~~"(e)(1) In any case where post-hospital extended care~~ services or post-hospital home health services are furnished to an individual and—

"(A) a physician provides the certification referred to in subparagraph (C) or (D) of section 1814(a)(2), as the case may be, and the condition of the individual with respect to which such certification is made is a condition designated in regulations,

"(B) such physician (in the case of such extended care services) submitted to the extended care facility which is to provide such services, prior to the admission of such individual to such facility, a plan for the furnishing of such services, or (in the case of such home health services) submitted to the home health agency which is to furnish such services, prior to the first visit to such individual, a plan specifying the type and frequency of the services required, and

"(C) there is compliance with such other requirements and procedures as may be specified in regulations, the provisions of paragraphs (1) and (9) of subsection (a) shall not apply (except as may be provided in section 1814(a)(7)) for such periods of time, with respect to such conditions of the individual, as may be prescribed in regulations.

"(2) In specifying the conditions included under paragraph (1) and the periods for which paragraphs (1) and

~~(9) of subsection (a) shall not apply, the Secretary shall take into account the medical severity of such conditions, the period over which such conditions generally require the services specified in subparagraphs (C) and (D) of section 1814(a)(2), the length of stay in an institution generally needed for the treatment of such conditions, and such other factors affecting the type of care to be provided as the Secretary deems pertinent.~~

~~"(3) If the Secretary determines with respect to a physician that such physician is submitting with some frequency (A) erroneous certifications that individuals have conditions designated in regulations as provided in this subsection or (B) plans for providing services which are inappropriate, the provisions of paragraph (1) shall not apply, after the effective date of such determination, in any case in which such physician submits a certification or plan referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) of such paragraph."~~

~~(b) The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to admissions to extended care facilities, and home health plans initiated, on or after January 1, 1971.~~

PAYMENT FOR EXTENDED CARE AND HOME HEALTH SERVICES

SEC. 233. (a)(1) Section 1814(a)(2)(C) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking the phrase, "skilled nursing care on a continuing basis" and inserting in lieu thereof, "posthospital institutional care which requires the continuing availability of skilled nursing and related skilled services";

(2) Section 1814 of such Act (as amended by section 226 of this Act) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"Payment for Posthospital Extended Care Services

"(h) An individual shall be presumed to require the care specified in subsection (a)(2)(C) of this section and payment shall be made to an extended care facility (subject to the provisions of section 1812) for posthospital extended care services which are furnished by such facility to such individual if—

"(1) the certification referred to in subsection (a)(2)(C) of this section is submitted for approval in timely fashion prior to the time of admission of such individual to such extended care facility, and

"(2) such certification is accompanied by (A) a plan of treatment for providing such services, and (B) as may be required by regulations, an estimate of the period for which such services will be required, and

"(3) there has not been a finding prior to or at the time of such admission by a review group designated by the Secretary that such individual does not require the care specified in subsection (a)(2)(C) of this section,

but only for services furnished—

"(4) during the first ten days of the individual's stay in the extended care facility, or

"(5) if less, during such period as may be certified under subparagraph (2)(B) or as may be approved by the review group under paragraph (3).

A similar presumption and payment for services furnished thereafter (for such number of days as are specifically approved by the review group) shall be made pursuant to the preceding sentence if, prior to the third day before the last day for which such payment may be made or (if earlier) a day specified by such review group, appropriate medical and related evidence is submitted on the basis of which such review group finds that such individual continues to require for a period determined in accordance with paragraph (4) or (5) the care specified in subsection (a)(2)(C) of this section; except that where such evidence is submitted in timely fashion but does not support such a finding, payment may be made for such services as are furnished by such extended care facility before the third day after the day on which such facility receives notice of the review group's determination.

"Payment for Posthospital Home Health Services

"(i) An individual shall be presumed to require the services specified in subsection (a)(2)(D) of this section and payment shall be made to a home health agency (subject to the provisions of section 1812) for posthospital home health services furnished by such agency to such individual if—

"(1) the certification and plan referred to in subsection (a)(2)(D) of this section, accompanied by such estimate of the number of visits which will be required by such individual as may be required in regulations, is submitted in timely fashion prior to the first visit by such agency, and

"(2) there has not been a finding prior to such first visit by a review group designated by the Secretary that such individual does not require skilled nursing care on an intermittent basis or physical or speech therapy,

but only for services furnished—

"(3) during the first ten such visits, or

"(4) if less, for such number of visits as may be certified under paragraph (1) and as may be approved by the review group under paragraph (2).

A similar presumption and payment for services furnished (for such number of visits as are specifically approved by the review group) during subsequent visits by such agency shall be made pursuant to the preceding sentence if, prior to the seventh day before the final visit for which such payment may be made or (if earlier) a day specified by such review group, appropriate medical and related evidence is submitted on the basis of which such review group finds that such individual continues for a number of visits determined in accordance with paragraph (3) or (4) to require skilled nursing care on an intermittent basis or physical or speech therapy; except that where such evidence is submitted in timely fashion, but does not support such a finding, payment may be made for such services as are furnished by such home health agency before the day on which such agency receives notice of the review group's determination."

(3) Section 1835 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) An individual shall be presumed to require the services specified in subsection (a)(2)(A) of this section and payment shall be made to a home health agency (subject to the provisions of section 1832) for home health services furnished by such agency to such individual if—

"(1) the certification and plan referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A) of this section, accompanied by such estimate of the number of visits which will be required by such individuals as may be required by regulations, is submitted in timely fashion prior to the first visit by such agency, and

"(2) there has not been a finding prior to such first visit by a review group designated by the Secretary that such individual does not require skilled nursing care on an intermittent basis or physical or speech therapy,

but only for services furnished—

"(3) during the first ten such visits, or

"(4) if less, for such number of such visits as may be certified under paragraph (1) or as may be approved by the review group under paragraph (2).

Payment for services furnished during subsequent visits (for such number of visits as are specifically approved by the review group) by such agency shall be made pursuant to the preceding sentence if, prior to the seventh day before the final visit for which such payment may be made or (if earlier) a day specified by such review group, appropriate medical and related evidence is submitted on the basis of which such review group finds that such individual continues to require for a number of visits determined in accordance with paragraph (3) or (4) skilled nursing care on an intermittent basis or physical or speech therapy; except that where such evidence is submitted in timely fashion, but does not support such a finding, payment may be made for such services as are furnished by such home health agency before the day on which such agency receives notice of the review group's determination. The amendments made by this section shall apply to plans of care initiated after June 30, 1971."

(234)~~PAYMENTS TO HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATIONS~~

~~SEC. 239. (a) Title XVIII of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after section 1875 the following new section:~~

~~"PAYMENTS TO HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATIONS~~

~~"SEC. 1876. (a)(1) In lieu of amounts which would otherwise be payable pursuant to sections 1814(b) and 1833(a), the Secretary is authorized to determine, by actuarial methods, as provided in this section, with respect to any health maintenance organization, a combined part A and part B, prospective, per capita rate of payment for services~~ provided for enrollees in such organization who are entitled to hospital insurance benefits under part A and enrolled for medical insurance benefits under part B.

"(2) Such rate of payment shall be determined annually in accordance with regulations, taking into account the health maintenance organization's premiums with respect to its other enrollees (with appropriate actuarial adjustments to reflect the difference in utilization between its members who are under age 65 and its members who are age 65 and over) and such other pertinent factors as the Secretary may prescribe in regulations, and shall be designed to provide payment at a level not to exceed 95 per centum of the amount that the Secretary estimates (with appropriate adjustments to assure actuarial equivalence) would be payable for services covered under this title if such services were to be furnished by other than health maintenance organizations.

"(3) The payments to health maintenance organizations under this subparagraph shall be made from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund. The portion of such payment to such an organization for a month to be paid by the latter trust fund shall be equal to 200 percent of the product of (A) the number of covered enrollees of such organization for such month, and (B) the monthly premium rate for supplementary medical insurance for such month as has been determined and promulgated under section 1839 (b) (2). The remainder of such payment shall be paid by the former trust fund.

"(b) The term 'health maintenance organization' means a public or private organization which—

"(1) provides, either directly or through arrangements with others, health services to enrollees on a per capita prepayment basis;

"(2) provides with respect to enrollees to whom this section applies (through institutions, entities, and persons meeting the applicable requirements of section 1861) all of the services and benefits covered under parts A and B of this title;

"(3) provides physicians' services directly through physicians who are either employees or partners of such organization or under an arrangement with an organized group or groups of physicians which is or are reimbursed for services on the basis of an aggregate fixed sum or on a per capita basis;

"(4) demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary proof of financial responsibility and proof of capability to provide comprehensive health care services, including institutional services, efficiently, effectively, and economically;

"(5) has enrolled members at least half of whom consist of individual under age 65;

"(6) has arrangements for assuring that the health services required by its members are received promptly and appropriately and that the services that are received measure up to quality standards which it establishes in accordance with regulations; and

"(7) has an open enrollment period at least once every two years, under which it accepts eligible persons (as defined under subsection (d)) without underwriting restrictions and on a first-come first-accepted basis up to the limit of its capacity (unless to do so would result in failure to meet the requirement of paragraph (5)).

"(c) the benefits provided to an individual under this section shall consist of—

"(1) entitlement to have payment made on his behalf for all services described in section 1812 and section 1832 which are furnished to him by the health maintenance organization with which he is enrolled pursuant to subsection (c) of this section; and

"(2) entitlement to have payment made by such health maintenance organization to him or on his behalf for such emergency services (as defined in regulations) as may be furnished to him by a physician, supplier, or provider of services, other than the health maintenance organization with which he is enrolled.

"(d) Subject to the provisions of subsection (c), every individual who is entitled to hospital insurance benefits under part A and is enrolled for medical insurance benefits under part B shall be eligible to enroll with a health maintenance organization (as defined in subsection (b)) which serves the geographic area in which such individual resides.

"(e) An individual may enroll with a health maintenance organization under this section, and may terminate such enrollment, as may be prescribed by regulations.

"(f) Any individual enrolled with a health maintenance organization under this section who is dissatisfied by reason of his failure to receive without additional cost to him any health service to which he believes he is entitled shall, if the amount in controversy is $100 or more, be entitled to a hearing before the Secretary to the same extent as is provided in section 205(b) and in any such hearing the Secretary shall make such health maintenance organization a party thereto. If the amount in controversy is $1,000 or more, such individual or health maintenance organization shall be entitled to judicial review of the Secretary's final decision after such hearing as is provided in section 205(g).

"(g)(1) If the health maintenance organization provides its enrollees under this section only the services described in subsection (c), its premium rate for such enrollees shall not exceed the actuarial value of the cost-sharing provisions applicable under part A and part B.

"(2) If the health maintenance organization provides its enrollees under this section with additional services over those described in subsection (c), it shall furnish such enrollees with information as to the division of its premium rate between the portion applicable to such additional services and the portion applicable to the services described in subsection (c), subject to the limitation that the latter portion may not exceed the actuarial value of the cost-sharing provisions applicable under part A and part B."

(b) Section 1866 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) For purposes of this section, the term 'provider of services' shall include a health maintenance organization if such organization meets the requirements of section 1876."

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 1833 of the Social Security Act, any health maintenance organization which has entered into an agreement with the Secretary pursuant to section 1866 of such Act shall, for the duration of such agreement, be entitled to reimbursement only as provided in section 1876 of such Act.

(d) The effective date of any agreement with any health maintenance organization pursuant to section 1866 of such

~~Act shall be specified in such agreement pursuant to regulations.~~

~~(c)(1) Section 1814(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "Except as provided in subsection (d)," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Except as provided in subsection (d) or in section 1876,".~~

~~(2) Section 1833(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "Subject to" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Except as provided in section 1876, and subject to".~~

~~(3) Section 1866(b)(2) of such Act is amended by inserting after "1861" in clause (B) the following: "(or of section 1876 in the case of a health maintenance organization)".~~

~~(f) The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to services provided on or after January 1, 1971.~~

PAYMENT TO HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 239. (a) Title XVIII of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after section 1875 the following new section:

"PAYMENTS TO HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 1876. (a)(1) In lieu of amounts which would otherwise be payable pursuant to sections 1814(b) and 1833 (a), the Secretary is authorized to determine, as provided in this section, with respect to any health maintenance organization, a prospective per capita rate of payment—

"(A) for services provided under parts A and B for individuals enrolled with such organization pursuant to subsection (e) who are entitled to hospital insurance benefits under part A and enrolled for medical insurance benefits under part B, and

"(B) for services provided under part B for individuals enrolled with such organization pursuant to subsection (e) who are not entitled to benefits under part A but who are enrolled for benefits under part B.

"(2)(A) Each such rate of payment shall be determined annually in accordance with regulations, based on established actuarial methods taking into account the health maintenance organization's premiums with respect to its other enrollees (with appropriate actuarial adjustments to reflect the difference in utilization of resources between its members who are under age 65 and its members who are age 65 or over) and such other pertinent factors as the Secretary may prescribe in regulations, and shall be designed to provide payment at a level not to exceed the lesser of—

"(i) The portion of such organization's net premium with respect to its members who are under age 65 which represents its average per capita cost of providing benefits to such members (excluding administrative expenses), adjusted to the extent necessary to reflect the difference in utilization of services between its members who are under age 65 and its members who are age 65 or over, and also, in the selection of risk arising from underwriting procedures, plus—

"(I) A percentage of such adjusted net premium equal to the percentage by which such organization's weighted average premium with respect to its members who are under age 65 exceeds the portion of such premium which represents such organization's average per capita cost of providing services to such members and its administrative expenses, or

"(II) If less, 150 per centum of the dollar amount by which such organization's weighted average premium rate with respect to members who are under age 65 exceeds the portion of such premium rate which represents such organization's average per capita cost of providing services to them and its administrative expenses, or

"(ii) Ninety-five per centum of the amount which the Secretary estimates (with appropriate adjustment to assure actuarial equivalence) would otherwise be payable under this title for costs of such services (excluding administrative expenses) if they were furnished by other than health maintenance organizations.

"(B) In addition to the amount determined pursuant to subparagraph (A), there shall be payable to a health maintenance organization a reasonable allowance for its administrative costs which are not normally incurred by providers of services (as defined in regulations). Such allowance shall, however, in no case exceed 95 per centum of the national average (determined on a per capita basis) of administrative costs incurred by organizations described in sections 1816 and 1842, as determined by the Secretary on the basis of recent reliable data.

"(C) If the conditions specified in subparagraph (D) are met, the Secretary may pay any health maintenance organization at the 95 per centum actuarially equivalent rate specified in clause (ii) of subparagraph (A) even though it may be larger than the rate specified in clause (i), plus an allowance for administrative expenses as specified in subparagraph (B).

"(D) Payment at the rate specified in subparagraph (C) may be made to a health maintenance organization only if such organization provides the Secretary with satisfactory assurance that any amounts attributable to the difference between payment at such rate and payment at the rate specified in subparagraph (A) will be used in full by such organization for providing its enrollees under this section benefits in addition to those specified in subsection (c) or reducing the premium rates charged to such enrollees pursuant to subsection (g).

"(3) The payments to health maintenance organizations under this subsection for each month shall be made from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, as follows: The amount payable to such an organization for such a month from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund shall be equal to 200 percent of the product of (A) the number of individuals enrolled under subsection (e) with such organization for such month, and (B) the monthly premium for supplementary medical insurance applicable for such month under section 1839(b)(2). The remainder of such payment for such month to such organization shall be paid by the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund. For limitation on Federal participation for capital expenditures which are out of conformity with a comprehensive plan of a State or areawide planning agency, see section 1122.

"(b) The term 'health maintenance organization' means a public or private organization which—

"(1) provides, either directly or through arrangements with others, health services to individuals enrolled with such organization under subsection (e) on a per capita prepayment basis;

"(2) provides, to the extent applicable in subsection (c) (through institutions, entities, and persons meeting the applicable requirements of section 1861), all of the services and benefits covered under parts A and B of this title;

"(3) provides physicians' services (A) directly through physicians who are either employees or partners of such organization, or (B) under arrangements with one or more groups of physicians (organized on a group practice or individual practice basis) under which each such group is reimbursed for its services primarily on the basis of an aggregate fixed sum or on a per capita basis, regardless of whether the individual physician members of any such group are paid on a fee-for-service or other basis;

"(4) demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary proof of financial responsibility and proof of capability to provide comprehensive health care services, including institutional services, efficiently, effectively, and economically;

"(5) except as provided in subsections (h) and (i) has enrolled members at least half of whom are individuals under age 65;

"(6) has arrangements for assuring that the health services required by its members are received promptly and appropriately and that the services which are received meet standards of quality which it establishes in accordance with regulations;

"(7) has an open enrollment period at least every year under which it accepts up to the limits of its capacity and without restrictions, except as may be authorized in regulations, individuals who are eligible to enroll under subsection (d) in the order in which they apply for enrollment (unless to do so would result in failure to meet the requirement of paragraph (5)); and

"(8)(A) has an enrollment of not less than 10,000 members, or (as determined by the Secretary) is expected to have such enrollment within 3 years from the date such determination is made and (B) is expected to maintain such enrollment.

"(c) The benefits provided under this section shall consist of—

"(1) in the case of an individual who is entitled to hospital insurance benefits under part A and enrolled for medical insurance benefits under part B—

"(A) entitlement to have payment made on his behalf for all services described in section 1812 and section 1832 which are furnished to him by the health maintenance organization with which he is enrolled pursuant to subsection (e) of this section; and

"(B) entitlement to have payment made by such health maintenance organization to him or on his behalf for such emergency services and prescribed maintenance therapy (as defined in regulations) as may be furnished to him by a physician, supplier, or provider of services, other than the health maintenance organization with which he is enrolled;

"(2) in the case of an individual who is not entitled to hospital insurance benefits under part A but who is enrolled for medical insurance benefits under part B, entitlement to have payment made for services described in paragraph (1), but only to the extent that such services are also described in section 1832.

"(d) Subject to the provisions of subsection (e), every individual described in subsection (c) shall be eligible to enroll with a health maintenance organization (as defined in subsection (b)) which serves the geographic area in which such individual resides.

"(e) An individual may enroll with a health maintenance organization under this section, and may terminate such enrollment, as may be prescribed by regulations.

*"(f) Any individual enrolled with a health maintenance organization under this section who is dissatisfied by reason of his failure to receive without additional cost to him any health service to which he believes he is entitled shall, if the amount in controversy is $100 or more, be entitled to a hearing before the Secretary to the same extent as is provided in section 205 (b). In any such hearing the Secretary shall make such health maintenance organization a party thereto. If the amount in controversy is $1,000 or more, such individual or health maintenance organization shall be entitled to judicial review of the Secretary's final decision after such hearing as provided in section 205(g).

"(g)(1) If the health maintenance organization provided its enrollees under this section only the services described in subsection (c), its premium rate for such enrollees shall not exceed the actuarial value of the deductible and coinsurance which would otherwise be applicable to such enrollees under part A and part B, if they were not enrolled under this section.

"(2) A health maintenance organization may provide additional services for which premium charges may be made, but such charges must be reasonable as determined by the Secretary in accordance with regulations. If the health maintenance organization provides to its enrollees under this section services in addition to those described in subsection (c), it shall furnish such enrollees with information on the portion of its premium rate applicable to such additional services and the portion applicable to the services described in subsection (c). Such portion applicable to the services described in subsection (c) may not exceed the actuarial value of the deductible and coinsurance which would otherwise be applicable to such enrollees under part A and part B if they were not enrolled under this section.

"(h) The provisions of paragraph (5) of subsection (b) shall not apply with respect to any health maintenance organization for such period not to exceed five years from the date such organization enters into an agreement with the Secretary pursuant to subsection (j), as the Secretary may permit, but only so long as such organization demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary by the submission of its plans for each year that it is making continuous efforts and progress toward achieving compliance with the provisions of such paragraph (5) within such five year period.

"(i) The Secretary may waive the requirements of paragraph (5) of subsection (b) with respect to any health maintenance organization if he finds that such organization has made reasonable efforts to achieve compliance with such paragraph and, that because of its geographic location or other circumstances beyond its control, such organization would be unable to achieve compliance with such paragraph except through a reduction of enrollment under this section.

"(j)(1) The Secretary is authorized to enter into a contract with any health maintenance organization which undertakes to provide, on a per capita prepayment basis, the services described in section 1832 (and section 1812, in the case of individuals who are entitled to hospital insurance benefits under part A) to individuals enrolled with such organization pursuant to subsection (e).

"(2) Each contract under this section shall be for a term at least one year, as determined by the Secretary, and may be made automatically renewable from term to term in the absence of notice by either party of intention to terminate at the end of the current term; except that the Secretary may terminate any such contract at any time (after such reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the health maintenance organization involved as he may provide in regulations) if he finds that the health maintenance organization has failed substantially to carry out the contract or is carrying out the contract in a manner inconsistent with the efficient and effective administration of this section.

