance plan.

The amendment would also assure an individual aged, blind or disabled person an income equal to more than 80 percent of the poverty level. For couples the minimum income would be in excess of the poverty level.

STATE FISCAL RELIEF

Almost every State in the Union is facing a financial crisis over rising welfare costs. Under the proposal of Senator BENNETT and I, each State would have the benefit of a virtual freeze on increased welfare expenditures. The freeze would be based on 90 percent of the State expenditures incurred in calendar year 1971. For the first year of operation, our program would provide over $400 million in direct State savings. In succeeding years these savings would increase in direct proportion to the expected increase in expenditures now expected under present laws. At the present time these costs are escalating by 30 percent a year.

I ask unanimous consent that the following table showing State savings be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE SAVINGS UNDER FAMILY ASSISTANCE WITH 90-PERCENT FREEZE ON STATE EXPENDITURES

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I also want to say a word about other committee amendments to the present welfare laws.

As I have pointed out, I believe these amendments to be entirely inadequate. Furthermore, many of them are actually detrimental to the present chaotic program. I shall briefly mention four of these amendments.

USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO SUPPORT THE LEGAL PROCESS

The first of the committee amendments prohibits the use of Federal funds to pay directly or indirectly the salary of any individual who participates in legal actions designed to interpret or test federal legislation.

This is a particularly unwise provision in a time when it has become of paramount importance to stress the need for settling differences within rather than without our institutions.

No Federal legislation should be immune from established and recognized judicial scrutiny. In our adversary system of justice, this scrutiny is best developed by legal actions originated by the parties in interest. Powerful corporations are fully entitled, in our system, to test laws in courts and deduct the costs of legal representation. In many cases, the only advocates for the poor are community legal services personnel who, by a conscious policy decision of Congress, are often supported by Federal funds. To deny these funds is to deny the right of effective advocacy to a large segment of our society.

American justice is based on the theory that all citizens are equal before the law. By denying effective representation in cases involving laws most directly affecting the immediate lifestyle of the poor, equality of rich and poor before the law becomes a myth.

MAN IN THE HOUSE

In addition, the committee has resurrected a provision permitting States to deny AFDC benefits to children in families where a man may be occasionally present, even though he has no legal duty to support the child.

In 1968, the Supreme Court struck down a similar "man in the house" provision on the ground that an unrelated adult in the home has no legal obligation to support the child, and, therefore, the child may be eligible for AFDC.

The committee's amendment set forth a long list of criteria by which a parental-type relationship could be established and the man be held responsible financially for the child.

In addition to the unrealistic burdens this would place on welfare administration, the provision would penalize the children for the conduct of the mother.

An unrelated man who visits a child's mother, no matter how regularly, cannot be relied upon to provide a meaningful parent-child relationship. If he does make financial contributions, these are counted in determining the family's benefits now.

RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS

In 1969, the Court declared durational residence requirements unconstitutional because they interfere with the right to travel.

The committee has sought to reestablish residence requirements, requiring that a recipient only receive payments equal to the benefit level of the State from which he moved.

Whether this provision would correct the constitutional defect cannot be predicted, but it certainly would create inequities between residents of the same State. It would penalize new arrivals who were not previously on welfare but come to require it in the State to which they move, and would restrict the mobility of the poor who wish to seek better economic opportunity in a different State.

DEFINITION OF AN UNEMPLOYED PARENT

Present law authorizes a program, at State option to support families in which the father is unemployed. This program is now operational in 22 States. In its regulations, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has defined "unemployed" to mean less than 30 and in some cases 35 hours of work per week.

The committee amendment defining unemployment to mean less than 10 hours a week or 80 hours a month, is far too restrictive, and, in effect, defeats the purpose of the unemployed father program—AFDC–UP. It is hard to conceive that a man working 12 hours a week is fully employed. More to the point, it is unrealistic to expect that the wages of a few hours of work a week can adequately support a family. A more reasonable definition of employment will provide greater incentives for the partially employed to continue and improve their work skills.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excellent article by James Welsh on the family assistance plan which appeared in the Sunday Star and an explanation of the benefits accruing to the States under this plan.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star, Dec. 13, 1970]

NIXON'S WELFARE REFORM PLAN IS ON LEGISLATIVE ROPES

(By James Welsh)

The Robertsons—father, mother and eight children—live in a weather beaten frame house on a farm near Rocky Mount, N.C.

By anyone's standards they are poor. They are also what the academics and the bureaucrats like to call an "intact family."

Among other things, this means that the father, James Robertson, lives at home and works to support his wife and children. It also means the family is entitled to no public assistance except for food stamps.

President Nixon's Family Assistance Plan, now facing a final showdown in the Senate, would change all that. Were the plan approved, James Robertson, beginning in 1972, would command more cash income than he has ever before seen in his life.

Robertson, a burly man in his early 40s, is a farm laborer. He lives rent free but owns none of the land on the farm where he works.

"WORKING POOR" FAMILY

During the non-growing season, from October until spring, Robertson is lucky to get three days work a week at about $8 a day wages. Then the work pace picks up, and in August and September, when the tobacco crop is ripening, Robertson is working 10-hour days, and his wife and their oldest boy, James Henry, are in the fields, too.

When the crop is sold, Robertson is due enough money to square away a year's accumulated indebtedness to his "boss man," with perhaps a few hundred dollars left over. For 1970, the family's income can be calculated at $2,688.

Under the Family Assistance Plan, the Robertsons would qualify as a "working poor" family. They would be expected to continue working but would also qualify for a large subsidy. Because of the size of the family and because of its low earnings through much of the year, that subsidy would amount to about $2,400 in cash, virtually doubling the family's income.

But the Robertsons probably will see none of that government money right now anyway. The Family Assistance Plan, alternately called the welfare-reform bill, is on the legislative ropes.

The measure has run a bizarre and tortuous course over the year, passing the House by a surprising margin only to run afoul of both conservatives and liberals in the unpredictable, stubbornly independent Senate Finance Committee.

FACES MANY OBSTACLES

After months of wrestling with it, the committee rejected the plan. It approved only a tiny test of its concepts and last week tied that test provision to a complicated bill dealing with Social Security and trade restrictions.

If the full Family Assistance Plan to pass the Senate and then a House-Senate conference committee, it must survive a parliamentary obstacle course and the temper of tired congressmen who want to go home.

Yet its champions continue to work for it. They hold to the hope that somehow it will be enacted into law this year.

It is a plan with trail-blazing promise but vast uncertainties, a proposal of such scope as to aim at new controversial ways of dealing with all of America's poor, the millions of the poor who work and growing millions who depend on welfare.

As such, it bears directly on problems as diverse as family breakup and the fiscal crisis of state and local governments. And it goes to the heart of the gut philosophical issues:

Who in our society should be required to work, and who should be exempted from work? What are the rights of the poor, and what are their responsibilities, and by how much should they share in the nation's wealth?

President Nixon has called the plan the centerpiece of his domestic strategy. On Friday he told a group of governors he may call a post-Christmas special session of Congress if it fails to pass the legislation.

The issue won't die, that's sure. If for no other reason than state and county governments, burdened by soaring welfare and medicaid costs, are screaming for the kind of fiscal relief the bill would bring, the 92nd Congress almost certainly will face the problem all over again if it isn't solved this year.

For the short term, failure of the 1970 Family Assistance Plan will bring bitter political recriminations, the White House blaming liberals, the liberals blasting the President and Congress.

TWO LARGE SEGMENTS

But if an epitaph must be written for the 1970 legislation, it might boil down to a simple, two-part proposition:

Nearly all the people who would benefit directly from the Family Assistance Plan don't know anything about it; most of the people who know all about it are scared to death of it.

To sort this out, it must be remembered that the plan deals quite differently with the two large, distinct segments of America's poverty population—those who work and now get no benefits, and those who get welfare but do no work.

Nearly all the emotionalism of the debate over the legislation centers on the welfare poor. Nearly all the tangible benefits of the plan, though, would go to the working poor.

Consider, first, the working poor, and once again James Robertson. He has heard of the Family Assistance Plan, but barely.

One day last week, waiting to purchase food stamps in the social services office of the Nash County, N.C., courthouse, he told a visitor:

"Yes, I think I did hear something on the radio about that," he said. "But I don't really know what it would do."

He had no idea it might bring him $2,400 a year. He was surprised to hear of the plan's single revolutionary premise—cash benefits going to a poor family without that family first going into a welfare category of no-work dependency.

Other people in the courthouse that afternoon, all potential recipients under the plan, were similarly ignorant or vague about the plan's provisions.

At least 5,000 low-income families live in Nash County—working intact families not now on welfare, who would average close to $1,000 apiece each year under the plan.

North Carolina is home to an estimated 119,000 working-poor families. Close to one million such families live in the South, more than half of them white. The national total is 1.8 million families, representing 10.8 million men, women and children. Under the Family Assistance Plan, these people would be eligible to share $1.3 billion in income supplements.

Seldom have so many people who stand to benefit by so much had so little awareness of it.

Mitchell Ginzberg, former welfare commissioner of New York City, now a trouble-shooter for Mayor John V. Lindsay and one of a small group that has lobbied over the months for the bill, put it this way:

"Can you imagine the kind of pressure that would build up if this kind of money were available under any other program? But the poor, especially the working poor, are not an organized constituency. Nobody speaks for the working poor."

The legislation's unprecedented provision for subsidizing the working poor finds nearly all its opposition among conservatives.

CONSERVATIVE OPPOSITION

Some are attracted by the concept but are leery of the numbers involved—those 1.8 million working-poor families and billion-dollar-plus cost. Others reject the concept outright, looking on these supplements as just more welfare. Still others aren't so much frightened at what would happen immediately as what would happen later when the pressure grows to push assistance payments ever upwards.

"For all the defects of the present system, the mind of man is always capable of devising something worse," said Sen. Russell Long in a wry moment last summer.

In the South, coolness to the plan runs deep. Politicians, farmers and business know very well the plan will affect far more than the pocketbooks of that region's poor whites and blacks.

"This program, if it were to pass," said Robert Patrocelli, deputy assistant secretary of HEW, "would be the most important civil rights advance in the last 15 years. It's the kind of civil rights that comes from money in the pocket."

Liberals might question that, but many Southern conservatives believe it. And they don't like it.

Another factor is the enormous impact the plan would have on the Southern economy.

Hundreds of millions of dollars in new purchasing power would pour in, a seemingly attractive feature for Southern businessmen. But the Southern economy, even in the parts of the region booming with new industry, is also reliant to a great extent on cheap labor.

Nash County, N.C., where James Robertson lives, is representative of the new South. In the last ten years, it has seen its industrial employment go up 50 percent, its per capita income almost double.

But plenty of farms remain, with plenty of share-croppers, tenants and laboring families. The cucumbers must be picked in the spring, the tobacco harvested and processed in the summer and fall. And there are shirts to be pressed.

"All I hear sometimes is who's going to press the shirts," said James Glover, the county's welfare director, possibly the only man in Nash County who is for the Family Assistance Plan.

Would the working poor work less hard or quit altogether if their earnings were supplemented.

Most students of poverty and the assistance plan think not. They are thinking mostly of the people who would have steady jobs and probably would go right on doing those jobs.

But for those who work at the lowest and most irregular jobs, the domestics and the farm laborers, the consequences could be unpredictable.

James Robertson said he'd go right on working at the farm. "I know I would," he added. Another farm laborer, younger, said the assistance payments might lead him to get off the farm and try a steadier job. A third, older, said he's been thinking about leaving to make more money. But he likes the farm, and cash from the government would enable him to stay.

But the third man's boss, farmer C. E. Bell, sees nothing good about family assistance.

New York's Ginzberg tells the story of going to Utah recently to speak on welfare reform to a group of western state legislators. After he described how the Family Assistance Plan would help the working poor, one legislator arose to say:

"Mr. Ginzberg, we're not interested in how many more people will get welfare. We're interested in how many we can get off welfare."

It is a feeling shared by countless Americans.

The welfare rolls are rising at a staggering rate.

At HEW, new figures now beginning to circulate show a one-month increase, August to September, of 214,000 people in the category of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC). That's exactly the increase of the month before, July to August, which was the highest in history.

At present rates, relief rolls across the country are growing at 2.5 million men, women and children a year—more than the nation's annual populaiton increase.

It is a nationwide phenomenon but with extremes to be found not in places like North Carolina but in the large urban centers.

In Los Angeles County, Calif., for instance, one person in every nine is on welfare.

Marvin Friedman, the county's assistant welfare director who was in Washington last week to urge passage of the Family Assistance Plan, talked of the impact on local finances, a $50 million boost in county spending on welfare this year, a property tax rate going up by nearly $1 for every $100 of assessed valuation.

"The reaction is fierce," he said. "The whole thing is a polarizing influence, and it's getting worse. The pressure is on our county supervisors to do something. But we're in a box."

There is evidence that great numbers of the welfare-poor also feel boxed in, their payments often inadequate to live decently and the hard-pressed states searching for ways to keep these benefits down.

It's because of such dilemmas that people use strong language to condemn the existing system. "A huge monster," President Nixon called it. "A godawful mess," was HEW Secretary Richardson's phrase.

The question is whether the Family Assistance Plan will do what the western legislator wants: get people off welfare.

If that's taken to mean putting a large portion of the welfare population to work, the answer is no.

The legislation treats people on welfare this way:

For the first time, it sets a minimum income floor to apply nationally. For a family of four with no earnings, that payment would be $1,600, paid entirely by the federal government. For every extra child, it goes up $300.

This income minimum, is also the base from which the working-poor supplements are computed. A family of four, for instance, can earn $720 a year and still get the $1,600 supplement. For every dollar it earns after that, the supplement goes down 50 cents.

SUPPLEMENTAL FUNDS

For most families on Welfare, the plan means nothing in the way of new income. The exception would come in the deep South and Puerto Rico, where welfare payment levels fall below the $1,600 line for a family of four (Mississippi now pays such a family $840 a year). In these states, about 217,000 welfare families would get a boost in income.

In the majority of states, where welfare payments are higher than the $1,600 level, the bill requires the state governments to supplement the federal payment to existing levels. Welfare families would get no more, no less than they now get, and the attraction to the states is the bill's promise that the federal government would pay all the add-on costs past 1971.

The bill also stipulates a strong work requirement.

To be eligible for payment, able-bodied adults would have to register for work or training. Mothers of pre-school children would be given the option of staying home. Where the children are old enough to go to school, the work requirement applies.

Should this last group of welfare mothers be required to work?

No, says the National Welfare Rights Organization. The requirement is punitive. Mothers should be able to stay with their children if they think that best.

Yes, says the administration. The requirement is conditional on child-care facilities being set up. Besides, 70 percent of the non-welfare women in similar circumstances—with school-age children but no husband—hold jobs.

But just how many welfare recipients can be expected to work. On this point, there also is often more heat than light.

In September, the latest month for which HEW has records, 11.9 million people were in the four federally aided welfare categories (another 900,000 are on general assistance paid entirely by the states).

Of those 11.9 million, subtract 2 million old people, 80,500 blind and 910,000 disabled. These are the non-controversial categories, their numbers showing little or no increase.

The 8.8 million people left are in the AFDC program. It accounts for nearly all the caseload growth and all the controversy.

Subtract another 6.5 million. They are the AFDC children.

Of the 2.4 million adults in the program, 413,000 are fathers. Most are judged incapacitated. But 105,000 of these fathers are able-bodied and jobless, their families made eligible for welfare in 23 states that have unemployed-father programs.

Of nearly 2 million welfare mothers, 302,000 are now working full or part-time. Many do so under relatively recent provisions of the law enabling welfare mothers to earn money and still draw benefits. Before lowering these benefits, the states disregard the first $30 a month the woman makes, plus one-third of what else she earns, plus work-related and child-care expenses.

Another 134,000 mothers are in work-training or waiting for enrollment to train under what is called the WIN program.

That leaves 1.7 million unemployed AFDC mothers. But HEW calculates that nearly 60 percent of these mothers have pre-school children, exempting them from work registration. Of the rest, because of health, education and other factors, HEW believes only about 50 percent are truly employable.

And so of 12 million welfare recipients, those who can be expected to work—the unemployed fathers and the employable mothers of school-age children—total about 500,000.

But even with these people, problems remain. Every survey shows that a large majority of welfare mothers want to work. But they face big barriers. Health is a frequent one. Child care is another. Transportation is a third.

The Nixon legislation includes, in its $4 billion price tag, $66 million for work training and child care programs. Yet as New York City's Ginzberg points out, these will not come along easily. Child care programs are particularly difficult and costly to establish.

"We should face the fact," said Ginzberg, "that not all that many people will come off welfare into jobs. What we can hope for is that the Family Assistance Plan may help keep people from going on welfare, from becoming dependent."

But no one knows to what exetent the plan will do that.

Ginzberg's reasoning and hope are based in part on a belief shared by Presidential Counsellor Daniel P. Moynihan and others that money going to working-poor families can help reduce the kind of family breakup—desertion, divorce, separation—that leads to dependency.

But men like Ginzberg and Moynihan concede there is too little information on the characteristics of the army of mothers who in the last year have entered the AFDC rolls. No one is able to say, for intsance, how many came out of the ranks of the working-poor intact families and how many were never there at all.

Much of the controversy over welfare and attempts to reform continue to turn on "workfare."

It may be significant that under the Family Assistance Plan the Labor Department would be responsible for administering the work-registration and work-requirement provisions. Heretofore, under WIN and similar programs, welfare recipients came to employment agencies only through referral by welfare case workers.

"This should help," said Los Angeles County's Friedman. "It will eliminate an awful lot of bureaucratic paper shuffling. Besides, if someone loses a job, why the hell shouldn't he apply for a job rather than welfare?"

At the Labor Department, top officials are aware that, as Assistant Secretary Jerry Rosow put it, "If this program passes, the monkey's going to be on our back, not anyone else's. We won't be able to blame the welfare workers anymore."

SEES FULL EMPLOYMENT

Rosow rejects the argument that the work requirement is inconsistent with today's tight labor market. "By 1972," he said confidently, "we'll be back up to full employment."

Asked how many welfare clients he reasonably sees going to work, Rosow replied:

"If we can get about 100,000 to 200,000 people to work in first year or two, we'll considered it a success. I refuse to set up a long-range goal."

If conservative critics of the Family Assistance Plan find these figures unimpressive, they also continue to ask why this kind of reform effort has to be accompanied by payments to the working poor.

The justifications for tying the two together are complex, just as the plan itself is complex.

"I think it comes down to this," said Mrs. Alice Rivlin, one of the plan's designers, now at the Brookings Institution. "Payments to welfare families are inadequate. But it's very difficult to justify raising those payments because so many working people are paid less than that. The more welfare payments go up the greater the disparity, and the lower the incentive to go to work."

Supporters of family assistance believe it is a breakthrough on this dilemma, at least a start. It would put an income-floor under all families and say to them: Here is an incentive to work; the more you earn, the more you keep.

It isn't all that simple, of course. The plan's designers worked under several restrictions. It was prescribed that no family on welfare would get less than it is now getting, that the states should be given fiscal relief, and that the federal price tag go up by no more than $4 billion.

Within those limits, the designers were able to knock out nearly all the present system's inequities and "disincentives," the kind that sees a man with a full-time job worse off than a man keeping only a part-time job supplemented by welfare, or the kind that makes it possible for a woman to quit a full-time job, go on welfare, go back to some kind of work and, between welfare benefits and earnings, do far better than the working-poor mother.

But they were not able to build in the kind of positive monetary work incentives the conservatives on the Senate Finance Committee wanted. Time and again, told to make it more attractive for welfare families to work, HEW officials came back to say that was impossible within the $4 billion framework of the plan. It was a mathematical taffypull that no one could win.

Meanwhile, conservative resistance hardened. Some of the liberal groups, chiefly John Gardner's Common Cause, went to work for the bill. But other liberals, fearing to get too far away from George Wiley and his welfare mothers, continued to both damn and praise. The President, for his part, turned to talk of getting the welfare bums to work.

Time ran on, and now it is nearly out.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the impact on the States of the revised family assistance plan.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE IMPACT ON THE STATES OF THE REVISED FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN—THE RIBICOFF-BENNETT AMENDMENT

1. In the first year of the program, each State would have to spend only 90 percent of what it spent in CY 1971 on welfare. This would be a flat ceiling. Thereafter, the State's obligation would increase only by an amount equal to the increase in the Consumer Price Index between 1971 and the year in question.

This means that from now on every State would know the dollar limits of its welfare burden, and could budget and set tax policies accordingly. The effect of placing this ceiling on State welfare costs is to transfer to the Federal Government the entire cost of caseload increases, which is the biggest element in soaring welfare budgets.

Quite beyond the cost ceiling involved in this amendment, each State would actually have positive fiscal relief of 10 percent of its 1971 welfare expenditures in the first year of operation of the new program. This is money saved.

2. If any State voluntarily increased its benefit levels in the future, it would receive 30 percent Federal matching, up to the poverty line, for the family (AFDC) category, and 25 percent matching in the adult (aged blind, disabled) category.

3. States are given major new options with regard to the administration of all income assistance programs, as follows:

a. If the State wants HEW to administer its program of State supplemention and adult category assistance, it will do so with the Federal Government paying full administrative costs. This produces major further savings for the States by eliminating present administrative costs—a possible total saving of about $100 million.

b. Further, the States may transfer to the Federal Government the administration of remaining income transfer programs, including general assistance, food stamps, and Medicaid and surplus commodity eligibility determinations. In these cases, the State would pay only one-half of extra costs to the Federal Government of assuming these administrative functions, which costs should generally be quite small since HEW would already have most of the needed information on file for welfare purposes.

4. Major amounts of additional Federal money would go to new working poor recipients in each State, thereby stimulating economic conditions.

5. Major increases, over $750 million in the first full year, are provided for expanded job training, public service employment, and child care programs, with increases over the current Federal matching shares in both the manpower and child care efforts.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter on the White House stationery dated December 17, 1970, signed by Daniel P. Moynihan, Counsel for the President.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 17, 1970.

Hon. ABRAHAM RIBICOFF,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR RIBICOFF: In the aftermath of the President's veto yesterday of the Comprehensive Manpower Act, questions have been raised about the Administration's commitment to earmark $150 million of Department of Labor funds for public service job programs for Family Assistance recipients.

That commitment by the Administration remains fully in effect and will be honored if the amendment is enacted. If there is any imprecision in the text of your amendment as to whether this earmarking provision can stand alone, without passage of the Comprehensive Manpower Act, we would accept a clarifying change. Specifically, we would support deletion of the words "for public service employment programs or other similar activities," which appear on page 54, lines 20–21, of the Family Assistance bill (amendment no. 1097 to H.R. 17550) to make clear that the earmark applies to all Department of Labor funds, without regard to the source of their legislative authorization or the passage of the Comprehensive Manpower Act.

We are grateful for your strong and continued support on this critical legislation.

Respectfully,

DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
Counsellor to the President.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief description of the family assistance proposal as offered in amendment to H.R. 17550.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE PROPOSAL AS OFFERED IN AMENDMENT TO H.R. 17550

I. FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

A. Eligibility for the new family assistance benefit

Each family with children whose includable income (for definition of excluded income see below) is less than the family benefit level—computed as $500 each for the first two members of the family and $300 for each additional member—would be eligible for a family assistance benefit. The amount of the benefit would be the difference between these amounts and the non-excludable income. For example, a family of four with no income would be eligible for a benefit of $1,600. Every low income family with children, including those now eligible under Aid for Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and those not now eligible because an employable father is present (the working poor), would be eligible.

In determining income for the purpose of establishing eligibility for and the amount of the benefit, the following types and amounts of income would be entirely excluded:

(1) all earned income of adult members of the family at the rate of $60 per month plus ⅓ of the remainder (the so-called earnings incentive or disregard);

(2) food stamps and other public or private charity;

(3) allowances paid to those in job training;

(4) the tuition portion of scholarships and fellowships.

Subject to certain limitations prescribed by the Secretary of HEW, the following types and amounts of income would also be excludable:

(5) all earnings of a child under age 21 and attending school;

(6) infrequently earned or small amounts of income;

(7) earnings needed to pay for necessary child care.

Remaining earned income and all unearned income (not otherwise excluded above) would be counted and would therefore result in a dollar-for-dollar reduction in family assistance payments. Such non-excludable income includes social security, civil service, and railroad retirement benefits; veterans compensation and pensions; farm price support payments and soil bank payments; alimony and child support payments; and interest, rent, dividends and so on.

A family with more than $1,500 in resources, other than the home, household goods, personal effects, and property essential to the family's means of self-support, would not be eligible for family assistance benefits.

B. Definitions of family and child

An eligible family must consist of two or more people related by blood, marriage or adoption and living together in the United States, at least one of whom is a dependent child (under age 18 or under 21 if attending school). The Secretary would apply State law in determining family relationships.

C. Registration with public employment service

Each member of a family found to be eligible for family assistance benefits would be required to register with a public employment office unless he or she is:

(1) unable to work because of illness, incapacity, or advanced age;

(2) a mother caring for a child under 6;

(3) the mother, if the father is already required to register;

(4) a person who is required to care for an ill member of the household; or

(5) a child who is either under the age of 16 or a student.

Any person who falls into one of the above exempt categories can still voluntarily register at the employment office.

If an individual required to register refused to do so or refused a suitable training or job opportunity without good cause, he would lose his eligibility for family assistance and State supplementary (see below) benefits. The family would continue to receive a reduced benefit, however.

A suitable job is defined in the bill as one taking into account an individual's health, safety, prior training and experience, distance to work, and other relevant factors. It must pay at least the Federal or State minimum wage if applicable, or the prevailing wage for jobs not covered by minimum wage legislation (a job would not be considered suitable if the prevailing wage is less than $1.20 per hour).

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is required to make sure that any necessary child care services are provided where an individual is registered and participating in training or employment.

II. STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFIT

Each State which has an AFDC payment level in November 1970 higher than the family assistance benefit must agree to supplement the family assistance benefit up to that previous payment level (or up to the poverty level, if lower). State supplemental payments would be required for families where at least one parent is absent, incapacitated, or unemployed—the current AFDC and AFDC–UF groups—but not for the working poor.

The family assistance eligibility rules—e.g., the $1,500 resources limitation, the definition of family and child, the excludable income provisions (other than those related to the earnings incentive)—would be made applicable to the State supplementary programs, thereby resulting for the first time in national welfare eligibility standards. The States would have to exclude the first $720 a year of earned income plus ⅓ of the earnings in excess of $720 as an earnings incentive.

The Federal government would provide 30 percent matching for the cost of making these required supplementary payments, but there would be no matching for supplementary payments which exceed the poverty line.

III. ADMINISTRATION

The bill provides for Federal administration of payments to those ineligible for State supplementation (the working poor), and of payments to all families in States where the November 1970 AFDC payment to a family of four with no other income is less than the family assistance payment. In other States, the State may opt for program administration of payments to families eligible for State supplements. However, if a State agrees to Federal administration of its supplemental program, the Federal share of the administrative costs would be increased from 50 percent to 100 percent. This would mean additional fiscal relief to the States choosing this option.

IV. WORK AND TRAINING PROGRAM

A. New program established

The existing Work Incentive Program would be repealed and a new program would be established to take its place. The Secretary of Labor would assure the development of an employability plan for each individual registered with the employment office under the family assistance program according to a system of priority categories.

The individuals would then receive the services and training called for under the plan. The Secretary of Labor is directed to earmark $150 million for public service jobs, to provide employment opportunities for recipients. Appropriations (no dollar amount specified) are authorized to meet 90% of the cost of the program. A total of $750 million in new training and day care funds would be made available for members of families eligible for FAP benefits.

B. Training allowances

Each person participating in the training program would receive an allowance of $30 a month, or the amount of the Manpower Development and Training Act allowance if higher for those enrolled in such programs, in addition to FAP and State payments. The Secretary would also provide allowances to cover the transportation and other costs associated with the training.

C. Child care and supportive services

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is authorized to make payments for up to 100 percent of the cost of projects for child care needed by parents participating in the work, training, or rehabilitation programs. States would be required to provide other supportive social services—such as vocational rehabilitation, health and counseling—needed to enable recipients to enter training and jobs, and the Federal government would pay 90 percent of the cost of such efforts.

V. AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

A. Federal standards and requirements

The present separate titles for programs for aid to the needy, aged, blind, and disabled are repealed and a new combined Federal-State program is established to cover essentially the same people. Under the new program, the States could not have any duration of residence or length of citizenship requirement, or have relative responsibility provisions.

The States would be required to (1) provide a payment sufficient to bring each single recipient's total income up to at least $130 a month ($230 for a couple), of, if higher, the standard now in effect, (2) follow the Secretary's definition of blindness and severe disability, and (3) use the Federal definition of allowable resources applicable to the family assistance program ($1,500 plus home, personal effects and income-producing property essential to the person's support). The establishment of the high minimum income standards for the aged, blind, and disabled is accompanied by the elimination of food stamp benefits for these recipients.

The earnings incentives for the disabled and aged have been increased, requiring the States to exclude the first $85 per month of earnings plus ½ of the rest for the severely disabled (the same provision which now exists for the blind), and the first $60 per month of earnings plus ½ of the rest for the aged (the same as the family assistance earnings disregard).

B. Federal matching provisions

The Federal government would pay 90 percent of the first $65 average payments made to eligible persons, and 25 percent of the remainder up to a limit to be set by the Secretary. The Federal government would also pay 50 percent of the administrative costs.

C. Administration

As under the family assistance plan, the Secretary could enter into an agreement with a State under which the Federal government would perform all or some of the functions involved in administering the program for the aged, blind, and disabled. If the State chooses to contract with the Secretary to have him assume these functions, the Federal government would pay for 100 percent of the administrative costs.

VI. OTHER PROVISIONS

A. State savings provision

Each State must spend 90%, but no more than 90%, of its actual calendar year 1971 expenditures for maintenance payments in carrying out the bill's provisions. (The CY 1971 base amount would be adjusted annually for cost of living increases.) Thus, required State spending in the new program's first full year would be 10% less than the prior year's expenditures.

B. Special provisions for Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands

Both the new family assistance and adult category programs apply in these jurisdictions, but all of the dollar figures in both programs (except the initial earnings disregard—i.e., the first $60 per month in family assistance) are to be modified (but only downward) by the same proportion that the per capita income of each bears to that in the State with the lowest per capital income. This will not reduce the amounts for Guam and the Virgin Islands, but will result in about a 40 percent reduction for Puerto Rico.

C. Pretests

The bill authorizes tests of the Family Assistance proposal to begin as soon as possible after January 1, 1971. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is directed to report on these tests to the President and to the Congress by March 1, 1972. Tests of a wage subsidy approach to welfare reform are also authorized by the bill.

D. Cost of living differentials in benefit levels

The Secretary is directed to study the cost of living differentials which prevail among different sections of the nation and develop a plan for varying Family Assistance benefits based on these differentials. He is required to report on his plan to the Congress by January 1, 1972.

E. Effective dates

The provisions of the bill would be effective on January 1, 1972, except for the working poor program, which would begin on July 1, 1972, and the child care provisions, which are effective immediately upon enactment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator asking for the yeas and nays on his amendment?

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is correct.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. RIBICOFF. And, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I retain the floor.

Mr. HANSEN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Senator retains his right to the floor and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment to the Scott amendment and the yeas and nays on the Scott amendment.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask that it be in order to order the yeas and nays on both amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and I ask unanimous consent that I retain the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MONTOYA). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I ask uanimous consent that the yeas and nays be ordered on both amendments.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Delaware and ask unanimous consent that I retain the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays be ordered on both amendments.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and I ask unanimous consent that I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Ribicoff-

Bennett amendment to the Scott amendment and the yeas and nays on the Scott amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that he may ask that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has already granted unanimous consent that it be in order to order the yeas and nays on both amendments.

Mr. LONG. Objection was heard.

The PRESIDIN GOFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I think there is a misunderstanding. The request was made for the yeas and nays on the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment and then the yeas and nays on the Scott amendment as amended by the Ribicoff amendment. That is proper procedure.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senate that earlier unanimous consent was requested that it be in order to order the yeas and nays on both amendments at the same time. That request was granted, there being no objection. A request was made on one amendment later, and there was objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on both amendments.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair states that it requires 18 for a proper second.

Mr. GORE. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Regular order is requested. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor under regular order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Louisiana without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays be ordered on the two amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORE. I object. The Senate ought not to operate without some reasonable proximity of a quorum.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that I not lose my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. LONG. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The assistant legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be terminated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment and the Scott amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous unanimous-consent order the yeas and nays can be ordered together.

Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays are ordered on both amendments.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the opearting effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the Senate, and I am not making any points of order tonight or discussing it, but I will mention this point: I merely invite attention to the fact that the Scott amendment which was offered to H.R. 17550 earlier, the amendment reported by the clerk, was different from the amendment appearing in the Journal. I am sure that the Senator from Pennsylvania may want to make a point of order himself on this and may ask for the amendment to be withdrawn. It appears that he sent it to the desk and the clerk reported the wrong amendment.

I detected this earlier and had a photostat copy made of the amendment as it was reported and that is what is officially before the Senate.

I have a photostated copy of both copies. I have seen a copy of the amendment as now before the Senate.

There has been a lot of confusion in the Senate in the past few days but this is evidence that the confusion has spread.

I merely call this to the attention of the Senate now to say that at an appropriate time I shall point out the effects of the amendment.

Mr. President, in connection with the Soctt amendment, at first glance it appeared that the Scott amendment had lifted the committee amendment pages 7 and 8 out of the bill and transposed it for parliamentary reasons in order to get an earlier vote on the family assistance plan. I can understand that.

I noticed the amendment at the desk, and I wondered if it was exactly right. I asked Mr. Brownrigg to get it from the clerk and to photostat the amendment as reported so that I would have a copy, and I have a photostat of the amendment as it was read and presented at the desk.

The amendment that was transferred to the journal clerk was a different amendment, but the amendment now before the Senate is the one that would be reported by the clerk that is officially before the Senate.

I have checked this with the staff, and the mathematical effect of the amendment before the Senate, and I think the Senator from Pennsylvania and others will want to know this, is that it does one of two things. It either raises everybody to a $221 minimum and repeals 90 percent of the Social Security Act. It reads that no benefits would be paid to anybody with wages of more than $488 monthly, and since virtually no one on the rolls would have wages that high the staff estimates that the effect would be that 90 percent of the people on social security would have their benefits reduced to zero under the Scott amendment as it is proposed by the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment.

That is the situation we have, and that is the amendment we have pending. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Pennsylvania review this matter. He can decide tomorrow how far he wants to pursue his amendment. I know that was not the intent, but that is the amendment at the desk, and it is not subject to modification or amendment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I have asked the Senator to yield because the distinguished minority leader was not here when this discussion began.

It becomes apparent that at the desk either the bill clerk, or the reporter, or someone who transcribed caused a little confusion, because what the senior Senator from Delaware showed me on one set of photostats has two page 8's.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. In the other photostat, the journal clerk has only page 7, so it becomes apparent a page 7 and a page 8 were at the front desk. Who caused the confusion I do not know. But there was confusion as evidenced by the fact that the Senator from Delaware has two sets of photostats, one with two page 8's and one with page 7. Someone assumed they were the same and left one out.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Apparently they were stapled together. The reading clerk could have made a mistake and so could anyone else. But in all fairness to the clerk, two pages numbered 8 were stapled together as the reading clerk read them. I do not want to put the reading clerk in the position of having made the mistake because all he could do was report the amendment that went to the desk, and I have a copy here.

It even has the name of the Senator from Connecticut on it first; that is crossed out, and it shows that Senator SCOTT offered it. At the end of page 6 it states "insert the following," and then there are some words stricken out, then two pages 8.

The effect of the amendment if adopted is to repeal the Social Security Act so far as page 7 is concerned. We shall have plenty of time in the next couple of days to straighten this matter out. The proposal is intended to include a family assistance plan now before us. We may need the family assistance plan and a greater welfare plan because if the whole package is adopted it would strike out 90 percent of the Social Security Act and place all those people on welfare.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I wish to point out at this time that I cast no aspersions on the reading clerk or the Journal clerk, but it becomes apparent that somebody in transmitting this amendment, some part of the inner workings of the Senate, made an error somewhere. If an error was not made I fail to understand how the Journal clerk can have page 7 and the reading clerk two copies of page 8. So someone caused confusion, because if the distinguished Senator had put in two page 8's, how could the Journal clerk get a page 7?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. No one knows exactly how it happened, but one could easily see how it could happen. One set was stapled together, and rather than putting in that set one page 7 and one page 8, they put two page 7's in one bill, and the reading clerk got the two page 8's and the Journal clerk got the two page 7's. The page 8's are officially before the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator will yield, I do not want to leave the record stand without saying I submitted the amendment, and no matter what the amendment shows, if there were flaws and errors in it, they were probably there when I submitted it, so I do not want to blame anyone else.

That may have been the case, but overriding that is the fact that nobody really knows what the case was, and overriding that is the fact that there are very important substantive changes offered by the amendment. As the Senator from Delaware says, it certainly is not the amendment that came out of the committee, and, therefore, it ought to have its right to be heard and debated and voted upon. We can discuss the point of order later, but it certainly seems to me that when one looks at page 6, and then looks at the bottom and sees nothing but a blank space, and then the amendment I offered contains some important and substantive changes between 6 and 7, if there is a chart or table left out, normally, if this were not near the end of the session, I am quite sure all Senators would agree that we could correct this kind of unfortunate error and get on to the merits of the substance.

But we are in a situation where we are not talking merit, we are not talking substance; we are talking page 7 and page 8, and I think we will have to have a point or order. The issue is whether this is a substantive change in the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. If the Senator will yield, I examined the amendment first with the thought that possibly a point of order would lie. I now say that a point of order would not be sustained. I agree with the Parliamentarian. This is a change. When 80 or 90 percent of the social security law is repealed that is different from what the committee did, and I will debate anyone who tries to raise a point of order. The Scott amendment is definitely in order. It is the biggest change in social security laws that has ever been proposed in this Congress. My first impression was that if this were the committee amendment—and I know the Senator from Pennsylvania intends to take pages 7 and 8—I was going to consider a point of order, but when I saw two page 8's only were offered, I had them photostated; I knew that all I needed was to have the yeas and nays ordered on this amendment, and we would discuss it in a clear atmosphere later. I am confident that neither the Senator from Connecticut nor the Senator from Pennsylvania would want to pursue an amendment which, if enacted, would repeal 80 or 90 percent of the Social Security Act. It is not subject to a point of order. I want to make that clear.

Mr. SCOTT. I must say the Senator from Delaware could have told me what he had in mind with regard to the request for the yeas and nays. I knew the Senator had something, because he always has something, but we did not know what it was. Now that we know what it is, perhaps we will appreciate it at a later date. But the Senator is in error if he thinks I am going to withdraw this amendment at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am sure the Senator is not going to withdraw it. We are in agreement on that. I am going to be frank and say that I wanted the yeas and nays ordered to prevent the amendment from being withdrawn. I do not approve of amendments being offered in the Senate where only the manager of the amendment can change it. I doubt that the White House or the Senator from Pennsylvania will want a proposal acted on which would repeal 80 percent of the Social Security Act. I hope that tomorrow we can reach agreement. I am sure no point of order could prevail. I will defend the Parliamentarian on that. When the Senator from Pennsylvania proposed to repeal 90 percent of the Social Security Act it is a change, and I put that in capital letters.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, while there may be some error, no change was intended, and no change affecting any social security beneficiary will ever become law. This is a mighty big bill, with a lot of pages, and there will be plenty of opportunity as we go along perfecting various amendments and putting in amendments to make sure that in some subsequent amendment and in some subsequent procedure the complete charts are put in, so the Senate will arrive at a point where it can vote on a 10-percent social security increase and a $100 minimum. I am sure that between the Senator from Delaware, myself, and other Senators, there will not be difficulty achieving any result of that kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am sure of that, because I cannot conceive of the Senator from Pennsylvania wanting to repeal 90 percent of the Social Security Act. I cannot conceive of that, and that was what struck me when I saw the amendment at the desk. That is the reason why I wanted to get this outlined on the RECORD tonight; Senators should be on notice as to the situation before the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think there is any question of good faith on the part of the Senator from Pennsylvania and on the part of the Senator from Connecticut in their desire to achieve what the committee has so well and carefully wrought; namely, an increase in certain social security benefits. I am not aware how the Senator from Delaware voted on those increases, but I will say now, and as often as I have the opportunity, I will vote for them. I am for the social security benefits. I am for these charts.

If the Senator from Delaware had advised us that we were offering a chart which would repeal part of the Social Security Act, we could have corrected the matter on the floor in less than 30 seconds, and we will always be willing to correct the matter on the floor in less than 30 seconds if the Senator will permit us.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. If the Senator from Pennsylvania had sought my advice I would have been delighted to have given it to him.

Mr. SCOTT. I assure the Senator I will. I always do.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I was not asked my advice when the proposal was presented, so I took it at face value that he knew what he was doing. I have such respect for the Senator from Pennsylvania that it never dawned on me that he did not know what he was doing.

Mr. SCOTT. I was going to say that no Senator knows what he is doing when the Senator from Delaware gets through with him, because he has expertise which is so superior to the rest of us. I agree with that. That is why we are going to miss him. But the Senator from Pennsylvania knew what he was doing, all right. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not aware to this minute whether or not a chart had been changed or had not been changed. The Senator only knows the chart had been changed when it was in his hands, and another copy went to the desk, and that is where the mystery lies.

The Senator from Pennsylvania takes that responsibility in having concurred in sending up the second chart. The Senator from Pennsylvania's intention is good. His purpose is good. His desire to achieve a social security benefit increase is good. He will gladly consult the Senator from Delaware to see how, in the exercise of his infinite wisdom and mercy, we will achieve the desired result.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Whenever the Senator seeks my advice I assure him that he will get it.

Mr. SCOTT. I will be glad to accept the advice up to the cliff, and there I will take a good look over it to see where we are going.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I assure the Senator from Pennsylvania he will be well advised to be guided by any advice I give him.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

Mr. MANSFIELD. Now, Mr. President, under the agreement which has been operating and which expires at the conclusion of business on Tuesday next, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to the consideration of Calendar No. 1443, H.R. 17550, and that it be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Calendar No. 1443, H.R. 17550, a bill to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, since our meetings on yesterday, we have held some discussions.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, we cannot hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, since our meetings yesterday, there have been some discussions about the most expeditious way to move ahead with the social security bill. We have not been able to reach any sort of agreement.

My impression is that the administration is very hopeful of obtaining a vote on the family assistance plan or, if not that, then, in the alternative, a test vote to give some indication of how the Senate feels about the measure.

I have inquired of the possibility of obtaining a limitation to assure a time certain to vote on this measure. That cannot be obtained at this time.

Mr. President, I am convinced that the Senate is not going to pass this measure and that, for whatever political advantage it might give one group or the other or any particular individual, it will be time wasted which could have been used in passing some of these bills that it is possible to pass in this session.

Accordingly I will make a motion to table the pending amendment. I believe the Senator from Delaware wanted me to yield to him before I made that motion.

I ask unanimous consent that I might yield to the Senator from Delaware without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator will be making a motion to table the measure even before some of us can get a chance to present our case against the bill?

Mr. LONG. That is my intention. But prior to doing that, I would like to yield——

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I think we ought to have an up and down vote on the family assistance plan.

I would vote against the motion to table, hoping that we could get a vote on it.

I wonder if the Senator might not put some kind of request to the Senate for a limitation of time on the merits. Perhaps we could arrive at some kind of an agreement at some day certain, even if it is after we come back from Christmas.

We should try to get a vote on the merits. Could the Senator put that question?

Mr. LONG. If the Senator wants that done, I ask unanimous consent that we vote on the pending amendment, which is the family assistance plan, at 5 o'clock on Tuesday next.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, what is the request?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on the family assistance plan at 5 o'clock next Tuesday.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I presented a unanimous-consent proposal for the Senate to vote on all amendments as well as final passage of the bill as amended. Many of those Senators now standing up and speaking on this matter apparently were not in favor of that agreement.

If we can get consent to vote on the entire bill I would go along with the request. I offered such a unanimous-consent agreement before.

However, I will not be a party to political hypocrisy to get a vote on the family assistance plan when in the back of the Chamber it is being said it will die anyway. That is the greatest act of political hypocrisy I have heard. I have so expressed myself downtown to those proposing that this farcical procedure be followed.

If we are to vote on social security and a family assistance plan let us vote on them in good faith with the intention that it will become law and not so that Members can go home and brag about having done something in order to get votes. We are dealing with people who should not be kidded by either political party.

I am ashamed that some Senators from our side would seem to cooperate in that hypocritical suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DOLE. I object.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, before the pending measure was called up I promised to call up S. 3835.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished majority leader for that purpose.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have no doubt that this motion should be tabled. The parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves at this moment is that we have several hundred committee amendments.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Louisiana may proceed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we have agreed to one amendment, which is an amendment to strike the table of contents of the House bill. Assuming we plan to pass the Senate bill, that table of contents does not belong there.

Now, we are on the next committee amendment, and we have been on it for some time. This is an amendment to strike and insert. We have an amendment pending on the insert part, the tail end of the amendment, which we cannot dispose of because a motion to table failed on that by a vote of about 1 to 2.

Now we are confronted with another amendment, one that would be on the front end of the committee amendment, on the strike part. That is an amendment that we will be debating for a long time before it comes to a vote—if indeed it does come to a vote, which I doubt.

In addition, Mr. President, the amendment is offered in such a way that it cannot be amended and there are at least 100 different provisions that are extremely controversial in the amendment. It is offered as an amendment to an amendment.

I understand that due to the imperfections in it, which cannot be corrected without unanimous consent—and I am under the impression unanimous consent will not be given—it would repeal most benefits under the social security program, an unintended defect. But this is the situation, and obviously this is no way to legislate.

This matter should be brushed aside; it cannot become law anyway. All we are doing is wasting time. But in the hope that it might give some indication of how the Senate feels about the amendment, I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that?

Mr. LONG. I withhold the motion for 2 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I have opposed the guaranteed annual income proposal for reasons I think are valid. During the discussion of this bill as yet I have never been able to obtain the floor in my own right due to the arrangement from the White House offtimes and the minority leadership of the Senate that recognition would go to those in favor of the plan. The result has been that none of us who have reasons to oppose the plan have had a chance to speak to point out what is wrong with the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment.

Our committee worked on this proposal for months. I would certainly hope—and I say this as one who opposes the amendment—that the Senate defeats the motion to table which has been made. I plead with my colleagues to defeat this motion in the hope that we may have a chance to debate this matter on its merits.

I think we should. I suggested a procedure to get it before the Senate. I respect the Senator from Louisiana. I understand he is making this motion at the request of the White House representative. I do not know what they will accomplish by it. I am sure it will not be agreed to. I hope it is not, and I appeal to all Senators who have said they are for the family assistance plan and those who are against it to vote against the motion to table so that we may discuss it on the merits. Surely the proponents of this measure are not afraid to debate and vote on its merits.

I thank the Senator for yielding. I am ready to vote.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I appreciate what the distinguished chairman is trying to do. He is trying to be very realistic to find out what the sentiment of the Senate is. I respect the position of my distinguished friend, the Senator from Delaware, with whom I am opposite on this proposal. I hope the Senator from Delaware would have an opportunity to state how he feels with respect to this matter. I know he feels strongly against the proposal and his views are entitled to be heard. I hope he has time to explain his views.

But personally, I shall vote against the motion to table because if it is presented it could very well be the only test by which the Senate can possibly be heard as to whether Senators are for or against family assistance. It would be my hope that the Senate would be for the family assistance program and could so indicate by voting against the motion to table.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, this will not be a test of how the Senate feels or would vote on the plan because I for one am going to vote against the motion to table. I know that I am going to vote that way and many other Senators are going to vote that way even though they are opposed to the bill. If a vote is what the Senate wants we can go ahead and vote, but it is only a waste of time and proves nothing except that there are those who are afraid to debate this fantastic proposal on its merits. Apparently they have very little confidence of their ability to defend the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, under those circumstances I do not believe we would have a test of how the Senate feels about the amendment so I am not going to make the motion.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, what the Senator has said makes what I was going to say completely nongermane. But it seems to me I find myself at this time in disagreement with my friend from Delaware, as much as I like him and respect him.

It seems to me we have reached a point in this session—and we discussed this point very frankly when we were by ourselves—where much of what we are doing is utterly useless and serves no good purpose, and I do not care what the executive branch says. As a matter of fact, it might do them some good, and it would not do them any harm, to send some of their boy scouts to sit in the galleries for a few hours. They might learn something. Some of them have never even sat in galleries of State legislatures and they do not seem to be well versed in legislative procedures.

But whatever the executive branch said, and whatever the distinguished minority leader feels compelled to say—and I respect him and try to follow him at least part of the time—the issue is whether we are going to spend more time discussing the merits and demerits of the so-called family assistance plan which has come out of the committee in one form, and is before the Senate in the form of an amendment by the Senator from Connecticut, the Senator from Utah, and others. It has all kinds of phases. We are just wasting our time, and for what? I was hoping that the Senator from Louisiana would make the motion.

I was hoping, whatever our feelings are on the family assistance plan, that we would vote on the question of whether it is sensible and whether it is going to accomplish anything for the people of the United States and for the prestige of the Congress to continue this way. It is a matter of just plain commonsense, which has been conspicuously lacking for the last few weeks.

I do not like the idea of voting against a motion to table so as to conceal from somebody how I feel. I feel very strongly that whatever may be the merits of the family assistance plan in a different form—and I do not find too many merits in it right now—it is useless to take time on it now, and if the opportunity comes to vote on the motion to table, I am going to vote for commonsense procedure in the Senate to gain some respect from the people and from the executive branch.

Mr. LONG. The Senator encourages me to make the motion. Frankly, what we are doing is wasting time. This welfare proposal is not going to become law as part of this bill. It will have to come off this bill one way or the other. All we are doing is wasting time until we come to a decision. It does not require the Senator from Delaware to persuade me that it should not be in the bill. I am convinced that it should not become law.

I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the Ribicoff amendment, No. 1169.

Mr. LONG and Mr. HOLLAND requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana to lay the amendment on the table. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MCCARTHY), the Senator from Utah (Mr. Moss), the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. RUSSELL), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. TYDINGS), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) would each vote "nay".

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

The Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK) and the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) are absent because of illness.

Also necessarily absent is the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), the Senator from California (Mr. MURPHY), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), would each vote "nay".

If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT), the Senator from California (Mr. MURPHY) and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 65, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, first I want to thank my colleagues for rejecting the tabling motion regardless of what their position may be on this bill. This at least gives those of us who have worked on it for a period of months an opportunity to explain some of the bad provisions in the bill and to point out why some of us feel that it is in the best interests of our country that it not be enacted.

First, there is much being said in this country about the need for reform. The administration's family assistance or guaranteed annual income plan has been sold to the American people under the slogan of "Workfare versus Welfare."

The present welfare system has been recognized by all concerned as a program full of inequities. Secretary Richardson, in his testimony before the Committee on Finance, described the present program as a gigantic failure, and the administration's new family assistance plan was described as a major reform.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, may we have order. We cannot hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. When the term "reform" is used in connection with legislative proposals it means one of two things. Either it is proposed to take away from someone something which he is now receiving but to which he is not entitled, or it is proposed to give to someone something which he is not getting but to which he is entitled.

While there is general agreement on the part of all concerned that our existing welfare program is in need of major reform, it should be emphasized that the administration bill as it is now pending before the Senate as reported by the Committee on Finance, does not embrace reform of the existing law. In fact, the Secretary of HEW admitted to the Finance Committee that under the particular proposal now before us—and the authors will confirm this—not one welfare recipient in America, in any State in the Union, will receive a dime less than that which he is now getting under existing law. We therefore proceed on the premise that there is no reform in this bill, assuming there are abuses now. Quite to the contrary, all the inequities in existing law will be frozen into the new program plus some more being added.

I should like to mention at this point just a few of the things that can happen under this bill if enacted.

One of the problems of the existing welfare system we hear much about is the promotion and encouragement of illegitimacy and of families with generation after generation on welfare.

I should like to point out what the bill before us would do. This bill actually provides a $1,300 cash bonus from the Federal Government to a mother to have an illegitimate baby, over and above what would be paid if the baby were born in wedlock.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I cite this example which was called to the attention of the committee. Use, for example, two welfare families.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, a point of order. The Senate is not in order. I ask that the Chair bring the Senate to order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. We asked the department to check how this bill would work in actual practice in four States. We picked two large States and two small States. The large States we picked were Illinois and New York, and we picked Arizona and Delaware for the small States. I said we wanted to pick mine as well as someone else's.

Suppose, for example, there are two welfare families under the provisions of this bill, if it passes.

Family A has a boy 17, a girl 12, and a girl 6. Family B has a girl 16, a boy 11, and a girl 8. Each family will get welfare payments based upon the size of the family. This means that for this boy or or girl below the age of 18 as dependents they will collect, first, $300 from the Federal Government; they will collect a larger mandatory supplement from the State; they will benefit from medicaid if they need medical attention; they will get additional rent allowance, housing allowance, and so forth; they will get additional food stamps as a result of the larger dependency in each family.

If this boy and this girl get married each family loses one dependent, and their welfare payments are automatically reduced proportionately. When this boy and girl are married they do not get anything under this bill, even though they have no jobs or anything else for support. They can starve, so far as this bill is concerned, until they have been married long enough to have the first baby. Then they become a new welfare family, eligible for payments under the AFD program. No provision would help them, no matter how destitute they may be the first year; they have this handicap until they can produce the first child.

On the other hand, suppose the boy and girl want to get married but realize they cannot do so financially, and the girl becomes pregnant. He does not marry her until the baby is born. Then they can move off and start collecting welfare as a family of their own, under the aid to dependent children. I repeat, if this bill is enacted, by postponing the marriage until the baby is born they can collect a cash payment in the first year of $1,300 more than he can if he marries the girl before the baby is born.

What kind of social bill is this where the Federal Government underwrites a proposal of paying a $1,300 bonus to bring that first child into this world as an illegitimate baby? What chance has that child in late life? Is that what Senators want to approve.

This situation was called to the attention of the committee, and we called it to the attention of the Department. All the Department said was, "We'll correct it next year." I say correct it before you pass this bill. I will not support any bill that will pay a cash benefit on the part of the Federal Government, a premium of $1,300, to have an illegitimate baby, more than they would if it is born in holy wedlock.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the table furnished by the committee and the staff, approved by the Department, relating to the problem of illegitimacy.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Eligible for medicaid, surplus food, and housing.
[2] Eligible for food stamps.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. It is clearly evident that the bill has been improperly labeled as a reform package. For example, this bill does not correct the problems of existing law whereby family breakups are encouraged.

Under this bill, suppose a family is living together—an unemployed father and mother and four children. If the father and mother will separate, either because of problems or by mutual agreement—perhaps only moving across the corridor in separate apartments—they then become two families eligible for welfare, instead of one.

This is the bonus in welfare which they as a group collect as the result of split families.

In Phoenix, Ariz., under the administration's plan they will get $936 more by living as a split family than if they live together. They can visit across the corridor, and if an additional child is born it can go on the welfare rolls. Everything is taken care of. But they collect more welfare if they live in separate apartments.

In Wilmington, Del., they will collect an extra $1,104 in assistance under this bill by splitting the family. They can collect $1,104 in benefits more than they can if the family stays together.

In Chicago, Ill., as a split family they will collect $2,064 more in assistance. Think of it—$2,064 more benefits under the bill of the administration if the husband will desert, take two children, and leave the wife two children.

Is this the kind of reform that the Congress wants?

In New York a welfare family will collect a higher premium on family splitting; they collect $2,508 more as two families than if they live as one family. They can collect that every year under this bill if they will just separate—the husband taking part of the children and the wife taking the other children. Again, it is claimed that that is reforming the existing law. I challenge anyone to say that that is reform. I say that this is making a farce of the situation and think what this does to these children.

As to the unemployed father, they claim to have corrected that under this Ribicoff-Bennett plan, but I am not sure. I understand that the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment is intended to correct that point, and I will withhold comment until I have had it fully analyzed; I will pass over that point for the moment.

The pending bill cannot be labeled under the guise of reform in any way, shape, or form.

This bill should not pass until corrections have been made.

I think that these problems are why a majority of us have opposed this bill a committee. We have had three different votes in the committee. Once the bill was unanimously sent back to the Department for revision. They brought back practically the same package. The House-passed bill was rejected by a vote of 14 to 1 on a rollcall vote in the Finance Committee. They had another vote in the committee, in which the bill as revised was rejected by 10 to 6. But each time the Department comes back and wants another vote. All they want is a vote. Is it not time someone thought about a reform of our welfare system instead of about the votes involved?

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. TALMADGE. Does the Senator recall what particular revision of this plan it is, from HEW? Is it six or seven? How many different versions of this plan has the Department submitted?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. It is at least six. I have lost count and I understand the present bill was revised again yesterday at the suggestion of the administration just a few minutes before the Senate convened.

Mr. TALMADGE. I have lost count, also. It has been six or seven.

The Senator will recall the time just prior to adjournment, when we had a recess for the elections, when the Under Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare came in with a stack of amendments, about 12 inches high, that no member of the Finance Committee had ever seen, and no member of the Finance Committee knew what was contained in there. He insisted on the Finance Committee voting at that particular time on a stack of amendments they had never seen. Does the Senator recall that?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct. The bill as proposed consisted of approximately 400 or 500 pages and was only delivered to the offices of Senators about 5:30 the night before.

Mr. TALMADGE. I never got mine.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I did not, either, until about 20 minutes before the committee met.

We walked in, and the Department said, "All we want is a vote." The committee gave them a vote and rejected it by a margin of 10 to 6.

Now we are told the Department wants another vote in the Senate even though they accept the fact that it cannot get cleared in a conference before adjournment.

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator has been in the Senate 24 years. Has he ever seen such irresponsibility as that during that period of time?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Never. And I hope it will be 24 years before it is repeated.

Mr. TALMADGE. So do I.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. As the Senator knows, that vote was on the eve of the adjournment, just before the recess for the election. As I recall, it was just a few days before. The committee soundly rejected that proposal. The committee did not have any idea what it was, and by unanimous vote, as I recall it, we instructed the staff to analyze the bill which the Department had sent down to us that morning. We had never seen it before. We instructed the staff to send each member of the Finance Committee to our homes during the recess an analysis and a copy of the bill—to get it printed and send each a copy and an analysis—in order that we could study it, so that when we came back into session in November our Committee would be ready to proceed in an orderly manner and to vote intelligently for or against it.

I have here a letter sent by Mr. Vail of the staff of the commitee, which I will put in the RECORD, that he sent to me and the other members of the committee on October 26. This was after the recess. I read the letter dated October 26, 1970:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
Washington, D.C., October 26, 1970.

Hon. JOHN J. WILLIAMS,
Millsboro, Del.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: You will recall that during executive session of the Finance Committee on Tuesday, October 13, Mr. Veneman, Under Secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, submitted to the Committee a revised version of the Family Assistance Plan and urged that the Committee vote on it before the recess.

The revised plan, described as a "core" bill, covers more than 150 pages. The Committee felt that a major amendment of such proportions should be carefully studied before a vote was taken. Therefore, it directed the staff to publish the "core" bill, related amendments, and supporting tables, documents, and charts to be prepared by the Department and submitted to the Committee. It was the Committee's instruction that this material together with an analysis prepared by the staff of the Committee be forwarded to each member of the Committee at his home during the recess. In this way all of the members would have an opportunity to study the Administration's most recent welfare proposal before the Committee reconvenes in November.

I had hoped that the printing job and the staff analysis could have been completed before now. The staff analysis of the October 13 version has been completed. Unfortunately, the Department apparently is making further revisions in the material submitted on October 13. Although the version presented to the Committee has been set in type, the Department has not completed its proofreading task—apparently because of the addtiional drafting and rewriting they are undertaking. It would seem to serve no useful purpose to send you the staff analysis if the "core" bill we have analyzed is still being changed by the Department.

I wanted to let you know why we have not yet complied with the Committee's instruction to promptly forward the printed material to the members at their homes.

Sincerely,

TOM VAIL.

Mr. Vail apologizes for the fact that he could not get the information from the Department to complete the analysis.

A second letter from Tom Vail, chief of staff, dated November 5, states that the material has just been received.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
Washington, D.C., November 5, 1970.

Hon. JOHN J. WILLIAMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: I am enclosing a copy of the Administration's revised revision of H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970.

You will recall that Under Secretary John Veneman of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare submitted a revised revision of the bill to the Committee during its executive session on October 13 and asked that the Committee vote on the new version of the bill. Instead of voting on the new version at that time, the Committee decided that it should be printed, together with other materials prepared by the Department and an analysis by the staff, and sent to members of the Committee during the recess.

The enclosed Committee Print represents this document. A brief analysis with comments, tables and charts prepared by the Committee staff is printed on blue paper at the beginning of the document. This is followed by materials prepared by the Department, the text of the Department's revised revision, and additional amendments prepared by the Department for possible Committee consideration, all printed on white paper.

If you have a copy of the bill submitted by Mr. Veneman on October 13, you will note that the Department's latest version of the bill differs in a number of respects from the October 13 version due to the changes made by the Department fairly continuously between that date and the date of final printing. Unfortunately, it was this continual revising which prevented us from printing the document and forwarding it to you sooner.

Sincerely,

TOM VAIL.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, in the November 5 letter he said he had just received the information, and yet they came before the committee on October 13 with a 150-page package which they wanted us to vote on without reading. It took the Department another month to get back to the committee a printed version.

This is the kind of confusion and lack of cooperation that has been existing in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. I know there is confusion in the Senate, too, but I do not have any idea of what must be going on down there. I will say this: neither does anyone else connected with that Department. I have never seen such irresponsible management or lack of knowledge as to what is going on as exists in that Department. Department officials came before our committee, and never have I seen witnesses coming before a committee representing an executive department who knew so little about the proposal they were asking Congress to adopt. I was present on one occasion when it appeared the former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare had not even read the bill and did not have the slightest idea what it was all about.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. TALMADGE. Does not the Senator recall when Secretary Finch came before the committee and attempted to present a bill, and the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) dressed him down and told him that was the poorest presentation he had ever seen anyone present to a committee of the U.S. Senate since he had been a Member of this body.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I do remember it. I have that very quotation by the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) in front of me. Let me quote it:

With all due respect, gentlemen, I believe this is the most ill-prepared presentation that I have seen since I have been in the Congress of the United States. I am really amazed that some of these very simple questions do not get a very quick and easy response—such things as just asked a minute ago about medicaid, and the questions I asked yesterday about the day-care costs. It seems to me that those are things which ought to have been easily available, because they ought to have been thought out in advance when you put this plan together.

Mr. President, that opinion was the unanimous sentiment of the Finance Committee. After that miserable presentation had been made it was so apparent that the Department did not know what the bill was all about that the committee interrupted the hearings and called an executive session. The Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare was called in and asked to go back and rewrite the bill. Meanwhile we suspended the hearings until HEW could report back and we could at least find out what was in the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. Is the Senator referring to Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Richardson?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. No, to former Secretary Finch.

Mr. STEVENS. Secretary Finch.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS. Was the comment the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) made concerning Secretary Finch or Secretary Richardson?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. It was made at the time Secretary Finch was the head of HEW.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FANNIN). The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, that quotation by the Senator from Oklahoma appears in the committee hearings which are on Senators' desks under the date of April 30, 1970.

Mr. STEVENS. If the Senator will yield additionally, briefly, it appears that the Senator has made some rather broad statements regarding the ability of these two men who have been Secretaries of Health, Education, and Welfare in the period that I have been here. I am sort of amazed to hear such a broad statement being made, coming from my good colleague from Delaware, concerning either of these gentlemen. I wonder whether the Senator could tell me how this occurred, how they happened to get so many versions of the bill? Was it because of the complete reticence on the part of the Finance Committee to consider the bill at all in the first instance? What led to the many versions that the bill has gone through?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. If anyone has the answer to that question, I would appreciate hearing it. I do not have the answer. The committee scheduled very promptly the hearings on this proposal. The committee has tried to work diligently with the Department, but each time we kept getting some reason why the Department had to ask for more time.

It definitely was not the committee's fault that the Department kept changing its mind.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Inasmuch as it has been suggested that the Finance Committee was dragging its feet, I would like to point out that the hearings were scheduled by the committee the day after the House passed the bill, to begin within 2 weeks of House passage. It was at the request of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare that the hearing was postponed, but when he did come before the committee and questions were asked, the kind of things that have been discussed here in this Chamber, the answers showed how ill-considered the bill was at that point.

The Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) said that was the poorest presentation he had ever heard on any major piece of legislation. He said that he had come prepared to support it but he had heard the rumor that the administration was planning to scuttle the bill in the committee and perhaps that was why there was such a poor presentation by the administration witnesses. The Secretary denied that it was intentional. He said that no one could have contrived such a scenario as had been witnessed there that day, that no one could have contrived to give a presentation that was made so poorly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct.

I would like to dispel the thought that the Finance Committee is responsible for the bill's being before the Senate at this late date. The question has been asked, how come so much delay in consideration of the administration's family assistance plan, implying that this delay was entirely the result of dilatory action on the part of the Finance Committee. Let me make the record straight on that.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. HANSEN. In an effort to shed some light on this question further, as posed by the distinguished Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), let me suggest possible reasons why so many different revisions were made of a plan. I assumed that it must have been scrutinized and studied, and must have been prepared and followed with diligent efforts. I would hope that the HEW would not have come before Congress with a plan that had not been considered and scrutinized and examined from every angle, because we are aware that with respect to medicare and medicaid, every time an actuarial study has been made of these programs, the cost has increased. The cost that will result from their continued implementation as compared with the revenues that are intended to fund them, indicate that over a period of 25 years, those two programs will be $216 billion in the red.

Now with that experience behind it, I cannot think that the HEW would have come forward without having a considered plan. But while these may have been many revisions—I have forgotten how many—I can only say to my good friend from Alaska that as we examined the proposals in the family assistance program, against the backdrop of the goals that the President hoped to obtain through welfare reform it just did not seem that the proposal accomplished the objectives the President had in mind.

The incentives that would encourage people to move from welfare into the private sector of the economy as working citizens could not be identified.

As the distinguished Senator from Delaware has pointed out and as the distinguished Senator from Georgia has pointed out as well, on different occasions, in the city of New York, a working mother with four in the family—a female head of the family with four persons, if that mother were to take the benefits that are available to her as a resident of the State of New York, living in New York City, taking advantage of public housing, and if she got low-income supplements which would be available to everyone in the State, if she took advantage of medicaid and medicare, if she used available food stamps, and took advantage of the such other programs available there, she, without working at all, could have the equivalent of $6,210.000 income per year.

But if she went out and took a job and went off welfare and moved into the type of activity that the President of the United States has called for in this bill and was to find employment and earn through that employment $7,000 a year, she would be $1 poorer by working and earning $7,000 a year than she would be if she had not turned a hand.

I think this is the sort of questioning that came about in the Finance Committee that may have caused our good friends at HEW to come forward with no less than seven revisions.

I can say this. I do not know. I am speculating. I do not know what was in their minds. All I know is that when the members of the committee started to examine the bill and got to probing and questioning, along with the distinguished chairman of the committee, it seemed as though the bill did not accomplish what it was supposed to accomplish.

I am in complete accord with the President of the United States. I want welfare reform. I want to give the people of this country an opportunity to go to work and to give them some incentive to go to work.

I do not believe this bill accomplishes that. I am delighted that we rejected the motion to table. I do not suspect the distinguished chairman of the committee had his heart in it when he proposed it.

I believe that he, too, shares the feeling that we ought to understand this, we ought to realize that this is a charade, that the bill does not accomplish what we might hope that it would accomplish.

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I should have. But I would like to say to my good friend, the Senator from Alaska, that I do not know why HEW came up with seven different plans. It seemed as though every time we started finding fault and picking their plan apart to show what was wrong with it, they would then come in with a new set of charts.

Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr President, the Senator is correct.

I would like to call attention to the chart in the rear of the Chamber. It shows how this bill, if executed, would work.

Much has been said to the effect that this bill only provides $1,600 for a family of four. Everyone asks, "What are you complaining about? That is a very small amount for a family of four."

I agree. But the $1,600 is only the beginning. This $1,600 direct Government payment automatically triggers in these mandatory supplementary payments which are outlined on the charts in the rear of the Senate Chamber.

These are the mandatory payments to the family in addition to the $1,600 from the Federal Government. In New York this $1,600 payment triggers in $2,156 additional State supplement payments, which are 70 percent Federal participation. This brings the family's cash income to $3,756, tax-exempt; but that is not all.

In addition to that they can get food stamps with a value of $312.

The food stamp bonus was $312. Then there are medicaid benefits for this family which cost on an average of $1,153 annually, plus another $989 in rent supplements or public housing. This is a total of $6,210 for this family of four in New York City.

Suppose the city letter carrier that is delivering this welfare check has a family of four. His income is taxable, and after he pays taxes he has $6,209 left, or $1 less by working and earning $7,000 a year than the same size family gets if on relief.

Is that a work incentive? That is what is called a work incentive program under the administration's bill. It is an incentive for what? It is an incentive to go on welfare and to quit work.

Let us examine this New York chart further. If they earn $1,000, they would have after taxes $6,746 in money and benefits in kind. If they earn $7,000 the family of four, after taxes, will have $6,209 left, or $1 less than if they remained on welfare.

In other words, they talk about a training program to train a man or woman to improve his or her earning capacity. Suppose the head of this family is earning $6,000 and goes to a training school and gets promoted to $7,000 a year; he has $1,300 less income than he would if he had spit in the boss' eye and never gotten the promotion. He would have $7,512 in cash and benefits under this bill if he earned $6,000 a year, but if he earns $7,000 he drops back to $6,209 after taxes.

Suppose a plant is operating with employees on a $7,000 wage base, and the union leader sits down and negotiates an increase to $8,000. If the management agrees to raise their salaries to $8,000 a year average, each worker would have $6,781 after taxes. That is for a family of four. That is the result if they get an increase of $1,000, or a raise from $7,000 to $8,000. But if their union is on the job and will consult with the management and say, "Now, boss, instead of raising these salaries for your employees $1,000, cut them all back to $6,000." The employee with a family of four earning $6,000 would have after taxes $7,512 in cash and benefits in kind, an increase of $1,300 over what he would have if he continued to earn $7,000.

Is that the kind of work incentive program that Senators want to approve? That is not the kind of incentive that I support. This bill if enacted will pay a premium to the man who slides back into welfare.

The so-called work incentives are in reverse. I have been here in Washington for 24 years. I have never had Potomac fever yet. I hope I do not get it before I leave if such a proposal as this is the result.

We had the department check these examples for four States. We did not ask them to check the 50 States, but I asked them, "Do you have any reason to think that if you check any one of the other 46 States the result would be different?"

They said, "no." The answer was emphatic, so we accepted these statistics as a national pattern.

We told them that if they had any other State that would come up with a better showing for their so-called work incentives program we would like to have it. They did not have it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this chart relating to how this bill if enacted would work in New York be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Now, to get back for just a moment to how this bill has been handled by the Finance Committee. Surely it took time. It took a lot of time. I have spent more time on this bill than I have on any other bill that has ever been before the Finance Committee.

The bill was first recommended by the President on October 2, 1969. The Ways and Means Committee reported it on March 11, 1970. It passed the House on April 16.

I might say that when the President first sent this proposal down I endorsed it. I thought it sounded like a great plan. That was before we analyzed the bill.

Mr. President, before I proceed further I would like to make one point very clear. My criticism of this bill is in no way directed at the author of the pending amendment, the Senator from Connecticut, because he has been most cooperative. He has worked hard to try to get a realistic program.

But the Senator from Connecticut wanted this tested first. As of January 1970 there were 10,436,197 people on relief in this country.

If this bill is enacted this number will increase to 23,784,300, or more than double, and there is no reform as to correcting abuses under existing law.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield first to the Senator from Connecticut and shall then yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. This is a very complicated amendment.

There are still many doubts in my mind. I do not feel so self-confident that I have all the answers. I know from long experience that human nature does not always conform with what the social scientists may present in a legislative act. That is why I was so anxious to have a pilot program.

My feeling is that before this plan should ever go into effect, there should be a pilot program. The Ribicoff-Bennett proposal contemplates a pilot program that gives an opportunity to determine what is right and what is wrong with this legislation.

That would give us an opportunity before July 1, 1972, to make whatever corrections have to be made. I believe the basic plan is a good one.

My feeling is that within the thinking of the Senator from Delaware, the majority leader, the minority leader, and myself, we could work out a proposal, if we were allowed to work it out, to allow it to come before the Senate before Tuesday night.

Personally, I am ready to vote on any type proposal at any time. I would like a test vote. As I have discussed with the distinguished Senator from Delaware, I believe there are vehicles by which we can achieve the result we desire and the result the President desires and also which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare desires, without casting any aspersions or reflections on the majority party or any member of the minority party who may disagree.

There are great complications here, and as men of good will we should recognize the realities of the legislative situation and work out a series of actions which would inure to the benefit of the people of this country and this body.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. There is no doubt in my mind that a plan could be developed. What the Senator has said does not change the fact that weeks would pass before we could get adequate information in the committee. The Department should have worked with us, but we did not have the cooperative spirit we should have had from the executive branch. Each time I sat down for negotiations I was told, "Yes, I am glad to negotiate with you if you will vote for the plan as it is."

They closed their minds to any loopholes we exposed and seemed to resent any form of criticism of their original proposal.

Mr. President, that is not the way to negotiate. There are problems in connection with the existing welfare system. One of the greatest needs confronting this country is the reform of the existing welfare system. I said that years ago. The Senator from Connecticut and I were responsible for committee hearings which began an examination of some of the problems in the medicaid program with the thought of putting together a reform package.

I do not recall a single proposed revision or correction of the medicaid program which was not mutually agreed upon by the Senator from Connecticut and me. I do not recall a single disagreement we had during all the time in trying to make revisions in that program. I think a correction of these loopholes which I am outlining here could have been achieved had we had similar cooperation from the executive branch. I may disagree with the Senator from Connecticut on the wisdom of enacting this legislation first and working it out later, but we can disagree as gentlemen, and I think we could have sat down and worked out a solution here if the administration had not been so adamant on its position. This bill would double the welfare rolls in this country before we get reform.

On March 25, while the bill was pending in the House, I inquired of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and asked for a statistical analysis of the bill as reported by the House committee with specific emphasis on the amount of payments to be made to recipients in the two largest States and the two smallest States. It was on my suggestion that the Committee on Finance insisted on this information before we opened hearings. I wanted to know what Joe Doakes and Tom Doakes would get, not just a political speech. The request was filed on March 25, and it was not until 9:30 p.m. on April 28, the evening before Secretary Finch was to testify, that the material was received. During the testimony of Secretary Finch the chart showing the statistical analysis of the bill was presented to the committee by Secretary Finch and his associates, and the mathematical result of this legislative proposal as shown by the charts shocked both the committee members and the Department.

The information I requested through the Committee on Finance was that all existing data dealing with welfare be taken into consideration and what the effect would be, assuming the bill were passed by the Senate in the form it had been passed by the House. I wanted to know how much welfare recipients in four selected States would receive. I shall discuss the charts in detail later. The result of the first bill was even more glaring that it is on these second charts shown here today.

After the charts were submitted the committee called the Secretary back in executive session and unanimously—Democrats and Republicans—suggested we should suspend hearings and cancel until the Department went back and prepared a revised bill.

I have already quoted Senator HARRIS' comments. The department returned the bill to the Committee on Finance in five installments beginning June 11. The final amended version was delivered to the committee on June 23, 1970, or a little over a month after it had been sent back. A couple of days prior to that date we were advised that Secretary Finch had resigned and that the new Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare was to be appointed. This delayed the committee hearings upon the request of the Department so that the new Secretary, Mr. Richardson, could be confirmed and also so that he might have an opportunity to familiarize himself with the bill and prepare his testimony.

The schedule was approved by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare that hearings resume July 21. They were adjourned 2 days later, on July 23 at the request of the Secretary, in the midst of his testimony, so that he could take a weekend trip with a presidential party goint out west. Hearings resumed on July 28.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, after the hearings resumed the Secretary of Labor came down to testify, and he too asked for an adjournment of a week because he was scheduled to appear at the Governors' conference. The committee complied with his request for a postponement.

Mr. President, I have pointed this out to show that the delay was not our committee's fault.

Now I would like to mention how this bill if enacted would affect my State. I wish to call the attention of Senators to the chart in the rear of the Chamber. The first charts had even more glaring inequities. We have had so many charts and changed bills that it is hard to keep them separate.

The chart will show that under this bill a family of four would receive $1,600; that is, $500 each for the first two members and $300 for each child. In addition to this $1,600 there is the $188 State supplement, the food stamp benefits totaling $828, as well as the medicaid and housing benefits. Under this bill this family of four would get $3,775 in cash and benefits in kind. These are all tax-exempt benefits. This is $447 more than the family would have if the head of the family had full-time employment at the minimum wage.

If that same individual earns $5,000 a year he would have a total in cash and in kind of $5,358, but if he gets a promotion to $6,000 he loses $57 and goes back to $5,301.

Can this be called an incentive to work?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes. I shall proceed with these charts later. I shall yield at this time, because we can not get this information presented today. I promised to yield to some of the other Members. I think it is important that the Senate understand this plan and understand just what is embraced in it because not much has been said about the plan on its merits.

In passing, I will make just this comment. We were told that the plan was endorsed by the Governors conference. The Governor of Missouri was before our committee in behalf of the Governors conference, and he presented our committee with a resolution endorsing the family assistance plan on behalf of the Governors conference. He said at that time he had supported that endorsement. Then he continued that he thought that he had discharged his duty as chairman of the Governors conference and would like to tell us his opinion of the bill after he had read it.

He went on and gave a devastating analysis, recommending against the enactment of this bill. Four of the five Governors testified and found fault with the bill and said it should not be enacted into law until it was tested and proved. They pointed out the disastrous results it would have in their States. I shall refer to that testimony later.

I wanted to dispel the idea that this plan has been endorsed before our committee by the Governors conference. I know Governors have wired in recently that they want this plan. They have been told how much it would benefit their States if they could get it. I shall discuss that a little later to point out that this plan has been misrepresented, that it does not represent a saving to the States in their overall expenditures to the extent that they have been led to believe. In fact, the results will be a larger cost to the States.

I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. Looking at the charts the Senator has had set up in the rear of the Chamber, I notice it is stated that the figures represent current law and medicaid. I notice that, in the example of Delaware, for all brackets of income from zero on up, the total for the medicaid payment would be $437, but looking at the other chart covering New York, the total average medicaid payment would be $1,153. I was going to ask the Senator how such a difference could exist between two cities.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Each State can set its own welfare payment level, and the Federal Government participates on a matching basis. The States can balloon its cost. Therefore, to that extent it is a wide-open ticket into the Federal Treasury on a matching formula basis. This bill, however, does not correct that open-end formula either.

Mr. MILLER I appreciate the answer.

Is it not true that that was one of the reasons why the Senate Finance Committee indicated to the department that the plan as originally sent over by the House, which had been worked on by the House Ways and Means Committee, was defective in that it would cause a discrepancy which would result in a disincentive to work? As a result of that, did not the department come back to the Finance Committee and suggest a family health plan to replace medicaid in the case of this program?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes, and the officials of the department said they were going to come back in with a recommendation that food stamps could be turned into cash, and I notice some of the representatives of the Government have indicated the food stamp allowance would be $800, raising the payments from $1,600 to $2,400. If that took place it would increase the cost significantly. The department also said they were going to come in with a health plan next year. This proposed bill would become a part of the health plan. Payments would be made by the wage earners, and then to make that equitable they were going to deduct it from those on relief. They would deduct from welfare recipients a certain amount of withholding on their cash benefits in order to pay part of their health insurance.

The mathematical result would be that if the health plan which they had in mind went into effect next year it would reduce the cash benefits proposed under the bill. It would mean that we would start them with a certain amount of cash this year, with broad medical coverage, and next year we would reduce that amount.

My argument in the committee was why did we not take the health plan and the food stamp plan and all they plan to do and consider it all in one package.

These welfare benefit programs are interrelated.

I was amazed when the Department told our committee that in deciding on the so-called $1,600 cash plan for a family of four, they had made no effort to relate it as to how it would affect various programs that would be triggered into operation. For example, if a person gets State supplemental help he automatically gets medicaid. In New York a man earning $6,000 would under this bill get $459 State supplement. That triggers medicaid benefits for his family, which, on the average, is worth $1,153. If he earns just a few dollars over that he loses his medical insurance overnight, in one notch. We cannot correct those notches if we do not recognize that they exist. This man earning $6,000 dare not get an increase in salary to $7,000. If he does he will take a cut in take-home pay of over $1,300. Yet they call this a work incentive program. It is the most diabolical incentive program for increased dependency on welfare I have ever seen presented to Congress. This is an incentive not to work. It is an incentive to pay people more not to improve themselves in life. If they do not go to work or if they do not make an effort to improve their present earning capacity they have more benefits from the Government.

I have said for some time that we need a revision of the present welfare laws. I had hoped we could get that reform in the last year I shall be serving in the Senate. It is something we have been advocating for years. It is something we need desperately, but we do not have it here. I hope, regardless of the outcome in this debate, Congress will go ahead and reform the welfare system. But when it does, it must not freeze into the new law all the inequities of the present law.

Some say that politically Congress dare not touch existing programs. Congress should not freeze benefit that everybody is getting, and say that later it will enact the reform.

To me reform is taking away from somebody something he is getting to which he is not entitled, and the other side of the coin is that it would be giving to somebody something he is not getting but to whch he is entitled. It takes both sides of the coin if we are going to reform welfare. The administration has been looking at only one side; and that is, that it dare not reduce anybody's benefits, so they propose to correct it by bringing everybody up to these inequities. Once Congress does that we will expand and double the welfare rolls.

I think what we need is a program that will give a real incentive to American people to get off welfare so that they will want to make more to bring home to their families. There is no way in the world we are going to correct our welfare program other than by getting one that will financially encourage a man to support his family. There is no other way to correct the present welfare system, which we have been perpetuating generation after generation, than to give the father or the mother the dignity of a job, no matter what it is, the dignity of a paycheck, the dignity of coming home to his children with money to support them.

That is the reason I say we have to furnish jobs. Let them earn it. Let them work, and encourage them to improve their lot in life, and by all means encourage them to establish families, yes, get married and establish their families, rather than pay, as I pointed out earlier, a $1,300 cash premium to a young couple if they will have an illegitimate baby before they get married. It is indefensible to support a bill that encourages illegitimacy and call it reform. That is not reform; that destroys everything we stand for in this country—good family life.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, would the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I am trying to bring out a part of the history of the development of this whole thing in the Committee on Finance, specifically with respect to medicaid and the so-called family health plan.

It is my recollection that at the time of the original hearings and the charts, we found this horrible discrepancy and these horrible disincentives in the plan, and then, when the department came back with a number of revisions, one of the major revisions that it had, which was incorporated in a series of charts, was doing away with medicaid and replacing it by this family health plan, with a contributory feature; and it was on that basis that certainly a good number of the disincentives have been cranked out of the plan. Does the Sentor from Delaware recall that?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes, I do.

Mr. MILLER. Does the Senator from Delaware recall that?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes, I do.

Mr. MILLER. Does the Senator from Delaware also recall that when some of the members of the committee expressed great interest in the family health plan, we were told that it would not be possible for the department to prepare and present the legislative language for this plan until sometime early next year?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. And that was several months ago, that they said that, was it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask either the Senator from Delaware or the proponent of the amendment, the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), if I could have his attention, whether or not the pending Ribicoff-Bennett amendment makes any provision at all for this family health lpan.

Mr. RIBICOFF. No. There is no provision for a family health plan. As the Senator has stated, the administration proposed that at the beginning of the coming year, 1971, it would submit to the Finance Committee and to Congress its own health program, to take care of this basic need.

I think it should be pointed out that under the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal, the overall plan does not go into effect until July 1, 1972, for the working poor and January 1, 1972, for others.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator from Delaware permit a further question by the Senator from Iowa to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. And I might add that any revisions that had to be made because of the health provisions that would be presented could be revised between the time we come back, whenever that is, in January 1971, and July 1972. I have had in mind all the time that somewhere during the course of this testing, we would watch the testing very carefully in our oversight function, to see how it is working out, and then, as a result of what we discovered in these tests, undoubtedly we would be called on and we would want to initiate revisions of our own.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Connecticut has made a point, but he knows that I, and I would guess practically everyone else on the Finance Committee, thoroughly agreed as far as the testing program was concerned. But the Senator's response seems to indicate that since this plan would not go into effect for quite a while, the Senate and Congress would have a chance to do something about medicaid and put in a family health plan in the interim. I suppose if Congress can do that, we could also suggest that sometime before this whole thing goes into effect, Congress can do practically anything else with the plan by legislative action.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Yes, they could.

Mr. MILLER. If that is so, then, of course, that raises the natural question, why must we go ahead on a plan that is to become effective? Why not just the test program?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I think what we are trying to do is recognize that to put this plan into effect is very complicated. The administration has a lot of work to do even to get ready for July 1, 1972. It could not get ready for July 1, 1972 unless it felt that there was a reasonable or good probability that this was going to become law. If we did not have the triggering device that this plan goes into effect July 1, 1972, if the tests proved successful, and that if Congress did not reject, by either House, the proposal, then it could not make all those plans. This is very complex, involving many people, something like 14,000 in the 50 States and it is going to take a great deal of planning.

That is where those of us on the minority of the committee differed from the committee itself as to merely wanting the tests; we wanted the tests plus a trigger that it would go into effect July 1, 1972.

I think these are the safeguards against the fear of many who have doubts about this plan. I cannot quarrel with anyone who has doubts. I must confess that I have some doubts, too. But that is why we thought of the device of having the test plan, on a good basis in two areas.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator from Delaware permit a further question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Well, Mr. President, if I may interject for just a moment, I do not wish to monopolize this discussion. I am about halfway through my analysis of this bill. I would like to wait and pursue this later and yield the floor to other Senators, after yielding first to the Senator from Illinois, who has been waiting patiently. Then, I understand we are coming in at 9 o'clock Monday——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes. Would the Senator from Illinois yield on that point?

Mr. PERCY. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator from Delaware give the Senate an idea of about how much longer he intends to pursue this subject this afternoon?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I would like a reasonable opportunity to pursue it. Several Senators want to leave, and I think this is important enough not to present it to an empty Chamber. I appreciate the attendance we have had here, which has been very good. But I would not want to tire us out. We did come in at 9 this morning, and I was wondering if there would be any objection, at the conclusion of this discussion and yielding around, to asking unanimous consent that after we resume consideration of this bill Monday, I could proceed and call it the same speech.

Mr. MANSFIELD. May I say that as far as the leadership on this side is concerned, we are perfectly agreeable to such a proposal, but may I also say that I would hope that sometime soon we would have the opportunity to vote on this proposal, in which the administration has such a significant and overriding interest, either in whole or in part, on the basis of a time limitation or on the basis of the agreement suggested some days ago by the distinguished Senator from Delaware; because we ought to face up to it in some way or other, and insofar as we can, obviate the President's expressed wish or desire or suggestion that if we did not face up to this and several other proposals, he intends to consider withholding his signature from the resolution which has passed both hours calling us back on January 21.

So I am perfectly agreeable to what the Senator suggests. I only wish there were some way we could get down to voting on this conglomerate bill, just so the Senate can dispose of it one way or another.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I will yield in just a moment.

I point out that the Senator from Montana, the majority leader, has been very gracious and cooperative about this, and I will comply with either request. I can just take my chances to get the floor. I know that with a recess a Senator is allowed to speak twice. But I will leave it to the Senate as to how they want to proceed. I have tried not to monopolize the time.

As the Senator knows, since this bill has been before the Senate the past couple of days, by a prearrangement between the minority leadership and the White House I specifically was not recognized until others who were speaking for the plan had presented it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Just a moment. Is the Senator referring to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. No; I said the minority leadership. The majority leader has been most cooperative.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I know nothing about that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The leadership on our side——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I was not recognized before, and this was the first opportunity I have had to speak on this plan since it has been before the Senate.

I have done a great deal of work on this bill. I think I am presenting some reasons why there are problems here and some valid points which I think can be thought about by other Members of the Senate. I have brought out some of them, and I would like them to be looked at over the weekend so that Senators will realize what they are voting on. I should be able to complete this analysis Monday.

There is another point which shows the danger of legislating hastily on a program such as this. The Senator from Connecticut will agree with me on this point. I am not quarreling with the parliamentary procedure in which this was brought before the Senate. It is under the rules of the Senate, but when Congress tries to legislate on the floor, problems develop.

Consider this: Suppose the Senate passes the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment as it is now before us. It is offered as an amendment to the Scott amendment in order to get it into a position which deals with social security increases. I assume Senators will vote in good faith. Then after that, suppose they approve the Scott amendment as amended by the Ribicoff amendment, the family assistance plan, which is what the administration is asking for. So what will have been done? These amendments, if approved as now before the Senate, would repeal 90 percent of the Social Security Act that is now on the statute books and reduce all those present beneficiaries to a welfare status. Perhaps that was not intended, but that would be the result.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I will yield in a moment.

It may be an inadvertence, but the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) sent to the desk two pages numbered 8 rather than 7 and 8. The mathematical result is that if Congress approves these two proposals, for which we are asked to vote affirmatively, we will have repealed the social security benefits for every present social security recipient who did not establish an average monthly payroll of $468 a month. That means that more than 11 million people who are drawing social security benefits today would not get their checks after the date of enactment.

Someone said it is not as bad as it sounds; that they are picked up under the family assistance program, and they will be eligible under the pending bill. Do Senators want to advocate that drastic step? Yet that is what we would get. It may be that this was a mistake, but it is a mistake that was discovered only because some of us read the amendments before they were voted upon. This shows the danger of introducing a bill or sponsoring a bill and voting for it without reading it. That is why I say this bill needs to be analyzed. I venture to say that very few Members of the Senate have read either of these amendments. That is understandable in the closing days of the session.

There is no contradiction of this point as to the amendments' effect. I am not suggesting that our minority leader wants to repeal the Social Security Act——

Mr. MANSFIELD. It must have been entirely inadvertent. Any one of us could make the same mistake.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The sponsor would not have made the mistake if he had taken the time to read it before he submitted it. Conceivably, had the Senate complied with the request they would have called the roll and voted "yea" for it. It would have been the law; and the Social Security Act would in effect have been repealed. I am sure that this would have been detected before it became law, but it outlines the danger of a rush in the closing days of the session.

I say that those points need to be examined, and that is why I think it is indefensible to propose a new bill this late in the session that has already been rejected three times by the committee handling it.

This afternoon, since 3:30, is the first time any of us who oppose this guaranteed annual income plan have had a chance even to get recognized while the bill has been before the Senate. It is not the majority leader's fault. Let me emphasize that.

I presented a unanimous-consent request to vote on this bill with all the various amendments, and there are no controversial amendments in this bill that are not mentioned by the President as "must" legislation. He called for enactment of the family assistance plan, yes, or the guaranteed annual income, which is a more appropriate name. He said he wanted a vote. But he also said that he wanted a vote on the quotas and the Trade Act. Both are in the same paragraph.

I say this to the majority leader and others: Can they get consent to limit time on this bill? I tried it the other day. But can they get consent to vote on this bill now before the Senate, all the amendments, vote them up or down—the Trade Agreements and all the rest? Can they get that consent? The answer is "No."

So I ask, What is proposed to be done—vote on this amendment alone and then stop and let them know that everybody is for family assistance? It is a wonderful name. I wish the administration had put "motherhood" in there. That would have sounded equally good, although I would have wanted to modify that suggestion and say "wedded motherhood." I do not want to see the Government pay a premium if one has a child out of wedlock. Yet that is what the pending bill would do. Surely Senators want that corrected, but this bill cannot be amended under the parliamentary rules to correct. it We must vote on this bill as it is before the Senate. The sponsors of this bill would pay a cash premium to a mother to have a child out of wedlock.

Also; the Social Security Act will be 90 percent repealed under the amendments we are being asked to support.

The sponsor of that amendment should have tried to read the amendment being offered. I think that would be good advice to those who offer amendments the next time, because there is no question but that the amendment at the desk in effect repeals the Social Security Act.

I shall refer to another provision in this bill, and then I will yield. This bill establishes welfare benefits in States, if it is passed, at a level substantially higher that is being paid to all the draftees in the military. That means that if this bill is passed the salary of these military personnel will be supplemented by welfare. For example, suppose a man working in the labor force and earning $6,000, $8,000, or $10,000 a year is drafted into the military. We know the low pay he gets. This bill provides that his wife and children get part of that supplement out of welfare to meet the poverty level of payment.

What kind of law is that where it puts a man who has never been on welfare, who prides himself that he provides for his family and children, and a salary as a soldier drafted into the service of our country in Vietnam—perhaps he loses his life—at a salary lower than the welfare family is to get. I proposed that the salaries of these military personnel be brought up to at least equal the amount that we pay the same size family on welfare in this country.

I do not support a proposal under which we we will continue to draft men and send them to Vietnam at the risk of their lives to defend this country and at the same time pass a bill that says, "We will take care of your family. Do not worry about them. Do not worry about your children. We have a bill here that will automatically make your family eligible for welfare the day you enter the Government's service in the military."

I say that that is an outrage. I do not think any Member of the Senate would have voted against an amendment to make sure that this soldier, who is serving in our Army, can get from the combination of his military pay and family allowance the same amount of money, and get it as a check payable for his service to the country, so that his family does not have to resort to what he may consider to be the stigma of welfare.

We talk about reforming the system. That is another inequity that should have been correct yet the bill before the Senate does not correct it. The two amendments before the Senate, I repeat, go in the opposite direction; together they repeal 80 percent of the social security law. Over 80 percent of those drawing social security benefits today would not be eligible for benefits on the enactment of this bill as it is before the Senate, and as it is not subject to an amendment—that is, the Scott-Ribicoff-Bennett combination, if it is adopted.

The administration says it is for these two amendments. I ask anybody in the administration—I ask any Senator to stand up and say that he would vote for the final passage of this bill if these two amendments are approved as presently drafted. Yet, they cannot be amended under the rules of the Senate. Let us find out where the Senate stands on these points. That is why I am willing to call the roll.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, the majority leader indicated that he would agree to the request of the Senator from Delaware, if it were agreeable to the minority leadership. The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) is not on the floor at the moment. But I think I could speak for him. He did say earlier today that he wanted to be sure the Senator from Delaware had adequate time to make his presentation. I am sure, if he were here, the minority leader would not object to the request that the Senator from Delaware resume his presentation on Monday.

However, I should like to point out that the Senator from Delaware indicated he would like to resume the floor at 9 a.m. I believe he may be overlooking the fact that at 9 a.m. the Senate will be considering the SST issue under a previous arrangement, and the Senate will not return to the social security bill until 3 p.m.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is what I meant. When we resume consideration of the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is the intention of the leadership to afford a 1-hour period on Monday next to be set aside for a tribute to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MCCARTHY) who is retiring. We have been doing that for the past couple of days now. If the Senator from Delaware were to propound a unanimous-consent request to be recognized, we would enter no objection to such request, provided that it were to provide for time later in the day.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is right.

Mr. GRIFFIN. As of now, we will go back on this at 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I shall make the request that when I conclude today, I may resume my remarks as part of the same speech whenever we resume consideration on Monday on this same bill. I want to accommodate myself to the leadership. It is rather ironic that the Senate is filibustering on another bill from 9 o'clock to 3 o'clock and then is being asked to consider this important legislation in the dark hours of the evening. But considering what is proposed in the bill I can understand that. Maybe the sponsors do not want the light of day to shine on some of the inequities in this bill, but I assure Senators that with a modern lighting system some of us are going to enlighten them. Again, I do not want this to be interpreted that I am going to filibuster. I have been here 24 years, and I have never taken part in one; and I am not now.

All I want is an opportunity to explain my views. I know that the Senator from Connecticut would be the first to admit that this bill would not be before us even now if it had not been for the fact that I and others who oppose the bill made quorums and gave consent to meetings of the committee during sessions of the Congress. It would have been a simple matter at any point to get up and say, "I object to the committee meeting." This was not done.

I frankly did not want to have to go back to Delaware, having objected to this bill, without a chance to outline why I objected. I welcome this opportunity, and I have no fear as to the outcome of the vote after the Senators understand the bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I would like to say in addition, that if the minority leader were here, he would want, and I do, too, to join with the majority leader in his strong expression that we do want to get to a vote on this amendment. Of course, those in opposition should have a reasonable opportunity to explain their side. First and foremost, of course, is the Senator from Delaware. But I do share the strong feelings of the majority leader that we should, after all the facts are in, get to a vote.

Beyond that, it should be said, on behalf of the minority leader, that if there was an inadvertent error in his amendment, and apparently there was, it can be corrected. After we vote on the Ribicoff amendment, a correcting or perfecting amendment to the Scott amendment could be offered and considered to correct the error that the Senator from Delaware has pointed out.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. If someone found a flaw in the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut we could not offer an amendment to correct that. I am merely outlining what the problem is. Some Members are assuring their constituents that they are for these so-called amendments. I want them to know that they are endorsing a proposal which may or may not be amended but which, if approved, will repeal 80 to 90 percent of the Social Security Act of this country. I will ask this question: In order to see when we can get to a vote could I get a unanimous-consent agreement now to limit the time on all amendments before us so that we know we could dispose of them? I offered a unanimous-consent request the other day for 6 hours each to title III, which is the trade amendments, and 6 hours on the catastrophic insurance—I think we had that for 4 hours, but I would take either—and put a time limit on this plan for a guaranteed annual income. I wonder, can we get consent of the minority leader or the acting majority leader to the point that he could agree to a unanimous-consent agreement to limit time on the trade agreements and all amendments on this bill?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EAGLETON). Objection is heard.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I see the Senator from Massachusetts is on the floor ready to object also. I appreciate his position.

Mr. KENNEDY. I did not object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The Senator has no objection? Good. Then I renew my request——

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will not object, but I would like to comment in reply to the Senator's remark, before a unanimous-consent request is made. As a matter of fact, I will join in such an unanimous consent being granted. But there are some comments I would like to make, if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am glad to yield. The request was made, I say to the Senator, but it was objected to.

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is right, but I would hope there would be no objection. I do believe that the Senator from Delaware, as well as all other Senators who oppose the bill, are entitled to a great deal of time to explain their positions in opposition to this measure. It is complicated. I agree with the majority and the minority leaders, and the chairman of the committee, and the assistant minority leader that we would hope some time, within a reasonable time, to be able to vote on the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal. That should be voted on after adequate time has been given to the Senator from Delaware to explain his opposition.

I notice on the news ticker that the President, in a meeting with the leaders of the minority, mentioned the fact that the minority had an obligation to pass his program. So far as I know, there is no opposition basically from the majority to taking a vote on the family assistance plan. Most of the opposition to taking a vote on the family assistance plan that the President seems to want so deeply, comes basically from his own party.

I also want to point out—I do not have to defend the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT)—that it is not true social security may be impaired.

I think that there are a number of Senators here, to whom this matter should be explained. When the Senator from Pennsylvania put in his amendment, he put in a table that included pages 7 and 8. How it took place, no one knows, but the reading clerk, when it was presented to him, had two pages 8 and the journal clerk had two pages 7. So in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and in the record, on page 20620 appears page 7. What the distinguished Senator from Delaware had, when he went up to the reading clerk, was page 8, indicating that pages 7 and 8 were submitted with the amendment by the Senator from Pennsylvania. For some reason, the Journal clerk got page 7 and the reading clerk got page 8, due to some confusion.

May I point out to Senators when they vote for the Ribicoff proposal that at that time, when the vote is taken, it is definitely intended by either the Senator from Pennsylvania, myself, or any one of us to offer an amendment to the Scott amendment to correct this error. At that stage of the proceedings such an amendment will be in order—and such an amendment will be offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania—to correct the situation so that we would have tables 7 and 8. Not one single person in the United States would be deprived of one penny of social security benefits if we voted yea on the Scott proposal as amended by the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal.

I think we should make the record clear on that point so that if we vote for the proposal we are not jeopardizing the rights of the social security beneficiaries.

When I talked to the Senator from Pennsylvania about the position that was adopted—and which position the Senator from Pennsylvania made absolutely clear—he said:

> Abe, in what we are doing, I want to make sure that we in no way jeopardize or keep the social security beneficiaries from receiving the 10 percent social security increase and the $100 minimum, because I am totally for such a proposal.

So, therefore, this was due to some inadvertance. How it happened, I do not know. I put the blame on no one. But I do want to make it clear to the Senator that the social security beneficiaries in his State will not have their interests jeopardized.

Page 35 of the Senate Manual outlines the procedure whereby that would be made possible.

I would hope we would grant the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Delaware. I would also hope that we could agree before we left the floor on a time certain to vote on the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal. The President of the United States desires it. The majority and minority leaders desire it. I believe that a majority of the Senate desire it.

Whether this vote takes place on the 22d, the 23d, the 28th, the 29th, or the 30th makes no difference to me. But I believe that the President of the United States is entitled to a vote.

I would suggest this respectfully to the President of the United States. I do not think the Senate of the United States needs any threats. I believe we are trying to do our job. I resent the President of the United States making threats toward the majority because I do not believe there is any other member of the Senate fighting harder for the President's family assistance plan than this Senator from Connecticut.

I want to say that I resent any reflection cast on the majority leader or any Senator on this side.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I am certainly not casting any reflection on the motives of any Senators. It is very obvious that this is not a political issue.

I am on this side of the aisle, and I am expressing opposition to the proposal. I do say that as a loyal member of the Republican Party I always enjoy hearing on both sides of the aisle eloquent support for the President of the United States and his various plans.

It is wonderful to have such support, even though it may be on some bill on which we disagree.

The President also said he wanted his trade bill.

They are both in this same bill. They were both recommended in the same message in the same paragraph. The President asked for one right after the other.

Suppose I renew my request at a later time since we are all loyal supporters of the President of the United States. I made it clear that I am going to vote against the proposal, yet I am willing to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement after I have had a reasonable time to present my views. Others also want to speak, and they must be protected.

The same thing should be true about the trade agreement section. We are talking about the President's proposal. I remember the President in February made an eloquent plea to Congress about the need for the legislation dealing with the prospective strike of the railroads. Congress never acted. The President repeated his plea time and again. Nothing was done. We almost had a bad situation develop with the strike a couple weeks ago. All we did was to postpone that for 3 months.

Why was this bill not considered?

I think that should have been acted on. I would welcome a chance to vote on it. That bill has been before Congress for a long time. It has not even had the courtesy of committee consideration.

I only wish that we could have had this enthusiasm and loyal support of the President's proposals before. Even though it is late I welcome it.

I am willing to vote on this proposal. But on the other hand, there is not a single Member of the Senate—and if there is I will yield to him now—that will say there is any possible way under the parliamentary rules of the Senate, even if we vote on the Ribicoff amendment and on the Scott amendment, that it could ever possibly become law unless we vote up or down on the trade bill and on the welfare sections.

If all that those who are sponsoring this are after is only a vote so that they can go home and brag to their constituents how they voted, that is one thing.

I can tell the Senate how it can do that very easily under the rules. We can introduce a Senate resolution and ask for its immediate consideration saying that it is resolved that all of those voting for the resolution are for work incentives and for motherhood—perhaps I had better say wedded motherhood, because it would sound better back home. The Senate could pass the resolution and could also put in the social security benefits. We could say that we are for a 10-percent increase. Why not say 20 percent? It sounds better, and Senators agree now that it will not become law anyway unless we break this impasse on the trade and welfare amendments. Congress will be promising something to a lot of people on the eve of Christmas that every Senator knows cannot pass. I will yield to any Member of the Senate right now who would say that it could. There are 25 of us here. I will yield to any Senator who will stand up and explain how we can possibly vote on final passage of the bill before us even if we vote to approve the Ribicoff amendment within the next 5 minutes and approve the Scott amendment 5 minutes later. I would like some Senator to tell me how it can become law without facing up to the trade agreement and ending this filibuster. We cannot do it.

I do not see any takers who are willing to say we can do it under the parliamentary situation.

The Senate can vote on the proposal and go home and tell the social security recipients that they are for a 10-percent increase, for a 15- or 20-percent increase—I do not know why we should stop at 10 percent. Senators know they will not get it anyway. Why should we stop at $100 minimum. Make it $150.

This bill dies at noon on January 3, and every Member of the Senate knows it. It is not going to become law even if we approve the Ribicoff amendment under the present parliamentary situation. I say that as far as one Senator is concerned I will be a party to no such political hypocrisy.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may resume my remarks when the Senate resumes consideration of this proposal on Monday and that it be counted as part of this speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I promised to yield to the Senator from Illinois before. I forgot to do that. I shall yield to him and then yield the floor.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I have one question of the Senator from Delaware. My own support for the Nixon family assistance plan has been based primarily on the fact that there is built into the system an incentive to work.

As I understand the Senator from Delaware, he has come to the conclusion that there is a disincentive to work that is greater than in the existing welfare plans. If that is true, I am deeply disturbed by the analysis he has made.

As I have understood it, the bill has built-in financial incentives to work that are greater than under the existing welfare. But it does not rely solely on financial incentives. It has certain other incentives and requirements that are part of the plan.

My belief that these will work is based upon the fact that in Illinois for 5 years now we have had a requirement that a man who is a welfare recipient get training. That has caused about 50,000 people who were on welfare to have gainful employment as a result of these requirements.

My understanding is that the family assistance plan proposed by the administration does require registration for work training or vocational rehabilitation as a precondition to receiving payments; that it has a proved provision for direct referral to jobs, that it has expanded training opportunities, a requirement to accept suitable work or training, and an expanded child care program which would free mothers for work who otherwise are tied down, and enhance development of the child at the same time. Lastly, it provides aid to the working poor in removing the incentive to quit work for welfare. Those are all provisions built into the plan.

I cannot see why there is more a disincentive to work under the plan than under welfare, where many of the provisions I mention do not now exist.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I refer to the report to the committee of November 5, page A–25, and use the example for Chicago, Ill. Under the present law there are incentives to work. This is an example of a four-member family headed by a woman and refers to the net retained of each earned dollar. Under the present law when that woman goes out and works, with her child in a day care center, she can keep 54 cents from each earned dollar. Under this bill, the administration proposal, she keeps only 27 cents, which is one-half as much as under the present law. My point is that the incentive is cut in half. I think we need more incentive than there is under the present law. I want an incentive in the law where these people will be phased out of welfare.

In Arizona under the present law a person that trains himself and wants to go out and get a job gets to keep 62 cents out of the dollar, but if this bill becomes law he would keep 28 cents, which is a disincentive, compared with the present law.

In my State they would keep 71 cents today from what they earn when they get a job compared with only 23 cents of that dollar under this bill. There is not the same incentive.

In New York the cut is from 60 to 30 cents.

I agree with everything the Senator has said about the need for welfare reform, but the Senator has spoken on the basis of the analysis of this bill as they have been describing it downtown. I have said I endorsed the President's recommendation and still endorse what he seeks to achieve. I will support a bill tomorrow if we can get a bill with a mathematical formula to achieve what he seeks, but this bill goes in the opposite direction. The problem we have is that when these figures and different systems are related to each other there is not an increased work incentive, as they say, but there is an increase in incentive not to work.

For the four States that were selected we took two large States, Illinois and New York, and two small States, Arizona and Delaware, as examples. If a person gets $6,000 in Illinois after taxes he has $6,001, including the housing bonus. That is all the family would have left.

If that same person earns only $1,000 she has total cash in welfare payments and benefits in kind—food stamps, and so forth—equaling $6,197. That is $196 less than if she earned $6,000. That is not an incentive.

The Senator knows if you want an employee to have incentive you give him a raise. It is something to work for.

Take the State of New York. If the person is making $7,000, he has after taxes $6,209 in spendable income, but if he gets an increase up to $8,000—and every bona fide worker should try to earn more—he gets a net increase of $572 for that work. But suppose he spits in the boss' eye and gets his salary cut to $6,000. He gets a $1,303 increase. He has $1,303 more by earning less. That is not a work incentive program. I know the Senator will agree with me.

Take the Senator's State of Illinois and the person with a $5,000 salary. He has expendable income including welfare, rent supplements, and so forth, after taxes of $6,867, but if he works harder and makes $6,000, under this bill he would have $6,001. That does not make sense. If they make $7,000 they have $6,508 or $359 less than if he made $5,000.

Can this be called a work incentive program. The only incentive to work under this bill is to work to get on welfare.

Those are the points I say need to be corrected. This person earning $5,000 should be encouraged to train to do a better job, get a promotion, and move forward. The entire system of our country is that a man can start from any level in life and by adapting himself and learning his trade, increase his earning capacity so that he can better provide for his family. But a situation is created under this bill where a man who wants to provide for his family cannot afford to take a $1,000 increase in salary without losing $800 for his family. He is put in a position where he has no incentive to improve his earning capacity. I do not think the Senator from Illinois would support a bill that would do that. Surely that can be corrected.

I have said repeatedly, and I know the Senator from Illinois with his background and experience in business will agree, that there is no problem that can be put together mathematically that cannot be solved mathematically if one sits down with the will to do it. There is no doubt in my mind that these notches can be removed. I know they can be removed. But a mathematical quirk or problem cannot be corrected unless first one admits and recognizes that the problem exists.

Our problem has been with the Department. They are living in the clouds. They are out busily making speeches about what they want to achieve. I could take President Nixon's speech that he made endorsing this plan, and I could stand on the floor of the Senate and use it as an argument against this bill. I am wholeheartedly in support of his objectives. The Senator from Illinois and other Senators support that objective. My point is that the bill before us does not do it. These are not my figures on the charts. I am not up here speaking from my analysis alone. That is the reason I wanted to take the time of the Senate to outline just what is wrong with this bill.

These charts I am using were not prepared in my office. I insisted that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare prepare these charts and submit them to the committee with the name of Health, Education, and Welfare on them so that when I presented them to the Senate they would not say, "Well, JOHN WILLIAMS has gone nuts. It is inconceivable and it is hard to believe that these notches are here in this bill." These are the reasons our committee by an overwhelming vote voted not to report the bill. I think it is too bad for the Senate to accept when the Senate understands what is involved. I am not talking about a filibuster. The Senate knows I have repeatedly tried to limit debate in this instance I want the Senate to know what is involved before it votes, but then to vote. I want the Senate to work its will, but I would not want to see the Senate approve a plan that could only expand the extravagance of our present welfare system.

Let us not forget the taxpayers and wage earners who pay for this welfare.

That is the reason why I personally think the best course for this session of Congress would be as follows: I think the President and those who support this proposal would be well advised to proceed cautiously. I think the Senator from Connecticut would endorse this point. I am going to make the suggestion that this proposal be laid aside without prejudice and that when Congress comes in at the next session it take the time to try to work out a solution and do it without the administrations charging negligence on the part of the majority party or the minority party. We are not going anywhere if we try to turn this into political arguments. The question of whether it is a Democratic Congress which refuses to pass it or a Republican Congress which blocks it is immaterial. The question is, Is it good legislation which should be passed?

There is no man who respects the President more than I do. I supported him long before the convention. I expect to be supporting him long after this bill is gone and, I hope, forgotten. There is no question about that.

I think it is wrong to hold out the false hope that this is a welfare reform bill. It is not. I think it would be bad for Senators to go back to their States and say, "We in the Senate passed a program that is going to help you as a welfare recipient, we have passed a program that will encourage them to get off relief," when at the same time in the Senator's State, instead of getting 54 cents of every dollar they earn they will keep only 27 cents under this bill and in my State, instead of keeping 71 cents, they will get only 23 cents.

Can that be called an incentive.

Those people cannot understand those mathematics. They cannot look behind the formula. All they can do is look at the speeches being made, but those speeches do not solve the problem of illegitimacy or the problem of improving our welfare laws.

I repeat again, no welfare recipient will lose money as a result of this bill. One may then ask the question: "Why not, if you say he will get 27 cents instead of 54 cents from each dollar?"

He gets the difference in more welfare. Yet the dignity of that 54 cents as earning income is far better than 54 cents on a welfare check. That is the difference in my belief.

I think what we need is a reform bill that will remove these notches, a reform bill that will provide a bona fide work incentive so that a man on welfare will be able to see that the man who gets off welfare and enters the labor force benefits, so that the man who stays on welfare will be able to see that the neighbor who got off welfare and joined the labor force is gradually improving the standard of living of his family and getting some luxuries.

If we have a welfare program in which one welfare recipient sits at home and one enters the labor force, but the man who stays home ends up with more benefits, more cash, more luxuries, than the man who went to work, that is the direct opposite of what we want to achieve.

That will not reduce our welfare rolls.

I do not think the administration wants that result, but the Senator knows that in putting a mathematical formula together, with six components which they were not taking into consideration at the same time, a number of negative factors can come into operation.

One of the points that was overlooked in these notches is the fact that when a man works and earns a certain amount he pays a tax on those earnings. If he stays on welfare and gets the same amount he does not.

Another notch is that at certain levels, when he enters the labor force he has to pay hospital insurance for his family and is not eligible to receive free medicaid. That also creates a notch.

Another notch comes when he gets $600 or $800 for food stamps, and then when he makes $1 over a certain amount he gets no food stamps. That makes a $500 or $600 notch.

These notches have to be put on paper and recognized.

I was somewhat shocked when a department official before our committee admitted that prior to making any such suggestion with reference to all of these programs in which a welfare recipient may participate—and it is mandatory that in the Senator's State and my State they must become eligible—they did not put them together to see what the result would be or how they would be affected. All they did was to look at the first three lines.

If we look at just the first three lines and stop there it is a true work incentive program. There is no question about that. But it does not stop there, and these other programs are in the law. They are mandatory payments. I was shocked by that negligence on the part of a department for which we appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars, with all their experts, not figuring these together. That is the reason why I said earlier there is no excuse for it and that what we need is a good house cleaning in this agency of Government.

Perhaps if some of these people had been in what I will refer to as the labor force and had had to work for a living, they would be more understanding. Instead they are living off the taxpayers and just dreaming up ways of how to spend the taxpayers' money with no idea of where the money would come from. There is nothing more dangerous to society than an egotistical bureaucrat, and this agency is full of them. It has gotten to the point that it has affected them so that they cannot reason clearly.

All we need to solve this problem is some good commonsense. These are some of the mathematics involved in this bill before us. I do not think any Senator here could get up on any platform in any State, before any audience, and explain and defend this plan if they showed it to the people and explained how it would work. I do not care if it would be in the poorer sections or the richest of an area. I do not think he would be able to convince anyone that we should have a welfare program in which the person who works will get less than the man who stays on welfare. They do not want that kind of program. Not one single Senator will endorse that kind of program.

My question then is, Why vote for it at this time? Why not recognize that this bill should not become the law? Why not lay it aside? We know it is not going to become law at this session anyway. Why not strip the bill down to the first two titles, which deal with social security and medicaid reform? Why not strike out titles III, IV, and V, strike out the pending amendment on trade, strike out the pending Scott amendment, strike out the Ribicoff amendment, and have a gentleman's agreement that neither the trade amendment nor the family assistance plan nor the guaranteed annual wage will be offered in this bill? Why not say that they are going to be put over into the next session, and then dispose of the medicaid sections and the social security sections, and send it to conference?

I say that as one who is not going to block a vote on this question, if Senators want to have one. But I will regret, and I will leave the Senate somewhat disillusioned, if the Senate passes these provisions by rollcall votes, and then perhaps following that votes for a 10-percent increase in social security benefits and a $100 minimum, knowing at the same time that this bill is not going to become law.

Right now, on Christmas Eve, I think that would just be the cruelest political hoax this Senate could perpetrate on the aged. I hope the Senate will not do it.

If we strike from the bill titles III, IV, and V, strip the bill at the same time of amendments which are pending and which are nongermane—the Ribicoff amendment on welfare and the trade amendment—and have a gentlemen's agreement that we are not going to pursue them in this session of Congress, whether we are for them or against them, and do the business of this Congress, then I think we will be well advised to go home.

This Congress has done enough to the taxpayers and the sooner it adjourns the better for our country.

Let the administration appoint a committee from the Finance Committee, the Ways and Means Committee, and other interested parties and try to come up with a plan that will work mathematically and not have these quirks in it.

It can be done. Let them come up here with such a plan, present it to Congress, and if it is a reasonable plan, one that has a true work incentive to carry out what the Senator from Illinois wants, what the President wants, and what every one says he is for, I am confident Congress will pass it.

But if they cannot come up with such a plan, let us not put one on the books, that we know will not work.

Mr. President, I have gone beyond my time. In line with the previous request, I yield the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, looking forward to the time when it might be in order to consider the various alternatives that might be suggested in order to expedite consideration of this bill, and in order to facilitate the consideration of it by Senators, I am going to ask that the bill be printed with each committee amendment numbered.

In that way, Senators can notify me or other members of the committee which amendments, if any, they consider controversial to the extent that they would not be willing to agree to a limitation of debate on those amendments, and we could take that into consideration with regard to any motions to limit debate or to recommit with instructions, or any of the various procedural motions that might be available to the managers of the bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed with the amendments numbered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I would just like to take a few moments of the Senate's time to report that I have been reliably advised that the negotiations between the Japanese Government and our Government over textile quotas were on the verge of a successful agreement, but before that was announced, a decision was made by the U.S. Government to back off from our proposal.

This is a report that comes from an indirect source, but it comes from a source that at least seems to me to be reliable, and I think it is terribly important, before we act on any trade legislation which has been predicated on the theory that it was necessary to force some kind of agreement, to find out whether in fact our negotiators were on the verge of a textile agreement, and whether that could now be quickly put into effect, and would nullify the need for any further consideration of the proposed textile restrictions.

I am further advised that the textile industry, when advised of our proposal, involved themselves quickly to encourage our Government to back off from any agreement. That would certainly be a strange change of strategy, because all along we have been told that if only the Japanese would agree to some kind of voluntary restrictions in the manmade and woolens field, as they had already agreed in the cotton field, it would not be necessary to proceed with formal statutory quotas.

Apparently once that had been achieved or nearly achieved, if my information is correct, the textile industry in this country changed its mind and urged our Government to back away from its proposal and from the imminent agreement. For what reasons I am not told, but one of them might be that they were aware that the Senate was considering formal statutory textile import quotas, and felt that they could do far better with such statutory restrictions than they could with the kind of an agreement which I had understood they had sought and which I have now been advised was near a successful culmination.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MONDALE. I would first like to conclude my statement.

I think that this information, which has, as I say, been relayed through informal sources, ought to be the basis for an inquiry, and I shall make such an inquiry to our Government, to determine whether an agreement has been reached, how close to an agreement we are if it has not been reached, and the extent to which it is possible to now conclude that the informal understanding that had been sought is now within reach, and that, therefore, to proceed further with statutory proposals for import quotas becomes unnecessary.

I am glad to yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ERVIN. Would the Senator mind revealing to the Senate the source of this information?

Mr. MONDALE. I am not at liberty to do so. I do say I received it from a source I regard to be reliable. But in any event, I am sure our Government could quickly advise us of the facts.

I thought this disclosure was of sufficient urgency, in the light of the pending legislation, that it should be made public, and that we should find out from our Government precisely what the situation is.

Mr. ERVIN. Is the Senator unwilling to disclose the source of his information, so that some of the rest of us might be enabled to ponder whether it is reliable or not?

Mr. MONDALE. Well, I would only say to the Senator from North Carolina that the source, which asked not to be disclosed, is known to me as being very reliable. But in any event, we can quickly hear from the administration if they wish to disclose what those facts are regarding our latest proposal to the Japanese and one degree to which we backed off from this proposal upon pressure from the textile industry.

Mr. ERVIN. Well, I would say to the Senator from Minnesota that, while not undertaking to dictate conduct on the part of other Senators, the Senator from North Carolina would never convey to the Senate publicly information from somebody who was unwilling to allow his identity to be disclosed.

Mr. MONDALE. I say to the Senator from North Carolina that if this information which I have received from what I regard to be a reliable source is accurate, and Congress is not being advised of this important step, it is a very, very serious matter, which undermines the integrity of the legislative process, and I considered it to be of sufficiently serious import to raise this matter at this time, hoping for a prompt answer from the administration.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. ERVIN. In other words, the Senator did not receive this information from Old Nicodemus, who travels only by night?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, these seem to me to be very serious charges. I think that for the Senate to proceed on the assumption that they deserve credence would be a very risky operation. I can only say to my good friend from Minnesota, for whom I have the highest regard, that it would seem to me that if there is validity to the contentions that he has disclosed just now to us, we ought to be entitled to know specifically what has been revealed by his sources, and those sources should come forth and identfy themselves; and until they do, I would hope that the Senate would give no credence to them. It reminds me of stories that were heard during World War II, when there were all sorts of rumors about peace. It took a long time after those first rumors were heard before we actually had any peace.

I do not mean at all to impugn the message that has been brought to us by my good friend from Minnesota. But I say that I think it is important that we know, first of all, specifically who is making such a statement, and then check out with sources in the administration the accuracy of those statements. After these steps have been taken, if they both disclose that the statements indeed deserve credibility and are true, then I would say at that time, and only at that time, is it proper to lay aside any consideration of a bill that has, in the main, the endorsement of this administration, a bill that is supported by a number of Senators on this floor, as was evidenced by a vote earlier. Until that sort of documentation can be provided the Senate, I would hope that we would give no further serious consideration to the charge.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I would not have said what I just said unless I were convinced that there was a serious basis for it. I think this is one of the problems of trying to operate on such sweeping legislation under conditions 1 minute to midnight before the adjournment of this Congress, when there is no longer time to hold hearings to explore such things as the feasibility of such textile agreements or other kinds of international understandings. As I have said, I received this information from a source which I believe to be sufficiently credible.

Mr. HANSEN. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. MONDALE. I thought it ought to be raised. If it is wrong, it is wrong, and the administration can tell us. But I received it from a sufficiently credible source that I thought it ought to be raised.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. FANNIN. Would the Senator be willing to say whether or not he received it in writing or whether it was just a conversation, and why he would consider it so reliable when we have had rumors about rumors coming along on this subject? As the Senator knows, we have had information in the press continuously about these rumors, but they are just rumors.

I have been checking very carefully on this matter, and I certainly have no indication, and in talking with members of the administration have no indication, of anything like this happening. We know that just the opposite has been happening so far as the formal reports are concerned. Is it in writing?

Mr. MONDALE. I think that is immaterial. I can only repeat what I have said. I received it from a source and in a manner which I found persuasive.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. When the Senator received the information, was any effort made to check it with any administration official?

Mr. MONDALE. An effort was made to check it insofar as I felt I could. As I said, I am sufficiently convinced that it is a credible source, and I thought the announcement of what I had learned should be made at this time.

Mr. DOLE. Did the Senator make the announcement and then check with the administration?

Mr. MONDALE. I have checked as far as I felt I could. I think it is a serious allegation. The administration could make its response.

Mr. DOLE. With whom did the Senator check?

Mr. MONDALE. I will not go beyond what I have just said.

Mr. DOLE. The Senator cannot even reveal the source with which he checked?

Mr. MONDALE. I have gone as far as I am going to go on that.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I was busy conferring with the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) and the distinguished Senator from Delaware at the time the Senator made his statement, so I did not hear it. But I am told that he said that, on some source, he understands that an agreement with Japan on textiles has been entered into. Is that correct?

Mr. MONDALE. I have been told that it either had been entered into or was at least imminent, and that the textile industry got word of this, and our negotiators backed away from this allegedly near-agreement. So either an understanding has not been disclosed or we backed off from what was on the verge of an understanding in order to leave us in a position where we would continue to believe that it was futile to anticipate or contemplate that such an agreement was possible.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I should like to add this information to the colloquy. If such an agreement has been arrived at, it must have been within the last 2 days, which surprises me very much, because 2 days ago, acting in the place of the minority leader, I met with representatives of the Japanese Government in my office. I will have to check and get the names. The names of Japanese officials are difficult to remember and pronounce. They were representatives of the Embassy, and one was a distinguished member of the Japanese Diet, who came to me to plead with me to see if our Government would not change its bargaining position, that they were too far apart and they could not possibly agree to the severe conditions that our Government was insisting upon in the negotiations.

So I will have to say that that is very surprising to me, and I suppose it would be surprising to the officials of the Japanese Government who apparently do not know that such an agreement was arrived at.

Mr. MONDALE. I am told that this development occurred within the last 2 or 3 days.

Mr. ERVIN. Will the Senator from Minnesota pardon the Senator from North Carolina if the Senator from North Carolina would remind the Senator from Minnesota that these negotiations have been carried on under the auspices of the Department of Commerce, and if the Senator from North Carolina would further suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that there is a telephone line—many telephone lines—to the Department of Commerce, which could have been resorted to in order to ascertain the validity of these rumors?

Mr. MONDALE. As the Senator from North Carolina may know, these negotiations are being conducted under the direction of Mr. Peter Flanigan, of the White House.

Mr. ERVIN. But the Senator knows that the Department of Commerce has worked on them in conjunction. As a matter of fact, the Secretary of Commerce has personally attempted to get negotiations underway and has engaged in many of them himself.

Mr. MONDALE. It is my understanding, and has been for some time, that the principal negotiator for the textile agreements is Mr. Flanigan, although initially the Commerce Department and its Secretary were principally involved, and that the situation as I describe it is now essentially correct.

Mr. ERVIN. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota whether he has any reason to believe that Mr. Flanigan cannot be reached by telephone?

Mr. MONDALE. Just permit me to say that, as I indicated earlier, I have received this information from a reliable source. I believe that it is essentially accurate. At this moment, with so few legislative hours to go, and affecting, as it does, a fundamental issue of national trade policy, I thought it important to make this known.

Mr. ERVIN. Does the Senator from Minnesota think they are going to decide national trade policies on such rumors as this?

Mr. MONDALE. For example, just a few moments ago it was proposed that we agree on a unanimous time agreement on the trade legislation, which could have been taken and agreed to without knowledge of this occurrence. I think that would be a very serious situation.

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator from North Carolina would be very glad to vote early Monday morning on the trade agreement and would make a unanimous-consent request to that effect had he any anticipation that it might be granted.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. What type of agreement was contemplated by the report the Senator has—a voluntary agreement on the part of the Japanese to limit their exports to this country? I do not quite understand the nature of the agreement the Senator indicates was about to be entered.

Mr. MONDALE. This is at the heart of the whole controversy surounding the need for legislation to impose arbitrary trade quotas by statute affecting textiles. The argument has been widely discussed that if only the Japanese would reach an understanding with our Government for some sort of informal restraint on the importation or the exportation of Japanese textiles into the United States, an understanding affecting manmade and woolen fabrics, such as that which now has been reached and long since reached in the cotton textile field, it might not then be necessary to have statutory restrictions.

The development which I have reported earlier would have a fundamental bearing on whether any action would be needed by Congress by way of statutory restrictions on textile quotas.

Mr. STEVENS. If I may interrupt there——

Mr. MONDALE. Because we are within minutes or hours or days from adjournment of this Congress, because we are being presented with proposals for limiting debate on the trade bill which I regard as being one involving revolutionary changes in American trade policy, and because I received the information I had earlier reported on the source which I found to be fully credible, I thought it important to make that disclosure.

Mr. STEVENS. I might say to the Senator that I happen to be one of those who voted with him on this matter, but on the other hand, if the Senator's report is one on a voluntary quota system, which is what the Japanese Government saw fit to impose on the steel exports about 2 years ago and then promptly disregarded, I might seriously have to consider changing my mind. It may be that if the Senator is indicating we should not act in the Congress on the basis of some unilateral representation to the Japanese Government, that they are ready now to take action and indicate, because the passage of the trade bill is imminent, that they would be willing to enter into some form of voluntary agreement on their part, that is one thing; but if the Senator is indicating that our Government and theirs are about ready to enter into a solemn agreement that would be presented to the Senate for ratification, that is an entirely different matter. If I had been the Senator, I would have checked that out before putting it out to the public.

Mr. MONDALE. This is not a proposed treaty which would require our ratification. This is an informal trade proposal between the United States and Japan. My understanding is that the proposal that was offered either provided the basis of agreement or was immediately in danger of providing the basis of agreement and was an offer by this Government to the Japanese.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, under the usual agreement, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1443, H.R. 17550.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

H.R. 17550, to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a previous order was entered into which granted to the distinguished senior Senator from Delaware (Mr. WILLIAMS) the right to the floor. I ask unanimous consent that prior to the recognition of the Senator from Delaware, notwithstanding that order, that I might be recognized and that later, when the Senator from Delaware is recognized, he be recognized under the terms of the order as set forth in Saturday's session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, President Nixon is to be commended for his statements and his position in favor of welfare reform.

For about 2 years now and prior thereto, President Nixon has called the attention of the country to our welfare program which has grown up over a period of some three decades. He has pointed out its problems. He has called for a reform of our welfare program.

As I have listened to his speeches and read them, I have been impressed by the statement that he made, over and over again, that he wanted to give the people the opportunity to transfer from the welfare rolls to payrolls.

Mr. President, President Nixon, I believe, was speaking for a great many people in this country when he pointed out that our welfare program needed a complete overhauling. That implies that there are abuses, that there are practices that have sprung up that are not desirable. The demand for reform implies that some changes should be made for the benefit of the recipients and for future recipients. It also implies that we should do a better job in spending the public's money for welfare.

It is not surprising that throughout the length and breadth of this land, thoughtful people have joined the President in a request and a demand for welfare reform. As a matter of fact, the committees of this Congress for several years have felt the need for reform of our welfare laws.

Some new provisions have been written. Some of them have worked out the way we expected. Some of them have not. Some other provisions were worked out in the current bill. There is no opposition to genuine welfare reform.

Mr. President, the issue before us is not welfare reform. The choice that the Senate faces is the acceptance or rejection of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment. I submit there is not one iota of reform in that amendment. I submit that it freezes into the law all of the abuses that have sprung up over the last 30 years. I submit that the amendment is not drawn to deal with the problems that the average citizen would describe as problems needing attention for welfare reform.

I am aware that welfare reform is defined differently by different people. Were we to go to a county seat in my native State of Nebraska and stop a farmer on the street and ask him, "Do you favor welfare reform and if so, what is welfare reform and what would you like to have changed?" he would have an answer dealing with some of the changes he thinks ought to be made in our welfare program.

As a taxpayer he perhaps has tried to hire help at times. I think also that he is a humanitarian. He perhaps knows some families that are on welfare. He will have some ideas.

Mr. President, if we were to go to some of our colleges and universities and seek out an educator who had specialized in the field of social sciences and social welfare and ask him what welfare reform is, we would get another answer.

Mr. President, were we to approach some of our older citizens who are living on a very meager amount of money and who have worked hard all of their lives and ask them what welfare reform is and what they would like to have changed, we would get another answer.

It is true that there has not been agreement on just what welfare reform means.

I think we must all agree, however, it means that we put more justice into the program. I think it means that if there is an individual who is suffering from misfortune, who has had no opportunities and his need is desperate, that he should be treated in a humane and a generous way. But, by the same token, I think it means that if there is someone who has not tried very hard, who is brazen and greedy and is studying the loopholes to see how he can get more, that it means justice for that person also.

Mr. President, I am willing to admit that the abuses are few in number numerically, but there is a grave issue involving the abuse of the welfare procedure. It is not only the savings in dollars and cents. It is something else.

If a welfare program is improperly drawn, if individuals who should not be on welfare are on welfare, even though they are few in number, it tends to polarize the population, it tends to create an animosity and resentment against the recipients of welfare. That is most unfair to the unfortunate person who is on welfare because of no choice of his own. Therefore it is in the interest of the poor, it is in the interest of the unfortunate, that we have welfare reform. That includes the removal from the rolls of those few cases that should not be on there or who are included on the rolls for an excessive amount because of some loophole in the law.

Mr. President, I am willing to say without contradiction that there is no basic welfare reform whatever in the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am happy to yield to the Senator from Georgia and ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the distinguished Senator from Georgia without losing my right to the floor and without having my resumption count as a second speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, is it not a fact that rather than reform the program, the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment actually compounds the errors of the existing programs and extends welfare benefits and increases them from 11 million citizens to 24 million the first year?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TALMADGE. Is it not a fact, also, that there would be an additional cost of about $4 billion a year or perhaps more.

Mr. CURTIS. That is the first estimate. And if our experience under this proposal is anything like the experience with medicaid, it may be much more than that.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, did we not find that the estimates of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare with respect to medicaid were exactly 1,000 percent in error?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think that is an understatement.

Mr. TALMADGE. And if that would be true in this instance and if the estimates were as wrong with respect to the guaranteed income bill as they were with respect to the medicaid bill, then the cost would be in excess of $40 billion extra a year.

Mr. CURTIS. As a matter of fact, amendments have been proposed and printed to the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment that admittedly would raise the cost up to $40 billion to $50 billion. It is not unrealistic to believe that if this is ever to become a law, suggestions like that will be made.

Mr. TALMADGE. Is it not true that if this amendment were to become law, 12 percent of the citizens of the United States of America would immediately become eligible for welfare?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is correct. In my own State of Nebraska, 3 percent of the population now draw welfare payments that are financed in part by the Federal Government. It is estimated that should this proposal become law, instead of 3 percent, it will then be 11.8 percent or an incerase of almost fourfold.

Mr. TALMADGE. I have the figures on the estimates for Nebraska, if the Senator will permit me to read them.

The recipients as of January 1970 in Nebraska numbered 43,550.

Under the proposed amendment it would become 167,700 which would be an increase of 285 percent in 1 year's time.

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct. I thank the distinguished Senator for his contribution.

Mr. TALMADGE. In my State of Georgia, if the Senator will permit me to read the figures there, we have 328,400 people on welfare. Under the proposed amendment it would immediately become 1,025,500, or an increase of 212 percent in the State of Georgia. According to the estimates of the department, 22.5 percent of the people of my State would immediately become eligible for welfare. But is it not true that some States' eligibility would be as high as 35 percent?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TALMADGE. Does the Senator believe it is in the national interest to have 12 percent of the American people on public welfare and in some States as high as 35 percent?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not believe it is. To do so would constitute a disservice to the poor of the country. Right now, because of abuses, and through no fault of the poor—the honest poor, and that includes most of them, the vast majority of them—there is a polarization, there is a resentment, and there is a criticism of it, and if we adopt a program that increases the rolls by great numbers it is going to create a public sentiment in this country that would make it difficult for the people on welfare and it would make it difficult for the children who are attending school. It may cause a wave of public sentiment that would end up in some laws that might be a bit harsh.

Mr. TALMADGE. Is it not true that at present many honorable, hard-working, and God-fearing people, through no fault of their own, are earning low wages, and they see other families on welfare not doing any work whatever, where that person on welfare may be able-bodied and could but will not work. Does not that create a great deal of dissatisfaction among the American people at the present time?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is correct. If that number that may become recipients is increased, by the same token there will be an increase in the number of cases where there might be a serious question.

Mr. TALMADGE. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. President, it would be my hope that every Senator in the Chamber would read four lines of this bill. I call attention to the very first section in the bill, page 4, entitled "Declaration of Goal." Listen to the language:

> The Congress hereby establishes a national goal of assuring all citizens, through work or assistance, in this decade, an income adequate to sustain a decent level of life and to eliminate poverty among our people.

There is not one word in there about welfare reform. There is not the slightest suggestion that this proposal is intended to bring about any reform. There is not the slightest suggestion in that language that there is anything wrong with our welfare program.

It is a declaration for a national minimum income. Probably many people in and out of Congress support that goal. I say to them, "Let us debate that on its merits, but do not bring it in under the guise of welfare reform when there is no welfare reform provision in it."

The country has been aroused in favor of welfare reform. They have agreed with the President when he has urged that we have a program that will lead to payrolls instead of welfare rolls.

I contend that that great body of public sentiment that has hoped for welfare reform should not be deceived and another proposal enacted which deals with something else.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. CURTIS. I am happy to yield. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might yield to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, without losing my right to the floor and without my subsequent remarks being counted as a second speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the distinguished Senator from Nebraska for the contribution he is making toward a better understanding of this bill and what we might expect will be accomplished by it, where hope is held out and promises made for goals and objectives that seem very far removed from the act accomplished.

One of the concerns of the Committee on Finance as they undertook an examination of the legislation was what might be done in order to encourage able-bodied people, people who had no physical or mental impairment, people who did not have the burden of the responsibility of young children, to accept employment offered them—how we could take this big group and insure that this new law would put them to work if work were indeed offered to them.

As I recall, the House proposed in H.R. 16811 that a person who was qualified in every respect and who was offered a job and refused to take such a job, or who failed to register for a training program, would be penalized $300.

I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska if that is correct.

Mr. CURTIS. I assume it is. I am not sure; but I assume it is.

Mr. HANSEN. I think that under the October revised revision the administration proposed that that penalty be increased from $300 to $500. I believe the testimony that was developed during hearings on the bill showed that a $500 reduction in family assistance would actually result in a reduction of only $241 in family income since benefits under other kinds of welfare-type programs increase as family income decreases.

Does that square with the Senator's recollection?

Mr. CURTIS. That is my recollection. Yes.

Mr. HANSEN. I think it is important to note what the net effect of this penalty would be because as I recall earlier in the hearings when representatives of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare were testifying it was developed and brought out that under the old WIN program—the work incentive program—some 8,100 persons having been screened in every respect, were certified by the Department of Labor to Health, Education, and Welfare with a recommendation that they be required either to take a job which had in each case been offered to them or to face termination of the support that they were receiving from welfare.

As I further recall, of this number of some 8,100 persons referred by the Department of Labor to Health, Education, and Welfare, only 200 were actually terminated from the rolls.

Does the Senator recall if that was essentially the situation brought out in that testimony?

Mr. CURTIS. That is essentially what the Senator from Nebraska recalls.

Mr. HANSEN. I think it should be noted, as was brought out in the hearings before the Finance Committee repeatedly, and I know the distinguished chairman of the committee probed hard on this point, that we were trying to find out what new steps, what new laws, if any, might be in the minds of the administration, in order better to assure that this very miserable record might be improved upon.

Does the Senator from Nebraska recall that the administration's representatives were able to come forward with any specific plan or new law that they felt would markedly change this situation?

Mr. CURTIS. I believe that an examination of the existing law, and the facts in this case will reveal, that there is nothing in the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment that in any way strengthens the work requirement provisions of the law.

As a matter of fact, in a moment or two I expect to refer to some facts that indicate clearly that the work requirement provision of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment is weaker than existing law.

Mr. HANSEN. The Senator from Wyoming will be very interested in the Senator's presentation as he goes into those facts.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I want to repeat my admiration for President Nixon in arousing the country to the need for welfare reform. I am thoroughly convinced, after listening to months of hearings, that the technicians who took over to translate the President's stated objective into legislative language have miserably failed the President of the United States.

I want to say something about the work requirement.

Present law requires that an appropriate welfare recipient must accept "employment in which he is able to engage" subject to ultimate loss of his welfare payment. Under amendment 1097, a welfare recipient would face loss of welfare only if he refused to accept "suitable" employment.

A big difference.

For instance, amendment No. 1097 would require that in addition to physical fitness for the work, evaluation of a job's "suitability" take into account a welfare recipient's "prior training and experience, his prior earnings, the length of his unemployment, his prospects for obtaining work based on his potential and the availability of training opportunities, and the distance of available work from his residence."

In other words, what is suitable employment? To answer that question, we have to take into account his prior earnings. So if someone has been earning high wages or a high salary and he becomes a welfare recipient, one of the factors in determining whether or not he should take a job, if a job is suitable, is that it has some resemblance to his prior earnings.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CURTIS. I am happy to yield to my distinguished chairman, and I ask unanimous consent that I may do so without losing my right to the floor and with the understanding that it shall not count as an extra speech on my part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. I would submit that the next item the Senator is coming to would offer an even better opportunity for a person to refuse to go to work, because it would require that his prior experience be taken into consideration in determining whether work was suitable. This would mean that a man could refuse to go to work either because he had no training or experience for the job he is offered or because he had experience doing something else. He could refuse to go to work on either ground, either because he had no experience in the type of work offered or he could decline to take the job because he thought he was qualified to do something else that would pay him more.

I am sure the Senator intends to point out further in his statement that the amendment as it is proposed here would provide that a job was unsuitable unless it paid the prevailing wage rate. I can understand how we might insist that someone get the prevailing wage as a condition to going to work if he has earned the right to draw benefits under unemployment insurance. But when we are talking about a person who has not done any work before and knows nothing about the kind of work required for a particular job, that is something else.

Let us take the situation of a person who is offered a job as a domestic. If that person has not done any work, even domestic work, is it not asking too much that the person be paid the prevailing wage rate of someone who has had experience in doing the work and has a reputation for honesty and for not picking up everything that is not nailed down and for not prying loose everything that is nailed down in that household?

When one combines all the conditions spelled out in the amendment in order for a job to be considered suitable, a person has every way under the sun to avoid taking a job on the grounds that it is unsuitable.

As if that was not bad enough, we have the record referred to by the Senator from Wyoming, where, out of 8,100 persons who refused without good cause to participate in a work program, only 200, or about 3 percent, were actually taken off welfare, because of their refusal to take work.

With all these other conditions of job suitability, it is clear that the only person who will go to work is one person who voluntarily wants to go to work.

The provision we are talking about does not relate to other benefits that are available from other Federal and State sources, or the fact that a person might be getting income that we do not know about, such as income from illicit conduct, income from criminal conduct. This is a pretty big idea nowadays, with thefts running about 3 percent of the gross operations of the average department store and with the big problem we have in dope today. It is very difficult to see how one in any seriousness could expect that this work requirement means anything whatever.

Mr. CURTIS. My distinguished chairman is correct. I think the language clearly points out that the work requirement provisions of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment are weaker than existing law.

In speaking of abuses in the welfare program, I do not think we can repeat too often the fact that the vast majority of our welfare recipients are honest people. They are good people. They long for something better. But whenever we permit abuses, we are treating those conscientious people unfairly, because the abuses will stand out in the public mind, and will constitute a stigma upon the unfortunate people who are anxious to do the very best they can for themselves, but still find it necessary to be on welfare.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CURTIS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LONG. Is it not correct that by permitting the kinds of abuses to which the Senator is directing himself, we tend to discourage, demoralize, and disillusion those honorable people who are trying to earn their own way, and who apply for welfare assistance only because they have no choice about the matter?

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct.

I continue, now, about the work requirement in this Ribicoff-Bennett amendment.

Amendment No. 1097 would define as "unsuitable" any job that pays less than $1.20 per hour.

Mr. President, I would like to see every person earn just as much money as he can, and as much as the traffic will bear. But what are we going to do if there is a community in the country where labor is being performed for a dollar an hour, or $1.10? I do not say that that situation is desirable, but it exists. If we adopt this proposal, it will be unlawful for a welfare recipient to go to work at less than $1.20, even though other individuals situated in the same community, facing similar circumstances, are working for less than that amount.

I am willing to admit that welfare reform is defined differently by different people. But can any of us eliminate simple justice as an important ingredient in welfare reform?

If the prevailing wage in the area for the type of work is more than $1.20, then that becomes the minimum wage for a welfare recipient. This would be true even though people in the locality not on welfare were working on jobs for less than $1.20 which may be the prevailing rate for this type of work—and even though jobs at these rates may be the only jobs available in the area.

In addition, amendment 1097 would set the following order of priority in providing work and training for welfare recipients who register with the Labor Department.

First. Unemployed fathers and mothers who volunteer;

Second. Family members 16 or over not employed, in school, or in training;

Third. Persons already employed full time; and Fourth. All other persons registered.

With this order of priority, it is highly unlikely that any mother would ever be required to accept employment.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a newspaper clipping bearing the date of November 29, 1970. The heading of this clipping says, "$12,000 Families Getting Foot in the ADC Door." The subhead quotes the welfare director for Douglas County, Nebraska—where Omaha is located—a Mr. Healey, as saying:

Rule sets welfare up for a kill.

Then the story goes on and tells how, because of a loophole in the law, individuals are drawing welfare under the AFDC program when they do not need it.

It just happens, Mr. President, that that story was based upon 10 cases taken from the welfare rolls in the State of Nebraska which were selected at my request. I did not request those specific cases, but I asked for 10 cases that illustrated the problem; and I think it is important that we observe what the problem is, and then consider it in the light of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment.

I turn, for example, to case No. 5. This illustrates the need for reform. This case comes from Sarpy County, Nebr. There are two parents and three children. They are on AFDC. The gross wages per month that the man draws amount to $799.85—it lacks 15 cents of being $800 a month.

But in order to see if having someone on welfare and still having him work would encourage him to work more and get off of welfare, Congress passed some amendments in 1967 which permitted certain disregarding of income in order to encourage individuals to work. Those disregardings included his taxes, his social security taxes, his union dues, and his transportation expenses.

So this family, after you disregard all those expenses, has take home pay of $612.33 a month.

Now, when someone applies for welfare, the caseworker sits down with them, ascertains what their rent is, their food needs, utilities, child care, care of an ill person in the home, or whatever it is, and adds that up. In this particular case, the budgetary need of this family was $503.50. The take-home pay was $612.33. They were actually earning $108.83 more than their budgetary needs. But because existing law permitted them to disregard their expenses of working, which in this case ran over $187, to disregard $30, and then to disregard one-third of the rest of their earnings, this family was drawing welfare of $170 a month.

I submit to the Senate: Is that fair to the rest of the people of the country?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. This is one of the same examples, as I understand it, that the Senator called to the attention of the Finance Committee, and the Department admitted that the bill which is now before the Senate would not correct this situation but would perpetuate it.

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct.

Mr. President, I want to invite attention to a very startling thing. When these 10 cases were laid before the Finance Committee, there were other facts which were sent in from other States, particularly California. Our staff had done some work on it, and an amendment was adopted dealing with this loop hole. A member of the staff took each one of the 10 cases I am talking about, applied the new formula to them, and it closed the loophole. That is in the Finance Committee bill. Do Senators know what will happen if we pass the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment? It will strike this reform out.

There is another provision in the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment that not many people realize is there, and that is a provision that a present welfare recipient is guaranteed by law that he will not be taken off the rolls nor will his welfare be reduced.

Mr. President, not only does this proposal fail to bring about any reform; its very provisions prevent any reform in welfare law.

It is not easy for me to stand here and oppose a proposal instigated by my President. I am a partisan. I plead guilty to it. But I say that the President of the United States is not to blame. I say that the technicians who took over, whether they be close to him or in the bureaucracy, utterly failed the President of the United States. They have not come up with a legislative proposal that would deal with the abuses and shortcomings of our present welfare law. They have not brought in a proposal that would do as the President wants done—have individuals go from welfare rolls to payrolls. The President of the United States has been failed miserably.

Mr. President, if we adopt the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, the provision worked out to prevent abuses such as I have referred to is out.

The State of Nebraska is not one of the most wealthy States. The citizens there have to work hard for their money. We are not blessed with precious minerals, coal or an abundance of oil or any other great source of wealth. Our people work hard and our population is small. But if the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment prevails, it will eliminate a saving to that State of $1,800,000 annually. I have received an estimate that that is what the State would save by the committee's language which would take care of these abuses. And if the Senate adopts the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, that is out. Not only is the language repealed, but, also, as I have said, it contains other language that guarantees that no welfare recipient will be taken from the rolls or have his welfare cut.

How on earth can anybody suggest that that is welfare reform? Well, they cannot. It just is not.

Mr. President, much has been said that the adoption of this proposal would save money for the States. I suggest that the Governors and the members of the State legislatures take that with a grain of salt. They had better read the bill. It was not such a bad idea when the clerk was required to read the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment in total. It was not a bad idea at all. Frankly, I think it should be read some place, and at least should be read by those who advocate it.

I am going to say something about the saving provisions in this bill. The savings provision in section 542 of amendment 1097 is designed to replace the Federal-State matching provisions applicable to cash public assistance programs for families with children, and for the aged, blind, and disabled. Under this savings clause, States would generally be required to spend 90 percent of their 1971 State costs for welfare payments.

That has been repeated over and over again. The fine print has not been repealed. Starting in 1973, this State share would be increased each year according to a formula based on the Consumer Price Index. Thus, for example, if that index rises by 5 percent per year, after a period of 10 years, States would be required to expend for cash public assistance an amount equal to more than 140 percent of their costs in 1971. Has any Governor been told of that possibility? Oh, he was told only about the 90 percent provision.

I contend that perhaps the President of the United States is not the only person who has been deserted in reference to this proposition. The individuals responsible for this bill, in my opinion, have been unfair to the President of the United States. They have not delivered a proposal that he discussed in the public forum for months and months, and they have not delivered a proposal that has been fully presented to our Governors and the members of the State legislatures.

In addition to the possibility of an increase in what the State has to pay in the cash amounts, there is something else.

In addition, any liberalizations of welfare programs which are not required by Federal law but result from optional State action would not be covered by this savings clause, but would come under the regular matching provision. Thus, if the cost of living increases and a State decides to provide its welfare recipients an increase in assistance to meet the rise in living costs, the State will have to pay twice: once to meet its share of the increased assistance, and once more because the rise in the cost of living will trigger an increase in the State's mandatory level of payments subject to the saving clause.

It should also be pointed out that the savings clause in amendment 1097 covers expenditures for cash public assistance only and not expenditures under related programs which might be expected to increase substantially if the amendment became law.

Medicaid is a good example of that. In many of the States an individual is eligible for medicaid if he is recipient of welfare. It was pointed out awhile ago that an estimate of the increase of the number of welfare recipents in my State of Nebraska would be almost fourfold, so that there would be almost four times as many people eligible for medicaid, and under the law they have to treat them all alike, but the medicaid expenditures do not come within this 90 percent savings cost.

State expenditures not covered by the amendment include those for administrative costs, the cost of job training and referral of welfare recipients, and medicaid costs. These expenditures should increase substantially because of the increase in the number of recipients. For example, the State of Oregon has estimated that under a proposal similar to amendment 1097, the State would in the 1971–73 biennium incur increased medicaid costs of $9.9 million, and increased employment program costs of $3.7 million. All of these costs would have to be paid by the State over and above the amounts for which it would be responsible under the saving clause.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the proponents of this measure should get out some telegrams to the Governors and give them the full story of what this bill will do to their State budgets. I think they should include in the telegrams the statement of the declaration of goals found on page 4 which does not have the slightest hint of welfare reform.

Another feature of the saving clause which should be noted is that it provides an absolutely fixed State cost for cash public assistance programs in a given year—if the State does not decide to adopt a more liberal program than is required by Federal law. There would be little incentive for State officials administering such programs to strive for effective administration since the Federal Government and not the budget of that State agency would have to bear any increased costs resulting from administrative lapses in such areas as determining the proper amount of assistance, preventing ineligible individuals from coming on the rolls, and promptly removing recipients from the rolls when they are no longer eligible.

Mr. President, while there are new provisions in this present draft known as the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, it is agreed that the basic program is the program that they have advocated all along.

A table has been prepared showing the proportion of the population of federally aided welfare under present law. In this table it is referred to as the administration's revision. I do not want to offer it as being identical with the pending amendment but I do believe it is substantially the same, so far as the figures are concerned.

I ask unanimous consent to have the table printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Do I understand correctly that the table which the Senator just placed in the RECORD might not be quite applicable to a table similarly prepared with respect to the pending amendment?

Mr. CURTIS. My point is that I think it is substantially descriptive of the pending amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I was wondering whether the distinguished manager of the amendment, the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), could tell us whether the table that the Senator from Nebraska has referred to does differ at all from the impact of the pending amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I might say, first, that I have not had the opportunity to show it to the Senator from Connecticut, but will do so now.

Mr. MILLER. May I say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have assumed, up until now, that the amendment before us would result in substantially the same if not the identically same results as the table which the Senator from Nebraska has placed in the RECORD.

Mr. CURTIS. I think that is correct.

Mr. MILLER. I do not know. That is why I thought perhaps the Senator from Connecticut, one of the cosponsors of the pending amendment, could tell us.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I would say that the table being offered by the Senator from Nebraska is substantially correct. There may be a slight variation of a percentage point, but for the purpose of the argument that the Senator from Nebraska is making, there is a very substantial rise and there would be some variations in the fact that we are paying, under my amendment, a couple $230 instead of $210—it might vary it a little bit. But for the purposes of the argument that is being made, the tabulation is very substantially similar, the Senator is correct.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator and I thank my distinguished friend, the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, this tabulation shows, for instance, that as of last January, 7.3 percent of the population of Alabama were drawing federally financed welfare payments and that if the program is enacted into law, this 7.3 percent will increase to 19 percent. In the State of Georgia, 7.2 percent of the population are now drawing such welfare payments, and if this proposal becomes law, it will then be 22.5 percent of the people that will be eligible to draw welfare payments.

I have already pointed out that in the State of Nebraska 3 percent of the population as of last January were drawing federally financed welfare payments of some kind, and that if this proposal were to become law the number eligible is estimated to be 11.7 percent of the population. That is an increase of almost fourfold.

Last January the number of recipients in Nebraska were 43,550. This proposal, if it were enacted into law, would make eligible an estimated 167,700.

On page 6, it provides for a determination of eligibility and, among other things, it says:

> Such determination shall be made on the basis of the Secretary's estimate of the family's income for such quarter, and such estimate shall in turn be based on income for a preceding period unless he has reason to believe that modifications in income have or are likely to occur on the basis of changes in conditions and circumstances.

The Secretary will have to estimate in advance the income. What will they do about overpayments? I know what will be done. The conscientious people will refund overpayments. The others will not. We will have trouble.

Mr. President, there are Senators who say that the bill does not provide enough. If we adopt the philosophy of this bill I do not know that I am in a position to argue the point. But I think it is well that we determine who would be eligible, even though they are fully employed, for cash benefits if this bill passes.

On page 5 we find how much income a family can have and still be eligible for benefits.

It says it will be $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family, plus $300 per year for each additional member.

That amounts to $1,600. If they have income of $1,599 for a family of four, they are eligible. However, there are certain items excluded from income.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. President, $720 is excluded. Then I return to page 9. It provides:

> Subject to limitations as to amount or otherwise, prescribed by the Secretary, the earned income of each child in the family who is, as determined by the Secretary under regulations, a student regularly attending a school, college or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment; which is a small amount.
> (2)(A) the total unearned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter . . .

It further provides:

> (3) An amount of earned income of a member of the family equal to the cost incurred by such member for child care which the Secretary deems necessary to securing or continuing in manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, employment, or self-employment . . .
> (4) The first $720 per year of income is excluded.

Fifth, food stamps are excluded.

Sixth, training allowances are excluded.

Seventh, scholarships are excluded.

Eighth, home produce is excluded.

Ninth, any amounts received for the foster care of a child living in the same home as the family but not a member of the family.

Those are specifically mentioned. However, other things must be taken into account.

Many of these potential recipients will be subsidized with respect to housing. They will be living in premises where the Government pays part of the rent. That is not included in the test for eligibility.

They will be eligible in many instances, perhaps all, for free medical care. That is not included.

Some of them may buy a home under the 235 program where the payments to carry their loan might be $180 and the Government might pay $100 or half of it. All of these subsidies are cash out of the Treasury to such families.

That is why, when one adds up all the possible benefits that in many instances can and will be paid, he arrives at the figures that appear on charts such as the distinguished Senator from Delaware presented to the Senate last week, and no doubt more of those charts will be presented.

I yield to the senior Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, we were speaking a moment ago about the Governors' conference endorsing this bill. Is it not true that the five Governors representing the Governors' Conference, when they testified before the committee pointed out that originally the Governors had endorsed the bill based on press releases from Washington describing the purpose of the bill and what the bill would achieve, but they said that after they read the bill they decided it was more or less a monstrosity and should not pass?

If the Senator will yield further I would like to read the testimony of Governor Hearnes in that connection.

Mr. CURTIS. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. There has been so much misunderstanding about this matter. Last Saturday, I stated that when the President outlined his work program and said he wanted to reform the welfare system I hailed it as a great step forward. I agree that the No. 1 job in the country is to reform the welfare system. There has to be reform but a bonafide reform would not perpetuate the abuses.

I quote from Governor Hearnes' testimony before the Finance Committee.

Governor Hearnes testified:

I would like to make one observation regarding this bill to the Committee. I make this observation as the Governor of Missouri and not as Chairman of the National Governors' Conference, since it is quite possible I may not reflect the views of some of my gubernatorial colleagues.

It occurs to me that the Administration has simply picked a figure out of the air—some $4.1 billion—and attempts to compress too many major and costly reforms into this figure. I would suggest that the Committee delay the adoption of legislation at this time which would draw into the welfare system some 14 million citizens now in the ranks of the working poor or under-employed. I believe the money could be used to better advantage in shoring up other aspects of this bill.

At another point he said:

Granting that attention should be given later to the working poor, it seems to me that welfare reform for the benefit of the present assistance recipients should be established and working before adding this vast new segment of the population to the welfare system.

Finally, the workability of the entire new welfare program is still to be proved. I agree with Senator RIBICOFF's suggestion that the reform measure be thoroughly tested prior to placing it into effect. I understand the HEW is funding experimental projects in Seattle, Washington, and Gary, Indiana, and another one on a statewide basis in Vermont.

Continuing he states:

Certainly, we could create staggering disorder if we would move into a program as vast as that encompassed by H.R. 16311, until a thorough trial period has proved its value.

With testimony such as that and with similar testimony from four of the five Governors along similar lines I think Congress would do well to weigh the advice of these Governors who have had experience in administering this program.

I now quote Governor Hearnes' answer to a question by the distinguished Senator from Idaho (Mr. JORDAN):

Senator JORDAN. Governor Hearnes, could you tell me how many of your Governors would vote if they sat up on this side of the table for the House-passed legislation with full implementation now?

Governor HEARNES. Well, Senator, I think those who would read the bill would not be for it in its entirety.

As he and other Governors pointed out in their testimony, after they read the bill they saw that it did not achieve the purpose for which it had been outlined.

Congress made a great mistake a few years back when it adopted the medicaid program proposed by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare on the premise that it would cost only $238 million more than the then existing Kerr-Mills bill, which at that time was around $350 million to $400 million. Today we are spending over $4 billion on that medicaid program.

It would be a great disservice to the country and to the States to put an entirely new welfare program of this size into effect when we have had no testimony or any evidence presented by the Department or the administration as to how it would work.

I shall not take the time of the Senate now to put in the testimony of the other Governors. I shall do that when I am speaking in my own right. But every Senator should read the testimony of these Governors who testified before our committee on what they thought of the measure after they read it. These Governors had endorsed it before they read it, but after they had read it four out of five did not endorse it. The fifth admitted he had not read it.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the distinguished Senator. What the Senator has said is highly important. Earlier today I pointed out that there were many items that constitute costs of welfare for a State that are not included in the savings clause, whereby the Federal Government guarantees that their expenses will not exceed 90 percent of the base year. That representation has, in my opinion, failed to provide the full story to the Governors and other State officials on what they will face if the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The Senator is correct. I talked with some of the Governors. They recognize and they do not dispute the fact that this measure does not provide any reform, as they had been led to believe they would get. But most of them are desperately hoping they can unload the cost of the existing programs on the Federal Government. They are buying this measure on the promise that it will solve their State budgetary problem.

The misunderstanding that develops from the administration's promise that the increased costs of adults over 65, the blind, and the disabled will not exceed 90 percent of their costs for calendar year 1970.

On that basis it means that the costs of that particular program will not exceed 90 percent of last year's cost, and that they will save 10 percent. But that is only a small fraction of the total program. Federal cost in all welfare programs, medicaid, food stamps, and so forth, was $6,200,574,000. That is the figure for calendar year 1969. For the States the annual cost was $4,260,128,000, and for local governments it was an additional $1,284,779,000, for a total of about $11.5 billion.

Now, the welfare cost of the program for adults, the blind, and the disabled is about 20 percent of that total annual cost. The States will save 10 percent on this 20 percent, which means they save 2 percent of the overall annual costs. The 10 percent savings is on only 20 percent of the total cost. States would not get that windfall, as many Governors think they will.

Furthermore, nothing is being said about who pays for the 14 million welfare recipients that will be added to the rolls.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the Senator. I mentioned a provision that increased costs by reason of inflation, the rise in the consumer index, must be borne by the State. If the index goes up 5 percent a year at the end of 10 years, the cost instead of being 90 percent carried by the State would be 140 percent of the base period.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes. Another point that should not be overlooked is that, regardless of how this bill may be modified or amended to achieve transfer of the cost from the States to the Federal Government, the ultimate cost of the program is going to be paid by the same people, the American taxpayers. As far as dollars of the American taxpayers are concerned, it is immaterial whether the taxes are levied at the State level and spent at the State level or levied at the Federal level and then sent back to the States, perhaps adding to it the cost of a bureaucracy in Washington. So there is not going to be any saving to the taxpayer in transferring the cost from the State to the Federal Government. All the cost of the program could be transferred to the Federal Government and relieve the States and cities of a lot of money, but the taxpayer would not be saved a dime.

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct. I would also like to point out that an expenditure by an individual State or an individual locality does not have a great impact on inflation, but centralized expenditures in the Federal Government under deficit financing have a tremendous impact upon the rate of inflation. Therefore, we are not helping the people of the United States, whether they be taxpayers or nontaxpayers, by merely transferring expenditures from the State and local level to the Federal level.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. CURTIS. We are taking money right out of their paycheck through inflation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. But I think the main point we should never lose sight of is that while we are talking about reforming the existing welfare system, there actually is no reform in this bill. The Department officials repeatedly told us that not one welfare recipient will be getting 1 cent less than he got this last year.

Mr. CURTIS. And there can be no reform in those cases where there is an abuse.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct. Those who advocate reform have been going around the country calling attention to the glaring examples of abuse under our existing welfare system. I agree that we need reform, but the point is that this bill does not reform it. The only way to reform the welfare law is by taking away or reducing payments to persons who are not entitled to those payments. This bill does not correct a single abuse in the existing program.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is correct.

I would like to call attention to four lines in the bill, which appear on page 28, lines 4 to 7, inclusive. They read as follows:

(1) the provisions of, and the rules and regulations under, sections 442 (a)(2), (c) and (d), 443(a), 444, 445, 446 (to the extent the Secretary deems appropriate), 447, and 448 shall be applied.

Mr. President, it is interesting to note what that means. That means that the States' welfare programs must comply with the Federal rules for eligibility. That exists even though a State is paying a supplement and is bound to continue that supplement. It means that the right to say who is eligible to receive is taken away from the States. It is placed in Federal hands. The States must comply with it, and if they have been paying a supplement, of it they have been paying more than the Federal share, they are obliged to continue that supplement not only for the present recipients but for those who will be added to the rolls under rules of eligibility over which the State has no control at all.

A while ago I called attention to one abuse that existed under existing law in the State of Nebraska, and that, if the committee version is adopted, that abuse will be corrected. I want to call attention to some more cases that fall in that category.

This case involves a mother and two children under the ADC program. The mother has gross wages of $455 a month. Under existing law, she is allowed to deduct the taxes, transportation expense, union dues, and so on, and child care expenses. So after all of those disregards, she has an income of $301.43.

Under the law and under the rules, an estimate is made as to what her budget needs are, taking into account all the necessary items of expenditure. Those budget needs are determined to be $259. She earns $42.43 more than her budget needs, excluding the $153.50 that is considered an expense of work.

But because of present law, $175 of the income is presently disregarded, making her eligible for a welfare payment of $132.57, even though her net earnings exceed her budgetary needs.

That is corrected in the committee bill. That language is stricken out if we pass the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment.

What is more, if the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment becomes law, there is a provision in it that no recipient shall receive less than he is drawing now—an absolute bar to any welfare reform so far as eliminating abuses is concerned.

The case that I have just been talking about is not what might be called the case of a culturally deprived person. She has a high school education and is employed as a presser in a cleaning establishment. Yet we are asked to pass a bill that would perpetuate that abuse.

Here is another case of a mother and two children under ADC. The mother's gross wages are $565.32. After deducting taxes, social security taxes, transportation, child care, and union dues, her take-home pay is $361.90. Her budgetary needs are $269. Her earnings exceed her budgetary needs by $92.90.

But because all of the expense of going to work is disregarded, and $30 is disregarded, and one-third of the balance, she is entitled to an ADC payment of $118.87.

This individual has had 1 year of college and is employed by a packing company. Her gross wage is $50 a month in excess of the beginning caseworker in the welfare program in that country.

The committee dealt with these problems and agreed on some language in the committee bill that would bring reform in situations like this. The Ribicoff-Bennett amendment strikes out that reform and carries a provision which amounts to the fact that you cannot do anything about it.

Let me tell about another case, of a mother with two children on AFDC. Her gross wages are $618.15 a month. The take-home pay, after subtracting child care, transportation, taxes, union dues, and social security, is $304.98. Child care is deducted, so she is only being charged with $304.98, when her gross wages are actually $618.

Her budgetary needs are determined to be $277. She is earning $27.98 each month more than her budget needs—earning that in counted income, which, because it is under $30, is disregarded. She draws an AFDC benefit of $140 a month.

This lady is employed by Western Electric Co., and her gross pay exceeds that of many of the welfare workers who administer the program.

Here is a case where the gross wages of the mother with 5 children are $399.10—almost $400 a month. Her take-home pay, after she pays her transportation, is $339.17. Her former husband pays her $130 child support.

So after the expense of earnings, she has an income of $469.17 a month. Her budgetary need is fixed at $423.50. Thus she has counted income of $45 a month over her budgetary needs, but, because of the formula for disregardings, she draws an AFDC payment of $110.70. She has a high school education, and works with a research organization. One of her daughters earns approximately $300 a month during the summer. Because she is in college, her income is disregarded also.

Here is another case: A mother and three children on AFDC. This mother has gross wages of $569.22 a month. Her take-home pay, less transportation, amounts to $435.88. Her budgetary need is determined to be $338.35. Thus her take-home pay amounts to $97.53 more than her budgetary needs. But, because of the formula that calls for disregarding certain of her earnings, she draws an AFDC payments of $115.54. The budget includes board and room expenses for one child in college.

Mr. President, the State of Nebraska has one of the most generous welfare programs. I think we are exceeded in the amount that we pay by only one State. The program is carefully administered. People are not put on welfare, ordinarily, unless there is need. But if they are placed on the rolls, the State and local units of government pay an amount that is adequate.

So when the State of Nebraska comes in and points out abuses, and points out situations where the operation of the program is not only unfair to those who pay, but also casts a stigma upon all those who are on welfare, it is not a matter of penny pinching; it is a matter of sound government operation.

Here is another case: A mother with one preschool child on AFDC has gross wages of $309.05. But her take-home pay, less transportation and other work expenses, is $202.90. Her budgetary monthly need is fixed at $171.34. So her take-home pay, after disregarding transportation and work expenses, is $31.56 more than her budgetary need. But because the law says that the first $30 shall be disregarded, plus one-third of the earnings thereafter, she draws an AFDC payment of $94.79. This lady has a high school education and attended airlines school.

Here is another case, of a mother and four children on AFDC. She has gross wages of $115.20. The take-home pay less transportation expenses leaves her $96.72 but she is receiving child support from a former husband of $315 a month. So she has a net income—not a gross income—$411.72 a month. Her budgetary needs are estimated to be $375, so the income in excess of need, is $36.72. But because $30 and one-third of the balance of the earnings is disregarded, she is on the rolls. The payment is small, but she is there for $25.01.

Mr. President, the existence of such abuses is a bad thing in any community. It creates discontent. It creates ill will. It puts a stigma not only on adults, but on children. And that is what we were hoping would be cured in a welfare reform bill. That is what the Committee on Finance worked out, and that is what would be stricken from their bill if the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment is adopted. All recipients are guaranteed that they will be kept on the rolls and that their welfare will not be diminished.

I will cite one more case. This is a mother and two children on AFDC. The gross wages amount to $468. The take-home pay, less child care and transportation, amounts to $253.29. She receives child support of $53.33. She has a net income of $306.62. The budgetary need is estimated to be $287. So her net income is $19.62 more than her budgetary need. But because the law provides that certain income shall be disregarded, she draws an AFDC payment of $140 a month and receives food stamps.

Mr. President, I am an optimist. I actually hope that by the time this bill is exposed on the Senate floor, just as the previous proposals failed to get a majority of the votes in the Committee on Finance, when the features of this proposal become known, it will be withdrawn by the proponents. It certainly should not be adopted and carried along by the momentum created in the country for welfare reform, because it is not that.

I again invite attention to the declaration of goal, and this is what it says, lines 2 to 5, page 4:

> The Congress hereby establishes a national goal of assuring all citizens through work or assistance in this decade an income adequate to sustain a decent level of life and to eliminate poverty among our people.

I am not going to debate that goal. But I merely point out that that does not suggest welfare reform, that that is another proposition, and the Nation has been led to believe that we had a welfare reform bill here.

Mr. President, one big, central issue is involved in this controversy: Shall we increase the number of eligible recipients for welfare—the heads of families—by some 12 million? How would we increase them? By adopting a new provision that one can be fully employed and be eligible for welfare. It is argued that that will be a good thing, that if someone works full time and his income is low, he should be put on welfare; that somehow that will be an inducement for others, as well as himself, to go from welfare rolls to payrolls.

In miniature form, that is what Congress undertook in the 1967 amendments to the welfare law, in a hope that, by letting people work and keep their money, or some of it, and still get a welfare payment, it would be an inducement to go out and work more and get off welfare.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CURTIS. I will yield in a moment.

The experience in Nebraska, and I am sure in every other State, is the contrary—that the provision of the 1967 law, permitting people to be employed and then disregard the first $30 of their monthly income and one-third thereafter, has led to a situation in which they are not closing any cases because one could have his wages and also get welfare. Yet, the staff people who took over a sound proposal of the President to reform welfare latched onto the principle that the way to reform welfare is to permit people to have their wages and welfare, also.

They should have examined the record as to what is happening when that principal has been in operation.

I yield to the distinguished Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TALMADGE. The distinguished Senator pointed out that this was sold as a work of incentive program, and he stated that, of course, all of us on the Finance Committee know that the very opposite is true.

I hold in my hand page A-25 from the data that the Finance Committee staff developed on this bill:

> Diminished incentive for low-income work under administration provisions. For a family of four headed by a woman, the net value of each dollar if she moves from unemployment with no income to fulltime at the minimum wage.

We have the illustrations cited—Phoenix, Ariz.; Wilmington, Del.; Chicago, Ill.; New York, N.Y.

Under existing law, she would retain 62 cents of each dollar she earned. Under the pending amendment, she would retain only 28 cents—less than half under existing law.

In Wilmington, Del., she would retain under existing law, 71 cents of each dollar; under the administration provision, only 23 cents of each dollar, which is diminished by almost two-thirds.

In Chicago, Ill., under existing law, she would retain 54 cents of each dollar she earned; under the administration revision, only 27 cents, which is exactly half of the present law.

In New York., N.Y., she would retain, under existing law, 60 cents of each dollar she earned; whereas, under the pending amendment that would amount to 30 cents.

Does the Senator share my view that that is work disincentive rather than a work incentive?

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct; it certainly is.

Mr. TALMADGE. Would the Senator yield in order for me to ask unanimous consent to insert these figures in the RECORD at this point?

Mr. CURTIS. I so yield.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have page A-25 printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIMINISHED INCENTIVE FOR LOW-INCOME WORK UNDER ADMINISTRATION REVISIONS

Mr. TALMADGE. I thank the Senator for yielding, and I compliment him on the great speech he is making.

If the American people realize what this bill purports to do, in my judgment, it will be overwhelmingly defeated. The Finance Committee studied it carefully in hearing after hearing, and the first vote got only one out of 17 affirmative. They finally managed to work around to get seven affirmative votes out of 17, and that is the best they ever obtained in the Finance Committee. Is that not the Senator's recollection?

Mr. CURTIS. That is my recollection, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. In connection with the points that the Senator from Georgia made about this not being a work incentive, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that tables presented to the committee and the analysis of the bill as it passed the House, which I mentioned the other day they have been changed somewhat by a revised bill that came back in October, but still the principles are there. For example, if a female head of a family of four, had $1,600, with the food stamp and other benefits she would get in State supplementals, it would amount to $3,366; and where that is increased by earnings to $4,180, if she makes $1,000; but if they worked twice as hard and made overtime, they go down to $3,100 or $360 less than if left to the one that makes a thousand.

If that same person works harder and increases his earnings to $3,000, that drops back to $3,766. In other words, the more they earn the less they have. They lose more than 100 percent of their increased earnings. It is not an incentive to increase earnings. It is quite the opposite. It is an incentive that if one earns money, he drops back closer to welfare because they are more than the earnings would be after taxes.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the distinguished Senator. It is true that the provisions of this measure constitute a disincentive to work.

Mr. TALMADGE. If the Senator will yield further on that point, I hold in my hand the hearings before the Committee on Finance of April 29, 30, and May 1, 1970. I quote from page 230 thereof, as follows:

> Senator TALMADGE. How many people on aid for dependent children have benefited from the earned-income disregard provision and to what extent have earnings increased as a result of this provision?
> Mr. HAWKINS. The number is quite substantial. May we submit actual figures on it for the record?

The proportion of women with some earnings within that program is relatively high; maybe the magnitude of a third or something, and I think we can——

Senator TALMADGE. Will you submit the full details for the record, please?

Mr. HAWKINS. Yes, sir?*

Those details have not been submitted to date.

That is one illustration of what the Finance Committee had to contend with, time after time. We found in different areas where delegations were made to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and we asked time after time what action or what decisions they would make on that delegated power. What it was was the power to write law and we asked them to submit that for the record, and they never have. That is what we had to contend with in the hearings. We asked for the information. They would state a conclusion. We would ask for the information to back up that conclusion, and it has not been submitted as yet. That is the tenor of this whole legislation. It is a conclusion, some economic theory, that more people will work if we make welfare more attractive, whereas the figures show the exact opposite is true; is that not correct?

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct.

Mr. President, I have stressed the point that the individuals at the staff level, charged with taking over the President's objective for welfare reform, and the technicians in the bureaucracy, have rendered him a disservice. I believe that they have. Some of them have not done their homework. When the Finance Committee started holding hearings on the proposal, witness after witness from the Government gave as one of the reasons for making welfare available to the fully employed, that it would stop the breakup of homes, that it would bring an end to the breakup of family life.

Mr. President, every time I was in that committee and someone stated that, I challenged them, because it just is not so. The breakup of families in the United States is due to many causes, not the least of which is the moral breakdown throughout the country. But, furthermore, their argument was several years late. It used to be that on aid to dependent children, we would pay aid to the head of the family, usually the mother, if the father was dead or if he was disabled, or away from home, and that is all.

So there was a father up against it, but if he left or absconded, his family could get on AFDC. Congress met that problem several years ago. It included an additional category in the AFDC program. That is why we call it aid to families with dependent children. They provided in the Federal law that the program was extended not alone to where the father was dead, disabled, or absent, but if he was unemployed. Consequently, it is not necessary, so far as the Federal law is concerned, for a jobless person to desert his family in order to get that family on the AFDC program. Also, the figures show that those States that run their program that way, where unemployed fathers can get on an AFDC program, the percentage of family breakups was as high as any other place.

The State of New York offers more assistance to families than any other State in the Union, yet it leads the Nation in family breakups.

I hold in my hand an article entitled "The Crisis in Welfare," written by Daniel P. Moynihan, and here is what he says.

It must be remembered that the United States now has a family allowance for broken families and that it is widely argued (although typically there are not five cents worth of research findings on the subject) that the availability of AFDC payments does lead to family break up.

In other words, Mr. Moynihan says there is not 5 cents worth of research to support the contention that by paying welfare to the fully employed will prevent family breakups.

Incidentally, I want to read again from Mr. Moynihan. This was in a letter to the Washington Post on Thursday, November 25, 1970.

I read just part of it:

By and large the attacks on the proposal from ultraconservatives have been factually accurate.

I think they have. I do not know what a ultraconservative is.

The statement there that the attacks have been factually accurate is correct.

It states further:

They understand well enough the basic principles of the legislation, and the essential details of its operation, and they oppose them.

This, at least, is a credible position. On those points I agree with this distinguished professor. It is based upon facts that are accurate. We understand what is in the bill and we opposed it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia referred to the fact that this did not correct the problem dealing with the family breaking up. The Senator from Nebraska pointed out that the city of New York, which has the highest welfare rates, also has the highest record of split families. We asked the staff when we were analyzing the bill to check the revised bill—and I am speaking of the administration's last revised bill in October, as I recall the date—to see what would happen under this bill if it became law in the cases of split families.

The following example is given of the incentive for a family to split up under the administration bill. This concerns a welfare family with an unemployed mother and father with four children and no other income.

In the city of New York if this family were to split and the father take two children and the mother keep two children they will increase their combined income $2,508 under the bill. They could get $2,508 premium for splitting the family.

In Chicago a similar family could collect $2,064 more by splitting the family than if they were to live in the same family unit.

In Wilmington, Del., they could get $1,104 more premium by splitting the family.

In Phoenix, Ariz., they could receive $936 more.

These are bonuses that they could get by splitting and calling themselves two welfare families rather than a single family unit.

I cannot conceive of Congress approving a social program which actually pays these bonuses to a family to split and divide the family unit. It is indefensible. It is directly opposite to what we have been told it would do.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, would that be considered the antiwedlock provision of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. It could be considered as one of them. I pointed out an example the other day concerning a young couple. This example was prepared by the staff, and I think it should be used again.

Family A consists of a boy 17, a girl 12, and a girl of 6. Family B has a girl 16, a boy 11, and a girl of 8.

If this boy and girl decide to get married each family thereby loses a dependency under this bill. They lose a $300 Federal bonus, the State supplement, the food stamps, medical care, and the extra housing unit they get as a result of the extra dependent.

If the young boy and girl get married they are off the welfare rolls since this is called aid for dependent children; they are left out until after the first year or until they can produce the first child.

However, under the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment if the girl gets pregnant and the boy does not marry her until after the baby is born, the families continue to collect welfare on them as dependents, and they end up with a cash bonus of $1,300. Think of it—the Federal Government paying $1,300 as an inducement for them to have this child out of wedlock.

I mentioned this example last week. I cannot conceive of Congress approving a bill which would pay $1,300 more to a couple that has a child out of wedlock than they would to the family that has a child after they are married.

As was pointed out a moment ago, a family of four children receive a premium of $2,500 if they split the family. That is directly opposite to the objectives the President has said he wants to achieve and what the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare has said he wants to achieve.

We can agree on what they say they want to achieve; however, this bill does not do it. For this reason the bill should be rejected. The committee by a vote of 14 to 1 and by a vote of 10 to 6 on another occasion rejected the bill's being considered in this session.

I agree with the Governors that we should have tests of some of these plans to see how they would work before they are enacted.

By all means the department should have set down a figure on what John Doe could have gotten under the bill, rather than writing up a lot of flowery language. These are the mathematical results that were furnished to the committee by HEW after we began to analyze the bill.

Mr. President, it is very evident that those charged with working out the details of this proposal have fallen far short of the President's goals.

Mr. CURTIS. I submit the matter can be brought to a vote. I do not desire to take more time on the matter.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, under the previous order I was to be recognized; however, the Senator from Connecticut suggested that he has a statement to make. I would like to yield to the Senator from Missouri and others. The Senator from Pennsylvania has a statement to make also. I ask unanimous consent that rather than my holding the floor and yielding to them I be recognized and regain the floor under the previous order when the consideration of the bill is resumed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Connecticut wanted to proceed next. I will reserve my remarks until tomorrow.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, arguments against the family assistance plan have been made in the last few days.

A number of these arguments were illustrated by the use of charts and statistics. These arguments and figures have been used to suggest that serious work disincentives are created or worsened by family assistance. This is not the case.

The Ribicoff-Bennett proposal authorizes the most significant step forward in 30 years to develop work incentives within the welfare program. This step is the inclusion of the working poor within the welfare system.

Over 1.8 million American families encompassing 10.5 million persons are headed by full-time workers with income at or below the poverty line. These families are not now eligible for Federal welfare assistance. Yet, under existing law, other families which might live in the same neighborhood or even next door, are better off on welfare without working. For the millions of working families, family assistance is the first welfare program which makes it worthwhile. Under family assistance, eligibility will no longer be confined to those who do not or cannot work. The elimination of the present discrimination against working families is a major work incentive.

In New York City, which has administered a working poor program for 20 years, a 13-month study found that over 97 percent of working families remained working families after receipt of welfare benefits. Many of the remaining families changed their status only because of illness or death of the father.

I ask unanimous consent that a short table showing how family assistance will help the working poor be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FAMILY OF FOUR WITH FATHER WORKING FULL-TIME AT $1.00/HOUR

	Present law	Family assistance
Earnings	$2,000	$2,000
Assistance	0	960
Total income	2,000	2,960

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment also proposes an expansion of Federal work training and child care programs. $386 million would be spent in the first year of the program for expanded day-care opportunities. More than $200 million will be spent to provide work training and upgrading program.

In addition, through an amendment proposed by Senator HARRIS and I, a strong public service job program for welfare recipients will be initiated.

The greatest impediment to moving welfare recipients from relief to work is the lack of actual jobs at the end of the work training programs. The Ribicoff-Harris proposal takes a small but important step to remedy this problem.

Under the family assistance program, every able-bodied welfare recipient will be required to register for these work and work training programs. Failure to so register will mean an immediate loss of $500 of FAP benefits.

The charge has also been made that family assistance would further encourage break up of families and illegitimacy.

Mr. President, those problems are precisely what family assistance is designed to end—not encourage. By providing assistance to all families—not merely broken families, as is now the case—the program eliminates the incentive for low-income families to separate.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. HANSEN. According to the information I have, the October revised revision would retain the $500 penalty provision, as the distinguished Senator has pointed out, but would delete the provision for disregarding income tax payments. Testimony developed at the hearings on the bill showed that the $500 reduction in family assistance would actually result in reduction of only $241 in family income since benefits under other kinds of welfare type programs increase as family income decreases.

May I ask the distinguished Senator from Connecticut if that checks with his understanding of the bill?

Mr. RIBICOFF. May I say that I do not have that information. It would depend on what the total amount was that a person was receiving. I do not imagine that a person with a family of four receiving $1,600 would be involved much by way of income tax. I do not have the figures. I shall supply them for the RECORD, if I can, before the night is over.

Mr. HANSEN. I thank my friend.

There being no objection the figures were as follows:

A family of four with no other income would lose $500 of family assistance if a member of that family refused to register for work. In addition, State supplementary payments would be reduced by one-fourth. Thus if the State supplement were $1,500 the total loss to the family would be $875. This loss might be reduced by anywhere from $0 to $225 if food stamps and other programs increased the benefits to the family because of its income reduction.

Mr. RIBICOFF. In addition, the most scientific methods now in existence will be employed to provide a continuing evaluation and investigation to prevent fraud in this program.

It has also been mentioned that the family assistance plan provides a $1,300 incentive for couples to have children. This so-called incentive is also present in existing programs. The defect could be easily remedied by providing welfare eligibility for childless couples, which is a step I have advocated for sometime and even proposed to the Finance Committee in the form of an amendment to H.R. 16311. This, of course, would be a further expansion of family assistance.

Reliance has been placed on charts which attempt to set forth the "notch" effect of family assistance by which, it is explained, the programs will encourage welfare recipients not to work.

These charts, which are confined to examples of families headed by mothers, show the cumulative dollar totals of welfare, food stamps, medicaid, and housing programs.

It is my opinion, which is shared by many, that these tables do not show the true effect of family assistance or reflect its impact on most welfare recipients.

First, over 90 percent of all welfare recipients cannot accumulate all the benefits which are shown on these charts. Slightly over a third are eligible for food stamps, less than 10 percent are in public housing. Furthermore, these charts are exclusively used to show the circumstances of female-headed families which will comprise less than half of the eligible recipients under family assistance. Families headed by a working male will not be eligible for medicaid, or State supplements.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. It is true that the charts refer to female-headed families, but that form was selected by the Department itself. We asked if a different picture would be shown if the Department had provided different charts for male-headed families, and the answer was "No." If they would provide different charts we would be glad to display them. They did not submit any, so I assume that while the picture would be slightly different the patterns would be the same. If the patterns were not the same it is the Department itself that is at fault for not advising us. I repeat, these are the charts they sent to the committee, and they selected the type we were going to use.

Mr. RIBICOFF. May I say to the Senator that I share some of the frustration mentioned by other members of the Finance Committee who are on the other side of the issue. It is absolutely true that the committee, collectively and individually, asked for information time and time again, and this information has not been forthcoming, I, as well as they, decry the failure to have the cooperation which the committee was entitled to have. It would have made the job of all of us that much easier if the information had been forthcoming.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct.

If the Senator will yield further, another point to be made on these charts is that they tried to point out that there would be a minimal effect by saying that less than 8 percent of the people were in public housing. That included farm areas and rural areas, where there is no public housing. Those figures are misleading because in the city of Wilmington in my own State, the figure representing those under public housing, is not 8 percent but 28 percent, while in New York State the figure is a much lower one. But in New York State and in some other States they use rent supplements instead of public housing. So when they talk about public housing, they do not include rent supplements or various other programs which should be included.

I think all those programs must be related. I know the Senator from Connecticut would insist on getting all that information.

If we take an area where public housing is not used and that item of the program is eliminated but if there is another program which is substituted for it that particular program should be substituted. Unfortunately we have not had any cooperation from the Department in getting a real breakdown.

This is not a criticism of the Senator from Connecticut because he has been as frustrated as the rest of us in getting information. It has been impossible in our case in view of this complete lack of cooperation from the Department.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I thank the Senator.

Second, few, if any, welfare recipients are encouraged to work or not to work by eligibility for medicaid. This is not a cash program, but a health program. Sickness is unpredictable. When no illness is incurred no medicaid benefits are received. It is unlikely that loss of medicaid coverage would deter anyone from working particularly when other, private health plans would be available.

Third, the family assistance plan actually corrects the many additional "notches" which the present program perpetuates. Those few that remain are not the result of family assistance but of other programs. As pointed out above, many of these "notches" are illusory and most are corrected by family assistance.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point? I dislike interrupting him.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The Senator is correct. In one city the average medicaid benefit was calculated at $1,100 per family. It is true that family A may not have benefited from any medicaid at all and another family may have benefited to the extent of $2,500. There is this other factor to consider, however. While it is true that a family may or may not benefit under medicaid, depending on the health of the family, if one goes on the labor force and is no longer on welfare he has to pay for the health insurance. So that is a deduction from pay because he has to pay for that health insurance. That is what creates this notch plus the fact that money earned is taxable while welfare payments are tax-exempt.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I think that point will be touched upon by the next point, that the family assistance program actually corrects the many additional notches which the plan perpetuates. It is true that taken alone, the result of the family assistance plan is that most of these notches are illusory and most are corrected by the family assistance plan.

I can understand what the Senator from Delaware was trying to do in committee, and I can understand his continued frustration when we talk about the family assistance plan and when the medicaid and housing and other programs have not been drawn together to make a whole. But when we talk of the family assistance plan, many of the notches as a result of other programs Congress has adopted, including the administration of those programs, are eliminated.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I agree completely on that point. I said the other day that if we forgot momentarily the other programs related to welfare and looked at nothing but the charts presented on the family assistance program one could have a picture of a progressive incentive to work. It is when we start considering the other programs that notches are developed. I was disappointed that since the other agencies are still a part of the Government these plans had not been put together and considered as a whole.

There is no excuse for their not having been considered together.

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is one reason why I have been so insistent on having pilot programs, because the family assistance plan goes into effect in July of 1972. It would be my hope that, in the trial period, we in the Finance Committee would monitor it very closely and get an overall picture of all the other programs working together with family assistance, and we would have an opportunity between March 1, 1972, and July 1, 1972, to correct any inequities.

This is a monumental program, and I have tried to the best of my ability, on this floor and in committee, to point out that we do not know all the answers, and that I share many doubts of other Senators; but I do believe in the basic philosophy, and that the program is worth trying.

STATE SAVINGS

A point has been made that the State fiscal savings clause in the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment only applies to the expenses of the adult categories. In fact the 90-percent-freeze clause applies to families as well as aged, blind, and disabled recipients.

Under present law welfare costs under AFDC—both State and Federal—are increasing at the rate of 30 percent annually. At this rate, with no change in the law, costs will more than double in 3 years. The fiscal savings provision in the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment is vitally necessary to save the States from financial catastrophe.

REPUBLICAN GOVERNORS

Mr. President, there has been some misunderstanding regarding the position of the Republican Governors on the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of a telegram responding that the Republican Governors' Association favors the amendment by 14 to 2 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The telegram is dated December 16, and was sent from Sun Valley to Secretary Elliot Richardson.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Secretary ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON,
Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington, D.C.:

At an executive session of the Republican Governors Association this noon, I presented the matter of the family assistance plan and the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment. The RGA voted to support the President's family assistance plan with 14 in favor, 2 opposed and 3 abstentions

RUSSELL W. PETERSON,
Governor of Delaware.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TALMADGE. If the Senator will refer to his amendment, on page 9, line 10, appears the heading "Exclusions From Income."

Then on page 10, beginning on line 16, it reads:

(5) food stamps or any other assistance (except veterans' pensions) which is based on need and furnished by any State or political subdivision of a State or any Federal agency, or by any private agency or organization exempt from taxation under section 501

And so forth.

Would that not make it possible for a foundation which is a tax-exempt organization to make grants to individuals in any amount, any sums of money annually, and those individuals would still be eligible for welfare at the same time?

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is correct. This would allow a foundation which would like to supplement and even raise above the poverty level recipients of grants to make such grants to individuals. The Senator is correct in his statement.

Mr. TALMADGE. Let me give the Senator a hypothetical case. Many foundations do outstanding jobs in cancer research, tuberculosis research, and other health matters. Suppose they take some eminent doctor, and give him a grant of $100,000 a year to do research on a cure for cancer. Under that provision, would he not be eligible for welfare at the same time?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I think that is farfetched. While it could be possible, I cannot imagine an eminent doctor who was doing cancer research with a $100,000 a year grant who would not have income from a hospital or university upon which he would have to pay taxes, but would rely upon himself and his family living on $1,600 ayear.

Mr. TALMADGE. I am asking whether the Senator's amendment would not authorize his eligibility for welfare.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Yes; it might authorize his eligibility, but as a realist—and I know the Senator from Georgia is a realist, too—I have no fear of that taking place.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, we are dealing with a law now, and not a theory. The Senator admits that his amendment would authorize such an individual to be eligible for welfare if he were living on a grant of $100,000 a year.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Yes; but while this could happen, I do not think the law is that much of an ass.

Mr. TALMADGE. That is what the Senator wrote into the amendment, and I am asking him to explain it, and he admits that what I say is true. That is just one of the many imperfections in this amendment that I think ought to be clarified.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, while, as the Senator suggests, that might be a far-fetched example of what could happen. I point out that when we were considering the Tax Reform Act and that section dealing with foundations we had an example where a foundation had taken practically the entire staff of the late Senator Kennedy and given them for 2 years a grant of approximately $25,000 a year with travel expenses. They were going to take care of those individuals, the excuse being that they had no other source of income.

On that basis, if this bill had been in effect, all the members of the staff of that Senator would not only have their grants from that foundation but would be eligible for welfare payments under this bill because we were told in the committee that they had no other source of income.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I would like to add that on page 10, line 17, the amendment refers to "food stamps or any other assistance—'which is based on need.' "

I do not imagine that a research chemist doing research under a foundation grant would be in need. The amendment also contains an assets test.

Mr. TALMADGE. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. TALMADGE. In line 19, the word "or" appears, so it is in the alternative.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I would like to pursue this matter further, but the minority leader must make a statement by 6 o'clock or be taken off the floor.

As the Senator from Delaware knows from our colloquy on his unanimous-consent request of a few days ago, I was most anxious not to have this amendment in the second degree. I was very hopeful to be able to afford every Member of this body a chance to put in perfecting amendments, whether it be the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Oklahoma, or the Senator from Georgia. I would have been the first to try to correct the point that the Senator from Georgia has made, but we were put in the position that we had no alternative but to make this amendment in the second degree.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The Senator is correct on that point. Both he and I tried on two or three occasions to get this bill into a posture where it could be amended and voted on on its merits, but neither of us were able to get it into that posture.

Mr. JAVITS subsequently said: Mr. President, on Saturday, certain analyses were made by the distinguished Senator from Delaware respecting the effect of the family assistance plan contained in the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal upon my State of New York. I asked the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to analyze those analyses made by Senator WILLIAMS. They do not agree with him, Mr. President, as to their effect and the alleged inequities which would result. I shall discuss these in detail at an appropriate time, but I did feel that at the earliest moment they should stand in the RECORD, so that anyone who wishes may read these replies.

So I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, signed by the Honorable John G. Veneman, Under Secretary, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE,
December 21, 1970.

HON. JACOB JAVITS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JAVITS: The following is in response to your request for comment on certain statements made by Senator Williams (Delaware) in the Congressional Record of December 19, relating to the effect of the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal upon the State of New York.

On page S20807, Senator Williams cites an example that leaves the impression that the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal would pay a $1300 bonus for an illegitimate child.

He states that "this bill actually provides a $1300 bonus from the Federal Government to a mother to have an illegitimate baby over and above what would be paid if the baby were born in wedlock."

Under the existing AFDC program, a childless couple is not eligible for benefits—nor would they be under the Family Assistance Plan. The presence of children is required for eligibility.

In fact, it is the present program which rewards illegitimacy. Currently, families in which the father is married and working full time are not eligible for any federally assisted welfare. But if the father were not married to the mother, she and her children would be eligible. FAP, would for the first time make the intact family eligible thus reducing the financial reward for illegitimacy.

The Bill also mandates State supplementation to families in which the father is unemployed. This is now done in New York on an optional basis but it not done in 25 states. In these latter states, an intact family may now receive no assistance even though it has no income. In contrast, families where the father has deserted or in which the child is illegitimate would be eligible. Thus, the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal is a step toward reducing illegitimacy and desertion.

In Senator Williams comments he left another distorted impression regarding benefits available in New York.

In the chart published on page S 20810, an impression is left that a family of four in New York without any earnings would receive money and benefits totaling $6210.

The following facts must be considered:

(a) probably no more than 1 or 2% of the families on public assistance in New York have available to them all of the benefits listed on the chart.

(b) only 7½% of the welfare recipients in New York City live in public housing, which is worth $989 to a family without income. Ninety-two and a half percent of the families do not receive this $989.

(c) The impression is also left that all recipients receive food stamps valued at $312 annually. The fact is that 60% of the welfare recipients in New York do not participate in the food stamp program.

(d) The impression is left that every family on public assistance receives $1153 in medical benefits. This is the average expenditure in New York and is available only if there is illness. The payments are made directly to the providers of the medical services for an illness incurred by the family.

Another issue was raised by Senator Williams on page 20807 where he stated that "in New York, a welfare family will collect a higher premium on family splitting. They collect $2508 more as two families than if they live as one family. They can collect that every year under this bill, if they will just separate—the husband taking part of the children and the wife taking the other children."

This is highly distorted. In this respect the Bill does not change the present law. In New York, under law, a family of six, husband, wife and four children receive a total of $329 per month, plus rent. A family of three receives a cash payment of $179 per month plus rent. Thus, the total of two families of three would be $358 per month plus rent. This means that the net cash differences between one family of six and two families of three is $29 per month or $348 per year rather than $2508 stated by Senator Williams. The family situation with respect to rent, Medicaid, and food stamps would be the same in both cases.

If I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to let me know.

Sincerely,

JOHN G. VENEMAN,
Under Secretary.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I have shown a copy of this letter to Senator WILLIAMS, who desires me to yield on this matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator from New York putting this letter in the RECORD, and I note it is signed by Mr. Veneman.

I only point out that the charts I used in my statement of last Saturday and the figures I quoted were also presented to the committee by Mr. Veneman, the same Mr. Veneman. This is the first time I have heard of an administration contradicting his own figures by claiming he gave false information to a congressional committee.

This only shows the confusion and that they cannot even agree 2 days at a time, because all the figures I used were over the signature and finished by HEW Let them decide which time they are telling the truth.

It further supports my position that we should reject this bill, and I think we need some new men in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare who at least can stay on the same side of a question 24 hours.

I shall discuss this letter later. Perhaps the committee erred in not placing the Government witnesses under oath.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if I may, I ask unanimous consent in accordance with the agreement reached some days ago that the Senate resume the consideration of Calendar No. 1443, H.R. 17550.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

H.R. 17550, a bill to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Senate will continue with the consideration of the bill.

The Senate will be in order. The majority leader cannot be heard.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWEIKER). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order the Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I am going to make another effort to see if we can get this particular bill off dead center.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, we cannot hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Delaware may proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I am going to make another effort to see if we can get this bill off dead center and to a point where the Senate can vote either up or down on various provisions in which we are interested.

There is no question but that there seems to be quite a bit of controversy in this bill.

Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will be seated. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, since no one is interested, perhaps this is a good time to present the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I thought I would get silence if I made that suggestion.

The Senator from Pennsylvania appears ready to object, but I hope he will not object when the request is presented.

We have a problem here where there is considerable discussion and controversy about whether the Senate should or should not agree to the family assistance plan. There is also a controversy with regard to the trade agreements.

I am going to make the suggestion that we delete titles III, IV, and V from the bill, which deal with trade, the catastrophic insurance, the welfare amendments, and also delete the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment and the Scott amendment and the Talmadge amendment, which I offered for the trade agreements. That would strip the bill down to titles I and II. Title I is social security and cash benefits and title II provides revisions in medicare and medicaid. If we would strip the bill down to those two titles we could get this bill enacted this afternoon. We could soon dispose of the social security section and on Monday the medicare and medicaid section and take the bill to conference. This would get these social security increases out to the public at an early date.

If the proposal is to be successful it would be necessary to have a gentleman's agreement that these controversial matters now being deleted will not be submitted as a part of the revised bill, because if one of them is submitted the others will be submitted, and we will be back where we are now.

If that is done we could ask unanimous consent to consider the amendments in titles I and II en bloc for the purpose of procedure, and they could be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment. Further, I would agree to limit the time on all amendments to 1 hour.

I do not know whether we could get such an agreement, but there must be a recognition of the fact that this bill will not become law as long as the trade sections and guaranteed annual income features are added to it. In the meantime, a lot of people who are hoping for an increase in social security benefits are going to be disappointed.

I am wondering if the Senator from Pennsylvania could go along with such a proposal.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. I would say, first, to the Senator that I would like to read to the Senate a letter of today's date addressed to Representative GERALD R. FORD of the other body. This may help answer the Senator's question. The letter states:

DECEMBER 22, 1970.

Hon. GERALD R. FORD,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR JERRY: In response to your question about my attitude toward the Social Security legislation now stalled in the Senate, be assured that I favor quick enactment.