"(3) The effective date of any contract executed pursuant to this subsection shall be specified in such contract pursuant to regulations.

"(4) Payment for services provided by any health maintenance organization to eligible enrollees under the contract shall be made pursuant to subsection (a)(2) except that if the Secretary determines within a three year period following the termination of any accounting period of any such organization that the estimates made pursuant to subsection (a)(2) were substantially incorrect, because they were based upon erroneous data or because actuarial assumptions were materially different from the actual experience with the result that such organization received substantially more or less than it should have received pursuant to subsection (a)(2), the Secretary is authorized to make appropriate retroactive adjustments in such payments.

"(5) Each contract under this section—

"(A) shall provide that the Secretary, or any person or organization designated by him—

"(i) shall have the right to inspect or otherwise evaluate the quality, appropriateness, and timeliness of services performed under such contract; and

"(ii) shall have the right to audit and inspect any books and records of such health maintenance organization which pertain to services performed under such contract; and

"(B) shall contain such other terms and conditions not inconsistent with this section as the Secretary may find necessary."

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 1814 and section 1833 of the Social Security Act, any health maintenance organization which has entered into an agreement with the Secretary pursuant to section 1876 of such Act shall, for the duration of such agreement, be entitled to reimbursement only as provided in section 1876 of such Act for individuals who are members of such organization; except that with respect to individuals who were members of such organization prior to July 1, 1971, and who, although eligible to have payment made pursuant to section 1876 of such Act for services rendered to them, chose (in accordance with regulations) not to have such payment made pursuant to such section, the Secretary shall, for a period not to exceed three years commencing on July 1, 1971, pay such organization on the basis of prospective per capita rates, determined in accordance with the provisions of section 1876(a) of such Act, with appropriate actuarial adjustments to reflect the difference in utilization of out-of-plan services between such individuals and individuals who are enrolled with such organization pursuant to section 1876 of such Act.

(c)(1) Section 1814(a) of such Act, as amended by section 226(b) of this Act, is further amended by striking out "Except as provided in subsections (d) and (g)," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Except as provided in subsections (d) and (g) and in section 1876,".

(2) Section 1833(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "Subject to" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Except as provided in section 1876 and subject to".

(d) The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to services provided on or after July 1, 1971.

(235) UNIFORM HEALTH, SAFETY, ENVIRONMENTAL, AND STAFFING STANDARDS FOR EXTENDED CARE FACILITIES AND SKILLED NURSING HOMES

SEC. 240. (a) Title XI of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 221 of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"UNIFORM HEALTH, SAFETY, ENVIRONMENTAL, AND STAFFING STANDARDS FOR EXTENDED CARE FACILITIES AND SKILLED NURSING HOMES

"SEC. 1123..(a) If any State has a State plan approved under title XIX which imposes (as a condition for payment of skilled nursing services under the plan) on nursing homes in such State standards with respect to health, safety, environmental quality, or staffing which are higher than the standards (relating to health, safety, environmental quality, or staffing) which are imposed under title XVIII with respect to extended care facilities, the Secretary shall impose, on the extended care facilities in such State, like standards as a condition of payment under title XVIII for extended care services provided by such facilities.

"(b) In addition to the requirements imposed by law as a condition of approval of any State plan under title XIX, there is hereby imposed the requirement (and the plan shall be deemed to require) that, as a condition of payment under the plan for skilled nursing home services provided by facilities in such State, such facilities must meet the standards (relating to health, safety, environmental quality, and staffing) applicable to facilities providing extended care services for which payment may be made under title XVIII, if, and to the extent that, such standards are higher than the standards (relating to health, safety, environmental quality, and staffing) which are otherwise imposed under the plan as a condition of payment thereunder for skilled nursing home services."

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall be applicable with respect to skilled nursing home services provided after June 30, 1971, under a State plan approved under title XIX of the Social Security and extended care services provided after such date under title XVIII of such Act.

(236) SIMPLIFIED REIMBURSEMENT OF EXTENDED CARE FACILITIES

SEC. 241. (a) Section 1861(v)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by—

(a) inserting "(A)" after "(v)(1)";

(b) inserting "(B)" immediately before "Such" the first time it appears in the second paragraph thereof; and

(c) adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(C) Such regulations may, in the case of extended care facilities in any State, provide for the use of rates, developed by the State in which such facilities are located, for the payment of the cost of skilled nursing home services furnished under the State's plan approved under title XIX (and such rates may be increased by the Secretary on a class or size of institution or on a geographical basis by a percentage factor not in excess of 10 percent to take into account determinable items or services or other requirement under this title not otherwise included in the computation of such State rates), if the Secretary finds that such rates are reasonably related to (but not necessarily limited to) analyses undertaken by such State of costs of care in comparable facilities in such State; except that the foregoing provisions of this subparagraph shall not apply to any extended care facility in such State if—

"(i) such facility is a distinct part of or directly operated by a hospital, or

"(ii) such facility operates in a close, formal satellite relationship (as defined in regulations of the Secretary) with a participating hospital or hospitals.

Notwithstanding the previous provisions of this paragraph, in the case of an extended care facility specified in clause (ii) of this subparagraph, the reasonable cost of any services furnished by such facility as determined by the Secretary under this subsection shall not exceed 150 percent of the costs determined by the application of this subparagraph (without regard to such clause (ii)).".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall be applicable only in the case of accounting periods beginning after June 30, 1971.

(237) WAIVER OF REQUIREMENT OF REGISTERED PROFESSIONAL NURSES IN HOSPITALS IN RURAL AREAS

SEC. 242. Section 1861(e)(5) of the Social Security Act is amended by (1) inserting "(i)" after "(5)", (2) inserting "(ii)" after "and", and (3) adding at the end thereof the following: "except that the Secretary is authorized to waive the requirement of clause (i) of this paragraph for any one-year period (or less) ending no later than December 31, 1975 with respect to any institution where immediately preceding such period he finds that—

"(A) such institution is located in a rural area and the supply of hospital services in such area is not sufficient to meet the needs of individuals residing therein, and

"(B) the failure of such institution to qualify as a hospital would seriously reduce the availability of such services to beneficiaries in such area; and

"(C) such institution has made and continues to make a good faith effort to comply with this paragraph, but such compliance is impeded by the lack of qualified nursing personnel in such area; and

"(D) the requirements of such clause (i) were met for a regular daytime shift."

(238) INDEPENDENT PROFESSIONAL REVIEW IN INTERMEDIATE CARE FACILITIES

SEC. 243. Section 1902(a) of the Social Security Act (as amended by sections 234, 238, 251, and 253 of this Act) is further amended (A) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (31), (B) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (33) and inserting in lieu of such period "; and", and (C) by adding after paragraph (32) the following new paragraph:

"(33) Effective July 1, 1971, provide (A) for a regular program of independent professional review (including medical evaluation of each patient's need for intermediate care) and a written plan of service prior to admission or authorization of benefits in an intermediate care facility; (B) for periodic inspections to be made in all intermediate care facilities (if the State plan includes care in such institutions) within the State by one or more independent professional review teams (composed of physicians or registered nurses and other appropriate health and social service personnel) of (i) the care being provided in such intermediate care facilities to persons receiving assistance under the State plan, (ii) with respect to each of the patients receiving such care, the adequacy of the services available in particular intermediate care facilities to meet the current health needs and promote the maximum physical well-being of patients receiving care in such facilities, (iii) the necessity and desirability of the continued placement of such patients in such facilities, and (iv) the feasibility of meeting their health care needs through alternative institutional or noninstitutional services; and (C) for the making by such team or teams of full and complete reports of the findings resulting from such inspections, together with any recommendations to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan."

(239) DIRECT LABORATORY BILLING OF PATIENTS

(1) striking out "and" before "(B)";

(2) inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", and (C) with respect to diagnostic tests performed in a laboratory for which payment is made under this part to the laboratory, the amounts paid shall be equal to 100 percent of the negotiated rate for such tests (as determined pursuant to subsection (g) of this section)".

(b) Section 1833 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(g) With respect to diagnostic tests performed in a laboratory for which payment is made under this part to the laboratory, the Secretary is authorized to establish a payment rate which is acceptable to the laboratory and which would be considered the full charge for such tests. Such negotiated rate shall be limited to an amount not in excess of the total payment that would have been made for the services in the absence of such a rate."

(240) PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW

SEC. 245. (a) The heading to title XI of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out

"TITLE XI—GENERAL PROVISIONS" and inserting in lieu thereof

"TITLE XI—GENERAL PROVISIONS AND PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW

"PART A—GENERAL PROVISIONS".

(b) Title XI of such Act is further amended by adding after section 1123 thereof (as added by section 240(a) of this Act) the following:

"PART B—PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW

"DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 1151. In order to promote the effective, efficient, and economical delivery of health care services for which payment may be made (in whole or in part) under title XVIII, or under State plans approved under title XIX, and in recognition of the interests of patients and the public in improved health care services, it is the purpose of this part to assure, through the application of suitable procedures of professional standards review, that the services for which payment may be made under the Social Security Act will conform to appropriate professional standards for the provision of health care and that payment for such services will be made—

"(1) only when, and to the extent, medically necessary, as determined in the exercise of reasonable limits of professional discretion; and

"(2) in the case of services provided by a hospital or other health care facility on an inpatient basis, only when and for such period as such services cannot, consistent with professionally recognized health care standards, effectively be provided on an outpatient basis or more economically in an inpatient health care facility of a different type, as determined in the exercise of reasonable limits of professional discretion.

"DESIGNATION OF PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 1152. (a) The Secretary shall (1) not later than January 1, 1972, establish throughout the United States appropriate areas with respect to which Professional Standards Review Organizations may be designated, and (2) at the earliest practicable date thereafter enter into an agreement with a qualified organization whereby such an organization shall be designated as the Professional Standards Review Organization for such area.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a), the term 'qualified organization' means—

"(1) when used in connection with any area—

"(A) a nonprofit professional association (i) (or a component organization thereof) which is composed of physicians engaged in the practice of medicine or surgery in such area, (ii) the membership of which includes a substantial proportion of all such physicians in such area, and (iii) which has available professional competence to review health care services of the types and kinds with respect to which Professional Standards Review Organizations have review responsibilities under this part, or

"(B) such other public, nonprofit private, or other agency or organization, which the Secretary determines, in accordance with criteria prescribed by him in regulations, to be of professional competence and otherwise suitable; and

"(2) which the Secretary, on the basis of his examination and evaluation of a formal plan submitted to him by the association, agency, or organization (as well as on the basis of other relevant data and information), finds to be willing to perform and capable of performing, in an effective and timely manner and at reasonable cost, the duties, functions, and activities of a Professional Standards Review Organization required by or pursuant to this part.

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall not enter into any agreement under this part under which there is designated as the Professional Standards Review Organization for any area any organization other than an organization referred to in subsection (b)(1)(A) unless, in such area, there is no organization referred to in subsection (b)(1)(A) which meets the conditions specified in subsection (b)(2).

"(2) Whenever the Secretary shall have entered into an agreement under this part under which there is designated as the Professional Standards Review Organization for any area any organization other than an organization referred to in subsection (b)(1)(A), he shall not renew such agreement with such organization if he determines that—

"(A) there is in such area an organization referred to in subsection (b)(1)(A) which (i) has not been (nor has its predecessor been) previously designated as a Professional Standards Review Organization, and (ii) is willing to enter into an agreement under this part under which such organization would be designated as the Professional Standards Review Organization for such area;

"(B) such organization meets the conditions specified in subsection (b)(2); and

"(C) the designation of such organization as the Professional Standards Review Organization for such area will result in an improvement in the performance in such area of the duties and functions required of such Organizations under this part.

"(d)(1) An agreement entered into under this part between the Secretary and any organization under which such organization is designated as the Professional Standards Review Organization for any area shall provide that such organization will—

"(A) perform such duties and functions and assume such responsibilities and comply with such other requirements as may be required by this part or under regulations of the Secretary promulgated to carry out the provisions of this part; and

"(B) collect such data relevant to its function and such information and keep and maintain such records as the Secretary may require to carry out the purposes of this part and to permit access to and use of any such records as the Secretary may require for such purposes.

"(2) Any such agreement with an organization under this part shall provide that the Secretary make payments to such organization equal to the amount of expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred, as determined by the Secretary, by such organization in carrying out or preparing to carry out the duties and functions required by such agreement.

"(3) Any such agreement under this part with an organization shall be for a term of twelve months; except that, prior to the expiration of such term, such agreement may be terminated—

"(A) by the organization at such time and upon such notice to the Secretary as may be prescribed in regulations (except that notice of more than three months may not be required); or

"(B) by the Secretary at such time and upon such reasonable notice to the organization as may be prescribed in regulations, but only after the Secretary has determined (after providing such organization with an opportunity for a formal hearing on the matter) that such organization is not substantially complying with or effectively carrying out the provisions of such agreement.

"(e) No Professional Standards Review Organization shall utilize the services of any individual who is not a physician to make final determinations with respect to the professional conduct of any physician, or any act performed by any physician in the exercise of his profession.

"REVIEW PENDING DESIGNATION OF PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW ORGANIZATION

"SEC. 1153. Pending the assumption by a Professional Standards Review Organization for any area, of full review responsibility, and pending a demonstration of capacity for improved review effort with respect to matters involving the provision of health care services in such area for which payment (in whole or in part) may be made, under title XVIII, or under State plans approved under title XIX, any review with respect to such services which has not been designated by the Secretary as the responsibility of such organization, shall be reviewed in the manner otherwise provided for under law.

"TRIAL PERIOD FOR PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW ORGANIZATION

"SEC. 1154. (a) The Secretary shall initially designate an organization as a Professional Standards Review Organization for any area on a conditional basis with a view to determining the capacity of such organization to perform the duties and functions imposed under this part on Professional Standards Review Organizations. Such designation may not be made prior to receipt from such organization and approval by the Secretary of a formal plan for the orderly assumption and implementation of the responsibilities of the Professional Standards Review Organization under this part.

"(b) During any such trial period (which may not exceed twenty-four months), the Secretary may require a Professional Standards Review Organization to perform only such of the duties and functions required under this part of Professional Standards Review Organizations as he determines such organization to be capable of performing. The number and type of such duties shall, during the trial period, be progressively increased as the organization becomes capable of added responsibility so that, by the end of such period, such organization shall be considered a qualified organization only if the Secretary finds that it is substantially carrying out the activities and functions required of Professional Standards Review Organizations under this part with respect to the review of health care services provided by physicians and other practitioners and institutional health care facilities. Any of such duties and functions not performed by such organization during such period shall be performed in the manner and to the extent otherwise provided for under law.

"(c) Any agreement under which any organization is conditionally designated as the Professional Standards Review Organization for any area may be terminated by such organization upon ninety days notice to the Secretary or by the Secretary upon ninety days notice to such organization.

"(d) In order to avoid duplication of functions and unnecessary review and control activities, the Secretary is authorized to waive any or all of the review or similar activities otherwise required under or pursuant to any provision of this Act (other than this part) where he finds, on the basis of substantial evidence of the effective performance of review and control activities by Professional Standards Review Organizations, that the review and similar activities otherwise so required, are not needed for the provision of adequate review and control.

"DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS OF PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 1155. (a)(1) It shall be the duty and function of each Professional Standards Review Organization for any area to assume, at the earliest date practicable, responsibility for the review of the professional activities in such area of physicians and other health care practitioners and institutional providers of health care services in the provision of health care services for which payment may be made (in whole or in part) under title XVIII, or under State plans approved under title XIX, for the purpose of determining whether—

"(A) such services are or were medically necessary;

"(B) the quality of such services meets professionally recognized standards of health care; and

"(C) in case such services are proposed to be provided in a hospital or other health care facility on an in-patient basis, such services could, consistent with the provision of appropriate medical care, be effectively provided on an out-patient basis or more economically in an in-patient health care facility of a different type.

"(2) Each Professional Standards Review Organization shall have the authority to determine, in advance, in the case of—

"(A) any elective admission to a hospital, or other health care facility, or

"(B) any other health care service which will consist of extended or costly courses of treatment, whether such service, if provided, or if provided by a particular health care practitioner or by a particular hospital or other health care facility, would meet the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (C) of paragraph (1).

"(3) Each Professional Standards Review Organization shall, in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, determine and publish, from time to time, the types and kinds of cases (whether by type of health care or diagnosis involved, or whether in terms of other relevant criteria relating to the provision of health care services) with respect to which such Organization will, in order most effectively to carry out the purposes of this part, exercise the authority conferred upon it under paragraph (2).

"(4) Each Professional Standards Review Organization shall be responsible for the regular review of profiles of care and services received and provided with respect to patients, utilizing to the greatest extent practicable in such patient profiles, methods of coding which will provide maximum confidentiality as to patient identity and assure objective evaluation consistent with the purposes of this part. Profiles shall also be regularly reviewed on an ongoing basis with respect to each health care practitioner and provider to determine whether the care and services ordered or rendered are consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (1).

"(5) Physicians assigned responsibility for the review of hospital care may be only those having active hospital staff privileges in at least one of the participating hospitals in the area served by the Professional Standards Review Organization.

"(6) No physician shall be permitted to review—

"(A) health care services provided to a patient if he was directly or indirectly involved in providing such services, or

"(B) health care services provided in or by an institution, if he or any member of his family has, directly or indirectly, any financial interest in such institution. For purposes of this paragraph, a physician's family includes only his spouse (other than a spouse who is legally separated from him under a decree of divorce or separate maintenance), children (including legally adopted children), grandchildren, parents, and grandparents.

"(b) To the extent necessary or appropriate for the proper performance of its duties and functions, the Professional Standards Review Organization serving any area is authorized in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary to—

"(1) make arrangements to utilize the services of persons who are practitioners of or specialists in the various areas of medicine (including dentistry), or other types of health care, which persons shall, to the maximum extent practicable, be individuals engaged in the practice of their profession within the area served by such organization;

"(2) undertake such professional inquiry either before or after, or both before and after, the provision of services with respect to which such organization has a responsibility for review under subsection (a)(1);

"(3) examine the pertinent records of any practitioner or provider of health care services providing services with respect to which such organization has a responsibility for review under subsection (a)(1); and

"(4) inspect the physical facilities in which care is rendered or services provided (which are located in such area) of any practitioner or provider.

"(c) In order to familiarize physicians with the review functions and activities of Professional Standards Review Organizations and to promote acceptance of such functions and activities by physicians, patients, and other persons, each Professional Standards Review Organization, in carrying out its review responsibilities, shall (to the maximum extent consistent with the effective and timely performance of its duties and functions)—

"(1) encourage all physicians practicing their profession in the area served by such Organization to participate in the review activities of such Organization;

"(2) provide rotating physician membership of review committees on an extensive and continuing basis;

"(3) assure that membership on review committees have the broadest representation feasible in terms of the various types of practice in which physicians engage in the area served by such Organization; and

"(4) utilize, whenever feasible, medical periodicals and similar publications to publicize the functions and activities of Professional Standards Review Organizations.

"(d)(1) Each Professional Standards Review Organization is authorized to utilize the services of, and accept the findings of, the review committees of hospitals located in the area served by such Organization, but only when and only to the extent that such committees have demonstrated to the satisfaction of such Organization their capacity effectively and in timely fashion to review activities in such hospitals (including the medical necessity of admissions, services ordered, and lengths of stay) so as to aid in accomplishing the purposes and responsibilities described in subsection (a)(1).

"(2) Each Professional Standards Review Organization is authorized to utilize the services of medical societies and similar organizations to assist such Organization in performing one or more of its professional review activities, but only when and only to the extent that such societies or other organizations have demonstrated to the satisfaction of such Organization their capacity effectively and in timely fashion to perform such activities so as to aid in accomplishing the purposes described in subsection (a)(1).

"(3) The Secretary may prescribe regulations to carry out the provisions of this subsection.

"NORMS OF HEALTH CARE SERVICES FOR VARIOUS ILLNESSES OR HEALTH CONDITIONS

"SEC. 1156. (a) Each Professional Standards Review Organization shall apply professionally developed norms of care and treatment based upon typical patterns of practice in their region (including typical lengths-of-stay for institutional care by age and diagnosis) as principal points of evaluation and review. The National Professional Standards Review Council and the Secretary shall provide such technical assistance to the organization as will be helpful in utilizing and applying such norms of care and treatment. Where the actual norms of care and treatment in a Professional Standards Review Organization area are significantly different from professionally developed regional norms of care and treatment approved for comparable conditions, the Professional Standards Review Organization concerned shall be so informed, and in the event that appropriate consultation and discussion indicate reasonable basis for usage of such unusual norms in the area concerned, the Professional Standards Review Organization may apply such actual norms in such area as are approved by the National Professional Standards Review Council.

"(b) Any such norm with respect to treatment for any particular illness or health condition shall include (in accordance with regulations of the Secretary)—

"(1) the types and extent of the health care services which, taking into account differing, but acceptable, modes of treatment, are considered within the range of appropriate treatment of such illness or health condition, consistent with professionally recognized and accepted patterns of care;

"(2) the type of health care facility which is considered, consistent with such standards, to be the type in which health care services which are medically appropriate for such illness or condition can most economically be provided.

"(c)(1) The National Professional Standards Review Council shall provide for the preparation and distribution, to each Professional Standards Review Organization and to each other agency or person performing review functions with respect to the provision of health care services under title XVIII, or under State plans approved under title XIX, of appropriate materials indicating the regional norms to be utilized pursuant to this part. Such data concerning norms shall be reviewed and revised from time to time. The approval of the National Professional Standards Review Council of norms of care and treatment shall be based on its analysis of appropriate and adequate data.

"(2) Each review organization, agency, or person referred to in paragraph (1) shall utilize the norms developed under this section as a principal point of evaluation and review for determining, with respect to any health care services which have been or are proposed to be provided, whether such care and services are consistent with the criterion specified in section 1155(a)(1).

"(d)(1) Each Professional Standards Review Organization shall—

"(A) in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, specify the appropriate points in time, after the admission of a patient for in-patient care in a health care institution, at which the physician attending such patient shall execute a certification stating that further in-patient care in such institution will be medically necessary effectively to meet the health care needs of such patient; and

"(B) require that there be included in any such certification with respect to any patient such information as may be necessary to enable such Organization properly to evaluate the medical necessity of the further institutional health care recommended by the physician executing such certification.

"(2) The points in time at which any such certification will be required shall be consistent with and based on professionally developed norms of care and treatment and data developed with respect to length of stay in health care institutions of patients having various illnesses, injuries, or health conditions, and requiring various types of health care services or procedures.

"SUBMISSION OF REPORTS BY PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 1157. If, in discharging its duties and functions under this part, any Professional Standards Review Organization determines that any health care practitioner or any hospital, or other health care facility has violated any of the obligations imposed by section 1160, such organization shall report the matter to the Statewide Professional Standards Review Council for the State in which such organization is located together with the recommendations of such Organization as to the action which should be taken with respect to the matter. Any Statewide Professional Standards Review Council receiving any such report and recommendation shall review the same and promptly transmit such report and recommendation to the Secretary together with any additional comments or recommendations thereon as it deems appropriate.

"REQUIREMENT OF REVIEW APPROVAL AS CONDITION OF PAYMENT OF CLAIMS

"SEC. 1158. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no Federal funds appropriated under any title of this Act for the provision of health care services shall be used (directly or indirectly) for the payment, under any such title or any program established pursuant thereto, of any claim for the provision of such services if—

"(1) the provision of such services is subject to review by any Professional Standards Review Organization, or other agency; and

"(2) such organization or other agency has, in the proper exercise of its duties and functions under or consistent with the purposes of this part, disapproved of the services giving rise to such claim, and has, prior to the provision of such services, notified the practitioner or provider providing such services and the individual to receive such services of its disapproval of the provision of such services to such individual.

"NOTICE TO CLAIMS PAYMENT AGENCY OF DISAPPROVAL OF SERVICES

"SEC. 1159. Whenever any Professional Standards Review Organization, in the discharge of its duties and functions as specified by or pursuant to this part, disapproves of any health care services furnished by any practitioner or provider, such organization shall promptly notify the agency or organization having responsibility for acting upon claims for payment for or on account of such services.

"OBLIGATIONS OF HEALTH CARE PRACTITIONERS AND PROVIDERS OF HEALTH CARE SERVICES; SANCTIONS AND PENALTIES; HEARINGS AND REVIEW

"SEC. 1160 (a) (1) It shall be the obligation of any health care practitioner and any other person (including a hospital or other health care facility) who provides health care services for which payment may be made (in whole or in part) under title XVIII, or under any State plan approved under title XIX, to assure that services ordered or provided by such practitioner or person—

"(A) will be provided only when, and to the extent, medically necessary; and

"(B) will be of a quality which meets professionally recognized standards of health care; and it shall be the obligation of any health care practitioner, in ordering, authorizing, directing, or arranging for the provision by any other person (including a hospital or other health care facility) of health care services for any patient of such practitioner, to exercise his professional responsibility with a view to assuring (to the extent of his influence or control over such patient, such person, or the provision of such services) that such services will be provided—

"(C) only when, and to the extent, medically necessary; and

"(D) will be of a quality which meets professionally recognized standards of health care.

"(2) Each health care practitioner, and each hospital or other provider of health care services, shall have an obligation, within reasonable limits of professional discretion, not to take any action, in the exercise of his profession (in the case of any health care practitioner), or in the conduct of its business (in the case of any hospital or other such provider), which would authorize any individual to be admitted as an in-patient in or to continue as an in-patient in any hospital or other health care facility unless—

"(A) in-patient care is determined by such practitioner and by such hospital or other provider, consistent with professionally recognized health care standards, to be medically necessary for the proper care of such individual; and

"(B)(i) the in-patient care required by such individual cannot, consistent with such standards, be provided more economically in a health care facility of a different type; or

"(ii) (in the case of a patient who requires care which can, consistent with such standards, be provided more economically in a health care facility of a different type) there is, in the area in which such individual is located, no such facility or no such facility which is available to provide care to such individual at the time when care is needed by him.

"(b)(1) If after reasonable notice and opportunity for discussion with the practitioner or provider concerned, any Professional Standards Review Organization submits a report and recommendation to the Secretary pursuant to section 1157 (which report and recommendation shall be submitted through the Statewide Professional Standards Review Council which shall promptly transmit such report and recommendations together with any additional comments and recommendations thereon as it deems appropriate) and if the Secretary determines that such practitioner or provider, in providing health care services over which such organization has review responsibility and for which payment (in whole or in part) may be made under title XVIII, or under any State plan approved under title XIX, has—

"(A) by failing, in a substantial number of cases, substantially to comply with any obligation imposed on him under subsection (a), or

"(B) by grossly and flagrantly violating any such obligation in one or more instances, demonstrated an unwillingness or a lack of ability substantially to comply with such obligations, he (in addition to any other sanction provided under law) may exclude (permanently or for such period as the Secretary may prescribe) such practitioner or provider from eligibility to provide such services on a reimbursable basis.

"(2) A determination made by the Secretary under this subsection shall be effective at such time and upon such reasonable notice to the public and to the person furnishing the services involved as may be specified in regulations. Such determination shall be effective with respect to services furnished to an individual on or after the effective date of such determination (except that in the case of institutional health care services such determination shall be effective in the manner provided in title XVIII with respect to terminations of provider agreements), and shall remain in effect until the Secretary finds and gives reasonable notice to the public that the basis for such determination has been removed and that there is reasonable assurance that it will not recur.

"(3) In lieu of the sanction authorized by paragraph (1), the Secretary may require that (as a condition to the continued eligibility of such practitioner or provider to provide such health care services on a reimbursable basis) such practitioner or provider pay to the United States, in case such acts or conduct involved the provision by such practitioner or provider of health care services which were medically improper or unnecessary, an amount not in excess of the actual or estimated cost of the medically improper or unnecessary services so provided, or (if less) $5,000. Such amount may be deducted from any sums owing by the United States (or any instrumentality thereof) to the person from whom such amount is claimed.

"(4) Any person furnishing services described in paragraph (1) who is dissatisfied with a determination made by the Secretary under this subsection shall be entitled to reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing thereon by the Secretary to the same extent as is provided in section 205(b), and to judicial review of the Secretary's final decision after such hearing as is provided in section 205(g).

"(c) It shall be the duty of each Professional Standards Review Organization and each Statewide Professional Standards Review Council to use such authority or influence it may possess as a professional organization, and to enlist the support of any other professional or governmental organization having influence or authority over health care practitioners and any other person (including a hospital or other health care facility) providing health care services in the area served by such review organization, in assuring that each practitioner or provider (referred to in subsection (a)) providing health care services in such area shall comply with all obligations imposed on him under subsection (a).

"NOTICE TO PRACTITIONER OR PROVIDER

"SEC. 1161. (a) Whenever any Professional Standards Review Organization takes any action or makes any determination—

"(1) which denies any request, by a health care practitioner or other provider of health care services, for approval of a health care service proposed to be ordered or provided by such practitioner or provider; or

"(2) that any such practitioner or provider has violated any obligation imposed on such practitioner or provider under section 1160; such organization shall, immediately after taking such action or making such determination, give notice to such practitioner or provider of such determination and the basis therefor, and shall provide him with appropriate opportunity for discussion and review of the matter.

"STATEWIDE PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW COUNCILS; ADVISORY GROUPS TO SUCH COUNCILS

"SEC. 1162. (a) In any State in which there are located three or more Professional Standards Review Organizations, the Secretary shall establish a Statewide Professional Standards Review Council.

"(b) The membership of any such Council for any State shall be appointed by the Secretary and shall consist of—"(A) one representative from and designated by each Professional Standards Review Organization in the State;

"(B) four physicians, two of whom may be designated by the State medical society and two of whom may be designated by the State hospital association of such State to serve as members on such Council; and

"(C) four persons knowledgeable in health care from such State whom the Secretary shall have selected as representatives of the public in such State (at least two of whom shall have been recommended for membership on the Council by the Governor of such State).

"(c) It shall be the duty and function of the Statewide Professional Standards Review Council for any State, in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, to coordinate the activities of, and disseminate information and data among, the various Professional Standards Review Organizations within such State.

"(d) The Secretary is authorized to enter into an agreement with any such Council under which the Secretary shall make payments to such Council equal to the amount of expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred, as determined by the Secretary, by such Council in carrying out the duties and functions provided in this section.

"(e)(1) The Statewide Professional Standards Review Council for any State shall be advised and assisted in carrying out its functions by an advisory group (of not less than seven nor more than eleven members) which shall be made up of representatives of health care practitioners (other than physicians) and hospitals and other health care facilities which provide within the State health care services for which payment (in whole or in part) may be made under any program established by or pursuant to this Act.

"(2) The Secretary shall by regulations provide the manner in which members of such advisory group shall be selected by the Statewide Professional Standards Review Council.

"(3) The expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred, as determined by the Secretary, by such group in carrying out its duties and functions under this subsection shall be considered to be expenses necessarily incurred by the Statewide Professional Standards Review Council served by such group.

"NATIONAL PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW COUNCIL

"Sec. 1163. (a)(1) There shall be established a National Professional Standards Review Council (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Council') which shall consist of eleven physicians, not otherwise in the employ of the United States, appointed by the Secretary without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service.

"(2) Members of the Council shall be appointed for a term of three years and shall be eligible for reappointment.

"(3) The Secretary shall from time to time designate one of the members of the Council to serve as Chairman thereof.

"(b) Members of the Council shall consist of physicians of recognized standing and distinction in the appraisal of medical practice. A majority of such members shall be physicians who have been recommended to the Secretary to serve on the Council by national organizations recognized by the Secretary as representing practicing physicians. The membership of the Council shall include physicians who have been recommended for membership on the Council by consumer groups and other health care interests.

"(c) The Council is authorized to utilize, and the Secretary shall make available, such technical assistance as may be required to carry out its functions, and the Secretary shall, in addition, make available to the Council such secretarial, clerical, and other assistance and such pertinent data prepared by, for, or otherwise available to, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare as the Council may require to carry out its functions.

"(d) Members of the Council, while serving on business of the Council, shall be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Secretary (but not in excess of the daily rate paid under GS–18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code), including traveltime; and while so serving away from their homes or regular places of business, they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in Government service employed intermittently.

"(e) It shall be the duty of the Council to—

"(1) advise and assist the Secretary in the administration of this part;

"(2) provide for the development and distribution, among Statewide Professional Standards Review Councils and Professional Standards Review Organizations, of information and data which will assist such review councils and organizations in carrying out their duties and functions;

"(3) review the operations of Statewide Professional Standards Review Councils and Professional Standards Review Organizations with a view to determining the effectiveness and comparative performance of such review councils and organizations in carrying out the purposes of this part; and

"(4) make or arrange for the making of studies and investigations with a view to developing and recommending to the Secretary and to the Congress measures designed more effectively to accomplish the purposes and objectives of this part.

"(f) The National Professional Standards Review Council shall from time to time, but not less often than annually, submit to the Secretary and to the Congress a report on its activities and shall include in such report the findings of its studies and investigations together with any recommendations it may have with respect to the more effective accomplishment of the purposes and objectives of this part. Such report shall also contain comparative data indicating the results of review activities, conducted pursuant to this part, in each State and in each of the various areas thereof.

"APPLICATION OF THIS PART TO CERTAIN STATE PROGRAMS RECEIVING FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 1164. (a) In addition to the requirements imposed by law as a condition of approval of a State plan approved under title XIX, there is hereby imposed the requirement that provisions of this part shall apply to the operation of such plan or program.

"(b) The requirement imposed by subsection (a) with respect to State plans approved under title XIX shall apply—

"(1) in the case of any such plan where legislative action by the State legislature is not necessary to meet such requirement, on and after January 1, 1972; and

"(2) in the case of any such plan where legislative action by the State legislature is necessary to meet such requirement, whichever of the following is earlier—

"(A) on and after July 1, 1972, or

"(B) on and after the first day of the calendar month which first commences more than ninety days after the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after December 31, 1971.

"CORRELATION OF FUNCTIONS BETWEEN PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW ORGANIZATIONS AND ADMINISTRATIVE INSTRUMENTALITIES

"SEC. 1165. The Secretary shall by regulations provide for such correlation of activities, such interchange of data and information, and such other cooperation consistent with economical, efficient, coordinated and comprehensive implementation of this part (including usage of existing mechanical and other data-gathering capacity), between—

"(A)(i) agencies and organizations which are parties to agreements entered into pursuant to section 1816, (ii) carriers which are parties to contracts entered into pursuant to section 1842, and (iii) any other public or private agency (other than a Professional Standards Review Organization) having review or control functions, or proved relevant data-gathering procedures and experience, and

"(B) Professional Standards Review Organizations, as may be necessary or appropriate for the effective administration of title XVIII, or State plans approved under title XIX.

"PROHIBITION AGAINST DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION

"SEC. 1166. (a) Any data or information acquired by any Professional Standards Review Organization, in the exercise of its duties and functions, shall be held in confidence and shall not be disclosed to any person except (A) to the extent that may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this part or (B) in such cases and under such circumstances as the Secretary shall by regulations provide to assure adequate protection of the rights and interests of patients, health care practitioners, or providers of health care.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to disclose any such information other than for such purposes, and any person violating the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000, and imprisoned for not more than six months, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

"LIMITATION ON LIABILITY FOR PERSONS PROVIDING INFORMATION, AND FOR MEMBERS AND EMPLOYEES OF PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW ORGANIZATIONS, AND FOR HEALTH CARE PRACTITIONERS AND PROVIDERS

"SEC. 1167. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no person providing information to any Professional Standards Review Organization shall be held, by reason of having provided such information, to have violated any criminal law, or to be civilly liable under any law, of the United States or of any State (or political subdivision thereof) unless—

"(1) such information is unrelated to the performance of the duties and functions of such Organization, or

"(2) such information is false and the person providing such information knew, or had reason to believe, that such information was false.

"(b)(1) No individual who, as a member or employee of any Professional Standards Review Organization or who furnishes professional counsel or services to such organization, shall be held by reason of the performance by him of any duty, function, or activity authorized or required of Professional Standards Review Organizations under this part, to have violated any criminal law, or to be civilly liable under any law, of the United States or of any State (or political subdivision thereof).

"(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to any action taken by any individual if such individual, in taking such action, was motivated by malice toward any person affected by such action.

"(c) No health care practitioner and no provider of health care services shall be civilly liable to any person under any law, of the United States or of any State (or political subdivision thereof) on account of any action taken by him in compliance with or reliance upon professionally accepted norms of care and treatment applied by a Professional Standards Review Organization operating in the area where such practitioner or provider took such action but only if—

"(1) he takes such action (in the case of a health care practitioner) in the exercise of his profession as a health care practitioner or (in the case of a provider of health care services) in the exercise of his functions as a provider of health care services and

"(2) he exercised due care in all professional conduct taken or directed by him and reasonably related to, and resulting from, the actions taken in compliance with or reliance upon such professionally accepted norms of care and treatment.

"AUTHORIZATION FOR USE OF CERTAIN FUNDS TO ADMINISTER THE PROVISIONS OF THIS PART

"SEC. 1168. Expenses incurred in the administration of this part shall be payable from—

"(1) funds in the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund;

"(2) funds in the Federal Supplementary Medical Trust Funds; and

"(3) funds appropriated to carry out the provisions of title XIX; in such amounts from each of the sources of funds (referred to in clauses (1), (2), and (3)) as the Secretary shall deem to be fair and equitable after taking into consideration the costs attributable to the administration of this part with respect to each of such plans and programs.

"TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE TO ORGANIZATIONS DESIRING TO BE DESIGNATED AS PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS REVIEW ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 1169. The Secretary is authorized to provide all necessary technical and other assistance (including the preparation of prototype plans of organization and operation) to organizations described in section 1152(b)(1) which—

"(1) express a desire to be designated as a Professional Standards Review Organization; and

"(2) the Secretary determines have a potential for meeting the requirements of a Professional Standards Review Organization; to assist such organizations in developing a proper plan to be submitted to the Secretary and otherwise in preparing to meet the requirements of this part for designation as a Professional Standards Review Organization.

"AUTHORIZATION OF DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

"SEC. 1170. (a) In order to determine the feasibility and potential economies of methods whereby Professional Standards Review Organizations, in addition to their responsibilities under this part, assume responsibility and risk with respect to the review and payment of claims for health care services, payment for which may be made (in whole or in part) under any program established by or pursuant to this Act, the Secretary is authorized to enter into agreements in periods ending not later than December 31, 1975, with such number of Professional Standards Review Organizations, in the same or in different areas of the Nation, as may be necessary to permit adequate and proper comparison of results, with respect to the review and payment of claims for such services, as between areas in which risk is assumed by Professional Standards Review Organizations and areas in which such risk is not assumed by such organizations. The Secretary shall submit reports to the Congress on the results of such demonstration projects from time to time but not less than annually.

"(b)(1) The Secretary shall undertake such agreements with Professional Standards Review Organizations which indicate willingness and capacity to assume responsibility for review and full payment for all care and services for which beneficiaries or recipients resident in such geographic areas are eligible. Reimbursement to such Professional Standards Review Organizations for such commitments may be on a capitation, prepayment, insured or related basis for renewable contract periods not in excess of one year. Such amounts may not, on an annualized basis for the initial agreement period, exceed per capita beneficiary costs in the geographic area concerned during the 12-month period prior to the effective date of the agreement. For any subsequent periods the base 12-month period per capita beneficiary costs shall also be applicable and adjusted by appropriate factors representing unit cost increases in covered services.

"(2) Where such agreements are negotiated, provision shall be made for assumption of risk by the underwriting Professional Standards Review Organizations through agreement to make contingent payment for physicians' services of not in excess of 80 per centum of the amounts otherwise allowable for such services in the absence of such agreement.

"(3) From any amounts remaining at the end of the agreement period, provision shall be made for equal division of such amounts between the Secretary (and the State in the case of a federally matched program) and the Professional Standards Review Organizations. The amounts actually paid to the Professional Standards Review Organizations from the divided excess may not exceed the 20 per centum of otherwise allowable amounts withheld plus an incentive payment not in excess of 25 per centum of the total amounts allowable and payable for physicians' services during that year. Any remaining amounts of the Professional Standards Review Organizations calculation in excess shall revert to the Secretary or to the State in the case of a federally matched health care program.

"(4) Any deficit shall be assumed by the Secretary or State agency in order to assure beneficiaries and recipients of payment for necessary care. The Professional Standards Review Organizations shall not be entitled to the 20 per centum of the otherwise allowable amounts for physicians' services withheld in such period. In any subsequent year, the Secretary shall recover from any excess amounts remaining such additional amounts as had been paid by him or by a State agency to eliminate deficits in prior periods before calculation of any payments of withheld and incentive amounts to the Professional Standards Review Organizations.

"EXEMPTION OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SANATORIUMS

"SEC. 1171. The provisions of this part shall not apply with respect to a Christian Science sanatorium operated, or listed and certified, by the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Massachusetts."

During each fiscal year or after the close of such fiscal year, the Railroad Retirement Board shall certify to the Secretary the amount of the costs it incurred in making such deductions and such certified amount shall be the basis for the amount of such costs certified by the Secretary to the Managing Trustee."