Some Senators contend that Social Security legislation cannot be salvaged in this Senate unless welfare reform, appropriation bills and other vital measures are sacrificed. I am not yet willing to concede the Senate's indifference or impotence. I have urged the Senate to bring to vote all of this important work that lies before it. There is still plenty of time to do what is necessary before January 3.

Should the Senate be unable or unwilling to adopt these vital measures by then, I will resubmit the Social Security benefit increases and welfare reform, along with the other key bills that remain unenacted. And I will propose that the Social Security increases be retroactive in their effect to January 1, 1971, so that no Social Security recipient is harmed by the Senate's failure to act.

Sincerely,

———.

Under the circumstances whereby the President has made clear his desire for the inclusion of welfare reform and social security, and the feeling we should act on both, I have not, of course, lodged any objection at this time but I would wait until the Senator submits his proposal.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I will submit it as a unanimous-consent proposal because it is always gratifying to find the Senator supporting the President, and I would not want to let this session of Congress go by without giving him that opportunity.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator knows I support the President about as often as any Member of the Senate, and I cite the Congressional Quarterly as evidence of that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am well aware of the Senator's record. He always votes with him when he thinks the President is on his side.

Mr. SCOTT. When the President is right, which is the largest part of the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Seriously, I think this proposal is the only logical solution. As the Senator from Connecticut will confirm, I supported him before on a series of unanimous-consent requests to limit debate. I would like to see this matter voted on, up or down—all features of the bill.

As the Senator from Connecticut knows, I am opposed to the pending

Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, and I expect to vote against it. However, I have no objection to the Senate voting, and I shall abide by the decision of the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent now that the time on all amendments in this bill be limited to 2 hours and that time on the bill not exceed 4 hours with the time equally divided. I ask unanimous consent that we start voting, that the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut be the first amendment voted on, and that we vote on all amendments to amendments, up or down, at this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Delaware now proposing that as an unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I withhold it now, but I am going to propose it.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator agree that we vote on the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal under the unanimous-consent request at 5 o'clock Tuesday, December 29?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Why wait until Tuesday? Is the Senator afraid to vote tonight? We could vote in 2 hours.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time start running immediately, that there be a time limitation on all amendments, including the Ribicoff amendment, of 2 hours, and that there be a limitation of time on all amendments to amendments.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, obviously the Senator knows he will get no such unanimous-consent proposal agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am an optimist.

Mr. JAVITS. I am sorry. I have the reservation. The Senator knows that he will not get such a unanimous consent. On the other hand, the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) is an excellent one. If the Senator from Delaware wishes to get a vote on the Ribicoff amendment, I do not think anyone is afraid to do so. With respect to the Senator's proposal, I have no objection to voting today on the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, but the Senator knows very well when he wraps it up with everything else, it is going to be objected to; and so if necessary, if the Senator insists on pressing his request, I will object.

Mr. President, I do object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I presented this proposal in good faith. I realize that one amendment at a time could be taken up, and we could get consent on it if every Senator agreed. On the other hand, we are not going to get anywhere unless we get consent to all of them. I think that is perfectly proper procedure.

Under this agreement the very first rollcall vote would be on an amendment to which I have very strong objections and one on which I will do everything I can to urge the Senate to defeat. I am willing to have that as the very first vote. I do not know what more one could offer.

Since there has been an objection there is another possibility. In the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves, the Ribicoff amendment, much to his regret, is not subject to amendment. The Senator from Iowa has amendments which he would like to be considered and thinks they should be. The Senator from Oklahoma has amendments which he would like to offer.

Since I cannot get consent to the first request, I ask unanimous consent that we eliminate from the pending bill the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment and the Scott amendment and the trade amendment which I offered on behalf of the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE). That would leave the bill—if the Senator from Pennsylvania will just wait a minute before objecting because it is like introducing amendments without reading them; sometimes it is disastrous to object before one knows what is being asked.

That is the first part of the proposed agreement.

The second part would be to consider all the committee amendments en bloc and treat the bill as original text. Then it would be open to amendment.

I would be willing to go along with that, with the further proviso that the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) be recognized first, in order that he may offer his family assistance amendment. It would then be the pending busines before the Senate and would be subject to amendment by the Senator from Oklahoma or the Senator from Iowa, or whoever else wanted to offer amendments. Then we could vote on them. That would be proper procedure. I would be willing to enter into a time limitation on these amendments.

I have discussed this matter with the Senator from Connecticut. This is not taking his amendment down. It is only taking his amendment down temporarily, and he could again offer it to any part of the bill. In that manner we would get to a vote. His amendment would be the first to be offered and could be put anywhere in the bill. Then we could proceed in an orderly manner.

I would be perfectly willing to present that combined package as a unanimous consent request, all with the provision that the Senator from Connecticut be the first Senator to be recognized.

I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, there are millions of people in this country who are almost wholly dependent for their welfare and happiness on their social security checks. There are presumably hundreds of thousands of others who are desperately in need of medicare benefits, of which the Senator from Delaware has spoken.

I do not think it is a good Christmas present for those people to tell them that we are going to insist on a situation in the Senate which denies them even a little bit of help which we could give them to enable them to enjoy life a little more and to enjoy a little better health when we vote on the request of the Senator from Delaware. I think I would be ashamed to object to it.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I wonder if we can make it clear and whether the Senate understands what the proposal of the Senator from Delaware is. I would like to have it made clear.

My understanding is that the Senator from Delaware proposes that we withdraw both the Williams and Talmadge amendment, the Scott and Ribicoff and Bennett amendments, that all the committee amendments be adopted en bloc, and that the bill be considered as original text; that at that stage the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment will be the first amendment to be offered to the bill; and that then, of course, since it is in the first degree, that it will be subject to amendments from the floor; that a time limitation be agreed upon on all amendments to the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment and a time limitation on the Bennett-Ribicoff proposal. There will be definitive votes on all those amendments.

That is the only limitation the Senator has in mind at this point.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I would have no objection to such a limitation if we could get it. The Senator from Connecticut has outlined it correctly. I repeat. in this consent we would withdraw both the Williams-Talmadge and the Ribicoff-Bennett-Scott amendments. That would leave the bill at that point as reported by the committee. Then we would agree to all the committee amendments en bloc and treat them as original text for the purpose of amendment. Then at that point, as part of the same request, the Senator from Connecticut would be recognized to offer the Bennett-Ribicoff amendment, or whatever amendment he wished, as a substitute for part of the bill or as an addition to the bill, and to offer it in any manner or at any point he wished. In that way we could proceed to a vote.

As far as I am concerned, the agreement could provide that the Senator from Oklahoma would be the next one recognized to offer an amendment. I do not care who offers the amendment, but let us get to voting on it.

I think the Senator from Oklahoma has an amendment. I know the Senator from Iowa has an amendment.

I repeat, so that we can get started, I would be willing to have it understood that included as a part of the agreement is the understanding that after the Senator from Connecticut offers his amendment, the next amendment will be that of the Senator from Oklahoma. I do not care who gets the floor after that. I just mentioned the Senator from Connecticut so that he would know he would have the first opportunity to offer his amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Is the Senator offering a time limitation on all amendments to be offered?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. No. That request was objected to earlier.

After the Senator from Oklahoma offered his amendment he might ask for consent to vote on it in 30 minutes or an hour. Or at that time we may get a broad, general agreement. That would be all right. If we tied it up this far we would at least have it before us in an orderly manner.

The Senator from Connecticut has repeatedly pointed out that if we are going to vote on his proposal it should be open to amendment. The Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Iowa have amendments; I do not know of any other Senator who has an amendment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. First, I would like to make a preliminary comment that I have known right along that the Senator from Delaware has been violently opposed to the family assistance plan. He has been consistent in his opposition. Right from the start he has said he would not stand in the way of a vote on the family assistance plan. He was not going to filibuster. He agreed to have a vote. He wanted his position explained. He wanted other Senators to have an opportunity to explain their positions.

I have never felt such a sense of self-righteousness that I thought the Bennett-Ribicoff amendment had to be adopted word for word as submitted. I have always felt that other Members of this body should have the opportunity of offering amendments to this complicated proposal.

I wonder if I could make inquiry of the two Senators who I know have definite amendments. I do not know about other Senators, but I know the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Oklahoma have a series of amendments to offer. Would there be a willingness on their part to have a time limitation on their amendments to the Bennett-Ribicoff amendment, under the request made by the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield, so that I might respond to that?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. May I say that I think the idea of making the committee bill original text is the way to move on this measure, as I have said earlier, and I hope we may be able to agree to do that. I certainly would be willing to have a limitation of 30 minutes, 15 minutes to a side, on the amendments which I wish to offer, because I am anxious that we get an up-or-down vote on the welfare reform proposal in amendable form.

So I would be willing to agree to any such time limitation. I can speak only for myself; there may be others who want to be heard on the question of time, but I would like to see this bill made original text for the purpose of amendment, and, at least on the welfare proposal and social security, the medicare and medicaid proposals, child care, and the health insurance and catastrophic illness proposals, have some time limitation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield so that I may respond?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I have only one printed amendment, but, as I think the Senator from Connecticut knows, I have three or four others, at least, that I would like to offer.

I stated the other day just what the Senator from Oklahoma has said, that the way to proceed on this matter, in my judgment, was to have a time limitation. I think it might be better not to have a uniform time limitation, because some of these amendments would require longer discussion than others; but I certainly would be most happy to join in any agreement on an ad hoc basis, preferably to have a time limitation.

The Senator from Connecticut says that he would like to have this time available and the opportunity available, and yet it was my understanding that the other day when the Senator from Pennsylvania filed a technical amendment, the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Utah were the ones who put their amendment on that technical amendment and locked it up.

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is right.

Mr. MILLER. And that was with full knowledge, as I understand it; it was planned, and without consultation of others of us who have amendments, certainly not with me and I know without consulting with at least one or two others who have amendments.

I am pleased that there has been a little reassessment of the matter. I am not going to be a dog in the manger about it. I want to see progress made. But I just think that, in fairness I should point out that the mess we are in now has been made, made deliberately by those who filed the technical amendment and the amendment to it.

I am willing to go along notwithstanding that, and work out an agreement, but let us all very clearly understand that we are in this mess because of a deliberate act. There was nothing accidental about it at all.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, may I respond?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. RIBICOFF. There certainly was not anything accidental. It was deliberate, and the reason why it was done that way was that we did not get a unanimous-consent agreement on the original proposal made by the Senator from Delaware; and the Senator from Delaware, on a parliamentary basis, has introduced his amendment, and a filibuster was going on that amendment.

The Senator from Utah, the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I realized that unless we followed this procedure, we would never get a vote on the family assistance program, because we would have a filibuster on the trade provision. I deplored it, but we had no other alternative than this procedure to bring the family assistance program before the Senate as the pending order of business. We did this deliberately; yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I find no fault with the procedure followed by the Senator from Connecticut. He followed the Senate rules which apply to all of us.

But I suggest that we not spend time talking about what happened in the past. We know what happened. Let us talk about where we are and what we can do. We are tied up in a confused mess here, let us face it. If we are not going to reach any agreement we might as well lay the bill aside, because everyone in this Chamber knows it is not going to be voted on unless we can get some such agreement. I am just trying to get it to a vote.

I have no objection to a vote. I have never been so conceited as to think that I alone am right and everyone has to agree with what I say. I just wanted Senators to be afforded an opportunity to listen to a little of what I have to say, and let me at least get it off my chest. They have, and I think that now an orderly procedure would be to start voting on the entire bill.

Let us vote on the various proposals, either up or down.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield for a question.

Mr. MILLER. I know the Senator from Delaware is trying very hard to help the Senate untangle itself. But suppose that the unanimous-consent request that he is proposing to present is agreed to, and then suppose the Senator from Connecticut goes ahead and presents his amendment, and then amendments to the amendment are offered—and there can be a good many of them—and along about next Tuesday or Wednesday, we have wound up the action on the family assistance plan. What do we do then? There are Senators here who are very much interested in the trade amendment. Where would we go at that point?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, if the Senator will just withhold that I shall tell the Senate where we shall be next Wednesday. We shall be getting ready for a New Year's dinner, but let us think about Christmas dinner right now. I would like to at least get started on this bill. If we can get that far we shall be farther than we are now, and we shall be farther than we are going to be if we do not get this off dead center.

Mr. President, I am going to make my unanimous-consent request at this time, and I want the Senator from Connecticut to follow it.

First, I ask unanimous consent that both the Ribicoff amendment and the Scott amendment, the Williams amendment, and the Talmadge amendment be deleted from the bill, and following that deletion and as a part of the unanimous-consent request, that the remaining committee amendments—which would just be a stripped bill, with nothing but committee amendments—then be agreed to en bloc, and that, for the purpose of further amendment, it be treated as original text in the bill; and that after that, the Senator from Connecticut be the first one to be recognized, where he can present his amendment, and that he have the authority, at the conclusion of his speech and the presentation of his amendment, if he wishes, to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma to present an amendment to his amendment. He can do that, and we will at least be off to where we can vote up or down on something.

If the Senator from Oklahoma does not have his amendment ready, the Senator from Connecticut can yield to whomever he pleases to present an amendment, and at least we would be voting.

I ask unanimous consent that this be done en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have been waiting patiently for the Senator to yield, because this is exactly the path we traversed the other day, and I shall object, and do object, if that is needed right now, for this reason, if I may just explain the point:

The prospect of a vote on the family assistance plan is delightful, but it does not mean anything to the poor unless something is going to happen on the bill, as the Senator from Iowa properly pointed out. Everyone knows—I am not going to say the Senator from Delaware knows, because that is his business—but I know and most other Senators know that unless we strip from this bill everything but titles I and II, nothing is going to happen. So those who are really desirous of working on social security—and I am—and those who are really desirous of working on the miscellaneous matters in title II, have a remedy, as a matter of fact. A motion can be made, notwithstanding the pendency of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, to do exactly that on a motion to recommit, and report back forthwith.

So, Mr. President, airs of injured innocence, or of seeking to make the record, or get a vote, or seek amity, which materially compromise substantive issues, do not impress me. I am not afraid of it. I believe that a historic issue faces the Senate in respect to the trade war and the world. That is very important to the poor, the rich, the middle class, and all America, and I am not going to see it sloughed off if I can help it—maybe I cannot—under all of these general pleas for consensus.

Mr. President, we all know what it is about. We are not children. We all know very well that there are deep issues when you get by titles I and II. No one has any objection to titles I and II, or dealing with them, in the hope that we can do something for our people so that they will get their checks a couple of months, perhaps, earlier than they would if we acted on it next year.

But to engage in this byplay, I think, is a bit unworthy of the Senate.

We have been over this track before. This is nothing different than what we decided before. Obviously, if I am going to oppose the trade section, I am going to oppose it with every move I have open to me, and one is to recommit it to the committee which put trade on—with no need for it; we do not even give the House of Representatives the dignity of considering their bill. We have put on all these amendments; they did not do that, we did.

So, Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, so that the record will be clear, I agree with the Senator from New York in regretting that the Finance Committee put the trade bill on this bill. I voted against it in the committee and will be voting against that amendment when it comes to the floor.

So on that point I do not take a back seat to the argument against the trade section. I think it would be a mistake to pass that bill, but, at the same time, let us get the record straight.

I have heard the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare describe this bill as a three-headed monster, and he referred to the fact that it was three different bills all in one. I want to get the record straight. It is not a three-headed monster; it is only a two-headed monster at this point. The House bill embraced the social security bill and medicaid and medicare, which is titles I and II. In my opinion, that is the way the bill should have been acted upon and reported to the Senate. As the Senator from Connecticut knows, that is what I tried to do. I opposed putting the trade section on this bill.

Let us get the record straight. The administration supported putting the trade bill on this act, and the committee adopted it over my objections. That is one of these so-called monsters. Now here today the administration is trying to put the family assistance plan on the bill, which is the other monster.

I did not like the word "monster" in describing this action, but if the administration and the Cabinet officers want to describe this as a three-headed monster that was put together by the Finance Committee, as one member of the Finance Committee and one who has been proud to have been a member of it for 20 years, I want to make it clear that it is a monster only because the administration persuaded enough members of the committee to put on one head of the monster and that now they are trying to persuade the Senate to put on the other head. Let the administration not denounce action which they supported. I think the committee should have acted on the trade bill separately but the committee had every right to vote on these proposals.

The Senator from Georgia knows that I took this position in the committee. I resent those who would condemn the committee for following their request. The committee by a majority vote—and a comfortable majority vote—voted to put this trade section on this bill. They had a right to do it. The Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Utah have a right to offer their amendment even though that amendment was defeated in the committee. I defend their right to offer it. They are entitled to a vote, and I am only trying to help them out. I think they and other Senators are entitled to a vote, whether or not we are for their proposal. I happen to be against both of these proposals which are proposed to be added to social security. I voted against these amendments in the committee, and I will vote against them on the floor.

But I get tired of the halo some administration people put around their heads about how they want this bill when at the same time they are blocking the Senate from consideration.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. TALMADGE. As every Member of the Senate knows, the Constitution of the United States provides that this body shall adjourn sine die on January 3. At that time, all bills pending before Congress die. Only treaties remain alive when Congress adjourns sine die.

It has been obvious to every Member of the Senate now for a number of days that no matter of great controversy could pass in the limited time remaining for us to transact business during this Congress. Today is December 22. We are recessing today to go home and spend Christmas with our families, to return on December 28. That leaves only 4 or 5 days in which we could possibly transact business before the Senate. That leaves little or no time to handle conference matters with the House of Representatives and take final action.

What I think the Senate should do is to wrap up the conference reports upon which it can reach agreement. In those matters on which we cannot reach agreement, we ought to pass continuing resolutions, so that the operations of the U.S. Government can be adequately funded until the next Congress convenes. We should lay aside matters of great controversy, such as the guaranteed annual income and the trade matter, which I happen to support.

The Finance Committee has pending on the calendar the excise bill, which has been passed by the House of Representatives. We could attach to that bill, by way of amendment, the social security increase that the House of Representatives passed, which is 5 percent, or the increase which the Senate Finance Committee has passed, which is 10 percent. Those are not matters of great controversy. I think we could act on them speedily, and we could adjourn and go home.

In the closing days of this Congress, when the Senate has been spinning its wheels—and every Member of the Senate knows it has been spinning its wheels—it is a disservice to the U.S. Senate and a disservice to the country.

I would hope that we would act accordingly, that we could wrap up the matters upon which we can act. We could increase the social security benefits for our aged people, and I would hope we would defer the other matters, when every Member of this body knows that we are not going to take final action until the new Congress convenes next year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I thank the Senator.

I know that the Senator from Georgia as well as the Senator from Arizona have felt very strongly about the need for trade legislation. They had a perfect right to offer this amendment to the committee, and the committee overwhelmingly supported their position. I appreciate the fact that the Senator from

Georgia and those who cosponsor this amendment, in recognition of the situation we are now in, are willing to recognize the facts of life and allow us to set aside the trade amendment and agree that we can go on with the social security.

Mr. President, perhaps we cannot get unanimous consent, but perhaps we can get majority approval. I am ready to move that H.R. 17550 be recommitted to the Finance Committee with instructions to report back forthwith, after making the following deletions:

Delete titles 3, 4, and 5. Titles 3, 4, and 5 and the trade amendments, the catastrophic insurance, and the welfare amendments.

Delete the pending Williams-Talmadge trade amendment.

Delete the pending Ribicoff-Bennett-Scott assistance amendment.

If that motion were approved it would leave in the bill only title 1, which deals with changes in the Social Security Act, and title 2, which relates to changes in the existing medicaid and medicare programs.

If this motion is agreed to, I would then agree to a unanimous-consent request that all committee amendments in titles 1 and 2 be approved en bloc and that they be treated as original text for the purpose of amendment. If that consent is granted I would then be willing to support or ask unanimous consent for a time limit not to exceed 1 hour on any amendments—and we might dispose of it either this afternoon or tomorrow and let it go to conference.

Later, after the social security bill is passed, if they want to lay before the Senate another minor bill now on the calendar, we have them there, they can make the trade amendments or the family assistance amendment the pending business and maybe get a vote. But let us get social security out of the way first.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I have just heard Senator TALMADGE make the statement he did, which I know to be a very difficult statement for him politically. Mine is difficult enough, considering the number of people who want FAP in my State and the relatively fewer people who are opposed to the trade legislation. It is a more difficult statement for him politically, and I should like to note that fact. It is very statesmanlike. What is more important, it is a heavy admission against interest. I wish to tell my colleague how much at least one Senator appreciates what he has said.

Mr. TALMADGE. I am grateful to the senior Senator from New York for his generosity.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I should like to say, also, if the minority leader will indulge me—he is entitled to be recognized first—that what I think Senator WILLIAMS has proposed is probably the only practical way out.

Mr. RIBICOFF. My understanding is that the Senator from New York objected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Not to this.

Mr. JAVITS. I do not object to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. This proposal would move that H.R. 17550 be recommitted to the Finance Committee, with instructions to report back forthwith, after making the following deletions:

Delete titles III, IV, and V.

Delete the pending Williams-Talmadge trade amendment.

Delete the pending Ribicoff-Bennett-Scott family assistance amendment.

That would leave us nothing in the bill but titles I and II.

I would hope that we could confine this bill, then, to nothing but the germane amendments and to the Social Security Act and dispose of the bill. If the administration thinks anything can be gained by adjourning this Congress with the family assistance measure pending we could lay before the Senate some other bill on the calendar, offer the trade amendments and the family assistance amendment, and adjourn. But it is not going anywhere. This plan would at least get rid of the social security bill and get it in conference.

I assure the Senator that I would cooperate and help expedite a vote. The Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) has assured me that he would cooperate. I have talked with several other colleagues, the Senator from Oklahoma included, and they are perfectly willing for us to act on this social security bill. I do not think we have any choice except to approve this social security bill before we adjourn. We can start voting within 10 minutes on the first committee amendment, which will be social security, and then move right along. So far as I am concerned, I would agree to a unanimous-consent time limit of 30 minutes on every committee amendment if not adopted en bloc. I am ready to vote on any of them.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, one of the problems is that the distinguished chairman of the committee is not present. Unfortunately, he is in New York. My understanding is that the airplanes are not flying because of the bad weather today and he is stuck there and cannot get back; so that it is difficult for me, and I would not assume to take the responsibility of agreeing to a proposal that he would have to make a decision on as chairman of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I appreciate that. I thought that someone had talked to the chairman.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I did not talk to him personally. I got this message from the staff.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I concur in what the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) has just said. Although I am in agreement with the proposal of the Senator from Delaware, I do not think that we should take affirmative action on this matter until the chairman of the committee is present. He talked to my office this morning. He was expecting to return from New York about 3:30 p.m., so I would think he would be in this Chamber in a relatively short period of time, and I would hope, therefore, that the Senator from Delaware would defer action on his proposal——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I certainly will.

Mr. TALMADGE. Until the chairman of the committee can be present.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I certainly will. I was under the impression that he had been consulted. Certainly I shall not press the proposal at this time.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's later motion, he has dropped from his proposals any protection for a vote on the family assistance plan on this bill, and as the Senator knows, I have a commitment that would not permit me to agree to any consent which would involve substitution——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I appreciate that.

Mr. SCOTT. To any part of the bill without also getting the opportunity to follow on with the family assistance plan, much as the Senator has proposed it, because I like it and would have liked to go along——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I like it better.

Mr. SCOTT. I like it better, too.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. But we need some kind of an agreement. I think the majority will vote for this compromise suggestion, and the Senator can vote against it; but let us see if the Senate cannot work its way out of this dilemma. I certainly will withhold this motion until the chairman comes back; but I will renew it, and then I hope that we can get this bill acted upon. Senators should not overlook this point—the approval of this motion is the only way we can get a chance to pass an increase in social security benefits before adjournment. I will withhold my motion and yield now to the Senator from Iowa (Mr. MILLER) for 20 to 30 minutes.

I yield the floor.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Before the Senator yields the floor, I wonder, since we have to wait for the chairman to get back before we can make any decision on this proposal, whether the Senator from New York, the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Delaware, or the Senator from Oklahoma—would the Senator from Delaware be willing to make a unanimous-consent request or accede to a unanimous-consent request, that if we took another minor bill that was at the desk—I do not know what the title is—there are some there—to attach to it the family assistance plan and open it up to amendments with time limits, so that before we go home on January 3, 1971, we would have an opportunity to vote on this family assistance plan up or down.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I have no objection——

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, would the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am not going to agree to voting, as the Senator knows, as I am not going to support this. What we would run into is just an agreement on a time limit, on that alone, and then I am caught in the position of having to work against the Senator from Georgia, who would be caught in a box with his amendment. We will not get that kind of agreement. I have no objection to getting this to a vote. The Senator knows that.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I am just questioning around for alternatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I know that. I would be glad to discuss it with the Senator, but I think that if we are going to have to give all groups something, I would very much like and feel strongly that we need a test plan. The administration has said if they cannot get the family assistance plan, they would rather not have anything. I disagree with that. I think they are making a big mistake. But if that is the way they feel, since we would be taking away from the administration the family assistance plan, they would be losing, I am willing to yield on the point of the test and lock it all out and let it go over till next year. We will not get agreement that we will reach agreement—we all are having to give and take.

Mr. TALMADGE. I would strongly object to Senators picking out controversial propositions with which they are in agreement, with a time limit on their particular controversial proposal, but without a limitation of time on other controversial matters which other Senators might strongly support.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is the point. The Senator can go home to his constituents and say, "We gave all and got nothing." At the same time, I will withdraw the motion and I will be glad to confer with Senators or anyone else in the meantime until the chairman gets back.

Mr. TALMADGE. If the Senator will yield at that point, I have been advised that the distinguished chairman of the committee is still bound by the weather in New York, so I do not know what time he will arrive. He is making every effort to get here.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Can the Senator reach him? Mr. President, I yield the floor to the Senator from Iowa (Mr. MILLER). Maybe we can reach him by telephone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWEIKER). The Senator from Iowa (Mr. MILLER) is now recognized.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I yield briefly to the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. HANSEN).

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the pending amendment by Senators RIBICOFF and BENNETT was maneuvered so that, under the rules of the Senate, it is not open for any amendment at all.

We hear reports that the President is most anxious to have a vote on this amendment.

I find it hard to believe that the President understands the serious deficiencies in this amendment. If he did, I would expect him to urge the proponents to call back their amendment and make several modifications to it or to, at least, recall it and then file it in such manner as to permit amendments to be made.

The Senators from Delaware and Nebraska already pointed out some of the deficiencies. I would like to point out some additional ones.

An analysis by the able staff of the Senate Finance Committee was prepared with respect to this amendment last November 5, when it was before the committee as the House-passed bill with certain modifications.

Table 1 on page A18 of the analysis discloses that as of January 1970 there were nearly 10.5 million welfare recipients in this country; that under what is now the amendment that is before us, the total eligible for welfare would be nearly 24 million. I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE 1.—PROPORTION OF POPULATION ON FEDERALLY AIDED WELFARE UNDER PRESENT LAW AND ADMINISTRATION REVISED REVISION

	Civilian resident population	Federally aided welfare recipients, January 1970		Welfare recipients eligible under administration revised revision
		Number	Percent of population	Number	Percent of population

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the table shows the tremendous increase in potential welfare recipients the pending amendment would lay a foundation for in the various States and possessions.

In Puerto Rico, for example, which has a population of 2.7 million, almost 10 percent of the people, or 265,000, are now on welfare. This total could rise to 800,000, or 29 percent of the population.

In Louisiana, 9 percent of the population, or 346,000, are on welfare; but this total could rise to 834,000 or 25 percent of the population.

In Mississippi, 9 percent of the population, or 211,000, are on welfare; but this total could rise to 806,000, or over 34 percent of the population.

In my own State of Iowa, 3.3 percent of the population is now on welfare; and this could rise to 8.5 percent under the pending amendment.

The percentage increase that this amendment could cause for each of the States and possessions is set forth in table 2 on page A19 of the staff analysis, and I ask unanimous consent that this table be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MILLER. On page A17, the analysis discloses that the U.S. average of all the States could be 12 percent on welfare under the pending amendment; moreover, that 15 States would find from 15 to nearly 35 percent of their populations eligible for welfare.

Now I understand that not everyone entitled to welfare would claim it, because we have found this to be true under present law. Many of those who would be eligible would be eligible for only a very small amount of welfare, depending on the level of income of the socalled "working poor" which the administration's proposal seeks to cover. As a matter of principle, I can support some assistance to the "working poor", because this appears to be essential in order to carry out a change in philosophy of welfare so that there will be an incentive to work rather than not to work.

During the hearings, I called attention on several occasions to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare that the tremendous numbers of eligibles—especially in certain states—was of deep concern to many of us on the Finance Committee. I urged him to give us some optional changes which would reduce the number, while at the same time preserving the essentials of the new program.

I specifically suggested that by using a cost of living differential by regions of the country, and as between urban and rural welfare residents, in computing the total welfare package, not only would greater equity be incorporated into the total welfare program, but the number of eligibles would be substantially reduced.

It was not until the San Clemente conference with the President last September 3 that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare came forward with even one option, and this was most unsatisfactory. Their analysis of the option showed that by merely dividing welfare eligibles between those living in metropolitan statistical areas and those living in nonmetropolitan statistical areas, nearly a half billion dollars could be saved. Such savings of taxpayers' dollars is important—especially if it achieves equity among recipients.

The trouble is that such a simplistic solution would not save as much money or be as equitable as it should. A metropolitan statistical area in one part of the United States will have a different cost of living than one in another part of the country. Why, for example should a welfare recipient in the Birmingham, Ala., area receive the same amount of welfare as one living in the New York or Chicago area? Furthermore, why should a welfare recipient living on a small farm receive the same amount as one living in a city of 25,000?

Even the Office of Economic Opportunity has established that for those living on a farm the poverty standard shall be only 85 percent of that for those living in the cities.

To point up the need for a cost of living differential in this new welfare program, I invite attention to table 1 of a report from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, issued on December 1969. This table reveals the differences in cost-of-living for a "lower budget" family of four among regions of the United States and between various cities within each region, and also between the cities and the nonmetropolitan areas—places with populations of 2,500 to 50,000—within each region. It will be noted that the differences are very substantial. For example, the cost of family consumption items is $5,593 in Boston, Mass.; but it is only $4,680 for nonmetropolitan areas in the Southern region. Of course, the difference in cost for heat, as between Boston and a smaller city in the South, would acount for a considerable amount of this. In Anchorage, Alaska, the cost is $7,673 and in Honolulu, Hawaii, $6,367.

These figures relate to a "lower budget" family which would be somewhat higher than for a welfare family living at the poverty line, but they point up what I have been saying about the need for a cost-of-living differential in this program. Is it equitable, I ask, for the same amount of welfare to be paid to a family of four, for example, in the same financial situation, living in a small town in the South as the amount to be paid in Alaska? It certainly is not. And we should never forget that welfare is supposed to be based on need.

I ask unanimous consent that the table be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Footnotes on following page.

[1] The family consists of an employed husband, age 38, a wife not employed outside the home, an 8-year-old girl, and a 13-year-old boy.
[2] In addition to family consumption and personal taxes shown separately in the table, the total cost of the budget includes allowances for gifts and contributions, life insurance, occupational expenses, and social security, disability, and unemployment compensation taxes.
[3] Housing includes shelter, household operations, and housefurnishings. All families with the lower budget are assumed to be renters.
[4] The average costs of automobile owners and nonowners are weighted by the following proportions of families: Boston, Chicago, New York, and Philadelphia, 50 percent for both automobile owners and nonowners; all other metropolitan areas, 65 percent for automobile owners, 35 percent for nonowners; nonmetropolitan areas, 100 percent for automobile owners.
[5] In total medical care, the average costs of medical insurance were weighted by the following proportions: 30 percent for families paying full cost of insurance; 26 percent for families paying half cost; 44 percent for families covered by noncontributory insurance plans (paid by employer).
[6] For a detailed description see the 1967 edition of the "Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas," prepared by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. MILLER. Additionally, for 15 years, the Internal Revenue Service has been following a practice of imputing income to those who grow a substantial amount of the produce they consume. Where this is done by a family receiving welfare, it is obvious that the need for welfare is not as great as in the case of a family which does not do so.

The upshot of all this is that an amendment to the welfare reform bill was designed to cover these important areas of deficiency in the bill. It not only would direct the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make the studies needed to determine the cost of living differentials and the imputed income from growing a substantial amount of produce being consumed, with the assistance of the Department of Labor and the Treasury Department, but the adjustments in welfare would be put into effect by January 1, 1972.

This amendment was offered, along with several other amendments and the so-called "core" bill—representing several revisions to the House-passed welfare reform bill—by the Senator from Connecticut in the Senate Finance Committee. It was clearly understood that if the committee agreed to the Senator's motion, and it became attached to the social security bill, members of the committee would then have the opportunity to present further amendments to the welfare reform package. I might add that I had several other amendments besides the cost-of-living differential amendment, which was part of the package offerred by the Senator from Connecticut. Senator RIBICOFF's motion lost. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VARIATIONS FOR DIFFERENCES IN COST OF LIVING AND FOR THE VALUE OF FOOD PRODUCED FOR HOME CONSUMPTION

(Senator MILLER's cost of living equalizing amendment)

Insert on page C107, after line 15:

"SEC. 108. (a) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall, through arrangements with the Department of Labor and Treasury, with any other agency or organization, public or private, which he may find appropriate, conduct continuing studies to—

"(1) establish the variations which exist in the cost of living between urban and rural areas, different parts of the same States, and among appropriate regions in the United States, and

"(2) determine the monetary value to a family of producing food for home consumption.

"(b) On the basis of the variations in the cost of living established as a result of the studies conducted pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary shall, on or before January 1, 1972, make such adjustments in any or all of the amounts prescribed in sections 442(a), 442(b), and 452(a) of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act and in the amounts of food stamps provided under the Food Stamp Act of 1964, as may be necessary to insure that total combined public assistance, insofar as practicable, made equitable for recipients wherever they may reside in the United States.

"(c) The Secretary shall by regulations which become effective on or before January 1, 1972, prescribe a schedule of earned income which is to be imputed to any family which produces a substantial amount of food for home consumption, for purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of family assistance benefits payable under part D and supplementary payments under part E of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act. To the extent practicable, the Secretary shall include such adjustments and such schedule in the pretest programs authorized by section 105.

"(d) The findings of the Secretary which are implemented under the preceding subsection shall also be applicable, insofar as possible, to any payments to individuals or payments for medical care on behalf of individuals which are made on the basis of need under programs aided or assisted under the Social Security Act.

"(e) Before January 1, 1972, the Secretary shall report to the Congress and describe the adjustments which he proposes to make and the regulations which he proposes to issue pursuant to subsection (b).

"(f) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to conduct the studies authorized by subsection (a)."

Mr. MILLER. Now, the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Utah have offered the pending amendment which some of us thought was the same package that had been offered in the Finance Committee. But it is not the same, and the changes were certainly not discussed with me. In the case of the cost of living differential provisions, the pending amendment merely directs the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make the necessary studies and then report back to the Congress. The directive to implement these differentials by January 1, 1972, has been deleted. My amendment No. 1099 would restore the original language.

And so we now have before us, a package called "welfare reform" which would treat all welfare recipients alike, whether they lived in Anchorage, Alaska, Boston, Mass., Chicago, Ill., a little town in Alabama, Puerto Rico, or on a small farm growing much of their own produce. This violates the fundamental principle of need as a basis of welfare. It is discriminatory and inequitable. It results in adding millions of people to the welfare eligibility list who do not need to be added, and it, therefore, is excessive in its cost to those who pay the taxes to fund it. On this one count alone, it should be rejected. And I would hope that the President will have this serious deficiency brought to his attention so that he will know how his welfare reform program has been distorted.

It simply will not do to say—as the Secretary of HEW did at page 600 of the hearings—that State supplement variations take care of the problem. These variations, where they exist, are anything but scientifically based, and this is because the States do not have the capability to do so. Only the Bureau of Labor Statistics has that capability.

There is another provision in the pending amendment which is inequitable. I refer to the "disregard" of income in section 443(b)(4) on page 10. This provides that welfare payments shall not be reduced to the extent of earnings of a family of $60 per month plus one-half of the earnings beyond that.

Senator CURTIS of Nebraska gave the Finance Committee several specific, real-life examples he had received from the Douglas County, Nebr., welfare office showing that, because of the present disregard formula for welfare, some welfare recipients have been able to draw welfare even though their income was considerably higher than that of other families not on welfare. Yesterday he presented these same examples to the Senate.

It seemed to me that most of the members of the committee were deeply concerned about such a situation, and when we came to the disregard provisions under the work incentive program, we amended them, as set forth on page 465 of the pending bill. Under our change, the first $60 of earned income of individuals employed full time are disregarded; for those working part time, the first $30 is disregarded; plus one-third of up to $300 additional earnings and one-fifth of earnings in excess of $300 in each case.

I do not know why the authors of the pending amendment did not draft the disregard provisions of their amendment to reflect this change; and their failure to do so will simply mean that there will be more eligibles for welfare who do not need it.

Another defect in the pending Ribicoff-Bennett amendment has to with section 464 on page 46, relating to the obligation of deserting parents. For some reason, this amendment was drafted to delete the provisions agreed upon by the committee, set forth in section 540 on page 467 of the bill. These make it a misdemeanor to cross State lines to avoid parental responsibilities. They were discussed by the committee with representatives of the Department present, who raised no objection to them at all.

The pending amendment provides for a disregard of income from vocational rehabilitation allowances, and since the welfare program is supposed to be geared to the needs of recipients, there seems no good reason to not take such allowances into account. It might be said that these are calculated to provide an incentive, but there is no need for such incentive if the work and training requirements of the welfare reform program are effectively administered.

There are, of course, all in addition to defects clearly pointed out by the Senator from Delaware in earlier remarks.

In fairness, I should say that some defects in the House-passed bill have been overcome. For example, the cash penalty for refusing to work has been increased and the penalty cannot be frustrated by an increase in State supplements. However, the eligibility for food stamps has not yet been coordinated with the penalty, and this should be done.

As I pointed out during the executive session the other evening, the only Members of the Senate who know any of the details of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment and its implications are those of us who serve on the Senate Finance Committee, many of whom spent weeks and months of our time during the hearings and committee deliberations on the program. To offer this amendment on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, with so many Members uninformed about it and with such serious defects clearly in it, renders a disservice to the Senate and to the American people.

Running our sessions around the clock, coming in on Sunday and even on New Year's Day, convening the new Congress on January 3—all of these together do not alter the situation at all. This amendment needs some very important modifications or what now masquerades in the name of "welfare reform" will become "welfare inequity" plus a taxpayers' revolt. Because of the inconsiderate and foolhardy way this deeply important matter has been brought before us, with no opportunity to modify it whatsoever, I seriously doubt that a good piece of legislation is possible of enactment. I am willing to try. I have always been willing to try. But this willingness has not been reciprocated, and that is a tragedy.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Iowa is pleased to yield to his friend, the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I would like to compliment our distinguished colleague, the Senator from Iowa, for the statement he has just made. It has been my privilege to serve with him and to observe firsthand his great background of experience, knowledge, and understanding in a field in which I would suspect no Member of the Senate exceeds his expertise. As some Members of the Senate know, he is a tax lawyer. He worked for the Federal Government for several years before he eventually became a Member of this body. I have not met anyone, since I have been a Member of Congress, who is more expert on tax matters on this side of the Capitol.

I think we should heed well the important pronouncement he has made. I quite agree with him that to deny the Senate the opportunity to amend in any way or to consider in any way a whole series of amendments, which I think must be considered if we are going to come to any kind of workable piece of legislation, certainly does not auger well for good government.

It is unfortunate that the family assistance bill was brought before the House in such a way as to preclude any discussion or offering of amendments with alternative proposals, which the senior Senator from Iowa has tried to get considered in this body. He made many important contributions as a member of the Finance Committee.

I say now that if we were to adopt the pending amendment, we would not reform in a constructive way the mess in which welfare now finds itself.

I agree with the President of the United States that welfare must be reformed. It is extremely costly. It is not serving the purpose of encouraging people to move away from welfare into private employment. We would all like to have the objectives that have been spelled out by the President of the United States become fact. I do not think they will become fact under the terms of this amendment.

I doubt very much if anyone who has studied this proposal objectively would have any very real reason to believe that the President's goals would be achieved by the adoption of this amendment. I recall the observation made by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut when he said that had he known then what he now knows, he never would have recommended that the medicare and medicaid programs, which it is estimated will be $216 billion in the red when they have been in operation in 20 or 25 years, be adopted without first having been tried. That is the way I feel about the family assistance plan that is now before us.

I would hope that the Members of the Senate would study closely and heed the very profound observations made by my distinguished colleague from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. I thank my friend from Wyoming for his generous remarks. I can also state that day after day the Senator from Wyoming was nearly always in attendance. I am sure he was in attendance as much as anyone on the Finance Committee through all the hearings and deliberations on the welfare reform proposal. I am sure he can verify the fact that the Senator from Iowa was second to none in the committee in making every effort to give the administration an opportunity to present its case and to work with the administration in trying to make some progress on this bill, even though there were some who felt so highly opposed to it that they in good conscience felt it could never be cleaned up to be a satisfactory program.

I might say that I conferred, whenever I had an opportunity, whenever I was approached, and on some occasions on my own initiative, with representatives of the Department of HEW, in an effort to point out the shortcomings I felt were in the measure, to work with them in trying to develop some ways of overcoming its shortcomings.

I might say that in some cases I was satisfied. I had questions about some of the features of this bill, and sat down and spent considerable time in trying to find out the answers to those questions; and on a great many occasions I would say that I was satisfied with the answers I received.

But the Senator from Wyoming will vouch for the fact that most of us on the committee were concerned about one thing, probably, more than anything else, and that was the thought of the tremendous increase in the number of eligibles for welfare, running up to as many as 25 or 35 percent of the people in a single State. The reaction seemed to be, "My God, what are we coming to in this country, when this is the kind of a program we might possibly adopt in the Senate?"

So one of the first things I tried to do during the hearings was point out, frankly and honestly, to the Secretary our concern over this matter. We asked, "How can we do equity; how can we have reform and at the same time not have such a tremendous number of eligibles for public assistance? Please give us some options so we can look them over."

What did we get? We got one, and not a very good one at that. When I came out with my cost-of-living differential amendment, everything was going to be just fine. That was going to be added on to the package offered by the Senator from Connecticut. I voted to add it on, and it was defeated.

What happened then? The amendment was torn to pieces before it was put on the pending amendment by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Utah; and I have never yet received a very good answer, I might say; in fact, I do not think there is a very good answer to it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, much has been said as to the attitudes of various Governors concerning the family assistance program. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point various statements and indications in support of the family assistance program by Governors and Governors-elect.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPPORT OF FAP BY GOVERNORS AND GOVERNORS-ELECT

In recent weeks we have received a great amount of support for early passage of FAP from both Governors and Governors-elect.

REPUBLICAN GOVERNORS' ASSOCIATION

On December 16, 1970, in Sun Valley, Idaho, Governor Peterson of Delaware presented the Family Assistance Plan and the Ribicoff-Bennett Amendment to the Republican Governors' association in Executive Session. The group voted to support the plan with 14 in favor, 2 opposed, and 3 abstentions. (See copy of telegram to Secretary Richardson enclosed.)

BIPARTISAN GOVERNORS' MEETING WITH THE PRESIDENT

On December 11, 1970, several Governors and Governors-elect met with President Nixon and later with Secretary Richardson and expressed their support of the Family Assistance Plan. Governor Ogilvie was the sponsor. The meeting was held at the request of the Governors because of their great interest in the legislation. Governors attending the meetings were Ogilvie, Cahill, Scott, Peterson of Delaware, Peterson of New Hampshire, Ray and Smith of Texas. Also attending were Governor-elect Shapp and Lt. Gov.-elect Dwight of Massachusetts.

GOVERNORS SUPPORT OF FAP BEFORE THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE

Four Governors testified in favor of the President's Family Assistance Plan on September 10, 1970, before the Senate Finance Committee—Governor Licht of Rhode Island, Governor Ray of Iowa, Governor Holton of Virginia, and Governor McCall of Oregon.

INDIVIDUAL GOVERNOR'S SUPPORT

Governor Sargent—Massachusetts. Wired Secretary Richardson December 15, 1970, saying, "I support the Family Assistance Program." (See telegram.)

Governor Curtis—Maine. Notified Secretary Richardson by letter on December 11, 1970 of his endorsement of the Family Assistance Plan. (See letter.)

Governor Dempsey—Connecticut. Notified Secretary Richardson on November 27, 1970 that he continues to support the basic concepts of the Family Assistance Plan. (See letter.)

Governor Cahill—New Jersey. Wrote all Governors urging support of the Family Assistance Plan on November 19, 1970 and asking Governors to assist in getting a Senate vote during the post-election session. (See letter.)

Governor Evans—Washington. Wrote all Governors on August 27, 1970 urging the support of the Family Assistance Plan. (See letter.)

Governor Ogilvie—Illinois. Issued a press release strongly supporting the Family Assistance Plan and its final enactment this year. (See statement.)

Governor Rockefeller—Arkansas. On September 25, 1970 Governor Winthrop Rockefeller of Arkansas sent President Nixon the attached letter strongly endorsing FAP and requesting that Arkansas be selected for a pretest. This letter was released to the press and widely publicized in Arkansas. (See copy of letter.)

Governor Tiemann—Nebraska. At the express wish of Governor Tiemann, Robert McManus, Director of the Nebraska State Department of Welfare, has testified before the Senate Finance Commmittee that the State of Nebraska generally supports the Family Assistance Act.

BOSTON, MASS.

ELLIOTT RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington, D.C.

I support the Family Assistance Program and have wired both Senator Kennedy asking them to support the program in the final legislation. I would, however, like to see the following included: Family budget figure raised to $2200; a State hold-safe provision setting the 1971 budget as the flat-ceiling on State welfare spending; and a mandatory period be set up for State-Federal planning.

GOV. FRANCIS W. SARGENT.

STATE OF MAINE,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Augusta, Maine, December 11, 1970.

Hon. ELLIOT RICHARDSON,
Secretary, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SECRETARY RICHARDSON: Thank you for your letter of November 13, 1970 regarding the revised Family Assistance Plan legislation.

We have already communicated with our congressional delegation indicating our endorsement of H.R. 16311, although we are mindful that the legislation has limitations, primarily from a fiscal point of view. We are one of the states which are experiencing a severe demand on our appropriated funds for categorical welfare; in fact, it is clearly going to be necessary to request an emergency appropriation from the legislature in order to complete the fiscal year. We envision the FAP legislation, particularly with its most recently proposed amendments, as being the only long-range answer to this dilemma.

I appreciate having the opportunity to comment on this important legislation.

Sincerely,

KENNETH M. CURTIS,
Governor.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBERS,
Hartford, November 27, 1970.

Hon. ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON,
Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: This will acknowledge your letter of November 13, 1970, relative to the Family Assistance Plan.

Connecticut continues to support the basic concepts contained in the plan, namely, a national income floor, coverage for the working poor, national eligibility standards and federal administration. However, we continue to be concerned with the small amount of fiscal relief this plan provides States like Connecticut, which have already established high welfare standards.

I have asked our Welfare Commissioner, John Harder, to review the material submitted with your letter, and will submit any additional comments deemed appropriate upon completion of that review.

We endorse the need for welfare reform and look forward to the day when the Federal Government assumes complete responsibility for this national problem.

Sincerely,

JOHN DEMPSEY,
Governor.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Trenton, November 19, 1970.

Copy of Letter sent by Governor William T. Cahill to all Governors on the Family Assistance Plan

DEAR GOVERNOR: I am writing to you today to solicit your aid in attempting to resolve what I regard as a seriously critical situation nationally, and one which I am sure has caused you deep concern in your own State. I refer to our Nation's public welfare assistance programs.

Nationally, welfare costs and caseloads have been soaring upward in geometric proportions. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Elliott L. Richardson, announced only this week that welfare caseloads for the current year have already increased by a factor of 20% over last year, and at this rate the number of caseloads is more than doubling every five years.

The problem, as competent surveys and statistical studies have repeatedly indicated, is that as presently structured, our welfare system is not really aiding those who truly need and deserve assistance. It is totally lacking in an effective delivery system and unresponsive to the many profound changes which have taken place in our Nation since our original welfare programs were first developed. It is clear that the original system did not envision the high degree of urbanization that we have today; the dramatic increase in numbers and classes of people who would eventually be seeking assistance; the shift in emphasis from the very old to the very young, and the associated problems of increased unemployment; and the high degree of mobility which has come to characterize our modern society. The government's response to these critical changes over the years has been a patchwork process that has largely been a failure.

I feel that as Governors of the sovereign States, charged with administering the welfare programs, we must lead the way in the push for a total overhaul of the public welfare assistance programs from the bottom up. We now have an eleventh hour opportunity with the President's Family Assistance Plan now pending in the Senate. This measure, which passed the House earlier this year, presents a sensible approach to welfare reform, including, for example, wage incentives, job training, day care, assistance in finding jobs, penalties for not accepting reasonable employment, and a national minimum welfare standard of $1600. If passed, the act would become effective on January 1, 1972, and all States would receive an influx of substantial Federal funds as early as during the second half of fiscal 1972 to assist them in meeting the welfare problem head-on.

This is the last chance, probably for years, for us to achieve meaningful welfare reform. While I cannot guarantee that the President's welfare reform program will be without some flaws, I am nevertheless convinced that it presents a far more acceptable alternative to the present system. As Secretary Richardson stated on Sunday, "This isn't a conservative-liberal issue; it's a question of sensible reform of an existing mess."

I therefore ask you to urge the U.S. Senators from your State to give the President's welfare program their support if it comes up for a vote during the present post-election session.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM T. CAHILL,
Governor.

STATEMENT ON THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

The Administration of the State of Illinois has carefully reviewed the Family Assistance Plan now under consideration by the Senate Finance Committee.

After extensive consultation and thorough consideration of the implications of the proposal, I am convinced that the program is fundamentally sound. The Senate has before it the greatest single opportunity to reform by one legislative act the way government treats poor people that any legislative body in this nation has had in three decades.

The President has adjudged our welfare system a "colossal failure." On the basis of my experience as the Governor of a major industrial state I must agree.

The present system is a waste of state and federal money. It is a system that no one likes. And for good reason.

I have heard Illinois residents complain of intolerable injustices in the system. Benefits are granted begrudgingly, without dignity and often arbitrarily. Desertion of families by fathers is encouraged. The present system builds in incentives not to work.

I have also seen another side. The system places state government in an impossible fiscal and administrative situation. I have seen astronomic growths in caseload insidiously eat up moneys planned for other important state programs. I have watched these incredible increases in our caseloads undermine the ability of my state to deliver services such as child care, job training and work referrals which are badly needed to get people off of welfare. These sky rocketing costs have diverted scarce dollars from housing, education and health programs which are essential to break the dependency cycle. I have experienced the frustration of seeing directives not carried out because the system is unwieldy and hopelessly complex.

To my mind the present welfare system is the single greatest threat to the continuing vitality and fiscal health of the state.

This archaic and haphazard system simply must be reformed. The Family Assistance Plan is the way to do it. Meaningful improvement can come only from the bold and comprehensive change mandated by this landmark legislation.

The Family Assistance Plan would benefit the citizens of Illinois and other states in the following ways:

(1) It would provide, for the first time, federal assistance for families in which the father works full time but does not earn enough to keep his family out of poverty. It would do this with the most effective mechanism I know—dollars, rather than services, the effectiveness of which we have no adequate ways of measuring. I believe this approach gives the poor a freedom of choice in purchasing goods and services that will inspire those qualities of human dignity and motivation essential for true human renewal. Moreover, the Nixon plan giving an earnings supplement to the working poor builds in a direct dollar incentive to work. For many worthy citizens of Illinois, Family Assistance will provide deserved and significant new help.

(2) It will require fundamental changes in the administration of welfare which are long overdue. Enactment of Family Assistance would clear away what the President has described as a "federal welfare quagmire" and permit the states to revamp their welfare delivery system. Only if eligibility determination for financial assistance is separated from the provision of the myriad of social services, can better management be achieved. In Illinois, in anticipation of the enactment of legislation such as this, we have already taken steps to test out the basic precepts of the President's plan in a designated geographical area. We need and welcome the challenge and the opportunity this legislation provides.

(3) The plan will assist the states to meet the crushing fiscal burdens of welfare; figures now available show ADC costs for August were fully 43% over the costs just one year ago. This is a rate of growth that totally dwarfs our annual revenue growth of 6%. Its size means that we must either cut back severely on existing state programs in other important areas, or place further strains on a state revenue structure that is highly regressive compared with the federal. Neither of these alternatives is sound in policy or makes sense to the people.

I have repeatedly urged the federal government to come to the aid of the states with revenue sharing. For the same reasons, it must more fully fund welfare costs. The Family Assistance Plan is revenue sharing now. This is the real New Federalism.

Many shortcomings of the welfare system today exist because we have merely tinkered with its details and added band-aid solutions, thereby warping its underlying objective. The result is an unworkable system for moving people out of poverty into the mainstream of American life. It is my strong hope that well-intentioned efforts to improve the Family Assistance legislation will not be responsible for its failure. It is time for all persons truly interested in the improvement of our welfare system to come to the support of this legislation.

It is imperative that the states that bear the most direct responsibility for welfare have a major voice in shaping welfare reform policy. We all know that this legislation does not provide the full federal funding of welfare that the National Governors' Conference has sought. In my own budget message last April, I called upon the federal government to assume this cost and said "The greatest single contribution that the government could make to state and local government would be to pay all public aid grants." Nonetheless I am convinced that the Family Assistance Plan is a giant step in this direction. We must recognize and accept the administrative problems which the inherent in shifting from the entrenched system to this new departure. But we cannot let these considerations distract us from the benefits this change will bring. We should not wait for the achievement of perfection while the vicious poverty cycle in this country continues unabated.

No one piece of legislation could do everything I would like to see done in the field of social welfare.

The Family Assistance Plan is the right beginning. There will be other opportunities for further reform. I am convinced they will come only if we succeed in this initial effort. Only if we turn the corner with this legislation will we be able to meet the pressing demands for similar fundamental reform in medical care and other essential programs.

As the Governor of Illinois I stand four square behind the Family Assistance Plan and offer my services to assist in its passage. I intend to work with the Governors of the Midwest Governors' Conference as well as the chief executive of the large industrial states to see what can be done to move the Nixon Family Assistance Plan out of the Senate Finance Committee and into final enactment this year.

COPY OF LETTER SENT TO GOVERNORS FROM GOVERNOR DAN EVANS, WASHINGTON (ON FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN) AUGUST 27, 1970

Late in July, I sent you the impact of the Family Assistance Plan (HR 16311) and indicated some of the problems in the legislation as presently drafted. Subsequently, members of my staff met with representatives of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and reached agreement on certain substantive issues. In my opinion, these changes would resolve, with certain exceptions, the major problems in the plan.

The major changes on which agreement was reached are:

1. Expenditures for Aid to Families with Dependent Children-Unemployed Parents and Aid to Families with Dependent Children-Foster Care will be excluded from the expenditure base for computing the "hold safe" requirement.

2. The wide discretion granted to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with respect to payment levels under State Supplementation apparently has already been discussed with the Senate Finance Committee. If this discretion is not modified by the Committee so as to make mandatory consultation with the states on these payment levels explicit in the law, HEW has agreed to include such a provision in the rules.

3. If sufficient funds are not available to the states, expenditures under Title XX can be limited on the basis of a state's own priorities although a balanced program of services will be necessary. Additional services could be provided by municipalities with a population of 250,000 or more if there were sufficient local funds. Non-federal expenditures for services must be at least as high as fiscal 1971.

4. Under Title XVI the recognition of the economy of shared living arrangements was considered by HEW to be implicit in computing the $110 standard. HEW agrees, however, that this requirement should be made explicit in the law.

5. Under the emergency assistance provision of Title XX, the intent apparently was that the states define the conditions and content, with the Secretary of HEW setting the outer limits. HEW agrees, however, that the law should be modified to indicate that "emergency" is to be defined by the state.

The representatives of HEW considered that our suggestions with respect to Title XIX would be more appropriately considered with the health insurance legislation to be introduced next February rather than in connection with the Family Assistance Plan legislation as such. HEW will work with the states on appropriate modification of Title XIX prior to the submittal of such legislation.

We still have a concern that a state might not be able to meet its fiscal obligations under the bill at some time in the future. HEW has agreed to work with us to develop language that will permit the Secretary to waive part of a state's liability, should serious fiscal problems develop.

Although we still have certain questions about some aspects of the law, e.g., the liberalized definition of disability, and the fragmentation of services that would be possible if cities of over 250,000 instituted their own services program, the above changes overcome our major financial objections to the legislation. We have always been in favor of the intent of the Family Assistance Plan, and, with these financial modifications incorporated in the legislation, we will give it our firm support.

One further area that you may wish to examine is the provision in Title XX of the bill which permits cities of over 250,000 to elect to operate their own social services program. This could make the equitable provision of social services extremely difficult in many states, and interposes another level in an already complex system. I urge that you carefully examine the impact of this provision on the ability of your state to deliver services effectively.

I trust that you and your staff will review the suggested changes and the impact on your state. Given these changes, the "hold safe" provision appears to become a substantive rather than nominal limitation on state expenditures. We have appreciated the positive attitude of HEW staff and consider that solid progress has been made.

We hope that you, like ourselves, will support the legislation as modified.

Sincerely,

DANIEL J. EVANS,
Governor.

SEPTEMBER 25, 1970.

Hon. RICHARD M. NIXON,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR PRESIDENT NIXON: I am most impressed by what I have learned about the Family Assistance Program. I congratulate you on your courage and vision in presenting it to the people of this country.

I am urging that you give serious consideration to Arkansas as a demonstration state. Our state stands ready to work night and day with you in this historic undertaking. I have no doubt whatsoever that we can prove the capability such a program requires.

The people of Arkansas without exception, I believe, share in endorsing the first principle of FAP—to help people to help themselves.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely,

WINTHROP ROCKEFELLER,
Governor.

SUN VALLEY, IDAHO.

Secretary ELLIOTT L. RICHARDSON,
Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington, D.C.:

At an executive session of the Republican Governors' Association this noon, I presented the matter of the Family Assistance Plan and the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment. The RGA voted to support the President's Family Assistance Plan with 14 in favor, 2 opposed and 3 absentions.

RUSSELL W. PETERSON,
Governor of Delaware.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of the pending Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, I urge the Senate to act promptly to adopt the measure.

The debate over welfare reform and the proposed family assistance plan has gone on in the Congress for many months. Before the issue reached us in the form of legislative proposals, it had been debated over a period of several years by private citizens, advisory councils, welfare directors, and State officials.

So there is no lack of information on this issue, nor is there any need for further study or prolonged tests of the pending proposal, or alternative proposals, to determine whether reform is needed. Those who have examined existing welfare programs know the system is inefficient, unfair, and inequitable.

There are no national standards for either benefits or eligibility. There is no uniformity in Federal cost-sharing, and the administration of public assistance varies widely from State to State.

As has been pointed out, what we have, in short, is really 54 different programs in 54 different jurisdictions throughout the United States. Each State sets its own standard of need. Each State determines who will be eligible. Each State decides how much it will pay. And each State gets a different share from the Federal Government.

Is it any wonder the system is not working and the people it is supposed to help are frustrated?

The continuation of a system so demonstrably inequitable and inefficient is not fair to the poor—especially those who need help and are not getting it under the categorical approach—and it is not fair to States and cities.

Welfare is no longer a local problem. We have become a highly mobile society and we have encouraged people to seek employment in urban centers where jobs and industries are located. The movement of people into cities and their inability to obtain employment, because of lack of skills and lack of opportunity, has caused welfare rolls to mushroom. Most of these people have no recourse but to seek help through the aid to dependent children program.

In my own State of New Jersey, three-fourths of all our public welfare expenditures go into this program. According to Governor Cahill, the average monthly number of welfare recipients rose from 106,000 to 306,000 during the past 5 years, an increase of nearly 200 percent. Net expenditures for this program—Federal, State, and county—rose from $59 to $216 million, a rise of approximately 270 percent. And State expenditures increased from $17 to $99 million, or a rise of 500 percent. I am told that total State expenditures for welfare—and medicaid—are expected to increase as much as 53 percent, or $100 million, next year alone.

Obviously, neither New Jersey nor other States experiencing similar skyrocketing costs can afford to continue to bear the financial cost of what must be recognized as a national problem. Help from the Federal Government is long overdue.

The family assistance plan does not do all I think it should, but it does represent a substantial improvement over the conglomeration of the 54 programs we currently have. Moreover, as now amended, FAP would provide, in addition to national minimum standards and work incentives, fiscal relief to the States on a permanent basis by freezing their future welfare costs to 90 percent of their 1971 costs.

The Ribicoff-Bennett amendment is the product of weeks of effort by the administration and various Members of Congress to develop a fair, workable bill. It represents, I believe, the best hope of moving toward welfare reform this year.

Of course, even if FAP is adopted, it will not provide the kind of immediate help needed by local governments. There will be a lag of at least 12 to 18 months before the new program is implemented by the States, during which time welfare costs are expected to continue to escalate.

That is the reason I recently introduced an amendment to title II of H.R. 17550 to increase the Federal share of the cost of medicaid and current public assistance programs from the present minimum of 50 percent to a new minimum of 72 percent.

The effect of my amendment would be to provide $2.3 billion in urgently needed Federal aid to three-fourths of the States, including those States bearing the heaviest burden of welfare costs. My amendment is not offered as a substitute for FAP but simply as a way of providing some relief until the family assistance program, if adopted by Congress, goes into effect.

I hope it will be possible to vote on both the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment and on my amendment before the Senate adjourns.

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. Mr. President, 35 years ago this Nation made a commitment to enable the elderly to live a life of dignity and self-respect in retirement. Enactment of the Social Security Act was a landmark in social legislation. It once again affirmed the high value we place upon human dignity throughout a lifetime.

Today social security protects workers and their families from loss of earnings because of retirement, death, or disability.

Without these benefits, many older Americans would be forced to go on the relief rolls or to depend upon relatives who frequently would not have the resources to support them.

And without these benefits 19 out of 20 beneficiaries would not even achieve a moderate standard of living.

Yet, the vast majority of older Americans are experiencing a retirement income crisis which is worsening, rather than improving:

Nearly 5 million elderly persons fall below the poverty line;

Over 2 million are on welfare; and

Only about 1 in 5 has a job, usually part time and at lower wages.

Today older Americans are twice as likely to be poor as compared to younger persons. One out of every four persons 65 and older—in contrast to one in nine for younger individuals—lives in poverty.

Even more disturbing, their aggregate numbers in poverty are now increasing, for the first time. Since 1968 the total number of elderly persons living in poverty jumped by nearly 200,000—from 4.6 to 4.8 million. In sharp contrast, the number of younger persons who would be considered poor declined by almost 1.3 million, about a 6-percent reduction.

These figures clearly show that piecemeal, stopgap measures are just not going to work. Today's retirement income problems cannot be solved by adding a few dollars every year or two to social security.

Immediate and far-reaching action is needed on several fronts.

The bill before us today has several provisions which will be of vital help to individuals living on limited fixed incomes.

Several provisions, in fact, represent a major step forward in dealing with the present retirement income crisis. They are identical or very similar to proposals I have advanced in my omnibus social security legislation and other proposals to help the aged.

A 10-PERCENT BENEFIT INCREASE

In May, the House of Representatives passed a 5-percent across-the-board raise, effective in 1971. This increase would, of course, be welcome by our Nation's 20 million older Americans.

However, our cost of living has been rising at an annual rate of about 6 percent—the most rampant inflation in nearly 20 years.

At this rate, the 5-percent benefit increase would be wiped out before a social security beneficiary received his first check reflecting this raise.

Spiraling inflation continues to rob the pocketbook of every American. But no group is hurt more badly than older Americans living on fixed incomes.

As prices go up, their meager purchasing power goes down—usually quite sharply.

For an average retired couple, a 10-percent benefit increase would mean an additional $118 in annual benefits above the House level, or approximately $10 a month.

MINIMUM BENEFITS

Another significant improvement in the Finance Committee bill is the substantial increase in minimum monthly benefits.

Minimum benefits for a single person now amounts to $64 a month.

The 5-percent increase authorized in the House bill would only have the effect of raising this present inadequate base by $3.20 a month—from $64 to $67.20.

This is only a token amount and would be completely unrealistic for a person subsisting in poverty.

The Senate bill would help to improve this measure substantially by providing a minimum monthly benefit of $100. This badly needed reform can be one of the most significant measures in the bill before us.

LIBERALIZATION OF THE EARNINGS TEST

Under present law, a person under 72 may earn up to $1,680 in annual income before his social security benefits are reduced.

For many senior citizens who need to work because of inadequate social security benefits, this limitation operates as a formidable barrier.

In both the House and Senate bills, the existing earnings test is raised to a more realistic level—$2,000 before social security benefits would be reduced.

In addition, $1 in benefits would be withheld for each $2 of earnings above the $2,000 cutoff point. Under existing law, this one for two feature only applies to a $1,200 earnings band—from $1,680 to $2,880. Thereafter, $1 in benefits is withheld for each $1 of earnings.

A 100-PERCENT BENEFIT FOR WIDOWS

Another far-reaching reform in both the House and Senate versions is my measure to provide 100-percent benefits for widows.

At present, they receive only 82 percent of the primary benefit of their deceased spouse.

One of the pressing reasons for making this urgently needed change is that approximately six out of every 10 widows living alone have incomes below the poverty line. Especially disadvantaged are the Nation's very oldest women.

Another compelling argument for this measure was advanced by Dr. Joseph Pechman of the Brookings Institute:

An increase in the widow's benefits to a full 100 percent of P/A (the primary benefit amount that had been payable to the husband) would more effectively aid the poor, per dollar of added cost, than any other change in the system, including a minimum benefit.

It is estimated that this change alone can provide an additional $260 in annual income for widows. Approximately 2.7 million widows and widowers will be benefited from this change.

AGE-62 COMPUTATION POINT FOR MEN

My proposal to provide an age-62 computation point for benefits for men—the same as now exists for women—has also been incorporated in both the House and Senate bills.

Under present law, 3 more years are used in computing benefits for a man than are used for a woman of the same age.

This difference in the treatment of men and women can result in significantly lower benefits being paid to a retired man than are paid to a retired woman with the same average earnings.

When the change in the committee bill is fully operational, the benefits for most men would be higher than under present law. And higher benefits would be paid to the dependents of retired men and to the survivors of men who die after age 62.

LIBERALIZED ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS FOR DISABILITY INSURANCE

A number of improvements were also made in the Finance Committee bill to improve the present disability provisions.

For example, the Senate bill reduces the waiting period to qualify for disability benefits 6 to 4 months.

Moreover, blind persons will be able to qualify for disability benefits, provided they have worked under social security for 6 quarters.

UPDATING RETIREMENT INCOME CREDIT

In addition, the Finance Committee bill also incorporates my proposal to update the retirement income credit for retired teachers, firemen, policemen, and other Government annuitants.

The purpose of the credit is to place these pensioners on a substantially equivalent tax basis with social security beneficiaries.

Social security benefits are, of course, tax exempt. Government annuitants receive comparable tax relief by claiming a 15-percent credit on their qualifying retirement income—their pensions, annuities, rents, interest, and dividends.

But the credit no longer provides equivalent relief because it has not been updated for 8 long years. During that time, there have been three badly needed social security increases. And hopefully, we will soon enact a fourth raise to help bring retirement income up to a more realistic level.

My amendment—which was adopted in modified form—would help to correct this longstanding inequity.

It would do this by raising the maximum amount for computing the 15-percent credit from $1,524 to $1,872 for a single person and from $2,286 to $2,808 for an elderly married couple.

This could mean a possible tax savings of $52 for a single retiree and $78 for a married couple.

SECTION 225

One especially objectionable feature in the House-passed bill was section 225, which provided for a one-third cutback in Federal funding after 60 days for medicaid patients in hospitals or 90 days for persons in nursing homes or mental institutions.

This is in spite of the fact that two-thirds of all nursing home residents require more than 90 days' care.

This ill-advised proposal could have dealt a crippling blow to the availability or quality of care for medicaid patients.

Since medicaid patients are unable to pay for their own medical care, this crushing burden would fall directly on the States. And we know that virtually every State in the Union lacks sufficient resources to assume this additional substantial burden.

In the committee bill, there would be cutbacks in Federal funding for institutional care only when adequate professional review and medical audit functions are not effectively applied. However, States properly carrying out these functions would not be affected by any cutback provision.

FINANCING OF COST-OF-LIVING INCREASES

In spite of the overall worthiness of the bill, one especially controversial provision has arisen, and that is the method of financing the cost-of-living increase.

To pay for these increases, approximately 50 percent would come from raising the tax rates and 50 percent from increasing the taxable wage base.

The effect of this measure is that a large portion of this burden would be shouldered by people earning low incomes—people who can least afford a tax increase.

Since the payroll tax rate would be uniformly applied to all covered individuals, workers with low earnings would pay a proportionately higher percentage of their total income than higher paid persons.

Once again, this underscores the need for well-timed and well-conceived use of general revenues to help finance a portion of the social security program.

The advantage of this approach is that it would provide a more equitable means for financing this essential, but still imperfect program.

It would not result in burdensome payroll taxes being imposed upon today's workers. And it would make the tax structure for financing the program more progressive.

Mr. President, the overall study of the "economics of aging" by the Senate Committee on Aging—of which I am chairman—has helped make the case for badly needed reform in social security.

The bill before us today represents a significant step forward in many respects. But our task is still not complete.

Further reform is still needed and will be discussed in much greater detail in the Committee on Aging's final report on the economics of aging, which will be issued in the very near future.

A recent letter from Mr. Nelson Cruikshank, president of the National Council of Senior Citizens, makes a very perceptive analysis of some of the major provisions in the 1970 social security bill.

His comments about the financing of the cost-of-living increase, especially merit the serious attention of all Members of the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD for my colleagues to read.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF SENIOR CITIZENS, INC.,
Washington, D.C., December 14, 1970.

Hon. HARRISON A. WILLIAMS, JR.,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: This is in reference to H.R. 17550 (Social Security Amendments of 1970) which we understand is being reported by the Senate Finance Committee and will probably be before the entire Senate this week.

As you know, this is a very complex bill containing many proposals for changes in the basic Social Security program in Medicare, Medicaid, and Public Welfare. In one way or another practically all these proposals affect the well being of the older people of this country and we would have preferred that there were time for us to make an analysis of all the proposals and to present our views in detail. However, it appears that in the short time remaining to this Congress this will not be possible.

There are some major provisions of this measure before you on which we would appreciate the opportunity of presenting our views.

CASH BENEFITS

The first of these is the matter of increasing the cash benefits under the Old-Age, Survivors and Disability programs. The House-passed bill provides but a meagre five percent across-the-board increase. The Finance Committee bill provides a 10% increase with $100 per month minimum benefit. While this represents a substantial improvement, it still falls short of meeting the economic needs of the elderly who, in the face of inflationary increases in living costs, are witnessing the erosion of their already meagre incomes.

About 9 out of 10 older people now receive Social Security benefits and are largely dependent on them as witnessed by the fact that one quarter of the married couple beneficiaries and one half of the non-married have other income of less than $40.00 a month per person. Average Social Security benefits are $117 a month for retired workers.

Inflation has hit older people the hardest because their incomes rise slowly—if at all—and because the greatest price increases have taken place in such necessities as home maintenance, insurance, taxes, medical care and transportation. The most seriously affected are older widows or unmarried women who form the largest single element in the older population. The average Social Security benefit for widows is $101 a month.

It is for such reasons that we appeal to you to give primary consideration to increases in cash benefits. Whatever disposition the Senate may make of the many other proposals contained in H.R. 17550—this is one on which we feel confident you will want to take immediate action. And we urge you to take such action as will assure that whatever comes out of conference will provide not less than a 10 percent increase with the minimum benefit of $100 a month.

COST OF LIVING INCREASES

Secondly, we have some very definite views of the proposals for increases in benefits geared to increases in living costs which we would like you to consider.

We are, of course, not opposed to increases whatever their basis. But we want to emphasize the position we have consistently taken, namely that cost-of-living percentage increases applied to the present low level of benefits as a base, will not alone meet the income needs of the elderly. To do this requires substantial improvements in present benefit amounts. Future needs could then be met in large measure by automatic increases based on a cost-of-living figures.

But if the steadily improving standard of living provided by the dynamic American economy is to be shared by the elderly, Congress must continue, as it has in the past, to review periodically the requirements and resources of the Social Security system and make such adjustments as appear necessary and feasible in the light of current economic and social conditions.

Both provisions for automatic adjustment and for continuing responsibility of the Congress in this area appear to be provided in the escalator provision of the Senate Committee bill. Except that in this bill the provisions for financing the increases are less equitable, in our view, than those of the House-passed bill which would finance the increased benefits by increases in contribution and benefit bases, also geared to increases in cost-of-living.

Consequently, we would urge that the provisions for financing the cost-of-living increases contained in the House bill be retained along with the provision for "intervening" by the Congress, as contained in the Finance Committee bill. We feel strongly that the burden of rising benefits geared to cost-of-living should not be borne by workers (and their employers) in the lower wage brackets, as would be the case under the financing provision of the Senate Committee bill.

RETIREMENT TEST

Finally, we support the proposed changes in the retirement test which are identical in both the House-passed bill and the Senate Committee bill. The liberalizations of the test both for the present and those for the future geared to cost-of-living, appear as moderate adjustments required by changing conditions. We are opposed to any proposals for eliminating the test entirely, or for more far-reaching changes than those contained in the present bill.

The National Council of Senior Citizens, like many members of Congress, I am sure, has been called upon to request elimination of the retirement test on the allegations that the Social Security program should not "prevent people from working." In response to these requests we made a thorough study of the purpose and operation of the test and concluded that it would be most unfair to the great majority of retirees if this test were to be eliminated. After wide distribution of the results of this study by every means available, our membership has supported our opposition to removal of the test.

The main reasons for this position are (1) most elderly are not able to work, even if jobs in the present labor market were available, (2) removing the test would be of benefit to less than 10 percent of the elderly and this would include those who need help least of all; professional people, business executives and others who for the most part do not rely mainly on Social Security benefits for their livelihood and (3) the cost which would run about $2.75 billion the first year and more in later years, would undoubtedly prevent increases in benefits for those much more in need.

We appreciate your giving our views consideration as this very vital measure comes before you for action. If we can be of any assistance in further clarifying our position, or in any other way, please feel free to call on us.

Sincerely and respectfully yours,
NELSON H. CRUIKSHANK,
President.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, presentations by several members of the Finance Committee, from both parties, have illustrated the fallacy that the family assistance plan would create incentives for people to work rather than not to work. Supposedly workfare was the foundation of this program but it is now evident we need a pilot project to make it possible for information to be developed to prepare legislation for programs to accomplish this objective.

We need to determine what can be done to provide jobs for people under this program. At the present time we have a serious unemployment problem in this country and we must find a solution. Many of these people are on welfare.

Mr. President, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare has estimated the current welfare caseload in the Nation at 12.6 million.

This is an increase of 2 million persons over the same date 1 year ago.

Secretary Richardson has also been quoted as saying that in some States the hike in welfare caseloads is up as much as 30 percent over last year. This means that caseloads in some areas are more than doubled every 5 years.

President Nixon has set the current welfare budget at $8.7 billion—yet it is expected that the actual cost this fiscal year will soar over $10 billion.

This welfare load already is a very substantial burden on the hard-working people of our Nation.

And yet, here we are discussing a program to double the number of persons who qualify to collect welfare payments.

This simply is not fair to those people in our society who work day in and day out to carry their own weight.

Mr. President, we have run the gamut of suggestions as to what income a person is entitled to as a birthright in this Nation. It ranges from $1,600 to more than $7,000—depending on which advocate of the guaranteed annual wage you may talk to.

What in the world has happened to our country?

Why are we so determined to travel down the same road that proved so disastrous to the British?

Our Nation became great and powerful by offering people opportunities—not by guaranteeing them handouts. Our people have prospered because of their sweat and toil and their willingness to sacrifice.

Perhaps it is a bit old fashioned, but I believe that some of the principles that made our country great still are valid. I do not see why we should pick the year 1970—or 1971—to switch to a socialistic philosophy which is contrary to our heritage.

Those who have promoted the various guaranteed annual wage programs over the years have dwelled on the plight of the poor. And I can appreciate this concern. I too am concerned about the plight of the poor. We certainly have not done enough for the aged and the ill who are deserving of much more consideration.

But let us talk for just a moment about the plight of the working man and woman and his family.

Throughout our history the bulk of Americans have been willing—and in most cases even thankful—to labor hard for their livelihood. They have been justly proud to carry their own weight and do an extra bit to help their Nation.

Millions have started work in their teens. Mostly they have had precious little education. Many have worked all their adult lives, 5 and 6 days a week at labor that is perhaps monotonous, perhaps tedious, perhaps physically exhausting. These proud masses have not sought—nor would most of them have accepted—a chance to freeload on their fellow workers.

Now, suddenly in the latter half of the 20th century, we have a strange, new movement afoot. There is a faction that contends that people have a right to freeload on their fellows, that no one has an obligation to help carry his share in paying the price of making society run.

Advocates of the guaranteed annual wage—or the family assistance plan as it is called in this case—make it sound as though welfare payments somehow materialize magically. They foster the old, worn myth that the State is something with endless resources that can provide for the needs and desires of everyone.

But we know better. Or at least I hope we do.

The Government has nothing to give to anybody that it does not first take from someone else.

If we double the welfare roles, then we multiply accordingly the amount of tax money that we must extract from the hard-working man to give to the nonproductive members of our society.

This is not a scheme to take from the rich and give to the poor.

It is a scheme to take from the middle- and low-income worker—already struggling against inflation—to give to the poor, whether the poor be deserving of help or not. Again, I say that I am not being critical of persons who have a legitimate claim to welfare, such as the aged or the ill who cannot work.

Mr. President, I am pleading for the man who is determined to do whatever he can to pay his own way in the best of American tradition. This is the man who would be the victim of the misguided legislation we are considering.

There is a lot of talk about the right of every man to live with dignity.

Too many of those people willing to live off the labor of others do not know the meaning of the word "dignity."

We have an unfortunate situation in our Nation at the current time where many well-educated or well-trained men and women, eager to work, cannot find employment in their chosen field.

These people are having a hard time maintaining their dignity. But many of them are doing it, and doing it the hard way. It is dignity when an engineer takes a job as a cab driver because he is determined to support his own family rather than go on the public dole.

It is dignity when a cab driver who is out of work seeks any kind of manual labor to support his family.

Recently there was a newspaper article which indicated that a job lacked proper dignity because it paid a workman only $3 per hour.

To me, a man who fails to work at a job paying $300 a month in wages so that he can collect $300 a month in welfare has no dignity.

Mr. President, what we need is to reform our welfare system—not expand it.

The proposal we have before us just adds another layer to the same old mess.

We must have a program to encourage people to get off welfare. We must have something to break the pattern of generation after generation of welfare families. We must halt the proliferation of welfare provisions that encourage people to keep their hands out.

The Government is only the intermediary in this—the handout really comes from the man who has done his day's work. It is taken from the workingman and from the workingman's family.

What we need is a workfare program.

We need meaningful reforms that will adequately provide for those unfortunate people who cannot possibly support themselves. We need to kick the perennial freeloaders, those who can work but will not, off the welfare rolls. And we need to offer incentives to put the prospectively productive members of our society back to work.

There are those in our Nation who would sit back gladly and accept a free ride. They would feel not the slightest embarrassment or remorse. They believe people who work are suckers. These people are immoral.

And there are other disadvantaged people we are trying to inspire to work who would be irrevocably damaged by any guaranteed annual wage scheme. These people are willing to subsist, and to have their children subsist. They would be content with $2,000 a year; they would be prosperous with $3,000 per year; they would be overwhelmed with $4,000 per year.

These people are not immoral. Their mores—or lifestyle to use the modern cliche—has never looked upon labor as a virtue and they feel no scrupples about living forever on whatever is given to them. As I said, subsistence is the essence of their life. This program would be ruinous to them.

Mr. President, we already have seen the phenomenon of welfare recipients organizing to demand more and more from the Government. We have seen them "occupy" the office of a secretary of welfare.

Now, we have before us a plan to double the number of persons who would have credentials to join such pressure organizations and join in such disruptive tactics.

We would have roughly one out of nine persons in this country on welfare. This quarter of a million persons would be a tremendous political bloc. The politician playing to this group would have to offer more and more benefits. He would have to promise to take more and more from the assembly line workers, butchers, mechanics, office workers, and other productive members of society to give to those who not only can not work but those who simply do not want to work.

Mr. President, if this were a good program—and it is not a good program, but if it were a good program—now would be the wrong time to try to launch it.

Our Federal Government already is faced with a deficit of $10 to $15 billion—and perhaps even more—during the current fiscal year.

What we need at this time are programs to put people in jobs, not on welfare rolls. We have an unacceptably high rate of unemployment. Welfare is not the answer.

Those who have been trying to sell us the family assistance plan talk vaguely about getting welfare recipients eventually into jobs. Yet their program makes no provision for new jobs. No one is saying where these jobs are going to come from.

What escapes me, Mr. President, is the logic of some of the people who are 100 percent for expanding welfare and yet dead set against other legislation to protect American jobs. It is inconceivable that we can survive as a nation of welfare recipients after we have exported virtually all of our manufacturing jobs.

I think that the welfare reform issue is very closely tied in with the trade bill, Mr. President, and that is why I felt compelled to mention it at this point.

I certainly am not opposed to welfare reform.

In the Finance Committee, I voted for a pilot program to test out some of the reform theories. We would have a chance to see what incentives are effective in getting people off welfare and into productive work.

This is the only sensible way to approach the issue.

Voting for a multibillion dollar new welfare program without a pilot project is like voting for production of a multibillion dollar new airplane—we might take the SST as an example—without providing for testing of prototypes.

I want to see if the family assistance plan will fly.

And more important, I want to see if it is going to fatally pollute the atmosphere of our Nation.

The proposal before us is fraught with dangers. It is built on estimates and assumptions of doubtful value.

A trial run could either prove that the proposals are sound—or demonstrate that disaster would strike a full-blown program if it were attempted.

I firmly believe that the family assistance plan as now offered would be a disaster for the Nation.

This is not something I say lightly.

I have supported 99 percent of President Nixon's programs, but I most definitely oppose the program before us and everything offered so far by the administration.

President Nixon had a good idea—a work incentive program to cure the ills of the welfare system.

The idea obviously went astray in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The program presented to us is not only a continuation of the same old misdirected welfare concept, but an expansion of the fiasco.

We have a program here which is aimed strictly at increasing the welfare rolls. It offers no real incentives to put people to work. It offers no machinery for encouraging or preserving jobs, or of getting welfare people into productive positions.

If this program is approved, I say again, it will be a disaster for our country.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, we are debating the most important domestic legislation of this Congress. I regret that we are doing so under the pressures of adjournment and under a tangled parliamentary situation. The administration's Family Assistance plan is so important that it deserves our most earnest and direct consideration.

The President has called this legislation the keystone of his entire program of domestic reforms. I was proud to cosponsor the original version of the plan last year and am pleased to join in sponsoring the current proposal. It is the product of years of study by many perceptive individuals, including the Vice President, who was among the first to advocate a Federal floor under welfare payments as a means of relieving the fiscal burdens on the States.

This legislation, if adopted, will have a constructive impact on millions of Americans, both those who, as taxpayers, are now forced to support the obsolete welfare system, and those who, as recipients, are subject to its inequalities and whims.

Especially important is the import of the Nixon proposal for the coming generation of Americans. We have an opportunity here and now to take a long step toward freeing millions of children from the tragic welfare cycle of dependence and poverty, and enabling them to grow up in a united family, in an atmosphere of dignity and self-reliance. In an eloquent address to the White House Conference on Children on December 13, the President spoke of the meaning of the Family Assistance plan for the next generation. I ask unanimous consent to include the text of the President's remarks in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

Mr. President, the Family Assistance Plan is based on the premise that all Americans need money to live and incentive to work. Beyond that, it establishes national uniform eligibility standards, and narrows the present variations in benefits. It combines strong work incentives with work requirements. It will lift a great and growing financial burden from State and local governments, enabling them to turn their limited resources to other pressing public problems.

This legislation is not perfect; no bill of this scope could fully satisfy everyone. But it is a bold step forward and deserves Senate approval this year.

There being no objection, the text of the President's remarks was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT AT THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON CHILDREN

Mr. Secretary, Mr. Mayor, Mr. Chairman, and ladies and gentlemen, all of the delegates to this Conference:

Before I begin my prepared text, I would like to express my deep appreciation to all of you who have come to this Conference, and also for the very special entrance that was arranged on this occasion.

One of the great privileges for the President of the United States, of course, is to hear Hail to the Chief. I have heard it many times since I became President almost two years ago. I have never heard it played better than by the East Atlanta School from over here, an elementary school, Speaking as one who played a very poor second violin in a high school orchestra, I appreciate all of the work and the talent that is represented therein by the leader who was able to develop those talents.

I am very proud tonight to share with six of my predecessors, starting with Theodore Roosevelt and most recently, Dwight Eisenhower, the honor of convening a White House Conference on Children. I take very special pleasure in welcoming all of you here.

Our concern at this Conference is with the well-being of 55 million individual human beings who happen to be children under the age of 14, and who represent one-fourth of all the people in America.

When I refer to them as 55 million individual human beings, I mean to put the emphasis precisely on that—in the fact that nothing is so intensely personal as the private world of the child; nothing so removed from the statistical abstractions of a chart or a computer.

In talking about our children, we are talking about our world and about its future, but in the most special, the most human, the most individual sense of anything we do or consider.

The refreshing little flower emblem that has been used as the symbol of this Conference is a reminder to us of one very simple and very basic truth: that the world of the child is different and very special, and full of promise and very much alive.

It also reminds us that whether we speak of a community of 200 people or of 200 million, the important thing to remember is that no two are alike.

I am sure some of you have heard the little television commercial, a musical one, that has the little ditty that goes "No one else in the whole human race is exactly like you."

Because of this, what is right for one child may be all wrong for another.

Here in Washington, in government, we have a tendency to think about things in the mass, about cities of more than a million or less than a million, of people over 65 or those under 21, about whole school systems or health delivery systems.

Just yesterday, I spent a great part of the day working on next year's Federal budget, on billions for this and billions for that, and how perhaps $100 million could be saved here in order to do something we want to do someplace else; trying to balance the needs and hopes of dozens of government departments and agencies that operate thousands of programs involving millions of people. Sometimes after a day like that, I find myself reflecting on both the necessity and then the impersonality of it all. Budgets have to be made and they have to be followed because that is the way the real world operates. And governments have to deal with great masses of people because this is the way governments operate.

But how far removed this can get us from the perspective of the individual person. How great a tendency there is in government to lose track of people as people, to get so wrapped up in charts and projections and columns of numbers that we lose sight of what ultimately it is all about.

If there is one thought more than any other that I would like to leave with you, all of the 4,000 delegates to this Conference, it is this: to remember that what matters is one person, one child, unlike any other, with his own hopes and his own dreams and his own fears, who lives at the center of his own separate and very personal world.

I am sure that each one of you is here taking part in this great Conference because you do care not only about children in the mass, but about the child. I hope you will help us in government to keep the focus on that one child,

One of the special glories of America is that we are a nation of individuals and individualists. We produce people, not automatons. We recognize diversity not as an evil but as a virtue. We turn not to one institution alone but to many to perform the great task of achieving a better life for all of us.

We recognize, of course, the role for government, for the church, the home, the school, the volunteer agencies that are so distinctive a feature of American life. And we do know that this is a case in which individual cooks, and additional cooks, do enrich the broth.

There is, of course, a large and vital role government must play in insuring the best possible opportunities for the child.

Tonight I would like to speak briefly to you about just one government program, a Federal Government program, presently being considered by the United States Senate, which I believe particularly deserves your support.

The great issue concerning family and child welfare in the United States is the issue of family income.

For generations, social thinkers have argued that there is such a thing as a minimum necessary family income, and that no family should be required to subsist on less. It is a simple idea, but very profound in its consequences.

On August 11, 1969, over a year ago, I proposed that for the first time in America's history we in this great, rich country establish a floor under the income of every American family with children. It has, in turn, been called by others the most important piece of domestic legislation to be introduced in Congress in two generations.

In terms of its consequences for children, I think it can be fairly said to be the most important piece of social legislation in the history of this Nation. I am sure you know the story of the legislation. In April, it passed the House of Representatives by almost 2-to-1. Then it became mired down in the Senate. It is still stuck there, but it is not lost. There is still an opportunity for the 91st Congress to change the world of American children by enacting Family Assistance.

In these closing days of that Congress, I want to emphasize once again unequivocally my personal support for the welfare reform this year, and to urge your support for welfare reform this year.

In the last 10 years alone—listen to this—the number of children on welfare in America has tripled to more than six million. Think of it—six million children—six million children caught up in an unfair and tragic system that rewards people for not working instead of providing incentives for self-support and independence; that drives families apart, instead of bringing them together; that brings welfare snoopers into their homes, that robs them of pride and destroys dignity. I believe we should change that.

The welfare system has become a consuming, monstrous, inhuman outrage against the community, against the family, against the individual, and most of all against the very children who are our concern, your concern, in this great Conference, the children it is meant to help.

We have taken long strides—not enough, but long strides—toward ending racial segregation in America. But welfare segregation can be almost as insidious.

Think what it means to a sensitive child.

Let me give you one example. My daughter Tricia does tutoring at an inner-city school here in Washington. She tells me of her deep concern each day to see the welfare children herded into an auditorium for a free lunch, while the others bring their lunches and eat in the classroom.

We have to find ways of ending this sort of separation. The point is not the quality of the lunch. As a matter of fact, she tells me that the free lunch is probably nutritionally better than the ones the others bring from home.

The point is the stigmatizing by separation of the welfare children as welfare children.

I remember back in the Depression years—and if this dates me, if you can remember, you can remember, too—of the 1930's, how deeply I felt about the plight of those people my own age who used to come into my father's store when they couldn't pay the bill, because their fathers were out of work, and how this seemed to separate them from others in our school.

None of us had any money in those days, but those in families where there were no jobs and there was nothing but the little that relief then offered suffered from more than simply going without. What they suffered was a hurt to their pride that many carried with them for the rest of their lives,

I also remember my older brother. He had tuberculosis for five years. The hospital and doctor bills were more than we could afford.

In the five years before he died, my mother never bought a new dress. We were poor by today's standards, and I suppose we were poor even by Depression standards.

But the wonder of it was that we didn't know it. Somehow my mother and father, with their love, their pride, their courage and self-sacrifices were able to create a spirit of self-respect in our family so that we had no sense of being inferior to others who had more.

Today's welfare child is not so fortunate. His family may have enough to get by on and, as a matter of fact, they may have even more in a material sense than many of us had in those Depression years. But no matter how much pride and courage his parents have, he knows they are poor and he can feel that soul-stifling patronizing attitude that follows the dole.

Perhaps he watches while a caseworker—a caseworker who himself is trapped in a system that wastes on policing talents that could be used for helping—watches while this caseworker is forced by the system to poke around in the child's apartment, checking on how the money is spent, or whether his mother might be hiding his father in the closet.

This sort of indignity is hard enough on the mother. It is enough of a blow to her pride and to her self-respect. But think of what it must mean to a sensitive child.

We have a chance now to give that child a chance—a chance to grow up without having his schoolmates throw in his face the fact that he is on welfare and without making him feel that he is therefore something less than other children.

Our task is not only to lift people out of poverty but from the standpoint of the child our task is to erase the stigma of welfare, illegitimacy and of hardship, and to restore pride, dignity and self-respect for every child in America.

I don't contend before this sophisticated audience of critics that our Family Assistance Plan is perfect. Secretary Richardson, who has been before the Senate, will be able to answer questions that you may put to him because he has been before a very, very critical body.

But I am only going to suggest this: In this confused, complex and intensely human area no perfect program is possible, and certainly none is possible that will please everybody. But this is a good program, and a program immensely better than what we have now, and vastly important to the future of this country—and especially to the neediest of our children. It is time to get rid of the present welfare program and get a new one, and now is the time to do it.

For the United States Senate to adjourn without enacting this measure would be a tragedy of missed opportunity for America and particularly for the children of America.

I have dwelt at some length on Family Assistance because of its vital and even historic importance and because now is the time for Senate decision.

This represents, as I indicated, one of the things the Federal Government can do to give children a better opportunity.

There are others: our programs for the right to read, our emphasis on the first five years of life through the new Office of Child Development in the Department of HEW, on education reform, on food, nutrition, and in many others, where we are trying to meet what I believe is a great responsibility that rests with the Federal Government.

I know in this Conference you will have many new ideas for things we in Government, in the Federal Government, might do.

We shall do our best to meet our responsibility in those areas where the Federal Government can best do what needs to be done. But I would also stress that equally and often more important is what States and communities do, and the school, the church, the family, the mass media, the volunteer organizations, each of us as individuals. For the child is not raised by government; the child is raised by his family. His character is shaped by those people he encounters in his daily life.

I think especially of the millions of Americans who give their time, their energy and their heart to volunteer activities working with children. You know them in your communities—thousands, hundreds of thousands all over America.

Before becoming President, I served as National Chairman of the Boys Clubs of America. I saw from the inside the wonderful work organizations like the Boys Clubs and others do, and also the spirit and dedication of the people who make them possible. There are churches and service organizations, hundreds, thousands of organizations all across America, helping. They can help more.

And most important, these volunteer organizations can do what government cannot do: they can give heart and inspire hope, and they can address themselves not simply to children as a group but to that one special, precious child.

Before closing tonight, I would like to leave with you a few very personal reflections from the perspective of the office I hold.

A President of the United States always thinks about the legacy that he would like to leave the country from the years he serves in this office. I think often about that in terms of what I can leave for America's children.

I know that the first thing I would like to do for them is to bring peace to America and to the world. And here I speak not just of ending the war, but of ending it in a way that will contribute to a lasting peace, so that theirs, at last, can be what we have not yet had in this century—a generation of peace,

I speak not only of the absence of war, but also of a peace in which we can have an open world in which all the peoples of the world will have a chance to know one another, to communicate with one another, to respect one another.

The second thing that as President I would like to leave for America's children is a strong, productive and creative economy—one that can provide every family with a floor under its income higher than what is now the ceiling for most of the world's peoples.

I want to leave them an economy that provides jobs for all with equal and full opportunity, jobs producing not for war but producing for peace.

And beyond this, I want, as you want, America's children in the last generation of this century to have the best education, the best health, the best housing that any children have had anywhere, anytime.

I want them to enjoy clean air, clean water, the open spaces, to restore the heritage of nature that is rightfully theirs.

Although we will always have differences here in America, because this is a very diverse country, I hope that Government can help achieve a better understanding among the generations, the races, the religions, among those with different values and different life styles.

I would like to do all this and do it in the climate of freedom.

I want this generation of children to develop a new sense of patriotism.

Edmund Burr pointed out that patriotism translated literally means love of country. And he went on further to say that for us to love our country, our country must be lovely.

We do love our country—most of us—but we know it has many unlovely features. I want young Americans to learn to love America, not because it is the richest country, or the strongest, or merely because they were born here, but because America is truly a good country and becoming better, because it is truly a lovely country.

I am convinced that in my term as President we made some progress towards these goals that I outlined and I think that we by the end, will have made more progress. But even if all these goals could be fully achieved, it still would not meet our duty to our children.

No matter what Government does for people, no matter what we provide in the way of income, housing or food, we still have not reached the essential element as far as a full and meaningful life is concerned, because what is most important is that every person in this country must be able to feel that he counts.

We have to let 55 million very young Americans, as well as those a little older perhaps, know that what they do matters, that their ideas count, that the country needs their thoughts, their creativity, their contributions.

I recall Dr. Walter Judd once said that he loved his daughter very much, and then when she asked him to help her with her arithmetic, he really could do it much better than she could, the easiest thing for him to do would be simply to do it for her. But because he loved her, he would not do it for her. He helped her learn to do it herself.

While this conference will and should make recommendations as to what Government can do for children, about how we can make life better for them, let us remember that what is most important is to provide the opportunity for each of our children to participate, for each child.

It is not just a matter of what more Government is going to do for him, but how his own life is going to be enriched so that he can do something for his fellow man.

A sense of dignity, a sense of identity, of pride, of self respect—these no government can provide. Government can help to create better conditions. It can help remove obstacles to the child's development. It can mobilize research and provide services. It can offer advice and guidance. But all these only help to make success possible.

The love, understanding, the compassion, the human concern that touch the child and make him what he cn become—these are provided by people, people like you.

And the way we shape the character of the next generation we test our own character as people. And the vigor and the realism with which we approach the needs of the next generation, of each and every child in that generation, tests our devotion to humanity and our belief in ourselves.

I am confident we will meet that test. And I am grateful, very grateful, to all of you here for the concern you have shown, the dedication you have demonstrated, in helping us to do so.

Your recommendations at the conclusion of your conference on Friday will receive the most careful consideration by the various agencies to which they will be referred and by the President of the United States, not only because we in this Administration respect your view, but also because we share your concern. We share your concern about our Nation's children, our children. We share your concern that our children should receive the best that America can give them.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, having concluded my formal remarks, I would like to give you a very special invitation and explain the nature of it.

When I learned about this conference, I suggested to your Chairman, Steve Hess, that Mrs. Nixon and I would like to receive all of the delegates to the conference at the White House. He said, "There are 4,000."

I checked with our staff to see whether that would be possible, and they figured out that based on an experience over the past two years of moving receiving lines as fast as we possibly could, it would take six hours and 18 minutes to get 4,000 people through the line.

I said we couldn't do that because I thought the people at the end of the line might get tired by the end of six hours and 18 minutes.

But I do think you should know that tomorrow the Christmas decorations at the White House will be completed. Those who have seen them think they are the most beautiful they have ever seen.

We have various nights blocked out. Monday night is the Congress; Tuesday night is the Congress; Thursday night are the diplomatic children, and so forth.

But Wednesday night belongs to you.

We have arranged for a special tour. Mr. Hess and his staff will arrange the buses and all the other various means of transportation that are needed to get you there.

We have arranged a special tour of the White House to see the Christmas lights and we hope that some members of our family can be there at least part of the time to greet some of you.

Thank you very much. We wish you the very best.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOGGS). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair now lays before the Senate the unfinished business which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

H.R. 17550, to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it is clear to me, and I believe by now to a majority of the Senate, that if we are to pass a bill to provide for increases in social security payments even to offset the increases in the cost of living that have occurred during the past year, it cannot be accompanied by amendments relating to trade and to the family assistance program. Therefore, in order that 26 million social security beneficiaries who would be benefited by this piece of legislation not be denied those benefits, and in order that the least controversial provisions of this measure might be considered by the Senate and become law, which I believe is the minimum the public has a right to expect of us in Congress, I am going to make a motion to recommit and report back.

Mr. President, I move that H.R. 17550, the Social Security Amendments of 1970, be recommitted to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report it forthwith, after making the following modifications:

On page 319, strike line 11 and all that follows through page 404, line 25. (This is Title III, the Trade Act of 1970, and Title IV, the Catastrophic Health Insurance Program.) On page 482, strike out line 12 and all that follows through page 483, line 16. (This deletes the prohibition against use of Federal funds to undermine programs under the Social Security Act.) On page 488, strike out line 1 and all that follows through page 499, line 10. (This deletes sections 561 and 562 of Title V, relating to tests of welfare and workfare plans.) On page 514, strike line 8 and all that follows through page 519, line 7. (This is a veterans pension increase, already enacted in a separate bill.)