(f) The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to premiums becoming due and payable after (255) ~~the fourth month following the month in which this Act is enacted~~ June 30, 1971.

PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES FURNISHED OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 262. (a) Section 1814(f) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"Payment for Certain Inpatient Hospital Services Furnished Outside the United States

"(f) (1) Payment shall be made for inpatient hospital services furnished to an individual entitled to hospital insurance benefits under section 226 by a hospital located outside the United States, or under arrangements (as defined in section 1861 (w)) with it, if—

"(A) such individual is a resident of the United States, and

"(B) such hospital was closer to, or substantially more accessible from, the residence of such individual than the nearest hospital within the United States which was adequately equipped to deal with, and was available for the treatment of, such individual's illness or injury.

"(2) Payment may also be made for emergency inpatient hospital services furnished to an individual entitled to hospital insurance benefits under section 226 by a hospital located outside the United States if—

"(A) such individual was physically present in a place within the United States at the time the emergency which necessitated such inpatient hospital services occurred, and

"(B) such hospital was closer to, or substantially more accessible from, such place than the nearest hospital within the United States which was adequately equipped to deal with, and was available for the treatment of, such individual's illness or injury.

"(3) Payment shall be made in the amount provided under subsection (b) to any hospital for the inpatient hospital services described in paragraph (1) or (2) furnished to an individual by the hospital or under arrangements (as defined in section 1861(w)) with it if (A) the Secretary would be required to make such payment if the hospital had an agreement in effect under this title and otherwise met the conditions of payment hereunder, (B) such hospital elects to claim such payment, and (C) such hospital agrees to comply, with respect to such services, with the provisions of section 1866(a).

"(4) Payment for the inpatient hospital services described in paragraph (1) or (2) furnished to an individual entitled to hospital insurance benefits under section 226 may be made on the basis of an itemized bill to such individual if (A) payment for such services cannot be made under paragraph (3) solely because the hospital does not elect to claim such payment, and (B) such individual files application (submitted within such time and in such form and manner and by such person, and containing and supported by such information as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe) for reimbursement. The amount payable with respect to such services shall, subject to the provisions of section 1813, be equal to the amount which would be payable under subsection (d) (3)."

(b) Section 1861 (e) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "except for purposes of sections 1814 (d) and 1835 (b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "except for purposes of sections 1814 (d), 1814 (f), and 1835 (b)";

(2) by inserting ", section 1814 (f) (2)," immediately after "For purposes of sections 1814 (d) and 1835 (b) (including determinations of whether an individual received inpatient hospital services or diagnostic services for purposes of such sections)"; and

(3) by inserting after the third sentence the following new sentence: "For purposes of section 1814 (f) (1), such term includes an institution which (i) is a hospital for purposes of section 1814 (d), 1814 (f) (2), and 1835 (b) and (ii) is accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, or is accredited by or approved by a program of the country in which such institution is located if the Secretary finds the accreditation or comparable approval standards of such program to be essentially equivalent to those of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals."

~~(260)~~PROGRAM FOR DETERMINING QUALIFICATIONS FOR CERTAIN HEALTH CARE PERSONNEL

SEC. 264. Title XI of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after section 1123 (as added by section 240(a) of this Act) and before section 1151 (as added by section 245 (b) of this Act) the following new section:

"PROGRAM FOR DETERMINING QUALIFICATIONS FOR CERTAIN HEALTH CARE PERSONNEL

"SEC. 1124. (a) The Secretary, in carrying out his functions relating to the qualifications for health care personnel under title XVIII, shall develop (in consultation with appropriate professional health organizations and State health and licensure agencies) and conduct (in conjunction with State health and licensure agencies) until December 31, 1975, a program designed to determine the proficiency of individuals (who do not otherwise meet the formal educational, professional membership, or other specific criteria established for determining the qualifications of practical nurses, therapists, laboratory technicians, X-ray technicians, psychiatric technicians or other health care technicians and technologists) to perform the duties and functions of practical nurses, therapists, laboratory technicians, X-ray technicians, psychiatric technicians, or other health care technicians or technologists. Such program shall include (but not be limited to) the employment of procedures for the formal testing of the proficiency of individuals. In the conduct of such program, no individual who otherwise meets the proficiency requirements for any health care specialty shall be denied a satisfactory proficiency rating solely because of his failure to meet formal educational or professional membership requirements.

"(b) If any individual has been determined, under the program established pursuant to subsection (a), to be qualified to perform the duties and functions of any health care specialty, no person or provider utilizing the services of such individual to perform such duties and functions shall be denied payment, under title XVIII or under any State plan approved under title XIX, for any health care services provided by such person on the grounds that such individual is not qualified to perform such duties and functions.

(261) INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR HEALTH ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 265. (a) Title XI of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after section 1124 (as added by section 264 of this Act) and before section 1151 (as added by section 245(b) of this Act) the following new section:

"INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR HEALTH ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 1125. (a)(1) In addition to other officers within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, there shall be, within such Department, an officer with the title of 'Inspector General for Health Administration' (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Inspector General'), who shall be appointed or reappointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In addition, there shall be a Deputy Inspector General for Health Administration (hereinafter referred to as the 'Deputy Inspector General'), and such additional personnel as may be required to carry out the functions vested in the Inspector General by this section.

"(2) The term of office of any individual appointed or reappointed to the position of Inspector General shall expire 6 years after the date he takes office pursuant to such appointment or reappointment.

"(b) The Inspector General shall report directly to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Secretary'); and, in carrying out the functions vested in him by this section, the Inspector General shall not be under the control of, or subject to supervision by, any officer of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, other than the Secretary.

"(c)(1) It shall be the duty and responsibility of the Inspector General to arrange for, direct or conduct such reviews, inspections, and audits of the health insurance program established by title XVIII, the medical assistance programs established pursuant to title XIX and any other programs of health care authorized under any other title of this Act as he considers necessary for ascertaining the efficiency and economy of their administration, their consonance with the provisions of law by or pursuant to which such programs were established, and the attainment of the objectives and purposes for which such provisions of law were enacted.

"(2) The Inspector General shall maintain continuous observation and review of programs with respect to which he has responsibilities under paragraph (1) of this subsection for the purpose of—"(A) determining the extent to which such programs are in compliance with applicable laws and regulations;

"(B) making recommendations for the correction of deficiencies in, or for improving the organization, plans, procedures, or administration of, such programs; and

"(C) evaluating the effectiveness of such programs in attaining the objectives and purposes of the provisions of law by or pursuant to which such programs were established.

"(d)(1) For purposes of aiding in carrying out his duties under this section, the Inspector General shall have access to all records, reports, audits, reviews, documents, papers, recommendations, or other material of or available to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare which relate to the programs with respect to which the Inspector General has responsibilities under this section.

"(2) The head of any Federal department, agency, office, or instrumentality shall, at the request of the Inspector General, provide any information which the Inspector General determines will be helpful to him in carrying out his responsibilities under this section.

"(e)(1) The Inspector General shall have authority to suspend any regulation, practice, or procedure employed in the administration of any program with respect to which he has responsibilities under this section if, as a result of any study, investigation, review, or audit of such program, he determines that—

"(A) the suspension of such regulation, practice, or procedure will promote efficiency or economy in the administration of such program; or

"(B) such regulation, practice, or procedure is contrary to applicable provisions of law, or does not carry out the objectives and purposes of the provisions of law by or pursuant to which there was established the program in connection with which such regulation, practice, or procedure is promulgated, instituted, or applied.

"(2)(A) Any suspension by the Inspector General of any regulation, practice, or procedure pursuant to this subsection shall remain in effect until the Inspector General issues an order reinstating such regulation, practice, or procedure; except that (i) in the case of any existing regulation, the Secretary may, at any time after any such suspension by the Inspector General, issue an order revoking such suspension, and (ii) in the case of a suspension of a practice or procedure or the application of a proposed regulation, the Secretary may, at any time later than 30 days after any such suspension by the Inspector General, issue an order revoking such suspension.

"(B) Whenever the Secretary issues an order revoking any such suspension by the Inspector General, he shall promptly notify the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives of such order and shall submit to each such committee information explaining his reasons for the issuance of such order.

"(f)(1) The Inspector General may, from time to time, submit such reports to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives relating to his activities as he deems to be appropriate.

"(2) Whenever either of the committees referred to in paragraph (1) makes a request to the Inspector General to furnish such committee with any information, or to conduct any study or investigation and report the findings resulting therefrom to such committee, the Inspector General shall comply with such request.

"(3) Whenever the Inspector General issues an order suspending or reinstating any regulation, practice, or procedures pursuant to subsection (e), he shall promptly notify the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives of such order and shall submit to each such Committee information explaining his reasons for the issuance of such order.

"(g) The Inspector General may make expenditures (not in excess of $50,000 in any fiscal year) of a confidential nature when he finds that such expenditures are in aid of inspections, audits, or reviews under this section; but such expenditures so made shall not be utilized to make payments, to any one individual, the aggregate of which exceeds $2,000. The Inspector General shall submit annually a confidential report on expenditures under this provision to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

"(h)(1) Expenses of the Inspector General relating to the health insurance program established by title XVIII shall be payable from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, with such portions being paid from each such Fund as the Secretary shall deem to be appropriate. Expenses of the Inspector General relating to medical assistance programs established pursuant to title XIX shall be payable from funds appropriated to carry out such title; and expenses of the Inspector General relating to any program of health care authorized under any title of this Act (other than titles XVIII and XIX) shall be payable from funds appropriated to carry out such program.

"(2) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(i) The Secretary shall provide the Inspector General and his staff with appropriate office space within the facilities of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, together with such equipment, office supplies, and communications facilities and services, as may be necessary for the operation of such office and shall provide necessary maintenance services for such office and the equipment and facilities located therein."

(1) kickback or bribe in connection with the furnishing of such items or services or the making or receipt of such payment, or shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

(2) rebate of any fee or charge for referring any such individual to another person for the furnishing of such items or services

"(c) Whoever knowingly and willfully makes or causes to be made, or induces or seeks to induce the making of, any false statement or representation of a material fact with respect to the conditions or operation of any institution or facility in order that such institution or facility may qualify as a hospital, extended care facility, or home health agency (as those terms are defined in section 1861), shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both."

(c) Title XIX of such Act is amended by adding after section 1908 the following new section:

"PENALITIES

"SEC. 1909. (a) Any person who furnishes items or services to an individual for which payment is or may be made in whole or in part out of Federal funds under a State plan approved under this title and who solicits, offers or receives any—

(1) kickback or bribe in connection with the furnishing of such items or services or the making or receipt of such payment, or

(2) rebate of any fee or charge for referring any such individual to another person for the furnishing of such items or services

shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(b) Whoever knowingly and willfully makes or causes to be made, or induces or seeks to induce the making of, any false statement or representation of a material fact with respect to the conditions or operation of any institution or facility in order that such institution or facility may qualify as a hospital, skilled nursing home, intermediate care facility, or home health agency (as those terms are employed in this title) shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both."

(d) The provisions of subsection (a) shall not be applicable to any acts, statements, or representations made or committed prior to the enactment of this Act.

(270) PUBLIC ACCESS TO RECORDS CONCERNING AN INSTITUTION'S QUALIFICATION

SEC. 274. Section 1866 of the Social Security Act is amended by (1) redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and (2) inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) If the Secretary finds that a hospital or extended care facility which has entered into an agreement under this section has failed to comply with one or more of the applicable provisions of section 1861 and regulations issued thereunder, but that such failure is not sufficient to justify a termination of such agreement, he shall notify such hospital or extended care facility of such failure. If after a reasonable length of time, not to exceed 90 days from the date of such notification, such failure still exists, the Secretary shall make public (as provided in regulation) in readily available form and place information as to such failure by such hospital or extended care facility."

(271) LIEN IN FAVOR OF UNITED STATES WHERE OVERPAYMENT DETERMINED

SEC. 275. Title XVIII of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof (after section 1877 added to such Act by section 273 of this Act) the following new section:

"LIEN IN FAVOR OF UNITED STATES WHERE OVERPAYMENT IS DETERMINED

"SEC. 1878. (a) Where the Secretary determines that a provider of services or other person who has furnished items or services to an individual is indebted to the United States by reason of payments made to such provider or other person under this title, and after demand by the Secretary, the provider of services or other person neglects or refuses to pay the amount of such indebtedness, such amount (including any interest) shall be a lien in favor of the United States upon all property and rights to property, whether real or personal, belonging to such provider or person.

"(b) Unless another date is specifically fixed by law, the lien imposed by subsection (a) shall arise at the time the Secretary makes the demand referred to in such subsection (a) and shall continue until the liability for the amount determined to be due the United States (or a judgment against the provider or person arising out of an action pursuant to subsection (d)) is satisfied or becomes unenforceable by reason of lapse of time.

"(c) The provisions of section 6323 (relating to the validity and priority against certain persons) and section 6325 (relating to release of lien or discharge of property) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be applicable to the lien imposed by subsection (a) of this section in the same manner, to the same extent, and under the same conditions as such sections 6323 and 6325 are applicable to the lien imposed by section 6321 of such code, and for purposes of this section, the following terms used in such sections 6323 and 6325 shall have the meanings assigned to them in this subsection—

"(1) the term 'lien imposed by section 6321' shall mean 'the lien imposed by subsection (a)';

"(2) the term 'Secretary or his delegate' shall mean the 'Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare';

"(3) the term 'tax lien filing' shall mean the 'filing of notice of the lien imposed by subsection (a)';

"(4) the terms 'lien imposed with respect to any internal revenue tax' or 'lien imposed by this chapter' shall mean 'lien imposed under subsection (a)';

"(5) reference to the assessment of an amount or the assessment of a tax shall be a reference to the amount determined due by the Secretary with respect to which a lien is imposed under subsection (a).

"(d) In the case of any provider of services or other persons furnishing services under this title with respect to whose property or rights to property a lien has been filed pursuant to this section and who is dissatisfied with such filing, such provider or person shall be entitled to a hearing thereon by the Secretary (after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing) to the same extent as is provided in section 205(b), and to judicial review of the Secretary's final decision after such hearing as is provided in section 205(b), and to judicial review of the Secretary's final decision after such hearing as is provided in section 205(g). In any such hearing, such provider or person shall have the right to challenge the Secretary's determination of overpayment which gave rise to the filing of such lien and the burden of proof shall be upon the provider or person challenging the Secretary's determination of overpayment."

(272) EXTENSION OF TITLE V TO AMERICAN SAMOA AND THE TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS

SEC. 276. (a) Section 1101(a)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "Such term when used in title V also includes American Samoa and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands."

(b) Section 1108(d) is amended by inserting, after "allot such smaller amount to Guam", the following: ", American Samoa, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to fiscal years beginning after June 30, 1971.

(273) RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN MEDICAID AND COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH CARE PROGRAMS

SEC. 277. Section 1902(a)(23) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "a State plan shall not be deemed to be out of compliance with the requirements of this paragraph or paragraph (1) or (10) solely by reason of the fact that the State (or any political subdivision thereof) has entered into a contract with an organization which has agreed to provide care and services in excess of those offered under the State plan to individuals eligible for medical assistance who reside in the geographic area served by such organization and who elect to obtain such care and services from such organization;"

(274) REFUND OF EXCESS PREMIUMS UNDER MEDICARE

SEC. 278. Section 1870 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) If an individual, who is enrolled under section 103 (d) of the Social Security Amendments of 1965 or under section 1837, dies, and premiums with respect to such enrollment have been received with respect to such individual for any month after the month of his death, such premiums shall be refunded to the person or persons determined by the Secretary under regulations to have paid such premiums, or if payment for such premiums was made by the deceased individual before his death, to the legal representative of the estate of such deceased individual, if any. If there is no person who meets the requirements of the preceding sentence such premiums shall be refunded to the person or persons in the priorities specified in paragraphs (2) through (7) of subsection (e).".

(275) CLARIFICATION OF MEANING OF "PHYSICIANS' SERVICES" UNDER TITLE XIX

SEC. 279. Section 1905(a)(5) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting "furnished by a physician (as defined in section 1861(r)(1))" after "physicians' services".

(276) CHIROPRACTORS' SERVICES UNDER MEDICAID

SEC. 280. (a) Section 1905 of the Social Security Act (as amended by sections 268(b), 269(b), and 279 of this Act) is further amended by adding after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) If the State plan includes provision of chiropractors' services, such services include only—

"(1) services provided by a chiropractor (A) who is licensed as such by the State and (B) who meets uniform minimum standards promulgated by the Secretary under section 1861(r)(5); and

"(2) services which consist of treatment by means of manual manipulation of the spine which the chiropractor is legally authorized to perform by the State.

(b) The amendment made by this section shall be effective with respect to services furnished after June 30, 1971.

(277) PROVIDER REIMBURSEMENT APPEALS BOARD

SEC. 281. (a) Title XVIII of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting after section 1878 (as added by section 275 of this Act) the following new section:

"PROVIDER REIMBURSEMENT APPEALS BOARD

"SEC. 1879. (a) Any provider of services which has filed a required cost report within the time specified in regulations may obtain a hearing with respect to such cost report by the Provider Reimbursement Appeals Board (hereinafter referred to as 'the Board') if—

"(1) such provider—

"(A) is dissatisfied with a final determination of the organization serving as its fiscal intermediary pursuant to section 1816 as to the reasonable cost of the items and services furnished to individuals for which payment may be made under this title for the period covered by such report, or

"(B) has not received such final determination from such intermediary within ninety days from the date of filing such report, where such report complied with the rules and regulations of the Secretary relating to such report, or

"(C) has not received such final determination within ninety days of filing a supplementary cost report, where such cost report did not so comply and such supplementary cost report did so comply, and

"(2) the amount in controversy is $10,000 or more, and

"(3) such provider files a request for a hearing within 180 days after—

"(A) notice of the intermediary's final determination under paragraph (1)(A), or

"(B) the filing of the cost report under paragraph (1)(B), or

"(C) the filing of the supplementary cost report under paragraph (1)(C).

"(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall apply to any group of providers of services if each provider of services in such group would, upon the filing of an appeal (but without regard to the $10,000 limitation), be entitled to such a hearing, but only if the matters in controversy involve a common question of fact or interpretation of law or regulations and the amount in controversy is, in the aggregate, $10,000 or more.

"(c) At such hearing, the provider of services shall have the right to be represented by counsel, to introduce evidence, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. Evidence may be received at any such hearing even though inadmissable under rules of evidence applicable to court procedure.

"(d) A decision by the Board shall be based upon the record made at such hearing, which shall include the evidence considered by the intermediary and such other evidence as may be obtained or received by the Board, and shall be supported by substantial evidence when the record is viewed as a whole. The Board shall have the power to affirm, modify, or revise a final determination of the fiscal intermediary with respect to a cost report and to make any other revisions on matters covered by such cost report (including revisions adverse to the provider of service) even though such matters were not considered by the intermediary in making such final determination. Where the Board grants a hearing pursuant to subparagraphs (B) and (C) of paragraph (1) of subsection (a) it shall have the power to make a final determination with respect to the cost report to the same extent as the fiscal intermediary.

"(e) The Board shall have full power and authority to make rules and establish procedures, not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, which are necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this section. In the course of any hearing the Board may administer oaths and affirmations. The provisions of subsections (d), (e) and (f) of section 205 to subpenas shall apply to the Board to the same extent as they apply to the Secretary with respect to title II.

"(f) A decision of the Board shall be final and shall be affirmed by the Secretary within 60 days after the date such decision is made unless the Secretary, on his own motion, and within a 90-day period after the provider of services in notified of the Board's decision, reverses or modifies adversely to such provider the Board's decision. In any case where such reversal or modification or nonaffirmation occurs the provider of services may obtain a review of such decision by a civil action commenced within sixty days of the date he is notified of the Secretary's reversal or modification. Such action shall be brought in the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the provider is located or in the District Court for the District of Columbia and shall be tried pursuant to the applicable provisions under chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, notwithstanding any other provisions in section 205.

"(g) The findings of a fiscal intermediary that no payment may be made under this title for any expenses incurred for items or services furnished to an individual because such items or services are listed in section 1862 shall not be reviewed by the Board or by any court.

"(h) The Board shall be composed of five members appointed by the Secretary without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service. Two of such members shall be selected from representatives of organizations representing providers of services. Such members shall be persons knowledgeable in the field of cost reimbursement, at least one of whom shall be a certified public accountant, and shall be entitled to receive compensation at rates fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding the rate specified (at the time service is rendered by such members) for grade GS-18 in title 5, section 5332. The term of office shall be three years, except that the Secretary shall appoint initial members of the Board for shorter terms to the extent necessary to permit staggered terms of office."

(b) The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to cost reports of providers of services, as defined in title XVIII of the Social Security Act, for accounting periods ending after June 30, 1971.

(278) LIMITATION ON ADJUSTMENT OR RECOVERY OF INCORRECT PAYMENTS UNDER THE MEDICARE PROGRAM

SEC. 282. (a)(1) Section 1870(b)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by—

(A) inserting "(A)" after "the Secretary determines"; and

(B) inserting at the end of paragraph (1) the following:

"(B) that such provider of services or other person was without fault with respect to the payment of such excess over the correct amount, or".

(2) Section 1870(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "For purposes of clause (B) of paragraph (1), such provider of services or such other person shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be deemed to be without fault if the Secretary's determination that more than such correct amount was paid was made subsequent to the third year following the year in which notice was sent to such individual that such amount had been paid."

(b) Section 1870(c) of such Act is amended by—

(1) inserting "or title XVIII" after "title II", and

(2) adding at the end the following new sentence: "Adjustment or recovery of an incorrect payment (or only such part of an incorrect payment as the Secretary determines to be inconsistent with the purposes of this title) against an individual who is without fault shall be deemed to be against equity and good conscience if (A) the incorrect payment was made for expenses incurred for items or services for which payment may not be made under this title by reason of the provisions of paragraph

(1) or (9) of section 1862 and (B) if the Secretary's determination that such payment was incorrect was made subsequent to the third year following the year in which notice of such payment was sent to such individual."

(c) Section 1866 (a)(1) of such Act is amended by—

(1) redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C), and

(2) inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraph:

"(B) not to charge any individual or any other person for items or services for which such individual is not entitled to have payment made under this title because payment for expenses incurred for such items or services may not be made by reason of the provisions of paragraphs (1) or (9), but only if (i) such individual was without fault in incurring such expenses and (ii) the Secretary's determination that such payment may not be made for such items and services was made after the third year following the year in which notice of such payment was sent to such individual, and".

(d) Section 1842(b)(3)(ii) of such Act is amended by—

(1) inserting "(I)" after "of which"; and

(2) inserting after "service" the following: "and (II) the physician or other person furnishing such service agrees not to charge for such service if payment may not be made therefor by reason of the provisions of paragraph (1) of section 1862, and if the individual to whom such service were furnished was without fault in incurring the expenses of such service, and if the Secretary's determination that payment (pursuant to such assignment) was incorrect was made subsequent to the third year following the year in which notice of such payment was sent to such individual".

(e) Section 1814(a)(1) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) written request, signed by such individual, except in cases in which the Secretary finds it impracticable for the individual to do so, is filed for such payment in such form, in such manner and by such person or persons as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe, no later than the close of the period of 3 calendar years following the year in which such services are furnished (deeming any services furnished in the last 3 calendar months of any calendar year to have been furnished in the succeeding calendar year) except that where the Secretary deems that efficient administration so requires, such period may be reduced to not less than 1 calendar year;"

(f) Section 1835(a)(1) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) written request, signed by such individual, except in cases in which the Secretary finds it impracticable for the individual to do so, is filed for such payment in such form, in such manner and by such person or persons as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe, no later than the close of the period of 3 calendar years following the year in which such services are furnished (deeming any services furnished in the last 3 calendar months of any calendar year to have been furnished in the succeeding calendar year) except that where the Secretary deems that efficient administration so requires, such period may be reduced to not less than 1 calendar year; and"

(g) The provisions of subsections (a), (b), (c), and (d) of this section shall apply in the case of notices of payment sent to individuals after 1968. The provisions of subsections (e) and (f) shall apply in the case of requests for payment filed after December 31, 1971.

(279) PROVIDE FOR 75 PERCENT MATCHING UNDER MEDICAID OF EXPENDITURES FOR PROFESSIONAL REVIEW OF SKILLED NURSING HOMES AND INTERMEDIATE CARE FACILITIES

SEC. 283. Section 1903(a)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "(A)" immediately after "attributable to", and

(2) by inserting immediately before "; plus" the following: "and (B) payment for professional review activities, performed by skilled professional medical personnel and staff directly supporting such personnel pursuant to section 1902(a) (26) and (33), regardless of whether such activities are performed by State agency personnel or by others under an arrangement with such agency".

(280) TITLE III—PROVISIONS RELATING TO WELFARE

GUARANTEED MINIMUM INCOME FOR RECIPIENTS OF OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE, AID TO THE BLIND, AID TO THE DISABLED, OR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, OR DISABLED

SEC. 301. (a) Section 2(a)(10)(A) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting after the semicolon at the end thereof "and except that, in the case of any State (other than the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, or the Virgin Islands), the sum of the financial assistance provided to each individual who is eligible under the plan (other than one who is a patient in a medical institution or is receiving institutional services in an intermediate care facility to which section 1121 applies), plus his income which is not disregarded pursuant to clause (i) or (ii) and the reasonable value of shelter and other needed items which are regularly provided to such individual (to the extent they are provided without cost), shall not be less than $130 per month (or in the case of two or more such eligible individuals who are, as determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, members of the same household, $130 per month plus $70 per month for each of such individuals in addition to one);".

(b) Section 1002(a)(8) of such Act is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof ", and except that, in the case of any State (other than the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, or the Virgin Islands), the sum of the financial assistance provided to each individual who is eligible under the plan (other than one who is a patient in a medical institution or is receiving institutional services in an intermediate care facility to which section 1121 applies), plus his income which is not disregarded pursuant to clause (A), (B), or (C) and the reasonable value of shelter and other needed items which are regularly provided to such individual (to the extent they are provided without cost), shall not be less than $130 per month (or in the case of two or more such eligible individuals who are, as determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, members of the same household, $130 per month plus $70 per month for each of such individuals in addition to one);".

(c) Section 1402(a)(8) of such Act is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof ", and except that, in the case of any State (other than the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, or the Virgin Islands), the sum of the financial assistance provided to each individual who is eligible under the plan (other than one who is a patient in a medical institution or is receiving institutional services in an intermediate care facility to which section 1121 applies), plus his income which is not disregarded pursuant to clause (A), (B), or (C) and the reasonable value of shelter and other needed items which are regularly provided to such individual (to the extent they are provided without cost), shall not be less than $130 per month (or in the case of two or more such eligible individuals who are, as determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, members of the same household, $130 per month plus $70 per month for each of such individuals in addition to one);".

(d) Section 1602(a)(14) of such Act is amended by inserting after and below clause (D) the following:

"and except that, in the case of any State (other than the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, or the Virgin Islands), the sum of the financial assistance provided to each individual who is eligible under the plan (other than one who is a patient in a medical institution or is receiving institutional services in an intermediate care facility to which section 1121 applies), plus his income which is not disregarded pursuant to clause (A), (B), (C), or (D) and the reasonable value of shelter and other needed items which are regularly provided to such individual (to the extent they are provided without cost), shall not be less than $130 per month (or in the case of two or more such eligible individuals who are, as determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, members of the same household, $130 per month plus $70 per month for each of such individuals in addition to one);".

(e) The amendments made by the preceding subsections of this section shall apply with respect to expenditures under a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, of the Social Security Act made for aid or assistance under such plan for periods after March 1971.

(f) Any individual with respect to whom old-age assistance, aid to the blind, aid to the disabled, or aid to the aged, blind, or disabled is paid under such a State plan shall not be eligible to participate in the food stamp program conducted under the Food Stamp Act of 1964 or the program conducted under section 416 of the Act of October 31, 1969, or any similar programs for distribution of surplus agricultural commodities effective April 1, 1971.

INCREASE IN STANDARD OF NEED FOR AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED RECIPIENTS

SEC. 302. Title XI of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after section 1125 (as added by section 266 of this Act) and before section 1151 (as added by section 245 of this Act) the following new section:

"INCREASING STANDARD OF NEED UNDER ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

"SEC. 1126. In addition to the requirements imposed by law as a condition of approval of a State plan of any State (other than the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, or the Virgin Islands) to provide aid or assistance to individuals under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act, there is hereby imposed the requirement (and the plan shall be deemed to require) that, in the case of an individual found eligible (as a result of the requirement imposed by this section or otherwise), for aid or assistance for any month after March 1971—

"(1) the total of the amounts used to determine the needs of such individual shall be at least $10 higher than the total thereof which would have been used to determine needs of such individual under the State plan as in effect for March 1971, or

"(2) in the case of two or more such individuals who are, as determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, members of the same household, the sum of such totals used for such month after March 1971 shall exceed such total for March 1971 by the sum of $10 plus $5 for each such individual in excess of one except that, in the case of any such State plan which provides for meeting a fixed percentage of unmet needs as so determined, the Secretary shall prescribe the method or methods for achieving as much as possible the results provided for under the preceding provisions of this section."

UNIFORM DEFINITIONS OF DISABILITY UNDER TITLES XIV AND XVI

SEC. 303 (a)(1) Title XIV of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out the term "permanently and totally disabled" wherever it appears in such title and inserting in lieu thereof "disabled".

(2) Section 1405 of such Act is amended by—

(A) striking out, in the caption, "Definition", and inserting "Definitions";

(B) striking out "Sec. 1405." and inserting "Sec. 1405. (a)"; and

(C) inserting after such subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) For purposes of this title an individual is 'disabled' only if he is under a disability. The term 'disability' means inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity by reason of any medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or which has lasted or can be expected to last for a continuous period of not less than 12 months. An individual shall be determined to be under a disability only if his physical or mental impairment or impairments are of such severity that he is not only unable to do his previous work but cannot, considering his age, education, and work experience, engage in any other kind of substantial gainful work which exists in the national economy, regardless of whether such work exists in the immediate area in which he lives, or whether a specific job vacancy exists for him, or whether he would be hired if he applied for work. For purposes of the preceding sentence (with respect to any individual), 'work which exists in the national economy' means work which exists in significant numbers either in the region where such individual lives or in several regions of the country."

(b)(1) Title XVI of such Act is amended by striking out the term "permanently and totally disabled" wherever it appears in such title and inserting in lieu thereof "disabled".

(2) Section 1605 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) For purposes of this title an individual is 'disabled' only if he is under a disability. The term 'disability' means inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity by reason of any medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or which has lasted or can be expected to last for a continuous period of not less than 12 months. An individual shall be determined to be under a disability only if his physical or mental impairment or impairments are of such severity that he is not only unable to do his previous work but cannot, considering his age, education, and work experience, engage in any other kind of substantial gainful work which exists in the national economy, regardless of whether such work exists in the immediate area in which he lives, or whether a specific job vacancy exists for him, or whether he would be hired if he applied for work. For purposes of the preceding sentence (with respect to any individual), 'work which exists in the national economy' means work which exists in significant numbers either in the region where such individual lives or in several regions of the country."

(c)(1) No State plan for aid to the disabled shall be regarded as having failed to comply with the requirements of title XIV of the Social Security Act by reason of the fact that such plan provides aid to individuals who do not meet the definition of "disabled" (as contained in section 1405(b) of such Act) if such individuals are individuals who—

(A) were receiving aid under such plan for the month before the month in which the term "disabled" (as contained in such section 1405(b)) is first put into effect in the administration of such plan; and

(B) would be regarded as disabled, for purposes of the administration of such plan, if the term "disabled"

(as contained in such section 1405(b)) had not been put into effect in the administration of such plan.

(2) No State plan for aid to the aged, blind, or disabled shall be regarded as having failed to comply with the requirements of title XVI of the Social Security Act by reason of the fact that such plan provides aid to individuals who do not meet the definition of "disabled" (as contained in section 1605 (c) of such Act) if such individuals are individuals who—

(A) were receiving aid under such plan for the month before the month in which the term "disabled" (as contained in such section 1605(c)) is first put into effect in the administration of such plan; and

(B) would be regarded as disabled, for purposes of the administration of such plan, if the term "disabled" (as contained in such section 1605(c)) had not been put into effect in the administration of such plan.

(d)(1) Sections 1121(a), 1901, 1902(a)(17)(D), and 1902(a)(18) of the Social Security Act are amended by striking out "permanently and totally disabled" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "disabled".

(2) Section 1905(a)(v) of such Act is amended by striking out "permanently and totally disabled" and inserting in lieu thereof "disabled (as defined in section 1405(b))".

(e) The amendments made by this section shall take effect April 1, 1971.

UNIFORM DEFINITIONS OF BLINDNESS UNDER TITLES X AND XVI

SEC. 304. (a) Section 1006 of the Social Security Act is amended (1) by inserting "(a)" immediately after "SEC. 1006.", and (2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) For purposes of this title, an individual shall be considered to be blind only if he suffers from blindness (as defined in paragraph (2)).

"(2) The term 'blindness' means central visual acuity of 20/200 or less in the better eye, with the use of correcting lens. An eye which is accompanied by a limitation in the fields of vision such that the widest diameter of the visual field subtends an angle no greater than 20 degrees shall be considered for purposes of this paragraph as having a central visual acuity of 20/200 or less."

(b) Section 1605 of such Act (as amended by section 503(b) of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) For purposes of this title, an individual shall be considered to be blind only if he suffers from blindness (as defined in paragraph (2)).

"(2) The term 'blindness' means central visual acuity of 20/200 or less in the better eye, with the use of correcting lens. An eye which is accompanied by a limitation in the fields of vision such that the widest diameter of the visual field subtends an angle no greater than 20 degrees shall be considered for purposes of this paragraph as having a central visual acuity of 20/200 or less."

(c)(1) No State plan for aid to the blind shall be regarded as having failed to comply with the requirements of title X of the Social Security Act by reason of the fact that such plan provides aid to individuals who do not meet the definition of blindness (as contained in section 1006(b) of such Act) if such individuals are individuals who—

(A) were receiving aid under such plan for the month before the month in which the term blindness (as contained in such section 1006(b)) is first put into effect in the administration of such plan; and

(B) would be regarded as blind, for purposes of the administration of such plan, if the term blindness (as contained in such section 1006(b)) had not been put into effect in the administration of such plan.

(2) No State plan for aid to the aged, blind, or disabled shall be regarded as having failed to comply with the requirements of title XVI of the Social Security Act by reason of the fact that such plan provides aid to individuals who do not meet the definition of blindness (as contained in section 1605(d) of such Act) if such individuals are individuals who—

(A) were receiving aid under such plan for the month before the month in which the term blindness (as contained in such section 1605(d)) is first put into effect in the administration of such plan; and

(B) would be regarded as blind, for purposes of the administration of such plan, if the term blindness (as contained in such section 1605(d)) had not been put into effect in the administration of such plan.

(d) The amendments made by this section shall take effect April 1, 1971.

PROHIBITION AGAINST IMPOSING LIENS ON PROPERTY OF THE BLIND

SEC. 305. (a) Section 1002(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "and" at the end of clause (12), and by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "; and (14) provide that no individual claiming aid to the blind shall be required as a condition of such aid to subject any property to a lien or to transfer to the State or to any of its political subdivisions title to or any interest in any property, and that no person shall be required to reimburse the State or any of its political subdivisions for any aid lawfully received by a blind individual under the State plan."

(b) Section 1602(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph

(16), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (17) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and by adding immediately after paragraph (17) the following new paragraph:

"(18) provide that no blind individual claiming aid under the plan shall be required as a condition thereof to subject any property to a lien or to transfer to the State or to any of its political subdivisions title to or any interest in any property, and that no person shall be required to reimburse the State or any of its political subdivisions for any aid or assistance lawfully received by a blind individual under the State plan."

(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective April 1, 1971.

FISCAL RELIEF FOR STATES

SEC. 306. Title XI of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after section 1126 (as added by section 502 of this Act) the following new section:

"FISCAL RELIEF FOR STATES

"SEC. 1127. (a) The Secretary shall pay to any State (other than the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, or the Virgin Islands) which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act, for each quarter beginning after March 1971, in addition to the amounts otherwise payable to such State under such title, an amount equal to the excess if any of—

"(1) the non-Federal share of (A) the expenditures, under the State plan approved under such title, as cash assistance which would be made under such plan as in effect for December 1970, and (B) so much of the rest of such expenditures made under such plan as are required (as determined by the Secretary) by reason of the amendments made by the Social Security Amendments of 1970, over

"(2) 90 per centum of the non-Federal share of the total average quarterly expenditures, under such plan, as cash assistance during the 4-quarter period ending December 31, 1970.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a), the non-Federal share of expenditures for any quarter under a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act as cash assistance, referred to in subsection (a)(1), means the difference between (A) the total expenditures for such quarter under such plan as, respectively, old-age assistance, aid to the blind, aid to the disabled, and aid to the aged, blind, or disabled, and (B) the amounts determined for such quarter for such State with respect to such expenditures under, respectively, sections 3, 1003, 1403, and 1603 of such Act and (in the case of the plan approved under title I or X) under section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950.

"(c) The Secretary shall pay to each State which has a plan approved under title I, X, XIV, XVI, or XIX, or part A of title IV, of the Social Security Act, for each quarter beginning after March 1971, an amount equal to the excess of—

"(1) the total expenditures, under the State plan approved under such title or part, as aid or assistance with respect to Indians, Aleuts, Eskimos, or other aboriginal persons, over

"(2) the amounts otherwise payable to such State under such title or part and under section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950 as the Federal share of such aid or assistance to such persons."

AMENDMENTS TO IMPROVE THE WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAM ESTABLISHED UNDER PART C OF TITLE IV OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

SEC. 320. (a)(1) Section 402(a)(15) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(15) provide (A) for the development of a program, for each appropriate relative and dependent child receiving aid under the plan and for each appropriate individual (living in the same home as a relative and child receiving such aid) whose needs are taken into account in making the determination under clause (7), for preventing or reducing the incidence of births out of wedlock and otherwise strengthening family life, and for implementing such program by assuring that in all appropriate cases family planning services are offered to them, but acceptance of family planning services provided under the plan shall be voluntary on the part of such members and individuals and shall not be a prerequisite to eligibility for or the receipt of any other service under the plan; and (B) to the extent that services provided under this clause or clause (14) are furnished by the staff of the State agency or the local agency administering the State plan in each of the political subdivisions of the State, for the establishment of a single organizational unit in such State or local agency, as the case may be, responsible for the furnishing of such services;".

(2) Section 402(a)(19)(A) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(A) effective July 1, 1971, provide that every individual, as a condition of eligibility for aid under this part, shall register for manpower services, training, and employment as provided by regulations of the Secretary of Labor, unless such individual is—

"(i) a child who is under age 16 or attending school full time;

"(ii) a person who is ill, incapacitated, or of advanced age;

"(iii) a person so remote from a work incentive project that his effective participation is precluded;

"(iv) a person whose presence in the home is required because of illness or incapacity of another member of the household; or

"(v) a mother or other relative of a child under the age of six who is caring for the child; and that any individual referred to in clause (v) shall be advised of her option to register, if she so desires, pursuant to this paragraph, and shall be informed of the child care services (if any) which will be available to her in the event she should decide so to register;".

(3) Section 402(a)(19)(C) of such Act is amended effective July 1, 1971, by striking out "20 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "10 per centum".

(4) Section 402(a)(19)(D) of such Act is amended effective July 1, 1971, to read as follows:

"(D) that training incentives and other allowances authorized under section 434 shall be disregarded in determining the needs of an individual under section 402(a)(7);".

(5) Section 402(a)(19) of such Act is further amended by striking out subparagraph (E).

(6) The parenthetical clause in section 402(a)(19)(F) of such Act is amended by striking out "pursuant to subparagraph (A) (i) and (ii) and section 407(b)(2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "pursuant to subparagraph (G)".

(7) Section 402(a)(19) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(G) that the State agency, effective July 1, 1971, will have in effect a special program which (i) will be administered by a separate administrative unit and the employees of which will, to the maximum extent feasible, perform services only in connection with the administration of such program, (ii) will provide (through arrangements with others or otherwise) for individuals who have been registered pursuant to subparagraph (A), in accordance with the order of priority listed in section 433(a), such health, vocational rehabilitation, counseling, child care (through utilization of the services of the Federal Child Care Corporation, or otherwise), and other social and supportive services as are necessary to enable such individuals to accept employment or receive manpower training provided under part C, and will, when such individuals are prepared to accept employment or receive manpower training, refer such individuals to the Secretary of Labor for employment or training under part C, and (iii) will participate in the development of operational and employability plans under section 433(b); if more than one kind of child care is available, the mother may choose the type, but she may not refuse to accept child services if they are available;".

(8) Section 403 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Federal share of assistance payments under this part shall be reduced with respect to any State for any fiscal year by one percentage point for each percentage point by which the number of individuals referred, under the program of such State established pursuant to section 402(a)(19)(G), to the local employment office of the State as being ready for employment is less than 15 per centum of the average number of individuals in such State who, during such year, are required to be registered pursuant to section 402(a)(19)(A)."