Delete all pending floor amendments, as follows:

No. 1169 (Ribicoff and Bennett), as modified (prior to printing).

No. 1168 Scott.

No. 1158 (Williams of Delaware and others).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will send the motion to the desk the clerk will report it.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Mr. LONG. I move that H.R. 17550, the Social Security Amendments of 1970, be recommitted to the Committee on Finance with instructions as set forth by me.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I make this motion on behalf of myself and the Senator from Delaware (Mr. WILLIAMS) with whom I have discussed this matter and with whom I find myself in agreement. A motion of this sort is necessary in order to expedite the action of this Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am glad to join the Senator from Louisiana, chairman of the committee, as a cosponsor. To make the record clear, this motion would strike out titles III and IV, the trade amendments and the catastrophic health insurance part. It would also strike out those sections of title V which the Senator has enumerated and also the pending floor amendments, which are the Ribicoff-Bennett and the Scott amendments, and the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Georgia and myself dealing with trade amendments, and require the Finance Committee to report back sections 1 and 2 as the committee originally reported them to the Senate but with the modification as outlined for title 5. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. LONG. That is correct. I personally very much dislike to move to strike some parts from the bill after having voted for them. I would like to see them a part of the bill. Likewise, in committee I voted to add the amendment known as the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment. But this also provides to strike the catastrophic health insurance part, which is my own handiwork, and which I hope I may be permitted to say with some pride of authorship is perhaps the best thing in the bill. It was agreed on in the committee by a vote of 13 to 2. But, Mr. President, these are matters which in all probability the House would not accept in conference even if they did pass the Senate. I have been led to believe that would be the case if we went to conference.

I would not want the responsibility of the Congress adjourning without having a minimum achieved that can be achieved so far as social security benefits are concerned. The minimum would be the 5-percent across-the-board increase provided by the House bill although the cost of living has already gone up more than 5 percent this year. So I would think, in conference between the Senate and the House, that the House would agree to as much of a social security increase as would represent an increase in the cost of living, and perhaps they might agree to go somewhat further than that. I am confident the Senate will send back to the conference what it voted on before, when it voted the $100 minimum for social security and the necessary financing to pay for it. That would be in conference and I am confident the House would be willing to consider it, along with the Senate and House cost-of-living proposal, and the reforms in medicaid and medicare.

If my motion is not agreed to it would mean 26 million beneficiaries under social security will have been denied justice by the Senate and the House. I do not think the Senate wants that to happen. I do not. On that basis, I feel it is my duty to make this motion. We have had a test vote on the family assistance plan.

I know that there are enough votes to pass the trade package, if we could get to a vote. I know that we cannot get that to a vote, so it is not likely to happen. When I made the motion to table the family assistance amendment, only a few Senators voted to table it. If the motion were to be made again, I know there would be more, but it would serve no purpose to continue debate over that. I would hope that the trade advocates as well as the family assistance advocates would be willing to agree, quite apart from those two measures, to consider the good that is in the bill and that it deserves passage by the Senate and action by Congress before we go home.

Mr. President, I would therefore hope that the Senate would see fit to agree to the motion.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I oppose the motion of our distinguished chairman.

This, to me, is the tragic end to a noble cause. It is a noble cause that the President of the United States has advocated since he became President of our great Nation.

Frankly, I was surprised to see this proposal come from the Nixon administration. I applauded the President for his imagination and dedication when he pinpointed the family assistance proposal as the most meaningful vehicle with which to start the United States on the road to eliminating poverty.

I am at a loss to understand how anyone in an affluent nation such as ours could even question the objective of a powerful and rich nation to see to it that a family of four would have a minimum income of $1,600. I for one, believe that $1,600 for a family of four is the very barest minimum.

The President's proposal has been before Congress for some 16 months. It has been before the Senate for 8 months, having passed the House of Representatives in April.

The Ribicoff-Bennett amendment has been the pending business before the Senate for more than a week.

This proposal has been endorsed by six former Secretaries of HEW, as well as many public and private groups.

It has the support of the Democratic and Republican Governors across the Nation who have to live with the problem of welfare on a day-to-day and a year-to-year basis.

The proposal provides a new framework to replace the present disastrous welfare system. It provides a means for dealing with children, the aged, blind, and disabled. It is coupled with strong work requirements. It provides for fiscal assistance to the States.

One of the proposals in the amendment—which was a late starter, it is true—is a proposal that I thought was important, and the administration has agreed with me, that the time has come to give a sense of certainty to every State in the Nation.

Every State in the Nation is on the verge of bankruptcy. Their budgets show red ink year in and year out. There is not a Governor who knows from year to year what his budget requirements will be.

We have finally assured, in this proposal, each and every State that the amounts the States would be required to pay for welfare would never exceed 90 percent of their expenditures in 1971, adjusted for the cost-of-living increases.

Here is a measure that has been debated. It has been in the public press and in the public eye.

The Senate Finance Committee held days upon days of hearings. We spent days upon days in executive session. I cannot understand how we in the Senate can go home by noon of January 3d without giving the Senate an opportunity to vote yes or no on family assistance.

The least we could do, it would seem to me, would be to vote upon the matter and show our constituents and the country how the Senate is divided on family assistance. Are we for it or against it?

I appreciate the objective—and it is a most worthy one—of the chairman, to at least pass the increases in social security by January 1. But in any event, the beneficiaries under social security will not receive their payments on January 1. They will not start receiving their payments until April 1 retroactive to January 1.

Representative MILLS, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and the ranking minority member, Representative BYRNES, have said publicly that any social security bill passed after January 3, 1971, would be retroactive to January 1, 1971.

The President of the United States has also made the statement and the commitment to the 26 million people who are under social security that if Congress passes a social security bill in 1971, he will advocate that it be retroactive to January 1, 1971. Consequently, not one single person of the 26 million beneficiaries will lose a penny by our delaying the passage of the social security proposals until early in February or March instead of at the present time. This matter is too important to be sloughed aside.

I disagree with the President of the United States on many of his proposals. I disagree with the President of the United States on many of his vetoes. But I am completely in accord with him on his concept that the time has come to reform welfare. The President of the United States has come up with one of the most imaginative programs in the entire social field. It is a matter that we must address ourselves to during the next decade. It would be tragic if we were to go home without voting up or down the family assistance program.

I for one would hope that the motion to recommit would fail.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I am going to support the motion. I do so with mixed emotions.

I must say to my friend, the Senator from Connecticut, that I do not believe he has properly stated the case because the case is not merely one of voting up or down the family assistance plan.

The case is a matter of voting up or down an amendment that is far more than just a simple $1,600 family assistance proposition. It is a tremendously long package of legislative language which has been massaged and remassaged for weeks before the Senate Finance Committee. It does not even contain all of the provisions which many of us in the Finance Committee wanted to see in the measure. It is almost in the same form that was discussed by the Governors' conference when we had five Governors representing the Governors' conference before the committee. The consensus of those Governors was that they did not want this bill. What they wanted to have was this bill with modifications. Unfortunately, we do not have the bill with modifications—at least, not the modifications some of them were talking about.

We just have a long, well-intentioned amendment which is now locked in so that amendments cannot be offered to it. When I raised the point with the Senator from Connecticut the other day about opening this up to amendment, I was told that we did not dare do so because there would be many amendments and we would never get the amendments taken care of.

I do not know why we did not try it that way first instead of using a parliamentary tactic which now puts this matter before the Senate in such a position that those who would like to see something done about the miserable welfare situation cannot in good conscience vote for the measure because it is overloaded.

The Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Nebraska, and I have pointed out some of the serious defects that exist in the measure as it is now pending before the Senate.

I might say furthermore that I do not think it is calling a spade a spade to talk about no one being able to live on $1,600 a year. That is not the proposition before the Senate at all. What we are considering is a total welfare package which amounts to perhaps up to $3,500 to $4,000 a year.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOGGS). The Senator will suspend for a moment. The Senator from Massachusetts is correct. The Chamber is not in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. MILLER. What we are talking about is a total welfare package of which $1,600 is merely a part. If one wishes to be realistic about it, we are talking about a package consisting of $1,600 for a family of four, plus food stamps, plus State supplements, plus medicare, and in many cases, plus public housing, with a total welfare package coming to $3,500 to $4,000 a year for a family of four. So let us not talk about nobody being able to live on $1,600 a year, because nobody is being asked to live on $1,600 a year.

I deeply regret that a parliamentary maneuver was entered into by the proponents of the pending amendment which has placed it before the Senate without the Senate having an opportunity to offer a single amendment to it, to modify it so that some of those serious deficiencies which have been pointed out, and which Senators can read about in the RECORD, could be removed from the pending amendment.

I think the record will bear out that I was one of the members of the Committee on Finance who worked day in and day out to try to give this measure a chance, to try to perfect it, and to put in modifications of the kind the Governors' conference wanted. Unfortunately we were on the losing side when we sought to add the measure as an amendment to the pending bill.

I might say further that at the time the vote was taken in committee the understanding was that, if it were added to the pending bill, the committee during the next several days would have an opportunity to go over it paragraph by paragraph and to work some modifications into it. We never had that chance. So when this amendment was being talked about as prospective legislation to the social security bill during debate before the full Senate a good many of us hoped it would be offered in a manner which would enable us to offer modifications to it by way of amendment. But those who promoted this amendment saw fit, for their own best reasons, not to put it before the Senate that way and to use a parliamentary device, legitimate though it may be, under which the Senate cannot do a thing about it except vote it up or down.

Mr. President, this is too important a measure to be put before the Senate on such a simplistic basis. The Senate is far more sophisticated than that. Welfare recipients are deserving of far better treatment than that. Those paying the bill, the taxpayers, are deserving of far better treatment than that.

I think the chairman has well gaged the temper of the Senate by stating that if this is going to be the way it will be handled, we are not going to get a vote on it, so let us get on about our business and preserve what can be preserved, and then we will hope we can do something about the welfare package next year.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator heard the statement made by the able Senator from Connecticut, as I did, that the President, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House, and the ranking member, have indicated that if this bill dies, they would send us early next year a social security bill seeking to make payments retroactive to January 1.

It is well to point out that if this bill should pass, even this will be retroactive, because beneficiaries would get their increases on April 1.

If the Senate does not pass this bill and the House sends us a new bill next year, there is no reason why Senators who are trying to do something about jobs in their States would not offer a trade amendment on that bill, or why that bill might not become involved in a controversial family assistance plan, again modified, and by the time that battle is finished in the Halls of Congress it might be August before those people get checks, retroactive though they may be. They would be another 5 or 6 months waiting for something to which they are rightfully entitled.

Furthermore, some of those people will die between January and August, with the result that those people never would get the increase to which they are entitled.

So I would say to the Senator that when one looks at the facts of life that exist today, what is practical and can be done, if the Senate insists on continuing to tie up this bill with trade legislation and a family assistance plan, a social security bill will not become law this year. If Senators are determined to have their way about family assistance and trade legislation, there is no reason to think the same determination will not prevail in the next Congress, with the result that Senators could be equally as adamant, so the bill might not become law next year.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the Senator made a very valid point. He might have gone further and pointed out, apart from the things he has been discussing, that the Committee on Finance, after many long days, made some real and constructive improvements in the medicare and medicaid provisions and old-age assistance provisions; and if these are scuttled they will not take effect for some time. These are the kinds of changes that should take effect "yesterday." That will be delayed also.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Is it not true that the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, pending at the desk, does not go into effect as far as any beneficiary is concerned, until January 1972, anyway; and as far as the 14 million people it would add to the welfare rolls, they do not start getting those benefits until July of 1972; and there is nothing to keep Congress from passing it during the 18 months between now and the time the beneficiaries would get those checks?

Mr. MILLER. The Senator is correct, but in fairness I should respond by pointing out we all know it will take probably 1 year for the department to crank up the machinery necessary to put a far-reaching welfare reform plan into effect. In fact, this is one reason why the Senator from Connecticut was very adamant about a pilot testing program, because such a program could isolate some defects, not only in administration, but also defects, perhaps, in the law, which would enable us to take some action on this before it went into effect finally.

I think the Senator's real point is that there is more of an immediacy problem in social security, medicare, medicaid, and old age assistance than a welfare reform program which will not take effect until January 1, 1972, at the earliest.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I asked the Senator to yield so I could reply to our distinguished chairman instead of a point raised by my distinguished colleague from Iowa.

The chairman is correct that there is nothing to prevent those interested in trade legislation from placing an amendment in the social security bill or the family assistance program.

I am deeply bothered that we have tied together so many programs in one bill. In all candor, there is not a single program in this huge bill that legitimately does not deserve extensive debate that would extend over 2, 3, or 4 weeks, because they are all complex matters.

But the family assistance program was before us for 16 months; it passed the House, as the trade bill passed the House, but we had full hearings on family assistance before the Committee on Finance. When it came to trade we had hearings that lasted 2 days. Trade is a very important factor in our Nation. I believe those interested in trade legislation should have a full set of hearings. A trade bill legitimately should come from the Committee on Finance, standing by itself. It should be given early priority, just as the family assistance program should be given early priority.

And I wonder if the time has not come to consider the rule of germaneness, instead of making it possible to put every possible amendment onto every piece of legislation.

One of the great tragedies that has taken place in the last few weeks in this body is that we as a body have shown our complete impotence to take care of problems that a democracy must deal with. Here we are as a legislative body going toward the 21st century with the rules and regulations and procedures of the 19th century. We are acting in the Senate today as if this were the age of Daniel Webster, at a time when problems keep pushing against us for solution and every institution in the world is under attack and every institution is being pushed for change. Whether such institutions live or die depends on whether those in charge of the institutions have the intelligence and foresight to understand the changes that they themselves must put into effect to assure that our institutions live. At a time when our institutions, when our Government, when corporations, when labor unions, when universities are being pushed for changes, there is no reason for us to sit here in our smugness and think that, because we have done things a certain way for 150 years, that is good enough for the future.

There is much soul-searching to be done by us. This is an institution which has proven its value, but if this body of 100 men and women are unable to understand each other and the great changes being faced by the United States and the world, we are dealing a blow to our precious heritage of free government. The Senate is a great institution. But it will not stay great and it will not be great if we continue to do in the future as we have done in the past month.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I might add just a footnote to what the Senator from Connecticut has so eloquently said, and that is that if we are going to make a change in the rules, one of them should be in a rule which prohibits a major piece of legislation, such as the one we are now considering, from having one single amendment filed to it. I would suggest there are those who might refrain from following that rule, but if it were a rule, it would be a rule which was legal, and I would like to see the present rule changed. So if we are going to make some changes, let us make changes across the board, instead of making one change here or there.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I promised to yield to the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN). I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut later.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I would like to see most of the Senate version of H.R. 17550 enacted into law, and I would vote for most of it. I would vote for the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment if I had had the chance and felt that by approving those provisions we were not killing the whole bill.

However, I believe that if we undertook to act on the whole bill now we would not accomplish any of it. There is no possibility of its becoming law, and every one of us here knows that. I do not want to go home and face the people, many of whom depend almost wholly upon their social security checks. I do not want to go home and face those people who are so dependent and so helped by the medicare law, or would be helped by the medicare amendment proposed, and tell them that I voted to kill their social security increase and their increased benefits from medicare because I could not get everything I wanted. I think that would be a pretty shameful thing to do.

So I am going to vote for the Long motion, although, as I have said, I would like other parts of the bill. We are coming back into a new session some time next month and will have a chance to act on these other sections of the bill then. But I certainly hope we do not have to go home now and tell these people who are dependent upon social security and medicare that we turned our backs on them because we could not be big shots and get everything we wanted at this session.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS).

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I appreciate the sincerity and the truth of what the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) said to the Senate a few minutes ago, but I do think a few points should be touched on as to what faces us, and one is the key place of the so-called rule XXII controversy, which will break out again in January, and, second, the key place of the administration in everything that is happening here.

On the first, with respect to rule XXII, I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that if rule XXII is not changed, we are governed by a two-thirds vote, and not by a majority vote, and until we are governed by majority vote, with reasonable opportunity for debate, we will run into these roadblocks. Not very often, but on occasion I have used the provisions of rule XXII. That is symptomatic and characteristic of the fact that the reform will have to be a basic reform, a reform of the rules which we will all accept. With others, I will be one of the prime movers in January to reform rule XXII. I rose only to emphasize the key part of the rule. We modified it once. Obviously it was not enough. It was one of the reasons why I joined others in this procedure, although I began to doubt whether we should keep on the same old track, in the plan to challenge the existing rule XXII, which we will again try to change in January.

As to the administration, I hope very much the administration will play its part in the next few days. We need to know whether the administration will accept an assurance that FAP will be one of the first matters considered in the next session. We need to know whether the administration agrees with me, with the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBI-COFF), and others, that it is a great mistake to discuss this trade issue, on which people like myself may well get licked. I give the Senate my assurance that in the new session we will make no effort such as we are making now with respect to the consideration of the bill. If the country, after an opportunity to talk it out and hear it out in terms of hearings, wants quotas, then I certainly will not be so un-American as to put myself in the position of thwarting its will, although I think my country would be making a great mistake.

So I hope we can come to an accommodation, not only on our part, but on the part of the President who has a very important part to play here.

If the Senator from Iowa (Mr. MILLER) will indulge me 1 minute further, I call my colleagues' attention to the fact that the New York Times, which has not been overly kind to the Republican administration, as we all know, nevertheless wrote an editorial the other day pointing out that the lameduck session, much to its surprise, and to mine, had accomplished some good, such as enactment of the broker-dealer bill which is critically important to the security of our country.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LIVELY DUCK

The unusual post-election session of Congress was expected to be a lame duck, but it has proved much more lively than lame. The productivity of both houses has been obscured by the spectacular impasse which the Senate Finance Committee created when it merged several unrelated bills into one huge unmanageable package.

In the last month, Congress has enacted or reached virtually final action on nearly a dozen significant measures. The Housing bill is considerably more ambitious than the Nixon Administration desired this year and its new provisions for the financing of new towns may have considerable impact on this nation's future urban growth.

The Occupational Health and Safety Bill is an unexpected triumph for the House-Senate conference committee system which has been the subject of much justifiable criticism of late. Only the sunniest optimists really expected a bill to pass this year. But after several arduous sessions with Administration, trade union and industry lobbyists hovering about, the conferees reached compromises on several bitterly contested issues. For the first time, workers can now look forward to effective, federally enforced safety and health standards where they work.

The manpower bill which President Nixon unwisely vetoed is another significant accomplishment. As almost any Mayor could tell the President, there is no alternative to federally financed public service jobs to meet the double crunch of rising unemployment and unbalanced municipal budgets. It is difficult to reconcile Mr. Nixon's veto attack on dead-end WPA-type jobs with his solicitude for the survival of financially shaky aerospace companies. Apparently, one man's Lockheed is another man's leaf-raking.

The House and Senate also reached agreement last week on the Air Pollution Bill with its stringent requirement of a pollution-free automobile by 1975 and its tough standards for new power plants and manufacturing plants.

Until recently, Congress's recent approval of a sizable Federal program to assist family planning would have been regarded as a breathtaking accomplishment. It is highly significant that population control has now ceased to be politically controversial. Congress in the last several days has also completed action on bills to insure the brokerage accounts of small investors, extend aid to the bankrupt Penn Central Railroad, improve the law-enforcement assistance provisions of the Crime Control Act of 1968, and amend the food stamp plan.

Only the food stamp bill remains in doubt. Representative Poage, Texas Democrat, and his conservative colleagues on the House Agriculture Committee finally made some substantial concessions on their atrocious bill, although it remains inferior to the compassionate, constructive bill put through the Senate by Senator McGovern. Forty years after the Great Depression began, the most durable illusion in Congress is that poverty is due to an individual's moral failings. No amount of government coercion or food stamp blackmail can make men work who either cannot or will not work.

Yet if this lame-duck session has stepped lively and accomplished more than might have been predicted six weeks ago, the failure of the Senate to overcome the irresponsibility of its Finance Committee casts a dark shadow over the session and, indeed, over the good repute of representative government in this country. Whatever the fate next week of the welfare reform or the import quota bill, the Senate leadership in the new Congress has to look squarely at this problem and seek effective answers, whether they be revised procedures in the Senate or new members on the Finance Committee or both.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, other things can happen, as the Senator from Vermont pointed out, if we give them a chance. So, in spite of my deep feeling for FAP, I, too, am beginning to have the feeling that I shall vote for the motion in order to do something instead of accepting the certainty that we can do nothing. But, in order to do it and make it successful and make it whole to the American people, I feel the administration must play a part, and I hope very much it will.

I thank my colleagues very much.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, may I just make a comment to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. I know that the Senator from New York feels very strongly about rule XXII and the need for a change. Perhaps I did not quite accurately hear what he said, but I gained the impression that he might be suggesting that rule XXII is un-American.

There are a good many Members of the Senate who feel very strongly about rule XXII, who also feel very strongly about majority rule. Of course, we all know that a mere simple majority of 51 Senators here in the U.S. Senate may well not reflect more than about a third of the people of this country—perhaps only 25 percent. If we are really interested in the most important majority, which perhaps is the majority of the people of this country, we might find 18 Senators who could stand here and represent the majority of the people of the United States; but I do not think most of us would want them to decide issues in the Senate.

It seems to me that rule XXII has weathered the storms over the years. I know when I first came to the Senate, and we invoked cloture, I think it was in 1961, that was the first time in about 35 years that the Senate had invoked cloture. But in the last 10 years we have invoked cloture nine or 10 times. So that shows that when there are really important measures, and especially if they have bipartisan support, we can get the job done when the time comes.

The Senator from New York well knows that every time he files an amendment to rule XXII, he always finds an amendment to his amendment filed by the Senator from Iowa, agreeing to a change to three-fifths of the Senators, provided that a majority of the Members on both sides of the aisle have joined in it. The reason, of course, is so that a ruthless majority will not be able to choke off debate by the minority.

I would like to see a change in the cloture rule, but it would have to be coupled with that proviso. I would suggest to my friend from New York that, strongly though he may feel about a change and the need for a change in rule XXII, we have some colleagues who do not want any change at all, and I do not think we should attribute to them any less love of the Senate and love of our country than we ourselves share.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a clarification?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I did not apply the word "un-American" to rule XXII, or to anyone who believes in it, which I do not. The proper word is really "irrelevant." I happened to apply it in terms of my own feeling that to block arbitrarily a vote, even on trade quotas, which I think would be a disaster to our country, would in my judgment be against the national interest in trying to get things done.

What is relevant to rule XXII is that no proposal that I know of, including the one which, with the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART), I espouse, the so-called Douglas clinch, does not have a provision that before cloture on anything there be a minimum of 4 weeks' debate, and up to 6 weeks' debate.

It seems to me that if we want to get things done, ultimately, after debate, elucidation, education, and public discussion, we must come to a vote. That is the rule that is hamstringing us in terms of getting the public business done. That is all I said.

Certainly no Senator has a right to make a moral judgment as to whether this or that is un-American. Calhoun felt that the idea of a concurrent majority was essential to the future of our country, and had I been in the Senate then, I would not have considered him un-American. This was his considered best judgment as to what was in the highest and best interests of our land. I grant him or any other Senator full moral equality with myself as to judging what is best for our land.

I do not feel that any Senator who favors the filibuster rule is un-American or against American tradition, or anything like that.

Mr. MILLER. I appreciate the clarification. I ask the Senator, is not what he is really saying this: That with the short time remaining for the Senate between now and the last day of this Congress, it would be, to use his language, against the best interest of the country to be arbitrary?

Mr. JAVITS. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. And he indicated that after we had time, which we will have early next year, to debate this matter at great length and analyze it forward and backward, then, but not until then, we would be able to say we had not acted arbitrarily?

Mr. JAVITS. That is exactly right. And, for example, to add just one word, Brimmer of the Federal Reserve gives us figures as to what it will cost the consumers of this country to put quotas on foods and textiles. No one here has been able to test those figures either up, down, or sideways, except in the most cursory and on-the-surface manner, because we simply have not had the time and opportunity to do it in depth.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator, and compliment him as well as the Senator from New York, because I, too, agree that what we have to consider now, with the very short time remaining, is how to get worthwhile things done; and that is what should occupy the attention and time of the Senate during the few days and hours remaining.

I am not going to talk about rule XXII. I think the Senate knows how I feel about it, and yet I doubt if many Senators remember that a number of years ago I suggested on this floor that rule XXII not be applied to defense measures, and that a simple majority be permitted to bring debate to a close with reference to matters vital to the Nation's defense.

But, Mr. President, to come back to the motion of the junior Senator from Louisiana, the Senator will remember, though I cannot go into the details of our closed session of some 2 or 3 weeks ago, that the Senator from Florida then made substantially the same suggestion as has now been made by the Senator from Louisiana. Of course, I agree with him, and, of course, I shall vote with him. I think that the thing we should do is recommit this overburdened legislation—overburdened by amendments—back to his committee, with adequate instructions to report it, so that an immediate conference can be held with the House of Representatives, and particularly so that the much-needed increases to the recipients of social security can speedily go into effect.

I am told there are something like 26 million recipients of social security. Some Senators spoke of the need of doing something for all the States. I cannot think of anything which would help the people in every State—thousands and thousands of them, even in our smaller States—to a greater degree than to help them out somewhat through the improvement of their social security payments.

So I commend the Senator from Louisiana, and I shall support his motion.

Mr. President, while not saying anything adverse about the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, I call attention to the fact that it is 139 pages long, and I call attention also to the fact that the distinguished senior Senator from Delaware has pointed out obvious defects in it, which cannot be reached under the parliamentary situation.

I was an original sponsor of the trade amendment in the form of a separate bill, offered by the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) and others. I am interested in that amendment. But I think that, putting first things first, the motion of the Senator from Louisiana for recommittal with instructions should be agreed to, and I think that the record ought to be perfectly clear now as to who it is, if anyone, that will hold up payments to the recipients of social security in the increased amounts that the social security portion of this bill provides.

It will not be the Senator from Louisiana. It will not be those who support his motion. It will not be those who want to support his motion if no vote is permitted because of lengthy discussion. It will be those who, by one means or another, oppose the motion of the Senator from Louisiana. The Senator from Florida stands ready to support it and then to support the shortened bill when it comes back, so that it can go to an immediate conference, and he hopes that the Senate will do just that. It is the only way we are going to get something done which is of immense importance to 26 million American citizens, many of whom are living under circumstances in which they need more money simply to live, simply to exist.

The Senator from Florida commends his distinguished friend, the Senator from Louisiana, on his motion, and hopes that Senators will permit it to be voted upon shortly, and that we shall then move ahead along the course suggested by the Senator from Louisiana.

I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding. I simply wanted to support him in his position and also to support that part of the statement made by the Senator from New York in which he made it clear that if we are to get anything done, that is the only way we are going to get it done.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. MILLER. I appreciate the comments of the distinguished Senator from Florida. As usual, he has cut to the heart of the problem and has done his level best to get on with the business of the Senate. Had it not been for him, I am afraid we would not have gotten to the business of the Senate on a great many previous occasions.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have been listening to the debate for the last hour or so, and I still find that those who are expressing sympathy for the proposal that has been put forth by the distinguished Senator from Delaware and the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, in terms of effectively stripping all the provisions of this bill, with the exception of social security, are singularly unconvincing.

I think the arguments of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut still remain. It is a fine hour, when everyone stands up here and talks about the importance of increasing social security. There is not a Member of the Senate who has not understood that for the last year or the last 2 years. Suddenly, in the final few hours of this Congress, they say, "We know what has to be done; we have to take care of the social security recipients," and therefore try to say, "If you don't vote for this, you're really against those who need social security." In effect, that is what is attempted to be done.

The Senator from Connecticut has pointed out—and I must say it has been interesting, because with the exception of himself, and sometimes the participation of the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) and the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), only a few voices have been raised by the President's own party in defense of this proposal. I might add that the President deserves credit for that proposal because there is a great need for it.

We perpetrate a fraud upon the American people by suggesting that we will not act and act responsibly to increase social security, or that we cannot do so or will not do so in the next session of Congress. The fact remains that I think we have a responsibility and an obligation to act on the President's program on family assistance. I do not think it is persuasive to say, "We are not really getting into the question of whether it will become law. We do not have to take statements made by the members of the opposite party that suggest we are not going to act." This body has a responsibility to act on this matter. We can wrestle around here all hours of the day and night listening to the parliamentary gymnastics of our good friend, the Senator from Delaware, and other different proposals, always expounding the thesis that they are ready to vote; but as we know, the fact remains that they are not ready to vote. It is an obstructionist tactic, and we are denying our responsibility to the American people in not being able to act.

It is as clear and precise as that, Mr. President; and I think the Senator from Connecticut has pointed this up very well, not only in his comments this afternoon but throughout the debate on this issue over the past weeks.

I would hope that those who are in the White House, who have threatened to call Congress back on January 4, would instead use their influence to try to marshal the kind of support for the votes to see whether we can find some way to meet our responsibility to the millions of Americans who are living in the most destitute conditions and are crying out for some kind of help and assistance.

I ask the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, is it not true that, in effect, if this family assistance program is killed, under the amendments that have been taken by the Finance Committee, we will be thrown back to some punitive and degrading features in the welfare system—for example, the residency requirement, and the man-in-the-house rule?

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator is correct. I was under the impression that the chairman struck out those provisions of the bill that had to do completely with welfare, but this is not so.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. This motion does not strike what the committee proposed to do with regard to residency requirements.

The committee proposal with regard to the residency requirement would say that the State from which the welfare recipient is receiving welfare benefits would continue to pay him for 1 year after he leaves that State, during which time he would acquire residency to have benefits paid by the subsequent State.

The Senator will note that the number of people receiving AFDC assistance increased sharply after the Supreme Court decision on residency and the man-in-the-house rule. I suspect that the Senator will find that a great many of those people are on the welfare rolls twice—once in one State and once in another.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I understand——

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator is correct. I was under the impression that what the Senator was doing was striking out all but the social security provisions, and the argument was that we were going to make sure that 26 million Americans were going to get the social security provisions. But, apparently, the Senator has not done this. He is putting up to a vote, eventually, the most retrogressive, the most reactionary, the most punitive type of welfare legislation in the entire history of the country, and it is a disservice to the U.S. Senate; because I think most of us, including myself—and I thank the Senator for bringing it to our attention—were under the impression that what was being done was merely giving us an opportunity to vote on social security, which apparently is not the case.

Mr. KENNEDY. Furthermore, would the Senator from Connecticut enlighten me on this: Are not these the provisions about which the Supreme Court has expressed an opinion in terms of their constitutionality or their basis in law?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Certainly.

Mr. KENNEDY. So, in effect, we not only are stripping away all these other provisions, but also, we would be getting the reprehensible features which the Senator from Connecticut has just identified.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator is correct. The Supreme Court of the United States struck down both the man-in-the-house rule and the residency requirements. By some legerdemain, the Finance Committee wrote in, by a change of language, restrictions trying to avoid the Supreme Court decisions. I would be shocked and surprised if the Supreme Court would sustain the action of the Finance Committee, which, in my opinion, is just as wrong as the provisions stricken down by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator agree with me that if we were to vote for the proposal to strip these other provisions from the bill, in effect, we would be taking some kind of action that would show almost tacit approval?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Without question. But, in fact, I believe that a majority of the Senate is filled with compassion. I believe that a majority of the Senate wants justice to be done to the poor of our Nation. What we would be doing under the guise of helping people on social security would be to punish millions of Americans without their knowledge. That is what we would be doing by this action.

Mr. KENNEDY. It would certainly appear to me that by this action the entire membership of our party should have a fair knowledge in their own minds of what we are doing. As I mentioned before, I do not think we have to hear time and time again about the need for social security. Everyone knows there is a great need for it and we should act on it. We are willing to, and we must act on it. But also, as the distinguished Senator from Connecticut has pointed out, we would be instituting the kinds of adjustments and changes which I think are unconstitutional and which I feel are reprehensible and which I think would be doing a great disservice and complicating further the already terribly complicated welfare program.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator consult the Parliamentarian about the motion to recommit. Everything that is germane to that part of the bill would remain subject to amendment. Any Senator can make his motion to strike out or to amend anything that remains in the bill. The motion to recommit was, made in order to put the bill in such a shape that it could be passed. If the Senator does not like a provision, such as the residency requirement provision, all he has to do is move to strike or to amend it.

But now we have been debating for days on the trade amendment, and on the family assistance amendment. We are still debating an amendment to the first amendment which is an amendment to the trade amendment and we will never conclude debate. We will reach adjournment without any action. This is the 28th day of December, and 1 day between now and the time we adjourn is Sunday, which means that we have only 5 days during which the Senate can act, and that is assuming we can arrive at an agreement between House and Senate, and then agree to what the conferees have done.

It would be my hope that if this motion is agreed to we could get a time limitation on the various amendments. We could get a limitation of 1 hour to be equally divided, perhaps, or if a Senator wants to pick out some particular amendment he does not like, we could make it 1 or 2 hours, and provide time on each amendment and vote on them and bring the matter to a conclusion.

I am satisfied that positions on the trade amendment are such that we will not reach a vote on the trade bill, nor on the family assistance program. Therefore, we should try to see that as much as we can be done is done to provide these benefits for the people.

The Senator mentions that we did not strip this bill to titles 1 and 2. I would hope that we would not want to take out all the good that is in the other titles of the bill, all that we provide for little children, such as the increased matching for day care purposes from 80 to 90 percent. I would hope that we would not strike out what the bill provides for the aged, such as the minimum of a $130 income for the aged on public welfare, if they have no other resources. I hope the Senator is not against that, or what we provide for with regard to migrant workers, the bill requires States to have a program with 75-percent Federal matching for the expenses of caring for migrant families with children. I hope he is not against that. I am sure that he would be for it.

There are many other things which are good in this bill and they should be voted on. There are some things we should do to tighten up on the welfare mess. For that is what it is, a welfare mess. A majority of people who talk about welfare call it that. Among other things the mess means that we have millions of people on welfare who do not belong there.

A woman in Louisiana was recently arrested. She was on the welfare rolls four times and was applying a fifth time when she was arrested. There was a young girl in California, who was a member of what is called "Cheaters, Incorporated," I believe, and she had gotten on the welfare rolls 10 times in Alameda just to show how easy it was, and she was not eligible at all. These kinds of things should be corrected somehow. Some effort was made by this committee to try to do something about these things.

The Senator says the residency requirement is vicious. Well, whatever the Senate wants to do is all right with me. What we said on the committee was that it was all right to be on the rolls just one time, and in one State, but if they leave from one State and go to another, then the State from whence they came would pay for another year until they had achieved a residency requirement in the other State.

The General Accounting Office took a sample of 600 cases in New York and some 14 percent of these were totally unqualified. Even New York itself agreed that 11 percent were not qualified, and that they should be looked into. That is what, from the viewpoint of a lot of people, is meant by the welfare mess. There are millions on the welfare rolls who do not belong there and the only way to correct it is to put only those on who belong there.

I hope that we can do all the things the bill seeks to accomplish; that is, to help the 26 million people who need social security, and to provide for migrant workers, and to provide for children and day care centers, and to help the old people of this country. All these things should be done.

I am frank to say that I do not think any responsible committee looking at the welfare mess would fail to note that there are many people on welfare who have no real claim, title, or justification for being there. Nor do I think a responsible committee would want fathers who desert their children to be free from supporting their children.

As to the Federal court decisions, one decision says that we cannot even insist that the mother tell us who is the father of her child.

Mr. TALMADGE. If the Senator will let me interject there, there is another court decision where the welfare investigator cannot even go into the home to investigate the family status.

Mr. LONG. That is correct. Imagine that. Here is the court telling us that Uncle Sam has to support the child, yet the mother can refuse even to tell us who she thinks the father of the child might be.

I believe that, as a part of correcting this welfare mess, we should tighten up on the loose ends and perhaps loosen up on the tight ends. We can do a lot better by putting people on the rolls who belong there and taking those people off who do not belong there.

In any event, if there is anything the Senate does not like about this bill, they can vote on it, and that will be that.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator would yield me a moment, because I have not taken my share of this debate yet, and some Senators have been overburdened with the responsibility, I would like to say in response to my friend, the assistant majority leader, that I would not worry about the blame for the delays. There is plenty of blame to go around for everyone. Everyone can dip in and have some, because the reason we have taken so long and the reason we have not been able to act is due to a multiplicity of fears and the many concerns among various Senators, some so-called free trade Senators who are determined not to let this matter get to a vote for fear some trade legislation will get in it.

Other Senators have an interest in textiles, but not in shoes, or in shoes but not in textiles. Some do not care whether they wear anything or walk in anything whatsoever.

There are some that do not want the family assistance program. There are others who do.

Some Senators want social security in its pristine and virginal form as it left the committee—if that was a virginal form, which I must doubt. Other Senators wish to make certain amendments.

The Senator from Massachusetts and I, I believe, will vote the same way on this amendment. We will vote against recommittal to strip the family assistance program from the bill.

I would like to see it there.

We are confronted with a condition and not a theory. The condition is that we are not getting anywhere. The theory is that we wish we would, but we have 100 different opinions on the matter.

We are worse off than the character described by the late Stephen Leacock who got on his horse and galloped off in seven different directions.

I think it is not necessary to say that one Senator is holding up the bill. In my judgment, everyone is holding everyone else up.

The Senate, instead of increasing the level of its edifice in the public regard, is engaged in holding up each other and mysteriously—perhaps not so mysteriously—lowering its edifice in the public mind.

The Senate is in a mess. It is about to vote on a motion to recommit which probably will pass. When it does, we will go on to the matter of social security and decide whether we will accept that measure or not.

Mr. President, I hope that, should this come down to a point where we can discuss only social security and its amendments, we will adopt and accept it and send to the other body—if we can find them—a workable bill. I think that we shall have to hurry because the stories are that the other body is in a mood to be rather peripatetic by tomorrow night. While they cannot adjourn without us, they can leave without us. We are having trouble getting a quorum, or will have. Therefore, I would hope that the motion to recommit would not pass. My own judgment tells me that it probably will. If it does, let us at least get as much business done as we can. But, more important than anything else, let us have, before we drop this bill, an assurance from the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee of the other body that they will bring it up promptly in the beginning of the next session and act promptly on it and send it over here.

I would then hope that the majority leader and I could deliver certain assurances to this body which I have not had a chance as yet to discuss with him. However, he is on his horse and will be here in a few minutes. I hear the gallop of approaching hooves at the moment. I think that we will be able to make some statement about the matter.

Mr. President, last year, on the floor of this Senate, I had the privilege of introducing the Family Assistance Act of 1969 (S. 2986). At the time, I noted that "This bill constitutes one of the most important domestic initiatives which the Nixon administration will undertake," and that it was vitally essential to the successful implementation of the President's stated goal, to "assist millions of Americans out of poverty and into productivity."

Nothing that has happened during the intervening 14 months—none of the testimony offered during committee hearings or the seemingly endless spate of words that have been written about this legislation—has caused me to alter my position. On the contrary, I am more convinced than ever that a complete overhaul of our welfare system is long overdue.

The family assistance plan is the vehicle through which this can be accomplished. It represents an idea whose time has come.

Our present welfare system is collapsing of its own weight. Only within the past decade, the cost of the program of aid to families with dependent children—AFDC—has tripled while the number of recipients has doubled. And yet, in spite of our largess, there is no end in sight.

In my own State of Pennsylvania, in the 1-year period from April 1969 to April 1970, there was a 23.7 percent increase in the number of AFDC recipients and a 51.9 percent increase in the amount of payments. Where will it all end?

Worse, still, inequities built into the system continue unabated. How can we justify a program in which the State of residence is a more important criterion than the state of need in determining the level of benefits?

What we have today is a program impossible to administer equitably, which imposes an increasingly heavy financial burden upon the taxpayer, and which does not do the job it was designed to do in the first place.

We have long since passed the time when anyone would suggest that a solution to the welfare problem lies in making assistance difficult to get and unpleasant to take. But it appears that unconsciously, at least, this is exactly what we are doing. Unlike the quality of mercy that blesses both the one who gives and the one who receives, public welfare today demeans both.

The present welfare system, designed as a temporary expedient, emerged from the depression of the thirties to cope with the problems of the thirties. It is an anachronism that should long since have been laid to rest.

It was established as an optional State program to provide assistance to specific categories of the financially indigent—the blind, the disabled, the aged, and dependent children and their guardians. Initially, able-bodied male workers were not eligible for assistance.

Despite the fact that large-scale unemployment, such as was witnessed in the thirties, is not an issue today, the poor are still with us. Moreover, notwithstanding our substantial economic growth, we now accept the fact that there will always be poverty and unemployment even in the midst of plenty. Even in 1968, a good year in terms of employment opportunities, monthly unemployment averaged 2.8 million workers.

The program of aid to families with dependent children, to which I previously referred, was designed primarily for families in which the father was absent or incapacitated. It has since been amended to provide, at the State's option, assistance to families with unemployed fathers. However, only half the States have exercised this option. The result is that some families receive more from AFDC benefits than families headed by employable men receive from earnings.

The net effect has been to encourage the breakup of families in order that they might qualify for public assistance. If ever a program ran counter to the intent of those who enacted it as well as those charged with administering it, this is it. It is completely indefensible.

What we have created, in effect, is a two-headed monster which, on the one hand, encourages family breakup and, on the other, penalizes those who work. I have yet to hear a satisfactory explanation of why income from employment and receipt of public assistance should be mutually exclusive.

Our present hodgepodge of welfare systems also suffers from a lack of uniformity. Welfare programs are actually State programs that receive Federal matching funds and operate within loose Federal guidelines. The not surprising result is that systems differ from State to State in such essential features as coverage, benefits, and administrative practices.

With all of these negative features, it is a wonder that the program has survived this long. But there have been two factors working in favor of the status quo—inertia and the lack of innovative, viable alternative which goes to the heart of the problem instead of treating the symptoms.

We now have for our consideration what has aptly been termed the most innovative social legislation of the past 30 years. All we have left to contend with is our inertia.

Some may justifiably argue that change is not necessarily progress—and with that philosophy I must agree. But let us look at what the legislation does contain.

The family assistance plan now before the Senate calls for payments to all families with children having incomes below stipulated amounts. At the same time, it encourages employment by requiring registration for work or training, while permitting recipients who are employed to retain a portion of their earnings. These features, together with the establishment of national eligibility standards and some measure of Federal administration, make this legislation more than change just for the sake of change.

I am particularly pleased that the Governor of Pennsylvania, the Honorable Raymond P. Shafer, and the Governor-elect, Milton Shapp, have given their wholehearted endorsement to the Family Assistance Act of 1970.

While much of the discussion concerning this legislation has focused on its impact on families with children, we should not lose sight of title XVI which provides for grants to States for aid to the aged, the blind, and the disabled. One of its provisions calls for cash assistance in an amount which would guarantee an income of $110 per month per recipient. In addition, the earnings exemption for the disabled has been liberalized, making it consistent with that already in effect for the blind.

There is only one aspect of this bill in which it is vulnerable—it is not perfect. I submit, however, that if we wait for perfection, we will be discussing these same issues next year, and the year after that, and the year after that, ad infinitum, while welfare costs and human misery grow apace. And, even then, we would only be postponing the inevitable.

While perfection is an ideal toward which we must always strive, it is not a realistic goal in terms of any legislation, and certainly not in terms of an undertaking as massive as this.

I suggest, therefore, that the question should not be: "Is it perfect?" but rather: "What is the alternative?"

With whatever imperfections it contains, the family assistance plan does provide fiscal relief for financially hard-pressed States; it does raise benefit levels for recipients in areas where they are the lowest; it does combine work requirements with work incentives; it does reduce inequities inherent in our present welfare system; and it does establish a national minimum payment, national eligibility standards, and national methods of administration. This is no mean achievement.

For the first time, all States will be governed by the same set of rules, and each will have the option of contracting for Federal administration of both the supplementary payments and the adult category programs. In addition, the Federal Government would reimburse States for any costs resulting from this legislation in excess of 90 percent of their actual expenditures for calendar year 1971, plus a factor for cost-of-living increases.

What is the alternative? If there is one, why has it not been produced since the President introduced FAP in August 1969?

There is one additional aspect of welfare reform that has not been emphasized sufficiently. Ordinarily, when we speak of the failure of the welfare system, we buttress our remarks with statistics which show the astronomical increase over the years in caseloads and cost. But there is a conspicuous lack of statistics reflecting the failure of welfare in terms of the waste in human resources.

When the President addressed the Nation in August 1969 on the need for welfare reform, he noted that "poverty is not only a state of income. It is also a state of mind and a state of health." It is this state of mind and state of health to which I want to address myself briefly.

Recently we have witnessed a crescendo of concern regarding our natural resources, and certainly no one would dispute the importance of this precious heritage. But what more important resource than its children does any nation possess? And how would one weigh our efforts in preserving this resource in terms of its collective state of mind and state of health?

In a statement last April, the President remarked:

> We all know how the present welfare system breaks up families, demeans human dignity, and condemns poor people to a lifetime on the dole.

We know that it is not unusual for succeeding generations of the same family to become so enmeshed in the welfare morass that it becomes increasingly difficult to escape. Is this to be the birthright we bequeath to children born into poverty?

As we contemplate the cost of implementing this program, may I suggest that we also consider the cost of rejecting it. The legislation before us provides both the obligation and the opportunity for meaningful welfare reform.

It has been written that "the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge." How many children born into poverty during the past 35 years have been reared in an atmosphere of bitterness and despair? I venture to say it is more than any one of us would venture to admit. This is a burden that no child should be asked to bear, a legacy no parent should be forced to bestow. It is our responsibility to provide a better heritage for future generations.

One year ago, I introduced the Family Assistance Act of 1969. In reviewing my remarks of that time, I am impressed by the similarity with the situation today. Only one element has changed significantly in the past 14 months—the urgency of the occasion. If we do not act quickly, we will not have the opportunity to act at all in this Congress.

We are told that there is a time to keep, and a time to cast away—a time to keep silent, and a time to speak. May I also suggest that there is a time to discuss and a time to act.

And the time to act is now.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, there has been some comment about the support for the President's initiative in respect to the family assistance program from the Republican side. In my judgment, there are a number of us who are deeply convinced that this is a very essential reform and that it represents a really historic first by the President and a breakthrough equivalent to his espousal of dealing with hunger in this country, or even superior to that.

We have all been distracted, I by my deep feelings about the trade bill and others by other matters. That has not been made clear. There is, in my judgment, a vast amount of support on the Republican side for the President's initiative.

I hope that that matter will not be lost on those who write and on those who speak, because it is a fact. The tumult which has been created has been such as to make it almost impossible to voice that in a deliberate way, even by one so convinced as I am.

So, before we lock this up, I think it is very important to make that clear.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New York is wrong. I think that the press is exactly right. The Republicans have not given the President of the United States support on this program. Let us not have ourselves misunderstood. What support the President has had in the Finance Committee and what support he has had on the floor of the Senate has been on this side of the aisle. I do not want to stand here and say that I am the only one fighting for the program. I have been out here naked fighting for the program. There has been no help or succor from the Republicans or from the administration. We now have this motion to recommit which is altogether different from the motion that we thought was going to be made, without casting any reflection on anyone.

We now have a motion to recommit. I am curious how the Senators on the other side will vote on that motion to recommit.

The President of the United States and the Vice President went up and down this country asking for men to be elected that would support and help him. I would like to see the Members of the Senate support and help him.

Support for the President's program has come from this side of the aisle. The job that the President has to do is with the Members on the other side of the aisle, instead of beating the Members on this side of the aisle over the head.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I had agreed to yield to the Senator from Colorado first. However, I will yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I do not think that what the Senator from Connecticut has said in any way changes the matter and makes me wrong. The fact is that I said that in the tumult of this debate such support as there is over here has not been evidenced. There is support, in my judgment, for the family assistance plan. That plan has an excellent chance to win a majority of the membership of this side of the aisle.

It happens that only the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT)—out of great loyalty, fine and noble gentleman that he is—felt that he could support this plan in the committee. However, I do not think that is evidence of the degree of support over here.

Second, I point out to my friend, the Senator from Connecticut, that this motion is amendable. If he does not like what is in it and if I do not like what is in it, we can amend it. There is no cloture on time. It is completely amendable and debatable.

I hope very much that we will join together to amend it so as to deal with the things that we consider to be unfair, so that we will be able to resurrect something from this bill other than just the social security aspects of the matter.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I give great credit to the President of the United States for proposing the program. In all candor, I do not know of any Democrat who, if he had been elected President, would have proposed it. It took a lot of courage and foresight for President Nixon to propose this program. He is subject to a lot of criticism by people who will say that these people do not deserve help.

The President had the courage and foresight to see that any society that has a trillion dollar gross national product has a certain overhead that it pays for any failures. And when we consider the 14 million people who would be helped under this program, we realize that the President was right. There are those who say that no family of four ought to have less than $1,600 a year.

I wonder if any Senator would stand up and say that no family of four is entitled to $1,600 a year.

I believe in what the President of the United States was trying to do. I do not support him because he is a Democrat or a Republican. I happen to believe in this program. I believe that the President was on the right track in proposing this most imaginative program in which he showed great compassion, a program which is likely to start us on the road toward eliminating poverty. I think it deserves more help and support from the members of his own party.

What is so ironic to me is that in the closing days we want to expedite the business of the Senate and it could be expedited by saying that what we will do is to vote on social security, because the leadership in the other body has said they will not address itself to anything but social security. What our chairman has done by his motion has been to bring this matter completely back into controversy, in which we forget the progressive parts of the President's program and substitute the most reactionary element in the last 30 years in social services in this Nation.

So now we start all over again in a vast debate in which Members on this side of the aisle have undone what they supposedly have tried to do to simplify the work of the Senate so we can go home.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the RECORD should be clear that the Senator from Iowa joined the Senator from Connecticut in his motion to get his amendment attached to the social security bill. I think the Senator from New York should understand that. There were two of us, at least, and there might have been a third. So the Republican side has not been wanting.

But the matter is not as simple as the Senator from Connecticut puts it.

He is suggesting, "Here is an amendment. Vote it up or down." But it is filled with defects. It is a disservice to the Senate to put it up to the Senate in that way. We should have a chance to work our will on amendments to the bill.

The Senator from Connecticut, by his parliamentary maneuver, in putting the matter before us in that shape, is not being helpful to the President.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, may I say to the distinguished Senator from Iowa, if I may reply, the only reason it is in that shape is that the Senate refused to accede to the requests of the Senator from Delaware to enable the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal, to be put in the first degree. I said I would accede to this arrangement after discussion with the Senator from Delaware; and we mentioned the reason we wanted it opened up was to give the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Oklahoma an opportunity to introduce between them, 10 to 12 amendments which they had. When this request was refused we had no alternative and this was the only way to get the family assistance program before the Senate. It was not what we wanted. We had no alternative, after consultation among the minority leader, the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) and me.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, had it not been for the Senator from Connecticut offering the amendment in the second degree, in the first place, the efforts of the Senator from Delaware would not have been necessary at all. So the foundation for our trouble was laid when this amendment was placed at the desk in the second degree, and the Senator from Connecticut was the one who did that.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The foundation for the trouble was when the trade amendment was placed before the family assistance amendment, and when it became subject to filibuster, and the only way we could remove the filibuster and get the President's family assistance program considered, was to use a parliamentary procedure.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding. I would like to say two or three words.

First of all, I think this proves conclusively not only that coming back here after the election was a mistake, but that coming back here at this time was a horrible mistake. Many of the things that have been discussed here are really superficial. They do not get down to the basic things that are wrong here, and wrong in Congress.

There is no need and there is no reason, save and except the family assistance plan that we should have been in session after Labor Day of this year. If we would not sit around blindly and accept the "stuff" that is dished out to us, not only by word of mouth, the press, radio, and so forth, that Congress is just getting so complicated we have to be here all year, and if we would start using our heads, we would not accept such a mess of potage as that kind of statement.

We lost our chance to get out of here in a reasonable time. We would have performed one of the greatest services to this country if we could get our business done at an early time in the year and not accept blindly the statement that we are supposed to stay here all year, and if we would reassert what I think is one of the greatest aspects of this Government, and that is the right of the people at home to see their Senators and Congressmen in their own communities, to get their interpretations of what has happened, and to subject them to questions in their own communities during the fall. That cannot be done so long as we operate on the absurd basis we have.

This surpasses rule XXI. I am never going to vote for anything below 60 percent, and anyone in a smaller populated State who does is foolish for the simple reason that anyone who subjects himself to cloture based on majority rule is having a blind faith in human nature which this Senator certainly does not enjoy. So I do not think we should.

Now, here we are at this hour. No one can fault the President's courage in attempting to get out the family assistance plan. While we have been flagellated and somewhat castigated by the Senator from Connecticut, I think the Senator from Iowa has adequately answered that.

By the same token, those Senators on the committee, whether they were on the Democratic side or on the Republican side, would have been fulfilling less than their duties of office, and they would have been doing less than they swore to do when they stood at the desk of the President of the Senate if they had not devoted their best ability to working out a bill which was a workable bill, in fact.

We know that there are many bad things in the present welfare system. Glen Billings, a county commissioner in one of our large counties, which adjoins Senator HANSEN'S wonderful State told me in my office 1 week before Christmas that if the present welfare load increased in his county at the rate it increased the last 3 years, it would equal the total county budget. It is a challenge to all of us.

Here we are 3 days, 4 days, 5 days, perhaps, to adjournment. I know the Senator from Connecticut feels strongly about his position. But there are others of us in the Chamber who have worked for things for many, many years in the Senate, who are being thwarted this minute by a filibuster in this Chamber, which I think is to the detriment of the people of this country, which will destroy one entire industry in this country, and which will destroy a whole area of scientific and technological advancement. We have feelings, too. We feel as strongly about this as the Senator from Connecticut feels, but we have to face the facts. We have a troika here. I would like to see a family assistance plan worked out. I am convinced, and I say this frankly, that the bill that has been reported to us does not contain many things, because questions have been raised here again and again to which there has not been provided full answers.

I would have been happy to have seen a pilot plan reported so that we could try it out in some section or area and find out what it is going to cost and whether this Government can sustain it, and whether out of this multiplicity of welfare plans and "do good" programs which we have passed, overlapping, overlapping, and overlapping again in this country, we could bring some sense and order in one family assistance program. This is what I would dearly hope the Senate could do. But I am a practical man, too.

In these last few 4 or 5 days, I know we are not going to resolve the free trade measure, in which the Senator from New York is so interested. I know we are not going to resolve the family assistance plan. I do think we have some commitments—at least some of us—with respect to social security which we could fulfill.

Therefore, I expect, whether there is a rollcall or not, to vote for the motion to recommit, with the assurance and understanding which I understand the Senator from Louisiana has given, or is willing to give, that as soon as this matter may properly be brought before his committee, they will attack it again.

My personal feeling is that we owe every member of that Finance Committee a debt of gratitude. I do not care whether they supported the plan or whether they were against certain phases of it, no committee has applied itself so diligently to a given portion of legislation as that committee has in these last 4 months. I may be off a month, but it does not matter. They have met night and day, they have met morning and afternoon, and if we do not get the family assistance plan this year, if we do not work it out in a form which is acceptable to the Senate as a whole, we still owe the members of that committee a debt of gratitude. The members of that committee, with every bit of power they had, and consistent with the very multitudinous questions, technical questions, and legal questions involved in it, have done a job for all of us upon which we can build in the coming year.

I hope we are able to do this. I hope we are able to resolve it. At least if we take action which we can take, we can expect to do it.

When we get to rule XXII, we will talk about that in January.

I say again that every one of the members of the Finance Committee—I do not care whether they were for it or against it—who attended the meetings and heard the 350 or 400 witnesses, deserve the thanks of the Senate, whether we are able to resolve it at this moment or not.

Mr. President, I told the majority leader that I thought when we came back we should have a quorum call some time during the day, and I would hope to have an opportunity at a later time to suggest the absence of a quorum in order to find out who is present for business.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida is not in politics. Six days from now he leaves the floor of the Senate. He is not interested in any political implications in connection with any of the several issues bound together in this bill.

The Senator from Florida cannot be charged with opposing the President, because no less an authority than Congressional Quarterly has said that the Senator from Florida has supported the President more than any other Senator on this side of the aisle since the President has presided as such. The Senator from Florida has no apology to make for that. He has voted with the President when he has thought he was right.

The Senator from Florida has not only great respect, but deep affection, for the Senator from Connecticut, and I think the Senator from Connecticut knows that. But after looking at the charts Presented by my distinguished friend, the senior Senator from our oldest State, Delaware, the other day—charts prepared not by him but by the statistical staff of the Health, Education, and Welfare Department—the Senator from Florida knows perfectly well that there are provisions in this 139-page amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut which need to be corrected and which cannot be corrected under the parliamentary situation now prevailing.

The Senator from Florida has not participated in either of the filibusters that have been going on, on either the trade bill, which he supports, or the family assistance plan, which he would like to support if it were a more perfect measure. But the Senator from Florida, trying to be realistic and hoping the Senate will do something in support of its own reputation, suggests there is one chance for us to get something done in connection with the package and that is to support the motion made by his distinguished friend from Louisiana, and that is that the bill be recommitted with instructions to report it back with only certain titles remaining, let the Senate pass on that measure, and send it to conference.

What does it mean? It means that over 26 million citizens who are now existing, many of them, on pitiful social security payments, will be recognized by the Senate as having a need to have sympathetic care shown for their condition.

If more were possible, if we had time, it would be a different situation, but we do not have the time. We have 5 days for the passage of a bill, for the conference, and then for the passage of that conference report if one ensues.

The Senator rom Florida, being one who has supported the President in larger measure than any other Democrat in the Senate, simply says that he could not vote for the measure now offered by the Senator from Connecticut, much as he is in support of many of its provisions, because of the difficulties so clearly shown by the charts which the Senate saw the other day, which make it so clear that the measure has to be changed, has to be modified, has to be amended before he expects the rule of reason to be applicable to the poor people of our Nation.

So, Mr. President, the Senator from Florida hopes, speaking as a realist only, without reflection on anyone, that the Senate decides to be realistic, decides to vote to return this measure to committee with instructions which have been mentioned, so the Senate may quickly, as I believe it will quickly, work its will for the modification of the bill.

The Senator from Florida praises highly the Senator from Louisiana, because it was not an easy thing for him, with very great interest in some of the measures in the bill which will have to be eliminated under this motion, having reported the bill in a much different condition, to make this motion. I think he knows what I think every other Senator on the floor who is a realist knows, and that is that the only way open to us whereby we can get something done is to follow that course.

One more word. I was a little amused to hear some of my friends say we are trying to put the blame on somebody. I am not trying to put the blame on anybody. I am just putting it where it belongs. If the course offered by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana does not prevail and if nothing is done on the bill, it will simply mean that the 26 million people who are recipients of social security will know they were unheeded and unattended to and will believe that the Senate has gone home, at a time when we should be saying Happy New Year, offering them a stone instead of the bread they have asked for.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. It was suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts and also by the Senator from Connecticut that there was something antipoor or at least something unworthy in leaving in portions of title V. These sections of title 5 which I seek to save are worth $1 billion to the poor of this country. That is why I did not move to strike these sections.

As a matter of fact, after the Senator from Delaware (Mr. WILLIAMS) proposed that we limit this measure to titles I and II, I urged him to join with me in saving certain parts of title V. Those provisions include $300 million in higher welfare payments for the aged; $500 million in additional Federal funds for child care, increased matching for family planning, funds for migratory workers, and for persons training under the work incentive program; and $200 million to encourage the provision of jobs for welfare recipients.

Mr. President, here is a provision of the bill calling for additional help for poor people, for children, the disabled, the blind, the aged, and for aiding persons who hope to better themselves through employment to bring them better income.

But the fact is that in several instances the court incorrectly construed the statutory language we ourselves wrote, along with the Committee on Ways and Means, and we have sought to set straight in precise terms what Congress meant. I would hope that this would not prevent the Senate from voting for the motion, because everything that would remain in the bill would be subject to amendment, and if the Senate does not want any part of it, the Senate would be at liberty to strike it out.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I sought the floor in my own right.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well; I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator intend to hold the floor for some time?

Mr. SCOTT. No; after yielding to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum. I was trying to get to a vote.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I have an amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. So, if I may yield first to the Senator from Kentucky, then I shall yield the floor.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, as was stated a moment ago, we face a condition, not a theory. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania consider that there is no possibility of our being able to vote "yea" or "nay" on the family assistance plan during this week?

Mr. SCOTT. My answer to that is that, acting for the administration and out of my own desire as a Senator as well, I have been doing everything in my power to bring about a vote up or down on the family assistance plan. I am for it. I am sure it is imperfect, as is most of our major legislation, but I would like to see it enacted.

I think we have exhausted, in this Chamber, every possible means known to me. If it were possible to get cloture, I would have done that. I am convinced it is not only impossible to get cloture, but it is difficult, at this late date, to get 16 Senators willing to even sign a motion for cloture.

I regret very much that, as I see it, we are not going to be able to get a vote up or down on this plan. I think we should have it.

Mr. COOPER. I think so, too. I must say, after sitting here for the last 2 weeks, not taking any part in the debate on this particular measure, that it has become apparent to me, as I think to everyone, that we cannot get cloture on any part of the bill, and we cannot get a vote up or down except on the motion to recommit, and then a vote upon the social security part of the bill if it is reported.

I doubt that a single Senator would vote against the social security measure. Certainly I shall vote for social security. But if the question is raised as to whether a vote for recommitment is an indication of opposition to the family assistance plan, then I intend to vote against the motion to recommit. Of course, I am for social security, like everyone else in the Senate, but I wish to make it clear that I am also for the family assistance plan.

I speak with some feeling about this matter for it is a subject of long concern to me. I do not intend to bore the Senate, but in 1930, I was elected as county judge of my rural county in Kentucky, chiefly an administrative position. I was 28 years of age and found myself the head of my county in a depression. For 8 years I served, and there poured into my office people, hungry and sick, as in every other area of this country, with no hope, no source of help except their government.

Whatever has been said about the WPA program of that time, it was a great program. It gave work and sustenance and hope to people. It did a great deal of constructive work. I have traveled through every section of my State since that time—once or twice a year—and particularly in the section which has become familiar to everyone as "Appalachia." I have seen, since 1938, program after program, proposed to lift up the poor on welfare. They have been good programs, as far as food is concerned—school lunches, milk, surplus commodities, and finally the food stamp plan.

However, with all of these programs, and the costly poverty program, the people have not broken out of the awful and ugly cycle of welfare without work or purpose. It involves a deterioration of the human spirit and mind. There is forming in my State, as I am sure is true in the great cities of other States a class of our people who are separated and alienated from the rest of society.

I do not know what is wrong with the family assistance plan bill. I am sure it can be improved. I am sure it ought to be corrected. But I know when corrected, it ought to be passed, to turn away from the present system of goods, food and clothing, necessary, as they are, and turn on people in the direction of training, education, work and self-sufficiency.

I believe it is going to be terribly difficult for them to break out of the cycle. We will find many cannot learn because of their long disassociation from education. Many of them cannot eat properly, because there is no one to tell them how to use nutritious foods. It will be hard for many to get work, because they are not trained and educated to perform useful work in our technical society. But the change from welfare to training, education, and work must be made.

From the moment I heard President Nixon make his speech on television over a year ago, I must say my heart and my spirits lifted up. I thought I saw at last something in the making to help our people in our own country.

If we cannot help people in our own country, we cannot expect to help others anywhere in the world. So I hope very much that this plan will be corrected properly and will be enacted. It will not be enacted this session, but early next year. I hope that the plan or the test plan of the Senator from Connecticut, will be enacted.

Mr. President, to indicate that I am for the family assistance, I shall vote against the motion to recommit.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky pretty much expresses my opinion.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. CASE. I commend the Senator from Kentucky, who needs no commendation from the Senator from New Jersey or anyone else, but I do. As the Senator from Pennsylvania has said about himself, he expresses my views to a "T," and my answer will follow his on this motion.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I am about to address a question to the distinguished majority leader.

I would like to say that had we had an opportunity to vote on this matter up or down, I am as convinced as I can be, based on the length of my experience in this body, that a majority of Senators on both sides would have supported the family assistance plan.

I ask the distinguished majority leader, as I said I would do when he was on his way to the Chamber, I have expressed the opinion that if this bill does not pass in this session, that as soon as it comes over from the other body next year we in this body would seek to refer it to the Finance Committee, and that we would, following proper and complete hearings, do all within our power as the joint leadership to expedite action by the Senate on this family assistance measure. I would appreciate the comments of the distinguished majority leader on this point.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, in response to the statement just made by the distinguished minority leader, first let me say that it is my intention to vote against the motion to recommit. Second, let me say that the President has placed great stress on this particular domestic program. There is a need for much to be done. I have some grave questions about it in my mind, but I am willing to resolve my doubts in favor of what the President seems to be so personally and intensely interested in achieving.

It has been pointed out that the welfare rates are skyrocketing, and that the number of people on welfare is increasing at a tremendous rate.

If the motion to recommit carries, I wish to give the distinguished minority leader and the Senate my assurance that I shall do all I can as a Senator to bring the matter up for debate and consideration once it is reported out of the Finance Committee and placed on the calendar. It is my understanding that the distinguished chairman of that committee has indicated an interest in taking the matter up if the House acts and after it has acted. That is within the purview of the committee. I do not think it is something which, if gone into, should be gone into hastily, even though there have been extensive hearings this year.

So I am assured by what the distinguished Senator from Louisiana has told me—I hope I am free to state this—that after a bill is reported by the committee and passed by the House, hearings would be held here as expeditiously as possible. When a bill is reported by the Finance Committee, I assure the Senate that I will be glad to join with the Senator from Pennsylvania in doing all I can to expedite debate, consideration, and disposal.

I reiterate that I think the President deserves this much courtesy and this much in the way of consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEARSON). The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the pending motion subject to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The instructions are subject to amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, a further separate parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRIS. If the motion of the Senator from Louisiana is adopted, would the bill thereafter reported to the Senate be subject to amendment by the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HARRIS. Would the bill be subject to an amendment in the form of a modified version of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, first, let me say that I do not in any case intend to support the motion of the Senator from Louisiana. I believe that the Senate ought to act on both social security and welfare reform. I am hopeful yet that we can, if this motion is rejected, get a vote on the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment. It is an improved version of an amendment which was rejected in the Senate Finance Committee—improved, I think, because of determined opposition. It has not been improved enough. If it were adopted by the Senate, it would be my hope to amend it, either through later motions to strike and insert or by other means, to improve it further still. I think it needs to be acted upon. The time is at hand for real welfare reform. I hope, therefore, that this motion will not be agreed to.

The thing that has us in so much trouble is the trade section of this bill, which I vigorously oppose. I oppose it both on the substance of the issues involved and on the procedural question involved. This section is totally nongermane to the principal issues involved in this bill—social security and welfare—and I would hope that the Senate would at last decide to put aside this nongermane section, the trade section. It is much too late in this session, with only two days of hearings in the Finance Committee, to try to write this kind of major trade legislation, the most important trade legislation we have seen proposed in this country since 1962.

So I would hope that that section could be dropped, and the Senate could proceed to consider social security benefits and welfare reform. I twice moved in the committee to strike the trade section from this bill, and I hope that that may yet be done by the Senate; and then the Senate, with proper deliberation, with proper hearings, could take up the whole matter, the very complicated matter, of trade early next year and act upon it.

I think that those who support the general provisions of the trade portion of this bill can be reassured by the statement of the distinguished Senator from New York—which I would echo—that there would not be an attempt to delay, through a filibuster or by extended debate, final consideration of some trade bill during the early part of next session, after the proper consideration had been given in the committee and on the floor.

Furthermore, I think Senators should be aware that, as has just been stated by the Presiding Officer, the adoption of the pending motion would be a nullity; because if the motion to recommit is agreed to by the Senate and the bill comes back here as a social security bill, it is then subject to an amendment which, as a matter of fact, I already have had printed, which is an improved version of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment—improved by amendments which I feel need to be made to it. So we would be doing nothing at all. It is time for the Senate to get down to business on this issue and to made its decisions and adopt real welfare reform in this session. I do not believe we will save any time by proceeding with the motion to recommit with instructions.

Furthermore, as has been pointed out by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, the motion of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana does not just strip this bill down to social security, medicare, and medicaid. The bill, as would be reported back to the Senate if this motion is successful, would still include welfare provisions. But those welfare provisions would not be the kind of innovative welfare reform, the kind of progressive welfare changes, that many of us feel are desperately needed. Instead, they would be the kind of regressive and punitive welfare amendments which the Senate on occasion in the past has rejected because they tend to demean those who receive welfare, making it much more likely that they will continue in the cycle of dependency by making them at least second-class citizens and attempting to punish them for their poverty, rather than offering the kind of helping hand we should offer.

So, Mr. President, I now move to amend the motion of the Senator from Louisiana by adding to the instructions a provision that title V also be stricken, and I should like to be heard on the motion.

Mr. LONG. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I should like to be heard on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the Senator from Louisiana whether he is asking for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. LONG. I am asking for the yeas and nays on the Senator's amendment to motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk the modified version.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the modified amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 405 strike lines 1 through 25 and strike all on pages 406 through pages 498 and on page 499 strike lines 1 through 17.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. May I first say what the amendment is, and then I will be pleased to yield to the distinguished Senator from New York.

This amendment would add to the instructions under the Long amendment the instruction that the entire title V of the reported bill be stricken as well as the other provisions which he would strike under his proposed instructions.

I reiterate that I do not in any case intend to support the motion to recommit, but these are issues we will have to face in the Senate at one time or another if the motion to recommit is successful. These issues will have to be faced then; and if the motion to recommit is adopted, I would hope it would be adopted in its best form.

This amendment would strike the committee provision which would institute a type of 1-year residency requirement in the face of the Supreme Court opinion to the contrary, would strike that provision of the committee bill which would resurrect the onerous man-in-the-house rule, would strike from the bill the provision which would require a return of the amount paid to the welfare recipient who does not prevail in hearings, a provision which would certainly deter challenges of illegal regulations by recipients and others, would strike the committee provision which would overturn another Federal case having to do with adding eligibility requirements wholly unrelated to the needs of poor children, would strike the committee provision which would tend to abrogate the right of privacy guaranteed to citizens under the Constitution as it relates to welfare recipients; and would strike the committee provision which would do away with the present system which allows the declaration method for determining eligibility, with spot checks.

I will go into any of these provisions which Senators may want to discuss. I had hoped that the distinguished chairman of the committee would agree to this amendment. The amendment which I have offered would do another thing: it would strike from title 5 also the provision which was added in committee on the motion of the distinguished chairman, the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), setting up a Federal Child Care Corporation. I opposed that proposal in committee. I do not believe it is a good proposal from the standpoint of the children involved. It would set up a Federal corporation to provide child care or day care for children, including the children of welfare families. It would leave out, in my judgment, two basic fundamental requirements of any proper child care program; that is, parental involvement and community control. The day has long since passed when poor people or black people or other minorities will be willing to allow a private business corporation made up of outsiders to come into the neighborhood and take over child care or day care for their children. I am desperately afraid that is what could happen under a private enterprise franchise system which is permissible under this child care corporation proposal.

Therefore, I think the thing to do, if the motion to recommit is adopted, is to strike all of title V and then take up the issue later on, if the motion to recommit is adopted. As I said before, I certainly hope it will not be, but if it is, then I want it to be in its best form.

I now yield to the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to express my satisfaction at the Senator's amendment. That is what I indicated in debate before to our colleague from Connecticut, who has taken such a laudable and fine lead in respect of the President's plan for family assistance. I think, if we are not going to be back exactly where we started, the confluence of two things is necessary; first, another controversial provision—to wit, title I—should remain in the bill if we are going to try to avoid the height of controversy; and some accommodation satisfactory to the President and satisfactory to Senators RIBICOFF and BENNETT and others who are also interested in family assistance. Otherwise, no matter what we do on a motion to recommit, we will be back exactly where we started, and we will only have demeaned ourselves by marching up the hill and marching right down again.

I shall support the Senator's amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I thank the Senator from New York for his comments.

I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I want to commend the Senator from Oklahoma. I shall vote against the Long proposal to recommit. I shall definitely vote for the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana. The Senator from Oklahoma is absolutely correct, if we are not going to vote on the family assistance and have another look next year at the welfare reform, what the Senate certainly does not want to do is to adopt some welfare changes which do not go forward as the President desires, but go backward against the recommendations of every student in the field of welfare, and every former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Democratic or Republican.

So I hope that this body will vote for the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma and will vote against the proposal of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield for a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Did I correctly understand the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma to say that, should the Senate by a majority vote recommit the bill to eliminate family assistance and trade that, notwithstanding that majority expression on the part of the Senate, he would instigate another motion and the Senate would be back debating family assistance?

Mr. HARRIS. No, the Senator does not understand me correctly. What I did was to inquire of the Chair whether, if the Long motion were to be adopted, a modified version of the Bennett-Ribicoff amendment might thereafter be offered to the newly reported bill, and the answer of the Chair was in the affirmative. So I said to the Senate that that is one reason why we should get down to business on the pending bill, rather than go through the process of a motion to reconsider, because what will be done could be, in my opinion, a nullity, based upon what the Chair has said.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood what the Chair said was that the Senator would have the right to offer an amendment. There is no question about that. But if the Senate, by majority vote, expresses itself in favor of eliminating these controversial sections, would the Senator from Oklahoma, in the face of that vote, offer another amendment on family assistance should the Long amendment prevail?

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Nebraska think that a motion to reconsider which strikes trade and many other provisions of the bill and the pending amendment relating to welfare reform is exactly the same question, yes or no, as voting on a modified version of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment, yes or no? It would not be.

Mr. CURTIS. It has this difference, that the Senate would, by majority vote, direct a certain course, to wit, that a portion of the bill go forward. My question merely amounts to this: Would the Senator from Oklahoma feel that he would be bound by a majority vote of the Senate if they so voted?

Mr. HARRIS. I would be bound in every respect by what the Chair holds is binding as a result of what the Senate had done. Senators can interpret whatever the Senate does in the way they want to interpret it. I may interpret it my way, but the one interpretation that really means anything is what the Chair says, and he has just ruled that a modified version of the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal would thereafter be in order. And I say to the Senate, therefore, that there is no use going through this process, that we should get down to business on the pending bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think the Chair would compel the Senator to offer the amendment. My question was, Would the Senator offer it in the face of a majority vote of the Senate?

Mr. RIBICOFF. If he did not, I would. Let me make it perfectly clear that I had discussions on this proposal with the Senator from Delaware and I was under the definite impression, after my discussion with him, that we were going to strike out titles III, IV, and V. I was shocked to learn that that was not the case, that a portion of title V was retained, so that under the circumstances I do not think any such agreement would be binding. If the motion were defeated by the Senate and another proposal was adopted, I would feel honor bound, therefore, to reintroduce this amendment, the family assistance program, the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. That answers my question.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, let me wind up briefly. I would be glad to agree to a time limitation on the consideration of my amendment if there is any desire that that be done. Someone may want to propose that at some later time. I do not want to hold up the Senate very long. However. I want to say a word in support of my amendemnt.

The amendment I have offered would take out those provisions which seek to go backward, insofar as the rights of welfare recipients are concerned.

I want to address myself briefly to the regressive welfare provisions of the committee bill which the motion I have offered would strike. I opposed these provisions very strongly in the committee, as did other members of the committee.

I will only mention two or three of them.

First of all, there is the provision in the committee bill which would reverse the progress recently made concerning the declaration method of determining eligibility. Mr. President, when Mitchell Ginsburg some time ago became head of the welfare program in the city of New York, he began to acquaint himself with what one might call the eccentricities of the welfare laws in that city and State, and elsewhere around the country. He found, for example, that there was a very detailed investigation that went on in regard to whether or not a welfare applicant had told the truth as to whether he had any insurance with some cash value.

The city of New York had a very detailed and complex system of following up that declaration that the welfare applicant had made, that he had no insurance with a cash value, by a series of letters and other checks with insurance companies around the country.

Dr. Ginsburg asked those on the welfare staff of the city of New York what that elaborate system of checking the declaration on the welfare application cost.

He was told that that system of checking and investigating prior to the time the welfare applicant was able to receive assistance, during the past year, had cost the city of New York some $125,000, as I recall it.

He then asked how much money the city of New York had gained as a result of the elaborate investigation system.

The answer was that the city had gained $7,500, as I remember it.

Dr. Ginsburg said to cut it out. He said, in effect, "Let us not continue this investigative program."

Someone asked, "What about the cheats?"

Dr. Ginsburg said, in effect, "We cannot continue to spend $125,000 a year in order to pick up $7,500 of net revenue."

Mr. President, that kind of case can be duplicated all around the country. Welfare caseworkers over the years have become almost a hated enemy of a lot of welfare recipients around the country. It is not right that they should be, but they have been made investigators and law enforcement police and almost everything else. In addition to being social workers and trying to help people get a chance to get out of poverty and to get off welfare and to be self-sustaining and to get a job, instead of rendering the kind of social services that case workers mostly would like to do and are trained to do, they have for so many years been engaged in trying to enforce the law against those whom they are supposed to serve.

The declaration method of determining eligibility was instituted during the past administration in HEW and has been carried on during this administration. The tests of that system have shown that only 1.8 percent of such applicants were found to be ineligible. Maybe there is less chiseling and cheating by those who apply for welfare than by those of us who fill out income tax returns. Why would not the same system of checking be done in each case? Why would not that apply in both cases?

I will mention only two other provisions that my amendment would strike from the committee bill if it were adopted by the Senate.

One is the so-called man-in-the-house rule. The Supreme Court of the United States in the cases of King against Smith, Lewis against Martin, and Shapiro against Solomon struck down those rules which would base eligibility, not on actual resources available to the children or to a family, but on an imagined income from people not legally obligated to support the children involved.

The clear import of those old rules was that a welfare recipient was a second-class citizen who did not have the same rights as other citizens.

We support a welfare system—and many of us support a reformed welfare system—not only because of the morality involved, because we want to do what is right insofar as we can toward a lot of people who are less fortunate than ourselves, but also because it is in our own self-interest to do so. Mr. President, if we do not help provide a decent standard of health and a decent standard of life and enough to eat for the little children in this country, for all the little children in this country, we pay for it many times over in increased welfare, in the continuation of the welfare cycle, in remedial education and training, in narcotic addiction, and in prisons.

Mr. President, the costs of prisons and of crimes are far more than it would cost us to do the right thing in the initial instance and provide for a decent standard of living for every child, which I think, is the right of every child in America. If I am correct in feeling that it is in our own self-interest to provide for a decent standard of living for every child in our country, then we would be defeating our State purposes, if, by our rules and our laws, we demean those who receive welfare assistance, if we degrade them and hold them up to public shame and ridicule, as was true under some of these old rules and laws that the Supreme Court has now stricken down.

We would now go back to those old rules, those old, degrading, and demeaning rules which in many instances make second-class citizens out of welfare recipients, that tend to take away from them rights that other American citizens enjoy. That is why the amendment I have offered to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana would strike out those regressive portions of the bill.

It would strike out that portion of the measure which attempts to get around the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Shapiro against Thompson, which knocked down the 1-year residency requirement for people in need of public assistance.

America is one country where whether a little child is born in Mississippi, Oklahoma, or New York decides if that little child, that American child, is entitled to the same kind of chance for a decent life and the same chance for decent health, and the right against hunger, and the right to live in a decent home and to go to a decent school.

Mr. President, years ago there were some who said that if Oklahoma or Mississippi had an inferior system of education or, if Oklahoma or Mississippi discriminated against little black children in their school systems, "That is the business of Mississippi," or "That is Oklahoma's business." There were some who said, "That is not our business in the Senate or at the Federal level."

In my view, that was wrong on moral grounds, but it has proved to be wrong on practical grounds, as well, because that child born in Mississippi or born in Oklahoma did not necessarily stay in Oklahoma or Mississippi. That child may move to Detroit, to New York, or to Chicago, and if he goes there scarred by ravages of a segregated and discriminatory educational system or if he goes there with the handicap of an inferior education, that has been shown to become the concern of every one of us, as a practical matter, and we pay double for it. Those of us who live in other States, other than those States where that inferior education or discriminatory education was first provided, pay our part.

The Supreme Court said that everyone in this country is a citizen of this country and they said that every citizen of this country is entitled to the same kind of equal treatment under the law, and they said that residency requirements of 1 year cannot be set up, as has been done in many State welfare systems. They said that is unconstitutional.

The welfare system in New York City, for example, is held up as one that is supposed to draw people into that State. There is a myth that people go from place to place, across State lines, in order to get into a State with a more generous welfare system. That is a myth, and the facts show that it is a myth. People do not move from State to State because of the difference in welfare laws or the difference in welfare programs. In New York, a check showed that less than 3 percent of those who applied for welfare had lived in the State for less than 1 year.

People move from one place to another hoping for a better job. So often, especially now when fewer jobs are available, with a needlessly slack economy, with job lines needlessly long, they find that chance is not there for one reason or another, and many of them apply for welfare. Only about one-third of those eligible for welfare have applied in the past but many of them are becoming more pinched as the economy becomes tighter and tighter.

With a 1-year residency requirement there was case after case of a young mother with children in whose home the gas had been turned off, the electricity had been turned off, the children did not have shoes or clothing to go to school. They had applied for welfare but were told that the residency requirement prevented them from being eligible, other forms of relief had run out, and here were little children who were desperately in need but who were not eligible as welfare recipients because of the residency law.

The Supreme Court said that is not constitutional. I agree with the Supreme Court as a matter of law and as a matter of substance.

Now, the Committee on Finance, over my objection, comes in with a modification of that rule and says that these people can stay under the old State's system for 1 year and then be eligible under the new State's system. That is an attempt to get around what the Supreme Court said is illegal, and if it is agreed to there will be a snarl and mess about whose checks go where and who the recipients are.

I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment I have offered to the Long motion and not agree to the Long motion, but get down to the business of welfare reform and social security.

I made the motion in committee to increase to 10 percent the 5-percent benefit increase which had been voted in the social security bill by the House. I joined vigorously in the motion of the chairman to raise the minimum benefit to $100. Those two provisions in that bill should be agreed to and there are other very good provisions in that bill which should be agreed to. I believe they will be agreed to by the Senate.

I hope we will have real welfare reform. The welfare restrictions contained in title V are not real welfare reform; they are totally inconsistent with welfare reform. It would be a step backward to adopt them. The other provisions we would strike in title V can be put back in by amendment to the bill if it comes back in amended form, or, as I would prefer, by adoption of an improved version of the Ribicoff-Bennett amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, every provision the Senator seeks to strike would be subject to amendment if the motion to recommit carries. The Senator is saying he is not going to vote for the motion to recommit and he would have no obligation to go along with anything the motions suggests or provides, if it carries. He has already said he is going to vote against it, even if he gets his way, so what is the use of trying to humor the Senator.

On the other hand, I believe it would be well to point out with respect to those who might be inclined to vote for the motion that the whole purpose of the motion is to dispose of these two issues which are keeping us from voting on the bill. One is the family assistance plan and the other is the trade bill.

When one votes for the motion there is an implied understanding that, having done that, if we want to pass the bill we will proceed to table further versions of family assistance and the Trade Act, to keep those off the bill in the event it is so reduced.

If the motion were agreed to the Senator could move to strike any part of that which remained in the bill, and that would be entirely in order. The motion would suggest that anyone could amend or strike from the bill something he did not like.

Unfortunately, the Senator will not let us get to that point. Now, he is filibustering the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. In what way? I believe I offered to have a time limitation on the amendment.

Mr. LONG. The Senator keeps talking about the matter. The Senator made a long speech.

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask a question now, if the Senator will yield for that purpose.

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further debate on the pending amendment to the Long motion be limited to 30 minutes, equally divided between the Senator from Louisiana and me.

Mr. LONG. May I suggest it be 10 minutes equally divided.

Mr. HARRIS. I am pleased to agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, let me just make it clear that the Senator in his motion——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LONG. I yield myself 5 minutes.

The Senator in his motion would strike out every single provision that helps the people who need it most. For example, if his motion passed, under the provision for 10 percent social security increases and a $100 minimum, States would be required to consider every item of income that would go to a needy person. So when social security beneficiaries received a $10 or $20 or $30 increase in their social security checks, as the case might be, the States would be required to proceed to cut their welfare checks by the same amount that the social security checks had been increased.

I am sure the Senator would not like that to happen, but that is what would happen if the Senate agreed to his amendment.

We have provided that there will be a $130 minimum for people who are not even drawing social security, if they have no other income. That provision would be stricken out by the Senator's amendment.

There are other provisions relating to migrant families with children. I have seen the Senator vote to help migrant families, but his amendment would strike the provision wherein the Government would put up 75 percent of the cost of helping migrant families.

There is provision for 90 percent rather than 80 percent matching funds for training people and providing them with work under the work incentive program. That provision would be striken out.

There is a provision for more generous matching funds for child care. That provision would be stricken out. The matching formula for child care would be moved up from 75 percent to 90 percent. That provision would be stricken.

There is provision for tax credit for those who hire people who are on the work incentive program, which is designed to train people and get them jobs. That provision would be stricken.

Altogether, there are benefits amounting to $1 billion for people who need it most.

If the Senator wants to propose amendments to strike what remains in the bill point by point, I think we ought to do that when we get around to voting on recommitting the bill, which he is against. If we do not do that, it will not be possible for the Senate to make any kind of decision with regard to the people who the Senate believes should not be the rolls and whom the Senate believes would be benefited by an erroneous court decision. That is something which should be decided, but it will not be decided in the event the amendment carries, because we will never get around to voting on it.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The Senator wants to make things go faster, and the best way to do that is to take out these provisions which I have listed. The other questions which are raised by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana are irrelevant because I have already asked the Chair about it, and the Chair has responded that if the Long motion is agreed to and the bill is reported back to the Senate, it will be amendable. We could then take up in an affirmative way, as I think we should, the items the Senator has set forth.

I do not think the committee went as far as it could with regard to migrant workers. I think that issue should be brought up as an affirmative matter.

I do not think the committee did the right thing in relation to child care, as I said earlier. I would rather strike that provision from the bill and take it up in an affirmative way, if the motion is going to be agreed to, by later amendment. The other provisions which have been mentioned obviously are provisions which can be offered, if the motion is agreed to, by amendment; and I say now they will be.

We ought not, on the one hand, say we are not going to have any welfare reform, which is the import of the motion of the Senator from Louisiana, and then turn back again and say, not only are we not going to have any welfare reform, but we are going to go backward. My motion would prevent us from doing that.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT).

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, it seems to me that if we are ever going to get this matter handled, it would be better to clear the decks. I have been opposed to the motion to recommit, but I realize that, because of the lateness of the hour, because we have to go to conference with the House on this and on several other bills, we should not continue this futile exercise. I would have to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, because it just confuses the issue. It divides those who might have supported the action of the Senate Finance Committee. It is an overkill because, obviously, he is taking out some provisions which he would not want to be taken out.

Reluctantly, I am going to vote for the proposal of the Senator from Louisiana, even though my name is on the other amendment, because I realize we have reached the time and place now where, if we are going to be able to salvage anything, we had better proceed in the way he has indicated.

I have been assured, as have other members of the Senate Finance Committee, that when we meet again in the new session, if we can quickly get a bill over here from the House, we will have a much better opportunity than we have had in the closing weeks of this session to consider the whole problem more carefully.

So I hope the Senate will reject the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. GORE), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MCCARTHY), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. MCCLELLAN), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. MONTOYA), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. RUSSELL), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. COTTON), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from California (Mr. MURPHY), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK) and the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) is absent on official business.

On this vote, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is paired with the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT). If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea" and the Senator from South Dakota would vote "nay."

If present and voting, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 42, as follows:

So Mr. HARRIS' amendment was rejected.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending motion of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana and ask that it be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 467 strike lines 7 through 25.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I would hope that the distinguished Senator from Louisiana could accept this amendment to his motion. It does not deal with anything other than the modifications in the present law, some of which previously have been acted upon by the Supreme Court, that the Finance Committee decided to agree to in regard to welfare restrictions. This amendment does not strike the entire title V as the previous amendment would have done. Therefore, it is not subject to the objections which the distinguished Senator from Louisiana voiced in regard to striking the more wholesome, in my view, provisions of title V. It relates only to those welfare restrictions.

I would just say, in support of the amendment, that if it is the hope of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana that the adoption of his motion to recommit with instructions would shorten things down and the Senate could decide upon social security, medicare, and medicaid alone in this session, the Senator would be defeating his purpose if, having foreclosed, as as practical matter, a vote on welfare reform, he nevertheless proposes to the Senate very serious, very complicated, and highly controversial welfare restrictions, as his motion, unamended, would presently do.

So I would hope that perhaps the Senator could take this amendment; and that would have the effect, should the Senator's motion be adopted, of at least limiting the debate or tending to limit the debate to the items the Senator had in mind.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator would refer to page 546, the table of contents of the bill, would he designate the sections to which his amendment makes reference? For example, is he referring to section 540 or 541?

Mr. HARRIS. I could give the Senator a list of these items, but I do not have it from the table of contents. I will just hand it to him.

May I say, while the Senator is looking at it, that the amendment would not relate to the child care provisions of the bill nor to the other provisions of the bill to which the Senator voiced his objections earlier, concerning the other amendment. This amendment would relate only to those restrictions on the present welfare law, the restrictions which the distinguished Senator from Connecticut and I and others objected to very strenuously in committee—to refresh the Senator's memory—and the provisions to which the Senator from Massachusetts strongly objected on the floor of the Senate today.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, section 546, to which the Senator made reference, is one that would be deleted by the motion I have at the desk, which is pending.

I wonder whether the Senator really feels, from his point of view, that it is regressive to have a definition of employment, for example, as exists in section 551 of this bill, which I understand is one he would strike.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there is no use in us playing games of any kind. My intent is clear. If the Senator agrees with my intent, we can rapidly work out the matter if there is any defect in this amendment, which was drawn rather hurriedly.

May I say, in my own defense, that I had known that the Senator from Louisiana was going to make a motion to recommit with instructions, but it had been my understanding—and I did not get that understanding from the Senator from Louisiana, I hasten to say—that his motion to recommit with instructions to strike certain portions of this bill would also strike the restrictive welfare provisions of the bill, to which I strongly object, as the Senator knows.

Coming to the Senate floor and finding that that was not the case, I had to draw an amendment hurriedly. I drew one earlier—because of the problem in quickly trying to write out each page number and section—to strike the entire title V. The Senator objected to that. So now I have tried to make the amendment more specific, to strike only those welfare restrictions to which I have referred.

If the amendment is not precise enough, that can be worked out quickly, if the Senator feels he can agree to it.

Mr. LONG. I have felt that the Senate could vote on these various provisions that the Senator finds objectionable. It had seemed to me that the way to do it would be to recommit the bill with instructions to report back. The Senator apparently is not willing to let us vote in that fashion; but it seems to me if it would be well for the Senate to vote on these measures. I believe it is possible to ask for a division, since the Senate would vote on the individual issues anyway, and that way we could see what the sentiment of the Senate is with regard to the matters that the Senator would like to strike.

I would like to ask the present occupant of the chair if it is not correct that a Senator may insist on a division, in which case we would vote separately on each proposition that is offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPONG). The Senator is correct in that the Senator may demand a division of an amendment to the extent that the amendment is susceptible to division.

Mr. LONG. For example, sections 540 through 551, I would take it, would be subject to a division which would permit us to vote on each one of those sections in turn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would the Senator give the Chair the page numbers?

Mr. LONG. Each one is a separate amendment. For example, the first one is numbered amendment 275 and I would like to ask that there be a vote on committee amendment 275 first. I would like to ask, Mr. President, that we vote individually on section 540 and then on sections 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 550, and 551. These are all separate provisions.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I will yield, but I would like to have the response of the Chair first; then I shall be happy to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has previously ruled to the Senator that he has a right to ask for a division in these instances. Now the Chair has not as yet gone over these to say that all of them are susceptible to division, but in the interests of time we are doing that here and now. The Senator from Oklahoma has asked the Senator from Louisiana to yield and the Chair asks the Senator from Louisiana if he does.

Mr. LONG. I would like to ask that the Senate proceed to vote on the first amendment, committee amendment No. 275, section 540 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPONG). The Chair rules—is that on page 467?

Mr. LONG. On page 467.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair for the moment holds that is susceptible of division.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I take it that the distinguished Senator from Louisiana made his original motion to reconsider with the idea that it might shorten the Senate's consideration of these matters. I do not see how that is consistent with his present request that we divide up the amendment which I have offered to his motion and vote on it as many separate times as we possibly can. His own motion to reconsider with instructions is subject to exactly the same kind of request for a division, Mr. President, and I feel rather strongly that the Senator from Louisiana should not decide what package the Senate will vote upon. He should not be able to put together a package and say, "Let us vote 'yes' or 'no' on his whole package."

The Senator from Louisiana says he does not want the Senate to vote on welfare reform because that would take too much time, but instead he is going to hold us several votes on welfare restrictions. I say that will take too much time, Mr. President.

I now yield to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. I thought I had the floor in my own right. I did not ask the Senator to yield to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asked whether the Senator from Louisiana yielded to the Senator from Oklahoma. The Chair asked him that in his ruling.

Mr. HARRIS. I always appreciate the Chair's help, but not particularly in this instance.

[Laughter.]

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I will yield to the Senator in a moment, but it seems to me that we have an important issue here. The Senate should vote on it. It is one thing for a Senator to say that these are restrictive provisions or backward steps. But it is another thing to start out by putting people on welfare when they do not belong there, and then, when we find they do not belong there, we have to put everyone else on welfare to be equitable. If we are considering taking that approach to welfare legislation, that is not a very logical situation. Another Senator might say that he does not like the 1-year residency requirement, or this and that other committee provision. The committee worked many long months on this subject trying to bring to the Senate a responsible bill.

The first amendment I seek to deal with relates to men who desert their families. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare said that this should be a crime and the committee amendment says it is a misdemeanor for a man intentionally to cross a State boundary for purposes of denying his family support, when desertion occurs, we have to tax taxpayers who are working to support their own families so that they will have to pay not only to support their own families but also to support through taxes the family of the man who deliberately and intentionally crosses the State boundary to avoid discharging his obligations to his family, I do not think we should permit a father to avoid his responsibilities with regard to his family by crossing a State boundary, and thus impose on the taxpayers the duty of supporting his child.

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is not regarded as a flaming conservative. However, with regard to this issue, his attitude was that we should do something about fathers who impose such heavy burdens on the taxpayers by crossing State boundaries in the way I have described. Does the Senator not think that this should be a misdemeanor? Does the Senator not think we should call upon the Federal Government to sue the man and collect what the Government had to pay because the man crossed the State boundary to avoid his obligations to his family—knowingly and with the intention of doing so?

It is my understanding that about 16 percent of the families receiving welfare are cases where the father deserted the family.

If the father crosses a State boundary to get beyond the reach of that State law, why should it not be a misdemeanor? Why should he not be sued for support of his family? Why should we not vote on it? Let Senators decide what they want to do about a father who deliberately abandons his children and refuses to support them with the result that the Federal Government and the State have to combine their resources to support that family. If Senators think that we should not do anything about it, let them so vote.

Secretary Richardson said he would support such legislation.

He said:

> We would support legislation which made it a Federal crime to cross State lines for the purpose of evading parental responsibility.

The answer is not to put a lot more people on welfare, but to put somebody in jail or at least to try to prosecute him for deliberately abandoning his family. Why can we not vote on it?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, how ironic the situation is to have the chairman of the committee pleading for a vote on these amendments which have had limited discussion and practically no debate. I believe that we should vote on practically every measure before the Senate without a filibuster.

The family assistance program is the No. 1 issue in the President's program. We have been debating it for 1 week and the opportunity for a vote has been denied to us.

I am for granting a vote on every measure of the Senator from Louisiana up or down. But if the Senate is willing to vote on the proposal for welfare restrictions being suggested by the chairman of the committee, I think there is also the obligation to have an opportunity to vote on the family assistance program.

I am going to give the Senate that opportunity, because if the motion to recommit and report back is adopted, I will then reintroduce the family assistance program as a substitute for title V. I hope that those Senators who have been calling for a vote on restrictions will then be willing to have a vote on the family assistance program and give the President and the Senate a chance to vote up or down on the family assistance program.

I am all for voting on the amendments of the Senator from Louisiana. But I hope that the Senator will accord the Senate and the President of the United States the same courtesy and will give the Senate an opportunity to vote on the family assistance program shortly.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have not made a speech on either the family assistance program or on the trade bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut tell us that if he does intend to offer his amendment on the family assistance plan in such a way that the Senate can work its will on modifications to clean out the deficiencies that have been pointed out on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I will offer the family assistance plan that was originally the Ribicoff-Bennett proposal, but will now be the Ribicoff proposal, as a substitute to title V.

That will be an amendment in the first degree. It will be subject to amendment, unless the Parliamentarian rules otherwise.

So, may I say to the Senator that if a Senator thinks that by adopting a proposal of the Senator from Louisiana, he is just going to have a clear-cut vote for social security, he could not be more wrong. What the Senator from Louisiana did, instead of giving us an oportunity to vote on social security—and I was willing to abide by it—was to go back to title V with restrictive amendments. Then, out of a sense of fair play, we should give the Senate a chance to vote on welfare reform.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, permit me to explain, with reference to what the Senator has said, that the Senator discussed this matter with another Senator and not with the Senator from Louisiana the possibility of a motion to recommit and report back. The Senator from Connecticut was of the impression that a motion to recommit and report back would eliminate title V.

I had no knowledge of that. I am sure the Senator will affirm the fact that so far as he knows, I had no knowledge of a plan that a motion to recommit was intended to eliminate title V.

When I heard the suggested motion, my first thought was, "Goodness, you would not want to eliminate title V from this bill. You would be striking out $1 billion of help for the poorest people in the country, those who need it the most."

I would be willing to agree, in the spirit of compromise and would go along with this amendment to strike out all these sections that the Senator from Oklahoma would like to strike, but only if we are not confronted with an effort to add family assistance and the other programs to the bill.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware is present. I want to explain the chronology. The Senator from Delaware has been opposed to family assistance, and I have been for it. But we have been living for 8 years in that committee in a complete sense of comity.

I have the highest respect for the Senator from Delaware, and I trust that he has the same respect for the Senator from Connecticut.

During all of these weeks, we have been trying to arrive at some way in which we could resolve the differences that confront the Senate, and especially with respect to the family assistance program.

The other day the Senator from Delaware told me that he intended to make a motion to recommit—I think that was on Tuesday, or the day before we adjourned—and report back, striking out titles III, IV, and V.

In a subsequent conversation with the Senator from Delaware, he said to me that he was under the impression that the Senator from Louisiana was going to join with him on his motion to recommit. I therefore took it to mean just that.

The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and the ranking minority member have said publicly a number of times—and it has come back to me from others in authority—that under no circumstances would they go to conference on the trade bill, the family assistance, or catastrophic illness.

I do not believe in doing useless things. I recognize that we ought to wind up the Senate's business and we ought to come back to the family assistance and family welfare next year, and that in the interim we should pass the social security bill and amendments to clarify the medicare and medicaid measures, with which the Senator from Delaware and I have been laboring for the past 2 years, which are noncontroversial and the chances are that the House would go along with them in the social security conference.

I was nonplused to find that when the motion to recommit was submitted, we were again on title 5 and the welfare restrictions.

I am willing to forego voting on amendments and on the family assistance program and come back next year.

But I cannot see why we are here now on other welfare restrictions.