(9) Section 403 of such Act is amended by adding after subsection (e) the following new subsection:

"(f) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A) of subsection (a)(3) the rate specified in such subparagraph shall be—

"(1) 100 per centum (rather than 75 per centum) with respect to family planning services provided pursuant to clause (15) of section 402(a),

"(2) 90 per centum (rather than 75 per centum) with respect to child care services provided pursuant to clause (14) of section 402(a) or section 402(a) (19) (G) but only, in the case of any quarter, if the total amount of non-Federal expenditures during such quarter under the State plan for child care services is not less than the amount of the average quarterly amount of non-Federal expenditures under such plan for child care services for the 4-quarter period ending December 31, 1970; except that the Secretary is authorized, for a temporary period of not to exceed 6 months, to increase such rate to 100 per centum in a political subdivision of a State or portion thereof if and only if he determines that such services would not be made available during such period in the absence of such increased rate of payment, and

"(3) 90 per centum (rather than 75 per centum) with respect to social and supportive services (other than family planning services and child care services) provided pursuant to section 402(a)(19)(G)."

(b)(1) The first sentence of section 430 of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "special work projects" and inserting in lieu thereof "public service employment".

(2) Section 431 of such Act is amended (1) by inserting "(a)" immediately after "SEC. 431.", and (2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(b) Of the amounts expended from funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) for any fiscal year (commencing with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972), not less than 40 per centum thereof shall be expended for carrying out the program of on-the-job training referred to in section 432 (b)(1)(B) and for carrying out the program of public service employment referred to in section 432(b)(3).

"(c)(1) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this part in any State for any fiscal year (commencing with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972), there shall be available (from the sums appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) for such fiscal year) for expenditure in such State an amount equal to the allotment of such State for such year (as determined pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection).

"(2) Sums appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, or for any fiscal year thereafter, shall be allotted among the States as follows:

Each State shall be allotted from such sums an amount which bears the same ratio to the total of such sums as—

"(A) in the case of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, the average number of recipients of aid to families with dependent children in such State during the month of January last preceding the commencement of such fiscal year bears to the average number of such recipients during such month in all the States; and

"(B) in the case of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, or in the case of any fiscal year thereafter, the average number of individuals in such State who, during the month of January last preceding the commencement of such fiscal year, are registered pursuant to section 402(a)(19)(A) bears to the average number of individuals in all States who, during such month, are so registered."

(3)(A)(i) Clause (1) of section 432(b) of such Act is amended—

(I) by inserting "(A)" immediately after "(1)"; and

(II) by striking out "and utilizing" and inserting in lieu thereof "and (B) a program utilizing".

(ii) Clause (3) of section 432(b) of such Act is amended by striking out "special work projects" and inserting in lieu thereof "public service employment".

(B) Section 432(d) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) In providing the manpower training and employment services and opportunities required by this part, the Secretary of Labor shall, to the maximum extent feasible, assure that such services and opportunities are provided by using all authority available to him under this or any other Act. In order to assure that the services and opportunities so required are provided, the Secretary of Labor shall use the funds appropriated to him under this part to provide programs required by this part through such other Act, to the same extent and under the same conditions (except as regards the Federal matching percentage) as if appropriated under such other Act and, in making use of the programs of other Federal, State, or local agencies (public or private), the Secretary of Labor may reimburse such agencies for services rendered to persons under this part to the extent such services and opportunities are not otherwise available on a non-reimbursable basis."

(C) Section 432 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) The Secretary of Labor shall establish in each State, municipality, or other appropriate geographic area with a significant number of persons registered pursuant to section 402(a)(19)(A) a Labor Market Advisory Council the function of which will be to identify and advise the Secretary of the types of jobs available or likely to become available in the area served by the Council; except that if there is already located in any area an appropriate body to perform such function, the Secretary may designate such body as the Labor Market Advisory Council for such area.

"(2) Any such Council shall include representatives of industry, labor, and public service employers from the area to be served by the Council.

"(3) The Secretary shall not conduct, in any area, institutional training under any program established pursuant to subsection (b) of any type which is not related to jobs of the type which are or are likely to become available in such area as determined by the Secretary after taking into account information provided by the Labor Market Advisory Council for such area."

(i) by striking out "section 402" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 402(a)(19)(G)"; and

(ii) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Secretary, in carrying out such program for individuals so referred to him by a State, shall accord priority to such individuals in the following order, taking into account employability potential: first, unemployed fathers; second, dependent children and relatives who have attained age 16 and who are not in school, or engaged in work or manpower training; third, mothers, whether or not required to register pursuant to section 402(a)(19)(A), who volunteer for participation under a work incentive program; fourth, all other individuals so referred to him."

(B) Section 433(b) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) For each State the Secretary shall develop jointly with the administrative unit of such State administering the special program referred to in section 402(a)(19)(G) a statewide operational plan.

"(2) The statewide operational plan shall prescribe how the work incentive program established by this part will be operated at the local level, and shall indicate (i) for each area within the State the number and type of positions which will be provided for training, for on-the-job training, and for public service employment, (ii) the manner in which information provided by the Labor Market Advisory Council (established pursuant to section 432(f)) for any such area will be utilized in the operation of such program, and (iii) the particular State agency or administrative unit thereof which will be responsible for each of the various activities and functions to be performed under such program. Any such operational plan for any State must be approved by the Secretary, the administrative unit of such State administering the special program referred to in section 402(a)(19)(G), and the regional joint committee (established pursuant to section 439) for the area in which such State is located.

"(3) In carrying out any such statewide operational plan of any State, there shall be developed jointly by the Secretary and the administrative unit of the State administering the special program referred to in section 402(a)(19)(G) in each area of the State an employability plan for each individual residing in such area who is participating in the work incentive program established by this part. Such employability plan for any such individual shall (i) conform with the statewide operational plan of such State, (ii) provide that the separate administrative unit referred to in section 402(a)(19)(G)(ii) will provide the services referred to in section 402(a)(19)(G)(ii), and (iii) provide that the Secretary shall be responsible for providing the training, placement, and related services authorized under this part."

(C)(i) Section 433(e)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "special work projects" and inserting in lieu thereof "public service employment".

(ii) Section 433(e)(2)(A) of such Act is amended by striking out "a portion" and inserting in lieu thereof "100 per centum (in the case of the first year that such agreement is in effect, if such agreement is in effect at least three years) and 90 per centum (if such agreement is in effect less than three years; or, if such agreement is in effect at least three years, in the case of any year after the first year that such agreement is in effect)".

(iii) Section 433(e)(2)(B) of such Act is amended by striking out "on special work projects of" and inserting in lieu thereof "in public service employment for".

(iv) Section 433(e)(3) of such Act is hereby repealed.

(G) Section 434 of such Act is amended—

(i) by inserting "(a)" immediately after "SEC. 434."; and

(ii) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary of Labor is also authorized to pay, to any member of a family participating in manpower training under this part, allowances for transportation and other costs incurred by such member, to the extent such costs are necessary to and directly relating to the participation by such member in such training."

(5)(A) Section 435(a) of such Act is amended, effective July 1, 1971, by striking out "80 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "90 per centum".

(B) Section 435(b) of such Act is amended by striking out "; except that with respect to special work projects under the program established by section 432(b)(3), the costs of carrying out this part shall include only the costs of administration".

(6) Section 436(b) of such Act is amended by striking out "by the Secretary after consultation with" and inserting in lieu thereof "jointly by him and".

(7) Section 437 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 437. The Secretary is authorized to provide to an individual who is registered pursuant to section 402(a)(19)(A) and who is unemployed relocation assistance (including grants, loans, and the furnishing of such services as will aid an involuntarily unemployed individual who desires to relocate to do so in an area where there is assurance of regular suitable employment, offered through the public employment offices of the State in such area, which will lead to the earning of income sufficient to make such individual and his family ineligible for benefits under part A)."

(8) Section 438 of such Act is amended by striking out "projects under".

(9) Section 439 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 439. The Secretary and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall, not later than six months after the date of enactment of the Social Security Amendments of 1970, issue regulations to carry out the purposes of this part, as amended by the Social Security Amendments of 1970. Such regulations shall provide for the establishment, jointly by the Secretary and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, of (1) a national coordination committee the duty of which shall be to establish uniform reporting and similar requirements for the administration of this part, and (2) a regional coordination committee for each region which shall be responsible for review and approval of statewide operational plans developed pursuant to section 433(b)."

(10) Section 441 of such Act is amended—

(B) by adding immediately after the last sentence thereof the following sentence: "Nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing the Secretary to enter into any contract with any organization after June 1, 1970, for the dissemination by such organization of information about programs authorized to be carried on under this part."; and

(C) by adding after and below such section the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary shall collect and publish monthly, by State, by age group, and by sex, the following information with respect to individuals registered pursuant to section 402 (a)(19)(A)—

"(1) the number of individuals so registered, the number of individuals receiving each particular type of work training services, and the number of individuals receiving no such services;

"(2) the number of individuals placed in jobs by the Secretary under section 432(b)(1)(A), and the average wages of the individuals so placed;

"(3) the number of individuals who begin but fail to complete training, and the reasons for the failure of such individuals to complete training; and the number of individuals who register voluntarily but do not receive training or placement;

"(4) the number of individuals who obtain employment following the completion of training, and the number of such individuals whose employment is in fields related to the particular type of training received;

"(5) of the individuals who obtain employment following the completion of training, the average wages of such individuals, and the number retaining such employment three months, six months, and twelve months, following the date of completion of such training;

"(6) the number of individuals in public service employment, by type of employment, and the average wages of such individuals; and

"(7) the amount of savings, under Part A of this title, realized by reason of the operation of each of the programs established pursuant to this part."

(11) Section 442 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE FOR PROVIDERS OF EMPLOYMENT OR TRAINING

"SEC. 442. The Secretary is authorized to provide technical assistance to providers of employment or training to enable them to participate in the establishment and operation of programs authorized to be established by section 432(b)."

(d) The amendments made by the preceding subsections of this section shall take effect on January 1, 1971.

TITLE ~~III~~ IV—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

MEANING OF TERM "SECRETARY"

SEC. ~~301~~ 401. As used in titles I, II, and III of this Act, and in the provisions of the Social Security Act amended by this Act, the term "Secretary," unless the context otherwise requires, means the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

DEDUCTIBILITY OF ILLEGAL MEDICAL REFERRAL PAYMENTS, ETC.

SEC. 602. (a) Section 162(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to bribes and illegal kickbacks) is amended—

(1) by striking out paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) OTHER ILLEGAL PAYMENTS.—No deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for any payment (other than a payment described in paragraph (1)) made, directly or indirectly, to any person, if the payment constitutes an illegal bribe or kickback under any law of the United States, or under any law of a State

(but only if such State law is generally enforced), which subjects the payor to a criminal or civil penalty (including the loss of license or privilege to engage in a trade or business). For purposes of this paragraph, a bribe or kickback includes a payment in consideration of the referral of a client, patient, or customer."; and

(2) by striking out "BRIBES AND ILLEGAL KICKBACKS." in the heading of such section and inserting in lieu thereof "ILLEGAL BRIBES, KICKBACKS, ETC.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to payments made after December 30, 1969.

(285) REQUIRED INFORMATION RELATING TO EXCESS MEDICARE TAX PAYMENTS BY RAILROAD EMPLOYEES

SEC. 430. (a) Section 6051(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to requirement of receipts for employees) is amended—

(1) by striking out "section 3101, 3201, or 3402" in the matter preceding paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "section 3101 or 3402";

(2) by inserting "and" at the end of paragraph (5), and by striking out "; and" at the end of paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof a period; and

(3) by striking out paragraphs (7) and (8).

(b) Section 6051(c) of such Code (relating to additional requirements) is amended by striking out "sections 3101 and 3201" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "section 3101".

(c) Section 6051 of such Code (relating to receipts for employees) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENT.—Every person required to deduct and withhold tax under section 3201 from an employee shall include on or with the statement required to be furnished such employee under subsection (a) a notice concerning the provisions of this title with respect to the allowance of a credit or refund of the tax on wages imposed by section 3101(b) and the tax on compensation imposed by section 3201 or 3211 which is treated as a tax on wages imposed by section 3101(b).

"(2) INFORMATION TO BE SUPPLIED TO EMPLOYEES.—Each person required to deduct and withhold tax under section 3201 during any year from an employee who has also received wages during such year subject to the tax imposed by section 3101(b) shall, upon request of such employee, furnish to him a written statement showing—

"(A) the total amount of compensation with respect to which the tax imposed by section 3201 was deducted,

"(B) the total amount deducted as tax under section 3201, and

"(C) the portion of the total amount deducted as tax under section 3201 which is for financing the cost of hospital insurance under part A of title XVIII of the Social Security Act."

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply in respect of remuneration paid after December 31, 1969.

(286) REPORTING OF MEDICAL PAYMENTS

SEC. 404. (a) Subpart B of part III of subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to information concerning transactions with other persons) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 6050A. RETURNS REGARDING PAYMENTS TO PROVIDERS OF HEALTH CARE SERVICES.

"(a) REQUIREMENT OF REPORTING.—

"(1) PAYMENTS TO PROVIDERS.—Every person who during any calendar year (beginning with calendar year 1971) makes payments aggregating $600 or more to a provider of health care services for health care services furnished by such provider or by another such provider shall make a return according to the forms or regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate setting forth the total amount of such payments made to such provider during the calendar year, and the name and address of such provider.

"(2) PAYMENTS IN REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN AMOUNTS PAID OR PAYABLE TO PROVIDERS UNDER GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS.—Every person who during any calendar year (beginning with calendar year 1972) makes payments to one or more persons in reimbursement of amounts aggregating $600 or more paid or payable to a provider of health care services for health care services furnished by such provider or by another such provider under a Government health care program shall make a return according to the forms or regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate setting forth the total amount paid or payable to such provider during the calendar year with respect to which such reimbursements were made, and the name and address of such provider.

"(b) EXCEPTIONS.—

"(1) EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS.—Subsections (a) (1) and (2) shall not apply to any payment to, or amount paid or payable to, an organization—

"(A) which is described in section 501(c)(3) and is exempt from taxation under section 501(a), or

"(B) which is an agency or instrumentality of the United States or of any State or political subdivision thereof.

"(2) CERTAIN DIRECT PAYMENTS.—Subsection (a)(1) shall not apply to—

"(A) any payment by an individual for health care services furnished to himself or any other individual (other than any such payment made in the course of a trade or business), or

"(B) any payment of wages (as defined in section 3401(a)) with respect to which a statement is made under section 6051.

"(3) PAYMENTS SPECIFIED IN REGULATIONS.—The Secretary or his delegate may by regulations specify payments to which subsection (a)(1) shall not apply and amounts paid or payable to which subsection (a)(2) shall not apply.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) HEALTH CARE SERVICES.—The term 'health care services' means—

"(A) services described in paragraphs (1) through (9) of section 1861(s) of the Social Security Act, or (to the extent not described therein) in paragraphs (1) through (15) of section 1905(a) of such Act, and

"(B) such other services (similar or related to the services described in subparagraph (A)) as the Secretary or his delegate may prescribe by regulations.

"(2) PROVIDERS OF SERVICES.—The term 'provider of health care services' means any person who furnishes health care services, except any such person whose services are principally the selling or leasing of items of personal property.

"(3) GOVERNMENT HEALTH CARE PROGRAMS.—The term 'Government health care program' means any program for providing health care services which is administered by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the Government of the United States or is funded to a substantial extent by the United States, and includes (but is not limited to) the programs provided under—

"(A) titles V, XVIII, and XIX of the Social Security Act,

"(B) chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code, and the Retired Federal Employees Health Benefits Act,

"(C) chapter 55 of title 10, United States Code, and

"(D) chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code.

"(d) RETURNS BY GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.—Any return required under subsection (a) with respect to payments or reimbursements made by the United States, any State or political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of the foregoing, shall be made by the officers or employees having information as to such payments or reimbursements.

"(e) STATEMENTS TO BE FURNISHED TO PROVIDERS WITH RESPECT TO WHOM INFORMATION IS FURNISHED.—Every person making a return under subsection (a) shall furnish to each provider of health care services whose name is set forth in such return a written statement showing—

"(1) the name and address of the person making such return, and

"(2) the total amount of payments described in subsection (a)(1) made to the provider as shown on such return, and the total amounts paid or payable to the provider with respect to which reimbursements described in subsection (a)(2) were made as shown on such return.

The written statement required under the preceding sentence shall be furnished to the provider on or before January 31 of the year following the calendar year for which the return under subsection (a) was made.

"(f) RECIPIENT TO FURNISH REQUIRED INFORMA-

TION.—Upon demand of a person making payments to, or in reimbursement of amounts paid or payable to, a provider of health care services, there shall be furnished to such person by such provider—

"(1) his name and address, and (if different) the address used for purposes of filing his income tax return, and

"(2) such identifying number as may be prescribed for securing proper identification of such provider.

"(g) RETENTION OF RECORDS.—Every person making a return under subsection (a) shall—

"(1) retain the records and other documents relating to the payments and reimbursements with respect to which such return is made for such time as the Secretary or his delegate prescribes by regulations, and

"(2) make such records and documents available to the Secretary or his delegate whenever in the judgment of the Secretary or his delegate such records and documents are necessary to the determination of the tax imposed on any person under subtitle A.

"(h) STUDY OF PRACTICES IN COLLECTING PAYMENTS FOR HEALTH CARE SERVICES.—

"(1) JOINT STUDY BY SECRETARIES OF TREASURY AND HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall make a joint continuing study of the practices of providers of health care services in collecting payments for health care services (A) from insurance companies which provide health care insurance coverage for individuals and (B) from the individuals for whom such services are furnished.

"(2) REPORTS TO CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall, on or before June 30 of each year (beginning with 1971), report the results of their study under paragraph (1) to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives."

(b) (1) The table of sections for subpart B of part III of subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 6050A. Returns regarding payments to providers of health care services."

(2) Section 6041 (a) of such Code (relating to information at source) is amended by striking out "or 6049 (a) (1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "6049 (a) (1), or 6050A (a)".

(3) Section 6652 (a) of such Code (relating to failure to file certain information returns) is amended—

(A) by striking out "or" at the end of paragraph (2);

(B) by inserting "or" at the end of paragraph (3);

(C) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) to make a return required by section 6050A (a) (relating to reporting payments made to providers of health care services, etc.) with respect to payments to a provider of health care services and amounts paid or payable to such a provider for which reimbursements were made,"; and

(D) by striking out "(2) or (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(2), (3), or (4)".

(4) Section 6678 of such Code (relating to failure to furnish certain statements) is amended—

(A) by inserting "6050A (e)," before "or 6052 (b)"; and

(B) by inserting "6050A (a)," before "or 6052 (a)".

(c) Title XI of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after section 1129 (as added by section 546 of this Act) and before section 1151 (as added by section 245 of this Act) the following new section:

"RECORDS WITH RESPECT TO MEDICAL AND HEALTH CARE ITEMS AND SERVICES

"SEC. 1130. (a) It shall be the duty of the Secretary to compile, keep, and maintain, for each calendar year (beginning with the calendar year 1970), such records as may be necessary accurately to indicate—

"(1) the identity (by name, address, medical or health care specialty, and such other identifying criteria as may be appropriate) of each person who, during the calendar year, furnishes medical or health care items or services to any individual, the number of individuals to whom such items or services were furnished by such person during such year, and the items and services furnished to such individuals by such person during such year, if all or any part of the cost or charge attributable to the provision of such items or services is payable under a program established by title XVIII or under any program or project under or established pursuant to this title, title V, or title XIX; and

"(2) with respect to each person referred to in paragraph (1), the aggregate of the amounts of the costs or charges attributable, under each program or project referred to in such paragraph, to medical or health care items or services furnished, during the calendar year, by such person to individuals under such programs and projects (including, in the aggregate amount of costs or charges so attributable, the amounts paid to individuals by reason or on account of the furnishing by such person of such items or services to such individuals).

"(b)(1) In order to carry out the provisions of subsection (a), the Secretary shall require persons, agencies, or agents (including carriers and intermediaries utilized under title XVIII and fiscal agents and insurers utilized under any program established under or pursuant to title V or XIX) administering, or assisting in the administration of, any program or project referred to in subsection (a)(1) to collect, and submit to the Secretary at such time or times as the Secretary may require, such data and information as the Secretary may deem necessary or appropriate. Such persons, agents, carriers, intermediaries, fiscal agents, and insurers shall utilize, in supplying the data and information provided for in the preceding sentence, the identifying numbers required under paragraph (2) as the basic means of identifying persons referred to in subsection (a)(1).