This is the same matter that the Senate refused us a vote on with respect to the President's program. If we are on welfare, then we have no alternative. If the Senator wants to vote item by item on the welfare restrictions, the Senator should be willing to give us the courtesy of an opportunity to vote on family assistance, because if the House refuses to go into conference on welfare reform, the President's program, the same conferees will refuse to go into conference on the welfare restrictions now advanced by the Senator from Louisiana.

I want to make the situation clear to the Senate because instead of shortening the session and taking our differences and cutting the Gordian knot, we are back where we started and nothing has been achieved. I was under the impression, after talking to the Senator from Delaware, that we were finally working out of the situation in which we had been.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The Senator from Connecticut pointed out last Tuesday that after proposing a series of unanimous-consent requests which were objected to, I stated that I was ready to make a proposal to recommit the bill and to strike all of sections 3, 4, and 5. Section 6 already had been disposed of otherwise. That section referred to veterans' benefits. I tried to get a vote on that motion last Tuesday. I was asked not to press the matter to a vote until the chairman came, back since due to weather he could not be here. I believe the Senator from Connecticut asked that that matter not be voted on at that time, and I accordingly withheld my motion.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator is correct. That was out of courtesy to the chairman who was delayed in New York because of a snowstorm.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The Senator is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I said to the Senator, because he had not been in communication with him, that I thought it was not proper for the Senate to take up a motion to recommit because of the absence of the chairman who could not get back to Washington. So I asked that the matter be held up. Otherwise I would not have held up a vote on the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Then this morning the Senator from Louisiana, as he had a right to do, presented his motion which would keep part of title V. Section 5 represented committee amendments, and I can see his logic there. They represent major reforms of the existing welfare program, and I had hoped they could be retained.

I wonder, in the spirit of getting on with this bill, whether we could not work out some kind of an agreement with the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Connecticut—and this is just a suggestion—to strike those three sections without prejudice, and if Senators wanted votes on those amendments, up or down, we could proceed to their consideration. I would like to see this matter closed out and the social security bill passed and sent to conference. It does not appear that we shall get legislation here to increase social security benefits unless we take this step.

I make that suggestion as one who supported a good many amendments of the Senator from Louisiana and some I voted against. I also supported some amendments of the Senator from Connecticut, but we are confronted here with a problem of getting a vote. We had one case pointed out where one person would get three or four different checks from different welfare agencies. I suggested a simplified system to guard against this abuse whereby every welfare recipient would use his social security number. In that way there would be a check against these duplications. That is an amendment which would be most constructive, and I do not think there would be any controversy on its adoption. There could be others, but they could not be offered in their own right and voted on up or down. I would like to see some agreement worked out which would untangle us from this dilemma.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in view of the conversations I have heard from other Senators in the Chamber, I modify my motion to include the amendments of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LONG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I said before suggesting the absence of a quorum, I modify my amendment to accept the amendment the Senator from Oklahoma has offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPONG). If the Senator from Louisiana will suspend for a moment, the Chair for the record would like to refine its earlier ruling on the inquiries made by the Senator from Louisiana. The Chair stated at that time that the amendment by the Senator from Oklahoma could be divided to the extent that it was susceptible to division. Upon examining the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, the Chair has noted that the amendment, rather than written by section, is written by page; and so, if the Senator from Louisiana were to pursue his earlier course of action, it would be susceptible to division only in three instances.

The parliamentary situation, as the Chair now understands it, is that the Senator from Louisiana wishes to accept the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. We would say that to accomplish what the Senator from Oklahoma initially sought, whether there is to be any division or not, it is necessary for him to modify his amendment as originally submitted to the desk to include all of page 481.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I do so modify it.

The PRESIIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

The Chair now understands that the Senator from Louisiana now accepts the Harris amendment as modified, as a modification of his instructions.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would like to explain that, based upon the colloquy we had on the floor, there was something of a gentlemen's understanding between two of my fellow Senators, of which I was not aware, involving these particular sections. I discussed the matter with the Senator from Delaware when he mentioned that he felt the motion should be made, and that the Senate should agree to it, including the motion to strike title V. I pointed out that I believed it would be a very grave mistake. I felt that while our liberal friends might desire to strike some part of it, certainly if we were to strike sections 501 through 530, there was involved in those provisions assistance amounting to almost $1 billion to the poor who needed it the most and that that part should not be stricken. It was my feeling that the other sections should be voted on on their merits.

I subsequently learned, partly from the colloquy and partly during the quorum call we had thereafter, that it was the understanding of the Senator from Connecticut that those sections would not be in the bill.

The Senator from Connecticut, who has been one of the champions of the poor and the downtrodden in this country, himself would be the last to strike certain provisions in the beginning of that section which would be highly beneficial to the poor.

So I believe in this fashion we should be able, and I hope we would be able, to agree to the motion to recommit, and that would still leave to Senators the privilege of moving to strike or to amend certain sections, as an amendment to the bill, or to offer something relevant, which was not objectionable, or even to offer something that was not relevant; but it does involve a determination on the part of the Senate to pass on such of that as remains.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I think the statement of the chairman puts an entirely different light on the entire problem, because he is correct that, sections 501 to 530 are basic improvements, in which substantial benefits are given to the aged, the blind, and the disabled, as well as many people on welfare. The other sections that were suggested to be stricken by the Senator from Oklahoma were restrictive. That is why I was at a loss to understand why we would not vote on welfare reform but would on welfare restrictions. There is a difference, and I am glad the chairman has agreed to accept the modification of the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

May I say this in conclusion? As far as I am concerned, I am going to vote "no" to the motion of the Senator because I still think that the Senate should have the opportunity to vote on family assistance. I recognize the realities of the situation. As long as the restrictions are removed, if the Senator from Louisiana should prevail, then I would not consider the family assistance plan at this time, because to do so would amount to going down to defeat on the social security benefits for 26 million Americans and $1 billion worth of increased welfare payments to the people who are at the bottom of the economic and social scale in this country. In addition, the resulting filibuster would render the Senate useless to perform its tasks. But again I am encouraged by my conversations with the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Utah, who next year will be the ranking minority member on the Finance Committee, that they will do everything possible to expedite the hearings on the family assistance plan, and I hope on trade as well, because each is important.

I would hope that we on the Finance Committee will recognize our obligation and will not tie social security and catastrophic illness and trade and welfare to one bill. I would hope that we would have the responsibility by leaders in Congress to see that there will be full and separate hearings and markups on each bill, bring them to the floor, and have them debated to the fullest extent possible. I will say to each and every Senator know that the family assistance plan is complex and complicated and a real change in the philosophy of this country and that it deserves long and careful debate. That also goes with respect to trade.

Since I have assurance from the Senator from Montana, the majority leader, the Senator from Pennsylvania, the minority leader, the ranking minority member of the Finance Committee, and the chairman of the committee, I think we can get along with the business of the Senate.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield so I may respond?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, to the extent that my efforts will be useful to the processes, I will do everything I can in all three of those areas. I am interested in seeing a correction of our trade situation. I am very interested in following through with the President's proposal to improve our welfare program. I am not sure that this social security bill as we pass it will be the final one. We probably will have more social security amendments.

What gives me hope is the fact that next time we should avoid the time pattern that brought us to this impasse. It is my understanding that we have assurances from the chairman and the minority leader of the House Ways and Means Committee that they will get the legislation over to us early so that we will not be caught at the end of the session, and we should have time in 2 years of the next Congress to give ample time to all three of these matters and I hope make very substantial contributions to their improvement.

To the extent that I can make any contribution to that, I shall be very happy to do so.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, we have only 5 days remaining in this session of Congress before we are required to adjourn by the Constitution. It was obvious some days ago that at the rate we were moving, we were spinning our wheels, we were going to wind up getting nowhere, the 26 million retired Americans on social security would be denied their raises, and the three million people drawing public assistance—the needy blind, the aged, and the totally and permmanently disabled—would be denied the benefits which this bill would give them.

It seems to me that now the Senate is beginning to make progress. But we can only make progress if we recognize the realities of what is possible this late in the legislative session.

Each of us is interested in practically every provision of this bill. I have the honor to represent a State that is heavily dependent upon textiles. Some 250,000 Georgians make their living either in the garment industry, or in textile mills, or in producing the cotton that s sold to the textile mills. There are 2,400,000 Americans similarly situated throughout the country. They are losing their jobs at the rate of 100,000 a year.

The Senate, by overwhelming votes in 1948, in 1968, again in 1969, and again in 1970, has attempted to take corrective action in that regard. The House of Representatives heretofore has refused to accept our efforts in conference. This year the other body sent us a bill of its own. There was substantial opposition in the Senate to the House-passed bill, but the Senate Finance Committee, once by a vote of 9 to 3 and again by a vote of 11 to 6, has determined that these people ought to have some relief and some protection. The Senate, by a vote of 55 to 31 on a motion to lay on the table, also indicated its desire to take affirmative action.

Knowing the realities of the situation, I do not think it is possible at this time to get a trade bill, and for that reason I shall reluctantly vote for the motion of my distinguished chairman, the Senator from Louisiana. I am happy to see the spirit of compromise on the part of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut and others who recognize that at this late date in the session, the Senate is not going to take action to add another 14 million people to the welfare rolls of this country without giving the matter adequate and thorough consideration.

I think, therefore, Mr. President, that in this spirit of compromise, even at this late date, it will still be possible for the Senate to approve a bill to benefit those millions of elderly Americans who are in need and in dire straits. Some of them go hungry most of the time, because they cannot make ends meet on the mere pittance they receive on public assistance or the small social security benefits that they get at the present time.

For that reason, and only for that reason, I shall support the motion of my distinguished chairman. I ask him now if it will be possible for the Senate Finance Committee, early in the 92d Congress, to take action on trade legislation in order that we can do something to correct our hemorrhage of dollars and gold, our unfavorable balance of payments, and the loss of the business that we are exporting to foreigners throughout the world. It seems to be the policy of many Senators to export all of our jobs and put all our people on welfare. But if we are going to export our jobs, it simply will not be possible to put our people on welfare, because we will not have the tax resources to support the welfare program.

Will my chairman hold hearings on it next year, so we can get early action on the trade bill?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I discussed this matter previously with the Senator from Georgia as well as the Senator from Connecticut. Both of them have made the point that we should hold hearings at the earliest possible date consistent with our other duties, because of the pressing need to act in this area.

I can assure the Senator that we will hold hearings at the earliest practicable time, to begin to develop answers to this vexing problem.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I support the position taken by the chairman of the Finance Committee. What the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is attempting to do is to bring some order out of chaos. He is attempting to strip from the social security bill all of the nongermane amendments.

If we are going to have a social security bill, we can only have that bill, as I see it, at this late stage in the session, if we take off all of these other amendments and strip it down to the social security bill, in order to give the social security recipients an increase in their benefits.

Many of the amendments that will be stricken off of the bill if this recommital motion is carried will be amendments which I have supported. Others will be amendments which I have opposed. But be that as it may, if we are going to bring a social security bill out of this Congress, if the Senate is to have an opportunity to pass a social security benefit bill, then it seems to me to be necessary to follow the recommendation of the chairman of the Committee on Finance to recommit this bill, strip it of its nongermane amendments, and bring back a social security bill, which up to this point has been held hostage by other amendments, and then give the Senate an opportunity to vote for an increase in social security benefits, which benefits, it seems to me, the people so badly need in this time of inflation—and contrary to what many say, I do not think inflation is getting better; indeed, it may be getting worse.

I think the social security recipients are entitled to this increase in their benefits, and I think the Senator from Louisiana has indicated a way by which the Senate can pass this social security bill at this session and provide those benefits.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONG. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I associate myself with the remarks made by the Senator from Georgia. I, too, shall support the chairman of our Committee on Finance. I think the reasons for my decision have been adequately set forth by the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Georgia.

I think there is great need to enact some legislation which will protect this country against the loss of dollars, the loss of jobs, and the outflow of industries that we have been experiencing. But for the time being, I think the actions of the chairman have been courageous, honest, and forthright, and I shall give him my support.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues, first, in praising the statesmanship exhibited by the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), and the leadership of the Senate in bringing this matter to some kind of finality. I think whatever we do now is bound to bring honor to the Senate, and I shall loyally cooperate.

I appreciate very much the statesmanlike attitude of the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE), with whom I thoroughly disagree on his statements as to the merits of trade quotas, but I certainly laud his desire to get something done on what we can get done; and I certainly join on that wholeheartedly.

I rise only to make this point: I realize that everything must be the result of accommodation between men. It is a fact that the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) and the chairman have concerted in eliminating many, if not most, of the objectionable major changes in social philosophy in the welfare plan, by eliminating sections 540 through 551, inclusive, from the bill. There still remains the whole question of Federal child care, and a number of bills have been introduced on that issue, representing an enormous amount of creative thinking. The Senator from Oklahoma has introduced one, the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH) has introduced one, I have introduced one, and there has been a White House conference on the subject.

I really think, with all respect—and that is my reason, of course, for rising—that, if that, too, could be taken out of this consideration, it would be most helpful.

I only appeal to the chairman. I realize that many things have to be put together which lean on each other, and if the chairman of the Finance Committee feels insistent on it, I certainly would not wish to cross him at this late date by offering another amendment. But I do submit to him, with all respect, that the deliberation in which he is now joining—for trade, for the family assistance plan, and for catastrophic health insurance—is equally deserved by the child care provisions of this bill. His own stature and importance in respect of the committee which he heads is so great that I submit to him, as a matter of statesmanship and policy, whether all of us might not be better served if that, too, should be the subject of really profound deliberation and creative enterprise by him and the others.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President. I would hope the Senator would reserve that issue and let the Senate decide it after we have concluded this phase, because some of the most concerned people in the country in this area believe that what we have done with regard to child care is one of the best things that could be done. The AFL-CIO thinks so, and many of the child care experts think so. Some very fine people do not agree and take the view that the Senator from New York takes.

I would urge the Senator to let that be in the same category as an amendment that has to do with peer review under medicare where the majority on the committee agreed with the distinguished Senator from Utah, but the distinguished Senator from Nebraska does not. He is going to submit that issue to the Senate. I wish the Senator from New York would raise the child care question after our motion is agreed to, because it is one about which the best intentioned people differ.

I would hope that the Senator would let us agree to this motion and then raise the child care question and lay out both sides of the argument and let the Senate decide it.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am going to comply with what the Senator from Louisiana asks me to do. I think it is in the highest interest of the Senate's action. I did not wish, by remaining silent, to fail to point out the seriousness of this issue, that many of us consider it to be equal in weight with what is going out of the bill right now under this motion and gentlemen's agreement. I did wish to have the Senator informed that this would not be a filibuster or extended debate but a determined fight, because it deserves it.

Mr. MCINTYRE. Mr. President, the proposed action by the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) and the Senator from Delaware (Mr. WILLIAMS) would have the effect of killing the possibilities of providing protection for American shoe and textile workers during this Congress.

There was an attempt to drop protection of the shoe workers in the Finance Committee. That failed.

There was a further attempt to, in effect, kill shoe and textile quotas on December 18. This was defeated by a vote of 31 to 58.

These two recent actions convince me that the sense of the Senate supports the contention that our shoe and textile industries need some form of qualified protection if they are to survive and maintain sorely need payrolls.

These actions confirm my belief that this body is acutely aware of the plight of the shoe and textile industries and is reluctant to turn its back on them.

I am certain that many Members feel precisely as I do about this issue. We believe in free competition. We are not protectionists as such. But we refuse to stand idly by when unfair overseas competition results in the shutting down of our factories and the unemployment of our workers.

This is painfully true in the case of the shoe industry in my State of New Hampshire and the rest of the Nation, just as it is true in the case of the textile industry throughout the country.

Two years ago the shoe and leather industry was the single largest manufacturing employer in New Hampshire, having a total work force of 20,536 people. By 1969, employment had dropped to 18,466 and the industry had lost its leading role.

In the past 2 years, almost 10 percent of the shoe factories in New Hampshire close down, severely affecting the economy of the communities in which they were located, and by July of 1970, Mr. President, the shoe and leather work force had shrunk to only 16,400.

Now there are those, including the present administration, who apparently view the demise of the domestic shoe industry as unavoidable, inevitable, and, indeed, necessary to preserve our present foreign trade policy.

I strongly disagree with that thesis, and I deeply resent having the economic backbone of my State and this industry severed on the sacrificial block of totally unrestricted free trade.

For the crucial fact remains, Mr. President, that in almost every single case in New Hampshire, the major reason for the shutting down of shoe plants and the resulting loss of jobs can be directly attributed to competition from cheaply made foreign shoes.

Let me repeat once again. I believe in free competition when that competition is fair competition. Our shoe and textile industries are the victims of unfair competition and this is why I continue to urge the enactment of quotas which will restore fairness and, in the long run, strengthen free competition.

Mr. President, I want to join the Senator from Georgia in expressing the hard facts of the situation before us. Within the time constraints facing us at this late hour of the 91st Congress a trade bill is an impossibility. It is also certain that a social security bill is vital to the needs of millions of our elderly citizens. There is solid agreement that social security and medicare amendments can pass. With the promise for early trade legislation consideration in 1971 I will vote to recommit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion, as modified, of the Senator from Louisiana. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. GORE), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MCCARTHY), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. MCCLELLAN), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. MONTOYA), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. RUSSELL), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) are necessarily absent.

So Mr. LONG's motion was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Finance I report herewith H.R. 17550, the Social Security Amendments of 1970 modified in accordance with the instructions of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Moss). The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

H.R. 17550, to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the first committee amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate agree to the committee amendments en bloc and regard them as original text, preserving the right of Senators to offer amendments thereto.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, on previous occasions I have objected to this because of the inclusion in the bill of the material which, in my judgment, and the judgment of many others here, has weighted down and presented an invitation to disaster for our country. But, Mr. President, it is still possible for any Senator to add on any of these amendments. I join with all my colleagues in the hope that this will not be done. In order to show good faith and to honor the efforts of the Senate to disentangle itself, I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendments en bloc and that the amendments be agreed to en bloc and that the bill as amended be treated as original text for purposes of further amendment?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the unanimous-consent request is granted, as is indicated, the amendments may then lie in two degrees, as an original amendment and as amendments or substitutes to that amendment; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. They will be amendable in two degrees, after the unanimous-consent request is granted.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Moss). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1122

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1122.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read as follows:

The Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) proposes amendment No. 1122, as follows:

Strike out from page 232, line 11 through line 15, page 269.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, is the Senator willing to enter into a time limitation on the consideration of his amendment?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I would be willing to a time limitation of 15 minutes to the side.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the amendment be limited to one-half hour, the time to be equally divided between the sponsor of the amendment and the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. We are on limited time, and we should give our full attention to the debate.

The Senator from Nebraska may proceed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I shall try to state my case concisely. I hope that the Senators present will follow it.

The amendment would strike from the bill that section which has been called "peer review." The problem is how we define peer review.

In administering medicare certain abuses have sprung up. Our staff has done some fine work on this matter. In their report they concluded with the recommendation that the medical profession ought to police the medical profession. With that statement I concur.

The committee had before it many problems, as the debate over the last 2 weeks has shown. There was testimony taken on this matter. However, the testimony is far conclusive as to a proper method of peer review.

Mr. President, we ended up with 39 pages or thereabouts on peer review which really has not had the attention that it ought to have. I am not opposing peer review as such. I oppose the language used. And I suggest that in the closing days of Congress, it ought to go out and we should have another look at it next year.

If we wish to examine some of the language, if we turn to page 234 in the bill, it will be seen that this peer review organization will have a lot of authority to police the practice of medicine insofar as these Government programs are concerned.

On page 234, lines 10 through 11 are in line with the idea that the medical profession should police the medical profession. But if we look at lines 20 through 24, we see who else would police the medical profession.

I read what it says:

Such other public, nonprofit private, or other agency or organization, which the Secretary determines, in accordance with criteria prescribed by him in regulations, to be of professional competence and otherwise suitable; . . .

It gives to the Secretary the power to select any organization he wants to tell the doctors how to practice, when a person should go to the hospital, when the facilities are adequate and many other far-reaching questions.

I contend that would enable the Secretary to turn to an organization of some crusader, such as Ralph Nader, or anyone else, to police the medical profession.

I call attention to some other language on pages 237 and 238. There is some very deceptive language there. It reads:

No Professional Standards Review Organization shall utilize the services of any individual who is not a physician to make final determinations with respect to the professional conduct of any physician, or any act performed by any physician in the exercise of his profession.

The catchword there is "final." We could have an organization with thousands of clerks who could take a blue pencil and direct the practice of medicine, if we had one doctor at the top. That doctor would not have to be a practicing physician if he has been to medical school and has a license. He puts his initials on the final paper and that will determine how the medical profession shall treat the patients.

Such language should not be agreed to in the closing days of this Congress. Surely, we should have peer review, but not that kind.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Chair maintain order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair admonishes the Senate to be in order. The Senator from Nebraska may continue.

Mr CURTIS. Mr. President, among other things, a peer review organization will have authority to require a doctor treating patients to get permission before what they have what is called elective surgery. Who would be the members of the review organization? Nobody knows because there is a blank check of authority to select any group which the Secretary chooses.

This has the real possibility that the bureaus can police the medical profession. I am not here pleading a case for the doctors. By and large they are well educated people who take care of themselves. I am concerned about the patients.

When medicare was adopted, the people were promised over and over again there would be no interference with the doctor-patient relationship; that they would not be treated in groups but that every individual would have free access to his doctor, unhampered by rules and regulations that told the doctor what decisions to make, when to operate, what medicines to prescribe, and so forth.

I believe this language is too broad. I believe we should have something like this, but certainly not the language that is in the bill. Through the fault of no one, this provision did not get the attention it should have.

My plea is that the matter not be included in this bill and that it be considered in the subsequent bill.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator state again what his amendment would do?

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment would strike out the language on page 232 beginning at line 11 through line 15 on page 269.

Mr. ALLOTT. The Senator would strike out all of the language dealing with professional review?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ALLOTT. There have been many of these situations which have gotten much public attention. It seems to me we are taking an erroneous step by including the language on page 234 in paragraph (b) and also including subparagraph (e), page 237, which, as the Senator has mentioned, contains the word "final."

The effect is that there could be an unqualified group doing this sort of work and a doctor or a group of doctors could be totally tarred with a brush and after they had had their reputations and perhaps their livelihoods imperiled, the only thing they would have would be on final review they would have a group of doctors to say whether they did or not.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the Senator. I am on limited time. I do agree with the Senator.

Mr. ALLOTT. I did not realize the Senator was on limited time.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 2 minutes?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, as I did in committee.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a portion of the separate views I have filed to the report of the committee concerning this matter.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The committee adopted a proposal to establish professional standards review organizations at local and State levels throughout the country to review such functions as examination of patient and practitioner profiles; independent medical audits; on-site audits; and the development and application of norms of care and treatment.

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be required to enter into agreements with qualified professional standards review organizations, principally local medical societies, to review the totality of care rendered or ordered by physicians for medicare and medicaid patients. Where medical societies are unable or unwilling to undertake the responsibility, the Secretary could contract with States or local health departments or other suitable organizations.

This provision has a laudable purpose: to insure quality care and to hold down unnecessary costs.

However, the proposal contains many unknown and unpredictable factors. Further, there are serious objections that it grants organized medicine too much control over utilization of facilities and payments of claims.

The proposal should be tested before Congress puts it into effect on a total basis as the committee bill would do. I am not satisfied that this proposal will result in the savings which have been claimed by its proponents, nor am I satisfied that the review procedure is the best and most workable which can be devised.

The House provisions on peer review should be strengthened, and the Senate committee provisions should be stricken.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I particularly point out, as I said in those separate views that—

The proposal contains many unknown and unpredictable factors. Further, there are serious objections that it grants organized medicine too much control over utilization of facilities and payments of claims.

Mr. President, I support the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, medicare's hospital insurance plan has a deficit over 1967 projections officially estimated at $216 billion over the next 25 years, if we go on as we are going. On the other hand, applying cost projections of the American Hospital Association, that deficit is estimated at $370 billion. Any figure, or any figure between those figures is intolerable.

The committee overwhelmingly voted approval of the professional standards review amendment as the basic approach to bringing about effective medical—and not governmental control of medicare and medicaid. Our present medicare and medicaid utilization review is fragmented, piecemeal, and ineffective. The basic approach developed and sponsored by Senator BENNETT was modified by the committee in response to the constructive comments of organized medicine and hospitals.

The amendment is designed to assure comprehensive and ongoing review of care provided under medicaid and medicare by physicians at local levels—usually in minimum groupings of 300 practicing doctors. The amendment includes every conceivable safeguard against pro forma or token assumption of responsibilities by doctors. It includes every conceivable safeguard to protect the public interest.

The Professional Standards Review Organization amendment is a responsible answer developed after long and hard work, to bringing medicare and medicaid under effective and professional control. We just cannot permit medicare and medicaid to continue as they have. Congress has a responsibility to act.

The alternative to use of professional standards review organizations is beefed-up review by governmental employees and insurance company personnel. That is an alternative which holds little appeal to us or the doctors.

The plan, which has been entitled PSRO—the Professional Standards Review Organization—has been worked on for months by the staff of the committee, by the staff of HEW, and through consultation with many scores of doctors and professional organizations.

I would say that so far as most medical organizations are concerned, the last remaining disagreement is over how this organization shall be constituted. For obvious reasons there are many people in the American Medical Association who feel that the power should be lodged with the State medical society. I have opposed that because I do not believe it proper for any private organization supported by private funds, open to membership, whose membership would be controlled by private rules, to administer such a law. Therefore, a program was established under which groups of local physicians in an area supporting 300 or more physicians would be invited to offer their services to the Secretary to carry out this review process.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LONG. Is it not true that in the years we spent studying these matters we found situations such as that in a particular area where there would be one doctor performing five times as many tonsillectomies as the average doctor would be performing? When we looked into it, we found that he should not have been performing five times as many procedures. He should have been performing the same number as the others. Then we would find a doctor giving five times as many injections as other doctors and bringing patients in for unnecessary numbers of office calls, when it would be cheaper to give them packages of pills to take.

Is it not true that we found a multitude of ways in which doctors, hospitals, and nursing homes, particularly those who might not have as many patients as others, performed many unnecessary services thereby running up the costs of the program in ways that everybody agreed should not have happened?

If we do not have the Senator's amendment—and as one on the committee I think he modified it to meet every reasonable objection of medical associations—then we would not have any mechanism to do anything about the abuses by doctors and other providers of care other than the inadequate mechanism we already have.

Mr. BENNETT. I am grateful for the Senator's contribution. Some language was read as to what power goes to the Secretary. It should be pointed out that that is a residual power. He should use first the peer group system of review, and, if it is not available, in the end there should be some type of review by the Federal Government. The priority goes to local peer review groups, and the Secretary cannot act until he has to act.

The point was made that under the language of the bill doctors would have to give permission to take patients into the hospital for elective surgery or elective treatment. Actually, we are concerned with problems that exist under our present system, in which the doctor can take the patient into the hospital and then, after the patient has been there for a long time, the service decides it was improper and refuses to pay for it.

Our problem here is to set up a system by which we can make reasonably sure that the surgery or the other treatment will fall within the medicare rules and be paid for.

The amendment has been drawn so that the peer review organizations will see to it that a man whose patients are properly handled can be given blanket permission to take his patients in for treatment, and they will concern themselves only with the problems.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. TALMADGE. Can we not say that the position of the Senate Finance Committee on this amendment is that we want to return the ball game to the players?

Mr. BENNETT. That is right. That is exactly right, but we have to have an umpire in the ultimate sense.

Mr. TALMADGE. Either the doctors police their own profession or it will be policed in Washington by HEW?

Mr. BENNETT. That is right. We want to offer the doctors the first opportunity. We want to give the local doctors, who are aware of the limitations and problems of their colleagues, a chance to pass on that.

The point was made here that all kinds of decisions can be made along the road and that the doctor only will make the final decision. That was put in there to make it possible for the doctor to use registered nurses or use paramedical people to handle the minutia that go into loading a doctor down with all the paper work and with all the comparatively unimportant decisions. These people would be employees selected by the doctors to represent them.

If this provision is knocked out of the bill, we are left with the House language, and the House language gives the Secretary full power to do anything he pleases. The doctors will have no opportunity to review their own professional activity. The purpose of peer review is not to review the claims situation; it is concerned only with medical necessity, with professional standards, and with the possibility of finding less costly ways of treating patients.

If ever a proposal has been worked over and carefully adjusted to every practical suggestion that has been made by the members of the medical profession, this proposal has been so treated, and I think it would be tragic if we knocked this provision out of the Senate bill and, therefore, had no chance in conference to do anything except take the House language and thus mandated the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to set up a process by which he would review and enforce conditions of medicare.

There must be review. The situations, the difficulties that have been developed, demonstrate that. The doctors want a chance to review themselves. I think this provision gives them that chance without passing it automatically to a private group such as a State medical society.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Is the language not directed to abuses such as are shown on page 664 of the hearings? Here were two doctors practicing in a ghetto area of a larger city and they were performing, even though they were general practitioners, more tonsillectomies than all of the ear, nose, and throat specialists put together. A man might come into the doctor's office with a headache. The doctor would say, "It looks like you have a headache. Here is an aspirin. Meanwhile, you also ought to have your tonsils taken out." So out would come the tonsils.

Such practices contribute directly to the provision of unnecessary medical services and that is one of the reasons why medicare has cost twice as much as it should and why we have found some doctors making fantastic amounts of money under medicare.

This provision would simply enable the doctors to establish a review organization and continually review the medical care in their community or area. It is only in the event that the doctors declined to do the job right that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare would get into the picture.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator point out that out in the——

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have the floor. This is on my time.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, how much time do I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. About 2½ to 3 minutes.

Mr. BENNETT. I shall be happy to reserve the remainder of my time so the Senator from Nebraska can ask questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, there is no effort on the part of the Senator from Nebraska to defend abuses. They should be stopped, and they are being stopped. The Senator from Georgia said this was an amendment to turn the ball game back to the players.

No one can read lines 20 through 24 on page 234 and say that is to turn it over to the players. It turns the review powers over to any organization which the Secretary determines.

What do they have power to do? Here is what they have power to do: They are to ascertain whether or not such services were medically necessary, and to ascertain concerning the cost of such services, as to whether they meet certain professional standards; they have authority to determine in advance any elective admission to the hospital or to the care facility, or any other care service which consists of an extended or costly course of treatment.

Mr. President, I point the finger at no one, and make no criticism of our committee. We had too much work to do at one time. But I submit that this amendment, consisting of 39 pages, was never read in the committee, it was never read by a staff member to the committee, there was no time after it was printed that a staff member was turned to and asked to go over it section by section. It has language in it that will do things other than that which the proponents would like to have done.

Many of these abuses that are mentioned will be taken care of by Government audit. Many of them will be taken care of by the voluntary committees in the medical association, and, given a little more time, we can write a better peer review.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Utah has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I should like to read briefly from page 155 of the committee report:

> Priority in designation as a PSRO would be given to organizations established at local levels representing substantial numbers of practicing physicians who are willing and believed capable of progressively assuming responsibility for overall continuing review of institutional and outpatient care and services. Local sponsorship and operation should help engender confidence in the familiarity of the review group with norms of medical practice in the area as well as in their knowledge of available health care resources and facilities. Furthermore, to the extent that review is employed today, it is usually at the local level. To be approved, a PSRO applicant must provide for the broadest possible involvement, as reviewers on a rotating basis, of physicians engaged in all types of practice in an area such as solo, group, hospital, medical school, and so forth.

Going back to the charge that it would prevent or interfere with elective admissions to hospitals, let me say again that the doctor has all the power in the world to take his patient to the hospital. The thing that must be reviewed is whether that patient is properly covered by medicare, and whether medicare will pay for the services. That is the name of the game. That is the problem that we face.

Mr. President, the following State medical societies have supported the committee's program: Georgia, Mississippi, Pennsylvania, Hawaii, and New Mexico. Many county societies also support it.

I think that the medical profession was disappointed that they did not get the right to conduct these reviews through their private State societies. They want the system. I hope the Senate will support it and give it to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Moss). All time having expired, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS). On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

So Mr. CURTIS' amendment (No. 1122) was rejected.

AMENDMENT NO. 1163

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1163.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 145, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

(d) In the case of a health care facility providing health care services as of December 18, 1970, which on such date is committed to a formal plan of expansion or replacement, the amendments made by the preceding provisions of this section shall not apply with respect to such expenditures as may be made or obligations incurred for capital items included in such plan where preliminary expenditures toward the plan of expansion or replacement (including payments for studies, surveys, designs, plans, working drawings, specifications, and site acquisition, essential to the acquisition, improvement, expansion, or replacement of the health care facility or equipment concerned) of $100,000 or more, had been made during the three-year period ended December 17, 1970.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this is a corrective and clarifying amendment. I have submitted it to the chairman of the committee, and I think that he might accept it. I yield to him for such comment as he should like to make.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it is my understanding that this amendment is sort of a grandfather provision, involving a clarification of intent as the Senator has stated. It was not considered by the committee, but I see no reason why we could not agree to it.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Should we know something about it?

Mr. CURTIS. The bill provides that hereafter, in determining reimbursement to a hospital for medicare services, they shall disregard any allowances for capital improvements that have been rejected by a State planning agency.

In many States, the State planning agencies are just now being brought into existence. Some of the staff were of the opinion that this amendment was not necessary, but it provides that any care facility which on December 18, 1970, was committed to a formal plan of expansion or replacement, the amendment shall not affect. Such a beginning includes such preliminary expenditures toward expansion or replacement, including payments for studies, surveys, design plans, drawing specifications, site acquisition, improvements and expansion and replacement. In other words, if a hospital has plans underway on December 18, 1970, this new rule that would exclude from consideration their capital cost of facilities, would not apply.

Mr. JAVITS. Is the department saying this is a big problem involved, millions of dollars, or is it a modest problem? I gather it affects particularly the Senator's State?

Mr. CURTIS. In this particular case, it involves the Immanuel Hospital Medical Center in Omaha.

Mr. JAVITS. I have no objection. It is a matter of a modest expansion.

Mr. CURTIS. They have spent millions of dollars on an expansion which is just now getting underway. This hospital is faced with a technical ruling of the Hill-Burton board, made some years ago, entirely outside the purview of what this language contemplates, which might create problems if this amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. I meant universally for the country, is there a problem?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not.

Mr. JAVITS. On that basis, I have no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSS). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1106

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator have a further amendment?

Mr. CURTIS. I do. I call up my amendment No. 1106 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read the amendment as follows:

Beginning on page 213, line 17, strike out "PAYMENTS TO HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATIONS" and all of section 239 through page 225, line 23.

Beginning on page 401, line 21, strike out all through page 402, line 11.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am willing to agree to a limitation of time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, if the Senator is willing, the time on this amendment be limited to one-half hour, the time to be equally divided, 15 minutes to a side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I shall require.

Mr. President, this late in the year and this late at night, it is difficult to make decisions on any bill. Here is what is involved in the amendment: The bill carries provisions for what I term group practice of medicine. This would make it possible for an arrangement to be entered into whereby the recipients of medical care and medicaid to be treated as a group. In other words, instead of that individual doctor-patient relationship, they can join an organization and, by contract with the Government, for a flat fee, they take care of all the group's medical needs.

I want to be fair about this, that it does not force group practice of medicine on the people generally. I do not contend that. All I contend is that this is the beginning of a move toward group practice of medicine.

As I said a bit ago, when these programs were inaugurated we were told over and over again that they would always be administered so as not to interfere with the individual doctor-patient relationship.

Now the costs have gone up; part of it is due to inflation and part to other causes—60 percent to 70 percent of the cost of the problem is in labor—but in grasping for some way to cut down the costs of government medical programs the provision is advanced.

I have a fear that if we make this start in group practice, it will be enlarged and, little by little, it will become compulsory and we will be sacrificing quality for price. Patients will be treated as groups; not as individuals.

Well, Mr. President, I am concerned about the patients. I think that anyone who is ill, particularly those who do not have the resources to pay their own medical bills, should be treated as an individual, that they should consult with a doctor, with a free exchange of questions and answers, and the doctor should advise the patient of the treatment, hospitalization, operation, or whatnot that he should have.

This will make it possible, however, to contract with groups and have a stated fee that will take care of all their ills.

Some Senators have information about company doctors, whether it is a doctor provided by a railroad company, a mining company, or other company. It has never been as satisfactory as the undividual selection of a doctor and the strict maintenance of that individual doctor-patient relationship. This beginning of the group practice is in here, not for the purpose of improving the health care of the people of the country, but it is here to lower the cost.

I am for lowering the cost anywhere it can reasonable be done, but never by sacrificing the quality of care.

I do not believe that if someone joins an organization and that organization contracts with the Government and, for a stated fee, everything is taken care of, that that is as conducive to quality health care as the individual practice of medicine.

Again, Mr. President, I want to make it abundantly clear that I do not contend that this bill forces group practice on anyone. But it is the beginning.

Now there are other things we can do to cut down the cost. Personally, I never did favor medicare for the extremely wealthy, but that is water over the dam.

Instead of dealing directly with costs, such as doing something that will bring more labor-saving devices into the hospitals, we are turning to a cheaper practice of medicine. We are laying the foundation which could well lead to a sacrifice of quality practice.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, can the Senator give an example of the way this works?

Mr. CURTIS. An organization is created, which enters into a contract with a doctor or doctors. I do not know on what basis of the contract, but they contract to take care of the ills of their members for a stated fee.

I have the feeling that it will result in a group practice that would be very much like being treated by a company doctor. We have heard much complaint about that. It is a beginning which I believe is a mistake.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the part of the bill that the Senator from Nebraska seeks to strike was enthusiastically recommended by President Nixon, which was approved by the House Ways and Means Committee, agreed to by the House of Representatives and which the Senate Finance Committee also agreed to.

Mr. President, this committee approved President Nixon's recommendation, with the exception that it did put on some necessary limitations to tighten it up to prevent abuse.

We are talking about people who could sign a contract with a group known as a health maintenance organization. We could name many such groups. The Kaiser Health Foundation on the west coast, for example, is a type of health maintenance plan. They could, for example, possibly sign some sort of an agreement with the Ochsner Foundation in New Orleans if the doctors want to provide such services. Or they could go to the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota if they wanted to form a health maintenance organization with doctors of all specialties capable of providing any medical service one might want. They would provide the medical services, and the Government would pay 95 percent of what it would cost on a per capita basis to provide this individual with his medicare benefits using present payment mechanisms.

It is anticipated that these health maintenance organizations could save money. In some cases, they would find ways to be more efficient. In other cases, they might use fewer hospital days because they would be able to do better if the patient came for outpatient treatment rather than hospital treatment. By providing more efficient services, they would hope to save some money in their operation and to provide either more or better medical care to the people who are members of the health maintenance organization.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, is not the main thrust of this provision to keep people out of the hospital rather than to put them in $80- and $100-a-day hospital beds?

At the present time under medicare, an old person who is sick is almost forced to go to the hospital to get adequate attention. So we have them under those circumstances in a $75-a-day hospital bed.

Almost anyone subject to medicare has one or more chronic conditions—heart, arthritis, kidney, liver, stomach—something that he is going to have for the rest of his life. He needs maintenance. He needs attention. He needs this on a regular basis in order to keep out of the hospital and to keep him doing something, to keep him active, to keep him in with people.

I believe the concept of this is so that they can band together to get this attention without having to go to a hospital and without having to let this chronic condition develop to the point where it is serious.

This is an effort to try to have plans of the type that have been adopted and which, I am sure, the HEW is contracting for so that they can make a contract with the doctors. It is voluntary. They do not have to do it. They can say, "Will you give me the medical attention I need, not when I am sick, but when I am well so that you can keep me well and keep me out of that high-priced hospital bed?"

I think it is a good thing. I am glad to see it included in the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator is correct.

As the Senator from Ohio has pointed out so ably, this offers the health maintenance organization an opportunity to say to people who would be eligible for medicare, "We think we can offer you something better than medicare." If the Government agrees that this may be better for the patient and if they see no possibility of abuse in it, then they would pay 95 percent of what they would pay per capita at the present time to provide this care.

The administration thinks that this is a way to provide better care.

Obviously the people who have been working in this area believe they have something better to offer.

As the Senator mentions, there are several organizations already providing this care. The State of Ohio has a very fine organization in Cleveland that provides health care of this sort.

The administration feels that this type of thing will grow as people find ways to provide more efficient and hopefully better service on a voluntary basis, and at a savings for the most part, with the intent of providing better and more services to the people who participate in this organization.

If we are in error, then a lot of good people have made the same mistake. The House of Representatives thought this was wise. We have drawn our provision even tighter than theirs.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, the distinguished manager of the bill and the Senator from Ohio have already given the reasons for the committee provision which includes possibilities for increased emphasis and utilization of outpatient care and facilities.

I wonder if under the proposal in the bill as brought to the floor there is a strict procedure for Federal approval of a program or programs.

Mr. LONG. Yes. There is provision in this bill requiring Federal approval. And the purpose, of course, is to be very careful to make sure the beneficiaries would receive high-quality care.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the pending amendment. I support the statements made by the distinguished chairman of the committee.

One of the mistakes made when medicare and medicaid were originally enacted into law was that we thereby massively increased the demand for health care but did not concurrently increase the supply of health personnel and health facilities. Because of that massive increase in demand without a concurrent increase of supply, we virtually ruptured the system.

That is one of the reasons why the costs of health care have continued to go up at a very alarming rate. There is presently a shortage of 50,000 doctors in America and a shortage of nurses that is greater than that.

We cannot, with the present financial difficulties of medical schools and health-related schools, see where the increased personnel will come from. We have to increase medical and paramedical personnel in this country. We must increase the facilities available. But we can also do much better with the present medical personnel and paramedical personnel, and we can do much better in the use of present facilities than we are doing. We must do both. We must not only increase the supply but we must also have more efficient use of present personnel and facilities. We cannot do that unless we are willing to go into prepaid and preventive medical care. The provision in this bill starts us in that direction. It is a good provision and I hope the pending amendment is rejected and that we will not require that a doctor be paid on the basis of a fee, but that payment be on a per capita basis. Then, we can move toward prepayment and preventive medicine and toward encouraging group practice on a voluntary basis.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

(Putting the question.)

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT NO. 1115

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1115 which is at the desk, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The title of section 131 of the bill is amended by striking out "TAX RATES".

SEC. 2. The amendments made by subsection (b) of section 131 of the bill shall be deleted and the following shall be inserted in lieu thereof:

"(b) Title II of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"'AUTOMATIC ADJUSTMENT OF THE CONTRIBUTION AND BENEFIT BASE

"'SEC. 230. (a) On or before August 15 of 1972 and each year thereafter, the Secretary shall determine and publish in the Federal Register the contribution and benefit base (as defined in subsection (b)) for the first calendar year following the year in which the determination is made.

"'(b) The contribution and benefit base for a particular calendar year shall be whichever of the following is the larger:

"'(1) the product of $9,000 and the ratio of (A) the average taxable wages of all persons for whom taxable wages were reported to the Secretary for the first calendar quarter of the calendar year immediately preceding the year in which a determination under subsection (a) is made for such particular calendar year to (B) the average of the taxable wages of all persons for whom taxable wages were reported to the Secretary for the first calendar quarter of 1970, with such product, if not a multiple of $300, being rounded to the next higher multiple of $300 where such product is a multiple of $150 but not of $300 and to the nearest multiple of $300 in any other case; or

"'(2) the contribution and benefit base for the calendar year preceding such particular calendar year.

"'(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), the contribution and benefit base provided by such subsections with respect to a particular calendar year shall not be effective as provided in such subsections—

"'(1) if in the calendar year in which the determination (required by subsection (a)) is made a law has been enacted which provides for (i) a general increase in the primary insurance amounts of all individuals entitled to benefits under this title, or (ii) a change in the rate of tax on wages and self-employment income under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, or (iii) an increase in the amount of earnings of individuals that may be counted for benefits under this title and that may be taxed under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, or

"'(2) unless a benefit increase, as provided in section 215(i) of such Act, is also to be effective for such year'.".

SEC. 3. Section 131 of the bill is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(d) In each year in which the Secretary determines—

"(1) under section 215(i)(2)(A) of the Social Security Act, that a cost-of-living benefit increase is required, effective for the following January, or

"(2) under subsections (a) and (b) of section 230 of such Act, the amount of the contribution and benefit base, effective for the following year, he shall, on or before August 15 of the year in which such determination is made, report to the Congress the amounts so determined. Such report shall include information which according to the actuarial estimates published in the annual report of the Board of Trustees on the preceding March 1, specifies the extent to which the long-range cost of the automatic increase in benefits is covered (or exceeded) by the contribution and benefit base that will be effective for the year in which the benefit increase is effective."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment be limited to 30 minutes, equally divided between the Senator from Louisiana and me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I call the attention of Senators to a memorandum in support of my amendment No. 1115, which has been placed on the desks of the Senators. I will briefly state the purpose of the amendment. This is a very fundamental and important amendment.

Basically the amendment would finance the automatic increases in social security benefits by increasing the taxable wage base, as the House did, to finance the automatic cost-of-living increases provided in the bill—rather than the position of the Committee on Finance which would, unless this amendment is agreed to, finance the automatic cost-of-living increases one-half by raising the taxable wage base and one-half by raising the tax rate.

This is a fundamental and important amendment because if the Senate agrees to the Senate committee and rejects the pending amendment, the automatic cost-of-living increases in social security benefits would not be financed on a progressive basis, that is, by raising the wage base upon which social security benefits are based. That would be entirely consistent with the determination to raise the benefits at all, because wages generally would have gone up by reason of inflation. Otherwise, the Secretary would have to make all sorts of detailed calculations and finance cost-of-living increases under social security by both tax rate increases and an increase in the wage base.

The social security tax system is a regressive system and it gets tougher and tougher for wage earners to bear. That is why in committee I supported an amendment which would begin now to pay a portion of increased social security benefits out of general revenues. That amendment was not agreed to, but I think eventually it will be agreed to, and it will have to be agreed to because I think we have reached the saturation point in the social security tax rate. The burden has become too great for the working man. Feeling that way, I offered an amendment which would have financed a portion of the benefit increase in the bill by raising the wage base to $12,000. Presently the taxable wage base under the committee bill would stop at $9,000. Anyone making more than $9,000 a year would not pay any more than those who make $9,000 a year and under.

Furthermore, the social security tax rate is a regressive rate because it is a flat rate and not based on graduated income, even up to the committee $9,000 wage base figure.

Every time we can we should try to make that tax rate more progressive and make that burden more evenly distributed on the basis of ability to pay, as we envisioned generally the income tax system would do. That is what this amendment would do.

The amendment does not get into the question of whether social security would be financed from general revenues, and it does not get into the question of presently raising the taxable wage base. It does provide that when cost of living increases go into effect automatically under this bill, as they would do here under either the bill adopted by the Senate committee or by the House, that increase which comes about by reason of the fact that wages have gone up and the cost of living has gone up, would be financed by raising the taxable wage base, and then, the Committee on Finance, and the Ways and Means Committee, of the Senate and the House, could, if they wanted, recommend changes in the law with respect to tax rates, wage bases, increased benefits, or whatever. But the automatic cost of living increases, unless Congress did something to the contrary, by raising the wage base and not the rate, would take a step forward toward making the social security tax system more progressive than it is.

Mr. President, I think this provision is desperately needed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I should point out that the Senator from Oklahoma in so many words has suggested that we do away with the fundamental concept of social security and social insurance, and make it into a welfare plan. This regressive feature of social security is something that has existed ever since social security went on the books, and properly so. Regardless of income, people put in a certain amount of tax money each year, and the employer matches it each year. As a result, contributors can look forward to the day when they will receive, under insurance annuity type tables, a series of benefits.

If the Senate wants to do away with the concept of social insurance and make social security a welfare program, it might as well do away with all social security taxes and make everything subject to the general fund in the Treasury. That argument has been made through the years and it has been consistently rejected through the years.

The Committee on Finance was very much aware of this problem. We found, upon advice from the Commissioner of Social Security, that just because there is inflation which might increase the cost of living which would warrant increases in social security benefits, it did not necessarily mean that there would have to be an increase in either the wage base or the tax rates because it has been shown that during inflationary periods the general level of wages rises somewhat faster than prices and the revenue increases resulting from the increased wage rates might pay for the increased cost under the automatic increase provision.

The Finance Committee reached a compromise. The compromise reached was to let the financing come half from an increase in wage rates and half from an increase in tax rates. A good argument could be made for having the entire amount come from wage rate increases.

The committee arrived at a reasonable solution. It was a compromise solution. I would like to see it stay the way it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

This amendment does not involve anything more than trying to make the automatic cost-of-living increase reflect in its financing, as the House-passed bill would do, the inflation in wages and in other costs, simply by raising the taxable wage base, which, under the Senate version, would be $9,000, each time it was necessary to do so in order to pay for the cost-of-living increase.

The committee proposal would raise the social security tax rates even though that was unnecessary, and even though that would, as generally would be the case, overfinance the cost-of-living increases. Normally, as the Commissioner of Social Security would testify, the normal cost-of-living increase under the bill would be paid for by the same kind of increase in the taxable wage base. It would not be necessary to increase the tax rates, which are already regressive. The taxation is already too burdensome on the ordinary taxpayer. We would not have to do that. That would overfinance it by and large. All that would be necessary to pay the cost of living would be to increase the taxable wage base. That is what the House bill would do. That is what my amendment, if adopted, would do.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The Senator's amendment is based on the assumption that wages will rise twice as fast as the cost of living. That assumption might be correct, and then again it might not. If the assumption does not prove out, then there would not be adequate financing to carry these cost-of-living increases.

Furthermore, one could make the argument that under the social security program, the people who pay the least receive by far the most. For example, in the very bill we have before us, the minimum social security benefit would be $100 a month. Of course, it stands to reason that in the future we will further increase the minimum social security benefit even more than we raise the average benefit for others. So the person at the lower average income level does get a far better buy for the money than the person in the upper brackets.

The Senator's proposal provides that these increases would not mean any tax increase for anybody except those in the higher wage brackets. They would be paying all the taxes to pay for the automatic increases in benefit levels necessary because of increases in the cost of living.

It could well be argued as being a case of bearing down altogether too hard on the relatively few who are paying at the top rate for socail security for the benefit of those who are paying at the lowest rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. LONG. I yield myself 1 minute more.

It was the view of the committee that we should not permit the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, without the consent of Congress, to use the surpluses that would otherwise flow into the fund; we did not wish him to have the leverage to change his actuarial assumptions and provide additional benefits which might not be financed. It is our judgment that, under the Senator's amendment, that could happen and that is one of the things we wish to protect ourselves against.

It was the judgment of the committee that we should have an increase in the income from the social security tax to finance exactly the increased benefits that would be paid out, reserving to Congress the right, if it chose to do so, to pass additional benefits, or further liberalize the program in other ways after the committee has had the opportunity to consider the problems presented and to have the House and Senate vote on its recommendations.

Just one additional word. It was the thought of those of us on the committee that, although there would be automatic benefit increases as envisioned by the bill—and as we support it in our bill—we do not feel these should be all the increases or all the additional benefits that will be voted in the future. In fact, it is our thought that, in all probability for the foreseeable future, we may still wish to pass a social security bill at least once every Congress to take care of the various needs that arise in addition to taking care of the cost of living, and we may wish to consider the various problems, recommendations and suggestions that can be brought to our attention by Members in both parties.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield myself 2 minutes.

First of all, let me just say again that I think the cost of living provisions adopted by the Senate Finance Committee were generally good. I think the additions the committee made with respect to keeping within its own jurisdiction the question of whether the committee would want from time to time to go further than the automatic cost-of-living increases would go are good. But I do not believe the automatic method of financing the automatic cost-of-living increases is in the spirit of progressive taxation.

I think, furthermore, as I said earlier, it should be pointed out that the Senate committee provision would require an automatic increase in tax rates, thereby overfinancing the cost-of-living increases, and overfinancing the bill, obviously, therefore unnecessarily.

There is one other aspect which should be here. My amendment would provide, on an automatic basis, what has been pretty much the ad hoc action of the Congress from time to time in raising the wage base. We started with a wage base back in 1951 of $3,600. That base has been raised from time to time, as wages have gone up and the cost of living has gone up, to $7,800, and under the present bill the taxable wage base would be raised to $9,000.

That is important not only to try to get more progressiveness in the social security tax system, which, as I said, is desperately needed, but raising the taxable wage base from time to time to reflect the rise in wages is important to keep from having a deterioration in the coverage.

As wages have gone up since the wage base was fixed at $3,600, and, as the Senate and the Congress from time to time have increased the wage base to $7,800, and now it is proposed to raise it up to $9,000, if we had kept the wage base to where it was fixed originally at $3,600, beneficiaries would not really have had the kind of coverage and benefits they ought to have had and there would have been a deterioration in the coverage and in the value of the benefits. In other words, the benefits would not really have increased to the degree they should have in order for the person receiving them to stay where they had become accustomed to, according to the cost of living and the rise in wages.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator has said at least twice that what the bill provides for is potential overfinancing. It was my clear understanding during the deliberations of the committee, coupled with the advice from Mr. Ball, the Commissioner of Social Security, that there is discretion provided in the bill for the Social Security Administrator to increase the wage base and the tax rate only so much as is necessary to finance the increased benefits, and that if we did not put that discretion in there, then there could be over-financing. So that was a bridge that we reached in the committee that Mr. Ball advised us not to cross, and the Finance Committee went along with him.

So I believe the Senator from Oklahoma has misinterpreted the committee's action on this point. I was very much concerned that we not overfinance and not overtax, and I believe the bill reads that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield myself an additional minute.

I respectfully disagree with the Senator from Iowa. I refer him to the Commissioner of Social Security. The present tax system in this bill for financing automatic cost-of-living increases from increases in the pay ratio will greatly overfinance it over the actuarial long run. The question is whether it finances the first year the exact amount necessary, and that is the problem, because over the long term, then, it will overburden and overtax the working men and women of this country, who are already paying much more than their fair share of taxation, both under the income tax system and under the social security tax rate.

The tax under social security must be made more progressive. It must keep up with the cost of living and with rising wages, and that is why the Senate and Congress, from time to time, have raised the taxable wage base. That is why, in my opinion, Mr. President, the House of Representatives was quite right in saying that the automatic cost-of-living increases should be automatically financed by raising the wage base, not by increasing the tax rate, which is already regressive and too burdensome.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield me a minute?

Mr. LONG. I yield the Senator from Iowa 1 minute.

Mr. MILLER. I still believe there is a basic difference of opinion here, and that is that the Senator from Oklahoma claims this is going to overfinance and overtax, and I repeat that the Finance Committee had the clear understanding that it would not do so. As a matter of fact, this was a point I raised in the committee, because I did not want overfinancing and overtaxing.

Mr. Ball told the committee we ought to have a provision in here which would permit a discretionary amount, and that if there was an increase in benefits, that would not necessarily mean an increase in tax rates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 1 minute has expired.

Mr. MILLER. And the Social Security Administration can compute all of that out. So I think we are clear on that point.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. HARRIS. I reserve that.

Mr. LONG. How much time remains to the opponents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Six minutes.

Mr. LONG. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I hope the committee position will be sustained and the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma rejected. The committee worked out what we considered to be a very fair method of raising taxes to provide for these future increases. The raising of taxes is never popular, but if we must have them—and we must have them here—we can only try to make them as equitable as possible.

The committee felt it would be better to put half of this prospective increase on the wage base and half of it on the rates. I think that would be much fairer for all taxpayers concerned, and I certainly hope that the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, with all due respect to him, will be rejected. If it is adopted it will create an inequity and put all the tax burden on one group of taxpayers rather than spreading it across the board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I would simply refer Senators to the social security Commissioner and the actuaries there. The facts are that if the taxable wage base is kept up to date with rising wage levels, there will be little if any need for an increase in the tax rate to cover the cost of the automatic cost-of-living increases. I believe that, therefore, the House provision is a fairer one, more equitable for the working men and women of this country, and I hope my amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in September 1969 the President sent to the Congress a message on social security. Among his recommendations for improvements in the program were an increase in social security benefits and automatic adjustment of the benefits thereafter to increases in the cost of living. I strongly support these recommendations.

H.R. 17550, now before us, is the culmination of long and careful consideration of the administration's important and far-reaching proposals. One of the most important of the provisions in the bill is the automatic adjustment of social security benefits to insure that the purchasing power of those benefits will be maintained. As the President has said, the automatic adjustment provision "will install new security in social security." It will provide peace of mind to the nearly 26 million beneficiaries on the rolls and to those who come on in the future by assuring them that the benefits on which the vast majority of beneficiaries depend for their day-to-day needs will be kept up to date with rises in the cost of living.

We have already provided for automatic adjustment in annuities for the civil service and the military, and I have been looking forward to seeing the same automatic adjustments for our social security beneficiaries. The Committee on Finance has, however, made major changes in the automatic adjustment provisions that were proposed by the President and passed by the House of Representatives. Two of these changes would, in my opinion, negate the effect of the provision.

First, the committee bill would require the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to promulgate increases in both social security tax rates and the contribution and benefit base in order to finance the automatic increases in benefits, even though such increases in social security tax rates would be unnecessary. The reason why such increases would not be necessary is that the cost of the automatic benefit increases can be met from additional income that results from rising earnings levels without increasing the tax rates, provided the contribution and benefit base is increased from time to time. In fact it is estimated that under the committee bill the social security system will be increasingly overfinanced as we move into the future. A responsible Congress could not permit a situation to continue under which the long-range surplus of the social security trust funds which develops from rising wage levels would grow larger each year and at the same time the contribution and benefit base and the tax rates would be increased by the Secretary to meet the cost of the automatic benefit increases that would occur over the years. The Congress unquestionably would act to take care of the surplus—either by stopping the increase in the contribution and benefit base or the tax rates, or both, or by increasing benefit levels over and above the increase provided under the automatic provisions, or by otherwise improving the program to use up or reduce the surplus. In fact, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare might well be promulgating a tax increase while the administration was recommending a cut in social security taxes—a ridiculous situation, as I am sure my colleagues will agree.

Second, the provision for automatic increases in the contribution and benefit base to take account of increases in wages as proposed by the administration would not delegate to the executive branch authority to levy taxes, as has been alleged. The increases in the base would be automatic, and the determination of the amount of the increase would be routine on the basis of wages credited to social security wage records. The committee bill, on the other hand, would delegate authority to levy taxes. It requires that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare determine the cost of each automatic benefit increase in order to determine what increase in the base would be needed. If that determination involved not only the short-range cost but also the long-range cost, many factors involving discretionary selection of assumptions would be required, including assumptions about long-range future mortality rates, fertility rates, the proportion of total population in employment covered by social security, the size of taxable payroll, the size of the population insured for benefits under the program, the proportion of the population that is married, the proportion of eligible people who are beneficiaries, the rate of labor force participation by women, administrative expenses, and interest rates. Under the committee provision, not only would the Secretary and his staff be making estimates involving judgment in each one of the areas mentioned, as must be done for the purpose of making cost estimates, but he would be setting the tax rates for the social security program based on these judgments. We would in effect be turning over to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare the tax-setting function of the Congress.

The provision for automatic increases in the contribution and benefit base recommended by the President and approved by the House would merely carry out automatically the policy which the Congress has been following on an ad hoc basis since 1950—that is, periodically increasing the social security contribution and benefit base so as to cover the same proportion of total payroll as had been covered earlier, when wage levels were lower. As wages have risen, the $3,600 base that became effective in 1951 has been changed by the Congress, in steps, to $7,800—more or less as it would have been under the automatic provisions.

I should mention that the base must be increased to keep up to date with rising wages not only from the standpoint of the income of the program, but to prevent a deterioration in the earnings covered by the program. For example, a job which paid $3,600 in 1950 pays around $9,000 today. If the base had not been increased over the years the benefits payable to a man in such a job would provide a much smaller proportion of wage replacement than was provided when social security benefits first became payable and there would have been a major deterioration in the protection afforded by the program.

In the past, average wages have increased about twice as fast as the consumer price index. If the base is kept up to date with rising wage levels, as in the administration's proposal, there is no need for any increase in the tax rates to cover the cost of the automatic cost-of-living increases.

I, therefore, wish to urge that amendment No. 1115, offered by Senator HARRIS, be adopted. This amendment would bring the committee bill back in line with the President's proposal for automatic adjustment of benefits and the contribution and benefit base. Under the Harris amendment, as under the administration's proposal, the contribution and benefit base would rise automatically as wages rise. In each year in which the Secretary determines that a cost-of-living benefit increase or an increase in the contribution and benefit base is to be effective for the following year, the Secretary would be required on or before August 15 of the year in which the determination is made to report to the Congress the amounts so determined. He would also indicate whether, according to the actuarial estimates published in the annual report of the board of trustees on the previous March 1, the proposed increase in the base would be sufficient, or more or less than sufficient, to cover the long-range cost of the automatic increase in the benefits. He would have no authority to promulgate any increase other than that dictated by the increase in wages.

The Harris amendment would not change the provision in the committee bill under which the automatic provisions would not take effect if in the year before the year in which the increases were to be effective a bill had been enacted that would either increase social security benefit levels or revise the schedule of social security tax rates or the contribution and benefit base. The automatic adjustment provision, then, takes nothing from the power of the Congress. It does serve as a backup to assure that social security beneficiaries will be protected from the ravages of inflation when the Congress does not act. And with the notification by the Secretary being required by August 15, the Congress would have ample time to intervene if, for example, a promulgated increase in the base was higher than necessary to cover the cost-of-living increase in the benefits, or if the Congress wished to provide a benefit increase that was higher than that provided under the automatic provision. Under such a provision there would be no delegation of function from the Congress to the executive branch.

I urge all of you to join me in supporting this amendment, an amendment that will insure effective implementation of the automatic adjustment provisions in H.R. 17550.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSS). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS). On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

So Mr. HARRIS' amendment was rejected.

Mr. PROUTY obtained the floor.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, how late will we stay tonight?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Quite late.

Could the leadership have some idea as to how many amendments are still to be offered?

Mr. President, it looks to me as though we have approximately 11 amendments still to be considered. I understand that all Senators who are offering amendments are very considerate as to the idea of a limitation of time. I would suggest that, in view of the fact that we have only 4 or 5 days left before we adjourn sine die, we get as many of these amendments out of the way tonight as possible and, hopefully, reach a point where we can consider final passage of the bill. So I would say that we will be here until 11 or 12 o'clock.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. May I suggest, with respect to time limitation, that we might even contract the time on some of these amendments?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I have made some inquiries, and it appears that the best way to do it would be to take up each one individually.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguished junior Senator from Ohio (Mr. SAXBE), I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PACKWOOD). The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PACKWOOD). Without objection, it is so ordered; and the amendment will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, insert the following new title:

"TITLE XX—ASSURED MINIMUM ANNUAL INCOME BENEFITS FOR THE AGED

"ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS

Any benefit otherwise payable to an individual under this title for any month shall not be paid if such individual is physically absent from the United States (as defined in section 2009) during all of such month, or if such individual is not, during all of such month, a resident of the United States (as so defined).

"OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

"SEC. 2007. Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of payment has been made to any individual under this title, proper adjustment or recovery shall be made in accordance with regulations of the Secretary patterned so as to conform, to the maximum extent feasible, to the provisions of section 204 (relating to overpayments and underpayments of benefits under title II).

"TAX SURCHARGE

"SEC. 2012. (a) Section 51 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to imposition of tax surcharge) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Imposition of Tax.—

"(1) In general.—In addition to the other taxes imposed by this chapter, there is hereby imposed on the income of every person a tax equal to 3 percent of such person's adjusted tax (as defined in subsection (b)) for the taxable year.

"(2) Limitation.—In case of—

"(A) a husband and wife (or surviving spouse) who file a joint return under section 6013 and whose adjusted tax for the taxable year is less than $580,

"(B) an individual who is a head of a household to whom section 1(b) applies and whose adjusted tax for the taxable year is less than $440, and

"(C) any other individual (other than an estate or trust) whose adjusted tax for the taxable year is less than $290, the tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall not be greater than an amount equal to twice the tax which would be imposed by paragraph (1) if the tax were imposed on the amount by which the adjusted tax exceeds $290, $220, or $145, respectively."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years ending after December 31, 1970. For purposes of section 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to effect of changes in rates), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall be treated as changing a rate of tax.

(1) shall be in lieu of the tables contained in paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of such section, and

(2) shall correspond in form to the tables contained in such paragraph but shall reflect the tax imposed by section 51 (as amended by subsection (a)).

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to propound a unanimous-consent request, that there be a 20-minute time limitation on the pending amendment to be equally divided between the author of the amendment and the manager of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, on June 18, 1968, I introduced S. 3654, a bill referred to the Senate Finance Committee, an early version of the Older Americans Income Assurance Act.

On March 6, 1970, I reintroduced the bill, S. 3554.

Briefly, the measure simply assures a minimum income to individuals age 65 or over of $150 per month—$200 for aged couples. Payment would be administered as part of the social security system and financed out of general revenues.

Mr. President, a 3-percent income tax surcharge is provided to raise the additional necessary revenue.

Under this proposal, more than $650 million would be gained in revenue for the States. So, in effect, this is a revenue-sharing plan as well as a guaranteed income plan for our elder citizens.

Mr. President, I think it is significant that nearly every one of our 50 States is facing a serious financial crisis. President Nixon sent us a revenue sharing proposal over a year ago. That proposal is among the unfinished business of this Congress. It is interesting to note that adoption of my Older Americans Income Assurance Act would entail a revenue gain for each State so as to help meet the financial crisis affecting all States.

Mr. President, between 6½ and 7 million people age 65 or over would receive payments under this proposal. Upon enactment an immediate result would be that over 20 percent of those now living in poverty would be moved out of poverty as a result of payments bringing their income up to a nonpoverty level.

In addition, over 2.1 million older Americans receiving old-age assistance under welfare would in effect be taken off the welfare rolls and receive greater benefits under this proposal. For those 2.1 million senior citizens, the average individual cash gain would be $76.32 per month.

Mr. President, let me point out that an explanation of this amendment with various charts and tables has been distributed and is on the desks of all Senators at the present time.

I ask unanimous consent to have them printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. PROUTY. The Older Americans Income Assurance Act will cost approximately $4½ billion a year. It is estimated that the 3 percent income tax surcharge will cover the cost of the amendment.

Mr. President, this proposal is a fair application of an income maintenance system administered by the Federal Government.

Both earned and unearned cash income received by an individual would be subtracted from $150 per month, or $1,800 per year, and the difference would be paid under the Older Americans Income Assurance Act.

Let me cite some examples:

An unmarried individual age 65 or over receives a minimum social security benefit of $64 a month. He also receives $16 a month interest on his savings in the bank. His total income is $80 a month.

Under the Older Americans Income Assurance Act he would also receive $70 a month to bring his income up to $150 a month or $1,800 a year.

Mr. President, let us examine the case of an aged couple who have a combined income of $100 a month from a private pension. That is their only income but they own their own house.

Under the Older Americans Income Assurance Act, since the couple's home would not count as income because it is a nonincome producing asset, they would be entitled to $100 a month in order to bring their annual income up to $2,400 a year.

Carrying that example one step further, suppose the couple sell their house in 1972 for $10,000. In such a situation they would be ineligible for benefits in 1972, but they could receive benefits in 1973 assuming that their income was less than $2,400 that year.

In other words, the effect of my proposal would be to guarantee every older American a reasonable level of cash income.

I think this is extremely important, Mr. President, because for older Americans the solution to poverty is not job training or more education. The solution is simply cash income.

To date we have not solved the problems of poverty for older Americans.

On December 16, the U.S. Department of Commerce released a report based on the recent census concerning consumer income. Among other things that report showed that in the past decade we have reduced the number living in poverty by nearly 15.2 million. However, Mr. President the reduction in the number of those living in poverty came entirely from those under age 65.

For those over age 65 the number living in poverty has actually increased. Over 55 percent of the single individuals trapped by poverty are over age 65. In total between 6½ and 7 million people age 65 or over have cash incomes below the poverty threshold.

The Department of Commerce used a poverty threshold which took into account increased cost of living. For single individual age 65 or over the threshold income was $1,749. For an aged couple the threshold income was $2,194.

Under my Older Americans Income Assurance Act single individuals age 65 or over would have their cash income brought up to $1,800 a year thereby removing all of them from the abject poverty category and aged couples would also be removed from poverty by bringing their income up to $2,400 a year.

On September 22, I testified before the Finance Committee urging adoption of a number of amendments. I am pleased to note that the committee saw fit to adopt my amendment calling for a $100 minimum monthly payment and a 10-percent benefit increase.

I regret that the committee did not grant the same 10-percent benefit increase to beneficiaries receiving the so-called Prouty payment. As you know, Mr. President, there are approximately 640,000 individuals, now age 75 or older, receiving special benefits as a result of my amendment to the Tax Adjustment Act of 1966. That amendment provided a special payment of $35 per month for individuals not otherwise eligible for social security and who were age 72 by 1968. More than 1.5 million individuals have received that benefit which under present law is $46 per month. The other body gave the Prouty beneficiaries the same 5-percent benefit increase given regular social sercurity recipients. Unfortunately the Finance Committee retained that 5-percent increase even though other social security recipients were given a 10-percent increase.

Since I do not want to now delay passage of this bill I shall make equal treatment for Prouty payment beneficiaries my first task in the 92d Congress.

Finally, I am pleased to see that this bill liberalized the earnings limitation on the so-called retirement test. I had hoped that the Finance Committee would have gone along with my amendment No. 698 in fixing the earned limitation at $2,400. However, the committee's action increased this to $2,000 which is a step forward. I know that several colleagues have introduced amendments identical to my amendment No. 698. I want to assure those Senators that I will give my full support to any amendment increasing the earnings limitation to $2,400 a year. After all this body has twice before passed amendments going to that figure.

Finally, I want to congratulate the committee on increasing widow's benefits from 82½ to 100 percent of the husband's benefits. This is a reform I have been proposing for nearly 10 years. Its adoption by both the House and the Senate is long overdue.

EXPLANATION OF PROUTY AMENDMENT TO ASSURE A MINIMUM CASH INCOME FOR OLDER AMERICANS

BACKGROUND

On June 18, 1968, Senator Prouty introduced S. 3654, a bill referred to the Senate Finance Committee, an early version of the Older Americans Income Assurance Act.

On March 6, 1970, Prouty re-introduced his measure (S. 3554).

PROVISIONS

The measure simply assures a minimum income to individuals age sixty-five or over of $150 per month ($200 for aged couples). Payments would be administered as part of the Social Security System and financed out of general revenues. A 3 percent income tax surcharge is included to raise the necessary additional revenue.

ADVANTAGES

More than $650 million would be gained revenue for the state. (See charts E and F).

Between 6½ and 7 million people age sixty-five or over would receive payments under the Prouty proposal.

Over 20% of those now living in poverty would be moved out of poverty as a result of payments under the Prouty Proposal.

Over 2.1 million older American receiving old age assistance under welfare would in effect be taken off the welfare rolls and receive the greater benefits under the Prouty Proposal.

Nationwide, the average individual cash gain for those now on welfare would be $76.32 per month. (See chart C).

HOW IT WORKS

Both earned and unearned cash income received by an individual would be subtracted from $150 per month, or $1,800 per year, and the difference would be paid under the Older Americans Income Assurance Act.

EXAMPLES

1. Mary Jones who is unmarried receives a minimum Social Security benefit of $64 a month. She also receives interest on her savings in the bank, $16 a month. Her total income is $80 a month.

Under the Prouty Proposal she would also receive $70 a month to bring her income up to $150 a month or $1,800 a year.

2. John Smith and his wife, Mary, have a combined income of $100 a month from a private pension. That is their only income but they own their own house.

Under the Prouty Proposal Mr. and Mrs. Smith's home would not count as income since it is a non-income producing asset, however, they would be entitled to $100 a month under the Prouty Proposal in order to bring their annual income up to $2,400 a year.

3. If Mr. and Mrs. Smith sell their house in 1972 for $10,000 they would be ineligible for benefits that year but the next year they could receive benefits assuming that their income was less than $2,400 a year.

Mr. President, I am happy, now, to yield to my distinguished colleague from Ohio (Mr. SAXBE).

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, the sharp cutting edge of inflation has hit the senior citizens of this country who are presumed to be living in their golden age. They bought protection through social security at the time they were members in the 1930's. The small amount they paid into social security from their pay checks was a large amount in those days. The payrolls of that time averaged from $15 to $75 a week. Today these people who are collecting social security, if they have no other means of support, are public charges.

This amendment attempts to live up to the promise we made to these people when social security became a part of our law in 1935. What the amendment would do would be to say to them that there is a minimum wage for older people over 65 and that they will receive $2,400 as a couple, or $1,800 as an individual.

This is a floor. If they receive money from pension funds or from other retirement programs, of course it will be stricken, because this is the floor. It will help substantially the States that are now in dire financial circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the Senator from Vermont has expired.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, how much time was there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was 10 minutes. The Senator from Louisiana has control of the time.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield us 5 minutes?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, the total amount involved is such that it would aid the States that are now in dire financial circumstances. It is for that reason that I joined in this amendment rather than offer the one that I have at the desk which I do not intend to call up, which would provide $155 a month to these people.

I feel that we have an obligation to see that those people who paid their social security get the insurance which they thought they were getting at the time social security became a law and before inflation took a great deal of it out from under them.

I admit that this is an advanced program, and one that I wish had more time for consideration.

I believe that it is an attempt to live up to our promises to these people and is a genuine attempt to relieve the States of the great financial burdens they find themselves under which, under the original concept of social security, was never contemplated.

I believe that by adjusting this program to the other benefits which they have coming in, we will in the long run help to pay off our obligations and at the same time not send that money into those hands where it is not needed.

A $2,400 payment per couple today is a bare minimum for existence. I have been in the homes of those people who are trying to live on this money. Those people thought at one time that they were secure with a small amount of savings and perhaps a home that was paid for, feeling that social security would take care of them.

They now find it slipping away day by day, month by month, and year by year until they reach the point where they are a public charge.

I think they are entitled to something better. Therefore I feel that this program as contained in this amendment is an obligation that we should try to live up to.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PACKWOOD). The Senate will be in order. Let there be order in the Chamber, so that the Senator from Ohio may be heard.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. LONG. I realize that at this late hour, even if the Senate were to approve my amendment, the House conferees would be very reluctant to consider a program of this magnitude. I have discussed this matter with my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Ohio and we feel that under the present circumstances we perhaps should withdraw the amendment. However, before we do so, we would like to have the assurances of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee that next year when this bill is reintroduced, it will be given very serious consideration by the distinguished chairman and other members of the Finance Committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, the Senator has long had a great interest in older Americans. I very much appreciate his interest in this matter.

I think his statement is correct, and that at this late hour in this Congress, there would be no hope of persuading the House to agree. I think that the committee would certainly like to consider the cost as well as some of the other features of the measure to see the extent to which we could agree to it. I do not think that we could agree to all of it. However, if the Senator would like to have hearings on the matter next year, I would be glad to accommodate him.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's willingness to give attention to the matter.

I might point out to the Senator that under this proposal the State of Louisiana would in effect receive $24,975,000 because it would not have to expend that amount under the old age assistance program. This is a revenue-sharing measure as well as a provision to guarantee income for older Americans.

I think our proposal merits careful and serious consideration. I will be glad to appear before the Finance Committee next year and hopefully persuade my colleagues on that committee to report the Older Americans Income Assurance Act.

Mr. President, with the agreement of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 1150

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1150.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 46, line 10, strike out "$166.66⅔" and insert in lieu thereof "$200".

On page 46, line 14, strike out "$166.66⅔" and insert in lieu thereof "$200".

On page 46, line 21, strike out "$166.66⅔" and insert in lieu thereof "200".

On page 121, line 21, strike out "166.66⅔" and insert in lieu thereof "200".

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, would the Senator from Illinois be willing to have a time limitation on the amendment?

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I would be very happy to have 10 minutes to the side.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation of not to exceed 20 minutes, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from Illinois and the distinguished Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I should first like to commend the Finance Committee and its able chairman as well as the distinguished ranking minority member for taking a good hard look at the problem involved in people working while they are drawing social security and having a disincentive to continue to work because of an arbitrary limitation that has been placed on them.

I commend the committee on increasing the limitation. However, I think we must be realistic and say that the limitation is still much too low.

The amendment I have proposed would increase the current annual earnings limitation from $2,000, which is provided for in the committee bill, to $2,400 and would do so immediately. The provision I had in my original amendment that I discussed with the committee and which I testified about would have increased it substantially and would at the same time have phased it out over a period of 7 years.

I recognize that the cost involved in phasing out the earnings limitation might be exorbitant, though I think that we should do it sometime. I will continue to work toward this.

I hope that the committee will do likewise.

The amendment I originally offered was partially accepted by the House of Representatives and by the Senate Finance Committee. By raising the earnings limitation to $2,000, with a $1 for $2 reduction in earnings above $2,000, and by eliminating the former $1 for $1 reduction in earnings once a person began making $2,880. the House and Senate committees moved in the right direction. I commend them for this. I feel we can and should go further, however, by raising the limitation to $2,400.

Since the social security program was originally devised to provide a floor of protection against the loss of earnings caused by a worker's retirement, death, or disability, the so-called retirement test was established to assure that a worker had, in fact, retired. Since social security was also never intended to provide much more than a modest standard of living, an individual was expected to supplement social security with individual savings or a private pension plan. A person is allowed to keep full social security benefits no matter how much he gets in dividends and interest from investments or savings; but he cannot keep all of his earnings once he makes more than $1,680.

All this is well and good, except that even if a person does as he should and invests in a private pension plan or in savings, this does not assure him an income. There is a certain amount of truth in a remark made by Thomas R. Donahue, an Assistant Secretary of Labor during the Johnson administration, who told the Senate Labor Committee:

> In all too many cases the pension promised shrinks to this: "If you remain in good health and stay with the same company until you are 65 years old, and if the company is still in business, and if your department has not been abolished, and if you haven't been laid off for too long a period, and if there's enough money in the fund, and that money has been prudently managed, you will get a pension."

One private study of pension plan revealed that less than 10 percent of 60,000 low-paid workers would ever receive a pension benefit.

What does a person do if all his savings have been eaten away by inflation and his pension plan has collapsed or otherwise failed to provide his needs? All he can do is try to supplement his income by working, yet under present law, he is penalized for doing so.

I now propose in this amendment to increase the earnings limitation immediately to $2,400. While I would like to see a total elimination of the retirement test, I think we must be realistic in recognizing that this would be extremely costly if done now. It is my understanding that an immediate elimination of the "test" would cost between $2.25 and $2.50 billion in the first year, which we all recognize we could not absorb.

The idea of removing the earnings limitation completely—which I feel has considerable merit—should be studied further by the Committee on Finance in 1971.

The cost of my amendment above the committee bill would be $280 million in the first year, and the "level-cost" would be .08 percent of the taxable payroll.

But because my amendment might also preclude the necessity for some aged persons to go on welfare, its additional cost over the committee bill would be offset to a certain extent.

A full one-third of all social security recipients live at or near the poverty level. By raising the earnings limitation to $2,400 instead of $2,000, I think we could prevent some of these people from having to go on welfare, and allow them to maintain their sense of dignity and independence—so important to all of us.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PERCY. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to support the Senator's amendment. The Senator has had enormous experience in industrial management. We have been aspiring to do this for a long time. The entire movement to longevity, we understand in geriatrics, is to keep people working. This is the greatest inducement in the world.

As the Senator has stated, the cost of his amendment would be $280 million in the first year, but the people involved will be encouraged to work which may well cancel out what it will cost strictly on an actuarial basis in social security benefits.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague. Not only will the Government get some of this money back in taxes, but the Federal Government and State and local governments will benefit by not having some of these people go on welfare, and it is much more dignified to receive increases in social security and to receive adjusted earnings, rather than have the humiliating experience of accepting welfare which, many times, is beyond the control of the recipient who thought he would have adequate income to meet his needs. I do not think this is a costly amendment. I think it is a humanitarian amendment.

I commend the committee for moving in this direction. I ask that we move a little further by raising the earnings limitation to $2,400. If a person received the maximum social security and earned the minimum amount, he would still be at the poverty level.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PERCY. I yield.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Illinois. This is a step forward that needs to be taken. I have an amendment at the desk which would provide for a complete elimination of the earnings limitation. Even though we did increase the amount to $2,000, we did accept an amendment which I put before the committee to eliminate the provision for keeping 50 cents of each dollar, which is currently limited to $2,700.

I commend the Senator from Illinois and I hope the Senate agrees to the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me briefly?

Mr. PERCY. I yield.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that John Scales, of the staff of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, who is familiar with child care matters, be permitted in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this proposal and a number of other meritorious proposals were considered by the committee. It was felt that rather than have a number of modifications of the law, each of which would cost a substantial amount, but not as much as the measure voted in committee, it would be best to vote for an across-the-board 10-percent increase, something that could benefit every social security beneficiary. In addition, we voted for the minimum increase that the Senate voted earlier this year.

These are matters that I would like to vote for as I did for a number of other popular suggestions. The only problem is they all cost a lot of money and we must choose which ones would be the best way to benefit the most people involved. All factors considered, it is the judgment of the committee that the 10-percent across-the-board increase and the $100 minimum would be more meaningful to more people than the increase in earnings base that would be permissible without any reduction in social security benefits.

I regret I cannot support the proposal. The committee went about as far as we could in this area. The committee raised the limitation to $2,000 and eliminated the $1,200 limit on the $1 for $2 reduction, so that the person loses $1 for every $2 he earns until he phases out his benefit. But he would never get to the point where he loses $1 for $1 earnings. Furthermore, the bill provides for an automatic increase in the $2,000 exemption. The committee did consider this general problem to meet the need of these people.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I recognize there is much merit to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. However, the committee was faced with the problem of how far we should go in liberalizing the social security benefits. The bill now pending before the Senate already increased the benefits for social security by around $3.25 billion more than the House bill provided. The bill did that by raising the benefits from 5 to 10 percent and, as the Senator from Louisiana pointed out, by putting in the amendment providing for a $100 minimum and raising the earnings limitation to $2,000.

There is a limitation as to how far we can go without additional financing. For that reason I hope the committee position will be sustained and that the amendment will be rejected. Perhaps it can be considered at a later time when we have more money. Right now we would have to have a substantial increase in the tax rate over and above what the bill now provides.

Mr. LONG. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. PERCY. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY). On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. GORE), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MCCARTHY), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. MCCLELLAN), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. MONTOYA), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. RUSSELL), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. TYDINGS), the Senator from Texas (Mr. YARBOROUGH), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from New York (Mr. GOODELL), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "yea."

So Mr. PERCY's amendment (No. 1150) was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

AMENDMENT NO. 1151

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1151, and I would be willing to have a 5-minute limitation on the side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I have discussed this matter with the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member, as well as the author of the amendment. He has two amendments on which I understand a 10-minute limitation on each will be perfectly acceptable, and I ask unanimous consent that that be agreed to under the usual conditions.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I having been recognized, will the Senator agree that I may follow Senator PERCY?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is perfectly all right with me.

Mr. JAVITS. I am perfectly happy to yield to him now, but I wish to follow him.

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, Mr. President——

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator from New York was recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 499, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

DISREGARDING OF FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF OTHER PERSONS IN DETERMINING ELIGIBILITY OF BLIND INDIVIDUALS FOR AID OR MEDICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 571. (a) Section 1002(a)(8) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (B); and

(2) by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and (D) shall not take into account the financial responsibility of any other natural person for such individual unless such individual is such person's spouse or such person's child who is under age 21."

(b) Section 1602(a)(14 (A) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (i); and

(2) by inserting after clause (ii) the following: "and (iii) shall not take into account the financial responsibility of any other natural person for such individual unless such individual is such person's spouse or such person's child who is under age 21,".

(c) Section 1902(a)(17)(D) of such Act is amended by striking out "or is blind or permanently and totally disabled".

(d) The amendments made by the preceding subsections of this section shall take effect on January 1, 1971.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to a time limitation of 5 minutes for each side?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. JAVITS. No, Mr. President, I wish to accommodate——

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is all right, but we have to get on, and I do not want to argue, so I withdraw the request.

Mr. JAVITS. May I suggest to the leader that I yield to the Senator from Illinois without losing my right to the floor, which I will be glad to do.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Senator from New York asks that he be recognized after the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, does this cover both amendments?

Mr. JAVITS. Yes; that is satisfactory.

Mr. PERCY. Five minutes a side on each amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I object. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senate will be in order. The pending business is the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. The Senator from New York yielded to the Senator from Illinois to offer his amendment and that amendment has been read. There was objection to the unanimous consent request. The Senator from Illinois may withdraw his amendment, but it is the pending business.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a question?

Mr. PERCY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LONG. I would like to ask if the Senator is offering his amendment that has to do with relative responsibility for blind persons, because if it does, we are willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. PERCY. Yes, that is the first amendment, and I am gratified at the indication that the committee chairman is accepting it.

RELATIVE RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. President, I would like to call up my amendment No. 1151 to H.R. 17550 which removes discriminatory provisions of the Social Security Act applying to blind and permanently and totally disabled persons.

At present, title XIX of the Social Security Act—medicaid—in determining eligibility for the extent of medical assistance to be available to individuals, states that "the financial responsibility of any individual for any applicant or recipient of assistance under the act should not be considered unless such applicant or recipient is such individual's spouse or such individual's child who is under age 21; or is blind or permanently disabled.

Titles X and XVI—grants to States for Aid to the Blind; and Grants to States for Aid to the Aged, Blind or Disabled, respectively—also have the effect of allowing States the latitude to set up "relative responsibility" regulations. In other words, blind or permanently and totally disabled persons over age 21 must, in many cases, undergo the humiliating, degrading experience of proving to the State that their parents lack the financial means, or the willingness, to meet their medical—or other—needs.

Nondisabled, needy adults are not subjected to this humiliating experience. Only the blind and otherwise disabled—of whom there are about 82,000 and 600,000, respectively, in the United States—are singled out and expected to bankrupt their parents.

In most cases, when the parents or relatives of adult blind or disabled children are able to offer assistance, they do so willingly. When the parents are not in a position to offer assistance, what is the point of allowing States to say to a blind or disabled individual: "Your parents are responsible for your needs, but since they will not provide them, we will not either." This makes no sense at all in my opinion.

When one considers the hardships caused by blindness, and other disabilities, and the courage and self-confidence necessary to overcome handicaps so as to function in a dynamic society, it seems even more unfortunate that we ask these people to face a humiliating, painful, and unnecessary experience before qualifying for assistance they might need. The sense of independence and self-respect that a blind adult can acquire by knowing he is no longer a burden to his family may make a significant impact on his level of aspiration and ability to move forward into real independence.

The ability to perform successfully and to be a contributing member of society is a necessary foundation for the self-respect of a young blind or disabled adult. As he becomes no longer a burden to his family, the improved attitudes and the more wholesome relationship between him and his parents can be expected to result in increased support and encouragement from them. We thus will have provided the conditions under which a seriously handicapped person can aspire to freedom and achievement and can move forward into real independence.

I, therefore, urge support for this amendment so that we can do away with this glaring inequity and discrimination against blind and disabled citizens within our society.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1151) of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1166

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1166.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. PERCY. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PERCY's amendment (No. 1166) is as follows:

On page 70, line 24, strike out "(D)" and insert in lieu thereof "(E)".

On page 70, insert the following between lines 23 and 24:

"(D) is the grandchild or stepgrandchild of such individual who (i) was living in such individual's household at the time application for child's insurance benefits was filed on behalf of such child, (ii) was legally adopted by such individual in an adoption decreed by a court of competent jurisdiction within the United States, and (iii) had not attained the age of 18 before he began living with such individual, or".

On page 123, after line 24, insert the following:

"BENEFITS FOR A CHILD ON EARNINGS RECORD OF A GRANDPARENT

"SEC. 134. (a) The first sentence of section 216(e) of the Social Security Act is amended by—

"(1) striking out 'and' at the end of clause (1) thereof, and

"(2) inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ', and (3) a person who is the grandchild or stepgrandchild of an individual, but only if (A) such person was living in such individual's household and receiving at least one-half of his support from such individual, at the time application for child's insurance benefits was filed on behalf of such person as the child of such individual, or at the time such individual died, and (B) such person began living in such individual's household before such person attained age 18'.

"(b) Section 202(d) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(9) A child who is a child of an individual under clause (3) of the first sentence of section 216(e) and is not a child of such individual under clause (1) or (2) of such first sentence shall be deemed to be dependent on such individual at the time specified in subparagraph (1)(C) of this subsection, unless at the time specified in clause (3) of such first sentence such child was receiving regular contributions from—

"'(A) his natural or adopting parent, or his stepparent, or

"'(B) a public or private welfare organization which had placed such child in such individual's household under a foster-care program.'

"(c) The first sentence of section 203(c) of such Act is amended—

"(1) by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu of such period '; or'; and

"(2) by adding after and below clause (4) thereof the following new clause:

"'(5) in which such individual, if a child who is entitled to child's insurance benefits on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of a person (but would not be so entitled except for application of clause (3) of the first sentence of section 216(e)), is not in the care of such person or the spouse of such person, except that the provisions of this clause shall not apply if such person has died.'

"(e) The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to monthly benefits payable under title II of the Social Security Act for months after December 1970, but only on the basis of applications filed after the date of enactment of this Act."

GRANDCHILDREN—BENEFITS FOR UNADOPTED GRANDCHILDREN

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, at this time I would like to call up my amendment No. 1166 to provide benefits for grandchildren dependent upon their grandparents. Under the present social security law, some children who are dependent on their grandparents cannot obtain benefits based on their grandparents' earnings. A grandchild must be adopted by his grandparents before he qualified for a child's social security benefits. This is most unfortunate, as there are cases in which the grandparents, for valid reasons, are either unable to or do not wish to adopt the child, yet still maintain a quasi-parental relationship.

The purpose of social security is to provide the family with a continuing source of income when the family income stops because of the death, retirement, or disability of a worker. Following this, social security benefits are paid to children whose parents have died, retired, or become disabled on the theory that children are generally dependent on their parents and suffer a loss of support when the parents' income stops. However, if that parent is a grandparent the child suffers in being denied a social security benefit. Benefits are extended to grandchildren only when they are legally adopted.

This distinction which prohibits the unadopted child living with and supported by his grandparents from receiving the same benefits he would receive if he were adopted is grossly unfair. A child dependent on his grandparents is as deserving of social security benefits as is a child who is dependent on his parents—perhaps even more deserving as grandparents very possibly would have less income. The payment of these benefits should be based on the realities of the situation.

I, therefore, urge favorable action on my amendment to permit the payment of social security benefits to the dependent grandchildren of disabled, retired, or deceased workers when it can be shown that the child is actually dependent for support upon the grandparents.

My amendment redefines the term "child" so that benefits would be provided for a grandchild if, at the time the grandparents died or became entitled to benefits, he had been living with the grandparents at least 1 full year—except in the case of death or disability of the grandparent, within the same year as the loss of support from the parents. In addition, it would have to be shown that the grandparents actually furnished at least one-half of the child's support during this time.

Adoption of this measure would correct an anomaly in the social security program. It would make actual dependency the criterion for payments to a grandchild.

Although this is not a major change when measured in terms of of the number of people affected, it is nonetheless a major change when measured by the effect it will have on the incomes of those individuals who will qualify for benefits. Moreover, the social security actuaries inform me that because only a relatively few people could be expected to qualify for benefits, adoption of the proposal would have no significant effect on the total cost of the social security program. The "level-cost" would be .01 percent of the taxable payroll. Passage of the bill would eliminate the need for taking action on about 300 private bills annually.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Senator submitted to us an amendment of which this was a part, and we agreed to part of his amendment. Apparently the Senator feels that a problem still remains.

As far as I am concerned, I am willing to take the amendment to conference, and if the conferees will accept it, we are willing to agree to it.

Mr. PERCY. I am deeply gratified at this indication by the committee chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1166) of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1117

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1117.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JAVITS' amendment (No. 1117) is as follows:

PRIVATE PENSION BENEFITS THAT DECREASE BY REASON OF SOCIAL SECURITY INCREASES

SEC. 614. (a) Section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to deduction for contributions of an employer to an employee's trust or annuity plan, etc.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) PENSION, ETC., PLANS CORRELATED WITH OLD-AGE, SURVIVORS, AND DISABILITY INSURANCE BENEFITS.—If contributions are paid by an employer to a stock bonus, pension, profit-sharing or annuity plan designed to provide benefits upon retirement, and, the amount of the benefit payment or payments to an individual who is entitled to such benefit payment or payments under the plan for any period after December 31, 1970, is reduced, in whole or in part, by reason of an increase in the amount of the monthly insurance benefits which are payable to such individual for such period under title II of the Social Security Act, then the total amount deductible under this section with respect to contributions made by the employer to the plan for the taxable year in which occurs the period described in this section shall, under regulations of the Secretary or his delegate, be reduced by an amount (which shall not be in excess of the total of the amount otherwise so deductible) equal to the net decrease in payments to all individuals under the plan by reason of such increase during such taxable year."

(b) The amendment made by this section shall apply with respect to taxable years of employers contributing to such stock bonus, pension, profit-sharing or annuity plans beginning on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. JAVITS. I wish to inform the majority leader that I would be willing to debate this amendment for, say, 20 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between the Senator from New York——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I need 20 minutes. I do not know how much time Senator LONG needs.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation of 40 minutes on the pending amendment, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from New York and the manager of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I can dispose of this amendment quite quickly.

The purpose of this amendment is to prevent private pension plans which are correlated with social security benefits, from charging the beneficiaries with the increased social security benefit which they are going to receive in this and in succeeding increases by watering down the private pension benefits which they are entitled to receive.

Last week, I had word from the Treasury Department by letter dated December 16, which I read to the Senate, that it appreciated the equity of this amendment and that under its own regulations it was going to do exactly what this amendment calls for. They end their letter, which is in the RECORD of December 22, and signed by John S. Nolan, a Deputy Assistant Secretary, with this statement:

> In light of the foregoing, I believe that the amendment you have proposed to the pending Social Security bill is unnecessary. As you may have been informed, we have submitted to the Office of Management and Budget a proposed report opposing the amendment.

Moreover, they stated in this letter that they have changed their position from the position taken on this matter on April 28, 1967, in a letter which they addressed to Senator RANDOLPH, who was then chairman of the Subcommittee on Employment and Retirement Incomes of the Senate Special Committee on the Aged.

This was the record until late last week when I read in the press that in a statement made to a newspaper reporter, they qualified their position by saying they were going to defer the application of their ruling until December 31, 1971.

We checked back with the Treasury Department and found that what appeared in the newspaper article was so, that they really had made that representation, although they had written me about a week before that my amendment was unnecessary because they were going to do this themselves.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Treasury Department letter of December 16 and the newspaper article I had referred to, be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D.C., December 16, 1970.

Hon. JACOB K. JAVITS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JAVITS: This is in reply to the request of Mr. Gordon of your office for the present position of the Treasury Department concerning the effect of increases in Social Security benefits upon benefits paid to retired employees under so-called offset plans.

Revenue Rulings 69-4 and 69-5, copies of which are attached, provide specific rules for determining whether a pension, annuity, profit-sharing or stock bonus plan is properly integrated with Social Security benefits. Section 7 of Revenue Ruling 69-4 provides that an offset plan (i.e., a plan under which an employee's retirement benefit is reduced by a stated percentage of his Social Security benefit) is properly integrated only if the rate at which the offset is computed does not exceed (1) 83⅓ percent, if the offset is computed on the basis of the benefit to which the employee would be entitled under the Social Security Act as in effect in 1968, or (2) 75 percent, if the offset is computed on the basis of the benefit to which the employee is or would upon application be entitled under the Social Security Act as in effect at the time at which the offset is first applied. Thus, increases in Social Security benefits cannot result in an increase of the amount of the Social Security offset. This represents a change from the position in former Assistant Secretary Surrey's letter of April 28, 1967, to the Honorable Jennings Randolph, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Employment and Retirement Incomes of the Senate Special Committee on Aging.

In light of the foregoing, I believe that the amendment you have proposed to the pending Social Security bill is unnecessary. As you may have been informed, we have submitted to the Office of Management and Budget a proposed report opposing the amendment.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN S. NOLAN,
Deputy Assistant Secretary.

PENSION PLAN RULES REVISED TO PROHIBIT BENEFIT REDUCTIONS

The Treasury Department has revised its rules in order to prohibit private pension plans from reducing benefits when Social Security payments go up.

The change came to light after Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) introduced an amendment to the pending Social Security bill to stop the practice.

Javits said he was troubled by complaints after last year's substantial Social Security increases that private pension plan benefits were being watered down as a result.

But Javits took to the floor yesterday to read a Treasury letter indicating the department has already barred the practice. Consequently, he is withdrawing his amendment, Javits said.

The prohibition applies strictly, however, to those workers who retire after Dec. 31, 1971, according to a Treasury source. He said it is "conceivable" that some persons already retired might find their pension benefits reduced by Social Security increases. But this practice is far less common today than formerly, he added.

The big push in corporate employee pension funds came after World War II and largely on the bargaining initiative of labor unions, notably the United Automobile Workers under the late Walter P. Reuther.

Most of these operated under a formula in which the employer made up the difference between Social Security payments and a stated sum. Thus, if a union had negotiated a $100 a month pension benefit and a retiree drew $40 a month in Social Security, the company paid him $60.

Any increase in Social Security reduced the employer's liability proportionately.

The National Association of Manufacturers and other business groups, which had fought establishment of Social Security in the mid-1930s, suddenly became its partisans when the first big improvements were voted in the early 1950s.

As late as 1967 the offset practice was still permitted by Treasury, which has limited authority to regulate private pension funds through its power to certify favorable tax treatment for qualified plans.

Javits said yesterday in his floor speech, "It was appalling to me that in these inflationary times, the result of voting Social Security increases was to deprive the retiree, by reduction of his other pension income—of the very money he needed to cope with the rising cost of living."

In a letter to Javits, John S. Nolan, deputy assistant Treasury secretary for tax policy, advised that the regulations had been revised to limit such offsets to amounts based on 1968 Social Security rates or those in effect at the time the reduction is first applied.

"Thus, increases in Social Security benefits cannot result in an increase of the amount of the Social Security offset," Nolan wrote.

Mr. JAVITS. This indicates that we cannot rely upon the Treasury Department's regulations or its interpretations of its regulations; but if we wish to act on this matter—and they, themselves, have admitted its equity—we have to act on it by legislation.

It seems to me, in all honesty and under the conditions we face, that we are in this situation: I am compelled, by the fact that we are driving through to the conclusion of this bill, to bring up this amendment even though I have not been able to get an answer in writing from the Treasury Department as to the reasons for this change in the position they previously related to me. I have had to depend upon a phone call.

I would hope very much that, under the circumstances, the chairman could see his way clear to take the amendment to conference and unravel it there. The best we have been able to get from the Treasury Department, is that they have not adequately expressed their view or that they have found something in their regulations that causes them to change their view.

There is no question about the equity involved—that, insofar as the pensioner in this type of pension plan is concerned, if an increase in social security will leave him no better off, because his private pension income will be correspondingly reduced. We give it to him with one hand, and private pension plans take it away with the other.

The Treasury Department has the ability, under the tax law, to deal with this, because they determine what is deductible for income tax purposes so far as pension contributions are concerned.

So I think that the fair thing to do would be to take this amendment to conference and unravel the situation. The Treasury said on December 16, 1970, that it is the right thing to do, that they are going to do it, and that my amendment is unnecessary. Within a week, they backtrack to reduce the force of their own letter by approximately three-quarters. That is our own estimate. That is what it results in.

I believe, therefore, that since this is a very equitable matter—as they, themselves, have recognized—we should, at long last, enact into law the substance of the Treasury Department position as originally expressed, and have our own conferees—who I am sure will feel as solicitous as I do about retirees who have both forms of coverage, both private and public, in social security—work it out in a way which would be equitable and fair, especially in view of the fact that the Treasury Department itself has conceded the main point.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LONG. I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. President, if the amendment is such that the Treasury Department was willing to agree to it, but then reneged on it after the Senator withdrew his amendment, it presents some problems. Unfortunately for those of us on the committee, we were aware of the fact that the Senator had offered the proposal and also that he had withdrawn it, and therefore our staff, being busy with other matters involving this bill, simply studied it no further.

If the Senate wishes to do so, it would be all right with the Senator from Louisiana to take the matter to conference. I am frank to tell the Senator that this may prove to be one of those complicated areas in which the clock will run out on us even in conference and where the answer may not come easily. It would be all right with the Senator from Louisiana to agree to it, but I must say that we do not understand it well enough to advise the Senate how it should vote on the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Standing on the threshold of adjournment, and the fact that the Treasury Department agreed only a week ago and now is only backtracking, it seems to me that it could be resolved, and I would be willing to run that risk.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I would not want this amendment to go to conference under any illusions that some of us think we would bring it back as written.

I recognize the points that the Senator makes, but if we accept this amendment there is a question as to whether we are changing rules for a thousand private pension plans without those companies having a chance to be heard.

Many of the private pension plans are on the basis that they will give their employees, for example, x amount, or the difference between whatever the social security is and the agreed figure.

A great deal of argument can be made for the position of the Senator from New York, but he is changing the rules after these pension plans have been approved by the Treasury Department. This could be done prospectively, but I question the wisdom of doing it retroactively.

I do not understand the confusion existing in the Treasury Department, because it would be my opinion that they would have no right under existing law to do this by regulation. It would take legislation.

I would be willing to go along with the chairman that we take it to conference; but in all fairness I would only state that in working it out, I can see problems developing here in which we may not be able to do it without coming back and giving those who have these pension plans an opportunity to be heard. With that understanding I would agree to take it to conference, but I do not want the Senator to think we are accepting this amendment and that it can be worked out that easily.

Mr. JAVITS. If the Senator will check back on my presentation of the matter first, which I did on December 1, in putting the amendment into the committee, I made it very clear that not many plans were involved. See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, December 1, 1970, at S19078. We have the hearings of the Subcommittee on Fiscal Policy of the Joint Economic Committee on that subject. So it is not a very dense problem in terms of the number of plans involved.

The other point, which is critically important, is this: Nobody has a right, in any pension plan, to figure on social security increases to the retiree.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. COOK. For the life of me, I cannot see why this should be very difficult, even in conference. I do not see how in the world a corporation can build into a pension plan the actuarial science of contemplating what social security increases will be in the future and say to an employee who pays into a pension program for 30 years, "You will receive $200 a month based on the fact that you will receive $150 in social security. Then, when your social security goes up to $170, your pension goes down to $180 a month." There is not an actuarial expert in the country that could figure that out. But now what they are doing is building into a program benefits for the corporation or the insurance company, so that at no time will we receive over x dollars between pension and social security.

Mr. JAVITS. It is nothing but a windfall proposition. The Treasury recognizes that, but first they told us it was being stopped right away and then they decided that they could not go that far.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am not prejudging the Senator's position, but I point out some of the problems that can arise. I call attention to the fact that Congress in its wisdom—and Congress is always wise—passed such a provision in the Railroad Retirement Act where this very same formula prevails. I do not know what this would do to the Railroad Retirement Act because the railroad pension is based on the premise that the employment will get x amount made up by the railroads over and beyond social security. We are locked in on that pension plan by law.

This law can be changed, but it does take legislation.

I say again that I am not prejudging this, but I would foresee that there can be problems. Congress itself recognized that principle in the Railroad Retirement Act, and I do not know what effect this would have on that plan. This proposal was not considered by the committee. I am willing to go along with the chairman and take it to conference and not prejudge it, but I do say that we may not be able to work it out. I can foresee problems which may require holding it over for a little more careful study. I would have no objection to taking it to conference with that condition in mind with the thought that we are not dumping it or prejudging it.

Mr. JAVITS. The Railroad Retirement Act is not a Government program like social security. I am dealing only with a private pension fund and not at all with the Railroad Retirement Act. It will have no effect on railroad retirement.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Except that the railroad retirement is not a Government insurance plan; the Government is only the trustee. The plan is financed in its entirety by millions of railroad workers, with the railroad paying as the employer and payments being made by the employee. The employee gets x number of dollars in the pension, of which social security is a part. That is the theory of the Railroad Retirement Act.

Mr. JAVITS. The distinguished Senator must know that it does not qualify under the terms of my amendment as a private pension plan. That is all I am arguing. I do not want to get it confused with railroad retirement to which my amendment does not apply. That is admitted, the fact that my amendment covers only private pension plans and does not affect railroad retirement at all. That is all I argue.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The precedent we establish would apply to the Railroad Retirement Act. I have heretofore argued this position from the point of view of the Railroad Retirement Act, unsuccessfully, I might say, in the committee, but I know that when we open this up we will be opening up Pandora's box, with a great many problems involving numerous private pension plans.

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator is stretching the rubber band a long way when he says it will be a precedent. I am confining this amendment to private pension plans. Private pension planners should not have the benefit of this windfall. That is all I argue.

Mr. COOK. Is it conceivable, if social security goes high enough, that an individual could pay into a private pension plan for the entire years of his employment and conceivably receive nothing out of it, if in fact this type of downward escalation were to continue to prevail?

Mr. JAVITS. Without any question, that is exactly what could happen; and that is exactly what we are trying to forestall.

Mr. President, I know that a rollcall vote could be had on this amendment, but I am sure of the good faith on the part of the chairman and the conferees as to what will happen and so I am willing to have the amendment subjected to a voice vote.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PACKWOOD). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1155

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1155 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the amendment will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, would the distinguished Senator agree to a time limitation on his amendment?

Mr. HARTKE. Yes. How much time?

Mr. LONG. Would the Senator agree to 10 minutes to a side?

Mr. HARTKE. I think 15 minutes to a side would be better.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time on the pending amendment be limited to one-half hour to be equally divided between the author of the amendment and the manager of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I rise in support of H.R. 17550. I support wholeheartedly the many much-needed improvements contained in this bill—in particular, the $100 minimum benefit and the provision calling for automatic increases in social security benefits as the cost of living goes up. The provision to adjust social security benefits automatically will make certain that retired workers, disabled workers, and their dependents and survivors will never again bear the brunt of inflation. But adjusting benefits automatically to take account of increases in the cost of living is small comfort to the people dependent on social security if benefits are inadequate to start with. The provision in the bill that would increase benefit amounts for 1971 by 10 percent is a step in the right direction—but only a step. A 10-percent increase is not enough. We must do more. We have an obligation to make benefit amounts provide true economic security for all beneficiaries.

I, therefore, propose that we revise the bill so as to increase social security cash benefits, not by 10 percent, but by 20 percent.

The need to substantially raise the general level of social security benefits becomes very clear to anyone who looks at the benefit amounts that would be provided under the committee bill and considers the fact that most social security beneficiaries have very little in the way of continuing income other than their social security. For almost all beneficiaries, social security is the main source of continuing income and for about half the beneficiaries social security is virtually the only source of continuing income.

Monthly benefits for retired workers now on the social security rolls who began to draw benefits at age 65 or later average $118; with the 10-percent increase, together with the other benefit improvements provided in the bill, the average would be $136—$4.50 per day. With a 20-percent benefit increase alone—taking no account of the other improvements—the average monthly benefit for retired workers be raised to $141.60. With a 20-percent benefit increase, the benefit amount payable to workers with average monthly earnings of $650, the highest possible under present law, would be increased from $250.70 to $300.90. For a survivor family consisting of a widow and two or more children getting benefits on the basis of $650 of average monthly earnings, total monthly benefits of $526.60 would be payable instead of the $434.40 payable under present law.

With the 10-percent increase and the $100 minimum recommended by the committee, 1.2 million aged beneficiaries would be moved out of poverty. With the 20-percent increase and $100 minimum that I am recommending, this number would increase to 1.6 million. Thus the increase in benefits provided by my amendment will increase the number of people lifted above the poverty level of 400,000. Surely a 20-percent benefit increase is the least we can do.

Frankly, we can do this, and the record shows that I at least am one Senator who pointed this out in 1967 when we made such a gross error as to overcharge the people $500 million on an annual level sufficient to provide for a 15-percent increase the next year without an additional penny to pay for that.

And we can do it without any additional financing in the next several years beyond what the bill now provides. All too often in the past when the Congress has made benefit improvements it has also increased the near-term social security tax rates in order to finance those benefit improvements. In my judgment it is preferable to increase the tax rates 10 or 15 years from now rather than to increase the near-term rates. Because the near-term rates have been increased by congressional action, the assets of the social security cash benefit trust funds now amount to $38 billion and under present law, the assets will increase by more than $7 billion in 1972 and by more than $12 billion in 1973. Even under the financing provided under the committee bill, the size of the funds would increase substantially in future years. I do not believe that there should continue to be unnecessary, large-scale growth in the size of these funds. In fact, I consider it imperative that we discontinue this practice of building up large trust funds. We are taking money from the working poor through a regressive tax that is not needed for benefit payments. This money is then loaned to the Federal Government to finance its general operations at extremely low interest rates. The Government should find other ways to meet its general expenses than to force those who can afford it the least to contribute through a regressive social security tax to meet the cost of operating the Government. Unlike an increase in the contribution and benefit base, which increases social security contributions only for high earners, an increase in contribution rates imposes an additional tax burden on the poor as well as on those better off. The imposition of taxes which serve only to increase the size of trust funds is unfair and unjust and unnecessary.

I am pleased that the Committee on Finance has seen fit to use part of the trust fund assets to pay the cost of the benefit improvements the Committee has recommended. I think we can and should use these assets to finance the additional increase I am recommending.

If we are honest, we will admit that we do not need all the money we have in the trust funds now. The money in the trust funds can be used to pay the cost in the next few years of the additional benefits I am recommending. Rising wages over the years should bring enough money into the social security system in later years to finance the cost of the additional benefits payable then.

Of course, I am basing my conviction that no additional financing is needed for a 20-percent-benefit increase instead of a 10-percent increase on the assumption that wages will continue to rise in the future as they have in the past. I think it is only realistic and reasonable to assume so. It is my belief that we have seriously burdened our citizens with high social security taxes in order to build up large trust funds simply because we have used a level-wage assumption to figure social security costs expressed as a percent of payroll.

If, however, my distinguished fellow colleagues cannot be convinced to move away from this extremely conservative tradition, if they cannot be convinced that it is safe and sound to use a rising-wage assumption to figure social security costs, then general revenues should be used to finance the cost of the additional increase. I am strongly in favor of the idea of the Government's sharing in the cost of the social security program. This idea has been advanced many times before. For example, it was advanced by the Committee on Economic Security in 1935, when the social security program was being conceived. And it was again advanced both by 1938 and 1948 Advisory Councils on Social Security. A majority of foreign social security programs have provisions for Government contributions to their social insurance programs. The United States has delayed too long in financing its social security program in ways which reflect the social characteristics of the protection provided.

The Congress has already provided for general revenue financing of certain special aspects of the program. I am referring to hospital insurance for uninsured people already over age 65 in the early years of the program and to the special payments that the Congress has provided for people age 72 and over who are not eligible for regular cash benefits.

General revenue sharing of part of the cost of the social security program would make an improved program possible without increases in the social security tax burden of those who can afford it the least. The program would continue to be contributory, with benefits related to earnings and conditioned on a specific period of past work under the system. Yet, with provision for a general revenue contribution the cost of the program could be more equitably distributed.

I do not anticipate the need for a Government contribution until further improvements in the social security program are proposed in the future. But if it is the opinion of the Senate that additional financing is needed for my proposed benefit increase I strongly prefer a general revenue contribution to any other method of additional financing. I am conceding on this matter of financing because I am so strongly convinced that a 10-percent increase in benefits is totally inadequate. Because I am not willing to sacrifice a 20-percent increase on a financial point, I will modify my amendment to include provision for additional financing from general revenues.

If I can secure approval of my proposal for a 20-percent increase in no other way than to provide additional financing, and if we cannot agree to allocate general revenues for that purpose, then I suggest we raise the contribution base to $12,000.

Mr. President, may I point out that when the social security system was originally enacted, the base was $3,000, which covered 90 percent of the working force. To achieve the same percentage today, the program would not be for a limitation of $9,000 or $12,000, but $17,000.

As I have indicated, raising the base increases social security contributions only for high earners and is thus the less regressive alternative. I am told that adequate financing on the same basis we have used in the past would be forthcoming with a $12,000 base and a combined employee-employer contribution rate for cash benefits of 9.2 percent for 1971–74, 11 percent for 1975–79, and 12.5 percent for 1980 and thereafter. These rates are no higher than they would be under present law until 1975.

In conclusion, I want to repeat my conviction that this is a good bill, and one that deserves the support of all of us. With my amendment, however, it could be a truly significant bill—one that would have a substantial impact on the lives of 26 million Americans. I trust that we will not fail our social security beneficiaries when they need our help.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD letters endorsing this proposal from the American Association of Retired Persons, National Retired Teachers Association, the National Farmers Union, and the National Council of Senior Citizens, Inc.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF RETIRED PERSONS, NATIONAL RETIRED TEACHERS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D.C., December 17, 1970.

Hon. VANCE HARTKE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HARTKE: On behalf of the more than 2,500,000 members of the National Retired Teachers Association and the American Association of Retired Persons I commend you for your efforts to provide a meaningful across-the-board increase in Social Security benefits. Your Amendment to H.R. 17550 providing for a 20% increase in Social Security benefits effective January, 1971, recognizes the immediate financial needs of over 20 million older Americans.

While we welcome the action taken by the House of Representatives in the area of Social Security reform, the 5% across-the-board increase authorized by the House is far from adequate.

We were pleased to note that the Senate Finance Committee recommended in its report to the Senate that this benefit raise be increased by an additional 5%, providing for a 10% overall increase in benefit levels. However, this benefit increase would not take effect until some months after January, 1971, and with our rapidly rising cost-of-living even the 10% raise would be too little, too late.

This period of spiraling inflation, at an astounding rate of 6% to 7% annually, has a greater and more profound effect on persons living on limited fixed incomes. It is our older and retired citizens who bear the largest share of the burden during such a period of rapid inflation.

The plain truth is that nearly one-third of the more than 20 million Americans 65 years of age and older are now living at or below the poverty level. An even more shocking fact is that many of these people did not become poor until they became old. While possession of monetary resources does not necessarily guarantee happiness, the absence of such resources can prevent people, at any age level, from leading a life of dignity, happiness and usefulness.

We feel that fundamental to creating a meaningful life in old age is insuring sufficient economic resources to these millions of older retired workers who helped build this country and make it great.

Your Amendment to provide a 20% across-the-board increase in Social Security benefits, effective January, 1971, would do much to prevent elderly persons from losing this desperate race with inflation and assure them that their financial situation will, at least, remain relative to today's economy.

Sincerely yours,

CYRIL F. BRICKFIELD,
Legislative Representative.

NATIONAL FARMERS UNION,
Washington, D.C., December 17, 1970.

Hon. VANCE HARTKE,
U.S. Senator,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HARTKE: I wish to express our appreciation for your amendment to increase social security benefits by an additional ten percent above the amount approved by the Senate Finance Committee.

The National Farmers Union is strongly in favor of increased payments under social security, and we pledge our full support for your efforts to achieve this through a Senate floor amendment.

Thanks again for your important initiative.

Sincerely,

Dr. WELDON V. BARTON,
Assistant Director of Legislative Services.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF SENIOR CITIZENS, INC.,
Washington, D.C., December 16, 1970.

Hon. VANCE HARTKE,
Old Senate Office Building,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HARTKE: We are informed that you are planning to introduce from the floor of the Senate an amendment to H.R. 17550 (Social Security Amendments of 1970) which would provide an additional ten percent across-the-board increase in the cash benefits of the Social Security program.

We in the National Council of Senior Citizens are delighted that you are considering such an amendment and we urge you to go forward with your plans. In my letter of December 14 I cited again some of the well-known facts about the desperate plight of the great majority of elderly citizens in this country who depend, for the most part, on Social Security benefits for their livelihood. As I indicated then, the ten percent increase in benefits contemplated in the Finance Committee bill would not anywhere nearly meet the needs of these older people, nor, indeed, of the widows and other survivors in families whose breadwinners have died. Obviously the five percent increase—without any additional increase in the minimum benefit—as provided in the House-passed bill, would fall even shorter as would any compromise between the two figures which might emerge from conference if the Senate approved only the proposed ten percent increase.

It is our understanding also that you are developing proposals for financing these increases in benefits that would maintain the actuarial integrity of the Social Security System. We believe this is a responsible position and we support you in these efforts. We in the National Council believe strongly that the most equitable method of financing such improved benefits is to make a substantial increase in the contribution and benefit base. Financing by this method avoids placing the additional burden on the younger workers in the lower and middle-wage brackets and places it where it ought to be, on those receiving higher incomes—in short, makes the Social Security tax less regressive and more progressive. In this connection, it is interesting to recall that when the Social Security Act was first passed, the tax base of $3,000 covered the entire wage income of about 96% of all the covered workers. To keep pace with this standard, we would today have a contribution and benefit base approaching $17,000. In the light of the history of the Social Security tax base therefore, the $9,000 base contemplated both in the House-passed bill and the Senate Committee bill continue to lag far behind. Even a $12,000 limit on the taxable wages or a $15,000 one are modest compared to the coverage of wages under the provisions of the original act.

With all good wishes—

Sincerely yours,

NELSON H. CRUIKSHANK,
President.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the committee had the proposal before it. I believe the Senator outlined the cost. It would be about $3.3 million a year in excess of the $5 billion in additional social security benefits which the committee voted.

I really do not think that we can afford to go beyond this point. I believe that the tax which the Senate would have to put on the help pay for this extra benefit would be extremely unpopular.

I think that if the Senate were to agree to this amendment, the elderly people of the country would be in for a big disappointment when reading on one day that the Senate voted for a 20-percent increase in social security benefits and then reading 2 or 3 days later that in conference the Senate conferees were only able to sustain an increase of 6 or 7 percent, which is about where the cost of living has gone, and perhaps a little beyond.

Mr. President, we will have enough difficulty working out a bill with the House conferees the way it is now, since there has been some talk of the House conferees not even conferring with us on this matter. I believe it would make it much more difficult to reach an agreement and, as a practical matter, I do not think it is possible to persuade the House to go along to afford the 10-percent increase we have already voted.

I would submit at this time, along with the many other things that have been done in the bill to help the poor, that the committee has done about as much as we could afford to do at this time. I do not think Senators would care to vote the large tax increases inherent in this amendment.

Does any Senator wish me to yield to him?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I join the Senator from Louisiana in expressing the hope the Senate rejects the amendment. This could be the amendment that would sink the ship.

Congress raised social security benefits 15 percent about a year ago. The House bill provided for a 5-percent increase, and this bill as reported by the committee carries a 10-percent increase with a $100 minimum. If that amount is doubled again we could end up with no bill at all.

I hope the amendment is rejected.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I yield myself an additional 2 minutes.

I would like to point out that this same argument was made in 1967. At that time I thought we would accumulate $3 billion. I was wrong. It has been $7 billion. We will spend more money but even if we did not change the base, by 1975 we will accumulate $4,000,700,000 in the trust fund, which will take us to a $30-billion surplus in the trust fund.

If Senators have really been in the field as I have been, talking to the poor people and understanding their problems, they know that two million poor people are eligible for welfare and they do not know how to apply for welfare, and they are not getting social security. If Senators wish to eliminate welfare they should put it on a social security basis. This is about one-fifth of the poor people of America.

I agree with the Senator from Louisiana that if we are going to concede to the House before we start to fight, I imagine we will not do very well. If we put in the 20-percent increase we will be in a better position to hold something in conference than if we started at 10 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LONG. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HARTKE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1155) of the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE). On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

So the amendment (No. 1155) was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I send to the desk amendment No. 1110, as modified to conform with the new bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be read.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 418, between lines 19 and 20, insert the following:

(c) The Secretary shall pay to each State which has a plan approved under title I, X, XIV, XVI, or XIX, or part A of title IV, of the Social Security Act, for each quarter beginning after March 1971, an amount equal to the excess of—

(1) the total expenditures, under the State plan approved under such title or part, as aid or assistance with respect to Indians, Aleuts, Eskimos, or other aboriginal persons, over

(2) the amounts otherwise payable to such State under such title or part and under section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950 as the Federal share of such aid or assistance to such persons.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, this amendment would provide full Federal payments for welfare for all Indian people in all categories that under existing law are provided at 80 percent for the Navajo and Hopi in three categories. The amendment was originally offered as S. 2265, with 14 cosigners, then was revised and introduced as amendment 1110 with the cosponsorship of Senators MANSFIELD, GOLDWATER, GRAVEL, HARRIS, MCCARTHY, MONDALE, MOSS, STEVENS, YARBOROUGH, and ANDERSON.

Our amendment would extend to all States 100 percent Federal payments for expenditures by the States under public assistance programs for aid to all Indians, Aleuts, Eskimos, or other aboriginal persons. Existing law provides a special Federal payment of 80 percent for expenditures by the States in behalf of the Navajo and Hopi receiving old age assistance, aid to dependent children, or aid to the needy blind. Our amendment would provide Federal payments for these three categories and aid to the disabled and medicaid.

In April 1950, the distinguished ranking member of the Senate Finance Committee, Senator CLINTON ANDERSON, with Senators Hayden, O'Mahoney, Chavez, and McFarland succeeded in amending the Social Security Act to increase the Federal share of assistance to the Navajo and Hopi from 75 to 95 percent in some cases and from 60 percent to 92 percent in others.

Mr. President, the American Indian is a Federal responsibility.

In his major policy statement this summer, President Nixon reminded us of this fact. He said:

The special relationship between Indians and the Federal government is the result . . . of solemn obligations which have been entered into by the United States government . . . the Indians have often surrendered claims to vast tracts of land and have accepted life on government reservations. In exchange, the government has agreed to provide community services such as health, education . . . services which would presumably allow Indian communities to enjoy a standard of living comparable to that of other Americans.

The message went on to say:

Because of the high rate of unemployment and underemployment among Indians, there is probably no other group in the country that would be helped as directly and as substantially by programs such as the new Family Assistance Plan and the proposed Family Health Insurance Plan. It is estimated, for example, that more than half of all Indian families would be eligible for Family Assistance benefits and the enactment of this legislation is therefore of critical importance to the American Indian.

Probably it is true that half of all Indian families would be eligible for benefits, but my amendment, incorporating much of the administration's Family Assistance Act, repeals Public Law 474 effective January 1, 1972, and makes no substitute provision so that not even the special payments for the Navajo and the Hopi will be made as before.

It was estimated in 1966 that three-quarters of the Indian families living on reservations earn less than $3,000 annually, and while the off-reservation Indian may earn higher wages because he does not receive the free medical care and other benefits that are available to the reservation Indian, his real income is reduced accordingly. In States in whose boundaries there are large tracts of land set aside as reservations for Indian people, there is an overriding Federal responsibility because the States derive no revenue from these lands.

Deprived of that source of revenue, and realizing precious little in income taxes from a people who earn too little to pay them, the State of Montana and others with large Indian populations are simply not able to handle the burden of welfare assistance.

The Montana Department of Public Welfare has advised me that it is costing $1.1 million in the biennium to provide assistance to Indians in State-approved plans for old age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the needy blind, and medicaid, as well as aid to the disabled.

Mr. President, I ask the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to prepare a projection of the additional Federal cost if our amendment were to be adopted.

Summarized, the additional cost to the Federal Government would be $45 million annually under existing law and $70 million annually with enactment of the family assistance substitute.

Mr. President, I have one final plea.

There are many, many hopeful signs on Indian reservations and among Indian people today. In Montana there are several economic development programs that are changing life on the reservations from one of hopelessness and joblessness to one of hope and industry and employment and education.

There are motels, recreation complexes, et cetera. The Fort Peck Indians, for example, were successful in securing a contract to repair rifles. The enterprise has employed 120 people and has brought a payroll to the reservation that has in turn brought pride and stability. I am convinced that we are on the right track. I am convinced that the Senate, with approval of the Alaska Native claims bill, has prepared the way for Alaska Natives to participate fully in the benefits of economic development in that great State. In Rough Rock, Ariz., a demonstration school among the Navajo Indians has achieved national recognition.

I believe if we continued this momentum, the American Indian in a generation could so significantly improve his condition that the cost of public assistance would drop sharply.

In the meantime, public assistance is a vital support that will assure the success of the education and economic development programs which are bringing opportunity to the American Indian.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that several pertinent documents be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. They include a history of Public Law 474 prepared by the Honorable Wilbur J. Cohen, cost estimates of my amendment prepared by the Social and Rehabilitation Service of the National Center for Social Statistics, a letter from the administrator of the Montana Department of Public Welfare and another from the claims attorney for that department.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE PROVISIONS FOR NAVAJO AND HOPI INDIANS: PUBLIC LAW 474

(By Wilbur J. Cohen)

On April 19, President Truman approved Public Law 474, providing for the rehabilitation of Navajo and Hopi Indians. Section 9 of this law provides for increasing the Federal share of public assistance payments for needy Indians of these tribes who reside on reservations or on allotted or trust lands and who are recipients of old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, or aid to the blind. The new law becomes effective July 1, 1950. It provides that with respect to assistance payments for these Indians the Federal Government will pay, in addition to its regular share under titles I, IV, and X of the Social Security Act, 80 percent of the State's regular share. The maximums for individual payments specified in the Act apply to these payments.

Thus, in a payment of $20 to a needy individual, the regular State share is $5 and the Federal share is $15. For Navajo and Hopi Indians the Federal Government will pay $4 additional (80 percent of the $5 State share) or a total of $19 out of the $20 payment. The Federal share in such a payment would thus be increased from 75 percent to 95 percent. In a $50 payment the Federal share would be increased from $30 to $46, or from 60 percent to 90 percent.[1] The accompanying table illustrates the effect of section 9 on public assistance payments to Navajo and Hopi Indians.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

The first form (S. 1407) of the legislation that became Public Law 474 was introduced on March 25, 1949, by Senators O'Mahoney, Hayden, Chavez, McFarland, and Anderson. Companion bills, H.R. 3476 and H.R. 3489, were introduced in the House of Representatives.[2] S. 1407 passed the Senate on July 6, 1949, with amendments, and passed the House with some further amendments on July 14, 1949.[3] In the Conference Committee a new provision dealing with increased Federal grants to the States for public assistance to Navajo and Hopi Indians was included in section 9. The Conference Report was accepted in both the House and the Senate on October 3, and the bill was then sent to the President. The President vetoed the bill on October 17, 1949,[4] but his veto message did not contain any objection to the public assistance provisions of the bill.

The Senate deleted the provisions of the bill to which the President objected and passed a new bill, S. 2734, on October 18, the day after the veto was received. Immediate consideration of the bill in the House on October 19 was objected to by Representative Kean, a member of the House Committee on Ways and Means.[5]

With the adjournment of Congress, S. 2734 went over the second session in 1950. The House passed the bill on February 21, 1950, with several amendments, one of which changed the method of determining the Federal share of public assistance payments to the two tribes. However, this amendment was based upon an erroneous interpretation of section 9 and in effect made the entire public assistance provision inoperative.[6] The Conference Committee therefore deleted certain language from the amended section 9 and thus restored the section's effectiveness.[7] The Conference Report was adopted by the House on April 6, 1950, and by the Senate on April 10. The President signed the bill on April 19, 1950.

The basic issue as to whether Indians should be given public assistance entirely at Federal expense or on the same basis as other individuals has been the subject of lengthy debate. When the House added the provision to S. 1407 to make all Indians within the Navajo and Hopi reservations subject to the laws of the State in which they live, it became necessary to consider whether this same principle should be applied to public assistance recipients or whether it should be modified in some way. The following quotation from the Conference Committee Report describes the difference of opinion between the two houses:

The House conferees insisted upon section 9, but the Senate conferees wanted it eliminated for the reason that the extension of State laws would obligate the States to make available the benefits of the State social security laws to reservation Indians, an obligation which has not been assumed by New Mexico and Arizona for two reasons: First, they have not admitted their liability, claiming that under the enabling acts and Federal laws the Indian was an obligation of the Federal Government. Second, because of the large Indian population, the States strenuously urged their financial inability to meet this obligation.

The Conference Report also explains the justification for the "80-percent formula": Less than 20 percent of the Navajo and Hopi Indians speak the English language. The States have indicated their willingness to assume the burden of administering the social security laws on the reservations with this additional help. The Conference Committee was of the opinion that this was a fair arrangement particularly in view of the large area of tax-free land and the difficulty in the administration of the law to non-English-speaking people, sparsely settled in places where there are not adequate roads; and that it would be of particular advantage to the Indians themselves. This arrangement can and no doubt will be changed as soon as the Indians are rehabilitated. Both States assume full responsibility for nonreservation Indians at the present time.

The percentage to be paid by the States under this section, other than the cost of administration, is the same as was worked out in a conference at Sante Fe, New Mexico, between representatives of the Federal Security Agency, Bureau of Indian Affairs, the offices of the Attorney General of the States of Arizona and New Mexico, and the State Department of Welfare of the States of Arizona and New Mexico, on April 28 and 29, 1949. At this conference, it was agreed that the net cost to the State would not exceed 10 percent of the total cost incurred by the Federal and State Governments in aid to needy Indians (aged, blind, and dependent children). This is the agreement under which the States are now operating. However, it is the opinion of the Conference Committee that the Indians would be greatly benefited by the States' assuming full responsibility for the administering of this law, and it would assure a continued assistance which would not be dependent upon appropriations through the Bureau of Indian Affairs from year to year.

Before the passage of the Social Security Act, the Federal Government assumed full responsibility for needy reservation Indians, and there is strong argument that the Federal Government still has full responsibility for their care. The additional cost of the extension of social security benefits not heretofore assumed by New Mexico and Arizona is only part of the cost of the extension of State laws to the reservations. Therefore, the Conference Committee is of the opinion that the amendment which was adopted is a fair and equitable division of the expense.

The 80-percent formula embodied in Public Law 474 is based upon a formula proposed in bills S. 691 and H.R. 1921, introduced in both houses on January 27, 1949, for all Indian "wards" in any State. Testimony was given before the House Committee on Ways and Means in favor of H.R. 1921,[10] but the Committee did not report that bill out nor did it include any special provision for Indians in the social security bill, H.R. 6000, reported out by the Committee.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

On several occasions Congress has given consideration to legislation affecting Indians receiving public assistance under the Social Security Act. In 1935 when the original social security bill was being considered in the Senate, a provision for payment by the Federal Government of the full cost of Indian pensions was passed by the Senate as an amendment to the pending bill. The proposed amendment provided for a new title in the Social Security Act making payments to Indians "a pension from the United States in the sum of $30 per month."[11] This amendment was sponsored by Senator Norbeck of South Dakota. It was dropped, however, by the Conference Committee and was not included in the final law.

In a special report of the Social Security Board on proposed changes in the Social Security Act, which President Roosevelt submitted to the Congress in January 1939, the Board stated as follows:

A number of States have a considerable Indian population, some of whom are still wards of the Federal Government. The Board believes that, with regard to certain Indians for whom the Federal Government is assuming responsibility in other respects, and who are in need of old-age assistance, aid to the blind, or aid to dependent children the Federal Government should pay the entire cost. If this provision is made, the Board should be authorized to negotiate cooperative agreements with the proper State agencies so that aid to these Indians may be given in the same manner as to other persons in the State, the only difference being in the amount of the Federal contribution. The Board believes that it should also be given authority to grant funds to the Office of Indian Affairs for this purpose, if that appears more desirable in certain circumstances.[12]

The House Committee on Ways and Means, however, did not include any provision concerning Indians in the 1939 social security bill. The Senate Committee on Finance considered an amendment affecting Indians but did not report it out. On the floor of the Senate, an amendment was offered which provided that "notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the Social Security Board shall not disapprove any State plan under titles I, IV and X of this act because such plan does not apply to or include Indians."[13] This amendment passed the Senate but was deleted by the Conference Committee and was not included in the final 1939 law.

The Social Security Administration has consistently interpreted the Social Security Act to mean that a State public assistance plan could not legally be approved if that plan discriminated against any citizen of the United States on account of race. Twenty-four of the 26 States in which there are Indians residing on reservations provide public assistance under the Social Security Act to these individuals. In Arizona and New Mexico, however, questions have been raised over the years by both State agencies as to whether reservation Indians were to be included in the public assistance programs under the Social Security Act.

The immediate factors that led to the inclusion of the public assistance provisions in section 9 of Public Law 474 first made themselves felt on April 17, 1947. On that date the State Board of Public Welfare of New Mexico refused the application of a Navajo Indian for old-age assistance on the grounds that reservation Indians were not a responsibility of the State Welfare Department "just as long as they are under the complete jurisdiction of the Indian service and insofar as the expenditure of State money for their welfare is concerned." At about the same time the Arizona State Department of Public Welfare also took a position that it would not make payments to reservation Indians.

The Social Security Administration discussed the subject with the State agencies in an effort to resolve the conflict between the position they had assumed and the requirement of the Social Security Act that assistance must be available to all eligible person within the State. Discussions continued over a period of time, and the States were informed that the continued receipt of Federal funds for their public assistance programs was dependent on whether the State programs were operating in conformity with the principle that applications are to be accepted from all who apply and assistance granted to all eligible persons. During the same period the Bureau of Indian Affairs made some payments, as their funds permitted, to needy Indians in the two States.

Finally, after all efforts to bring the States into conformity with the requirements of the Social Security Act had failed, the Commissioner for Social Security, after due notice, held hearings to determine whether there was a failure by New Mexico and Arizona to operate their plans in accordance with sections 4, 404, and 1004 of the Social Security Act. A hearing on New Mexico was held on February 8, 1949, and on Arizona on February 15, 1949. Before findings or determination based upon these hearings were made, the arrangements described in the quotations from the Conference Report on S. 1407 were completed at Santa Fe, New Mexico, on April 28 and 29, 1949, and assistance was provided for reservation Indians in these two States. It was the purpose of Public Law 474 to solve, by congressional action, the problems raised in the hearings before the Social Security Commissioner.[14] As stated in the Conference Report on the bill, the Committee felt that efficient operation could be more definitely assured if the State were to administer the entire program for needy Indians rather than share the responsibility with the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

[1] The above figures and those in the table are used only as general illustrations of the amount of Federal participation. They are based on hypothetical individual payments, whereas actually, under the basic formula of the Social Security Act, the Federal percentages are not applied to individual payments but rather to the average payments of a State under each title. That part of any payment for a month in excess of $50 to an aged or blind recipient and in excess of $27 with respect to one dependent child in a home and $18 with respect to each of the other dependent children in a home is not counted in computing the averages.

COST ESTIMATE: SENATOR METCALF'S PROPOSAL

Method for estimating number of Indian recipients and additional Federal cost.

A. Number of Indian recipients.

1. Obtained the recipient rate for Indians by eligibility factor for most recent period for which such data were available (number of Indians obtained from most recent characteristics studies of OAA, AB, APTD, and AFDC recipients.

2. Compared the recipient rates for all recipients by eligibility factor for the period corresponding to study year with rate for all public assistance recipients as of December 1969.

3. Estimated rate for Indians as of December 1969 by keeping the same relationships between the recipient rates for Indians and all recipients for the earlier period and the rates for both groups for December 1969.[1]

4. The estimate for the "projected" number of recipients was obtained by increasing the "current" estimated number in 3) above by 50 percent. Adjusted figure used for AFDC and APTD.

B. Costs for maintenance assistance.

1. For the adult categories, we used the estimated U.S. State share of the average payment under HR 16311 times 12 times the estimated number of adult Indian recipients.

2. For the AFDC supplementary payment, we used estimated State share of average monthly supplementary payment for the U.S. (amount obtained from ASPE) times the number of AFDC recipients.

C. Costs for medicaid.

1. Computed a cost per case month amount by eligibility factor for the U.S. which was multiplied by the estimated number of Indian recipients.

2. Inflated amount in 1) above by 8 percent to give effect to the costs for "other" medicaid recipients, i.e., individuals age 21–64 not categorically related and other children under 21.

3. The State share was estimated at 49.2 percent (non-Federal share of total payments in fiscal year 1969) of the total payments for the money payment recipients, categorically related recipients, and other children under 21 plus the total cost for individuals age 21–64 which represented the additional Federal cost under the proposal.

[1] Numbers receiving AFDC also were estimated by applying 1.3 percent (percent Indians in 1969 study) to total child recipients, which yielded a lower figure. The lower figure was used as the "current" number and APTD number also was adjusted downward using AFDC as a model.

STATE OF MONTANA,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE,
Helena, Mont., April 29, 1970.

Hon. LEE METCALF,
Senator from Montana, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR METCALF: Because of your interest in legislation relating to special federal matching for assistance to Indians, I am bringing to your attention the fact that Section 401 of H.R. 16311 (The Family Assistance Plan) would repeal Section 9 of the Act of April 1950 (25 U.S.C. 639) providing for special federal matching for assistance to Navajo-Hopi Indians.

Your bill, S. 2265, which you introduced on May 27, 1969, would extend this special matching for all categories of federally-aided assistance to all Indian tribes in all states. The enactment of this legislation and the resulting additional federal funding would enable Montana to consider options and alternatives for program expansion that are not now available because of the limitation of funds. I am sure there would be similar impact in other states with substantial numbers of Indians.

In view of this, we would strongly urge the inclusion of some form of special assistance for "Indian" states for the programs included under H.R. 16311 as well as for Title XIX of the Social Security Act. Furthermore, pending the implementation of the provisions of H.R. 16311 on July 1, 1971, the provisions of your bill (S. 2265) should be enacted for the interim period and for permanent effect if H.R. 16311 fails of enactment.

We greatly appreciate your efforts in behalf of the public welfare programs and this department. If there is any information you will need from us, please let me know.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

THEODORE CARKULIS, Administrator.

MAHAN-STROPE,
Helena, Mont., January 15, 1969.

Hon. LEE METCALF,
U.S. Senator from Montana, Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR METCALF: The State Department of Public Welfare of the State of Montana has caused to be introduced in the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Montana during their current Legislation Session, a Joint Resolution urging that the President and Congress expand the aid now given by the Federal Government to the Navajo and Hopi Indians, under Public Law 474, 81st Congress (64 Stat. 47; 25 U.S.C. 639).

This legislation authorized eighty percent (80%) contribution by the Federal Government in addition to all other amounts prescribed, toward expenditures during the preceding quarter by the State under the State plans approved by the Social Security Act for Old Age Assistance, Aid to Dependent Children and Aid to the Needy Blind, to these two Indian Tribes.

The State Department believes that if this aid was expanded to include the Indian Tribes in Montana, and also expanded to not only include the three Welfare categories above mentioned, but all categories of Welfare, including Medical Assistance, there would be a saving of State funds of 1.1 million dollars for the two-year biennium.

We feel that the Indians in Montana deserve equal treatment with the Navajo and Hopi Indians. We feel that they are somewhat similarly situated in that Montana is a sparsely settled state and subject to severe weather conditions and the Indians often find themselevs under great hardships. If Congress finds it inadvisable to extend this aid to all Indian Tribes then we would specifically ask that it be extended to those Indian Tribes similarly situated to the Navajo and Hopi Indians, such as the Rocky Boy Reservation Indians in Montana and the other Indians on reservations in the Montana area.

Any consideration you could give to change the present law to extend this aid to the Montana Indians and to increase it to include all categories of Welfare Assistance would be sincerely appreciated.

With kindest regards.

Yours very truly,

THOMAS H. MAHAN,
Claims Attorney for the State Department of Public Welfare.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. METCALF. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. MONDALE. I was privileged to join with the Senator from Montana in cosponsoring this proposal.

Is it not a fact that many of the same counties in which Indian reservations and large Indian populations are found, are very often, from a real estate standpoint of financing, burdened in the financing of the local share of these welfare costs? Thus, in addition to everything else, without full Federal support for the welfare costs, they are burdened with constantly rising local welfare charges consisting of local shares of the welfare costs. I know that in the State of Minnesota in some cases these costs have risen to the point where there is literally a destruction of the local real estate tax structure.

Therefore, this amendment, if adopted, would go a long way toward relieving them of what is an unfair and disproportionate imposition. Is that correct?

Mr. METCALF. The Senator is correct. The fact is that in many counties a substantial amount of the land owned by Indians is in a trust status, and therefore is not taxable either for State or county purposes.

Second, if we adopt this amendment, we will have recognized that we have a Federal responsibility for the Indians, and, therefore, the State responsibility will be taken over.

Some of the discrimination among Indians—and we have discrimination all over the Western United States—will be alleviated. The second thing, of course, is that we will have Indians who are on the reservation and have low income, and have no opportunities for employment, given a chance to have a substantial welfare payment.

Mr. MONDALE. Would the Senator yield further?

Mr. METCALF. Certainly.

Mr. MONDALE. Is it not the case that a few of the Indian reservations now enjoy the 100-percent feature?

Mr. METCALF. The Navajos and the Hopis.

Mr. MONDALE. So that what the Senator's amendment would do is simply apply to all Indians similarly situated the same treatment?

Mr. METCALF. All over America.

Mr. MONDALE. I am proud to join in cosponsoring the amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. METCALF. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be a cosponsor of the amendment now offered by the distinguished Senator from Montana. He has done a great service in suggesting this amendment. I think it gets at a problem which, as has been rightly pointed out, is a tremendous problem, and one which the Senate ought to meet. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I wonder if the Senator could generally enlighten the Senate as to how many beneficiaries would be affected, as of now, if the Senator's amendment were adopted.

Mr. METCALF. I have talked about Indians. The Interior Committee's definition of an Indian is a person with one-fourth Indian blood. I do not know how many Indians in that category there are in America. In Montana there are 27,000 Indians in that category, but only about 4,000 of those 27,000 are eligible to have relief or welfare programs.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I mean, does not the Department of the Interior or Health, Education, and Welfare know at the present time how many Indians are covered? Because if the Federal Government picks up 80 percent of the cost, they must know what the numbers are.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order, please.

Mr. METCALF. The Federal Government picks up 80 percent of the cost of welfare for only the Navajos and the Hopis. The Federal Government does not pick up any of the cost of welfare for the Blackfeet, the Crows, the Papagoes, the Sioux, and all those other Indian tribes that are all over the Western United States.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I mean, historically, does the Senator know why the Federal Government picked up the costs for two tribes, and not the others?

Mr. METCALF. Because of the great ability of the distinguished Senators from New Mexico, Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. Chavez, who got this special treatment for Indians in their area.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Those two Indian tribes are in New Mexico only?

Mr. METCALF. That is right. But my amendment would not only provide that 80 percent would be given, but would provide that 100 percent of the contribution be given to all Indian tribes all over the United States, the Western United States.

Mr. RIBICOFF. But the Senator does know the number involved, or the total cost?

Mr. METCALF. What?

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator does not know the number involved, or the total cost?

Mr. METCALF. I do not know the number involved, and I have not been able to ascertain the number from either the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare or the Department of the Interior. But it is a matter of common justice that every Indian on welfare should have this contribution from the Federal Government.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. FANNIN. I think there are approximately 600,000 Indians in the United States. Is that not the figure?

Mr. METCALF. But the 600,000 Indians are not all on welfare.

Mr. FANNIN. No; I understand. But when we are talking about numbers, is it not true that what we are talking about, mostly, is the reservation Indians, as far as the Western United States is concerned?

Mr. METCALF. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. FANNIN. So we really have more tribes than the Navajo and the Hopi involved, and more than the State of New Mexico, because a large part of the Navajo Reservation is in Arizona, as well as the Hopi Reservation.

Mr. METCALF. The Navajos and the Hopis are already taken care of.

Mr. FANNIN. I understand; but among the Papagoes and all these other tribes, there are approximately 60 to 90 reservations in the State of Arizona, depending on how you count reservations, and I ask the Senator how those reservations are covered.

Mr. METCALF. The only reservations covered are the Navajo and the Hopi reservations. They get payment of their welfare costs from the Federal Government. My amendment would provide that all of the costs of welfare for all of the Indians in all of the reservations all over the United States would be paid, 100 percent.

Mr. RIBICOFF. If the Senator is correct——

Mr. FANNIN. I was just trying to help the Senator understand.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Yes. I appreciate that very much, because I think we have a basic problem. I appreciate what the Senator is trying to do, but I think we should have the facts before us. However, we do not have the facts. Between the Interior Department and HEW, we ought to have those figures. The Senator's amendment, as I understand it, covers all Indians all over the United States, regardless of whether or not they are on reservations.

Mr. METCALF. That is correct. If they are Indians and on welfare, they are going to be compensated 100 percent.

Mr. RIBICOFF. So if an Indian lived in Washington, or in the State of Connecticut, and could be so identified, then the cost to the State of Connecticut or the District of Columbia, the entire cost, would be chargeable to the Federal Government?

Mr. METCALF. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I think it is unfortunate that we do not have the figures. I am very sympathetic with what the Senator is trying to do. I would hope that if the amendment is adopted and goes to conference, by the next time around, between the departments, they could enlighten the Senator as to the number of people involved.

Mr. METCALF. I would be delighted if they could enlighten me. But it is a matter of justice that an Indian who is on welfare should be compensated by the Federal Government instead of by the State government.

Mr. RIBICOFF. But if an Indian lives in the State of Connecticut and receives welfare——

Mr. METCALF. And is on welfare.

Mr. RIBICOFF. He would be receiving welfare on the same basis as any other resident of the State of Connecticut, and the State of Connecticut would contribute its 50 percent and the Federal Government its 50 percent. What happens in the State of Montana? Do not the State of Montana, the State of Arizona, the State of Washington, and the State of Utah treat the Indians the same as they do every other person who may be indigent and on welfare in their respective States?

Mr. METCALF. Except for the Navahos and the Hopis.

Mr. FANNIN. If the Senator will yield, I am very concerned about the welfare of the Indian and would like to clarify the difference in these programs. From the standpoint of the reservation Indian, we have a different program than we have as far as the nonreservation Indian is concerned. The nonreservation Indian is treated the same as any other citizen, whereas the reservation Indian comes under a different program, administered by the BIA.

It would be very difficult to administer this program other than in the areas where they have the tribes. If we start saying an Indian in Chicago or in New York or Illinois is entitled to such treatment, how do you make that determination, or how do you find that Indian and give him that treatment?

Mr. METCALF. Many Indians, of course, from Montana are in Chicago.

Mr. FANNIN. Yes; I realize that. I am interested in this proposal and would like to find how it would work.

Mr. METCALF. Because of the unfortunate relocation program that a former Secretary of the Interior put into effect, we have reservation Indians from Montana and Arizona in Los Angeles who are on welfare. And, since we have a Federal responsibility for Indians, why should the State of California have to take care of those Indians that we have moved to Los Angeles, or the State of Illinois take care of those Indians that we have moved to Chicago, when we have a responsibility to take care of these welfare Indians, on the reservation or off the reservation?

I can remember a generation ago, in 1937, when I was in the Legislature of the State of Montana, we had the Indians coming down to us from so-called Hill 57, asking for welfare. They asked for appropriations and they asked for help. We failed to do that, and a whole generation has gone by. We have failed to take care of the welfare and we have failed to provide opportunities for these Indians. So we have the same problem over again, a generation later.

This is what I am trying to do: I am trying to say that the Federal Government should assume its responsibility for its Indian wards, and that if they are on welfare, wherever they are, we will pay the welfare.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. May I say, in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague, of which I am a cosponsor, that when he used the word "ward," I think he told the whole story. The Indians do occupy a peculiar position in American society. They are a minority group about which we have forgotten a great deal, from whom we have taken a great deal, who are the subjects of dire poverty on their reservations as well as in the large cities.

I think that this is doing no more than what is just for these people, from whom we took this country, who have received so little consideration, and who should be given a good deal more in the way of compensation than they have received up to this time. I think we can forget the sympathy and the figures and the numbers and recognize a reality and face up to it.

Mr. RIBICOFF. There is no question that what the majority leader says is true, that of all the minority groups, the Indians are lowest in the scale, whether it is poverty, social, economic condition——

Mr. METCALF. Income.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Lower than the blacks, the Mexicans, the Spanish-speaking, any group in American society that we can name. Their poverty is the direst of all and deserves consideration. I am very sympathetic. I am going to support the Senator's amendment.

I do not know what will happen to it in conference, but I would hope that the next time we have a social security bill, between the Interior Department and Health, Education, and Welfare, they would supply some information so we can address ourselves in a little more depth and a little more understanding of the nature of this problem.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As the Senators have pointed out, a problem of discrimination is involved here, and I would be willing to agree to the amendment and see whether we can work it out with the House in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1128

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1128.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 46, line 10, strike out "$166.66⅔" and insert in lieu thereof "$208.33⅓".

On page 46, line 14, strike out "$166.66⅔" and insert in lieu thereof "$208.33⅓".

On page 46, line 21, strike out "$166.66⅔" and insert in lieu thereof "$208.33⅓".

On page 121, line 21, strike out "$166.66⅔" and insert in lieu thereof "$208.33⅓".

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, this amendment is very simple. It is one that I had printed and ready to offer prior to the submission of amendment No. 1150 by Senator PERCY, which the Senate adopted by an overwhelming vote of 52 to 9. Senator PERCY's amendment proposed a work exemption of $2,400 prior to the loss of social security benefits. My amendment No. 1128 proposes an exemption of $2,500 prior to loss of benefits under the social security provisions. It means that a person could earn $8.33⅓ more per month before losing social security benefits than he would under the amendment offered by Senator PERCY.

I am sure that in view of the overwhelming vote of 52 to 9 that occurred on the Percy amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair interrupts the Senator to state that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment is not in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order. That part of the bill already has been amended.

Mr. CANNON. I was going to withdraw it, anyway, in view of the fact that the amendment had been adopted. But I did want to comment on it, because I am sorry that the time limitation on the previous amendment had not been used up, and this amendment therefore occurred at an earlier time than was intended. Otherwise, I would have proposed mine as a substitute.

However, I am sure that the Senate would not want to begrudge the recipients of social security the opportunity to earn another $100 per year before losing their social security benefits. I regret that it is not possible to give them the opportunity to earn $2,500 per year before losing the social security benefits, in view of the high cost of living and the increasing cost, due to the inflation that has been taking place in this country during the past 2 years.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARTKE). The Senator will state it.

Mr. COOK. If the Senator were to submit this amendment as an amendment to another section of the bill, other than the section which has already been amended, would the amendment then be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the amendment amends a part of the bill which has not previously been amended, then the amendment would be in order.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. I thank the Senator. I will see if I can find a spot for it.

AMENDMENT NO. 1130

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1130.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 522, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2(a)(10), 1002(a)(8), 1402(a)(8), and 1602(a) (13) and (14) of the Social Security Act, each State, in determining need for aid or assistance under a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of such Act, shall disregard (and the plan shall be deemed to require the State to disregard), in addition to any other amounts which the State is required or permitted to disregard in determining such need, any amount (or any portion thereof) paid to an individual under title II of such Act (or under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 by reason of the first proviso in section 3(e) thereof) if—

"(1) for the month preceding the first month that monthly insurance benefits payable under title II of the Social Security Act are increased by reason of the enactment of section 101 of this Act—

(A) such individual received aid or assistance under such State plan;

(B) such individual was entitled (on the basis of an application filed in or before such month) to monthly insurance benefits under section 202 or section 223 of the Social Security Act; and

(2) such amount (or portion thereof) is attributable to the increase, in monthly insurance benefits payable under title II of the Social Security Act, resulting from the enactment of section 101 of this Act.

On page 522, line 22, strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)".

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, this amendment would prohibit the States from reducing the amount of welfare payments to recipients by the amount of increase those recipients would receive as a result of the passage of the social security amendments to increase the benefits.

In the proposed act, as it now reads, is an exemption to the extent of $10 a month. However, a number of recipients would receive more than an increase of $10 a month under the social security amendments. I think it is indeed unfortunate that States in the past, in many instances, when Congress has enacted a social security increase, have reduced the amount of the welfare payments from the State by the amount that was passed as an increase under the Social Security Act.

Plainly and simply, this amendment would prohibit the States from making a corresponding reduction in the amount of welfare payments to the social security recipients as a result of the increases in the act.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, when we raise social security benefits, we correspondingly reduce the need of individuals for welfare assistance. Down through the years, some of us—I have been one offering amendments from time to time—have offered amendments to require that the States not reduce welfare payments when social security payments are increased. One thing we do hope to achieve over a period of time is, by raising the minimum payments under social security and by increasing social security benefits, that gradually we will reduce the number of people drawing public assistance. Over a period of time we hope that the relatively small number of our aged who are now required to seek public assistance will be further reduced, because our social security program is intended ultimately to eliminate that need.

The committee bill we have here has more or less split the difference. The States would have some saving against their welfare budgets in the adult categories. But at the same time, they would be required to pass along, in terms of welfare benefits, the large portion of that which has been voted by the committee for social security increases. So if a person receives a social security increase, let us say, of $15 or $20, he would be able to keep most of it, although there may be some reduction in his welfare payments.

The Senator would try to see that there would be no reduction in the welfare payments. If we are going to do that, it would result in the situation that, by raising social security payments, we would never be taking people off the welfare rolls. They would just stay there receiving the same amount of welfare, no matter how much we raised social security payments.

In that regard, I think the amendment would create an even greater problem, because we would be committed in the future to the proposition that when we voted social security increases the welfare payments people were receiving would not be reduced.

To do so would mean that even if we would provide enough social security benefits so that recipients really did not need welfare any further, we would still be paying it.

I think the Senator's amendment goes too far. The committee has gone about as far as it could towards achieving the objective the Senator has in mind and, therefore, I would hope that the amendment would not be agreed to.

However, I applaud the Senator for his interest in these people.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I believe that the increases in social security benefits being proposed by the Senate are not intended to take people off welfare. They are intended to help get people in a position to maintain a standard of living that they cannot maintain today under the present social security benefits. It is indeed, unfortunate that many people on welfare are those who are drawing a minimum of the amount of social security benefits who, unfortunately, in the past, have received some small increases and, in turn, have had that taken away by the States.

In this case, here we are providing some increases to those people. I think that they are entitled to those increases, even though they may be entitled to a subsistence amount from the welfare system of the State, because of the inadequate amount they are now receiving to maintain a standard of living and that, therefore, these people should not be penalized simply because they are drawing welfare compared to other people who are drawing social security.

I hope that the Senate will support the amendment. I am prepared to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARTKE). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT NO. 1129

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1129 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the amendment will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

CHANGE IN TAX ON NON-TURBINE-POWERED AIRCRAFT

SEC. 614. (a) Section 4491(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to tax on use of civil aircraft) is amended by striking out clause (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "(A) in the case of an aircraft (other than a turbine-engine-powered aircraft), 2 cents a pound of each pound of the maximum certificated takeoff weight in excess of 2,500 pounds, or".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on July 1, 1971.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, earlier in the year, when Congress adopted a comprehensive Airport and Airways Act, there was a provision for the licensing of aircraft which provided that there would be a registration fee of $25 per aircraft, on general aviation type aircraft, on aircraft weighing 2,500 pounds or less, and on aircraft over and above that weight there would be a poundage fee applied of 2 cents per pound.

Congress passed the act, and in implementing the provisions of the act it developed that a person who had an aircraft, for example, that weighed 2,600 pounds, would pay the initial $25 registration fee and then would pay the poundage fee on the entire 2,600 pounds, not on the excess poundage over and above 2,500 pounds weight.

All this made a very inequitable situation to the many general aviation aircraft owners throughout the country who are, indeed, having a difficult time of it today, because of the increases that were added in the aviation fuel tax to pay for the airport and airways bill. So that we hit them with the added fuel tax on the one hand and the registration fee on the other. But, in addition, we doubled the application of the registration fee for those general aviation aircraft owners who had aircraft that weighed more than 2,500 pounds.

I submit that this is clearly an inequitable situation, that it was not the intent of Congress at the time—it was certainly not my intent at the time and I served on the committee that helped to draft the bill, and I served on the conference committee. It certainly was not my intention that these aircraft owners be taxed twice on the weight of their aircraft.

Therefore, the amendment I have proposed here would say that a man would pay a $25 registration fee on an aircraft weighing less than 2,500 pounds, and would pay the poundage on the aircraft weight only on the weight in excess of 2,500 pounds, and would not be paying twice on that weight from zero up to 2,500 pounds.

I hope that the Senate will help to correct this inequity.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will my colleague from Nevada yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The category of aircraft operations for which the able Senator speaks is, of course, general aviation. In these days general aviation is not an operation using the single-engined aircraft of 20 years ago. General aviation now includes many sophisticated twin-engine planes. These newer aircraft have brought increased safety and greater comfort for passengers who are flying. It is necessary, I believe, to promote and support air taxi in the United States—services which connect with local carriers and trunk lines throughout the country. These operators, persons often with little financial strength, are giving real service to the mobility of the American people. They need the aid which is proposed in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

I remember very well working with him at the time we were active in the Federal airports and airways bill in reference to a better break for general aviation in the taxes he pays. If agreeable with him, I would like to ask that he include me as a cosponsor of his amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I am delighted to have the Senator's support as a cosponsor of my amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, would the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. We do not have any other revenue provisions on this bill that are not related to the problems of the aged or to medicare and I would, therefore, hope that the Senator might offer his amendment on some other revenue measure. For example, we have this excise tax bill which will have to be passed before we are through.

We have a number of other measures that have been brought to us in the last day or so. I have no strong objection to the Senator's amendment. However, I hope that he would not open the door to amendments that are completely nongermane to social security, public welfare, and retirement income, because to do that opens the door to Senators going to the desk and picking up bills that come over here by the dozens these days from the House. They ought to be at least considered and have the benefit of a committee recommendation.

I would hope that the Senator would be willing to offer the amendment on some other measure, such as the excise tax bill or some other bill that we will have an occasion to consider between now and the time we adjourn.

I am sure that the Senator knows the amendment is not germane to the bill. We managed, by a motion to recommit, to limit ourselves to the subject matter we are working on in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, if I withdraw the amendment and offer this to the excise tax bill, would I receive the support of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would cooperate with the Senator if he were to offer it to another bill so that we could then go with that to the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, based on that assurance, I propose to withdraw the amendment, because I for one do not want to see the social security bill get loaded down with a lot of nongermane items that might conceivably delay its passage. That is one of the reasons that I voted earlier to recommit the bill and have it reported back without some of the other provisions in it.

Mr. President, based on the statement of the Senator from Louisiana, I withdraw my amendment No. 1129, and I will offer it at the appropriate time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill is open to further amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1140

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1140.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 123, after line 24, insert the following new section:

ELECTIVE COVERAGE FOR MINISTERS AS EMPLOYEES

SEC. 134. (a) Section 210 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(p)(1) Service performed in the employ of a religious, charitable, educational, or other organization described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 which is exempt from income tax under section 501(a) of such Code, by a duly ordained, commissioned, or licensed minister of a church in the exercise of his ministry shall constitute employment under this section beginning with the first day of the calendar quarter in which coverage under section 3121(r)(3) of such Code becomes effective with respect to such service.

"(2) Service performed in the employ of an American employer as defined in subsection (e) (3), (4), (5), or (6), other than an employer specified in paragraph (1) by a duly ordained, commissioned, or licensed minister of a church in the exercise of his ministry, shall constitute employment under this subsection for any calendar quarter in which an election under such section 3121(r)(2)(A) is effective for him.".

(b) Section 210(a)(8)(A) of such Act is amended by striking out "Service" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Except as provided in subsection (p), service".

(c) Section 211(c) of such Act is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the sentence following paragraph (6) thereof the following: "or, in the case of paragraph (4), unless the service performed by a duly ordained, commissioned, or licensed minister of a church in the exercise of his ministry constitutes employment under subsection (p) of section 210".

(d) Section 3121 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

(2) The last sentence of paragraph (1) of section 1402(e) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thercof the following: "or if he has made an election under section 3121(r)".

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, what this amendment does is to provide for clergymen the right either to be considered self-employed or to be considered as employed by a church or vestry in which case, they would be required to contribute a smaller amount than if they were self-employed, but that amount would be matched by the employer. This would mean that the clergymen would not be faced with the problem they are faced with today where they do not receive the same benefits at the end of their service as they would if they had been considered as normal employees.

The amendment is not mandatory in force, but is optional. I think that in general it justifies some support.

I am very conscious of the fact that the chairman has pointed out to me that this was not introduced in time to secure hearings. I would hope that if I do withdraw the amendment now that he would be kind enough to let me have a hearing at the first opportunity.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the problem of social security protection for clergymen has been very difficult to deal with because of the different problems facing different religious groups. We tried to work out the best compromise between the various religious groups we could in previous legislation. We thought that we had, to about the greatest extent practicable, resolved these conflicts and different points of view consistent with the actuarial problems presented by the administration. It would seem to me that it would be appropriate to raise this matter next year in connection with the social security bill that the House intends to send to us.

I hope that the Senator will raise the question at that time and that we could have hearings so that those who might oppose the amendment could be heard as well as those who favor it.

I do welcome the opportunity to look at the matter and see if we can work it out in a fashion that would be agreeable to all.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I thank the junior Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 1116

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguished Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) I call up amendment No. 1116 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read as follows:

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION OFFSET FOR DISABILITY INSURANCE BENEFICIARIES

SEC. 134. (a) Section 224(a)(5) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "80 per centum of".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to monthly benefits under title II of the Social Security Act for months after December 1970.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to consider a time limitation on the amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. I would be willing to have a 10-minute limitation to the side.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I suggest 15 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation of 25 minutes, with 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma and 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

COMBINED WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AND SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY PAYMENTS MUST BE RAISED TO 100 PERCENT TO AVOID FAMILY HARDSHIPS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I cosponsor the amendment of the able Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS).

Earlier this year I introduced legislation—S. 1781—to amend title II of the Social Security Act to eliminate completely the reduction of disability insurance benefits. Under present law, the "offset" reduction is required for an individual who qualifies for both workmen's compensation and social security benefits. The disabled worker and family breadwinner finds that the social security benefits payable to him and his family are reduced by the amount, if any, that the total monthly benefits payable under the two programs exceed 80 percent of his average current earnings before he was disabled. This provision has created injustice among those several thousand disabled workers who know that the social security insurance they have contributed to over the years has been cut, because of receipt of workmen's compensation benefits to which they are entitled. There are innumerable individual hardships created by this arbitrary law.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a memorandum which I was privileged to present to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and the members of that committee in connection with my prior legislative effort to amend title II of the Social Security Act.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM

To: Members of the Senate Finance Committee.

From: Senator Randolph.

Subject: S. 1781, "a bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to eliminate the reduction in disability insurance benefits which is presently required in the case of an individual receiving workmen's compensation benefits.

S. 1781 would amend Title II of the Social Security Act by repealing Section 224 which provides for reduction in disability insurance benefits in the case of an individual who is receiving workmen's compensation.

Under present law, when a disabled worker under age 62 qualifies for both workmen's compensation periodic payments and social security disability benefits, the social security benefits payable to him and his family are reduced. The reduction is calculated on the basis that total payments under the two systems cannot exceed 80 percent of his "average current earnings" before he became disabled.

The net result is that the combined benefits equaling 80 percent of a disabled worker's average earnings are usually less than 80 percent of his level of earnings achieved at the time of disablement (average about 72 percent) even though his normal expenses continue at the pre-disablement level in addition to expenses caused by his disability not covered by workmen's compensation. The unfairness of this provision is further compounded by its application only to those persons who become eligible for disability insurance benefits after December 31, 1969. It does not apply to those who were already receiving these benefits.

An example: Father of four, age 35, disabled on the job in 1967, received a lump sum compensation award of $8,700. He paid off debts, made down payment on small home. His claim for social security disability insurance benefits was denied, but two years later on appeal, denial was reversed by district court. His social security payments were drastically reduced because workmen's compensation was pro-rated over five-year period at $151.60 a month. Thus, the disabled father's earned social security payments were cut from $262.50 a month to $110.80 a month—even though he already had spent the workmen's compensation award for debts, house payment and living expenses over prior two years before court decision. As a result, the father who previously had earned $328 monthly average before disablement had to apply for public welfare.

Another example: An unskilled worker in the oil industry suffered a work-related accident in 1966. The worker (father of three minor children) was totally disabled and workmen's compensation pays him $35 a week. Over the years, his earnings had varied, but had reached a monthly average of $291 in 1965. After application of the offset provisions, his monthly social security benefits ($106) were totally withheld. His monthly income of $151.60 (from workmen's compensation) amounts to 52 percent of his monthly earnings during the year prior to his disabling injury.

Approximately 18,900 disabled worker beneficiaries (about 1 percent of the 1.4 million disabled workers on social security rolls) were affected by the reduction provision (Sec. 224) which was added to the Social Security

Amendments of 1965. At that time, the Senate Committee on Finance report stated: "It is desirable as a matter of sound principle to prevent the payment of excessive combined benefits."

Although most persons generally would agree with that statement, its application to disabled persons and families creates severe hardship and burdens. There are many injustices and inequities in our system of laws. Very often legislative action favors certain classes of persons or areas. But it is my belief that full payment of combined benefits to the disabled workers and their families would not be challenged on this basis.

Particularly important justification for repealing Sec. 224 is the concept of the programs involved—workmen's compensation is private insurance, while social security is compulsory public insurance.

The Social Security Administration states that the total number of disabled beneficiaries (workers and dependents) whose benefits were withheld or reduced was about 61,100—out of a total of 2.5 million on the rolls. That is 2.5 percent of the total of social security beneficiaries. The higher proportion of disabled beneficiaries affected results from a requirement of the law that any necessary reduction be applied first to dependents' benefits.

S. 1781 would eliminate the economic inequities created by Sec. 224 by allowing full payment of combined benefits to a disabled worker and his family. If the change is enacted, 55,000 beneficiaries would have their social security benefits increased and 5,000 persons who presently receive no benefits would receive some benefits at once.

It is my genuine hope that S. 1781 will be included in the Social Security Act Amendments of 1970.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, we have heard testmiony in various committees—for example, the Subcommittee on Labor of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare—that seldom do disabled workers receive the full benefit of compensation awards. In Charleston, W. Va., recently, the Subcommittee on Labor heard witnesses testify that, although compensation cases nominally do not require the services of an attorney, in actual practices those appealing such cases must share their compensation awards with lawyers.

Under the social security offset provision, a worker's average current earnings for the purpose of establishing benefits are computed on the basis of: First, the average monthly earnings used for computing his social security benefits, or second, his average monthly earnings in employment or self-employment covered by social security during the 5 consecutive years of highest covered earnings after 1950, computed without regard to the limitations which specify a maximum amount of earnings creditable and taxable under social security.

Mr. President, the objective of these provisions is to avoid the payment of combined amounts of social security benefits and workmen's compensation payments that would be excessive in comparison to the beneficiary's earnings before he became disabled.

I point out that the matter of a sum of money is not the total consideration here. The man who has an injured spine or the man who has twisted limbs for all intents and purposes is totally disabled. It should not be necessary for me to impress upon Senators the financial hardship to a worker and his family when the worker's combined social security disability benefits and workmen's compensation payments amount to less than he earned at the time he became disabled.

We must recognize, however, that workmen's compensation is not solely a replacement of lost earnings but is, in part, compensation for pain and loss of function for which the disabled worker might otherwise secure recompense through legal action against his employers. The present provisions are unduly restrictive and result in severe hardships for disabled workers and their families.

A worker's total disability will usually give rise to substantial expenses in addition to the family's continuing regular expenses, particularly in health care and medical expenses. Limiting the combined benefits that are payable to 80 percent of the average current earnings has in many instances caused a significant reduction in the family's living standard. The family's long-term commitments, such as mortgages and time purchases, cannot be reduced accordingly, and in some cases, long-time plans for college educations for children evaporate.

A worker's average current earnings are calculated for purposes of the existing provision on the basis of his earnings over a protracted period, rather than his earnings just before disablement. There are documented cases in which a worker received substantial increases in wages or earnings in the year prior to his disability, and accordingly increased his standard of living. Families often suffer a sharp drop in income upon disablement of the breadwinner which is significantly below 80 percent of the worker's latest earnings.

To correct these inequities, the House committee decided that the allowable amount of combined workmen's compensation and social security disability benefits should be increased. The House amendment would raise the combined payments allowable to 100 percent of the worker's average current earnings.

This provision was deleted by the Senate Finance Committee in its consideration of the social security bill because, as I stated, members of the committee felt the combined benefits to which the disabled worker is justly entitled might be an excessive reward for his disablement, or might somehow discourage him from entering a rehabilitation program.

Mr. President, I believe there is no certain sum of money that can adequately compensate for a broken spine, twisted or missing limbs. I believe that no workingman who is a productive member of our society would trade places with his disabled brother who, along with his family, must face the future with something less than pride of achievement and promising outlook.

The human spirit, I submit, can be as sorely wounded as the human body.

I strongly support our amendment which would provide that, in a case in which workmen's compensation is payable, social security disability benefits will be reduced only by the amount by which the combined payments exceed 100 percent of the worker's average earnings before he became disabled. I remind Senators—and I emphasize this point—that such a formula will not necessarily bring a worker up to his level of earnings just prior to disability. I urge the Members of the Senate to join in assuring that disabled workers receive fair and equitable treatment under the laws governing disability payments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in this bill we have liberalized the definition of disability for welfare purposes to provide that the person is regarded as disabled if he is unable to work at gainful employment for one year because of illness or disability. In the years when we first started working on disability, I was one of those Senators seeking to provide assistance to disabled persons. I joined as a cosponsor in the amendment to insure people under social security for disability. But we have two kinds of situations that develop. We have situations where people are disabled for 1 year or a year and a half and after a while they overcome that disability and they are able to go to work, and we hope they do go to work.

If they are to receive as much money in social security plus workmen's compensation as they would receive if they went to work, where is the incentive to go to work? They would lose those benefits if they went back to work, so the incentive would be not to go to work.

The Senator pointed to a situation where the person is truly totally disabled. Let us assume the person had a back injury and is never able to work again. It can well be argued in that case we should let him have 100 percent of what he would make if he went to work. That would be a reasonable compromise between the Senate provision and the House provision because the House would do that which the Senator seeks and say the person can have 100 percent in social security and disability of what he earned prior to being disabled.

However, if the Senator's amendment prevails, we could have only the House position in conference, and even though a person would have a disability that lasted only a year or a year and a few months, the incentive would be not to go to work because that person would get as much money by not working as he would for working. In that case it would make good logic, as in the Senate provision, and as the committee sought to do, that he get only 80 percent as much in social security and disability insurance and in disability benefits under workmen's compensation as 80 percent of what his pay would be, hoping that the other 20-percent advantage would entice him to go to work.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the distinguished chairman tell me what the tax consequences are of disability benefits and workmen's compensation?

Mr. LONG. It is tax exempt; so as a practical matter, this amendment would mean, when taxes are taken into consideration, the person who is disabled would actually be better off in terms of money if we take the 100 percent amendment because he would pay no taxes on his social security disability benefits while his earnings would be taxed if he went to work.

Mr. CURTIS. What would be the situation with reference to expenses of employment, the expenses of going to and from employment, lunch away from home, and that sort of thing? Those would be expenses that would fall on the individual who was employed, would they not?

Mr. LONG. Well, presumably, it costs him money to go to work. Those are expenses a man would incur going to work so that would come out of his wages. I had not made that argument, but if that were taken into consideration, he would be worse off if he goes back to work.

If one were to take taxes into consideration and expenses in going to work, a person would be better off to continue to draw social security benefits and workmen's compensation benefits than to go to work, so if there is to be any incentive to get him back to work, the Senate will have to do at least part of what the Committee on Finance did, in trying to place the emphasis on work, hoping the person would go to work and make more and improve his ability to do a better job rather than draw the social security and disability insurance, and decline to go to work.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I think the colloquy we just heard between the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Louisiana, with all due respect, does not take into account the real situation of the man who receives benefits because he is totally disabled and is receiving what he paid for. That is the insurance he paid for. This is not some welfare program we are giving him out of the goodness of our hearts. He paid for that and he is entitled to it.

Furthermore, it leaves out the consideration that a man who has been injured on the job and has been adjudicated to be entitled to workmen's compensation because of the fact he has been injured is not better off if he gets the same amount of money. That argument does not take into account that the man has been injured. He had pain and suffering in addition to the loss of his wages. Therefore, it is not correct to say just because he gets what is coming to him, and what he has paid for under the Social Security System, and just because he is receiving what he is entitled to under the law—workmen's compensation, not only for loss of wages but pain and suffering—that he should be held to 80 percent of what he made before. That does not make him whole. He is entitled to 100 percent and that is what the House said in their bill.

Mr. President, this amendment would restore the House-passed provision relating to the reduction of social security benefits when workmen's compensation is also payable.

Under present law, social security benefits are required to be reduced when workmen's compensation is also payable and when the combined payments exceed 80 percent of average current earnings before disablement.

The House amended this provision. The House bill called for a reduction in benefits by the amount by which the combined payments under both programs exceed 100 percent of average current earnings before disability.

This amendment applies to only about 60,000 persons and would cost only about $7 million annually.

I believe a strong case can be made to restore the House language.

A convincing argument for the House provision is made in the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, wherein it is stated:

> Workmen's compensation is not solely a replacement of lost earnings but is, in part, compensation for pain and loss of function for which the disabled worker might otherwise secure recompense through legal action against his employer. It should, therefore, not be necessary to limit a worker's combined social security disability benefits and workmen's compensation payments to less than he earned before becoming disabled . . . Limiting the combined benefits that are payable to 80 percent of average current earnings has in many instances caused a significant reduction in the family's standard of living in comparison with the level attained by the worker at the time of disablement.

The argument is sometimes made that raising the ceiling for combined workmen's compensation and social security disability benefits to 100 percent of the worker's average earnings—during the 5 years of highest earnings—may in some cases result in combined benefits that are larger than the worker's earnings before his disablement.

However, we know that as a rule a worker's wage increases year by year, and over a 5-year period the earnings at the end of the 5-year period are almost always higher than the average for the 5 years.

The argument is also made that since current earnings of a worker are taxable, and social security benefits and workmen's compensation benefits are not, that a 100-percent ceiling on combined benefits could exceed the worker's predisability take-home pay and thereby reduce the incentive of the worker to attempt to become rehabilitated for gainful employment.

There is no merit in this argument. Most of the workers affected by this amendment are workers in the lower income brackets and the taxes involved are relatively small. But, more importantly, a disabled worker's motivation for vocational rehabilitation is strong and would not be influenced by a small amount of additional money that might be received by a worker by reason of not having to pay taxes.

As a matter of basic fairness, a disabled worker should be entitled to 100 percent of average earnings before social security benefits to such worker also receiving workmen's compensation would be reduced.

I yield 1 minute to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. For the purpose of a question.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It is correct that the worker has been injured and that is why he receives workmen's compensation. Is that correct?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. RANDOLPH. He was not on welfare. He was not a drag upon society. He was the breadwinner. He was the head of the family, and the injury which came to him in discharge of his honest labor brought to him a total disability which makes it impossible for him to return to his employment. Is that not correct?

Mr. HARRIS. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Certainly in this amendment we are not seeking to bring an incentive to loaf. Rather, we are asking only equity for a worker who became disabled while engaged in gainful employment.

As some Senators have stated, the combined payments for a limited number of workers will exceed the amount of money such workers were earning at the time of disability. But in most situations this will not be true because of the average earnings formula.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator is quite correct, and I say, in closing, I am very grateful that the distinguished Senator from West Virginia brought this matter so forcefully to the attention of the Senate Finance Committee. I am pleased to join with him now in bringing it to the attention of the Senate.

I urge the adoption of the amendment.

I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment has been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

So Mr. HARRIS' amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I think we should point out to the Senate just what has been done by this last rollcall vote. Congress has just made it possible for a man who is drawing social security and unemployment combined to equal 100 percent of what he would make if he were working full time, his total wages. That sounds nice; but the fact is that if he works his earnings are taxable, and the social security and the unemployment insurance are not taxable. The net effect of what we have just done here is that a man who does not work gets about 30 percent more than if he goes back on the payroll. So we would be paying him a 30-percent premium not to go back on the payroll.

Unfortunately, this is not in conference; this is now in both bills. I just cannot understand the Senate's taking this position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 1114

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, this amendment has to do with the financing of the——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator agree to a time limitation on this one?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I say in response that as far as I am concerned, on this amendment, which has to do with the financing of social security benefits, which I shall offer, and then for myself and Senators JAVITS and MCGOVERN on my amendment No. 1172, which has to do with the elimination of the present law requiring maintenance of effort by a State in regard to medicaid, and then on two amendments which I shall offer together with the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) on child care, I do not see how we could get to the two child care amendments tonight, that being a matter of such great importance that I do not see how now, at 15 minutes until 11, we could get into that, or that we could agree to a time limitation.

What I think would be a better procedure—and I would propose it to the majority leader—considering that we have moved along rather rapidly on what is a terribly complicated bill, and according to the last vote, I believe we are now down to about 66 Members of the Senate out of 100, if we might agree that these are the only four amendments remaining, we could perhaps agree to a time limitation on the first two and put all of them over until tomorrow, or, failing that, perhaps agree to a time limitation on the first two tonight, though it is awfully late, and then agree that the two amendments on child care which Senator JAVITS and I shall offer would be the only two remaining amendments before third reading and that they would come up tomorrow. But at this time we would not be in a position—and I think I speak for the distinguished Senator from New York as well as myself—to agree to a time limitation on those latter two.

I yield to the Senator from New York so that he may comment on this last point, Mr. President.

Mr. JAVITS. I think the Senate should be advised on this matter, so that it will not appear that the Senator from Oklahoma and I are failing to cooperate with the majority leader with respect to a limitation.

The fact is that here we are dealing with a new child care corporation with a $50 million initial capital and in the context of the following additional factors:

First, the corporation would be moving into a field in which we now spend somewhere around $500 million a year;

Second, we have just had the White House Conference on Children, with the objective of providing for the educational and other development of youth; and Third, we have very comprehensive bills by a number of Senators on the entire matter of child care.

The question which faces us is, Will the establishment of the child care corporation preempt or conflict with these additional factors?

Nonetheless, I have agreed with Senator HARRIS that we will go through with it and do our utmost to inform the Senate, and let the Senate exercise its will. It will require a matter of a few hours, probably, in order to really begin to deal with the subject. I hope Senators will understand that with all the good will in the world, to expedite it every way in the world, we simply cannot deal so rapidly with a subject of that size.

Senators will remember that I raised this question when the motion to recommit was made. It is in the bill; the Senator from Louisiana felt strongly that he wanted it in the bill. That is all right, however, we also have some rights as to advise the Senate to what we who have been working on it for months think ought to be done about it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator suggest a time for the two amendments which he mentioned would be amenable to such a proposal?

Mr. HARRIS. As far as I am concerned, on the first two amendments which I have listed, I would be glad to agree to a 30-minute time limitation, 15 minutes to a side. But I would prefer—it seems to me that would not hold the Senate up unduly—that they be the first order of business tomorrow, rather than go on late tonight. As I have said, there are only 66 Senators here, and I think it would be better to start on this tomorrow. I would agree to a total of an hour on both amendments, equally divided. Then we could go to the child care amendments and perhaps agree tonight that they would be the last amendments tomorrow prior to third reading.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator agree on a 30-minute limitation on the two amendments tonight? The Senator has mentioned the number 66 several times. The highest number of Senators we have had has been 69. So that indicates that the Senators are sticking around pretty closely.

I would suggest most respectfully to the Senator from Oklahoma that as long as we have gone this far, we ought to at least take up the next two amendments and then see whether we can come to an agreement on the other two for tomorrow, if not tonight.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I want to be as agreeable as possible, and I think I have been earlier today with respect to the other amendments that have been involved. Many amendments are not being offered by myself and others because of the press of time, although they are almost of equal importance to those which have been offered.

Perhaps we could make it part of one total agreement that we would finish up these two amendments tonight with 30 minutes each, the time to be equally divided—that is, a total of an hour tonight—and I would hope that we would not use all that time; then the only remaining amendments would be the two child care amendments, which could be taken up tomorrow prior to third reading. Perhaps we could make that one package and thereby shorten the work of the Senate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator agree—as I assume he will—that there be a 30-minute limitation, the time to be equally divided, under the usual procedure, for tonight, and that at the conclusion, with no time limitation interspersed on the two remaining amendments, the Senate go to third reading on the bills, and that at that time there be an hour on the bill itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, let us understand this. I do not quite get it. Could we have the unanimous-consent request repeated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding is that the unanimous-consent request is that on the two amendments tonight there be a half hour, equally divided between the proponents and the opponents; that two amendments would be offered tomorrow upon which no time limit would apply; and that there would be 1 hour after the third reading of the bill, a one-hour limit on the debate, to be equally divided.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire why no time limit would apply?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The distinguished Senator from New York indicated that he would have a great deal of explaining to do because it covers such a wide and extensive area.

Mr. SCOTT. Let us fix the time.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. In the proposed unanimous-consent request, is there also wording limiting the remaining amendments to the four about which we are talking?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes, indeed.

Mr. HOLLAND. I did not hear that statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent request is that no further amendments would be in order other than the four amendments, two to be disposed of tonight, and two to be disposed of tomorrow.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, may I understand the Senator? I feel confident that I know what he is trying to do. Can we agree that the two amendments that we are talking about for tomorrow be the amendments relating to the child care provisions in the bill?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is my understanding.

Mr. HARRIS. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. Further, can we agree that this does not bar technical amendments which must be offered on behalf of the committee?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is perfectly acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Technical amendments will be excluded.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, would the distinguished majority leader amend his unanimous consent request to include one amendment which has been printed, which I have offered?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator agree to a time limitation?

Mr. MATHIAS. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How much?

Mr. MATHIAS. Half an hour.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And a half hour on the amendment to be offered by the distinguished Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS).

Mr. MATHIAS. This is the amendment which involves the State taxation of interstate commerce.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The time to be equally divided, under the usual procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement would also include one amendment to be offered by the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), a time limitation of one-half hour, 15 minutes to each side.

Mr. HARRIS. Reserving the right to object, would that amendment come up tonight?

Mr. MANSFIELD. We hope so.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, further reserving the right to object, can we have the two amendments on which there is no time allotted identified by number?

Mr. HARRIS. Not at the present time, but I can show them to the Senator. We are in the process of getting the exact language on one. Both relate to child care, and they will be offered jointly by the distinguished Senator from New York and myself. We can give the Senator a copy of it in just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The unanimous consent agreement later prepared in statement form reads as follows:

Ordered, That, effective on Tuesday, December 29, 1970, during the further consideration of H.R. 17550, an Act to amend the Social Security Act, etc., the only amendments, except technical amendments to be offered by the manager of the bill (Mr. Long), that will be in order will be two amendments relating to child-care to be offered jointly by the Senators from Oklahoma and New York (Mr. Harris and Mr. Javits). Third reading of the bill will immediately follow disposition of any technical amendments and the two child-care amendments.

Ordered further, That on the question of the final passage of the said bill, debate shall be limited to one hour, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the majority and minority leaders, or their designees.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARTKE). The Senator will state it.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. If we take the two or three amendments tomorrow, whichever it is, with the time limitation for debate on the bill, at what hour would the final vote on the bill take place?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is difficult to say, because we do not know how much time will be consumed on the two child care amendments.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I did not understand the request of the Senator from Maryland. Is his amendment germane to the social security bill?

Mr. MATHIAS. The amendment is to add a new section dealing with limiting the State taxation of interstate commerce.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I thought the Senate had committed itself to consideration only of social security matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is now under control, under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Who yields time?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, the amendment which is presently before the Senate has to do with the financing of the social security benefits which, in effect, are now a part of the bill which will be adopted. Under the committee provision, the increased social security benefits—that is, primarily the increase of 10 percent in social security benefits and the $100 minimum and the other improved benefits in the bill—would be financed by raising the taxable wage base to $9,000 and then by making certain increases in the tax rate itself. The amendment I offer would raise the taxable wage base to $12,000 instead of the $9,000 which the committee recommends.

It would make certain adjustments in the tax rate over time, but it has this one other counter cyclical economic aspect: There is presently a tax rate increase written into the law, whether this bill is passed or not, which would go into effect on January 1, 1971, raising the tax rate by 0.4 percent. The amendment I offer would increase the taxable wage base to $12,000. It would put off for 1 year the 0.4 percent tax rate increase now in the law, and then it would make certain other adjustments in the tax rate over term.

Mr. President, I think it is important to do this for two very basic reasons. One, as I have indicated earlier, I am firmly convinced that the social security tax rate represents presently a regressive tax system. It is a flat rate. It is not graduated on the basis of income. Furthermore, it is limited in the total amount of salary upon which the tax is levied.

Under the Senate bill, that would be $9,000, and therefore the average lower and middle income wage earner is overburdened, and overtaxed, paying more than his fair share of social security taxes as, unfortunately, is also true under our present income tax system.

The wage base in 1951, as I said earlier today in connection with another amendment, was $3,600. From time to time, Congress has increased that wage base until its present level is $7,800. That $7,800, by and large, represents an adjustment for increases in wages and increases in the cost of living since the original wage base was set.

To raise the taxable wage base not only makes the social security tax system more progressive; that is, based more on the ability to pay, but also widens the coverage so that those who would receive benefits under the social security system would more nearly receive benefits on their retirement or disability which are in accordance with the wages they had received while earning wages.

Second, the amendment which I offer would have another important aspect and that is the economic effect of avoiding too immediate increase in the tax rate, deferring for 1 year the effective date of present law, raising tax rates by four-tenths of 1 percent.

Mr. President, this country is in a serious recession. There are millions of people who are needlessly out of work, who are needlessly out of work because of the mistaken and misguided fiscal and monetary policies which have consciously been made effective during this administration by its policies.

What we need to do now is to stimulate consumer demand and spur the economy of the country; otherwise, I sadly fear that unemployment which now stands at 5.8 percent is going to get worse, and we will continue with a needlessly slack economy, with jobless lines needlessly long. If on the 1st of January, at a time when we are in a recession, when the economy is down and unemployment is up, we put into effect an increase in the social security tax rate, taking out of the private economy additional millions of dollars, we will add to the recession and the slump in the economy.

What we should be doing is spurring consumer demand. What we will do, unless this amendment is enacted, will be to add to the recession and take more out of the consumers' hands and more money out of the private economy. What I propose to do is to make the social security tax system more progressive by increasing the wage base taxable up to $12,000 rather than $9,000. I would postpone the four-tenths of 1 percent tax rate increase that would otherwise go into effect under present law except for this amendment and increase the tax rate over time after that. By this amendment, there would continue to be a cash surplus in the social security accounts. There would not be a deficit in any year. And over term, as the actuaries for social security have made clear, the fund would continue to be actuarially sound.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. LONG. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. The argument advanced by the Senator from Oklahoma on his pending amendment is about the same as those advanced by him in connection with an earlier amendment, which was substantially defeated by the Senate. He keeps insisting that social security taxes are regressive.

As I said earlier, everyone knows that. It has always been that way. As long as we adhere to the concept of social insurance, it always will be that way.

Now, if the Senator from Oklahoma does not want to have regressive taxation, he does not want to have social insurance, he wants to have welfare.

We might as well throw out the whole social security tax system, legislate the benefits, and take it all out of the general fund of the Treasury; and we can make an argument for that, too.

As a matter of fact, the Senator from Iowa believes that, in connection with benefits relating to the $100 minimum, there will be hundreds of millions of dollars of unfunded liability connected with such a provision. Many of these people will receive $100 minimum even though they have only paid a fraction in taxes necessary to support that $100 minimum. So that if we do not take the money needed to pay for it out of the general fund of the Treasury, we will take it out of the hides of the workers and especially the ones I am concerned about, the lower paid workers trying to maintain their families and getting caught with social security taxes needed to underwrite this $100 minimum. That, to me, is not fair.

I think the way to handle this would be to take the money out of the general fund of the Treasury into which taxes are generally paid according to relative ability to pay.

If the Senator from Oklahoma wants to do that, I would join him in that; but that only. Because it relates to benefits that have not been funded by the social security taxes paid by the recipients. That is a unique aspect of social security which is not social insurance. It is welfare. But if we are going to adhere to the concept of social security as being social insurance, then I think we had better understand that we are going to have to pay taxes in proportion to the benefits each of us will be entitled to. This is a regressive approach, but it is the necessary approach if we are going to stick with the concept of social insurance.

People do not go out and buy insurance policies and pay different premiums according to their relative income. Relative income is beside the point. This is a regressive approach. But that is the way to pay for insurance. I think that we should be pretty chary about changing the concept of social insurance. And that is what we will be doing if the Senator from Oklahoma's amendment is adopted.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. LONG. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I too rise to express my opposition to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment would revise the financing of the committee bill by increasing the tax base—$7,800 under present law and $9,000 under the committee bill—to $12,000 a year and by revising the schedule of taxes.

Under the committee bill, employer and employee taxes are each scheduled to increase from 5.2 percent next year—this is also the rate under present law—to 5.5 percent in 1972 and rising in a number of steps until they reach 7.6 percent for 1986 and after.

Under this schedule, a person earning $9,000 or more will pay social security taxes of $495 in 1972 and $684 in 1986 and after.

Under amendment No. 1114, the tax rates under the committee bill would be reduced so that in 1972 the rate would be 5.2 percent and rising in a number of steps to 7.25 percent in 1985 and after.

Under this schedule, a person earning $12,000 or more will pay social security taxes of $624 in 1972 and $870 in 1986 and after.

The amendment fails to take into account the need to revise the proportion of social security taxes allocated to the disability insurance trust fund which arises when the tax base and schedule of tax rates is revised.

I would point out that the amendment was offered in the committee and was voted down. I think it is unfair to impose these rates on higher incomes and thus make this, as has been pointed out by the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. MILLER), a welfare bill instead of a social security bill.

I hope that the Senate will reject the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I point out in closing that this amendment postpones for an additional year the increase in the tax rate from 4.8 to 5.2 percent which is otherwise scheduled to go into effect in January 1971, under present law. Instead of the increase in the wage base from $7,800 to $9,000, the amendment would increase the wage base to $12,000.

The amendment provides for actuarial soundness, with less of an increase in the tax rate over a period of years than recommended by the Senate committee.

The amendment is important because the committee bill and the House bill do not properly take into account the economic impact of the financing provisions in the proposals and do not take into account the presently regressive nature of the social security tax system.

Unless the rate increase is postponed, it will have a seriously dampening effect on consumer demand at a time when the economy is much too sluggish and unemployment too high. Stimulation of consumer demand through postponement of the presently scheduled tax rate increase and through increased benefits would not be inflationary in my view and in the view of eminent economists such as Arthur Okun, Chairman of the Economic Advisers, and others, by serving to cause expanded production volume, allowing some reduction in unit cost.

By increasing the wage base, rather than the tax rate, the social security tax system would be made more progressive.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is not a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

AMENDMENTS NO. 1172

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the amendments, as follows:

On page 181, strike lines 1 through 5.
On page 301, strike lines 10 and 11.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, this is the last amendment for the night, as I understand it. I yield myself 5 minutes.

I refer Senators to the separate views which I filed with committee report on this bill. Under present law States are required to maintain their present financial efforts in support of medicaid and are required to build toward comprehensive medicaid programs by 1977.

The State of Missouri asked the Senate Finance Committee to pass legislation giving it a special one-time exemption from the maintenance of effort requirement under medicaid. The committee granted that special request, and my amendment would not have anything to do with that special request of the State of Missouri for the one-time provision exempting Missouri from the maintenance of effort requirement; that special provision would still remain in the bill.

But the Senate Finance Committee went far beyond the special request of the State of Missouri and simply repealed the maintenance of effort provision altogether.

The committee recommended repeal of the entire section 1902(d) of the present law, under which States are required to maintain their financial efforts under medicaid. The House of Representatives had previously stricken section 1903(e), which requires States to enact comprehensive medicaid programs by 1977.

The recommended repeal of these two provisions will become law unless the amendment which I have now offered is adopted. That would be most unfortunate. The poor people who are covered by medicaid are entitled to better medical attention and care—not less.

What we would do, unless the amendment is adopted, is to say to the States, "You do not have to build up a better and more comprehensive medicaid program by 1977, as the present law requires; you do not even have to maintain your present efforts, as the present law requires. Those requirements are stricken from the law."

What we ought to be doing here is providing better medical attention for poor people, not less. We ought not to be reducing the requirements.

If we do that, it seems to me there will be less demand for a comprehensive national health insurance program, which we should have, and for a massive increase in funds for health personnel and facilities which is desperately needed. We are going to allow health care, which is provided for in the law and is already inadequate to deteriorate further.

It just seems a shame that a matter as serious as this should come up at 11:30 at night, with not the amount of time that ought to be provided for its consideration. This is a backward step so far as health care is concerned, and I hope the Senate will not agree to it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The Senate Committee on Finance considered this measure before, in 1969, and we recommended that something be done about the fantastic increase and enormous waste in the medicaid program. This was a program which was originally estimated to cost about $230 million more than existing expenditure levels when put into effect. It is costing about 10 times that much. Some of us have been complaining that, in the first years of experience under medicare, it cost twice as much as estimated. This one is costing 10 times as much. Why is it costing so much?

We in Louisiana had the most liberal, free medical program in the United States prior to medicare. With that program we provided for all who needed medical care. On the most liberal basis, we provided medical aid to those who needed it.

Then the Federal Government provided 70 percent of the matching funds, so the Federal Government would put up $7 out of every $10, meaning that we would be required to provide 200 percent of the needs in Louisiana. The Governor of Louisiana pleaded to be permitted to save money under the program, because he was being required to provide far more medical care than anybody could justify. He wanted to do that to save the State some money. Every time the State would save $1, the Federal Government would save $3. He could not do it, because it would be against the law to save 5 cents under the program.

I helped write the law, and I apologize for it. Listen to what it says:

Section 1903(e) of the Medicaid statute requires that each State make "a satisfactory showing that it is making efforts in the direction of broadening the scope of the care and services made available under the plan and in the direction of liberalizing the eligibility requirements for medical assistance."

What does that mean? Even if a State meets all the medical requirements of all the poor people of that State, it is still required to go upward and onward, broader and greater, just up and out, just keep moving to make it bigger and more expensive, and it cannot save anything.

So here comes the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), former Lieutenant Governor of his State, to plead for Missouri, which, together with other economies, was trying to get cutbacks to save the State from fiscal disaster. He said "Will you please let us make reductions in this program to meet a very desperate situation in the fiscal affairs of the State of Missouri?" The State passed a constitutional amendment to try to raise taxes to pay for this program, but the people voted it down.

So at the same time the State is saving money, it will save money for the Federal Government. Here is California with the same problem. Texas has a parallel problem. There are problems to a lesser degree in other States.

Does it make sense to say that we have all the wisdom here in Washington? If the States are doing as much as they can and in so doing the program costs 10 times what it was estimated to cost, and they would like to make some reductions, should not the Governors be able to do so, since they have to account to their people? Should not the State Representatives, who have to run even oftener than U.S. Senators, be able to fix the requirements for the services? There are six basic services involved—in-patient hospital services, out-patient hospital services, other laboratory and X-ray services, skilled home nursing services and others, also visits whether secured in office or hospital and home health visits.

So they have to furnish all those basic services. If they do make a saving, they have to account to their people.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the State does not have to provide any particular level, but just some.

Mr. LONG. I agree. Admittedly, it would be conceivable that a State could drastically reduce what it is doing to provide medical care for its aged or poor people in that State. Admittedly, that could happen.

The committee proceeded on the assumption that the State should have some power to make a mistake toward economy rather than the other way.

What is the alternative offered by the Senator from Oklahoma? Ever upward and outward. Ever onward. Ever more expensive, even though there is being spent 10 times what it was estimated to cost and in some respects it is virtually impossible for the States to meet their budgetary requirements.

Why should not a State be permitted to have some discretion about this matter? Why not let the States use a little of their discretion, and see if they can find where some money could be saved? Mr. President, I do not know of any reason for a requirement that they should be required to spend ever more, ever upward, for ever broader services. The House of Representatives has tried to provide some relief in this area. The Senate has tried to provide some relief. It seems to me that at least at some point, we ought to respect the States and those who represent the people there, and let them be accountable to their people.

One more minute.

Mr. President, I was the original sponsor of these maintenance-of-effort proposals. I used to sponsor those proposals at times when I was personally offering amendments to try to get Grandpa $5 or $10 extra in his welfare check. and some Governor or some legislature would not pass it through, or would delay it a year or so, and cut it in half, and then say, "Look what we did for you." I wanted to see if, by increasing it, maybe the people would get a little extra in their checks.

But at some point, we ought to let the States have some responsibility in this area. Mr. President, in this medicare and medicaid program, we have worked mightily, and so has the House of Representatives, to try to reduce waste and eliminate a lot of extravagant expenses and costs. But I know of no way in which economy could be more effectively achieved than to stop implementing a law requiring States to continue to broaden their programs and continue to spend more money, even though they, in their best judgments, are spending all they think they ought to spend on this.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, this is no way to legislate. The President of the United States has stated that he will recommend to Congress next year some kind of health insurance program. I support another. All Senators are aware of the tremendous cost of the medicaid program and the welfare programs that States have to bear. It is much more than they ought to bear. That is precisely what the Senate will go into next year, when we bring up the President's welfare reform bill and related amendments.

All Senators are aware of the alarmingly increasing costs of medical care. That is precisely what we will go into next year, Mr. President, in considering the President's proposals on national health insurance, and other health insurance proposals which are pending before the Senate.

But this is no way to legislate. We are taking care, in this bill, of the special case of Missouri, on a one-time basis. That is the only State that came before us and made a special presentation for relief. I do not think we have handled that exactly right, but it is in the bill, and I do not now quarrel with it, and would not try to take it out or amend it out now. But, Mr. President, next year we can take up these other things.

The Senator's position and the committee position does nothing at all about rising costs.

I yield myself 1 additional minute.

It does nothing at all about the shortage of medical personnel, which is one reason why costs have gone up. It does nothing about trying to hold down unnecessary costs. It simply says to the States, "You can reduce care, reduce expenditures, do anything you please."

Mr. President, it is aimed only toward reducing costs, and it leaves out the real solutions to these problems. It leaves out the real health needs of the poor people of this country, the old people and other welfare recipients in this country. It does nothing at all except back away from the problem. It just says, "Do anything you please to reduce costs, and that will be all right with us."

I yield myself 1 additional minute.

I say that is not the way to legislate. Let us adopt this amendment, strike this provision of the bill that no one is pushing us for, and all these matters will be before us later. I plead with Senators not to take this backward step to reduce the quality of medical care, which is already insufficient, at this late date in this session of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield the Senator from Delaware 2 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma points out that all Senators are concerned about the rising costs of medicaid.

I say to Senators that if you are concerned and want to do anything about rising medicaid costs, you had better reject the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma, because if his amendment carries, there will be no reduction whatsoever in the medicaid program for this year, next year, or thereafter.

Under the law, we would then be in a position where whatever a State was spending last year would be a plateau. That would be the spending floor, and all they could do would be increase expenditures each year thereafter.