"(2) The Secretary shall require, for purposes of identifying the persons referred to in subsection (a)(1), the employment of the identifying numbers utilized on returns required with respect to payments to such persons pursuant to section 6050A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives with respect to each calendar year, beginning with the calendar year 1970, a report indicating the name, address, and medical or health care specialty of each person who, during such year, furnished medical or health care items or services to individuals the costs of or charges for which give rise to payments under one or more of the programs or projects referred to in subsection (a)(1) of $25,000 or more. Such report shall indicate the amount of payments under each of such programs or projects attributable to such items or services furnished during such year by each such person, the number of different individuals to whom such items or services were furnished by such person during such year, and the items and services furnished to such individuals by such person during such year.

"(2) Such report for the calendar year 1970 shall be submitted not later than June 30, 1971, and such report for each succeeding calendar year shall be submitted not later than June 30 of the following calendar year."

(287) APPOINTMENT AND CONFIRMATION OF ADMINISTRATOR OF SOCIAL AND REHABILITATION SERVICES

SEC. 405. Appointments made on or after the date of enactment of this Act to the office of the Administrator of the Social and Rehabilitation Service, within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(288) ADVISORY COUNCIL ON SOCIAL SECURITY; CHANGE IN REPORTING DATE

SEC. 406. So much of section 706(d) of the Social Security Act as precedes paragraph (1) is amended by inserting immediately after "appointed," the following: "(except that the Council appointed in 1969 shall submit its reports to the Secretary not later than March 1, 1971)".

(289) DISREGARDING OF SOCIAL SECURITY INCREASES UNDER WELFARE PROGRAMS

SEC. 407. (a) Section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969, as amended by section 2(b) of Public Law 91-306, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1007. In addition to the requirements imposed by law as a condition of approval of a State plan to provide aid to individuals under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act, there is hereby imposed the requirement (and the plan shall be deemed to require) that, in the case of any individual found eligible (as a result of the requirement imposed by this section or otherwise), for aid for any month after March 1970 and before January 1972 who also receives in such month—

"(1) a monthly insurance benefit under title II of such Act, the sum of the aid received by him for such month, plus the monthly insurance benefit received by him in such month, shall not be less than the sum of the aid which would have been received by him for such month under the State plan as in effect for March 1970, plus either

"(A) the monthly insurance benefit which was or would have been received by him in March 1970 without regard to the other provisions of this title plus $4, or

"(B) the monthly insurance benefit which was or would have been received by him in March 1970 under the provisions of this title, whichever is less (whether this requirement is satisfied by disregarding a portion of his monthly insurance benefit or otherwise), or

"(2) a monthly payment of annuity or pension under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, the sum of the aid received by him in such month, plus the monthly payment of such annuity or pension received by him in such month (not including any part of such annuity or pension which is disregarded under section 1006), shall (except as otherwise provided in the succeeding sentence) not be less than the sum of the aid which would have been received by him for such month under such plan as in effect for March 1970, plus either

"(A) the monthly payment of annuity or pension which was or would have been received by him in March 1970 without regard to the provisions of any Act enacted after May 30, 1970, and before December 31, 1970, which provides general increases in the amount of such monthly payment of annuity or pension plus $4, or

"(B) the monthly payment of annuity or pension which was or would have been received by him in March 1970, taking into account the provisions of such Act (if any),

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 2(a)(10), 1002(a)(8), 1402(a)(8), and 1602(a)(13) and (14) of the Social Security Act, each State, in determining need for aid or assistance under a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, of such Act, shall disregard (and the plan shall be deemed to require the State to disregard), in addition to any other amounts which the State is required or permitted to disregard in determining such need, any amount paid to an individual under title II of such Act (or under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 by reason of the first proviso in section 3(e) thereof), in any month after December 1970, to the extent that (1) such payment is attributable to the increase in monthly benefits under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system for January or February 1971 resulting from the enactment of this Act, and (2) the amount of such increase is paid separately from the rest of the monthly benefit of such individual for January or February 1971.

(c) In addition to the requirements imposed by law as a condition of approval of a State plan to provide aid or assistance to individuals under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act, there is hereby imposed the requirement (and the plan shall be deemed to require) that, for months after March 1971, and before January 1972, the amount of aid or assistance payable to any individual under any such plan shall be computed in such manner as the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall by regulations prescribe to assure that any increase in the amount of such aid or assistance which is required by reason of the provisions of section 502 of this Act shall be in addition to, and not in lieu of, any increase in the amount of such aid or assistance which is or would be required by section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969, as amended.

(290) ACCEPTANCE OF MONEY GIFTS MADE UNCONDITIONALLY TO THE SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 408. (a) The second sentence of section 201(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting after

"in addition," and before "such amounts" the following: "such gifts and bequests as may be made thereto, and".

(b) The second sentence of section 201(b) of such Act is amended by inserting after "consist of" and before "such amounts" the following: "such gifts and bequests as may be made thereto, and".

(c) Section 201 of such Act is further amended by adding after subsection (h) the following new subsection:

"(i)(1) The Managing Trustee of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States gifts and bequests made unconditionally to such Trust Funds or to the Social Security Administration.

"(2) Any such gift accepted pursuant to the authority granted in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be deposited in—"(A) the specific trust fund designated by the donor, or

"(B) if the donor has not so designated, to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund."

(d) The second sentence of section 1817(a) of such

Act is amended by inserting after "consist of" and before "such amounts" the following: "such gifts and bequests as may be made thereto, and".

(e) The second sentence of section 1841(a) of such Act is amended by inserting after "consist of" and before "such amounts" the following: "such gifts and bequests as may be made thereto, and".

(f) The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to gifts received after the date of enactment of this Act.

(g) For the purpose of Federal income, estate, and gift taxes, any gift or bequest to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, or the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, or the Social Security Administration, which is accepted by the Managing Trustee of such Trust Funds under the authority of section 201(i) of the Social Security Act, shall be considered as a gift or bequest to or for the use of the United States and as made for exclusively public purposes.

(291) LOANS TO ENABLE CERTAIN FACILITIES TO MEET REQUIREMENTS OF LIFE SAFETY CODE

SEC. 409. (a) It is the purpose of this section to provide assistance in the form of loans to hospitals and extended care facilities, which are providers of service participating in the health insurance program established by title XVIII of the Social Security Act, in meeting requirements of the Life Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association.

(b) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized for a period of five years commencing January 1, 1971, to lend to any hospital or extended care facility described in subsection (a) a sum sufficient to enable such hospital or extended care facility to install sprinkler systems and such as are necessary to meet the requirements of the Life Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association, but only if a State planning agency described in section 314(a), section 314(b), or section 604(a) of the Public Health Service Act (or such other appropriate planning agency as may be designated by the Secretary) determines that the proposed expenditure should be made to permit the continued participation of such hospital or extended care facility in the program established by title XVIII of the Social Security Act, and that the proposed investment is not inconsistent with, or inappropriate in terms of area needs for the facility concerned.

(c)(1) Loans under this section shall be made only upon application therefor and shall be made by the Secretary in such amounts as the Secretary determines to be appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section and protect the financial interests of the United States.

(2) The rate of interest to be charged for any loan under this section shall be the average of the rates of interest on obligations issued for purchase by the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund as determined at the time such loan is made.

(3) Such loans shall be repaid over a period of not to exceed 10 years, in equal periodic installments to be made not less frequently than annually.

(4) Such loans shall become due and payable in full at once if the Secretary determines (A) that the funds in question were not used for the purpose specified in the loan application, or (B) that the facility has ceased to make its services available to a reasonable proportion of persons entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act in the area served by such facility and who require such services.

(d) No hospital or extended care facility shall be eligible for a loan under this section unless—

(1) it was in operation and participating as a provider of services under title XVIII of the Social Security Act on January 1, 1971,

(2) the building in which the sprinkler system is to be installed was constructed prior to January 1, 1971, and

(3) the Secretary is satisfied that the applicant is unable to secure such loan from other sources or is unable to secure such loan from other sources at a reasonable rate of interest and on reasonable terms and conditions.

(e) There are authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970, and for each of the next five fiscal years such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

(292) RETIREMENT INCOME CREDIT

SEC. 410. (a) Section 37(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to limitation on retirement income) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$1,524" in the matter preceding paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,872";

(2) by striking out "$1,200" in paragraph (2)(B) and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,680"; and

(3) by striking out "$1,700" each place it appears in paragraph (2)(B) and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,880".

(b) Section 37(i) of such Code (relating to special rules for married couples) is amended by striking out "$2,286" in paragraph (2)(B) and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,808".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1970.

(293) TAX CREDIT FOR CERTAIN EXPENSES INCURRED IN WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAMS

SEC. 612 (a) Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to credits allowable) is amended by renumbering section 40 as section 41, and by inserting after section 39 the following new section:

"SEC. 40. EXPENSES OF WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAMS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—There shall be allowed, as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter, the amount determined under subpart C of this part.

"(b) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary or his delegate shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section and subpart C."

(b) Part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code (relating to credits against tax) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subpart:

"Subpart C—Rules for Computing Credit for Expenses of Work Incentive Programs

"SEC. 50. AMOUNT OF CREDIT.

"(a) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—The amount of the credit allowed by section 40 for the taxable year shall be equal to 20 percent of the work incentive program expenses (as defined in section 50A(a)).

"(2) LIMITATION BASED ON AMOUNT OF TAX.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the credit allowed by section 40 for the taxable year shall not exceed—

"(A) so much of the liability for the taxable year as does not exceed $25,000, plus

"(B) 50 percent of so much of the liability for tax for the taxable year as exceeds $25,000.

"(3) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—For purposes of paragraph (2), the liability for tax for the taxable year shall be the tax imposed by this chapter for such year, reduced by the sum of the credits allowable under—

"(A) section 33 (relating to foreign tax credit),

"(B) section 35 (relating to partially tax exempt interest),

"(C) section 37 (relating to retirement income), and

"(D) section 38 (relating to investment in certain depreciable property).

For purposes of this paragraph, any tax imposed for the taxable year by section 531 (relating to accumulated earnings tax), section 541 (relating to personal holding company tax), or section 1378 (relating to tax on certain capital gains of subchapter S corporations), and any additional tax imposed for the taxable year by section 1351(d)(1) (relating to recoveries of foreign expropriation losses), shall not be considered tax imposed by this chapter for such year.

"(4) MARRIED INDIVIDUALS. In the case of a husband or wife who files a separate return, the amount specified under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (2) shall be $12,500 in lieu of $25,000. This paragraph shall not apply if the spouse of the taxpayer has no work incentive program expenses for, and no unused credit carryback or carryover to, the taxable year of such spouse which ends within or with the taxpayer's taxable year.

"(5) CONTROLLED GROUPS.—In the case of a controlled group, the $25,000 amount specified under paragraph (2) shall be reduced for each component member of such group by apportioning $25,000 among the component members of such group in such manner as the Secretary or his delegate shall by regulations prescribe. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'controlled group' has the meaning assigned to such term by section 1563(a).

"(b) CARRYBACK AND CARRYOVER OF UNUSED CREDIT.—

"(1) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—If the amount of the credit determined under subsection (a)(1) for any taxable year exceeds the limitation provided by subsection (a)(2) for such taxable year (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as 'unused credit year'), such excess shall be—

"(A) a work incentive program credit carryback to each of the 3 taxable years preceding the unused credit year, and

"(B) a work incentive program credit carryover to each of the 7 taxable years following the unused credit year, and shall be added to the amount allowable as a credit by section 40 for such years, except that such excess may be a carryback only to a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1970. The entire amount of the unused credit for an unused credit year shall be carried to the earliest of the 10 taxable years to which (by reason of subparagraphs (A) and (B)) such credit may be carried, and then to each of the other 9 taxable years to the extent that, because of the limitation contained in paragraph (2), such unused credit may not be added for a prior taxable year to which such unused credit may be carried.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The amount of the unused credit which may be added under paragraph (1) for any preceding or succeeding taxable year shall not exceed the amount by which the limitation provided by subsection (a)(2) for such taxable year exceeds the sum of—

"(A) the credit allowable under subsection (a)(1) for such taxable year, and

"(B) the amounts which, by reason of this subsection, are added to the amount allowable for such taxable year and attributable to taxable years preceding the unused credit year.

"(c) EARLY TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT BY EMPLOYER, ETC.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate—

"(A) WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAM EXPENSES.—If the taxpayer terminates the employment of any employee with respect to whom work incentive program expenses are taken into account under subsection (a) at any time during the first 12 months of such employment (whether or not consecutive) or before the close of the 12th calendar month after the calendar month in which such employee completes 12 months of employment with the taxpayer, the tax under this chapter for the taxable year in which such employment is terminated shall be increased by an amount (determined under such regulations) equal to the credits allowed under section 40 for such taxable year and all prior taxable years attributable to work incentive program expenses paid or incurred with respect to such employee.

"(B) CARRYBACKS AND CARRYOVERS ADJUSTED.—In the case of any termination of employment to which subparagraph (A) applies, the carrybacks and carryovers under subsection (b) shall be properly adjusted.

"(2) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY IN CERTAIN CASES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to—

"(i) a termination of employment of an employee who voluntarily leaves the employment of the taxpayer, or

"(ii) a termination of employment of an individual who, before the close of the period referred to in paragraph (1) (A), becomes disabled to perform the services of such employment, unless such disability is removed before the close of such period and the taxpayer fails to offer reemployment to such individual.

"(B) CHANGE IN FORM OF BUSINESS, ETC.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the employment relationship between the taxpayer and an employee shall not be treated as terminated—

"(i) by a transaction to which section 381 (a) applies, if the employee continues to be employed by the acquiring corporation, or

"(ii) by reason of a mere change in the form of conducting the trade or business of the taxpayer, if the employee continues to be employed in such trade or business and the taxpayer retains a substantial interest in such trade or business.

"(3) SPECIAL RULE.—Any increase in tax under paragraph (1) shall not be treated as tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit allowable under subpart A.

"SEC. 50A. DEFINITIONS; SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAM EXPENSES.—For purposes of this subpart, the term 'work incentive program expenses' means the wages and salaries of employees who are certified by the Secretary of Labor as having been placed in employment under a work incentive program established under section 432(b)(1) of the Social Security Act which are paid or incurred for services rendered by such employees during the first 12 months of such employment (whether or not consecutive).

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) TRADE OR BUSINESS EXPENSES.—No item shall be taken into account under subsection (a) unless such item is allowable as a deduction under section 162 (relating to trade or business expenses).

"(2) REIMBURSED EXPENSES.—No item shall be taken into account under subsection (a) to the extent that the taxpayer is reimbursed for such item.

"(3) GEOGRAPHICAL LIMITATION.—No item shall be taken into account under subsection (a) with respect to any expense paid or incurred by the taxpayer for training conducted outside of the territory of the United States.

"(4) MAXIMUM PERIOD OF TRAINING OR INSTRUCTION.—No wages or salary of an employee shall be taken into account under subsection (a) after the end of the 24-month period beginning with the date of initial employment of such employee by the taxpayer.

"(5) INELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS.—No item shall be taken into account under subsection (a) with respect to an individual who—

"(A) bears any of the relationships described in paragraphs (1) through (8) of section 152(a) to the taxpayer, or, if the taxpayer is a corporation, to an individual who owns, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock of the corporation (determined with the application of section 267(c)), or

"(B) if the taxpayer is an estate or trust, is a grantor, beneficiary, or a fiduciary of the estate or trust, or is an individual who bears any of the relationships described in paragraphs (1) through (8) of section 152(a) to a grantor, beneficiary, or fiduciary of the estate or trust.

"(c) SUBCHAPTER S CORPORATIONS.—In case of an electing small business corporation (as defined in section 1371)—

"(1) the work incentive program expenses for each taxable year shall be apportioned pro rata among the persons who are shareholders of such corporation on the last day of such taxable year, and

"(2) any person to whom any expenses have been apportioned under paragraph (1) shall be treated (for purposes of this subpart) as the taxpayer with respect to such expenses.

"(d) ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—In the case of an estate or trust—

"(1) the work incentive program expenses for any taxable year shall be apportioned between the estate or trust and the beneficiaries on the basis of the income of the estate or trust allocable to each,

"(2) any beneficiary to whom any expenses have been apportioned under paragraph (1) shall be treated (for purposes of this subpart) as the taxpayer with respect to such expenses, and

"(3) the $25,000 amount specified under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 50(a)(2) applicable to such estate or trust shall be reduced to an amount which bears the same ratio to $25,000 as the amount of the expenses allocated to the trust under paragraph (1) bears to the entire amount of such expenses.

"(e) LIMITATIONS WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN PERSONS.—In the case of—

"(1) an organization to which section 593 applies,

"(2) a regulated investment company or a real estate investment trust subject to taxation under subchapter M (section 851 and following), and

"(3) a cooperative organization described in section 1381(a), rules similar to the rules provided in section 46(d) shall apply under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate.

"(f) CROSS REFERENCE.—

"For application of this subpart to certain acquiring corporations, see section 381(c)(24),"

(c)(1) The table of subparts for part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Subpart C. Rules for computing credit for expenses of work incentive programs."

(2) The table of sections of subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking out the last item and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 40. Expenses of work incentive programs.
"Sec. 41. Overpayments of tax."

(3) Section 381(c) of such Code (relating to items taken into account in certain corporated acquisitions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(24) CREDIT UNDER SECTION 40 FOR WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAM EXPENSES.—The acquiring corporation shall take into account (to the extent proper to carry out the purposes of this section and section 40, and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) the items required to be taken into account for purposes of section 40 in respect of the distributor or transferor corporation."

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1970.

(294) CHANGE IN EXECUTIVE SCHEDULE—COMMISSIONER OF SOCIAL SECURITY

SEC. 412. (a) Section 5316 of title 5, United States Code (relating to positions at level V of the Executive Schedule), is amended by striking out:

"(51) Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.".

(b) Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code (relating to positions at level IV of the Executive Schedule), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(94) Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.".

(c) The amendments made by the preceding provisions of this section shall take effect on the first day of the first pay period of the Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, which commences on or after January 1, 1971.

(295) PRIVATE PENSION BENEFITS THAT DECREASE BY REASON OF SOCIAL SECURITY INCREASES

SEC. 413. (a) Section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to deduction for contributions of an employer to an employee's trust or annuity plan, etc.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) PENSION, ETC., PLANS CORRELATED WITH OLD-AGE, SURVIVORS, AND DISABILITY INSURANCE BENEFITS.—If contributions are paid by an employer to a stock bonus, pension, profit-sharing or annuity plan designed to provide benefits upon retirement, and, the amount of the benefit payment or payments to an individual who is entitled to such benefit payment or payments under the plan for any period after December 31, 1970, is reduced, in whole or in part, by reason of an increase in the amount of the monthly insurance benefits which are payable to such individual for such period under title II of the Social Security Act, then the total amount deductible under this section with respect to contributions made by the employer to the plan for the taxable year in which occurs the period described in this section shall, under regulations of the Secretary or his delegate, be reduced by an amount (which shall not be in excess of the total of the amount otherwise so deductible) equal to the net decrease in payments to all individuals under the plan by reason of such increase during such taxable year."

(b) The amendment made by this section shall apply with respect to taxable years of employers contributing to such stock bonus, pension, profit-sharing or annuity plans beginning on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

PETITIONING CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE IN REGARD TO SENATE AMENDMENTS TO SOCIAL SECURITY BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. VANIK) is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 100 Members of the House of Representatives urging the Honorable WILBUR MILLS, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to take the Senate amendments to the social security bill from the Speaker's desk to conference and accept those which: First, increase social security benefits by 10 percent; second, increase the social security minimum to $100; third, increase the retirement earnings test to $2,400; and fourth, increase the monthly minimum allowance for the aged, disabled, and blind on welfare to $130 a person or $200 per couple.

I can very well understand to act on this bill while it languished in the other body for over 7 months. I also understand the frustrations of Members who properly explained about the attempt to attach nonrelated legislation to the social security bill.

These considerations, however, should be put aside because of the need to adopt this legislation. A new bill next year is not likely to provide a 10-percent increase in benefits, nor is it likely to increase the minimum benefit to $100—nor is it likely to include an increase in the allowable retirement income to $2,400 per year; nor is it likely to increase the monthly minimum allowance for the aged, disabled, and blind on welfare to acceptable levels. Furthermore, if a new bill passes the Congress by April 1, increased benefit payments will not be received by 26 million recipients until after July 1.

The experience of this year indicates the manner in which the social security legislation is used as a delivery system for legislation which could not make it through this Congress on its own power. This abuse of the legislative process could be avoided if we pass out a social security bill this session.