The committee went into this matter in detail and held hearings for several months before this bill even came over from the House. We have done a lot of work on the rising cost of the medicaid program. But with the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, there would be no reduction whatsoever in these costs. The only chance that we can achieve a reduction is by maintaining the committee position. As the Senator from Louisiana points out, the medicaid program is costing now about 10 tmes what we were told it would cost. Let us either vote for economy or else stop talking about our concern.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. President, we would not have any cost at all under medicaid if we just did away with it altogether. What the committee position asks us to do is something like that. It says, "Do away with part of it until the States reduce what they spend, and that will cut down the costs."

Mr. President, that does not get at the rising costs of medicaid. It does not get at the need for better and increased care for old people and other covered by medicaid. All it does is back away from the problem, saying it is costing too much, rather than doing something about such problems as the need for additional medical personnel and the shortage of medical facilities in the country now. It merely provides that we will say to the States, "Reduce, if you want to, what you spend for medicaid, and that will reduce the cost."

I say that is not the way to go about the matter now, when all these matters will be before us again this very next month.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has 7 minutes.

Mr. LONG. I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma has completely incorrectly stated what the amendment would do. He says this amendment tells the States they must cut. It does not tell them anything of the sort.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will yield, I do not believe I said that. I said that is the way it is suggested to reduce expenditures, by the States reducing what they are doing.

Mr. LONG. I understood the Senator to say that this amendment tells the States they ought to cut their programs. It does not say any such thing as that.

Mr. HARRIS. Well, I do not believe I said that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. LONG. What the amendment does, Mr. President, is to permit the States to either spend more or spend less. The way the law reads now, the State has only one choice—to spend more, more, more. Even a State like Louisiana, in which the Federal Government puts up 70 cents every time Louisiana puts up 30 cents, may be required to provide somewhere between 250 percent and 300 percent of the medical needs of people who are regarded as being indigent. You still have to broaden more. Where are you going to broaden to? Just tax your imagination.

That is the way existing law reads. How that got in there I cannot imagine, because I was manager of that bill. That was the language that came to us in the House bill. I do not think the House Ways and Means Committee could have been quite that foolish; that provision had to be drafted by the Department and sent up here.

It says no matter how much you are doing, that is not enough, next year you have to spend more and next year you have to spend still more, and that no matter how broad your program is, next year it must be broader, ad infinitum.

So then they start saying, "Why does not somebody save some money on the program?"

The answer to that is easy: We have made it against the law. So Louisiana could still spend another $3 million, and the Federal Government would have to match that with $7 million more. That is still permissible; and if any State wants to spend more, they will get at least 50 percent matching funds.

But if a State decides, "If we do that, we are already spending more than we ought to spend for this purpose; we ought to be able to make some savings on the program," that is, against present law.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TALMADGE. Does the Senator feel that the Senate has greater knowledge and wisdom concerning the needs of the States than the combined wisdom of the 50 State legislative bodies and the 50 Governors of those States?

Mr. LONG. I do not think so, and I would challenge anyone to go out and tell his State legislature that—and we are often called upon to address our legislatures—that we have all knowledge here, and that no matter how desperate they might be, they just do not have enough legislative wisdom to match the legislative wisdom of this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LONG. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. TALMADGE. Does the Senator feel that this Senate should put the combined legislatures of 50 States and 50 Governors in a straitjacket as to how they shall levy and spend their tax money?

Mr. LONG. I do not think we should.

Mr. President, there may be Senators here—I am sure some of the former Governors—who know more about the problems in the States and the relative demands upon the State budgets than do the Governors and the legislatures of their States. But having done this kind of thing to the point of being ridiculous and having a program that exceeds estimates by 10 to 1, one would think that in some area a State would be permitted to have some discretion, and I hope that would be true in this instance. This is not the first time the committee felt something should be done about this matter. We tried to do something about it last year, and we did, but we did not go far enough. We ought to at least give the States this small amount of discretion.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. President, there are very obvious ways by which we can and should relieve the States of their increasing and difficult burdens with regard to welfare and medicaid. Some, including the President of the United States, have said we should do it through revenue sharing. Some, including the President of the United States, have said that we should do it through welfare reform which takes part of the welfare burden off the States. I agee with that principle. There are ways we can can do something about the health costs. Some, including the President of the United States, have said we ought to have some kind of national health insurance program. I agree with that, but I do not think his plan goes far enough.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

All these things are going to be before the Senate Finance Committee, and the Senate will have before it such matters as increasing medical personnel and getting at other shortages which have helped to make costs of medical care skyrocket.

The question before us is, will we, in those ways, in a reasonable manner, deliberately go about trying to solve these problems, or will we simply say, "Reduce the cost of medicaid by permitting the reduction in medical services for those who need it most"? That is the question.

SEVERAL SENATORS: Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. LONG. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. On this questions the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

So Mr. HARRIS' amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT NO. 1181

Mr. PROUTY (for himself and Mr. SAXBE) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes, which was ordered to be printed.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CANNON). The Chair now lays before the Senate the pending business, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CANNON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk on behalf of myself and Senators JAVITS, MONDALE, and BAYH, an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 418 strike lines 20 through 24, and strike all of pages 419 through 448, and on page 449, strike lines 1 through 10.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the pending amendment is the first of two child care amendments which were covered by the agreement entered into last night. It would strike that section of the bill which would create a Federal Child Care Corporation.

At this time, I should like to set forth, in brief, an explanation of the amendment and the basic reasons why I hope it will be adopted by the Senate. Then I should like to yield to one of the cosponsors of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), for a statement on it. There will be other Senators who will want to speak on this amendment. I shall reserve my argument-in-chief until other Senators have spoken.

First of all, Mr. President, the Federal Child Care Corporation which would be created under this bill, and which would be stricken by the pending amendment, should be stricken, in my view, and in the view of the cosponsors of the amendment, because this is a major piece of legislation dealing with the children of the country and it has not been adequately heard. In the press of other business in the consideration of what came to be called "the conglomerate bill," where issues such as trade legislation, welfare reform, and social security benefits and increases and other major issues took up the major attention of Senators and of members of the Finance Committee. There has not been a sufficient effort to coordinate this piece of legislation and the creation of this new Federal Child Care Corporation with the many other Federal programs which also deal with or touch upon child care or day care services.

Under the provision of the bill which is sought to be stricken by the pending amendment, there would be created a Federal Child Care Corporation to be governed by a board of directors appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Federal Child Care Corporation would undertake to provide child care services under contract with States and localities and others for children of families receiving welfare assistance and others.

It is deficient, it seems to me, in several respects but, first of all, because it is such a massive piece of legislation, it should have, as I have said, far more careful and deliberate consideration.

I point out that there is no need to rush here, at this late date in this session of Congress, to pass this kind of major new legislation when, as a matter of fact, as has already been made clear on the floor of the Senate, during the early days of the next session of Congress, this very next month, the new Senate will take up welfare reform as recommended by President Nixon and by others. In connection with that bill that we will have to consider, child care and day care services, and that will be the appropriate time for us to consider what we are about.

Second, this provision which is sought to be stricken is deficient in two fundamental requirements which I think any system of child care services should meet. Those are parental involvement and community control, which are not adequately safeguarded by the provisions in the bill, and I think that they are absolutely necessary. All the experts who have dealt with this question think they are absolutely necessary—that is, parental involvement and community control—if there is to be a successful program of child care and child development.

Third, the standards set up in the bill are not adequate. They are not adequate in regard to child-staff ratios, not adequate in regard to staff qualifications, and they are not adequate in regard to facility standards. This bill would supersede State and local standards. Last, but most important, those standards are not adequate in regard to child development concepts.

Will this be mere custodial care?

Will there be an educational component?

What sort of standards will have to be met?

What kind of concepts will be instituted under this massive new major child care program?

I think it is well known that a child's early years are extremely important in intellectual development. I think that we had better be awfully careful when we set up a new program which will be very much like and of equal importance to the public school programs in this country, that we had better be very sure about what we are doing, and about what its effect will be upon millions and millions of young schoolchildren in this country.

A good many organizations vitally interested and concerned in this matter, and very knowledgeable in regard to it, have submitted comments in opposition to that provision in the bill in its present form.

These include the Child Welfare League and the National Association for Black Child Development. May I say, Mr. President, that I think the day has long since passed, as I said last night, when poor people or black people or other minorities will sit idly by while outsiders come in, as can be done under this provision in the bill—and it could be a private enterprise franchiser—coming and control the child care and development of the children of that community.

The Day Care and Child Development Council of America, Inc., is also one of the organizations, together with those I have previously mentioned, which are not in agreement with this provision in the bill in its present form.

The same is true of the American Academy of Pediatrics. I invite attention to a letter which that organization wrote on December 18, 1970, to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), in which it is stated in part:

> The Academy is gravely concerned with that section of this bill which established Federal child care standards. The minimumal standards prescribed in this legislation will result in mere custodial care programs, and will severely neglect intellectual, social, and emotional developmental needs of children.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the entire letter written by Robert G. Frazier, M.D., executive director, printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF PEDIATRICS,
Arlington, Va., December 18, 1970.

Hon. RUSSELL B. LONG,
Chairman, Finance Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR LONG: The American Academy of Pediatrics, the national organization of board certified pediatricians, wishes to express its concern with S. 4101, establishing a Federal Child Care Corporation. This bill, one of the amendments to the Social Security Act reported out by the Senate Finance Committee, would create Title XX of the Social Security Act.

The Academy is gravely concerned with that Section of this bill which establishes federal child care standards. The minimal standards prescribed in this legislation will result in mere custodial care programs, and will severely neglect intellectual, social, and emotional developmental needs of children. Because S. 4101 further provides that state and local licensing and similar requirements would be superceded, much of the constructive work and planning done at state and local levels to enhance the quality of child care programs would be negated. Health services are an integral part of child care and provisions for an adequate health program are needed.

This bill attempts to overcome financial barriers associated with the establishment of child care centers. Although there is a need for such funding, the primary intent of this proposal is to help more mothers find gainful employment. It is our opinion that this objective is being achieved at the expense of the child. Adequate provisions do not exist in the bill to assure that high quality child care programs will be established to meet the developmental needs of children.

The primary purpose of day care should be to offer a sound basis for learning and further development of the child and to support and encourage the mother in her efforts to care for her child. Consequently, the Academy would urge that the provisions of S. 4101 be deleted from the Social Security Amendments this year.

Sincerely yours,
ROBERT G. FRAZIER, M.D.,
Executive Director.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I pay deserved tribute to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) for his great and laudable concern for the need to expand and improve child care services available in this country. I believe that mothers receiving welfare assistance are entitled to have high quality child care available to them.

I believe, however, that we should not stop there. I think that the other mothers in this country, not just those receiving welfare assistance, are also entitled to that kind of child care service.

I believe it is terribly important that we not stigmatize child care or day care as being merely a welfare program. I believe that it has got to be a universal program which extends far more broadly than the present provision would allow it to do.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is most well intentioned. But I believe that if we can lay aside this provision in the pending bill and take it up again in a deliberate and careful fashion after the first of the year, we will be able to make some important steps forward in providing adequate child care services in this country.

It is important that we do that and take it up again after the first of the year, as we will do if this provision is stricken from the bill. As I said earlier, there are so many programs, programs under the Commissioner of Education at HEW, under the Office of Economic Opportunity, under Headstart, under HUD to some degree, in regard to facilities, and under the welfare laws in regard to those receiving welfare assistance.

It seems to me that we must make some kind of uniform system out of all this hodgepodge we have at present.

We will have time to do that if we agree to the motion to strike the present provision and go into all of this matter in the kind of detail and with the kind of care it deserves.

Mr. President, I am pleased at this time to yield the floor to one of the distinguished cosponsors of the amendment who is quite knowledgeable in this field, the distinguished Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion which has been initiated by my friend, the Senator from Oklahoma. I find myself in a rather unique position, I say to my friend, the Senator from Louisiana, in joining in a motion such as that presented by my colleague, the Senator from Oklahoma, which would strike the provision for day care from the pending legislation.

I say this because for over a year, for about a year and a half now, the Senator from Indiana and his wife, who is his No. 1 adviser in this matter, have been deeply concerned about day care. Together we have examined day care facilities in the United States, in our home State of Indiana, and in the Nation's Capital. We have had the good fortune to compare facilities here with those available in other countries, such as the Soviet Union, Great Britain, the Hague, Japan, and Israel, just to name a few.

In the course of this study, the Senator from Indiana has become convinced that one of the most critical problems confronting us today is the lack of significant child care and child development facilities in this country.

Thus I find myself joining in a motion to strike the child care corporation provision of the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Finance from the bill.

Before proceeding further, I would like to echo the words of the Senator from Oklahoma in paying tribute to the Senator from Louisiana for recognizing the need that something be done. I do not think that any of us should take lightly the suggestion that is made by the Senator from Louisiana, because this is a start. This is an idea which could be, and should be, considered in an overall study of the problem of child care and development in this country.

If this problem is as significant as the Senator from Indiana feels it is, I do not feel that we should start with just a small crumb, but rather that we should give this problem the study in committee and in debate on the floor that it so rightly deserves.

Mr. President, we are all aware of some of the very difficult and perplexing problems confronting us today.

There is the problem of law and order, the problem of juvenile delinquency, the the problem of high school dropouts, the problem of welfare, the problem of the low capability wage earner, and the impact that he has on our economy as a whole, the problem of the obsolescence so far as individual employee skills are concerned, the problem of terrible housing conditions, which produce the ghetto and urban blight. These are just a few of the problems that are tearing at the very foundation of our society today.

There is not a Senator who is not aware of these problems. I think it is fair to say, or at least that is the judgment of the Senator from Indiana, that there is not a Senator who is not concerned with these problems.

As I have looked over them, particularly over the last year, and as I have studied the potential impact of adequate child care and development programs, it is my judgment that no one program, if it is approached in the right manner, in a comprehensive manner, could do more to alleviate the multitude of problems confronting us than adequate child care and development programs.

These problems are not going to be whisked away with one speech on the Senate floor or with the acceptance or rejection of one Senate amendment. It will not be done in 1 day, 1 month, 1 year, or in 10 years.

The problems are the result of general conditions of neglect and they will not disappear overnight.

The Senator from Indiana thinks that with comprehensive planning of adequate child care and development programs in our lifetime we can hope to reverse the pathways in those areas of our country which today lead only to despair.

So I rise to support the proposed amendment to delete the child care corporation, not because the Senator from Indiana does not believe that this particular proposal might not some day be part of a comprehensive proposal, and certainly not because he finds fault with the desires of the Senator from Louisiana to bring some legislative input to the problem, but because the Senator from Indiana believes that this is a day late and a dollar short approach to the question. It can lead some people to believe that the problem is going to be an easy one to solve and that providing adequate day care and child development centers is going to be inexpensive. It is not. In my judgment, to do the job adequately will cost much more money than most people realize.

I cannot think of a better investment. And let us not suggest that we will get something for nothing. We have had too much of this already in this country.

If we are going to give our attention to the children of America, the Senator from Indiana happens to believe that there is no better place to invest our money.

I think it is to the credit of the Senator from Louisiana that his original bill authorized $500 million for the Federal Child Care Corporation. That would be a good start. However, when the present measure was reported, it contained only $50 million.

It is rather difficult for the Senator from Indiana to talk about only $50 million. We are talking about an expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars, indeed billions of dollars, if we are going to provide adequate child care and child development programs for the younger people of our Nation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAYH. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator has introduced a measure to expand child development. His bill would start out by spending $2 billion a year and go on to spend about $6 billion a year. It may be that a program of this magnitude is necessary and that it should become law some day. But what we are trying to do in the committee bill is to provide at least enough child care to see to it that mothers who want to work to supplement the income of their families are not denied the opportunity to do so.

I would like to have had a larger program than the Committee on Finance was willing to agree upon, but I would submit that something is better than nothing. The best I can make of the Senator's argument and the argument of the Senator from Oklahoma is that nothing is better than something.

I would earnestly and sincerely hope that we would not be denied the opportunity of doing what is provided in this bill to help provide mothers the child care they need and which will be adequate to meet their needs, merely because we cannot have the kind of program the Senator would like to have.

As far as I am concerned, as a member of the Committee on Finance, I say more power to those who serve on other committees if they can work out something to provide this kind of child development program. As proposed, it will cost from $6 billion to $10 billion.

But for the life of me I cannot understand why the Senator takes the attitude that although the committee bill only provides $50 million for working capital for the corporation and it increases the Federal matching rate from 75 percent to 90 percent, it is still not better than nothing. It seems to me that this is a straightforward attempt to make child care available where it is not available now.

If one can go forward with a program for complete child development as the Senator advocates, more power to him. But I cannot see why the Senator would take the position that nothing is better than something, because in my opinion the committee bill will go a long way toward meeting the problem.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I appreciate the comment of the Senator from Louisiana. As I mentioned earlier, while he was in conference, I think he is to be complimented for directing this matter to the conscience of the Senate in an attempt to move forward.

I find myself in what might be considered by some a presumptuous position, because I have long respected and admired the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. He has serve in this body for many more years than the Senator from Indiana, and is the author of many more pieces of legislation than the Senator from Indiana, but I think he would be the first to suggest that we do not solve complicated national problems by passing legislation upon which there have not been extensive hearings. We have not had benefit of such hearings.

I know the Senator has studied this matter, but I have been looking at it for a year and a half and I still do not have all of the answers.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAYH. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The Committee on Finance held extensive hearings on the proposal. For example, I have before me the statement of the American Federation of Labor which was made when they testified on the proposal we are talking about. Admittedly the bill as introduced was a bit larger in the amount of money provided for working capital, but basically it was the same proposition. The AFL stated:

> We support the very constructive and comprehensive provisions of the day care bill introduced by the chairman of the committee, which would provide both the financial incentive and the means to eliminate some of the barriers preventing development of day care centers.

That is the statement of the American Federation of Labor. They want child care for children so that mothers can work and earn a decent wage. They favor this proposal strongly.

Other groups testified, for example the Child Welfare League of America. They have some suggestions of ways the proposal might be improved upon, but basically they state that—

> This is an ingenious and innovative plan to design and deliver day care and other child care services appropriate to the needs of a diverse child population. We agree with the bill's findings and declaration of purpose, in section 2001, taken in the context of our understanding of the bill's intent. . . . What is proposed is a means to discover the kinds of services needed by all children and their families, and to arrange for the delivery of those services in the most appropriate, timely, and efficient manner possible.

So I say again that we did have hearings. When I introduced the bill on July 20, I made this statement:

> Mr. President, it would be my hope that persons and organizations interested in child care would study the bill and present their views to the Committee on Finance at the same time as they testify or submit their views on the Family Assistance Act.

We had hearings from August 24 to September 10. This matter was discussed by a number of witnesses. Finally the committee approved this proposal, with some modifications.

The chairman of the committee, in introducing the amendment on which his committee was conducting hearings, urged all interested persons to express their views on it, and, of course, urged the organizations to come before the committee to discuss it. If Senators wanted to ignore the possibility that the amendment was going to be voted on, they could do so. The chairman asked Senators to look at the proposal and urged them to express their views on it if they were interested in this type of legislation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. BAYH. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I wish to respond to the distinguished chairman of the committee as a member of the Committee on Finance. I said earlier I thought there had been inadequate hearings. I was careful to say why. There was certainly no reflection on the distinguished chairman or any indication that he did not give adequate notice that this matter was being considered by the committee. I made clear and I reiterate now that there were inadequate hearings on this provision or any child care provision, because in the consideration of what has come to be called "the conglomerate bill," we had all we could do to consider the trade provisions, which encompassed the most important revisions in trade law since the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, a new concept of welfare reform, which President Nixon advocated and many of us supported in principle, and concerning which many of us had ideas of our own; and, of course, there was the social security bill, with its financing, benefits increases, the catastrophic illness plan that the Senator from Louisiana presented—all of these matters were together in one set of hearings

We had hearings on most of these provisions, then started executive sessions, then came back for 2 more days on trade, then the committee went back into executive session, and there were just too many riders on one horse; too many things were involved in one bill.

I presided all one afternoon in the Committee on Finance. The Senator from Louisiana was good enough to let me do that so that I might ask questions particularly about welfare reform. But I did not begin to get into all the questions I wanted to ask concerning child care, even though I asked as many questions concerning it as time would allow on that day and on other days.

The surface of the problem of child care and development has not even been scratched. We must really go into this matter. We will have time next year.

There is certainly no reflection on the way the chairman conducted the committee. He did so with complete fairness and complete notice, but I say that Senators were so burdened down with all of the other provisions of the bill that they did not have time fully to consider this major new proposal of the Senator in regard to child care.

That is what I meant by saying there have been inadequate hearings on this provision and insufficient effort to try to coordinate this provision with all of the many other Federal programs which relate to it.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor. I would like to make one further remark, then I would be glad to permit free discourse.

I want the RECORD to show that the Senator from Louisiana was busy consulting with his staff when I started my remarks. As the Senator from Oklahoma has just done, I salute him for his efforts. I think in the months he has been looking into this it should be readily apparent even on a casual study of this matter, how complicated it is if we are really trying to solve the total problem.

The Senator from Louisiana has had so many burdens to carry. I do not know how he carries them all. That is why I said earlier I hope the critique and constructive criticism that we are involved in today is taken in proper perspective by our friend from Louisiana.

He mentioned a moment ago that he finds it difficult to see how the Senator from Indiana or other Senators could suggest that no solution is better than a partial solution. I think when we are starting out with a complicated, multifaceted problem involving adequate child care and development. If we are to be totally responsible in our efforts to reach a final consideration, the proposal of the Senator from Louisiana has to be taken into consideration with other needed aspects of this problem. When we start out we might have to retreat, come back to point zero, and then start again on the well-intentioned approach of the Senator from Louisiana. That is why I do not at this particular time, particularly at this 11:30 hour in this session, feel that this is the proper way to proceed. After thorough study, it is entirely possible and conceivable that we will find there is a proper place for corporations to play in comprehensive provision of child care and child development programs.

I made a proposal for the consideration of the Senate. I did not introduce it because I thought, at this stage of the legislative process, something that is as comprehensive as this should not be introduced, since it could not be passed, and it ought to be passed after being subjected to minute study and hearings next year. But I did put in the RECORD that the approach to child care was studied in detail by the recent White House Conference on Children. Frankly, as the result of that conference there are some changes I want to make before I introduce it next year.

One thing that comes to mind is that there are a number of child-care centers today, concerned that a major national child-care program would make it more difficult for them to operate. That is not our intention. We want to help those child-care centers that are being operated today, and at the same time do something about the despicable child-care centers that are not really child-care centers at all, but inadequate custodial centers, and some of them I would not want to be caught dead in.

I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MONDALE. I thank the Senator for yielding.

The Senator from Louisiana asked the question whether something is not better than nothing. The answer to that is that to do the wrong thing to children may be worse than to do nothing. What I fear in this pending proposal and why I am supporting the Javits-Harris amendment to strike is that the basic philosophy underlying the proposal is to let the mother work and store the children somewhere while she is working.

The question is: Is the emphasis upon the development of the child or is it upon letting the mother to get to work? The trouble with this proposal is that it is the latter.

It fails to recognize and make provision for the special child development needs of millions of disadvantaged youngsters who suffer irreparable harm from a lack of adequate nutrition, health, and educational assistance in the crucial first years of life.

It reveals a emphasis on the needs of adults to find or maintain employment rather than on the best interest of the children involved—two goals which sometimes conflict.

It contains none of the necessary emphasis on parental participation and community involvement in child development efforts.

Let me emphasize how important this parental and community involvement is, There are hundreds of thousands of Mexican-American, Puerto Rican, black, and Portuguese, and other minority group children with different cultures, different languages, and different backgrounds. Many times those of us in the white middle class, with the best of intentions, thrust on those children our notions, our language, and our ideas, and as a result mangle those children, insult them, put them down by our behavior. By our example we are saying to them that their culture is inferior and ours is superior. This runs through our school system. It is one reason why they were able to identify in New York City last year only 200 Puerto Ricans who got academic degrees out of a total Puerto Rican student body of a quarter of a million in that city. We have not been responsive to their needs. Yet there is nothing in this proposal which will remedy that basic problem. There is nothing to guarantee the parental and community involvement that is necessary.

Finally, it contains a general thrust toward full day, full week day care programs without sufficient emphasis on part time, part day tutoring programs such as the infant research project here in the District of Columbia which hold so much promise for real child development.

I favor putting more money into creative child development efforts. But in my judgment there is one over-riding nonnegotiable criteria for determining whether early childhood development efforts should be supported. That criterion is not whether the program enables mothers to work, but whether the program enhances the child's development. I do not see this criterion receiving the priority it requires in the Federal Child Care Corporation proposal.

There was just completed in Washington a White House Conference on Children. Four thousand people came from all around the country, including many of our Nation's experts, many of them having been involved in this problem. One of their key recommendations was exactly in this area and bears directly on the point I have made. That is the recommendation of the White House conference to strengthen the family, to bring the parent or parents and the children together, to have early childhood development programs that treat the family as a unit and do not simply stack children like cordwood in some kind of custodial care center while the mother is working.

It so happens that the head of the Office of Child Development, Dr. Zigler, is one of the most gifted men in this field in the world. I commend the administration for finding him and putting him in this position. I am sure that on the basis of his advice, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has urged the adoption of the motion to strike.

How to deal with children in early childhood involves the best and most sophisticated kind of advice that we can receive. To preempt or to go into the field with a new corporation, with this kind of remoteness for the community, and with this kind of job oriented and nonchild development program, seems to me is a step in the wrong direction. It can do more harm than good.

For that reason I join the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) in the motion to strike.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would hope the Senator would not continue to beat a straw horse by arguing against what is not in the amendment. The Senator argues that this is something that forces mothers to go to work. But experience shows that all over the country there are mothers who want to go to work but cannot go to work because they have no place to leave their children to be cared for while they are working. This provision of the bill would seek to provide that opportunity where it does not exist now.

The Senator somehow assumes that the committee bill is not concerned with the welfare of individual children. But let us look at the aim of the Corporation, as stated on page 420 of the bill. The language of the bill requires the Corporation to "promote the well-being of all children by assuring that the child care services provided will be appropriate to the particular needs of the individuals receiving such services."

Mr. President, child care provided by the Corporation may well include the comprehensive child development programs of the kind the Senator would like to provide for all children. But not all child care need be of that type. For example three out of four children on welfare are school age children. Since they are already going to school, they do not need an educational program after the school hours are over. For most school age children, it should be sufficient to provide them a good recreational program, both outdoors and indoors. After all, what kind of things do school age children do if their mothers are not working? Typically, after school they play in the backyard or on the playground, or watch television with their friends.

Now, as to the scope of the corporation's operations, this provision is not limited to people participating in the work incentive program, or to other people on welfare. This is and has been all along, since I first introduced the proposal, intended to help all mothers who want safe and adequate child care for their children. They should have an opportunity to get the kind of child care they want, provided either at their own expense or, if they are drawing welfare assistance, at the expense of the Government. The committee bill is not at all intended to segregate children on welfare from other children; it is in fact intended that all kinds of children be provided the care.

As it stands now, out of at least 7 million children who need child care because their mothers work, there are only 700,000 of them who are in any kind of licensed child care facility at all. The bill provides standards; perhaps the Senator would like to have them higher. The standards in the bill were very carefully considered, and we think that they are about as high as can be reasonably required at the present time. We do provide standards to guarantee such things as safety and healthful conditions. The main thing is that the bill provides a mother with a variety of choices of kinds of child care if she lives in a city that is large enough to have a number of child care facilities.

Just to outline briefly some of the kinds of standards the committee bill provides, Mr. President, we stipulate what the ratio of children to staff must be; we stipulate that the facility must meet the Life Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association, the nationally recognized and accepted fire safety code; and we provide that there must be sufficient space both indoors and outdoors. Thus where today at least 90 percent of the children of working mothers are in facilities meeting no standards whatever—if they are in any facilities at all—we would hope to reverse that, and have virtually all of the children in facilities which do meet these standards.

The Senator has talked about parent participation as though this is hampered by the bill. The opposite is true. The difficulty today is that when parents try to get together to set up child care services for their children, there is no one to help them. The committee bill will help them. Let me read from page 338 of the committee report:

> Child care services organized by parents or run with extensive parent participation have shown great promise in raising the educational level of disadvantaged children in deprived areas. Groups interested in promoting parent involvement should find it possible to establish child care facilities through the Corporation where they are unable to do so today.

We provide someone to whom they can go, who can help them to set up exactly the kind of child care facility with parental participation that the Senator thinks desirable. The Corporation will help them by providing training, by providing them with the technical assistance and information they need, and by advancing initial operating expenses.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to raise a couple of questions?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BAYH. He has great familiarity with this particular bill.

Suppose the parents of a given community feel one thing should be done, and the authority for establishing this service under the bill feels something else should be done for the children. Who rules the day in a situation like that?

Mr. LONG. The mother makes the decision as to what kind of child care facility the child will go in.

Mr. BAYH. But the standards, the programing, the type or lack of comprehensive care available at any facility is not determined by the parents involved, but the vehicle for governing it established under the corporation; is that not accurate?

Mr. LONG. The Corporation would make a contract with the provider of child care services. If it is a group of parents who wish to establish a child care facility, then the Corporation would make the contract with those parents and they would proceed to establish a day care center. But the Corporation might also contract with a day care center already run by a city, or one run by a nonprofit organization. But the main point I want to make to the Senator is that it is the mother who would have the choice as to whether she wanted to send her child to this child care center or that child care center, or whether she wants to join with other parents in organizing a new child care center instead. In the first and last analysis, the choice rests with the parents of the child.

I want to point out also that the bill does not require that the State use the services of this Corporation at all. If the State thinks it can do a better job, it can do so. Frankly, the fact is that the States are now doing a pitiful, miserable job in arranging for child care. They are not even using 50 cents on the dollar of Federal funds appropriated for this purpose. In effect we are saying to the States, "If you cannot get the job done, we will put someone in business who will do it for you."

Let me take a moment to document what I have said about the States' failure to utilize child care funds. We all know that there is a crying need for child care for mothers who would like to work, to provide additional family income, to put meat on the table and milk in their children's mouths. Now then, what happened in fiscal year 1969? The Federal Government appropriated $25 million for child care, but what did the States use? Only $4 million. In fiscal year 1970, we appropriated $52 million for child care, and how much of this were the States able to use? Only $18 milion out of the $52 million.

In the committee bill, we change the ratio from 75 percent Federal matching to 90 percent, and we also have a stipulation that the States must continue to spend at least what they are spending now. That should mean at least 3 times as much money available for child care. But that will do us little good if we have to rely on the performance of the States.

We must do more than just increasing the matching. We must also provide a mechanism for making child care available. We say to the States, if you don't want to provide child care yourselves, we will get the best experts we can find, and have them arrange for child care services. Here is someone who will do the job for you if you don't want to.

This is about the same kind of situation as when one wants to decorate his home. He can do it himself, or he can hire someone to do it for him, or work with someone he has hired to do it for him. Most people are better satisfied if they hire somebody who has some credentials as an interior decorator, but they do not have to do it that way.

Under the committee bill the States, if they want to, can do exactly as they have been doing, though overall there is little to be proud of, or they can do it the other way by doing business with the Corporation, and the Corporation can then proceed to arrange for child care the way that we think, on a nationwide basis, it should be done. The Corporation will be accountable to the Congress to explain what they have or have not done, just as I would like to have Mr. Richardson explain what his department has failed to do. I would like to ask him, "Now, when we gave you money to meet this crying need for child care, why did not you spend it and get the job done?"

Now that we are proposing to give someone else the job, Mr. Richardson comes along and says, "Oh, we do not want to shake up our bureaucracy. We would prefer to do business as usual."

Our reaction to this is: If you cannot get this job done, Mr. Richardson, then we want to set up an organization that can get this job done. The Corporation will be headed by a three-man board, with 3-year terms, one member's term expiring every year. We will want that board to be accountable to the Congress for its activities to provide for the care of children.

If a member of that board fails to perform the function we intend, we will not reappoint him. As far as I am concerned, the Committee on Finance will not confirm any of those people for reappointment unless they show us they are doing what we are trying to do: namely, provide these mothers with adequate child care for their children.

Mr. HARRIS and Mr. BAYH addressed the Chair.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I want to answer that question about what has happened up to now.

Mr. BAYH. Well, suppose the Senator proceeds first.

Mr. HARRIS. As the Senator from Louisiana knows, there is a great difference between the present situation and what the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare recommends. Under present law, there is a requirement that the States put up 25 percent of the costs. The States are hard pressed, as the Senator knows, and have not been able to come up with their portion of the money rapidly enough.

What the Secretary recommends and I support is that we increase that Federal matching, and then we will see greater action. But the Secretary made it quite clear that the principal reason why they have not had the necessary support from the States in getting these programs underway is that it requires too much in the way of new contributions from the States.

What the Senator would do, instead, would be to set up a totally parallel system, parallel to HEW and related administrative offices and employees, which, goodness knows, seem to be quite a few already. He would set up a totally new corporation, parallel to existing agencies. They would have their own regional offices and some local offices, I presume, and some national offices and some employees. That, it seems to me, would be a terribly duplicative and inefficient use of funds.

Mr. BAYH. The Senator from Oklahoma pointed to one aspect on which the Senator from Indiana wanted to touch. From what the Senator from Indiana has been able to ascertain from the results of his study—and I would suppose from what the Senator from Oklahoma has said and from what the Senator from Minnesota said earlier—little question has been raised about the expertise of the individuals who are now running the Office of Child Development. The question is how we give them the flexibility, how we take the chains off, give them the resources and say, "All right, get the job done."

I think that establishing a separate entity and a new element of the bureaucracy and suggesting that, with minimal funds, they are going to be able to do any better than the other administrative agencies have been doing is begging the question.

Let me, if I may, touch on the size of the job about which we are talking, and then we can talk about some of the details of how we are going about doing it.

This problem is of critical proportions even though it is not readily apparent to the average citizen who hears us discuss it on the floor of the Senate or who reads about a proposal in the newspaper or hears about it via the electronic media.

Today, in our country, we have 14 million children with working mothers. If we are going to set up rigid standards for qualification under a given bill, it seems to me that we have to recognize that only a small percentage of this 14 million total are going to be able to qualify. Of these 14 million children, we need to recognize that 2.8 million working mothers today are the sole support of their families.

I, for one, do not for a moment suggest that it is other than laudatory for a mother to work if she feels that she should work and has the opportunity to do so. I do not think she need be whipped over the back, if she has small children at home, to go out and work.

Perhaps she is needed in the home to provide love, kindness, and guidance for those children. But if it is her desire and if it is possible for her to find gainful employment, I think this is fine.

I think that what we are arguing about here is the kind of facility that is available for her. In the past, almost all attention—particularly official attention, unfortunately—has been directed at custodial care. If we are talking about solving the problems that confront us today, it has to be more than custodial care. It has to be child care and development—not just care.

Like it or not, we have to look at the present figure of 2.8 million working mothers and recognize the trend that has occurred. In 1940, 10 percent of the working mothers had preschool children. In the 1960's, it was 40 percent. The trend indicates that in 1970 it is going to be as high as 70 percent. If we think the problem is great now, it is going to be even greater, and we want to start with a program that can ultimately cope with the gigantic size of the problem.

One thing that concerns the Senator from Indiana is that we need to make this a comprehensive care program, not just custodial. It needs to deal with the problems of health, nutrition, environment, and all the other aspects that lead to the development of an adolescent and, hopefully, an adult who can go out in society and fend for himself and shake off the shackles of neglect that may have been on the shoulders of his parents.

Also, I want to emphasize again that when we are talking about $50 million, I think we almost, by definition—if not specifically—by administration, are going to confine that to the most desperate need dollarwise. Today, one of the unique characteristics of child care and development is that it is not needed just by the poor and by those who live in the ghettos; but, increasingly, large numbers of middle-income families have mothers who are now working. As the cost of living goes up, there has to be a second wage earner in more and more homes to foot all the bills. So we find middle-class mothers going to work, and there is no place at all to care for their children.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an abbreviated section-by-section analysis of the proposal to which I alluded earlier, which was the subject of a floor statement, of a bill I intend to introduce next year. This is not for discussion at this time, but so that anyone who is following the debate might have some idea of what the Senator from Indiana is talking about when he talks about comprehensive care.

There being no objection, the section-by-section analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS OF UNIVERSAL CHILDCARE AND DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1971

Mr. BAYH. I think the Senator from Louisiana was accurate when he pointed out that some of these children are not going to need babysitters. Some of them are going to need a playground, a warm room. Too many children today rush home with the key around their neck, with nobody there but perhaps the rats that scurry around the tenement. So I salute the Senator from Louisiana for his goal to have maximum flexibility. I am concerned however that we really are not going to have maximum flexibility under his bill, the way it is written.

I do not criticize the Senator from Louisiana for this, but I think we need to recognize that if we accept as a beginning this type of minimal program, we are providing a sedative to deal with a problem that requires a comprehensive, costly program. I want an efficient program. I want $1.10 worth of delivery for every dollar we spend, if that is possible. But let us not deceive ourselves. This is going to cost a lot of dollars. As I said earlier, I cannot think of a better place to invest our dollars.

One of the significant aspects of this bill about which I still am concerned despite the very thoughtful discussion by the Senator from Louisiana in answer to a question I posed is that it does not provide for the type of local control we need. We have in this bill approximately five pages of standards which, as I understand them will have to be applied universally. One of the things we need to recognize is that the problems that exist today in poverty and in urban blight are not solely problems that can be solved in the classroom. We have to get people involved—mothers involved, fathers involved. We have to make this a family operation. The more we can get local people involved in deciding what their children need, the more chance we have of finally breaking the shackles and moving forward with a total program. That is why in the proposal of the Senator from Indiana and in the proposal of some others, we provide for direct involvement of mothers and fathers in planning and administration of programs.

I note that the National Advisory Council on Child Care, established by the well-intentioned proposal of the Senator from Louisiana points out—and I read from page 441 of my bill:

> And the remaining appointed members shall be selected from individuals who are representatives of consumers of child care (but not including more than one individual who is either a recipient of public assistance or a representative of any organization which is composed of or represents recipients of such assistance).

I wonder whether this is really giving us an opportunity to have on that advisory council enough individuals who really are directly affected by the problems of poverty and neglect which unfortunately confront too many of our children today.

Mr. President, I do not want to belabor this matter any more and I would hope that the Senator from Louisiana would take this criticism of the Senator from Indiana in the light in which it is given.

As I said earlier, perhaps there is a place for such a corporation, but it should be determined after comprehensive hearings and study by committee and thorough discussion by this body. Then let us come forward with a full-fledged bill and a comprehensive program that can realize that children are individuals and what we are trying to do is to say that every individual born in this country has equal access to the American dream, which we talk about but unfortunately, large numbers of our children never have that opportunity.

I might make one closing reference to the White House conference, because the White House conference came along after the introduction of several bills and the proposal of the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Indiana. It brought under one roof, I suppose, more experts both at the national and grassroots level, experts concerned about and familiar with the problems of children, than I think has ever been brought together before. They wrestled with problems we are wrestling with now.

A fair consensus of their suggestions would be that they feel only a comprehensive approach can solve the problem.

I hope we will not be satisfied with just a crumb. We have been satisfied with crumbs for too long as far as our children are concerned. We speak in laudatory terms about the need to care for our children, along with the need for motherhood, God, and the American flag.

The time has come to stop talking and start making some significant investments in this area.

Unfortunately, the investment that was originally intended by the Senator from Louisiana has now been cut to one-tenth of its original proposal and, in the judgment of the Senator from Indiana, that is not sufficient for what we really need to have done.

I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Louisiana, and to learn from discussing with him, his interest in this problem.

I am hopeful that out of this debate will come not just a temporary solution, or a beginning but, indeed, the foundation on which we can build an ultimate solution to the problems that confront our children.

I notice that Carl Rowan, an outstanding columnist, who has served his country well, wrote a stimulating and perceptive column not long ago about the problems of poverty, the poverty change, and the poverty cycle. He said that we are never really going to be able to break the poverty cycle of "Poor home, poor education, poor job. Poor home, poor education, poor job. Poor home, poor education, poor job," until we are able to harness the system of public education to achieve that end.

Many of us who have studied the problems that confront young Americans today, teenagers, pre-teenagers, which unfortunately they carry with them to their dying days, have to recognize, that the traditional definition of school, as given in the admonition by Carl Rowan, cannot be accepted today, if we are going to solve these problems. All too often, we provide a first-class educational opportunity for a first-grade, 6-year-old, only to find that because of the horrible environment to which that young, impressionable human being has been subjected during the first 6 years of its life, because of malnutrition, or undernourishment from the point of conception, this young human being may be mentally retarded, and unable to take full advantage of a first-class educational opportunity.

The Head Start program, which was one of the most innovative devices we have developed to recognize the need to start early, if we are going to deal with these problems, has not been totally successful because we learned that we cannot take a young 5-year-old or 4-year-old out of its horrible environment in the summer, or during the year, and then subject them to that same horrible environment for the rest of their young lives and expect not to have almost total regression.

What we need is a program to start early. As soon as a mother wants to leave her child in a day care development center, she should have the opportunity to do so. If the mother wants to work, fine. We should have a total, comprehensive program that deals with education, as well as custody, and with medical, nutritional, and environmental problems. They should be administered during out of school and after school hours. We should care for the problems of a mother who works from midnight to 8 a.m. or from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. These are comprehensive problems. We cannot just scratch the surface of the problems and expect to get any results.

So it is with this thrust in mind that we should have a program that truly starts with the child, its needs for services, and the family needs for services, and its continuance through the early teens, if necessary, until we finally get that child on its own two feet, so that he or she can hold its head high, have pride and dignity, and the capacity to move out on its own and make for himself or herself a meaningful life.

I know that the Senator from Louisiana wants to accomplish this goal. I am just concerned that the vehicle he presents us with, although well intentioned and with the study he has brought to it, is not going to do the job that needs to be done.

That is why I, with great reluctance, find myself on the opposite side of an issue on which I know the Senator from Louisiana, the Senator from Indiana, the Senator from Oklahoma, the Senator from Minnesota, and others, want to see resolved. We are looking down the road and we see that shining moment with the opportunity to accomplish the same goal but appear, at least for the present, to be wanting to travel different pathways to reach that goal.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the problems existing here, I find, strongly parallel the problems of providing public service employment to the needy.

The Finance Committee, in looking at the welfare problem, felt that one way to help would be to provide jobs in the public sector. So it was suggested by the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) that as part of the bill, we should provide some public service jobs, about 30,000, at least, to provide opportunities for people to do something that would benefit the community.

That was included in the bill. The administration was not particularly enthusiastic about it, but they went along with it. I believe the motion agreed to was made by the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE), but the committee generally shared that worthy purpose. These Senators agreed that we would do what we could to gain as much acceptance as we thought we could get for public service employment, to put people to work who otherwise would be on welfare.

There are many kinds of public service jobs that need to be done, from helping to clean up neighborhoods, to serving as policemen, teachers, or nursing aides. With this goal in mind, we succeeded in providing about 30,000 public service jobs in the Committee bill.

Meanwhile, the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare had a much more ambitious plan. They reported a bill, which I voted for, starting out in 1972 with 400,000 public service jobs, more than 10 times as many as we have in our bill; and in 1973, 500,000 public service jobs.

But the President of the United States vetoed that bill. I voted to override the President's veto. I would be happy to have 500,000 public service jobs made available. If we cannot provide a job in the private sector, public service employment is better than having a person living on the dole.

The devil finds works for idle hands to do. It is certainly better to put these people to work than to have them sitting around doing nothing. We should put them to work doing something useful.

But that attempt to create public service jobs failed in spite of the good work of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee. The President vetoed the bill. We tried to override the veto, but failed. So that was the end of it.

Let us now look at the problem that exists in the child care area. In the 1967 amendments we tried to provide an opportunity for everybody on welfare to have an opportunity to have training and to get a job, a subsidized job, if need be. We realized that to provide this kind of opportunity for mothers, child care would have to be available.

This year we undertook to try to find out why it was that the Labor Department was such a miserable failure at making the program work. We found that mothers wanted to go to work, but could not obtain child care for their children.

Twenty-five million dollars was appropriated to HEW in fiscal 1969 to provide child care for children if the mother wished to work. What did the Department use? It used only $4 million of the $25 million which we appropriated. We provided six times as much money as was used to provide child care.

This year, we appropriated more money to provide adequate child care so that those mothers who wished to could work. We provided $52 million. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare spent $18 million.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator state on what matching basis the expenditures were provided and what the matching basis is that the Secretary of HEW now recommends that funds be provided.

Mr. LONG. It is on a 75-percent basis today. In the committee bill, we raise the matching to 90 percent.

We would like to increase the child care expenditures well beyond $52 million. Going in the direction desired by the Senator, we think we need a bigger child-care program. But we also find that there is a need to give the responsibility for providing this care to someone who knows how to do the job.

The Senator talks about States not having adequate funds. But they have not used the funds that we have already provided. The man in the administration who is an expert in this area, Mr. Zigler, in describng to the committee the problems in expanding child care, said:

> I think it is probably true that there have been so many demands placed on both profit and non-profit groups that in certain instances it is becoming ridiculous because there is overlapping responsibility on the part of local people, State people, and so forth. I think if we are serious about setting up a worthwhile social institution such as day care for working mothers we may have to develop guidelines at a national level which would have some nationwide application. It would be a standard process because now it is too difficult and it is too rigid, and I am very much afraid the professionals have overdone themselves here.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, does it not do one other thing? Does it not set up another overlapping and duplicating agency, the new child care agency?

Mr. LONG. It takes the Secretary of HEW, who has failed completely in providing child care, and the Secretary of Labor, who has also failed completely in this effort, out of the picture as the exclusive providers of child care services.

Mr. HARRIS. I believe that a Senator said earlier that the States are confused over whether to proceed under the present system or under the new system. It would not take them out of the picture. It would add one other factor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the bill would create a corporation composed of people who know something about child care.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana does not want to leave the impression that the present director of the Office of Child Development does not know anything about child care.

Mr. LONG. On the contrary. He is a good man. He would be a fine man to serve as chairman of the board of the Corporation. But I would like to put this responsibility in a new organization that has the ability to get this job done. If the board does not get the job done, we can do something about it.

Secretary Richardson has 50,000 other worries, not the least of which is trying to get the family assistance plan passed in this Congress.

We would put this responsibility on the Corporation. There would be three members of the Corporation's board. The term of one member would expire each year. If the members of the board do not get the job done, then we will ask them when they come up for reappointment why they failed.

We have also found that there are all sorts of problems concerning overly rigid State and local standards required of child care providers.

I think that anyone who has been a Governor or a mayor knows how these things happen. Someone has some kind of material, and he thinks it would be a great thing if there was a requirement that his type of material be used in public buildings. This is then made part of the building code.

There is a lot of space in good, modern church buildings that could be made available for child care centers. The space is used for Sunday schools, but it is not made available for child care purposes because of restrictive building codes.

We say that there should be Federal standards for day-care centers. For minimum safety standards, we would use the life safety code of the National Fire Protection Association. That is a nationally recognized safety standard. If a building meets that standard, it will be adequate for a child-care center.

The bill also provides $50 million in initial operating capital for this corporation to train people to work in child-care centers and to sign contracts with groups to help them provide child care. Subsequently, the corporation would be authorized to borrow $50 million annually to help construct additional facilities. That authorization would go into effect 2 years in the future, and would probably be used sparingly.

With the provisions in the committee bill, there ought to be at least three times as much money available for child care as was available in the past.

And, together with more money for child care, we want an organization in the child-care business that knows someing about providing it. Let us not forget that more than 90 percent of the children whose mothers are working are either receiving no child care or are receiving it in child-care centers that could not meet any standards whatever.

We provided standards in the committee bill that we thought would be adequate. There are health standards. There are nutritional standards, and standards to assure adequate indoor and outdoor space.

We provide that the purposes to promote the well-being of all children by assuring that the child care services provided will be appropriate for the particular needs of the individual receiving such services. The whole proposal is centered on the good of the child.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, what is the corporation the Senator mentions? Is is a national corporation?

Mr. LONG. It is a national corporation, called the Federal Child Care Corporation.

Mr. PASTORE. It would be appointed by whom?

Mr. LONG. The Board of Directors, consisting of three members, would be appointed by the President. There would also be an advisory council committee of 15 members, the majority consumers of child-care services.

Mr. PASTORE. How far would that jurisdiction extend? Would it preempt the jurisdiction of the State?

Mr. LONG. It would not. The State could contract with this Corporation to provide for child care if it so wished, but it would not be required to. It could make its own arrangements for child care. Frankly, as the situation exists today, most States are doing little in the child-care area. Under the proposal, the State could contract with the Corporation, which will have the capability of providing the child-care services, if the State wishes them to do so.

Mr. PASTORE. Could they not do that without the corporation?

Mr. LONG. They could not contract with a Federal corporation that does not exist. Of course, without a corporation the State could contract with some group that they hope would assist them in providing child care.

Mr. PASTORE. If we give them this 90 percent the Senator talks about, they put up their 10 percent. Why could not they on their own exercise exclusive jurisdiction to provide these facilities?

Mr. LONG. They could. The problem is that it is not being done now.

Mr. PASTORE. What guarantee do we have it will be done with the Corporation?

Mr. LONG. The Corporation would be exclusively interested in and involved with making child-care services available.

Mr. PASTORE. Does the Senator mean the Federal Government is not?

Mr. LONG. The Federal Government is interested to the extent of providing money for child care, but we are not getting results. We have a crying need for child-care services, but Federal funds go unused for lack of a mechanism to actually assure that child-care services are made available.

Mr. PASTORE. Maybe we did not get results because the matching was 25 percent against the 10 percent now. Maybe they did not have the money.

Mr. LONG. That is what one Senator said, but testimony before the Finance Committee has shown that there are other reasons. Here is what Mr. Ziegler, head of the Office of Child Development, said about this problem.

He said that overly rigid local ordinances designed to protect the physical welfare of the children have been enacted at the expense of the psychological well-being of the children and that he accordingly does not find himself in sympathy with some of the things now being done in the child-care field.

He meant that some States pass laws with regard to child care which may be too restrictive. The committee bill simply sets Federal standards and say that if a facility meets these standards, then it complys with whatever requirements may be necessary for a child-care center.

Why is there a big argument against what we are trying to do here? This would put an organization in the child-care business that is exclusively interested in child care, a corporation that would succeed in accomplishing what we have been unable to achieve thus far.

One problem is that the President held a White House conference where some people came up with some elaborate, albeit worthy ideas about child care. It was said that there are perhaps 5 million children who could benefit from an overall program to develop them educationally and culturally. It would cost at least $2,000 each to provide these children with the kind of care they would like to see; $2,000 multiplied by 5 million children is $10 billion.

Most of the people attending that conference said, "If that is all it takes, $10 billion, then that is what we should have—a program that does everything in the way of child development and nothing less than that."

The Senator from New York has a proposal providing for about $3 billion in child development funds. The Senator from Indiana has a bill based on the same philosophy which would cost about $6 billion. The Senator from Minnesota has a bill that could cost more than $6 billion. These ambitious ideas may come to pass, and it is all right with me if they do. I will applaud them if they come about.

But in our immediate efforts under the bill we are trying to effectively spend about $300 million to provide child care for mothers who want to work. We do not have to provide $2,000 a child for all these children. Seventy-five percent of the children in AFDC families are of school age. They do not need further education in any extensive manner after school hours. Let us provide supervised recreation for them, or whatever would be appropriate for some other constructive activity for children. That would not cost $2,000 per child. The chances are that $500 a child would be enough, and that would provide for 75 percent of the children.

The objection has been made that we must guarantee participation of the mother in all child care programs. I would like the mothers to participate. Under the bill they would be free to organize and form a child care center as long as it would meet minimum standards. We would be happy to have such a child-care center sign a contract with the Corporation, and the State welfare agency could sign a contract to pay for the child-care services provided. Parent groups that cannot set up child-care centers today would be able to do so thanks to the Corporation.

In short, here is a mechanism that would make available good care for children during the time the mother is not able to look after them. It may be that one of these days the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare will come out with a bill for a comprehensive program costing $3 billion, $6 billion, or $10 billion a year. The way matters have been going with some of these highly motivated programs which the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare has reported, such as the manpower bill, a comprehensive child care bill will probably be vetoed and we will try to override the veto and fail. In the meantime, why should we fail to enact this modest provision for child care?

At the present time adequate child care is largely unavailable. Take, for instance, the highly motivated mother who wants better housing and better health for her family. She cannot provide it because there is no safe place she can leave her child and have the child properly cared for. We want somebody to provide for that care. If the States think they can provide it, that is good; but if they do not wish to, at least they would have someone to help them, and this will result in better child care.

Furthermore, many States would like to have the Federal Government take over all of their welfare programs. If this is to happen some day, it would be better to have someone in the Federal hierarchy with experience.

Mr. PASTORE. With reference to the 10 percent the State puts up if the Corporation is created, who spends that 10 percent, the Corporation or the State?

Mr. LONG. The State pays the Child Care Corporation. The Corporation then proceeds to pay whoever they contract with to provide child care. That could be a publicly owned corporation, it could be a nonprofit corporation, it simply could be a woman who makes her home available for child care, or it could be provided in a facility run directly by the Corporation.

Mr. PASTORE. I realize that but, in fact, are we not saying to the States that they have to put up 10 percent, but how that 10 percent will be spent will be decided by the corporation that is created in Washington?

Mr. LONG. There is no requirement whatever that the State utilize the services of the Corporation. The State will be given 90 percent Federal matching for child care, and will have to put up 10 percent, but they would not be required to spend any of this money through the Corporation.

Mr. PASTORE. They would be on their own?

Mr. LONG. Yes. It is the same as if an individual wanted to build a house with FHA. They are there to help him with financing if he would like for them to do it. The same is true with respect to the services of the Corporation.

Mr. PASTORE. They would still get the 90 percent?

Mr. LONG. Yes; whether or not they used the Corporation, they would have the same Federal matching for child care.

But I want to stress that, as essential as it is to provide the additional money, it is equally necessary to provide an organization that is competent and qualified to do the job.

I was presented on the floor today with a letter which indicated Mr. Elliot Richardson does not support the committee amendment. That is something which I could have been made aware of earlier, since when we discussed this matter in executive session, the Department took the position that if Congress wants to provide for child care this way, that is acceptable to HEW.

The fact is that now, with the responsibility resting with Mr. Richardson, we cannot get the job done. I certainly think we would do well to put the responsibility definitely on a particular organization that is doing nothing but providing child care. What we are trying to do is to remedy this one big lack, the lack of adequate child care for mothers who want to work.

I want to point out that it is not intended that the use of the Corporation be limited to people who are receiving welfare assistance. It is intended that any mother who is working would have child care available to her through the Corporation, child care which would meet reasonable standards and would be safe and adequate for the children. Instead of less than 10 percent of the children needing child care receiving that care in facilities which meets some kind of standards, we would reverse that and try to see to it that 90 percent, or hopefully 100 percent, would have available to them some kind of child care that would be appropriate and would meet specified standards.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to direct one question to him on, I think, a relatively insignificant point, but I think in the colloquy with the Senator from Rhode Island the Senator from Louisiana pointed out that, in his judgment, a woman could make available a home for this type of service. I notice on page 432, in subsection (13), it says "other than home child care facilities." Is that inconsistent with the answer of the Senator from Louisiana or is that in another part of the bill?

Mr. LONG. That provision only says that if something is to be built, construction money would not be spent remodeling somebody's home.

Mr. BAYH. One of the basic problems is that there are too many hellholes in the basement with perhaps some "wino" serving as the principal jailer during the daytime while a number of welfare mothers are out working. I am certain this is the type of thing the Senator from Louisiana wants to keep from happening.

Mr. LONG. Let me satisfy the Senator on that, if I can. All this provision says is that if the Federal Child Care Corporation is going to spend its construction money to build facilities, it will not spend that money just remodeling somebody's private home.

There could be a situation where day care in a private home would be adequate, However, I invite the Senator to carefully scrutinize the provisions of the bill that describe the space that must be made available and also the fire standards that must be met, and the space, outside as well as inside, that must be provided.

The Senator will see that while these may not be as high standards as some would advocate—and they could be upgraded later—at the same time these standards will provide for adequate child care.

The facilities would have to meet the Life Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association. At the present time in ghetto areas, as well as elsewhere, facilities for child care often cannot be found. Yet there are good, solid church buildings, where Sunday school for children is conducted. There are gymnasiums, and other places, which may be satisfactory. We say that if those meet the safety standards we would expect of a public building, why should they not meet the standards for a child-care center? This feature of the committee bill was an attempt to get around archaic building codes which hamper efforts to expand child-care services.

We say that, as a Federal standard, if the facility meets the life safety code of the National Fire Protection Association, it is safe enough for a child-care center.

Mr. BAYH. I thank the Senator from Louisiana.

In the time I have had available during the past few days, I have tried to scrutinize the provisions of his measure. There are many things about it that, frankly, recommend themselves to the Senator from Indiana. That is why from the beginning I have tried to compliment the Senator for his interest and concern.

I think one of the positive contributions relating to what has just now been described is with respect to the problem of standards. We find at one end a total lack of standards, horrible, utterly indescribable, of conditions that exist in some areas. The Senator from Louisiana deals with that. At least, I think the provisions of the bill begin to deal with it. On the other hand, for one reason or other, there have been zoning or other standards that really are exclusive as far as construction and maintenance of reasonable facilities are concerned.

I think we need to recognize that one of the basic problems we have today, as far as child care is concerned, is not that we have insensitive, unqualified bureaucrats or political spoilers at the top of the system. I have yet to hear one word in derogation directed at the qualifications of the present director of the Office of Child Development. This man is extremely qualified.

Therefore I do not think it is necessary to set up a competing organization, whether we call it corporation or anything else, but rather maximize the capacity that we do have of the people in government concerned with child care. We have them fettered with regulations, and, most specifically, we have them fettered with lack of adequate funds. I do not care whether it is on the farm or in suburbia, if we provide adequate funding, the parents of a given community are going to provide adequate child care for their children.

We had the opportunity of discussing this with some of the officials of West 80th Street Day Care Center of New York City, which is a classic example of a community-controlled child care center. So this can be done if we provide the resources.

I am concerned that by setting up a competing corporation, we are creating conflicting programs and dissipating all too limited resources.

As I said earlier, I think the Senator from Louisiana is to be complimented for the flexibility he brings to this program. His thoughtful efforts and parts of this bill could be exactly what we need.

But let us give this the real, extensive investigation it merits, and come up with a comprehensive program to deal with all of the intricate aspects of adequate child development, not just adequate custodial care.

I point out that although the Senator from Louisiana points to his frustration as far as the JOBS program is concerned, and the Senator from Indiana shares his frustration, I think we can make a different case than if we are talking about job related child care programs only. If we are talking about the political muscle in this country, development of public opinion that can be harnessed to support a child development program in a JOBS type program such as that vetoed by the President, the only people who are really affected are the unemployed or the unemployable. That is not a very viable political lobby and bloc. But if we are talking about a child development program available to all children in this country, I suggest that whether it is the President, a Senator, or a State legislator, that type of interest group throughout this country is all inclusive, is a very broad political bloc, and would perhaps convince the President that it would be unwise to veto legislation designed to deal with this significant problem.

I hope, Mr. President, with all due respect to the Senator from Louisiana, that we can support the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from New York, not at all as inconsiderate opposition to the Senator from Louisiana, but as a recognition of the fact that this is an insufficiently studied, yet well-intentioned effort to deal with a very complicated long-range problem. We should come back here next year, have a full set of hearings, study all the nuances of the problem, and with the advice, counsel, and help of the very prestigious and helpful Senator from Louisiana, come to this floor with a comprehensive program that, once and for all, considers all children in this country as individuals, not as poor children or middle income children, but as children. In my judgment, if we provide the comprehensive program that is necessary, we will do more to deal with the complicated problems that confront our society than by anything else the Senator from Indiana is aware of.

In closing, I am reminded of a quote from a television preview of the recent White House Conference on Children in which I was pleased to attend and participate:

> Children are above all individuals who have a claim on the future, a right to exist. They must know they belong to a society that cherishes that existence.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I regret that I have been unable to attend upon the Senate until now, but I wish to state for the RECORD the fact that I had a longstanding engagement to do a television tape in New York, and I made the round trip notwithstanding that I left here at almost 2 a.m. this morning, and have since been discussing with my colleagues in the Republican conference what ought to be our position on this matter.

Mr. President, I am able to say authoritatively—and a copy of the letter is on every Senator's desk—that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare believes that this particular provision should be stricken from this bill. I ask unanimous consent that the letter from Secretary Elliot Richardson to that effect be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH,
EDUCATION, AND WELFARE,
Washington, D.C.

Hon. JACOB K. JAVITS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JAVITS: I very much appreciate your inquiry as to the views of this Department regarding the amendment you have co-sponsored with Senator Harris to strike Title XXI authority in H.R. 17550 to establish a Federal Child Care Corporation. This title is, as you know, almost identical to S. 4101 which was introduced by Senator Long on July 20, 1970.

The Administration, as you well know, is committed to improving the quality of life for children in the United States, especially the vitally important first five years during which so much of a child's cognitive abilities is developed. To consolidate the effort within the Department, the President has established the Office of Child Development and appointed Dr. Edward Zigler, formerly a professor at Yale University, as its Director.

The Administration agrees with the purposes of this amendment, but does not favor enactment of this title at this time. We think that insufficient time has passed to enable OCD and the other offices with which it works to prove their worth and effectiveness before a new government corporation is formed to meet the needs of the nation for child care services. We also call attention to the very important child care component of the Family Assistance Plan which will receive early consideration by the 92d Congress. We do not believe that this corporation would be the most effective way to handle that program when it becomes law.

It would create a new unit in the Executive Branch, independent of the other Departments and agencies, with branch offices in each major urban area and other areas as deemed necessary. To the extent that the corporation would constitute a mechanism for bringing the fee-paying non-poor family together with a private child care facility, there arises the real question of whether the cost of the administrative overhead for such service is necessary or desirable.

To the extent that it would bring the child in receipt of services under another Federal program in contact with a child care facility, the question arises of whether it is necessary to have this separate and additional machinery to accomplish that purpose. In summary, the establishment of an independent corporation to provide child care services appears to be unnecessarily duplicative and costly.

Related to this problem of the independent new agency is another basic point. At the present time, there is lodged within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, extensive responsibility for child development and child care. To assure coordination between all the Federal sources of day care funding, and to assure access to the technical expertise of the Department in this area, as well as related services, such as health and educaiton, any new authority for the development and provision of child care services should, in our opinion, be lodged in our Department.

We are also aware of other day care-child development legislation which has been introduced by you and others in both the House and Senate. The Administration is currently studying these proposals and thinks that more complete hearings and study are necessary before the Congress enacts the Federal Child Care Corporation or other related legislation.

We appreciate your cooperation and look forward to continuing to work closely with you in the future.

With best wishes for a happy holiday season, I remain,

Sincerely,

ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

Mr. JAVITS. The key sentence, Mr. President, with respect to this matter, is the following:

The Administration agrees with the purpose of this amendment, but does not favor enactment of this title at this time. We think that insufficient time has passed to enable OCD and the other offices with which it works to prove their worth and effectivenesss before a new government corporation is formed to meet the needs of the nation for child care services. We also call attention to the very important child care component of the Family Assistance Plan which will receive early consideration by the 92d Congress. We do not believe that this corporation would be the most effective way to handle that program when it becomes law.

Mr. President, to summarize my views:

First, I agree with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare that we should not abort the child care provisions of the family assistance plan, which we have not even considered, before we consider it, by prejudging what shall be the administrative apparatus that will be used for the purpose.

Second, Mr. President, we are asked by the sponsors of the proposed Federal Child Care Corporation to come to a conclusion which I think would be most prejudicial to our further consideration of that matter, and that is to centralize Federal responsibility in this Corporation.

I point out the fact that that is exactly what is contemplated, because, in the committee report, at page 335, we have the following statement justifying this particular Corporation:

It is the committee's view that we need a new mechanism in facing this problem, a single organization which has both the responsibility and the capability of meeting this Nation's child care needs. It must be an organization which has the welfare of families and children at the forefront, an organization which, though national in scope will be able to respond to individual needs and desires on the local level. It must be an organization which will be able both to make use of the child care resources which now exist and to promote the creation of new resources. It must be able to utilize the efforts of governmental agencies, private voluntary organizations, and private enterprise.

The new Federal Child Care Corporation, which would be created under the committee bill is intended to be such an organization.

Now, Mr. President, if ever I saw an example of putting the cart before the horse, it is in that situation. We are asked to legislate a fixed form of organization, with specific capital, specific authority, and specific criteria for its operation, before we have even decded what should be the fundamental objective which we wish to achieve with respect to child care in this country.

There are four basic alternatives, and this corporation proposal would have us choose one now, even before we decide what shall be our basic plan that we wish to carry out.

The other alternatives are as follows:

First, a State plan with Federal administration. That is, incidentally, contemplated by a very exhaustive bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative BRADEMAS with the sponsorship of a number of Members. That is known as Comprehensive Preschool Education and Child Day Care Act of 1969.

Second, there is a State plan with State administration, and that is the plan contemplated by a measure introduced, again in the other body, by Representative DELLENBACK of Minnesota, and, in this body by the Senator from Vermont (Mr. PROUTY).

Finally, Mr. President, there are various aspects of the community plan, which really is based upon working from the grass roots upward, and that plan is contained in my own bill, which I introduced just about a month ago. It is also contained in the bill of the distinguished present occupant of the chair (Mr. MONDALE), his bill being known as the Head Start Child Development Act of 1969, and the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), known as the Universal Child Care and Development Act of 1971.

So there are four basic plans: community, State plan with Federal administration, State plan with State administration, and the Federal Child Care Corporation, the plan of Senator LONG.

We also ought to take a look at the orders of magnitude here. Senator LONG's corporation, which he says would be a single organization with both the responsibility and the capability of meeting this Nation's child care needs—this single organization, supposedly, to deal with all the needs for child care, is to have a $50 million capital, and, when it gets rolling, it is to have the ability or the authority to issue $250 million in revenue bonds, not guaranteed by the United States but dependent for their validity as bonds upon income which would be earned by day care centers and that is all.

Mr. President, juxtapose those financial vertebras to the need and to the actuality. Right now, we are spending in round figures about $450 million a year for day care. And, Mr. President, under any of these bills one may choose, and even the contemplation of the administration itself, faces a very material increase. We all hope that much of that will be self-financing, but nevertheless, we are dealing with an order of magnitude which make the financial base of this corporation either completely inadequate to the purpose to be served, or an effort to so materially reduce the whole size of the day care operation in the country as to absolutely defeat any plan—such as one which ties in the day care to a very critical reform of welfare or the White House Conference's plan or any of our plans in Congress—all of them are much broader in scope than would be contemplated by this corporation. So all this corporation would do is try to fit a big foot into a very small shoe. When that is added to the fact that it would abort our consideration of the President's family assistance plan and that it would commit us to one course of administration when we have an aggregate of four before we even know what our plan is going to be about child care, it seems to me to be highly improvident.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. PERCY. Before making a comment on the motion to strike, I should like to repeat what I said to the Senate Finance Committee when I testified before that committee on behalf of day-care centers and certain proposed legislation that I had introduced to provide for their construction.

I believe that the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the chairman of the committee, is devoted to finding an answer to the day-care problem, and I commend him for his initiative. I intend to keep a deep and a continuing interest in methods of solving the problem of child care. I believe it is one of the most critical problems we are going to have to face in the near future. However, despite this interest and despite the fact that I have introduced a measure in this area as it relates to the President's family assistance plan, I wish to support the motion to strike this section from the pending bill.

Mr. President, my prime reason for adopting this position lies in the fact that I believe that the proposal contained in the bill has resulted from less consideration than the problem deserves. The committee included the proposal in the bill without benefit of the recommendations of the White House Conference on Children and, in fact, without benefit of any specific hearings whatsoever.

As a result, there was no opportunity to explore the proposals on this subject made by other Senators, including those of the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), who has given a tremendous amount of attention to this field and is extremely knowledgeable in it. I believe his proposed legislation should be given every possible consideration, because my own initial reaction to it is that it is a basic thrust in the right direction and goes to the heart of the problem. Also, as has been mentioned, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE) and the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH) have made proposals that have not been considered thoroughly.

There was no opportunity to consider the question of how deeply an individual community should be involved in planning to meet the community's child care needs. There was no real opportunity to adequately consider the adequacy of the structure of the Corporation, including the relationship between the Corporation and the Office of Child Development and the Office of Economic Opportunity. Finally, there was no opportunity to consider the adequacy of the level of authorization contained in the bill.

I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from New York, from his vast experience in establishing enterprises of this type, whether, rather than coming from the top down, projects involving the people, a community do not come out better when they come from the community up.

Mr. JAVITS. There is no question about that. I should like to make two points in that regard.

One is that we are not even arguing for that. We are saying, yes, we feel that projects should come from the ground up. We are not asking the Senate to accept that now. But we are also asking the Senate not to foreclose it by taking a project which proceeds from the top down.

I should like to ask the Senator this question, because he has the city of Chicago in his State, and the Senator knows I have New York: What does the Senator think will be the reception of the Federal Child Care Corporation when it comes into one of the Chicago ghettos to set up day care centers? Are we going to have a new set of militants who are going to ride them out on a rail or throw them out or picket their projects or refuse to participate in them or burn them down, or are we going to do something constructive in day care?

Mr. PERCY. I think we would be ill advised to go ahead and establish this corporation until we actually know more than we do now. I really cannot tell the Senator what the reaction of the leadership of the various ghetto areas in Chicago would be. I would feel much better if they had been able to come down and testify, the leadership, for instance, of a community of some million blacks, who really have a deep concern about this problem, and the leadership of other concerned communities, and have them feel that they have had a voice in the making of this vital legislation.

It is better that these programs come from the community up and give residents a sense of participation, rather than just establish a superstructure setup from Washington, have a corporation established, without the benefit that we could gain from participation in what should be adequate hearings. I would tend to think that we should have these hearings as early as possible next year. It ought to be one of the earliest orders of business, and it fits together well with the early consideration that has been promised on the family assistance plan.

Mr. JAVITS. I thoroughly agree with the Senator.

I am not trying to prejudge it, either. I have an idea. I prefer the community approach, but there may be many bugs in that. Hence, I think the only fair way to do it is to start with an effort to design really a child care program. We may very well end up with the idea of a corporation. But to abort all our considerations by opting for that now seems to me to be most improvident and ill advised.

I point out to the Senator that it is not less than absolutely obliterating all other ideas because the committee itself says that this is the single organization that is going to have the job of meeting of the Nation's child care needs in its hands. For example, on page 420:

> The corporation shall have the responsibility and authority to meet the Nation's needs for adequate child care services.

Mr. President, that may have the responsibility and authority, but they are not going to have the resources or the organization. So it seems to me to be a most improvident provision.

I do not think one need plead for my bill, which I like very much and many other people do, or for that of Senators MONDALE and BAYH, or PROUTY and Representatives BRADEMAS, DELLENBACK, and QUIE. One need not plead for any of those. All one has to do is to give them a chance to draw the breath of life, rather than to extinguish them now in this improvident way, before we are remotely ready.

I might say to the Senator from Illinois that it bears out what Senator HARRIS knew and what all of us knew—that we let this survive in the bill though it is of exactly the same gender as what we eliminated—trade and, to the dismay of many of us, the President's FAP—because we were just up against it. Here we are with the same kind of proposition, which we are asked to swallow the very moment that we have rejected a number of others of exactly the same kind because we just cannot give them the consideration we know they should have. I cannot think of legislating more improvidently than doing this.

As we all know from the colloquies which ensued when we considered the motion to recommit, this was something the chairman, Senator LONG, insisted on. We all respect him, and he certainly helped us to cut the Gordian knot on this bill. So we stood aside and are now arguing the same provision we should have argued on the motion to recommit.

I should like to add one other thing: The chairman remains the chairman of the Finance Committee; he will be the chairman of the Finance Committee next year. It seems to me that there is no insecurity in his position. He will be just as strong and just as effective and just as able to have his prestige count with his colleagues for the Federal Child Care Corporation next year as this year. So I do not think there is any derogation of the respect we owe to the chairman of the committee that is bringing out a bill. On the contrary, I think it would be inconsistent if we did not do our best to make the provision—if it is going to be the final choice of the Senate—at least be the best possible, after a consideration of alternatives, and after—as Senator PERCY has said—the opportunity for hundreds of thousands or millions of blacks who are very deeply involved, and the poor generally, to testify for or against this proposition, so that we will have some idea as to whether or not it will work.

Again I point out to Senators that for the same reasons we are discussing, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare agrees that this is ill advised and wants very much to see it stricken from the bill.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, there is one further point I might make lest we leave the impression, in striking this particular section of the bill, we are saying that we are doing nothing about day care problems at this time.

There are certain provisions in the bill now which are unaffected by this motion to strike which will serve as temporary measures to deal with the problem until we can adequately explore the implications of the Child Care Corporation.

One of the major reasons for the failure of the work incentive program has been the absence of adequate day care facilities. The bill provides a temporary solution to this problem by increasing Federal participation in the financing of day care facilities from 75 to 90 percent. While this will not solve the problem, I believe that it will alleviate some aspects of the situation until, early in the next Congress, we have had an opportunity to adopt a comprehensive solution.

Thus, Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment to strike. I hope that a majority of my colleagues will do so as well. I do so despite the urgency of the situation and despite my own deep interest and commitment to providing adequately for day care facilities. I do so, because I believe that in the long run, we shall make a better contribution to the solution of this most critical problem.

I share with many of my colleagues the feeling that some of the nongermane things we have stricken out of the social security bill the country will be better for. It would have been an utter disaster, for instance, for this country to have pushed ahead just for the sake of legislating and adopted a trade bill that would have set the country back 40 years in its policies.

There is the kernel of a good idea here, but we are not ready now to see it nurtured and come to growth until more work can be done on it. That work can be done in the 92d Congress.

I congratulate again and commend my colleague from New York for his distinguished leadership in this field and the expertise he brings to it. I know he offers this amendment in the belief that if the bill passes in its present form, the country will feel that we have solved the day care problem and that we have really thought through the answers, when we have not done so carefully enough.

Successful action on this motion to strike, I think, will give us the opportunity, early next year, to pursue this with the deliberate care it requires. That does not mean undue delay. It means that we can have action quickly, once we have full hearings.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague from Illinois very much. He has been most helpful.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois kindly stay here for a moment? I should like to ask a question, if this is the kernel of a good idea, let us talk about financing it for a minute.

On page 434 of the bill, it states that the Corporation will receive $50 million, and starting in 1975 they must pay it back at the rate of $2 million a year. This is $2 million a year out of its revenues from day care centers. However, to borrow the $250 million from the public, it says on page 436 of the bill:

> Any such bonds may be secured by assets of the Corporation, including, but not limited to, fees, rentals, or other charges which the Corporation receives for the use of any facility for child care which the Corporation has an interest.

In order to borrow the $250 million, what kind of assets is it going to be able to build in the meantime?

It has a $50 million debt which it has to start paying back in 1975 at the rate of $2 million a year. It cannot borrow $250 million. It has to have $250 million worth of assets or more.

How is it ever really going to be able to accomplish that?

Mr. JAVITS. I would say, looking at it from the point of view of the chairman of the Finance Committee, that they would immediately have to go into the day care business for the relatively upper level, upper middle income families, in order to make the program viable financially. So, all our purposes here would be defeated at one fell swoop, because we are setting conditions which obviously they cannot meet, and still serve the clientele we want them to serve.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague from Kentucky.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. MONDALE. The comments just made by the Senator from Kentucky are very useful. I had not realized what he stated. We have had hearings before the Employment, Manpower, and Poverty Subcommitee on this proposal, which I introduced along with about 20 others, which we call the Headstart Childhood Act of 1969. We heard from a number of nationally recognized early childhood specialists in the country. I am pleased to say that the President was wise in appointing one of our witnesses, Dr. Zigler, as the Director of the Office of Child Development. Dr. Zigler is recognized as one of the best experts in the field.

I came away from the hearings appalled by the way we treat our preschool children. I felt increasing concern that as the Nation moves in the direction of dealing with the problems of the first 5 years of life, particularly for the most disadvantaged, we make sure that we do so in the right way. A child—especially a young child—is a sensitive and highly destructible entity.

Middle-class American parents do everything they can for their children, with decent housing, the best nutrition and health assistance in the world, with all the love and affection they can provide, and when it is all over they hope and pray that, somehow, their children will make it. But, under this proposal, we would take a different approach. When a child in its early formative years, the emphasis is on letting the mother out of the house to work. In the interim we take the child—like a commodity—and stack him like cordwood in some day-care center. To be sure, the day-care center is supposed to achieve certain physical minimums. It it supposed to be fireproof. It is supposed to be warm. It is supposed to be clear and if the children are fed, it is supposed to be nutritious, and so forth. But nowhere in the proposal, in my opinion, is there any sensitivity shown toward the emotional or psychological problems which every decent parent knows is essential to the rearing of a healthy child.

If this Nation launches a program aimed toward letting mothers work and in the process simply salts thousands and thousands of children away in these cold and sterile custodial centers, I think we will be producing a generation of emotionally crippled children that will cause more trouble than anything we have seen in the past. I think we will regret having taken this well-motivated but, in my opinion, yet-to-be-perfected proposal.

In my opinion, the country is quickly coming to the conclusion that we need quality, healthy childhood programs for our children. It is the most exciting new theory for dealing with disadvantaged in America. In my opinion, most children who grow up in tragically disadvantaged circumstances are ruined by the time they even go to the first grade. They need sensitive child development efforts. But I think we should do it right. I do not believe this does do it right. I think the theory is wrong. I believe it can do more harm than good. I hope we will strike it and that the next Congress will really take hold of the issue and pass the kind of proposal that gives quality, total, child development assistance to the hundreds and thousands of disadvantaged children in this country who so desperately need it.

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator is 100-percent correct. I should like to point out the kind of services that can be provided—which is contained in section 2118 of this particular provision, on page 442 and on later pages. What the Senator is really talking about is custodial care.

Mr. MONDALE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. It is not developmental care, and that is one of the biggest issues in this field. Obviously when we are dealing with this Corporation, and considering its restrictions, we see what must happen.

The Corporation cannot even earn interest on the bonds, as the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook) pointed out. The Senator from Kentucky pointed out to me privately—and I would like to say publicly—that the only investment it could make it in Government securities. It canont even buy high interest bonds. It is confined to U.S. bonds.

It is this money and money earned from day-care centers that will give them earnings and enable them to pay back the basic investment of $50 million, at $2 million a year. This is not even a Government bond.

The whole thing becomes a business operation other than the kind we want.

As always happens in debates of this character, it is unnecessary to extend the argument that far. The fact is that in this case what we are arguing for is that we withhold our action, rather than that we take action.

While we speak with admiration and respect for the idea—because I am devoted myself to original ideas—and this is an original idea—I certainly am not devoted to such ideas until after they have been tested out in some fashion, even if it is only in debate.

We should deal with the bugs in the program, some of which have been pointed out in the debate today, especially when we will be aborting another approach to the same problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CASE). Will the Senator suspend? There are conversations going on all over the Chamber.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I have named four purposes. I would like to recapitulate them.

First, there is the community approach, which we are following now in our appropriations for the OEO, used for child care. That is the Office of Economic Opportunity. There is also the approach of State plans with Federal administration, the approach of State plans with State administration, and, finally, the fourth alternative, the Federal Child Care Corporation.

Mr. President, I would like to conclude my observations on this matter by again referring to the opposition to this particular plan at this time. All the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare indicates is not that he wishes to knock it down, but that he feels that we would be preempting the field at a time when the field should not be preempted.

Mr. President, I would like again to read a statement from the letter that I read before. Many of the Senators were not here at the time I did this before.

The key portion in the Secretary's letter which was received this morning reads as follows:

The Administration agrees with the purposes of this amendment, but does not favor enactment of this title at this time. We think that insufficient time has passed to enable OCD and the other offices with which it works to prove their worth and effectiveness before a new government corporation is formed to meet the needs of the nation for child care services. We also call attention to the very important child care component of the Family Assistance Plan which will receive early consideration by the 92d Congress. We do not believe that this corporation would be the most effective way to handle that program when it becomes law.

That is the case as I see it for the amendment. I hope very much that the Senate will agree to the amendment and for the present—that is all we ask—strike this particular title from the bill.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would like to ask if we might agree to a limitation on debate so that we could vote at some time certain on this amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on this matter in 20 minutes, the time to be equally divided between the opponents and the proponents of the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. That is satisfactory with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a brief quorum call and that the time be taken equally from both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, mention was made earlier in the debate concerning the position of the National Association for Black Child Development and the lack of approval by that organization of this child care provision as it is presently written.

I have here a position paper on the Federal Child Care Corporation provision prepared by the National Association for Black Child Development. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the paper was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POSITION PAPER—FEDERAL CHILD CARE CORPORATION ACT S. 4101—AN AMENDMENT TO THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

While the basic purposes of the bill are valid, there are a number of significant objections which make it impossible for the National Association for Black Child Development to support it:

THE STRUCTURE

Sec. 2002 (a) The creation of a nationally lodged vehicle is a logical step in attempting to provide comprehensive child care in this nation. However, such a mechanism must be designed within the context of the recipients for the proposed child care services. Since Senator Long's Act is to be an Amendment to the Family Assistance Act. Child Care Provision Section, the initial child care services offered by the proposed Corporation will be aimed at the Black and poor citizenry of this nation. This is clearly stated in Sec. 2003.(c) . . . The Corporation shall accord first priority to the needs for child care services of families on behalf of whom child care services will be paid in whole or in part from funds appropriated to carry out Title IV . . . This has strong implications for controlling contracts under FAP.

Our position on the kind of mechanism we view as being most beneficial has been stated in a position statement entitled Optimum Conditions for Minority Involvement in Quality Child Development Programming, p. 12, Sec. 4(a) . . . The Federal government should administer funds for day care projects with minimal state involvement. Providing the Office of Child Development can be sensitized to minority concerns, it should be the administrative agency. Provisions must be made for technical assistance to communities preferably by minority firms in advance of actual funding.

The Corporate structure described in the Federal Child Care Corporation Act is similar in many ways to existing agencies which are controlled by persons appointed outside of the Black community. Such persons set policy and develop programs for the Black community residents. This model has a poor track record. The act advocates a proposed monopoly for child care services.

The proposed Corporation is basically a compromise child care plan modeled after large profit-making corporations. The Corporation will monitor itself, establish its own codes, standards and regulations. These standards will bypass and supersede federal, state, regional and local requirements as outlined in Sec. 2006 "Exclusiveness of Federal Standards." This section should be reviewed in terms of ratios of adults to children as outlined in "Standards for Child Care," Section 2004(b), (1), (A), (B) in order to assess its implications. Whereas, optimum ratio (Child-Adult) suggested is 8 to 1, the Corporate Board can authorize a 25 to 1 ratio which clearly speaks to custodial care. Further, such a ratio is very similar to those that have been proposed by Franchisers whose aim is profit-making, and promotes custodial care, instead of quality child care and child development.

The Corporation as presently being proposed, is monopoly focusing on child care needs in this country. It will receive its initial funding because of the Family Assistance Act which is designed for the poor. As it is presently set forth, the Federal Child Care Corporation Act will preclude self-determination and the fundamental rights of Black, poor and minority groups to adequately participate in making policy and plans as they determine their child care needs.

THE BOARD

Basically the Board is composed of those who will represent the current administration. If persons on the Board do not comply they will undoubtedly be removed by the President. All powers rests with this Board. They will appoint the Advisory Council. They will appoint personnel. They are empowered to collect fees directly or through contractual arrangements. It becomes apparent that the Board will probably have subsidiaries—which again speaks to contracting with national franchisers.

FUNDING

The proposed Act calls for a Revolving Fund, Sec. 2003.(a) which will be established by the Treasury. The amount proposed, 50 million dollars, will be paid back in annual installments of 2 million dollars. The Corporation will pay interest on this loan, on the basis of a rate equal to the average rate of the Treasury's loan. If the Corporate funds are in excess, the Corporation will invest money in various ventures related to child care. In other words, they will plow profit back into the Corporation to create subordiaries in other program and service areas in child care.

This funding process, as called for in Senator Long's Act initially takes tax monies to loan the Corporation. Further, this Corporation will issue Bonds, which the government will not be responsible for, which are sold to the people, similar to war bonds, costing the taxpayer the cost of the loan and capital for it to operate autonomously. Thus, the Corporation will be selling services for operating costs.

This Bill as proposed is basically a thrust toward selling the concept of developing social services as a private sector function, and removing the responsibility from the government in this area. Most appalling is the profit-making dimension which is being initiated on the backs of the poor and Black people in this country, by attaching this Act to the Family Assistance Act.

Components of the bill that are objectionable:

(1) Lack of appropriate representation on the Corporate Board and Advisory Council of Black and other minority people;

(2) Lack of assurance of quality programs vis a vis the proposed ratios as outlined in the Act;

(3) Lack of a certification process for individuals who have demonstrated ability in the care of children in the various proposed child care programs;

(4) Lack of an objective evaluation process of the proposed Corporate Board. The Act does not reflect a process of accountability, as exemplified in the revolving fund concept; and the reporting procedure to Congress every two years. It appears that the Advisory Council who have been appointed by the Corporate Board will be the evaluative mechanism. This suggests a self-evaluation process, to which we are opposed;

(5) Black and minority group firms will find it difficult to receive contracts for providing Technical Assistance to the child care programs because of the growing competition by big business and franchisers in this area; and

(6) The possibility that the proposed Corporation will perpetuate custodial programs is glowing due to the lack of specific program criteria. There is no mentioning in the present Act of the ages of children and the different ratios of adults in relationship to this factor.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, reference was also made earlier to the Child Welfare League. I have here comments on the Federal Child Care Corporation provisions prepared by the Child Welfare League. I call attention to excerpts from those comments in which it was said, for example:

In fact, the many implications of S. 4101 are so far reaching and of such importance that we believe there needs to be a very careful examination and analysis of the impact of the bill's provisions by this Committee and by a wide variety of Government and public witnesses. Assessment of S. 4101, alone, might well require many weeks. Because of the press of business already before this Committee, we respectfully suggest that substantive discussion of this important legislation take place within the context of full Committee hearings, arranged solely for this purpose at some later date. The League would be pleased to assist the Committee in any possible way to prepare for these hearings. We offer the Committee the use of our resources and pledge our cooperation.

I certainly support that statement.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD other excerpts from these comments made by the Child Welfare League.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There have been several other bills introduced in both the House and the Senate dealing with various kinds of children's services, including "Head Start" type programs, child development services, early childhood education and day care. A common feature has been a concern for the children of mothers who work or are in training. An examination of these bills, along with S. 4101, presents several issues to which we believe this Committee should address itself.

What types of programs should be authorized by legislation affecting young children?

Can and should the so-called "day care needs" of children be considered separately from the educational and developmental needs, or should these programs be combined?

Are the programs needed for the children of working mothers and guardians essentially different from those required for children from disadvantaged and so-called "culturally-deprived" families?

What are the essential ingredients of any child care program if it is to provide adequately for a child's developmental and educational needs, particularly when the mother is employed and absent from the home?

We believe that the Committee should consider the following questions before concluding that consolidation in a new, quasi-governmental body such as the Federal Child Care Corporation is advisable.

Is it advisable to give authority over all child care services to any one agency—whether that agency is governmental, like the Office of Child Development, or quasi-governmental, like the proposed Federal Child Care Corporation?

Is it possible to utilize the administrative skill and the trained personnel at various levels within the government agencies to design programs and deliver programs through through an existing government agency?

Several Commissions have recommended fuller utilization of Head Start programs so that they could also serve as full-time day care facilities. Is it desirable to have one agency, such as the relatively new Office of Child Development, administer the large Head Start program, and establish another Federal agency to administer all other child care services?

HEW has had virtually no funding to finance remodeling, or construction of new child care facilities. Does this factor make it difficult to assess the Department's ability to assume the responsibility of meeting the Nation's needs for adequate child care services?

What would be the relationship between the Office of Child Development, with its highly-trained and skilled Director, and the Federal Child Care Corporation?

Skilled, capable personnel in the field of child development, special work, psychology, and education are in very short supply. But some of these scarce and skilled professionals capable of administering and developing the standards necessary for such * * *.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I would like to direct these remarks to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana because, for the life of me, I cannot figure out how financially this Corporation will be able to come into existence. If it borrows its maximum of $250 million, floats a non-Government-guaranteed bond, and if they are fortunate enough on that basis to sell a public bond at 7 percent interest the first year alone would be $17.5 million. If they floated the bonds for 25 years, it is conceivable their first principal payment in the first year would be $10 million. Then they have an automatic payback of their $50 million beginning in 1975 of $2 million a year. That means that the first year of its first full borrowing capacity, with the $300 million Corporation, as far as its assets are concerned, it has to earn over and above its expenses and pay back to the Treasury, and pay interest to bondholders, to the tune of $29.5 million.

I am not sure I know of a major private corporation in the United States capitalized at $300 million after all expenses that could conceivably pay back $29.5 million in any one year. I am wondering financially how this Corporation can even come into existence with the first payout load of $29.5 million. If anyone can answer that question for me, I would appreciate it, but it is a matter of figuring interest on $250 million, plus the principal payment, plus the fact that starting in 1975, they have to pay back $2 million on the $50 million of capitalization.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we are talking about only $50 million, because the remainder of that money does not become available until after 2 years, when bonds could be issued for construction purposes. This Corporation would begin its operations with the $50 million loan. For all services provided it would be paid fees, whether from the parents or from the welfare agency.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. COOK. Is the Senator saying in essence the Federal Government is going to pay to the Corporation on nonguaranteed bonds the full extent of the private market interest rather than have them guaranteed by the Federal Government, because you also provide to go on the open market and sell these at the highest rate, that the funds of the Corporation, and I refer to section (b) on page 433: "shall not be invested in any obligation or security other than obligations of the United States or obligations the principal and interest on which are guaranteed by the United States."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to call to the attention of the Senator that the Corporation is not trying to make money through investment. This provision simply states that, if they have extra money, they could invest it in Government obligations on an interim basis so they would be earning money on it.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield further?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield 1 additional minute to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the Senator said. If money is borrowed on the open market, it has to be paid back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield further?

Mr. HARRIS. No; I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LONG. I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Corporation initially borrows up to $50 million from the Treasury. That is for initial operating capital. But once it is in operation it charges for the services it is providing, and the fees are paid either by the parents or, if they are needy, by the welfare agency. After its first 2 years of operation, the Corporation is authorized to borrow $50 million annually for up to 5 years for construction of facilities.

Here, too, the Corporation will charge for services provided in the facilities it constructs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 1 minute has expired.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, one of the great crying needs in this entire child welfare area is the need for adequate child care for children of working mothers. There are two major problems involved. One problem is that the States need fiscal help. We took care of that by liberalizing the matching formula. No one complains about that. Second we need to have someone who has the ability and will to provide child care services. Most State welfare agencies are, apparently, not well equipped to do this now, and this is evidenced by the fact they are not now using even half of the Federal funds we have made available.

How do we handle this problem? We set up a Federal Child Care Corporation, start it out with a $50 million loan from the Treasury for initial operating capital, and then have the Corporation make child care services to as many mothers as possible who would like to have child care provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. Does the Senator yield himself additional time?

Mr. LONG. Not at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a memorandum in support of this amendment be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMO IN SUPPORT OF HARRIS-JAVITS-MONDALE AMENDMENT TO STRIKE THE FEDERAL CHILD CARE CORPORATION PROVISIONS FROM H.R. 17550

1. There have been inadequate hearings on this far-reaching piece of legislation and insufficient effort to coordinate it with other Federal programs which touch on day care services. Many parts of this provision could be improved by thoughtful amendment, but there is simply not time to handle this whole matter at this late date in the session.

2. The whole question of child care will come up again anyway early in the next session in connection with welfare reform. There is no need to rush into this major new program right now.

3. There is a great need to expand child care services, but two fundamental requirements should be parental involvement and community control. These requirements are not properly safeguarded in the provision sought to be stricken.

4. Standards set up by the bill are inadequate in regard to child-staff ratios, staff qualifications, facility standards (this bill would supersede state and local standards) and, most importantly, in regard to child development concepts.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I think the case has been made adequately. It comes down to the fact that we are aborting all other plans and opting for a plan that is much too small for the situation and a plan that is not financially viable. I believe the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK) put his finger on the problem in noting that a corporation with $300 million to operate, and with this kind of income from welfare agencies it cannot be financially viable. Hence it will have trouble selling bonds. We will put ourselves in a box.

Let us not abort other plans and improvidently opt for a plan which has not been designed or developed to meet the situation because we will not know the plan for child care for the country until we finally deal with FAP.

For all those reasons I believe that the amendment is an appropriate vehicle for the Senate to get out of the situation which we face here, in addition to the other difficulties we have gotten into. There has been inadequate inquiry into this matter and there are many flaws in the proposal. It aborts the situation long before we are ready for it and coming at this time in this session it is most improvident.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, throughout the consideration of this bill I have found myself in sharp disagreement with the chairman of my committee over certain provisions. But that does not mean every position he advances is wrong. In this instance the Senator from Louisiana has a good idea and it has my support.

We must realize that in this country we have need for day-care facilities for some 7 million children. We only have facilities in this country for some 700,000 children. Consequently, throughout this Nation, in small towns and big cities, we are unsuccessful in many of our social programs because there are insufficient facilities to assist mothers with young children.

The WIN program, the work incentive program, adopted in the Senate in fiscal 1969, appropriated $25 million and has used only $4 million. In 1970, we appropriated $52 million and used only $18 million.

The reason why such small percentages were used was due to lack of facilities in the United States to take care of the children involved. What has been proposed here is not an exclusive program; and here is where I think the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from New York misread the purpose of the particular Corporation sought to be brought into existence. In the family assistance plan, which failed, there was provision for some $386 million for day care. In this bill there is some $250 million for day care.

That does not mean the proposals the Senators from Indiana or New York or Oklahoma have in mind would be immediately put out of existence because of the proposal. What the Senator from Louisiana is saying in this bill is this: We have been unsuccessful over the past decades in providing day-care centers. The old methods just are not working and we must find a mechanism that is right for today, and not a mechanism that has failed in the past.

What we are saying is that the Federal Corporation would be the coordinating corporation to supply inservice training and day-care facilities involving diversity and imagination. In some areas a church could be used. In some areas a school could be used. In some areas an apartment house could be used. In some areas an existing day-care center could be used. In other areas of the country where there are no day-care facilities, it might become necessary to build such facilities. So there is a great variety.

The Senator from Louisiana is bringing forth a new concept where the old concepts have failed. Unfortunately, the bureaucracy that exists through American life is just as strong in the entire social welfare field and there is a reluctance to try out new concepts and new ideas.

The ideas that are advanced by the Senator from Louisiana deserve our attention and cooperation. Three men will be appointed by the President of the United States with the advice and consent of the Senate to run the Corporation. It will have an advisory committee to advise the Directors.

The bill would permit the Child Care Corporation to make available a wide variety of child-care services where they are not available today. Such services would include educational, recreational, and home-care services.

No welfare agency, no community, no individual has any obligation to use the facilities supplied by the Federal Corporation. They can use any facilities in existence or to come into existence. This is not mandatory. It just is a mechanism to allow day care to become a reality. The goal of the Corporation is to arrange to make child care services available where they are needed. Its first priority will be to provide service to welfare recipients who need child care to undertake employment.

I have been intimately connected for many years with this great movement, and there is no group more dedicated to the improvement of social service laws than those in the day-care-center movement. Yet they have had great difficulty getting the movement off the ground, and, consequently, we find ourselves as a nation with only 10 percent of our needs being provided.

I commend the Senator from Louisiana for realizing that there is a new method, a new concept, to take care of the problems of tomorrow. I would hope the Senate would give attention to a new idea and recognize that his proposal is worth trying because past methods and past ideas have failed.

In addition, Mr. President, two other specific provisions of the pending social security legislation, H.R. 17550, deserve special consideration and support by the Senate.

Since the original medicare program was enacted in 1965, over 20 million Americans have been enrolled and are eligible for its benefits. However, many Americans have not been permitted to share in this program. In particular, public employees in a number of States, including Connecticut, are not eligible for medicare because they have not been part of the national social security program.

Several years ago, I introduced legislation to permit these employees to enroll in medicare. I introduced similar legislation again during this Congress. I am pleased to report that both the House of Representatives and the Senate Finance Committee have approved this concept. Section 202 of the present bill would permit voluntary enrollment in the hospital insurance program of people reaching age 65 who are not part of the social security system. The cost of this medicare insurance is estimated at $27 a month. State and public organizations, by agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will be permitted to purchase this needed protection for their members on a group basis.

The persons now affected most severely by exclusion from medicare are State and local employees, including three-quarters of a million teachers in 13 States as well as policemen and firemen, who are not part of the social security program but belong to their own retirement plan. Because eligibility for medicare was originally predicated on eligibility for social security benefits, these men and women who serve the public and teach our children have been left out of the medicare program.

Some type of hospital insurance, of course, has been available to these people, but only limited coverage is offered. Few private insurers make available comprehensive hospital insurance to the aged. Eligibility for medicare will assume these citizens of adequate health protection.

Mr. President, I am also pleased to note that this legislation makes an urgently needed and long-overdue increase in the retirement income tax credit available to taxpayers 65 years of age or over who have retired under a public retirement system.

Since social security benefits are not taxed, it is only a matter of equity to provide an offsetting tax credit for retirees who are not eligible for social security but have contributed to a retirement plan other than social security.

The retirement income tax credit was first enacted into law in 1954. In 1962, the credit for an individual was increased and a corresponding increase for married couples was passed in 1964. Since that time, social security benefits have been increased substantially: by 7 percent in 1965, 13 percent in 1967, 15 percent in 1969, and an additional 10 percent in the Senate version of H.R. 17550.

Regrettably, the retirement income tax credit has not kept pace.

On September 29, 1969, I introduced legislation to restore an element of tax equity to many of our older citizens by increasing the base amount on which the retirement credit is computed from $1,524 to $1,872 for individuals and from $2,286 to $2,805 for couples. This would increase the maximum credit from $228.60 to $280.80 for individuals and from $342.90 to $421.20 for couples. I am pleased that the House of Representatives and the Senate Finance Committee have adopted this provision and I hope the full Senate will support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has 1 minute remaining. Does the Senator yield back his time?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, how much time remains on both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Less than 1 minute now.

Mr. LONG. Just to summarize, Mr. President, we have heard the opposition to doing something to provide child care by Senators who themselves have introduced measures in this area. The measure of the Senator from New York would cost about $3 billion. The Senator from Indiana has a bill that would cost $6 billion. The Senator from Minnesota has a bill that might cost more than $6 billion.

In the committee bill, we are simply trying to provide $50 million to get a Corporation started in order to try to see that child care is provided. That is the best we have been able to work out in committee. In the past, we have not been able to get the job done by just providing money, so this time we provide both money and a mechanism to get the job done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the Harris-Javits amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1970

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17550) to amend the Social Security Act to provide increases in benefits, to improve computation methods, and to raise the earnings base under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis upon improvements in the operating effectiveness of such programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, following conversations I have had with the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), concerning possible hearings next year in regard to the entire subject of day care, I am willing now to go to third reading. On behalf of myself and the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), we are willing to forego offering the second amendment in regard to child care which was referred to in last night's agreement. We are willing to do that if the bill can go now directly to third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BELLMON). Under the agreement of last evening, the technical amendments may now be offered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have a number of technical amendments which I send to the desk. They are technical, clerical, perfecting, and conforming amendments, and I ask that they be considered and approved en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the technical amendments en bloc.

The technical amendments were agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on final passage. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, debate is limted to 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

Who yields time?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield control of my time to the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG).

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, notwithstanding the disappointment shared by many in this body, including the chairman of the committee, that parts of the committee-reported bill that we would like to see enacted cannot become law in this session of Congress, there yet remains in the bill $7.5 billion in benefits under social security and public welfare programs to beneficiaries, to persons who find it necessary to come to the public welfare program for assistance, and to those persons who desire jobs, job training, and child care, and other opportunities for a better life.

I think, Mr. President, that this is a landmark bill, that it is one of the largest social security-public welfare bills ever passed in the history of this country. In fact, it may very well be the largest bill of its kind in the public welfare and social security areas, perhaps even more significant than the medicare bill, so far as size and the effort to get on with the job of caring for those who depend upon our public welfare and our social security systems are concerned.

So I hope that the Senate will pass this bill. I believe that when we review what remains, we will find that this is a good bill and a credit to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I want to pay a well-deserved tribute to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG). He has spent long hours on this bill. In the hearings, he has been eminently fair in every respect, allowing every member of the committee to present his views fully. The work he has done and the motion he made in committee in support of the $100 minimum for social security, which is now a part of the bill, and the efforts he joined in toward raising the benefits by 10 percent, and the other wholesome provisions in the bill, are primarily due to his diligent work and dedicated efforts for the people of this country who are served by the social security, medicare, medicaid, and welfare programs of this country.

I honor him as my chairman of the committee. I believe he is entitled to the highest praise of the Senate for the bill that is now before us and is, I hope, about to be passed.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma. I salute him for the effective work the Senator has done in the committee, as well as here on the Senate floor, in regard to matters in which he was interested. I also believe it is well to point out that the Senators on the committee, the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE), the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), and others, all made major contributions to the bill that stands before us. Although there is, of course, a great deal of room for revision and debate on the controversial items, I think the Senate has come forth with an extremely significant bill and one which I believe will do the Senate credit.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I join other Senators in congratulating the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. It could almost be said in advance that this could not be done. The Senator from Louisiana, in a rare example of subordinating his own feelings and his own deep convictions, got it done. I think he is entitled to all the credit we can give him. Even on the Child Care Corporation on which we differ, I have never said and I do not say now that it is not an ingenious and fresh idea. I can pledge to the Senator, for myself, that I will dig into this matter very carefully. For all I know, we may well end up with exactly that. So that I think the Senator has served the Senate remarkably well, and I would like to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the Senator from Louisiana.

I also join with my colleagues in praise of those colleagues and staff persons of both the executive and legislative branches who worked so hard on the family assistance plan, and particularly of Mitchell Ginsburg, former head of the Human Resources Administration and now dean of Columbia School of Racial Work, who so tirelessly made every effort to obtain passage this year. It is my hope that early and favorable consideration next year will make this year's effort a fulfilled one both for the individual worker and for the poor.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues, the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from New York, in paying tribute to our distinguished chairman for his work in accomplishing legislative results which will take place momentarily in the passage of one of the most momentous bills which will have passed the Senate since I became a Member of this body.

I think that the amendments we have made to the Social Security Act raising the benefits by 10 percent with a minimum of $100 a month can do a great deal for the needy people of our country. Also the amendments that raise the benefits to our aged, blind, and the totally disabled people will be of tremendous benefit to millions of Americans.

Also a number of amendments in the field of medicare and medicaid will be most beneficial to hundreds of thousands of Americans as well as to the taxpayers of this country.

In the area of welfare reform, the Senate Finance Committee adopted amendments which I offered, that were based primarily upon the Auerbach Report, a government-financed study of the work incentive program. These amendments will at long last bring some real reform into the area of welfare and will offer training and job opportunities to our people to the point that they will have an income and will become taxpayers rather than beneficiaries of welfare.

I, too, want to pay tribute to our ranking minority member, Senator WILLIAMS of Delaware, who has made great contributions. The Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. HANSEN), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. MILLER), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. GORE), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MCCARTHY), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. BYRD), the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), and the Senator from Idaho (Mr. JORDAN) on both sides of the aisle made major contributions to this mammoth piece of legislation.

I think it is a landmark in the history of the Senate.

I congratulate my distinguished chairman and all the members of the Finance Committee who made such valiant contributions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be recognized for 5 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, the legislation that we are about to pass has much in it that is worthwhile.

I must repeat, however, my disappointment that the family assistance program did not come to a vote. I believe the Senate should have been given the opportunity to vote on the merits of this proposal.

I, too, have the highest praise for the chairman and the other members of the Finance Committee for their hard work.

I take a few minutes to pay tribute to my legislative assistant, Mr. Taggart Adams, who over the period of a year has worked so closely with me on the family assistance program. He has shown extreme dedication and his knowledge certainly makes us all realize the value of staff assistance in our work in the Senate.

I would say that no Member of the Senate knows more about the family assistance program than Mr. Taggart Adams.

I also pay tribute to Mr. Mitchell Ginsberg of New York, now dean of University of Columbia School of Social Work, who really literally worked himself sick in trying to work out the compromises necessary to resolve the many differences which arose in drafting a workable family assistance program. Mitchell Ginsberg deserves the things of everyone's concern with alleviating the blight of poverty in the United States. I think it will be shown that these two men have been one most responsible for developing the foundations necessary for the eventual passage of family assistance.

Special tribute should also be paid to the following members of the Department of HEW, Under Secretary Jack Veneman, Deputy Under Secretary Bob Patricelli, Special Assistant to the Undersecretary Tom Joe, and Deputy Assistant Secretary Howard Cohen.

I am confident that early next year the Senate will have an opportunity to completely consider and debate the family assistance program, and I predict that the family assistance program will be adopted next year. The men I have named must be credited with a large part of this success.

I also point out that, while on the floor today by a narrow vote, the chairman's proposal for a child care corporation was stricken from the bill, it is my personal opinion that this is one of the most imaginative proposals to have come forth in the entire field of social welfare. Once it is understood that we are breaking out from the bureaucracy and treating social problems, I believe that next year the Senate will have a better opportunity to understand the proposal of the Senator from Louisiana and the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in paying tribute to the members of the committee, particularly to the chairman of the committee who marshalled this bill through to a successful enactment. The Senate bill provides for a 10-percent increase for those on social welfare as against a 5-percent provision by the House.

I would hope that the same kind of ingenuity, the same kind of acumen and energy will be exerted in the conference to have the House go along with the Senate on a 10-percent increase rather than 5 percent.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I join in paying tribute to the chairman of the committee for the remarkable work he and the committee have done.

Let me say first to the chairman that his fairness, tolerance, patience, skill, and good humor all throughout the consideration of this measure have been tremendous. He has won for himself the undying respect of many Senators for his performance on this measure.

May I ask the distinguished chairman a question about section 520 of the pending measure?

In title V of the bill—the so-called WIN amendment—the words "special work projects" are stricken and the words "public service employment" are inserted.

Also, there are a number of other references in section 520 to "public service employment."

I worked very closely with the chairman on this matter and with Senator TALMADGE who offered it in Committee, and Senator RIBICOFF, who also has a great interest in this subject and had prepared a parallel amendment.

I understand that "Operation Mainstream" and "New Careers"—programs authorized in part E of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended—would be included within the public service employment intended by the pending measure.

I would like to read very briefly from the Economic Opportunity Act, part E, section 161, a portion of the congressional finding with respect to the Operation Mainstream and New Careers programs.

The Congress found that:

[These two programs] providing jobs for the unemployed and low-income persons leading to broader career opportunities are uniquely effective; that, in addition to providing persons assisted with jobs, the key to their economic independence, these programs are of advantage to the community at large in that they are directed at community beautification and betterment and the improvement of health, education, welfare, public safety, and other public services;

Am I correct in my assumption that such programs will be included in the concept of public service amendment envisaged by the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have such time as I require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely correct. He will find the committee report emphasizes and underlines what he is saying here, that it is expected that the Secretary would take full advantage of these existing programs in providing public service employment.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD part E of sections 161 through 167, the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended, already referred to.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PART E—SPECIAL WORK AND CAREER DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 161. The Congress finds that the "Mainstream" program aimed primarily at the chronically unemployed and the "New Careers" program providing jobs for the unemployed and low-income persons leading to broader career opportunities are uniquely effective; that, in addition to providing persons assisted with jobs, the key to their economic independence, these programs are of advantage to the community at large in that they are directed at community beautification and betterment and the improvement of health, education, welfare, public safety, and other public services; and that, while these programs are important and necessary components of comprehensive work and training programs, there is a need to encourage imaginative and innovative use of these programs, to enlarge the authority to operate them, and to increase the resources available for them.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS

SEC. 162. (a) The Director is authorized to provide financial assistance to public or private nonprofit agencies to stimulate and support efforts to provide the unemployed with jobs and the low-income worker with greater career opportunity. Programs authorized under this section shall include the following:

(1) A special program to be known as "Mainstream" which involves work activities directed to the needs of those chronically unemployed poor who have poor employment prospects and are unable, because of age, physical condition, obsolete or inadequate skills, declining economic conditions, other causes of a lack of employment opportunity, or otherwise, to secure appropriate employment or training assistance under other programs, and which, in addition to other services provided, will enable such persons to participate in projects for the betterment or beautification of the community or area served by the program, including without limitation activities which will contribute to the management conservation, or development of natural resources, recreational areas, Federal, State, and local government parks, highways, and other lands, the rehabilitation of housing, the improvement of public facilities, and the improvement and expansion of health, education, day care, and recreation services;

(2) A special program to be known as "New Careers" which will provide unemployed or low-income persons with jobs leading to career opportunities, including new types of careers, in programs designed to improve the physical, social, economic, or cultural condition of the community or area served in fields of public service, including without limitation health, education, welfare, recreation, day care, neighborhood redevelopment, and public safety, which provide maximum prospects for on-the-job training, promotion, and advancement and continued employment without Federal assistance, which give promise of contributing to the broader adoption of new methods of structuring jobs and new methods of providing job ladder opportunities, and which provide opportunities for further occupational training to facilitate career advancement.

(b) The Director is authorized to provide financial and other assistance to insure the provision of supportive and follow-up services to supplement programs under this part including health services, counseling, day care for children, transportation assistance, and other special services necessary to assist individuals to achieve success in these programs and in employment.

ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS

SEC. 163. The Director shall prescribe regulations to assure that programs under this part have adequate internal administrative controls, accounting requirements, personnel standards, evaluation procedures, availability of in-service training and technical assistance programs, and other policies as may be necessary to promote the effective use of funds.

SPECIAL CONDITIONS

SEC. 164. (a) The Director shall not provide financial assistance for any program under this part unless he determines, in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, that—

(1) no participant will be employed on projects involving political parties, or the construction, operation, or maintenance of so much of any facility as is used or to be used for sectarian instruction or as a place for religious worship;

(2) the program will not result in the displacement of employed workers or impair existing contracts for services, or result in the substitution of Federal for other funds in connection with the work that would otherwise be performed;

(3) the rates of pay for time spent in work-training and education, and other conditions of employment, will be appropriate and reasonable in the light of such factors as the type of work, geographical region, and proficiency of the participant; and

(4) the program will, to the maximum extent feasible, contribute to the occupational development and upward mobility of individual participants.

(b) For programs which provide work and training related to physical improvements, preference shall be given to those improvements which will be substantially used by low-income persons and families or which will contribute substantially to amenities or facilities in urban or rural areas having high concentrations or proportions of low-income persons and families.

(c) Programs approved under this part shall, to the maximum extent feasible, contribute to the elimination of artificial barriers to employment and occupational advancement.

(d) Projects under this part shall provide for maximum feasible use of resources under other Federal programs for work and training and the resources of the private sector.

PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS

SEC. 165. (a) Participants in programs under this part must be unemployed or low-income persons. The Director, in consultation with the Commissioner of Social Security, shall establish criteria for low income, taking into consideration family size, urban-rural and farm-nonfarm differences, and other relevant factors. Any individual shall be deemed to be from a low-income family if the family receives cash welfare payments.

(b) Participants must be permanent residents of the United States or of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(c) Participants shall not be deemed Federal employees and shall not be subject to the provisions of law relating to Federal employment, including those relating to hours of work, rates of compensation, leave, unemployment compensation, and Federal employment benefits.

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE

SEC. 166. The Director shall establish criteria designed to achieve an equitable distribution of assistance along the States. In developing those criteria, he shall consider, among other relevant factors, the ratios of population, unemployment, and family income levels. Of the sums appropriated or allocated for any fiscal year for programs authorized under this part not more than 12½ per centum shall be used within any one State.

LIMITATIONS ON FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 167. Programs assisted under this part shall be subject to the provisions of section 131 of this Act.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Connecticut led the fight on this particular provision. The Senator is correct in his interpretation of that section.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, the amendment was based primarily upon the Auerbach report which was financed with Federal funds. They made their report and neither the Department of HEW nor the Labor Department put their recommendations into effect.

It was the opinion of the Committee on Finance that they ought to be put into effect.

I had offered an amendment making 10 important changes in the work incentive program. The distinguished Senator from Connecticut had offered some amendments along parallel lines. In committee, the Senator from Connecticut very gallantly said:

I think that Senator Talmadge's amendments are better than mine. I think his amendments should be adopted.

That is what the committee did.

We are hopeful that these amendments will bring some order out of chaos in the WIN program which was adopted by the Senate 3 years ago and never fully implemented.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my speech of July 20, introducing my amendment, be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

My amendment was submitted as an amendment to H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act passed by the House. However, when the Finance Committee rejected the Family Assistance Plan, I offered my proposal as an amendment to H.R. 17550, the Social Security Amendments of 1970.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUBMISSION OF AMENDMENT TO H.R. 16311 THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENT NO. 788

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President on several previous occasions I have spoken out against certain aspects of H.R. 16311, the administration's Family Assistance Act.

I have expressed doubts about the cost figures given by the administration.

I have expressed grave reservations about the work incentive aspects of the bill.

I have shown the weaknesses of the evidence produced by the "New Jersey experiment," which is the only proof that this administration has presented to show that its family assistance plan will work.

On May 14, I introduced an amendment to change the name of H.R. 16311 from "The Family Assistance Act of 1970" to "The Welfare Expansion Act of 1970." This was done to clarify the true issues involved in the Finance Committee's consideration of this legislation.

Although the administration's bill has been widely touted as welfare reform, the chief characteristic of the bill which passed the House of Representatives is not welfare reform. It is welfare expansion. The most noticeable feature of this legislation is to extend welfare benefits to 15 million additional Americans.

I had hoped that the revised version of H.R. 16311, which the administration recently sent back to the Finance Committee, would make meaningful improvements which would add substance to administration rhetoric. Unfortunately, I have been disappointed.

The purpose of the amendment I offer today is to strengthen the work incentive, job training, and job placement features of the administration bill so that the administration slogan about "workfare rather than welfare" will have an element of truth.

When President Nixon first announced in August 1969 that he would seek major welfare legislation, he selected as his major theme his intention to "turn welfare into workfare." Listening to the kind of publicity given to the President's proposals, you would get the impression that Congress had never turned its attention to the problems involved in making welfare recipients independent.

As my colleagues in the Senate know, this is simply not the case. Eight years ago, Congress passed the Public Welfare Amendments of 1962, which were aimed at preventing or reducing dependency by offering rehabilitative and other social services to welfare recipients and other persons likely to become dependent.

This approach was not sufficient, however, and as the welfare rolls began increasing at an accelerated rate, the Committee on Finance in 1967 designed the work incentive program which subsequently became law. I supported the establishment of the work incentive program at that time, and I still feel that it is good basic legislation.

The Labor Department in administering it, however, has failed to meet the promise of the legislation to lead welfare recipients to useful productive lives.

All too often petty jealousy between the Labor Department and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, on the local as well as the national level, has undermined the program's sound intent, and both Departments have generously provided funds to the National Welfare Rights Organization, whose stated goal is to defeat the purposes of the work incentive program.

The result is understandable. Although there are about 10 million people who receive welfare in this country, only about 50,000 are currently enrolled in a work incentive program. Inept administration of the WIN program has made it a dismal failure.

Mr. President, in view of this record of dismal failure, one would think that the administration would have given highest priority to strengthening and reforming job training and job placement programs in any proposed welfare reform bill.

But what does the administration's welfare bill do? It repeals the present program, replacing it with vague provisions allowing the Secretary of Labor to provide any kind of training he may feel like providing to any person registered under the family assistance plan in whatever order of priority he deems appropriate.

Since the bill requires the registration of persons already working full time, the Secretary may decide not to train persons whose sole income is from welfare, but only to take people out of work who are now working and to train them for other jobs. Because the bill would extend what amounts to a military pay raise to 50,000 military families, the Secretary of Labor could decide to provide training only to privates on KP.

The examples I have named may sound ridiculous, Mr. President, but this could happen under the vague language of the President's welfare bill now pending in the Senate Committee on Finance.

The past record of the Department of Labor and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in administering the work incentive program convinces me that such ridiculous examples are not beyond the realm of possibility.

On April 29 and 30, and May 1, the Committee on Finance began its hearings on the President's welfare bill. We recessed them after 2½ days, after hearing from former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Robert Finch, because it became clear that the administration knew very little about its bill and its impact.

In fact, today, 2½ months later, the Department is still working on the answers to questions we raised at the end of April about the bill. For example, present law has since July 1969 required States to disregard a portion of earnings in determining need for welfare as a work incentive.

I asked the Secretary on April 29 how many welfare recipients have benefited from these earned income disregard provisions, and to what extent earnings of welfare recipients have increased as a result of this provision. This seemed to me a very basic question in view of the fact the Department was recommending substantial changes in the earned income exemption. I found to my surprise that they had no idea of the answer of this question. To this date they have not submitted the answer to my question of 2½ months ago, and this is but one of many examples.

Mr. President, in a way I am sorry we did not have the chance to interrogate the Secretary of Labor before the hearings were recessed in the beginning of May. For if we had questioned him, I am sure that the Department of Labor would have taken more seriously the committee's directive that the bill be rewritten to provide a meaningful work incentive program.

In looking through the administration's revised bill, I find that they have made no substantive change of note in the work incentive provisions.

Mr. President, the Labor Department last year contracted with Auerbach Corp. to review and evaluate operations under the work incentive program. That firm conducted on-site visits in 23 cities and reviewed the programs there in depth. The report of the Auerbach Corp. states that:

"The basic idea of WIN is workable—though some aspects of the legislation require modification."

The Auerbach report details the administrative, and in some cases legislative changes which are needed in the light of experience to improve the sound legislation Congress enacted in 1967.

Unfortunately, the administration has largely ignored the conclusions of the Auerbach report and has gone off in another direction in the legislative proposals it has incorporated in both the original welfare bill and in the administration revision.

Today, Mr. President, I am submitting an amendment to the welfare bill designed to improve the present work incentive program along the lines that experience has shown are necessary. I would like to outline here what my amendment would do.

First, it would mandate coordination between the Departments of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare on the national, regional and local levels. Today, certain regulations of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare on the work incentive program conflict with regulations of the Department of Labor. My amendment would require that all regulations on the work incentive program be issued jointly by both agencies, and that they be issued within 6 months of enactment of the bill.

Second, it requires that a joint HEW-Labor committee be set up to assure that forms, reports, and other matters are handled consistently between the two departments. It is imperative that the work incentive program be operated under one set of guidelines, policies, and administrative procedures.

Third, under present law the welfare agency is supposed to prepare an employability plan for each appropriate case and make referrals to the Department of Labor. The Department of Labor is then to prepare an employability plan and place the individual in employment, on-the-job training, institutional training, or public service employment. Problems have arisen in this process.

In some cases, the welfare agency has not referred sufficient numbers of persons, while in other cases they have referred too many persons, without first arranging for the supportive services, such as day care, needed for the welfare recipient to participate in the work incentive program. Due to lack of coordination between the welfare agency and the Labor Department, persons have sometimes been referred who do not match the training or employment opportunities available in the area.

My amendment would solve this problem by requiring the welfare agency to set up a unit with the responsibility of arranging for supportive services so that the welfare recipients may participate in the work incentive program. Furthermore, it would require that the welfare agency and the Labor Department on the local level enter into a joint agreement on an operational plan—that is, the kinds of training they will arrange for, the kinds of job development the Labor Department will undertake, and the kinds of job opportunities both agencies will have to prepare persons for during the period covered by the plan. In addition, both agencies will jointly develop employability plans for individuals, consistent with the overall operational plan, which will assure that individuals will receive the necessary supportive services and preparation for employment without unnecessary waiting.

Fourth, on-the-job training and public service employment have been virtually nonexistent under the work incentive program as administered by the Department of Labor. Instead, that Department has spent most of the work incentive program appropriations on institutional training, which often did not lead to employment, particularly in today's rising unemployment. What is lacking is job development, through utilization of both on-the-job training with private employers, and public service employment.

My amendment would require that 40 percent of the funds spent under the work incentive program appropriation be for on-the-job training and public service employment. If at least this amount is not spent on programs which in effect guarantee placement, it seems to me that we are wasting money if we spend it on institutional training.

Fifth, as an incentive for employers in the private market to hire individuals who are placed in their employment through the work incentive program, my amendment would provide a tax credit equal to 20 percent of the wages and salaries of these individuals. The credit would apply to wages paid to these employees during their first 12 months of employment. The tax credit would be recaptured if the employer terminated the employment of the individual during the first 12 months of his employment or before the end of the following 12 months. This recapture provision would not apply if the employee became disabled or left work voluntarily.

This tax incentive approach is an adaptation of a bill I have introduced previously, S. 3156, the Employment Opportunity Act of 1969. That bill provides for a tax credit for job training and for employees who are hired from a work incentive program.

The tax incentive is a key provision of my amendment. No work incentive or job training program can ever be successful unless we have the full cooperation of private business interests. In many cases, welfare recipients will be very poor employment risks. They will need a great deal of costly training and special consideration before they can achieve full productivity. It is unfair and unrealistic to expect a profit-motivated businessman to undertake this responsibility without some compensation. My tax incentive provision is designed to bridge the gap between a government program and productive employment.

Sixth, my amendment would simplify funding arrangements for public service employment under the work incentive program by providing 100 percent Federal funding for the first year, and a 90-percent Federal sharing of the costs in subsequent years.

Seventh, my amendment would establish clear priority among persons registering for employment and training by requiring the Secretary of Labor to accord priority in the following order:

First. Unemployed fathers;

Second. Dependent children and relatives age 16 and over who are not in school, working, or in training;

Third. Mothers who volunteer for participation;

Fourth. Individuals working full-time who wish to participate; and Fifth. All other persons.

My amendment would not require persons working full time to register for employment and training, although they could volunteer to upgrade their skills if they wished. Under my amendment, no mother would be required to undergo work and training until every single person who volunteered for work and training was first placed. The evidence shows that there are many more persons who wish to participate voluntarily than the program can reasonably handle in the foreseeable future.

Eighth, my amendment would require, on a State-by-State basis, that at least 15 percent of the registrants for the work incentive program be enrolled in the program each year. If the State falls below this level, Federal matching for State supplementary payments would be reduced.

Ninth, operations under the work incentive program have often failed to meet the objective of the program because too little attention was paid to the actual labor market conditions and requirements in the geographic area. My amendment would require the establishment of local labor-market advisory councils whose function it would be to identify present and future local labor-market needs. The findings of this council would serve as the basis for the work incentive program operational plans on the local level.

Finally, my amendment would specify that appropriations for the work incentive program be allocated among the States in proportion to the number of registrants for employment and training in the States.

Mr. President, my amendment would make basic and fundamental changes in the work incentive provisions of the President's family assistance plan. However, it would not solve all the problems that inherent in H.R. 16311. I know that other members of the Finance Committee have their own ideas as to how to correct some of the deficiencies and the inequities in the administration's revised bill. We will resume hearings on the family assistance plan tomorrow.

I would not care to predict whether the Family Assistance Act will receive the approval of the Finance Committee and the Senate during the current session. I do, however, want to emphasize that I consider my amendment vital, whether we have a family assistance plan this year or in the distant future.

No one is more aware than I that the Government has a responsibility to provide for individuals who are unable to care for themselves—the aged, blind, disabled, and the very young. My legislative record in this session and in past sessions of Congress will show that I have consistently supported and sometimes introduced measures to benefit this group.

However, I feel equally strong that we can never solve the social problems of this Nation by guaranteeing able-bodied individuals a minimum standard of living. The chief thrust of any reform effort must be directed at providing job training and job placement for those individuals who are able and willing to work.

Mr. President, I believe that this amendment will provide a constructive alternative to the very deficient provisions in the welfare bill before the Finance Committee.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has been very helpful and tremendously cooperative on this important aspect of the bill. I am most grateful to him.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, all the members of the committee deserve the praise in this case. My amendments were adopted unanimously. The staff of the Finance Committee as well as my own staff have worked diligently for months on this matter. I offered these amendments hoping to bring some order out of chaos. The Committee on Finance adopted them unanimously without any change whatever.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I confirm the comments of the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Georgia. We were disturbed in the Finance Committee over the fact that the WIN program was not successful and was not being utilized. The estimates of the Department of Labor were much lower than should have been the case. The provisions in the bill provide that at least 40 percent of the funds be spent for public service jobs or on job training with some meaning of the interpretation of the definition read by the Senator from California with respect to the concept of public service jobs.

We would hope the Labor Department would really become interested and become involved in public service jobs and on-the-job training so there would be meaningful reason to move people out of welfare, and not into dead end jobs.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I wish to express my thanks to the Senator from Connecticut for his leadership in this area and open-mindedness and courtesy throughout.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I join Senators in paying tribute to our distinguished chairman, the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG). He has been very courteous and fair with all members of the committee. He has so conducted himself on the floor of the Senate.

It seems to me I can never recall a case where a chairman has gone to such lengths to complete a bill and waive points in it which he personally desired very much. There were provisions in the bill as reported by the committee in which my distinguished chairman was very much interested. Yet in order that the bill might advance and in order that our social security beneficiaries might have an increase in benefits now, he waived those provisions—not for other provisions in the bill, but because of the threat of floor amendments. I think he is to be commended for that.

I personally wish to thank the chairman for his kindness to me. I also would like to include praise for the distinguished Senator from Delaware (Mr. WILLIAMS) who is retiring. Had the Senate followed the lead of the chairman of the Committee on Finance and the ranking minority member (Mr. WILLIAMS) this matter could have been disposed of days ago and we could have moved nearer completion of our business and restoration of the respect of the country.

Again I wish to pay tribute to our fine staff for their dedicated work, long hours, professional competence and I know they will be called upon for a great deal of intensive and difficult work and long hours as we approach the conference on the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. I wish to join with other Senators on the committee in extending appreciation and praise to him for the excellent job he has done in managing this very important bill. Like all important pieces of legislation to come before the Senate, there are some things in the bill which we like and there are some things in the bill which we do not like.

To me one of the most serious defects in the bill is the fact that the $100 minimum social security is to be funded out of the social security trust fund. As I pointed out on the floor previously this means that the relatively low-income wage earners who are trying to maintain their families are going to be paying social security taxes to make up for the lack of taxes paid by so many of these recipients of the $100 minimum.

There is no question that many of those $100 minimum recipients need the money, but that money should come from the general fund of the Treasury and not out of the hides of the low-income people who are paying taxes. That causes a very serious minus in the bill.

I am also disappointed that the bill does not contain something covering catastrophic illness, disease, and injury. The Senator from Louisiana offered what I thought was a reasonable approach to this serious problem, one we should have faced up to and taken action on even before action on medicare and medicaid.

As I said in the debate on medicare, I can become more concerned about a man 35 years of age who is taken with multiple sclerosis than with someone who happens to be over 65 who may be a wealthy individual. The Senate has not faced up to that serious problem.

The Senator from Louisiana did his best to meet that situation. I compliment him on his statesmanship in being willing to delete this very important provision in order to get on with the job of the social security bill.

But Mr. President, the most unprecedented and most important feature of the bill is the automatic increase in social security benefits to keep pace with increases in the cost of living.

The Senate will recall that in 1962, we took such action with respect to civil service retirees. That is what gave me the idea to introduce, and I believe it was for the first time, a proposal in 1963 to provide for automatic increases in social security benefits to keep pace with increases in the cost of living. I said at the time I introduced this proposal that if we did that in 1962, for civil service retirees, we should do it for social security beneficiaries. I introduced that proposal again in 1965, in 1967, and in 1969.

Thanks to the attention and the hard work on the part of some of my colleagues and a number of the senior citizens' organizations around the country, this proposal has been increasing in its bipartisanship and support. Last year President Nixon was the first President in the history of this country to recommend such a proposal to Congress. I think it is a great thing that we now have this pretty well locked into law because the House bill does contain the basic elements of the automatic increase provision.

There are a few differences over the financing, but I am sure those can be handled in conference. So, Mr. President, above everything in this bill, I think this is of utmost importance. I have talked to a great many older people, not only in my State, but all around the country, and if there is one priority they want, it is some assurance that if inflation is going to take over and diminish the purchasing power of their benefits, that there would be some automatic way of enabling them to roll with the punch of inflation so they would not be hit with hardship.

It is true that over the years Congress periodically has increased social security benefits so that over a period of years we might say we have caught up to inflation; but the fact remains that during the interim literally billions of dollars have been taken away from social security beneficiaries because of inflation, and these losses have not been covered by Congress when we finally got around to increasing benefits.

In connection with my concern over the $100 minimum, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Record excerpts from my separate views which are printed on page 447 of the committee report.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

SEPARATE VIEWS OF MR. MILLER

* * * * * *

Second, the increase in the minimum social security benefits from the present $64 per month to $100 per month at an annual cost of $1.5 billion to the social security trust fund is inequitable. Acting impulsively on the simplistic plea that "no one can live on sixty four dollars a month", the Senate last December adopted such an amendment to the Tax Reform Act of 1969. This was quickly disposed of by the House Conferees during the conference on the bill who noted that a large number of the recipients of the social security minimum already receive benefits from one or two other pensions—civil service retirement, state and local retirement, or private corporation retirement; and that state old age assistance payments prevent anyone from having to live on $64 per month. Instead of applying the proposed 10 percent increase in social security benefits across the boards to include the present minimum, which would mean an increase from $64 to $70.40 per month, the bill provides an increase in the minimum to $100—regardless of need—at a cost to the taxpayers of $1.5 billion per year.

Worse yet, this $1.5 billion plus also the amount needed to cover a 10 percent increase in the minimum would be paid for by those paying social security taxes into the social security trust fund. Inasmuch as those who receive the "minimum" have not paid taxes sufficient to cover their benefits, the load is thrown on those who are already paying taxes sufficient to cover their benefits. In short, most of the minimum social security benefits provided by the bill represents welfare—not tax paid insurance. It should, therefore, be paid out of the general fund of the Treasury. Moreover, as welfare, the payments should be made on the basis of need, taking into account other resources of the recipient.

The bill makes no attempt to order our priorities. Instead, it contains all major social security proposals—the 10 percent increase, the increase to $100 in the minimum, and coverage of catastrophic illness and disease. It would seem that the single most urgent action to be taken—one that should have been taken long ago, before medicare and medicaid—is coverage of catastrophic illness and disease. Also, it is only fair to bring social security benefits into line with increases in the cost of living which have occurred since benefits were last increased. It would appear that this would fall somewhere between the 5 percent increase provided by the House and the 10 percent increase provided by the Senate Finance Committee. The increase in the "minimum"—particularly the $1.5 billion needed to go beyond a cost-of-living increase—is inequitable and excessive.

Those who would be paying the bill should know what lies in store for them. The tax base would be raised from $7,800 to $9,000, with the following rate changes:

TAX RATES ON BOTH EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE

[In percent]

Year	Under present law	Under the bill	Under the bill without $100 minimum
1970	4.8
1971	5.2	5.2	5.1
1972	5.2	5.5	5.4
1973-74	5.65	5.6	5.5
1975	5.65	6.35	6.35
1976-79	5.7	6.35	6.35
1980-85	5.8	7.0	7.0

TAX RATES ON SELF-EMPLOYED PERSONS

1970	6.9
1971	7.5	7.4	7.3
1972	7.5	7.7	7.6
1973-74	7.65	7.8	7.7
1975	7.65	[1] 8.35	[1] 8.35
1976-79	7.7	[1] 8.35	[1] 8.35
1980-85	7.8	[1] 8.5	[1] 8.5

[1] Additional costs of cash benefits are borne by employer-employee tax revenue because of 7 percent limitation on tax for underwriting cash benefits. Excess over 7 percent is attributable to financing medicare and catastrophic coverage.

Applying these various rates to the "maximum" tax base of $7,800 (under present law) and $9,000 under the bill would result in the following maximum tax:

MAXIMUM TAX ON BOTH EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE

Year	Under present law	Under the bill	Under the bill without $100 minimum

Although I believe that most people will be willing to pay increased taxes to assure cost-of-living increases in social security benefits, a reasonable degree of medicare coverage, and coverage under the catastrophic illness and disease program, we have reached the point of a taxpayers' revolt against tax increases which are used to fund low-priority and unnecessary, untimely, or inequitable social security benefits.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee.

I think it would be redundant to repeat what has been so beautifully said already about the great job that has been done by our chairman and by the staff.

I do want to take this occasion to note the great contribution that has been made by the distinguished Senator from Delaware, who is retiring by his own choice from the Senate and this committee at this time.

I suspect that I share the feelings that everyone else in the country does over the failure of this Congress to get into welfare reform, but I am not certain at all that some of the proposals that were made would have achieved the objectives that were spelled out by the President of the United States—objectives to which I suspect we could all subscribe.

In this regard, I think the contribution that has been made by our great and loved friend from Delaware (Mr. WILLIAMS) may be significant as the years roll along.

I am especially appreciative of the great job our chairman has done in hearing this matter, in seeing that everyone who had a contribution to make was given an opportunity to have his say.

I hope that as we approach the coming session we will be able to examine more closely and to know better beforehand what would result from some proposals we have had before us before they become the law of the land.

I remember what the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) said some time ago, when he said had he known then what he now knows, he would never have recommended the medicare and medicaid programs that this country now has without their first having been tried out. I say we ought to take this same approach with family assistance.

I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. LONG. I thank the distinguished Senator. May I say, in support of what the Senator has said, the distinguished Senator from Delaware brought to the attention of the committee, and also the Senate, a great number of problems that had not been considered when the bill passed the House of Representatives. I am positive that when act on a more comprehensive welfare reform, the deep insight that was evidenced by the Senator from Delaware will reflect itself in our final decision. As he pointed out, while the plan sent to us looked pretty good on paper if one considered only the cash assistance program, if you looked at the other social welfare programs—food stamps, public housing, medicaid, and child care—in terms of a welfare recipient's incentive to work, then a plan had seemed on its face to make good sense did not make much sense at all. It was that contribution from the Senator from Delaware which I think will eventually result in a better bill.

I would like to mention also the arduous and long hours put in by the distinguished senior Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), whose time spent in the committee room I believe was exceeded only by that of the Senator from Delaware and, perhaps that of the chairman. Senator ANDERSON put in a fantastic number of hours working on this bill, and I am sure all the members of the committee appreciate his contributions to it. He is not present at this moment, but I certainly want to mention the fine contributions he made.

I yield to the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN).

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, I join in the tributes being paid to our distinguished chairman for his fairness, equity, and patience. I concur in the accolades that have been paid to him. I especially want to extend my thanks to him for the consideration he gave me and the many proposals I made, especially on the conservation of jobs in this Nation of ours, his ability to relate to those problems, with the long experience he has had on the committee.

I certainly commend him on the way he handles the committee, keeping everything moving along, being patient, and still stern in his desire and demand that we accomplish our objectives. I, too, commend him for the teamwork he has displayed, working with the distinguished senior Senator from Delaware, who will now be leaving us, which will be a great loss. A very fine person will be taking over as the ranking minority member. We have had the complete cooperation of the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) throughout the years he has been on the committee.

We have a tremendous task ahead, and our chairman recognizes that. I know he has agreed to have hearings on several subjects in which I am involved and which I think are very important to the future of the Nation. His recognition of the problems has been of great help to us.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GOODELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me a few minutes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the Senator from New York.

THE NEED FOR FAMILY ASSISTANCE

Mr. GOODELL. Mr. President, the fictional honorable Senator from South Carolina, Seab Cooley, well summed up in one of Allen Drury's works the problems which we have had with the family assistance plan and social security. He said that—

> What worries me about that office [is that] . . . a man can get to balancing so many things against so many other things that sometimes all he does is balance. He never does really move . . . forward; he's too busy balancing, worrying about what this [one's] going to say or that [one's] going to think. Sometimes you have to go straight ahead and say damn them all. . . .

Indeed, we have balanced. We have balanced so judiciously, so protractedly, so well that we have balanced ourselves—although necessarily so, at this point—right out of the opportunity to pass the most crucial domestic legislation which the President has proposed. In so procrastinating, in so abandoning once again the wretched and the poor, we have confirmed their notion that they are, in Ralph Ellison's term, the "invisible men" of this Nation—those whose needs it is all too easy and costless to consign to the ambiguity of the next Congress, or to oblivion.

There is, Mr. President, a dangerous new phenomenon in this country, a phenomenon which is perpetuated and augmented by our failure to pass the family assistance plan this session. As there was in ancient Rome at the beginnings of its decline, there is here an underclass of, if you will, "proles"—a forgotten class of people to whom few respond, and about whose anxieties fewer still truly care. One sees it in the ghettos in my State—the vacant stare, sometimes the feral stare, of the teenager on the stoop who has dropped out of school, whose family is in dissolution, who has perceived only poverty and passivity all his life—the child and the teenager who has a past which he wishes only to repress, a future he has no motivation to affect. This is the child who becomes addicted to narcotics because he feels the need to withdraw from the only painful world he knows, the child who believes—in a vicious self-fulfilling prophecy—that he will grow up to become nothing, the child who can have no dreams.

As bad as our present welfare crisis is, it will become far, far worse, for this underclass without hope will mature to swell the ranks of the impoverished, to swell the ranks of those who look upon what we see as the comfortable world through windows of despair. They will have children, and their children will have children, in a seemingly never-ending cycle that expands the number of those who are shut out from society as we know it.

Although the President's family assistance plan is inadequate in many respects, it does represent the first step toward meeting that crisis of hopelessness. It is a step toward providing that underclass with the social services requisite to bringing its members to the point that they can begin to be motivated to improve themselves. It is a step toward dignifying and helping the working poor, those yeomen of the American mythology who are now motivated to make it within our free enterprise labor market, and who are suffering for their efforts to meet our ideal and to feed their children.

FAP represents, in short, a beginning toward restoration of the impoverished into the society of those who can dream, those who dare hope, those who will find the strength to risk job training and work. It is a beginning toward a transformation of that underclass into members of society.

It is, then, essential that the next Congress make up its collective mind, for good and all, that we cannot in conscience allow hunger in this land, that we cannot allow 5-year-olds in the ghettoes of Harlem and the hollows of Appalachia to attend miserable schools in clothes so tattered as to leave them exposed to the cold of the elements and the derision of their classmates. An income supplementation bill must be passed in the next Congress, and I pledge—albeit from the sidelines—to do my best to help bring that about.

Our existing welfare system has failed us. It discriminates among the poor, aiding some and ignoring others in a wholly arbitrary fashion. It provides incentives only for idleness, dependence and family breakup. Designed to save money instead of saving people, it tragically ends by doing neither.

The present welfare structure leaves the amount of welfare benefits wholly to the discretion of the States and localities. This has created a crazy patchwork, in which benefit levels range from a high of $70 per month per child in New York City to the shockingly low figure of $10 per month per child in Mississippi. Those States and localities that take their responsibilities seriously are penalized by high welfare costs and growing welfare rolls. Those States and localities that do not, are rewarded by low welfare costs and succeed in exporting their poor.

The principal existing Federal welfare program—known as aid to families with dependent children—is designed only to assist the unemployed mother who heads a family. It penalizes families that are intact. It ignores the working poor—those eight million men, women and children who live in families headed by someone who works all year-round, but does not earn a livable income. These are the families that have accepted American middle-class values, that have tried to follow the vision of Horatio Alger, but have not received their just due.

The President's family assistance plan would for the first time, create a federally established and federally financed minimum welfare assistance level. It thus recognizes the essential principle that a destitute person should be entitled to a nationally prescribed minimum of assistance, no matter where he lives. And it recognizes that only the Federal Government has the fiscal resources to carry the main burden of welfare aid—that States and localities simply lack the resources to provide for their poor.

The President's plan is designed to aid intact families and families of the working poor. It makes a family's need the criterion of assistance. Instead of penalizing those that work, it creates new work incentives.

These are far-reaching reforms. They are reforms of which the President can be justly proud.

I am convinced, however, that still more must be done if we are to create a welfare system that is workable and fair. Welfare reform must build upon the President's proposals; it must, however, go beyond them to create a true system of national income maintenance.

The administration proposal sets the Federal minimum welfare payment at $1,600 per year for a family of four.

This is inadequate.

It is less than all but five of the poorest States are providing under the present State-operated welfare system.

It is less than half of the amount the Social Security Administration defines as the "poverty level"—which is just under $3,800 per year for a family of four.

This $3,755 "poverty level" figure constitutes the barest minimum needed for subsistence. It is calculated on the basis of the Department of Agriculture's economy food plan which according to the Department, is designed only for temporary emergency use, and is not a reasonable measure of the basic money needs for a good diet.

The respected Bureau of Labor Statistics has calculated a substantially higher poverty line figure—a little over $7,183 per year for a family of four. This is a more realistic estimate of the amount actually needed for subsistence.

I believe we can do no less than to set the Federal minimum welfare payment at the $3,744 line. That is not a generous figure. It is barely an adequate one. By going below this amount, there is clear danger of consigning welfare families to malnutrition, inadequate clothing, slum housing—in short, to the most serious poverty and want.

The administration plan covers only families with minor children. Childless couples and single individuals are excluded. Still more incongruous, a couple with a 17-year-old child would lose their benefits the day the child turns 18.

There is no justification for such discrimination among the poor. All persons below the poverty line should be eligible for assistance, regardless of their marital or family status.

The Federal Government should assume the administration of the welfare system and operate it on the pattern of the social security system—with written applications, automatic mailing of payments, and audit or spot checks for enforcement purposes. State welfare agencies should be relieved of their role as welfare policemen, and allowed to perform their proper function of counseling and assisting needy individuals.

The administration bill requires all welfare recipients, save those specifically exempt, to accept "suitable" work whenever available, as determined by the Labor Department.

This is as impractical as it is offensive.

A similar work requirement has been in existence under the work incentive program—WIN—of 1967, and it has been a spectacular failure. Of 600,000 welfare recipients that qualified under this program by last year, only 100,000 were referred for mandatory work or training—and only 30,000, or 5 percent, actually found jobs or training programs.

In a time of rising unemployment, the prospects of success of a mandatory work requirement are still more remote. Laws cannot force people to take jobs, if jobs are not available.

A work requirement is demeaning. If job openings are perceived as being worthwhile in terms of the income and the personal satisfactions they provide, they will be filled voluntarily. If not, then we should be changing the nature of the openings available. Dead-end jobs inevitably result in high turnover, and no legal compulsion can change that fact.

Above all, a work requirement punishes children for the actions of their parents. It means that if the mother refuses to work, the child will receive no aid, will be brought up in the direst poverty, and will ultimately become incapable of working himself.

In January 1968, President Johnson appointed a distinguished President's Commission on Income Maintenance, under the chairmanship of Ben Heineman, president of Chicago's Northwest Industries. That Commission, with the aid of an outstanding staff, reported to President Nixon in November 1969. Its report was headlined in the New York Times, and hailed by virtually every academic expert in the field. Unfortunately, the report appeared after the administration plan had already been made public. As a result, it was shelved by the administration and never introduced in the Congress.

The plan proposed by the Heineman Commission seeks the administration's objectives while meeting the shortcomings of the administration bill.

The Heineman plan moves toward a minimum income maintenance standard based on the poverty level. It eliminates the categorical structure of the present system, and provides universal coverage of all impoverished persons. It Federalizes the welfare system and abandons the discredited inquisitorial concept of welfare. It provides a work incentive by allowing recipients to retain a part of their earned income, without imposing a harsh and unrealistic work requirement.

The Heineman proposal provides for an annual adjustment of Federal income maintenance levels, designed to reflect the changes in the cost of living. It eliminates the food stamp program—with its demeaning separate food lines at grocery stores—and substitutes the cash needed to buy food. It provides emergency relief for individuals struck by personal disasters and makes special provisions for those who earn seasonally eratic incomes. None of these features are found in the administration bill.

The Heineman Commission recommended that the Federal minimum welfare payment initially set at $2,400 per year for a family of four. This is somewhat less than halfway between the administration's clearly inadequate payment of $1,600 per year and the Social Security Administration's poverty line figure of just below $3,800 per year.

The $2,400 figure is an arbitrary one, arrived by the Commission in recognition of budgetary constraints. The Commission recommended that the Federal minimum payment be increased to the poverty level by 1975.

It is my belief that any income supplementation plan passed should provide an immediate maintenance level at the poverty line, and should establish as a national objective income maintenance at the Bureau of Labor Statistics' low-cost subsistence line.

It should, moreover, include cost-of-living escalator based upon the annual movement of this country's national median family income, which is currently calculated by the Bureau of the Census. In accordance with the proposal of the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. MILLER), it should incorporate variations pursuant to regional cost-of-living fluctuations, which can be ascertained by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

It should, finally, incorporate authorization for payments to family units to meet special needs of a unique or nonrecurring nature, which needs are caused by temporary or unusual circumstances that render the unit unable to attain or maintain a decent standard of living from the basic allowance. Those needs should include but not be limited to the cost of clothing and furniture needed to bring the unit up to a decent standard at the time that it or any member thereof first becomes eligible for payments, the costs of replacing losses caused by fire, flood, or other natural disaster, and the costs of meeting special medical, nutritional, or instructional needs which are not provided for under title XIX of the Social Security Act.

In accordance with the incentive suggested by both the Heineman Commission and the President's family assistance plan, a work incentive ought to be provided by a negatively graduated marginal tax rate for all those whose income is below the BLS low-cost level. If such a work incentive is sufficiently negatively graduated—if the tax rate concentrates upon providing a 50 percent incentive to those below the poverty line and provides a steeply decreasing incentive to those above that line but below the BLS line—then the cost of an income supplementation plan similar to that of the Heineman Commission comes out approximately equal to to that of the family assistance plan.

It is essential, moreover, that any income maintenance plan passed provide sufficient day care services so that those recipients who choose to work or to train for a job are not faced with the constraint of a child left alone in the home. That day care should not be simply custodial, of no benefit to the child, but should mandatorialy include an educational component pursuant to the minimum standard of the Federal interagency day care requirements.

CONCLUSION

Karl Jaspers has said that,

There exists between human beings—because they are human beings—a solidarity through which everyone shares the responsibility for every injustice that is committed in the world. If I do not do all I can to prevent it, I share the guilt.

The decision which we as a Nation will have to make in the next 2 years is whether, under the guise of budgetary constraints, we will accept either no income maintenance legislation at all or an administration bill that is admittedly inadequate to sustain living human beings, or whether we will shoot for the ideal. We have become afraid, in this country, to really care, because to really care has become unfashionable and rather laughable; and also, of course, because to really care would impose upon us the necessity of acting in support of the things we really care for. It is incumbent upon us, nonetheless, to refuse to step back, to be cool, to accept the argument that there is just so much we can do. It is our responsibility, indeed, to care and to shoot for the ideal, to fulfill that sacred obligation of which Jaspers speaks.

Despite the interest group conflicts, notwithstanding the political implications of passage or nonpassage of the family assistance plan, the fact is that there is an underclass of the impoverished in this country, and that we have responsibility not only as legislators, but also as human beings, to do something about it. Let me conclude with the very opposite feelings of a fictional presidential candidate in Eugene Burdick's "The 480":

We are told constantly, endlessly until we sicken of it, that "things are complicated" . . . Of course things are complicated. We can, if we wish, infatuate ourselves with complexity. We can fondle it in our hands, adore it, dazzle ourselves with it. But, in the end, we must realize that every situation can be reduced to a simple decision: Do we act or not? If yes, in what ways?

I trust that in the coming Congress we will get to work early. I commend all those who worked on this complicated legislation, and I trust that next year there will be established the principle of income maintenance, the principle that we are going to take care of the wretched and the poor in this country. I commend to my colleagues that task, because I know they all desire this. It is going to be difficult.

I hope next year my colleagues will not find themselves trying to deal with it in December. If they deal with it in January, by December they should have a final product.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) such time as he may desire.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I shall not unduly delay the Senate. I have a series of questions I would like to put to the distinguished chairman, if I might. I am not a member of the Finance Committee. I have followed the debate and the colloquy with interest during the several days this bill has been under consideration.

I might say, as a preliminary to the first question, that I approve the thrust and the design of the bill, especially as it relates to the automatic benefit increase section. A matter of parenthetical interest to the junior Senator from Tennessee is that this is an item that I have long favored, and in fact espoused 4 years ago when I ran for the Senate.

I put this question to the distinguished chairman: It has been said that the automatic benefit increase provided for in the social security bill could be financed without increasing the contribution rates, provided the benefit and contribution base is increased as wages rise. Why then does the Senate bill provide for increasing both the base and the contribution rate so that each increase would meet one-half of the cost?

Mr. LONG. The committee felt that since this would be a benefit increase to be shared by all categories of beneficiaries, whether of low, middle, or high income, all should share in paying for it, since all would share in the benefits.

In the alternative, if we raised the revenues solely by raising the amount of wages taxed, then those at the upper end of the earnings range would have to pay the entire expenses of the benefit increases, even though workers at lower earning levels would share in the increased benefits.

The committee decided that since the increased benefits would be available throughout the whole spectrum of the income levels, all income levels should pay for at least part of the cost of the increase.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the chairman for that explanation, with which I entirely agree.

I might comment that a good bit has been said, in the course of our consideration of the social security bill, about the progressive nature of certain taxes, especially the graduated Federal income tax, and the so-called regressive nature of certain other taxes, more often than not citing the fixed rate tax applicable to social security.

I would point out, if I may, that the social security tax is progressive in a sense, in that as the rate goes up, there is a tendency to shift the burden to higher income taxpayers, while, in the alternative, if we left the rate at the lower level, it would tend to fix the burden on another group of taxpayers.

So it would appear to me that the combination approach that the committee adopted, and which the chairman has now explained, has all of the attributes of a tax of a progressive nature, rather than a regressive one. I am happy to hear it explained in that way.

A further question: Would not the Senate provision for financing the automatic increases, to a greater extent than the provision passed by the House, delegate authority to the Secretary of HEW, in effect, to levy taxes?

Mr. LONG. The provision the Finance Committee adopted would place upon the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare a purely ministerial function. All discretion would be left to Congress. If an increase in benefits was triggered when the cost of living went up by more than 3 percent, the Secretary would simply do the arithmetic necessary to calculate the amount that taxes would have to be increased just enough to pay for the full cost of the increased benefits, no more and no less.

Mr. BAKER. May I then be reassured on the proposition that the most able staff of the Committee on Finance is thoroughly convinced, as the chairman must be, that there is no abrogation of the taxing authority of Congress implied in this discretion given to the HEW Secretary?

Mr. LONG. That is right. All we have done here is give him the responsibility of doing the arithmetic necessary to arrive at the amount of the tax increase.

Mr. BAKER. I ask the Senator further, while I have expressed my wholehearted agreement with the concept of cost-of-living increases as the cost of living goes up, which we hope will not continue indefinitely, might it not also be said that there is no fair way to have cost-of-living increases except by this route?

Mr. LONG. The committee so felt, and that is why this is what the committee recommended.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, is not the effect of the bill now pending before the Senate to obligate future Congresses to either reduce taxes or raise benefits more than the cost of living?

Mr. LONG. No more so than under the present law. The committee bill recognizes that Congress may very well stay ahead of the cost of living by passing increases which would make it unnecessary for the automatic increases to go into effect. If the Congress fails to act on benefit increases, then automatic increases would go into effect.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the next question, and the last one, I might add, that I shall put to the distinguished chairman, if he will grant me the additional time and attention, would be this: Under this bill as now presented to the Senate, how high will the rates and the base be in some future year in the medium distant future, say at the end of this century, in the year 2000, when today's young workers will be in their midfifties and beyond? Can the Senator give some speculation on that aspect of the bill's impact?

Mr. LONG. I would have to respond that there is no real way of knowing, because basic and fundamental to the committee provision is the principle that it will be Congress that will continue to determine how much in the way of increases in social security would be justified under a given set of circumstances.

In other words, it would be anticipated that in the future, the Congress would want to continue to increase social security benefits.

If that is the case, we would expect that Congress would vote to pay for the higher benefits. I know it is certainly the view of the majority of the committee at this time, and I would hope future Congresses would take the same attitude, that with respect to the basic social security program, we would always pay for the program with taxes that would be levied. But I cannot say how much benefits will be increased in the future or what the level of taxable earnings will be—that would merely be speculation.

Mr. BAKER. I recall a colloquy the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance had on this floor about a year ago, in which he pointed out, and I agreed with him, that the basic social security program can easily be financed out of social security taxes on the base as fixed from time to time, but the real question is whether Congress will use social security as a vehicle by which other social services are delivered, whereupon we may be faced with the problem of deciding whether other sources than the social security tax should be used to finance the cost of their delivery. Is that basically correct?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I think the committee has done an excellent job on a difficult problem, providing a bill that moves forward in the field of automatic increases in response to requirements of the economy. The need is not predictable for the year 2000, or the year 1972, for that matter, but I think it is worthy of the favorable consideration of the Senate, and I wish, in these closing moments of the debate, to commend the committee and the staff for having done an excellent job.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator.

It was my judgment, Mr. President, that the Senate would pass as much of this committee bill as the Senate felt it could agree with, and could bring it to a vote, and that is what we have done. The committee recommended a $10 billion bill, and the Senate is passing a $7.5 billion bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator has control of the time on that side.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the minority leader yielded me such time as I might require. I do not see him on the floor. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I shall take very little time. I had a number of amendments which were not offered because hearings had not been held on them. I should like, very briefly, to discuss at least two amendments and make them a part of the RECORD, so that they might be studied by Members of this body and by others who may be interested.

One of the defects in the present Social Security Act is the fact that there is unequal application of the program to handicapped children under age 18.

Presently, this age group is precluded under aid to permanently and totally disabled. Neither are provisions adequate for benefits for disabled children under the aid to familles with dependent children program since eligiblity is based on the economic status of the parent rather than the existence of disability in the child.

Children with severely handicapping conditions require extensive and costly services beyond the means of many families and an excessive financial burden to most. There are the never-ending surgeries, specialists, nurses, braces, orthopedic shoes, wheelchairs, walkers, standing tables, bath tables, hearing aids, glasses, special education, and transportation needs—to mention only some of the extra costs involved.

Also, health insurance is difficult if not impossible to attain to cover these special needs of the seriously disabled child.

Mr. President, this amendment, in the event it may be considered at some future time on some subsequent bill, would further assist many handicapped children to receive the considerable care they require.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the proposed amendment be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the proposed amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Insert on page 499, between lines 17 and 18, the following:

"DISABLED INDIVIDUALS UNDER AGE 18 ELIGIBLE FOR AID UNDER TITLES XIV AND XVI

"SEC. 571. (a) (1) Title XIV of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out, wherever it appears, the phrase 'eighteen years of age and older'.

"(2) Section 1402 (a) (8) of such Act is amended by striking out 'and' at the end of clause (C), by striking out the semicolon at the end of clause (D) and inserting in lieu thereof ', and', and by adding at the end of clause (D), as so amended, the following: '(E) with respect to a disabled individual under eighteen years of age who is claiming aid, the State agency shall also take into consideration the income and resources of such individual's parents, guardian, or other person legally responsible for the support of such individual;'

"(b) (1) Title XVI of such Act is amended by striking out, wherever it appears, the phrase 'are 18 years of age or over and'.

"(2) Section 1602 (a) (14) of such Act is amended by striking out 'and' at the end of subparagraph (C), striking out the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (D) and inserting in lieu thereof ', and', and by adding after subparagraph (D) the following new subparagraph:

"'(E) if such individual is under 18 years of age and is not blind but is disabled, the State agency shall also take into consideration the income and resources of such individual's parents, guardian, or other person legally responsible for the support of such individual;'.

"(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective July 1, 1971."

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, another change that has been called to my attention has to do with terminology.

As Senators may know, last year the President apopinted a task force on the physically handicapped. On that task force were many outstanding Americans, and they made many excellent recommendations. I have reviewed the recommendations made by the President's task force on the physically handicapped, and one of the recommendations made by the task force would amend title 5 of the Social Security Act by replacing the term "crippled children" with "handicapped children." According to the study of the task force, the term "crippled child" or "crippled children" as traditionally used in governmental terms is too limited in its meaning and has undesirable connotations, and present day services to crippled children should include far more impairment categories than ever before.

I was advised by HEW that although this amendment might appear to be desirable, they would oppose it if it were offered. Therefore, I chose not to offer the amendment. According to HEW officials, this would require changes by many States in State laws and would perhaps cause some undue hardship at the outset. But it has been studied carefully, and it is the understanding of the Senator from Kansas that it will be given serious consideration at a future time.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the proposed amendment printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the proposed amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 540, after line 7 insert the following:

"CRIPPLED CHILDREN'S PROGRAM—REDESIGNATED HANDICAPPED CHILDREN'S PROGRAM

"SEC. 614. Title V of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out the word 'crippled' wherever it appears and substituting in lieu thereof 'handicapped'."

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Under the bill as approved by the Senate, what will be the excess of income over outgo for the social security program as a whole over the next 5 years?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I say to the Senator that I regret that I do not have it at this moment, but I can refer him to page 45 of our committee print, of my opening statement, which contained a chart which shows that there will be a surplus of nearly $5 billion over the first 3 years under the original committee bill. I regret that I do not have it available for 5 years. But the surplus will be correspondingly increased for the next 2 years.

Mr. DOLE. Then, the second part of that question: How much would the trust funds have increased at the end of 5 years as compared with increases under the present law?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have submitted this chart elsewhere—it compares income and outgo for 1971, 1972, and 1973 under both bills—but I ask unanimous consent that the chart I hold in my hand be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROGRESS OF THE OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE, DISABILITY INSURANCE, HOSPITAL INSURANCE, AND CATASTROPHIC INSURANCE TRUST FUNDS, COMBINED, UNDER PRESENT LAW AND UNDER FINANCE COMMITTEE BILL, 1971-73

[Cash basis; in billions of dollars]

Period	Income		Outgo		Net increase in funds		Assets, end of period
	Present law	Committee bill	Present law	Committee bill	Present law	Committee bill	Present law	Committee bill
Fiscal year 1972	49.0	52.8	43.0	50.5	6.0	2.3	51.0	44.9
Calendar year—
1971	47.0	49.0	41.7	47.6	5.3	1.3	46.3	42.3
1972	50.0	55.3	44.2	53.3	5.7	1.9	52.0	44.2
1973	56.9	59.7	46.7	56.9	10.2	2.8	62.2	47.0

Mr. LONG. The chart shows that, under present law, the trust fund in fiscal year 1972 would rise to $51 billion, and under the original committee bill it would rise to $44.9 billion. In calendar 1971, under the present law, $46 billion; under the committee bill, $42.3 billion. In calendar 1972, under present law, $52 billion; under the committee bill, $44.2 billion. In calender 1973, under the present law, $62.2 billion; under the committee bill, $47 billion. Of course, there have been certain modifications during floor consideration of the committee bill which would change those figures to some degree.

It was the judgment of the majority on the committee that present law did not adequately balance income and outgo in the next few years—too much money would come in for the benefits being paid—and we thought of this as a surplus, which we regarded to some degree as constituting overfinancing that could be used to pay for further benefits.

Mr. DOLE. Then, in the event that there were automatic benefit increases of 3 percent each year over the next 5 years, there still would be some surplus in the trust fund?

Mr. LONG. The figures I have placed in the RECORD assume no increase in the cost of living. If the cost of living goes up, and benefits go up, the tax that is collected goes up. When the cost of living goes up more than 3 percent, the triggered increases go into effect, and the tax rates go up, as well as the tax base, so that there is just enough additional income to pay for all that. Thus, the amount being accumulated in the fund should remain about the same even if there should be a cost-of-living benefit increase.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the chairman of the committee, and I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, after a lengthy and thorough debate on the omnibus Social Security Act, H.R. 17550, I am very pleased that we were able in these final hours to save those portions of the bill that will directly benefit the lives of countless numbers of senior citizens who depend on social security and medicare to survive.

The ever-increasing cost of living hits hardest those people in our society who must depend on a fixed income, such as social security, to live. These people, who are trapped by rising prices, are forced to sit helplessly by and watch the purchasing power of their small monthly income dwindle away under the crush of runaway inflation. These older citizens have no one but Congress to turn to for help in these troubled times. The bill that the Senate has been able to agree to shows that we are not going to let these citizens down.

The most significant features of this bill are:

First. The 10-percent increase in social security benefits. Under the Senate version of the bill, the over 26 million beneficiaries of social security will receive a 10-percent increase in benefits. This increase will be effective as of January 1971 and will be paid to the people in April. The bill also sets a new minimum benefit that can be paid of $100. The original House version of H.R. 17550 would have increased social security benefits by only 5 percent and provided a minimum of benefits of $67.20. The Senate version of this bill is a much superior measure and I hope the House will agree to the Senate's amendments.

Second. The increase in the amount a social security beneficiary can earn and still receive his full benefits. The present law sets a ceiling of $1,680 a year on the amount that a retired person can earn and still draw full social security benefits. This unreasonable work limitation has forced many productive and creative citizens into a state of forced idleness. Furthermore, this limitation, which is far below the poverty line, locks many of our older citizens into the low-income bracket with no way of escape. Under this bill, Congress is taking the first step toward remedying this situation by increasing the income limitation from $1,680 to $2,000. I supported an increase to $3,200, which I believe would have been more reasonable. However, this increase included in H.R. 17550 does offer a small measure of relief to our senior citizens who wish to work beyond the age of 65.

Mr. President, I also commend the Senate Finance Committee for including in the bill my amendment to authorize the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to waive, in cases involving small rural hospitals, the requirement that a hospital furnish 24-hour registered professional nursing services in order to participate in the medicare and medicaid programs.

Under the present law, a hospital will not be qualified to provide medicare services if it does not maintain a registered professional nurse on duty around the clock 24 hours a day. This requirement has imposed extreme hardships on the small rural hospitals and clinics and the people they serve. Many rural hospitals have been unable to find enough registered nurses who will move to the rural areas to meet this 24-hour requirement. As a result, many small hospitals and clinics have been forced to close, leaving many of our citizens without the benefit of a hospital near their homes. In short, this limitation in the medicare law is having the unfortunate effect of denying many of the citizens of rural America hospital care. My amendment is designed to rectify this unjust situation without lowering the standards for health care.

Under my amendment, a rural hospital could obtain a waiver of the 24-hour registered nurse requirement:

First, the hospital has made, and is continuing to make, a good faith effort to meet the registered nurse requirement, but cannot because of nursing personnel shortage,

Second, the hospital is located in an area where hospital facilities are in short supply, and Third, the denial of medicare services at such a hospital will seriously limit the availability of hospital care to the people of the area. This amendment is a carefully drawn measure which will provide relief only in cases of true hardship. I am very pleased that the Finance Committee has recognized the urgent need for this provision. It will insure that medicare and medicaid benefits will be available to the people of rural America.

Mr. President, in closing, I wish to commend the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Senator LONG, and the members of his committee for their hard work on this bill and their willingness to work out a compromise so that our senior citizens can benefit from this bill. I urge all of my colleagues to give this bill their full support.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. President, last night we spent many hours debating and voting on provisions of the Social Security Act, and expected to complete our business rapidly this morning. In particular a number of us were concerned that certain provisions, which we regarded as restrictive, be dropped from the welfare programs. Senator HARRIS, you will recall, drafted a quick amendment to delete those sections of title V which we believed would impose a hardship on the poor.

At the time our concern was concentrated on deleting those provisions and inadvertently, I failed to notice that another harmful provision was retained. In raising the payments for the aged, the blind, and the disabled to $130 for an individual and $200 for a couple, the Finance Committee had also removed those individuals receiving cash assistance from eligibility for food assistance.

Mr. President, the eligibility standards for food assistance for such aged, blind, and disabled individuals are already that high or higher in 34 States. Five of the remaining States have no food stamp program.

I believe we should not arbitrarily deny food assistance to those who are poor because they are so old, so blind, or so disabled that they are unable to provide for themselves. The parliamentary agreement does not permit another amendment to be considered now. But perhaps this deficiency can be corrected by legislative action next year. In any event, if there is any decrease in the cash allowances as provided by the Senate social security bill, I shall definitely make an all-out effort to add food stamp eligibility for the aged, the blind, and the disabled.

~~(5) AUTOMATIC ADJUSTMENT OF BENEFITS~~

~~SEC. 103. (a) Section 215 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:~~

~~"Cost-of-Living Increases in Benefits~~

~~"(i) (1) For purposes of this subsection—~~

~~"(A) the term 'base quarter' means the period of 3 consecutive calendar months ending on September 30,~~

~~1971, and the period of 3 consecutive calendar months ending on September 30 of each year thereafter.~~

~~"(B) the term 'cost-of-living computation quarter' means any base quarter in which the monthly average of the Consumer Price Index prepared by the Department of Labor exceeds, by not less than 3 per centum, the monthly average of such Index in the later of (i) the 3 calendar-month period ending on September 30, 1971, or (ii) the base quarter which was most recently a cost-of-living computation quarter.~~

~~"(2)(A) If the Secretary determines that a base quarter in a calendar year is also a cost-of-living computation quarter, he shall, effective for January of the next calendar year, increase the benefit amount of each individual who for such month is entitled to benefits under section 227 or 228, and the primary insurance amount of each other individual as specified in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, by an amount derived by multiplying such amount (including each such individual's primary insurance amount or benefit amount under section 227 or 228 as previously increased under this subparagraph) by the same percentage (rounded to the next higher one-tenth of 1 percent if such percentage is an odd multiple of .05 of 1 percent and to the nearest one-tenth of 1 percent in any other case) as the percentage by which the monthly average of the Consumer Price Index~~ for such cost-of-living computation quarter exceeds the monthly average of such Index for the base quarter determined after the application of clauses (i) and (ii) of paragraph (1)(B).

"(B) The increase provided by subparagraph (A) with respect to a particular cost-of-living computation quarter shall apply in the case of monthly benefits under this title for months after December of the calendar year in which occurred such cost-of-living computation quarter, based on the wages and self-employment income of an individual who became entitled to monthly benefits under section 202, 223, 227, or 228 (without regard to section 202(j)(1) or section 223(b)), or who died, in or before December of such calendar year.

"(C) If the Secretary determines that a base quarter in a calendar year is also a cost-of-living computation quarter, he shall publish in the Federal Register on or before December 1 of such calendar year a determination that a benefit increase is resultantly required and the percentage thereof. He shall also publish in the Federal Register at that time (along with the increased benefit amounts which shall be deemed to be the amounts appearing in sections 227 and 228) a revision of the table of benefits contained in subsection (a) of this section (as it may have been revised previously pursuant to this paragraph); and such revised table shall be deemed to be the table appearing in such subsection (a). Such revision shall be determined as follows:

"(i) The headings of the table shall be the same as the headings in the table immediately prior to its revision, except that the parenthetical phrase at the beginning of column II shall show the effective date of the primary insurance amounts set forth in column IV of the table immediately prior to its revision.

"(ii) The amounts on each line of column I, and the amounts on each line of column III except as otherwise provided by clause (v) of this subparagraph, shall be the same as the amounts appearing in such column in the table immediately prior to its revision.

"(iii) The amount on each line of column II shall be changed to the amount shown on the corresponding line of column IV of the table immediately prior to its revision.

"(iv) The amount of each line of column IV shall be increased from the amount shown in the table immediately prior to its revision by increasing such amount by the percentage specified in subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2), raising each such increased amount, if not a multiple of $0.10, to the next higher multiple of $0.10.

"(v) If the contribution and benefit base (as defined in section 230(b)) for the calendar year in which the table of benefits is revised is lower than such base for the following calendar year, columns III, IV and V shall be extended. The amount in the first additional line in column IV shall be the amount in the last line of such column as determined under clause (iv), plus $1.00, rounding such increased amount (if not a multiple of $1.00) to the next higher multiple of $1.00 where such increased amount is an odd multiple of $0.50 and to the nearest multiple of $1.00 in any other case. The amount on each succeeding line of column IV shall be the amount on the preceding line increased by $1.00, until the amount on the last line of such column is equal to the larger of (I) one thirty-sixth of the contribution and benefit base for the calendar year following the calendar year in which the table of benefits is revised or (II) the last line of such column as determined under clause (iv) plus 20 percent of one-twelfth of the excess of the contribution and benefit base for the calendar year following the calendar year in which the table of benefits is revised over such base for the calendar year in which the table of benefits is revised, rounding such amount (if not a multiple of $1.00) to the next higher multiple of $1.00 where such amount is an odd multiple of $0.50 and to the nearest multiple of $1.00 in any other case.

~~The amount in each additional line of column III shall be determined so that the second figure in the last line of column III is one-twelfth of the contribution and benefits base for the calendar year following the calendar year in which the table of benefits is revised, and the remaining figures in column III shall be determined in consistent mathematical intervals from column IV. The second figure in the last line of column III before the extension of the column shall be increased to a figure mathematically consistent with the figures determined in accordance with the preceding sentence. The amount on each line of column V shall be increased, to the extent necessary, so that each such amount is equal to 40 percent of the second figure in the same line of column III, plus 40 percent of the smaller of (I) such second figure or (II) the larger of $450 or 50 per centum of the largest figure in column III.~~

~~"(vi) The amount on each line of column V shall be increased, if necessary, so that such amount is at least equal to one and one-half times the amount shown on the corresponding line in column IV. Any such increased amount that is not a multiple of $0.10 shall be increased to the next higher multiple of $0.10."~~

~~(b) Section 203(a) of such Act (as amended by section 101(b) of this Act) is amended—~~

(1) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof ", or ", and inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) when two or more persons are entitled (without the application of section 202(j)(1) and section 223(b)) to monthly benefits under section 202 or 223 for December of the calendar year in which occurs a cost-of-living computation quarter (as defined in section 215(i)(1)) on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of such insured individual, such total of benefits for the month immediately following shall be reduced to not less than the amount equal to the sum of the amounts derived by increasing the benefit amount determined under this title (including this subsection, but without the application of section 222(b), section 202(q), and subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section) as in effect for such December for each such person by the same percentage as the percentage by which such individual's primary insurance amount (including such amount as previously increased) is increased under section 215(i)(2) for such month immediately following, and raising each such increased amount (if not a multiple of $0.10) to the next higher multiple of $0.10.": and

(2) by striking out "the table in section 215(a)" in the matter preceding paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "the table in (or deemed to be in) section 215(a)".

"(a) The primary insurance amount of an insured individual shall be the amount in column IV of the following table, or, if larger, the amount in column IV of the latest table deemed to be such table under subsection (i)(2)(C) or section 230(c), determined as follows:

"(1) Subject to the conditions specified in subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section and except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, such primary insurance amount shall be whichever of the following amounts is the largest:

"(i) The amount in column IV on the line on which in column III of such table appears his average monthly wage (as determined under subsection (b));

"(ii) The amount in column IV on the line on which in column II of such table appears his primary insurance amount (as determined under subsection (c)); or

"(iii) The amount in column IV on the line on which in column I of such table appears his primary insurance benefit (as determined under subsection (d)).

"(2) In the case of an individual who was entitled to a disability insurance benefit for the month before the month in which he died, became entitled to old-age insurance benefits, or attained age 65, such primary insurance amount shall be the amount in column IV which is equal to the primary insurance amount upon which such disability insurance benefit is based, except that, if such individual was entitled to a disability insurance benefit under section 223 for the month before the effective month of a new table (other than a table provided by section 230) and in the following month became entitled to an old-age insurance benefit, or he died in such following month, then his primary insurance amount for such following month shall be the amount in column IV of the new table on the line on which in column II of such table appears his primary insurance amount for the month before the effective month of the table (as determined under subsection (c)) instead of the amount in column IV equal to the primary insurance amount on which his disability insurance benefit is based."

"(B) who dies in or after such effective month without being entitled to benefits under section 202(a) or section 223; or

"(C) whose primary insurance amount is required to be recomputed under subsection (f)(2).".

~~(2) Section 202(q)(3) of such Act is further amended by striking out subparagraphs (E), (F), and (G).~~

~~(b) Section 202(r) of such Act is repealed.~~

~~(c)(1)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), subsection (a) of this section and the amendments made thereby shall~~ apply with respect to benefits for months commencing with the sixth month after the month in which this Act is enacted.

(B) Subsection (a) of this section and the amendments made thereby shall apply in the case of an individual whose entitlement to benefits under section 202 of the Social Security Act began (without regard to sections 202(j)(1) and 223(b) of such Act) before the sixth month after the month in which this Act is enacted only if such individual files with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, in such manner and form as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe, a written request that such subsection and such amendments apply. In the case of such an individual who is described in paragraph 2(A)(i) of this subsection, the request for a redetermination under paragraph (2) shall constitute the request required by this subparagraph, and subsection (a) of this section and the amendments made thereby shall apply pursuant to such request with respect to such individual's benefits as redetermined in accordance with paragraph (2)(B)(i) (but only if he does not refuse to accept such redetermination). In the case of any individual with respect to whose benefits subsection (a) of this section and the amendments made thereby may apply only pursuant to a request made under this subparagraph, such subsection and such amendments shall be effective (subject to paragraph (2)(D)) with respect to benefits for months com~~mencing with the sixth month after the month in which this Act is enacted or, if the request required by this subparagraph is not filed before the end of such sixth month, with the second month following the month in which the request is filed.~~

~~(C) Subsection (b) of this section shall apply with respect to benefits payable pursuant to applications filed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.~~

~~(2) (A) In any case where an individual—~~

~~(i) is entitled, for the fifth month following the month in which this Act is enacted, to a monthly insurance benefit under section 202 of the Social Security Act (I) which was reduced under subsection (q) (3) of such section, and (II) the application for which was deemed (or, except for the fact that an application had been filed, would have been deemed) to have been filed by such individual under subsection (r) (1) or (2) of such section, and~~

~~(ii) files a written request for a redetermination under this subsection, on or after the date of the enactment of this Act and in such manner and form as the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall by regulations prescribe,~~

~~the Secretary shall redetermine the amount of such benefit, and the amount of the other benefit (reduced under subsec-~~ tion (q) (1) or (2) of such section) which was taken into account in computing the reduction in such benefit under such subsection (q) (3), in the manner provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph.

(B) Upon receiving a written request for the redetermination under this paragraph of a benefit which was reduced under subsection (q) (3) of section 202 of the Social Security Act and of the other benefit which was taken into account in computing such reduction, filed by an individual as provided in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Secretary shall—

(i) determine the highest monthly benefit amount which such individual could receive under the subsections of such section 202 which are involved (or under section 223 of such Act and the subsection of such section 202 which is involved) for the month with which the redetermination is to be effective under subparagraph (D) of this subsection (without regard to sections 202 (k), 203 (a), and 203 (b) through (l)) if—

(I) such individual's application for one of such two benefits had been filed in the month in which it was actually filed or was deemed under subsection (r) of such section 202 to have been filed, and his application for the other such benefit had been filed in a later month, and

(II) the amendments made by this section had been in effect at the time each such application was filed; and

(ii) determine whether the amounts which were actually received by such individual in the form of such two benefits during the period prior to the month with which the redetermination under this paragraph is to be effective were in excess of the amounts which would have been received during such period if the applications for such benefits had actually been filed at the times fixed under clause (i)(I) of this subparagraph, and, if so, the total amount by which benefits otherwise payable to such individual under such section 202 (and section 223) would have to be reduced in order to compensate the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund (and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund) for such excess.

(C) The Secretary shall then notify such individual of the amount of each such benefit as computed in accordance with the amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) of this section and as redetermined in accordance with subparagraph (B)(i) of this paragraph, specifying (i) the amount (if any) of the excess determined under subpara-graph (B)(ii) of this paragraph, and (ii) the period during which payment of any increase in such individual's benefits resulting from the application of the amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) of this section would under designated circumstances have to be withheld in order to effect the reduction described in subparagraph (B)(ii). Such individual may at any time within thirty days after such notification is mailed to him refuse (in such manner and form as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe) to accept the redetermination under this paragraph.

(D) Unless the last sentence of subparagraph (C) applies, a redetermination under this paragraph shall be effective (but subject to the reduction described in subparagraph (B)(ii) over the period specified pursuant to clause (ii) of the first sentence of subparagraph (C)) beginning with the sixth month following the month in which this Act is enacted, or, if the request for such redetermination is not filed before the end of such sixth month, with the second month following the month in which the request for such redetermination is filed.

(E) The Secretary, by withholding amounts from benefits otherwise payable to an individual under title II of the Social Security Act as specified in clause (ii) of the first sentence of subparagraph (C) (and in no other manner), shall recover the amounts necessary to compensate the Federal ~~Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund (and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund) for the excess (described in subparagraph (B)(ii)) attributable to benefits which were paid such individual and to which a redetermination under this subsection applies.~~

~~(d) Where—~~

~~(1) two or more persons are entitled on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of an individual (without the application of sections 202(j)(1) and 223(b) of the Social Security Act) to monthly benefits under section 202 of such Act for the month preceding the month with which (A) a redetermination under subsection (c) of this section becomes effective with respect to the benefits of any one of them and (B) such benefits are accordingly increased by reason of the amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) of this section, and~~

~~(2) the total of benefits to which all persons are entitled under such section 202 on the basis of such wages and self-employment income for the month with which such redetermination and increase becomes effective is reduced by reason of section 203(a) of such Act as amended by this Act (or would, but for the penultimate sentence of such section 203(a), be so reduced), then the amount of the benefit to which each of the persons~~

~~referred to in paragraph (1), other than the person with respect to whose benefits such redetermination and increase is applicable, is entitled for months beginning with the month with which such redetermination and increase becomes effective shall be adjusted, after the application of such section 203(a), to an amount no less than the amount it would have been if such redetermination and increase had not become effective.~~

(155) AUTOMATIC ADJUSTMENT IN BENEFITS, WAGE BASE, TAX RATES, AND EARNINGS TEST

SEC. 131. (a)(1) Section 215 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"Cost-of-Living Increases in Benefits

"(i)(1) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'base quarter' means the period of 3 consecutive calendar months ending on June 30, 1971, and the period of 3 consecutive calendar months ending on June 30 of each year thereafter.

"(B) the term 'cost-of-living computation quarter' means any base quarter (beginning no earlier than April 1, 1972) in which the Consumer Price Index prepared by the Department of Labor exceeds, by not less than 3 per centum, such index in the latest of (i) January 1971, or (ii) the base quarter which was most recently a cost-of-living computation quarter, or (iii) the most recent calendar month (after January 31, 1971) in which a general increase (other than an increase under this subsection) in the primary insurance amounts of all individuals entitled to benefits under this title became effective based upon an Act of Congress; and

"(C) the Consumer Price Index for a base quarter shall be the monthly average of such index in such quarter.

"(2)(A) If the Secretary determines that a base quarter in a calendar year is also a cost-of-living computation quarter, he shall, effective for January of the next calendar year, increase the benefit amount of each individual who for such month is entitled to benefits under section 227 or 228, and the primary insurance amount of each other individual as specified in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, by an amount derived by multiplying such amount (including each such individual's primary insurance amount or benefit amount under section 227 or 228 as previously increased under this subparagraph) by the same percentage (rounded to the next higher one-tenth of 1 percent if such percentage is an odd multiple of .05 of 1 percent and to the nearest one-tenth of 1 percent in any other case) as the percentage by which the Consumer Price Index for such cost-of-living computation quarter exceeds such Index for the base quarter determined after the application of paragraph (1)(B).

"(B) The increase provided by subparagraph (A) with respect to a particular cost-of-living computation quarter shall apply in the case of monthly benefits under this title for months after December of the calendar year in which occurred such cost-of-living computation quarter, based on the wages and self-employment income of an individual who became entitled to monthly benefits under section 202, 223, 227, or 228 (without regard to section 202(j)(1) or section 223(b)), or who died, in or before December of such calendar year.

"(C) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B), the increase provided by subparagraph (A) with respect to a particular cost-of-living computation quarter shall not be effective as provided in such subparagraph (A) if in the calendar year in which such cost-of-living computation quarter occurs a law has been enacted which provides for (i) a general increase in the primary insurance amounts of all individuals entitled to benefits under this title, or (ii) a change in the rate of tax on wages and self-employment income under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, or (iii) an increase in the amount of earnings of individuals that may be counted for benefits under this title and that may be taxed under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for old-age, survivors, and disability insurance.

"(D) Except as may be provided in subparagraph (C), if the Secretary determines that a base quarter in a calendar year is also a cost-of-living computation quarter, he shall publish in the Federal Register on or before August 15 of such calendar year a determination that a benefit increase is resultantly required and the percentage thereof. He shall also publish in the Federal Register at that time (along with the increased benefit amounts which shall be deemed to be the amounts appearing in sections 227 and 228) a revision of the table of benefits contained in subsection (a) of this section (as it may have been revised previously pursuant to this paragraph); and such revised table shall be deemed to be the table appearing in such subsection (a). Such revision shall be determined as follows:

"(i) The headings of the table shall be the same as the headings in the table immediately prior to its revision, except that the parenthetical phrase at the beginning of column II shall show the effective date of the primary insurance amounts set forth in column IV of the table immediately prior to its revision.

"(ii) The amounts on each line of column I, and the amounts on each line of column III, except as otherwise provided by clause (v) of this subparagraph, shall be the same as the amounts appearing in such column in the table immediately prior to its revision.

"(iii) The amount on each line of column II shall be changed to the amount shown on the corresponding line of column IV of the table immediately prior to its revision.

"(iv) The amount of each line of columns IV and V shall be increased from the amount shown in the table immediately prior to its revision by increasing such amount by the percentage specified in subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2), raising each such increased amount, if not a multiple of $0.10, to the next higher multiple of $0.10.

"(v) Columns III, IV, and V shall be extended. The amount in each additional line of column III shall be determined so that the second figure in the last line of column III is one-twelfth of the contribution and benefit base for the calendar year following the calendar year in which the table of benefits is revised, and the amounts on each additional line of column III shall be the amount on the preceding line increased by $5. The amount on each additional line of column IV shall be the amount on the preceding line increased by $1.00, until the amount on the last line of such column is equal to the last line of such column as determined under clause (iv) plus 20 percent of one-twelfth of the excess of the contribution and benefit base for the calendar year following the calendar year in which the table of benefits is revised over such base for the calendar year in which the table of benefits is revised. The amount in each additional line of column V shall be 175 percent of the amounts appearing on the same line in column IV. Any such increased amount that is not a multiple of $0.10 shall be increased to the next higher multiple of $0.10."

(2) Section 203(a) of such Act (as amended by section 101(b) of this Act) is further amended—

(A) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof ", or", and inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) when two or more persons are entitled (without the application of section 202(j)(1) and section 223(b)) to monthly benefits under section 202 or 223 for December of the calendar year in which occurs a cost-of-living computation quarter (as defined in section 215(i)(1)) on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of such insured individual, such total of benefits for months following such December shall be reduced to not less than the amount equal to the sum of the amounts derived by increasing the benefit amount determined under this title (including this subsection, but without the application of section 222(b), section 202(q), and subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section) as in effect for such December for each such person by the same percentage as the percentage by which such individual's primary insurance amount (including such amount as previously increased) is increased under section 215(i)(2) for such month immediately following, and raising each such increased amount (if not a multiple of $0.10) to the next higher multiple of $0.10."; and

(B) by striking out "the table in section 215(a)" in the matter preceding paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "the table in (or deemed to be in) section 215(a)".

(3)(A) Section 215(a) of such Act is amended by striking out the matter which precedes the table and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) The primary insurance amount of an insured individual shall be the amount in column IV of the following table, or, if larger, the amount in column IV of the latest table deemed to be such table under subsection (i)(2)(D), determined as follows:

"(1) Subject to the conditions specified in subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section and except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, such primary insurance amount shall be whichever of the following amounts is the largest:

"(i) The amount in column IV on the line on which in column III of such table appears his average monthly wage (as determined under subsection (b));

"(ii) The amount in column IV on the line on which in column II of such table appears his primary insurance amount (as determined under subsection (c)); or

"(iii) The amount in column IV on the line on which in column I of such table appears his primary insurance benefit (as determined under subsection (d)).

"(2) In the case of an individual who was entitled to a disability insurance benefit for the month before the month in which he died, became entitled to old-age insurance benefits, or attained age 65, such primary insurance amount shall be the amount in column IV which is equal to the primary insurance amount upon which such disability insurance benefit is based, except that, if such individual was entitled to a disability insurance benefit under section 223 for the month before the effective month of a new table and in the following month became entitled to an old-age insurance benefit, or he died in such following month, then his primary insurance amount for such following month shall be the amount in column IV of the new table on the line on which in column II of such table appears his primary insurance amount for the month before the effective month of the table (as determined under subsection (c)) instead of the amount in column IV equal to the primary insurance amount on which his disability insurance benefit is based."

(B) Effective January 1, 1973, section 215(b)(4) of such Act (as amended by section 101(c) of this Act) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The provisions of this subsection shall be applicable only in the case of an individual—

(b)(1) Title II of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"ADJUSTMENT OF THE TAX AND BENEFIT BASE

"SEC. 230. (a) If the Secretary determines pursuant to subsection (i) of section 215 that an increase in benefits provided by subparagraph (A) of such subsection applies in the case of monthly benefits under sections 202 and 223 for months of a calendar year immediately following a cost-of-living computation quarter he shall also estimate the long-range additional level-cost (without regard to any estimated actuarial surplus which may exist at such time) of such benefits. He shall also determine the increase that is necessary in (1) the amount of earnings that may be taxed under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for old-age, survivors, and disability insurance and (2) the rate of tax specified in sections 1401(a), 3101(a), and 3111(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, to meet the total of such level cost and the cost (not previously taken into account under this subsection) of increasing the exempt amount pursuant to section 203(f)(8) for years prior to the year in which such increase in benefits becomes effective where one-half (or approximately one-half) of such total is to be met by the increase specified in clause (1) and the remainder is to be met by the increase specified in clause (2).

"(b) The contribution and benefit base for the calendar year referred to in subsection (a) and all succeeding calendar years, prior to the first calendar year thereafter in which an increase in benefits authorized by subsection (i) of section 215 becomes effective, shall be the sum of the amount of earnings of individuals that may be counted for benefits under this title and that may be taxed under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for old-age, survivors, and disability insurance with respect to the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year referred to in subsection (a) and the increase referred to in subsection (a), with such sum, if not a multiple of $300, being rounded to the nearest multiple of $300; except that—

"(1) if prior to such first calendar year a law is enacted which provides that for any calendar year a different amount of earnings may be so counted and may be so taxed, such different amount shall be the contribution and benefit base for the calendar years specified in such law but only until the first calendar year thereafter in which an increase in benefits is authorized by subsection (i) of section 215; and

"(2) the contribution and benefit base for any year after 1972 and prior to the first calendar year in which the first increase in benefits pursuant to section 215(i) becomes effective shall be $9,000 or (if applicable) such other amount as may be specified in a law enacted subsequent to the Social Security Amendments of 1970.

rates of tax specified in sections 1401(a), 3101(a) and 3111 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 so that—

"(A) the rate of tax under section 3101(a) of such Code with respect to wages (as defined in section 3121 (a) of such Code) received during a calendar year is equal to the rate of tax under section 3111(a) of such Code with respect to wages (as defined in section 3121 (a) of such Code) received during such calendar year;

"(B) the rate of tax under section 1401(a) of such Code with respect to self-employment income (as defined in section 1402(b) of such Code) for any taxable year beginning during a period specified in such section 1401(a) shall be equal to 150 percent of the rate of tax under section 3101(a) of such Code with respect to wages (as defined in section 3121(a) of such Code) received during any calendar year occurring in such period.

After such allocation, the Secretary shall round any such tax rate, increased by reason of such allocation, to the nearest one-tenth of 1 percent.

"(d) At the time the Secretary publishes in the Federal Register the table required by section 215(i)(1)(D), he shall also publish in such Register—

"(1) the actuarial assumptions and methodology used in estimating the additional long-range level-cost referred to in subsection (a), and

"(2) the contribution and benefit base resulting pursuant to subsection (b), and

"(3) the amount of the increase in tax rates required pursuant to such subsection (a) and the allocation of such increase determined under subsection (b) (including any rounding authorized by such subsection)."

(c) Section 203(f) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"LIMITATION ON FEDERAL PARTICIPATION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 1122. (a) The purpose of this section is to assure that Federal funds appropriated under titles V, XVIII, and XIX are not used to support unnecessary capital expenditures made by or on behalf of health care facilities (177)or health maintenance organizations which are reimbursed under any of such titles and that, to the extent possible, reimbursement under such titles shall support planning activities with respect to health services and facilities in the various States.

"(b) The Secretary, after consultation with the Governor (or other chief executive officer) and with appropriate local public officials, shall make an agreement with any State which is able and willing to do so under which a designated planning agency (which shall be an agency described in clause (ii) of subsection (d) (1) (B) that has a governing body or advisory body at least half of whose members represent consumer interests) will—

"(1) make, and submit to the Secretary together with such supporting materials as he may find necessary, findings and recommendations with respect to capital expenditures proposed by or on behalf of any health care facility (178)or health maintenance organization in such State within the field of its responsibilities, (179)~~and~~

"(2) receive from other agencies described in clause (ii) of subsection (d) (1) (B), and submit to the Secretary together with such supporting material as he may find necessary, the findings and recommendations of such other agencies with respect to capital expenditures proposed by or on behalf of health care facilities (180) or health maintenance organizations in such State within the fields of their respective responsibilities, (181) and (182)"(3) establish and maintain procedures pursuant to which a person proposing any such capital expenditure may appeal a recommendation by the designated agency and will be granted an opportunity for a fair hearing by such agency or person other than the designated agency as the Governor (or other chief executive officer) may designate to hold such hearings, whenever and to the extent that the findings of such designated agency or any such other agency indicate that any such expenditure is not consistent with the standards, criteria, or plans developed pursuant to the Public Health Service Act (or the Mental Retardation Facilities and Community Mental Health Centers Construction Act of 1963) to meet the need for adequate health care facilities in the area covered by the plan or plans so developed.

"(c) The Secretary shall pay any such State from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, in advance or by way of reimbursement as may be provided in the agreement with it (and may make adjustments in such payments on account of overpayments or underpayments previously made), for the reasonable cost of performing the functions specified in subsection (b).

"(d) (1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), if the Secretary determines that—

"(A) neither the planning agency designated in the agreement described in subsection (b) nor an agency described in clause (ii) of subparagraph (B) of this paragraph had been given notice of any proposed capital expenditure (in accordance with such procedure or in such detail as may be required by such agency) at least 60 days prior to such expenditure; or

"(B) (i) the planning agency so designated or an agency so described had received such timely notice of the intention to make such capital expenditure and had, within a reasonable period after receiving such notice and prior to such expenditure, notified the person proposing such expenditure that the expenditure would not be in conformity with the standards, criteria, or plans developed by such agency or any other agency described in clause (ii) for adequate health care facilities in such State or in the area for which such other agency has responsibility, and then, for such period as he finds necessary in any case to effectuate the purpose of this section, he shall, in determining the Federal payments to be made under titles V, XVIII, and XIX with respect to services furnished in the health care facility for which such capital expenditure is made, not include any amount which is attributable to depreciation, interest on borrowed funds, a return on equity capital (in the case of proprietary facilities), or other expenses related to such capital expenditure. (186)With respect to any organization which is reimbursed on a per capita basis, in determining the Federal payments to be made under titles V, XVIII, and XIX, the Secretary shall exclude an amount which in his judgment is a reasonable equivalent to the amount which would otherwise be excluded under this subsection if payment were to be made on other than a per capita basis.

"(2) If the Secretary, after submitting the matters involved to the advisory council established or designated under subsection (i), determines that an exclusion of expenses related to any capital expenditure of any health care facility (187)or health maintenance organization would not be consistent with the effective organization and delivery of health services or the effective administration of title V, XVIII, or XIX, he shall not exclude such expenses pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(e) Where a person obtains under lease or comparable arrangement any facility or part thereof, or equipment for a facility, which would have been subject to an exclusion under subsection (d) if the person had acquired it by purchase, the Secretary shall (1) in computing such person's rental expense in determining the Federal payments to be made under titles V, XVIII, and XIX with respect to services furnished in such facility, deduct the amount which in his judgment is a reasonable equivalent of the amount that would have been excluded if the person had acquired such facility or such equipment by purchase, and (2) in computing such person's return on equity capital deduct any amount deposited under the terms of the lease or comparable arrangement.

Advisory Council, the Medical Assistance Advisory Council, and other appropriate national advisory councils with respect to matters bearing on the purposes and administration of this section and the coordination of activities under this section with related Federal health programs.

"(3) If an advisory council is established by the Secretary under paragraph (1), it shall be composed of members who are not otherwise in the regular full-time employ of the United States, and who shall be appointed by the Secretary without regard to the civil service laws from among leaders in the fields of the fundamental sciences, the medical sciences, and the organization, delivery, and financing of health care, and persons who are State or local officials or are active in community affairs or public or civic affairs or who are representative of minority groups. REPORT ON PLAN FOR PROSPECTIVE REIMBURSEMENT; EXPERIMENTS AND DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS TO DEVELOP INCENTIVES FOR ECONOMY IN THE PROVISION OF HEALTH SERVICES

SEC. 222. (a) (1) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, directly or through contracts with public or private agencies or organizations, shall develop and carry out experiments and demonstration projects designed to determine the relative advantages and disadvantages of various alternative methods of making payment on a prospective basis to hospitals, extended care facilities, and other providers of services for care and services provided by them under title XVIII of the Social Security Act and under State plans approved under titles XIX and V of such Act, including alternative methods for classifying providers, for establishing prospective rates of payment, and for implementing on a gradual, selective, or other basis the establishment of a prospective payment system, in order to stimulate such providers through positive financial incentives to use their facilities and personnel more efficiently and thereby to reduce the total costs of the health programs involved without adversely affecting the quality of services by containing or lowering the rate of increase in provider costs that has been and is being experienced under the existing system of retroactive cost reimbursement.

(2) The experiments and demonstration projects developed under paragraph (1) shall be of sufficient scope and shall be carried out on a wide enough scale to permit a thorough evaluation of the alternative methods of prospective payment under consideration while giving assurance that the results derived from the experiments and projects will obtain generally in the operation of the programs involved (without committing such programs to the adoption of any prospective payment system either locally or nationally).

(3) In the case of any experiment or demonstration project under paragraph (1), the Secretary may waive compliance with the requirements of titles XVIII, XIX, and V of the Social Security Act insofar as such requirements relate to methods of payment for services provided; and costs incurred in such experiment or project in excess of those which would otherwise be reimbursed or paid under such titles may be reimbursed or paid to the extent that such waiver applies to them (with such excess being borne by the Secretary). No experiment or demonstration project shall be developed or carried out under paragraph (1) until the Secretary obtains the advice and recommendations of specialists who are competent to evaluate the proposed experiment or project as to the soundness of its objectives, the possibilities of securing productive results, the adequacy of resources to conduct it, and its relationship to other similar experiments or projects already completed or in process; and no such experiment or project shall be actually placed in operation until a written report containing a full and complete description thereof has been transmitted to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

(4) Grants, payments under contracts, and other expenditures made for experiments and demonstration projects under this subsection shall be made (190) in appropriate part from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund (established by section 1817 of the Social Security Act) and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund (established by section 1841 of the Social Security Act). Grants and payments under contracts may be made either in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be determined by the Secretary, and shall be made in such installments and on such conditions as the Secretary finds necessary to carry out the purpose of this subsection With respect to any such grant, payment, or other expenditure, the amount to be paid from each of such trust funds shall be determined by the Secretary, giving due regard to the purposes of the experiment or project involved.

(5) The Secretary shall submit to the Congress no later than ~~(191)July 1, 1972,~~ January 1, 1973, a full report on the experiments and demonstration projects carried out under this subsection and on the experience of other programs with respect to prospective reimbursement together with any related data and materials which he may consider appropriate. Such report shall include detailed recommendations with respect to the specific methods which could be used in the full implementation of a system of prospective payment to providers of services under the programs involved.

(6) Section 1875(b) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting "and the experiments and demonstration projects authorized by section 222(a) of the Social Security Amendments of 1970" after "1967".

"(a) (1) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is authorized, either directly or through grants to public or nonprofit private agencies, institutions, and organizations or contracts with public or private agencies, institutions, and organizations, to develop and engage in experiments and demonstration projects for the following purposes:

"(A) to determine whether, and if so which, changes in methods of payment or reimbursement (other than those dealt with in section 222 (a) of the Social Security Amendments of 1970) for health care and services under health programs established by the Social Security Act, including a change to methods based on negotiated rates, would have the effect of increasing the efficiency and economy of health services under such programs through the creation of additional incentives to these ends without adversely affecting the quality of such services;

~~(192)~~ "~~(B) to determine whether payments to organizations and institutions which have the capability of providing comprehensive health care service or services other than those for which payment may be made under such programs (and which are incidental to services for which payment may be made under such programs)~~

~~would, in the judgment of the Secretary, result in more economical provision and more effective utilization of services for which payment may be made under such programs;~~

"(B) to determine whether payments for services other than those for which payment may be made under such programs (and which are incidental to services for which payment may be made under such programs) would, in the judgment of the Secretary, result in more economical provision and more effective utilization of services for which payment may be made under such program, where such services are furnished by organizations and institutions which have the capability of providing—

"(i) comprehensive health care services, or

"(ii) mental health care services (as defined by section 401(c) of the Mental Retardation Facilities and Community Health Centers Construction Act of 1963), or

"(iii) ambulatory health care services, but only where the Secretary determines, after appropriate study, that payment for such health care services would result in a more economical provision of such services.

"(C) to determine whether the rates of payment or reimbursement for health care services, approved by a State for purposes of the administration of one or more of its laws, when utilized to determine the amount to be paid for services furnished in such State under the health programs established by the Social Security Act, would have the effect of reducing the costs of such programs without adversely affecting the quality of such services;

"(D) to determine whether payments under such programs based on a single combined rate of reimbursement or charge for the teaching activities and patient care which residents, interns, and supervising physicians render in connection with a graduate medical education program in a patient facility would result in more equitable and economical patient care arrangements without adversely affecting the quality of such care; and

"(E) to determine whether utilization review and medical review mechanisms established on an areawide or communitywide basis would have the effect of providing more effective controls under such programs over excessive utilization of services.

For purposes of this subsection, 'health programs established by the Social Security Act' means the program established by title XVIII of such Act, a program established by a plan of a State approved under title XIX of such Act, and a program established by a plan of a State approved under title V of such Act.

"(2) Grants, payments under contracts, and other expenditures made for experiments and demonstration projects under paragraph (1) shall be made (193)in appropriate part from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund (established by section 1817 of the Social Security Act) and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund (established by section 1841 of the Social Security Act). Grants and payments under contracts may be made either in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be determined by the Secretary, and shall be made in such installments and on such conditions as the Secretary finds necessary to carry out the purpose of this section. With respect to any such grant, payment, or other expenditure, the amount to be paid from each of such trust funds shall be determined by the Secretary, giving due regard to the purposes of the experiment or project involved."