Following is the petition signed by 100 Members of this body urging action before sine die adjournment of this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOLEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, of course, but I would think it would be the gentlemanly thing to do, and I am sure those who signed the petition would want done, and that is to accord the privilege to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means the opportunity to have the original copy of it and not just to read the signatures into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Therefore, I hope my friend from Ohio will provide that opportunity to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. VANIK. I have for the chairman the original. I got the 100th name just a couple of minutes ago and it is on my desk. I have a mimeographed copy of it.

Mr. MILLS. I appreciate the gentleman at least letting me have the original copy.

Mr. VANIK. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, the petition referred to follows:

PETITION

We, the undersigned Members of the House of Representatives, hereby urge the Honorable Wilbur Mills, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, to take the Senate Amendments to the Social Security Bill from the Speaker's Desk to Conference and accept those which (1) increase social security benefits by 10 percent, (2) increase the social security minimum to $100, (3) increase the retirement earnings test to $2400, (4) increase the monthly minimum allowance for the Aged, Disabled, and Blind on welfare to $130 a person or $200 per couple.

Also attached herewith is a Library of Congress memorandum relating to the financing of the OASDI system under the Senate version of the bill as compared with the House version:

MEMORANDUM

DECEMBER 29, 1970.

From: Francisco Bayo.

Subject: Comparison of the Financing of the OASDI System Under the Senate Version and House Version of H.R. 17550.

The attached Table I compares the financing adopted for the Senate version and the House version of the OASDI system under H.R. 17550. This comparison is made on the basis of level earnings assumptions and does not take into account the effect of the automatic benefit increase provisions or of their corresponding financing. The House version of these provisions is estimated to yield enough revenues, over the long-range future, to finance all the automatic increases in benefits. However, under the Senate version of the automatic provisions the system would slowly accumulate actuarial surpluses, unless the Congress acts in the future to either increase the benefits further or reduce the taxes.

On the basis of the level earnings assumption and disregarding the automatic provisions, the House bill has an actuarial imbalance for the OASDI system of −0.15% taxable payroll which is close to the permissible variation of .10% of taxable payroll. This was also the case under the Ways and Means Committee bill, which had an actuarial balance of −0.12% of taxable payroll and which was increased on the House floor to −0.15% of taxable payroll by a liberalization in the retirement test. However, this is not the case for the Senate bill which has an actuarial imbalance of −0.25% of taxable payroll and is beyond the acceptable limits of variation. It should be indicated that the bill reported by the Senate Finance Committee had an actuarial balance of −0.15% of taxable payroll, as in the House bill, and that the liberalization adopted on the Senate floor with respect to the earnings test and to grandchildren's benefits increased the imbalance by 0.10% to a total of −0.25% of taxable payroll.

The main differences between the two versions of the bill are presented in Table II which also indicates their long range cost effect. The level-cost of the OASDI system under present law and under both versions of the bill are presented in Table III.

TABLE I.—CHANGES IN ACTUARIAL BALANCE OF OLD-AGE, SURVIVORS AND DISABILITY INSURANCE SYSTEM AS PERCENTAGE OF TAXABLE PAYROLL OF HOUSE AND SENATE VERSIONS OVER PRESENT LAW

Item	Level-cost
	House bill	Senate bill
Actuarial balance of present system	−0.08	−0.08
Effect of 1970 earnings	+.28	+.28
Increase in earnings	+.23	+.23
Age 62 computation point for men	−.12	−.07
Earnings test changes	−.13	−.22
Widow's benefits 100 percent of PIA at age 65	−.24	−920
Actuarial reduction changes	−.10	(1)
Eligibility for blind	−.01	−.08
4-month waiting period for disability	(1)	−.06
Family maximum for new beneficiaries	(1)	−.04
Miscellaneous changes [2]	−.01	−.02
General benefit increase	−.48	−.96
$100 minimum PIA	(1)	−.28
Revised contribution schedule	+.51	+1.25
Total effect of changes in bill	−.07	−.17
Actuarial balance under bill	−.15	−.25

[1] This change not included in this version of the bill.

[2] Includes the following: for both versions, child's benefits for children disabled at ages 18 to 21; workmen's compensation offset based on 100 percent of "average current earnings"; and reduced widower's benefit at age 60; for House version only elimination of support requirement for divorced wife's and widow's benefits; for Senate version only, disabled-child 7 years reentitlement; broaden definition of adopted child; and benefits to children supported by grandparents.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS

man from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS) is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I want to take time first to thank my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. VANIK), for all of his valuable assistance in trying to help me work out, along with other Members who would have been on the conference committee, these many knotty problems that we would have if we went to conference. His assistance is appreciated. And I am sure if we were in conference and could be in communication with the gentleman with respect to each of the 295 amendments that the Senate adopted to the bill, raising the size of the bill from 158 pages initially to an even 400 pages, that we could get some very valuable direction from the gentleman in making decisions as to what the House conferees should be expected to do on each of these amendments.

How long this would take, however, insofar as receiving that consultation and advice and then making a decision on the part of those of us who would be the conferees, I do not know. But I think the gentleman has been in the Congress long enough, I think he has been on the Committee on Ways and Means long enough—maybe he has not attended enough conferences to know—that it is humanly impossible within a short period of time to go to conference, hand pick four or five things out of a bill that the gentleman wants us to have, and come back with those four or five things, and turn down the remainder in the conference and get the other side to agree.

You know, a conference is a compromise between representatives of this body and of the other body. I have never known of a time when the other body just capitulated on the basis of suggestions that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) and I, and other House conferees would say what we wanted on the House side, because invariably they tell us that Senator So-and-So has a most important amendment in this bill, and we just could not go back to the Senate without Senator So-and-so's amendment adopted in the conference "for fear that he would engage in what is referred to over there as 'unlimited discussion' on the weaknesses of the conference report without 'my' provision in it."

That has happened invariably with respect to every one of these so-called Christmas tree bills that the House has been presented with over the years, usually before Christmas, you understand, Mr. Speaker, but this one did not pass the Senate until December 29.

Actually, there were so many errors in it after passage in the other body that it actually took two prints and two revisions by the enrolling clerks, or whoever does it, in order to put the bill in some form that they could submit to the House. It has taken over 2 working days of the Government Printing Office and the enrolling clerks in the Senate to get out this 400-page document for the House. Now, nobody knows yet whether it is perfect or not, even as far as the clerical condition is concerned, but we do know we did not get it until today.

And as I look at my calendar it seems to me that today is the 31st day of December, is it not?

Now, I took the occasion this afternoon, after I received the print—because of the interest of my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, in something being done, and also my own interest—just to run through some of these things, and see just what the Senate had done that he, on yesterday, recommended so quickly when he sent a letter to everybody in the House saying that he acknowledged that these were good amendments, and stating in the first paragraph of his letter to all of his dear colleagues, dated December 31:

Today the House will receive—

And it did not, but he said it would—the Senate-passed Social Security Act with a request for a conference. The Senate amendments to this bill merit adoption by the House en bloc. There is no need for a conference and delay.

Now, I hope my friend has changed his mind, because there are provisions within the Senate bill that my friend fought in the House Committee on Ways and Means when they were being discussed. For example, my friend would not be for a suggestion that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare be directed to levy against any and all property that any person might have who happened to owe money to the medicare program. Surely not.

The gentleman opposed that in the Committee on Ways and Means, but the gentleman asked me yesterday to just proceed to take the bill with that kind of an amendment in it.

Another provision that my friend surely would not want is one in an effort to do, I think, a very implausible thing: subsidize employers to employ the hard core, giving a tax break of such nature that it is profitable to the employer to fire his long-time unionized members, and go to nothing but so-called hard-core employment.

That is one thing I have always been told by my friends in organized labor, that they feared and did not want to see happen in connection with any of these training programs.

Now that is another provision which, had I followed the gentleman's advice and taken the bill from the Speaker's table and adopted the Senate amendments engross or in block, we would have had in this bill.

But the most serious part of it all really is here again—the irresponsibility of the matter. And I say this advisedly. It makes one's patience wear thin, when we have this sort of situation on a bill which reaches us on December 31 in the afternoon, which has 295 amendments, covering 268 pages of new provisions, which we were asked to accept even before the language of the amendments was available.

One thing that has happened every time the Committee on Ways and Means has acted on social security, and I wish my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin, if I am wrong will correct me, the Committee on Ways and Means historically and certainly ever since I have been a member, and that goes back to 1942, has studiously acted to prevent this fund from ever becoming actuarially unsound.

We have never allowed such a bill to pass with our support even though every time, I may say without exception, we have had to patch it up in conference to prevent Senate amendments from making it actuarially unsound. We presented a bill to the President, which was sound, and we could say to the American people that it was actuarially sound, and we have maintained the integrity of the congressional position that you may rely with certainty upon these monthly payments when you are in retirement.

This bill, as we have it before us, is out of balance by 0.25 percent of payroll. Now that does not sound like very much does it? But what does 0.25 percent of payroll represent in dollars? That represents over $1 billion a year. We do not have enough in the fund to run the risk of spending more money within the life of the fund—more money than we can take in on an actuarial basis.

Now I could ask the gentleman to help me with respect to extending a lot of these other provisions, but I am not going to because I know now that my friend does not want us to take all of this. He has had a chance to know more about what is in the bill—and I am not criticizing him. I know that he has this zeal to help people. I have it myself. But if he will be patient with me and not be too anxious, and will let me go over some of these things with him and advise with him ahead of time, I may be able to help him to avoid making a mistake in this area because I have had some experience that he has not had an opportunity to have that I am sure my friend could use.

What I am talking about is this.

No one has spent more time, in my opinion, working in this field in the effort to help people than the membership of our committee, in total, over all of these many years. I know I have spent a lot of time thinking about this. I have been proud of the fact that the benefits under social security have risen; and that the fund has grown more; the program has meant more during the period of time I have been on the committee, and may I say even during the period of time I have been chairman of the committee, than in all of the history of the program theretofore. I have taken great pride in that. It is a pleasure for me to have been the author of so many of the bills that have helped the program to go in this direction.

But I urge my friends who are petitioning me through the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. VANIK) to be a little patient with us—and I know that we will not do all that they ask of us, and I say that in all frankness—but I have a lot more optimism about the whole operation than my friend has. I am not a pessimist like he is.

I have said, and the gentleman from Wisconsin has said, and every member of the Committee on Ways and Means with whom I have discussed the matter has agreed with me that there will be reported from the Committee on Ways and Means as soon as possible after we reconvene a bill which will provide social security benefit increases across-the-board retroactive to January 1. The benefits in this bill would go into effect then.

It would be my intention that the bill would provide for those things that the House provided for in the social security measure insofar as outside earnings are concerned. We cannot go to the $2,400, without making our bill as actuarily unsound as the Senate bill is, except that we should increase taxes—and I do not know whether we want to do that or not—but what I would like to do is to report back a bill without a whole lot of discussion and a whole lot of divisiveness on the part of the committee, as quickly as we can. In my opinion, hearings are necessary, I am sure my friend would agree. I think if we do that and make such adjustments as we want to with respect to the percentage across-the-board increase in benefits and let the House know that the bill that it voted on last year is similar to the bill that we are asking it to vote on next year with these exceptions that we will describe, the bill would go through by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. FOLEY). The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

(By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin, Mr. MILLS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. MILLS. I thank the gentleman.

The bill could pass by unanimous consent, in all probability. There is no reason why we cannot do it by Lincoln's Birthday, if we get the House organized. I would like to repeat: if we get the House organized in time. I, of course, do not know whether we can do it. I do not know what the caucus is going to impose upon us in that respect. They may make it impossible for us, if we are not careful, to organize the House in a short period of time. It may take us the month of February. But if it does not, we can, as the Ways and Means Committee, meet and report this bill out, in my opinion, in a short time at the most and have it passed.

So I say I am far more optimistic than my friend from Ohio is. I am surprised that he is so pessimistic, and I hope he will not go home and go to bed tonight without that degree of optimism about this that I have.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I think there are others who share the chairman's optimism, and certainly there are people who are as concerned about the welfare of these people as is the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Arkansas, or myself. I refer to the National Council of Senior Citizens, Inc.

If the chairman would permit, I would like to call to the attention of the gentleman from Ohio a letter that they sent to the chairman of the committee and also to myself as the ranking member, and this was done some time ago, acknowledging the impracticality of going to a conference.

Certainly, if the proposition the gentleman suggested yesterday had been presented, they would have been equally shocked—the idea that we should just accept the Senate amendments en bloc. I could not help but be breathless at the preposterousness of such a proposition in abdicating the responsibilities of the House and the responsibilities of the Ways and Means Committee.

Now today the gentleman presents us with a new proposition, and that is to follow this very selective method.

But let me read what the National Council of Senior Citizens wrote to the chairman and myself with respect to the matter at hand:

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF SENIOR CITIZENS, INC.,
Washington, D.C., December 23, 1970.

Hon. WILBUR D. MILLS,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR WILBUR: This morning's press carried a story to the effect that you and Congressman Byrnes had issued a joint statement dealing with the practical impossibility of any House-Senate Conference completing action during this session on H.R. 17550, even in the unlikely event that the Senate could act on this legislation between now and the end of this Congress.

Let me say that we in the National Council of Senior Citizens were relieved to learn of this position taken by you and the ranking minority member. We have been concerned during the last several weeks lest the Senate might be pushed by the time factor into some hasty action on this complex and far-reaching piece of legislation and that a House-Senate Conference would be confronted with the task of reconciling the two measures made enormously more complex by all of the changes made in the bill as reported by the Senate Finance Committee. It is our view that the position that you and Congressman Byrnes have taken and your making the position public represents a responsible approach to the problem at this stage and we are grateful for it.

We were glad to note also that the statement as reported indicated your readiness to consider improvements in the Social Security and Welfare programs early in the first session of the new Congress and that you expected that increases in Social Security benefits would be made retroactive to January 1. If you are successful in these efforts, the elderly will not have suffered any overall loss of benefits, though so many of them are living on the very edge of the margin that even delays in receiving benefit increases are very serious. Any such delay, however, would not be nearly as harmful to the elderly of this country as the effects of hasty and ill-considered legislation might be.

In connection with the new proposals in benefits, we hope that the Ways and Means Committee will recognize that since the very modest increase of five percent passed the House early this year, it has already been used up by the effects of the inflationary rise in the cost of living which hits the elderly on fixed incomes the hardest. We would urge therefore that as you approach this problem in the new year you would consider substantially greater increases in the benefit schedules than those in the House-passed bill of 1970.

With the season's best wishes, I am Sincerely yours,
NELSON H. CRUIKSHANK,
President.

That is the position the Chairman is taking, and it is the position I have taken, that we are here dealing with a trust we have that involves the future floor of protection for all the older people and the people who are working today, and that 20-some million who are dependent on this system. We cannot take risky action, we cannot take precipitous action, we cannot take ill-considered action if we are going to do justice by the rights of these people and their dependents under this system.

I compliment the chairman with respect to the position he has taken in our dealing with this legislation and with respect to the bill as it has come over from the Senate.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say I never intended to imply that what the other body prepared for us was a perfect bill. We have had many imperfect bills sent to us from the other body. There has been the trade bill, that included oil quotas and everything else under the sun that could be hooked onto it. I know neither the distinguished Chairman nor the distinguished ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee can tell me and assure this House that the social security bill will not again be used as a delivery system for the kind of conglomerate legislation that could not pass this House on its own.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

(On request of Mr. VANIK, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MILLS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say I have always supported the integrity of this fund. As a matter of fact, I opposed the language of the House bill, and I cannot tell the gentleman right now whether it is in the Senate bill, the language reducing the tax rate or suspending the increase that was already provided in the law to take effect January 1.

And by that very provision they have diverted over $40 billion out of the trust fund during the next 10 years. I opposed that diversion in the House bill, as the gentleman knows.

I just want to say in closing on this point that it is not my patience that is at issue, and it is not the patience of our distinguished Chairman of the Ways and Means Commttee that is at issue, but it is the patience of the 26 million people plus the great body of other people that are affected by the other provisions of what the Senate has suggested in the four proposals I have made.

I certainly hope, with every hope that I can muster, that what we do next year will approach the high degree of service and accomplishments that is suggested by the four proposals I have asked the House Ways and Means Committee to adopt.

Mr. MILLS. If I have a minute or two left, I will say to the gentleman I do not like his fourth proposal either, because the House proposal of providing $220 to the couple as a minimum payment is better to me than the Senate's providing $200 per couple, but the gentleman will have a chance to vote further in the committee on it if he wants. I will not vote for it. I will vote for the more liberal provision the House will provide. I hope my friend from Ohio, on more reflection, will also.

But what I want to get my friend to understand—and I had thought the gentleman had been in Congress long enough never to accept a proposal from the other body with respect to a bill this big, to understand that never should anybody take such a package, and never recommend to one's colleagues again that the amendments should be taken en bloc until the gentleman himself has had a chance to study them and read them.

Never in my years of dealing with the Senate have I ever known that body to produce anything and send it here, never have I ever had to go to conference with them on something that I have taken en bloc. I have never done it. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he has ever known of a major product coming from that body which we have had to meet on that he would take en bloc?

This is what I want to caution my friend about, because I do not want him to make a mistake again if he stays here—and I think he will, because he is a valuable and able Member—but I caution my friend, the gentleman, just do not make that mistake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MILLS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. VANIK. I just want to say I certainly hope that the distinguished chairman and the ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee and other Members of this House will help us adopt rules that will make it possible for the other Members of this body better to see a bill that they vote on that is reported out of a conference.

I have to go to the Speaker's desk to read the amendments, because under the archaic procedure under which we operate today a conference report coming over from the other body is almost secret to most of the Members of the House. They have no way of knowing totally what is going on in the legislative process, not only at this stage of a legislative session but also at any stage of a legislative session.

Mr. MILLS. Would my friend yield back to me?

Mr. VANIK. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. Now, do not castigate us any more about conference reports and things like that.

I have never brought up a conference report during the time I have been chairman of the committee which has not been printed and available to every Member of the House who wanted to get it before it was ever considered. All a Member has to do is to ask for it and read it.

The gentleman asked me, though, yesterday, to take a bill that was not even over here, which had not even been printed by the Government Printing Office, and to accept all the amendments en bloc. It did not become available to anyone until today. But the gentleman sent his letter out yesterday.

If the gentleman wants to criticize us about conference reports, do not do that any more, please.

Mr. VANIK. I want to point out that no Member of this House had access to that volume prepared by the other body unless he went to that desk. I believe the rules ought to be changed.

Mr. MILLS. It was not there. What I am trying to tell the gentleman is that the engrossed copy arrived today—I repeat, today—at the Speaker's desk, and I could not get a copy of this until today, which represents the bill as amended by the Senate, and the ink is not even dry on it now. No one could get a copy because it was not in print.

Mr. VANIK. I want to point out to my distinguished chairman, I thought the report would be delivered the day before. They personally told me in the other body it would be delivered.

Mr. MILLS. What I am trying to caution my friend—and to get my friend to see the wisdom of my advice—is not to send out a letter until he has had an opportunity to analyze and to know what is in the proposition he is asking the House to take. That is all I ask. He should not have sent out the letter on the basis of the bill having been sent to the House. He should have sent out his letter, in my opinion, on the basis of an actual examination and an indepth study of the amendments, because now I do not know whether in the future I want to go along with his recommendations that I do something or not, because I just will not know how far into the subject he has gone. That is what worries me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MILLS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VANIK. I just want to point out to the distinguished chairman that no Member of this House had access to this bill at all until it was brought to the Speaker's desk. In my letter I assumed it was going to be brought over yesterday. That is the reason why the language was in the letter. But that is only a small part of the controversy I raise today.

Mr. MILLS. Pardon me, but there is no controversy between the gentleman and me. We are both trying to do the same thing, to help the old people.

Mr. VANIK. I just want to say, in concluding my remarks, I certainly hope and trust that the goals we both aspire for and aim for with respect to our social security program will be adopted in time next session to make it a realistic and early payout to the 26 million people who are involved some time before April 1.

Mr. MILLS. I just want the gentleman to be optimistic, to be in the committee, like he is, and to see to it that it is done. But be optimistic about it, I say to my friend.

Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CORMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I notice in the proposal of the gentleman from Ohio we are dealing with two subject matters, although both deal with the old people. One is the social security benefit and the other is public assistance.

I understand from the chairman that we may move rather rapidly into this whole field. It is my own feeling that when we talk about public assistance, people who are poor and may be hungry, we are talking about people who are too old to work, too sick to work, and too young to work. Am I to anticipate we will take care of all those people at the same time, since there are little resources in the States to pay their portion of the cost of this?

It seems we must not exclude any portion of the poor when we finally decide what the Federal Government wants to do and what we will attempt to get the States to do.

Mr. MILLS. I will state to the gentleman that if I had not already made that observation, I should have done so. We do not want just a social security bill. What we would want, if I could have my way in the matter, would be a combination of such matters as we have been talking about; namely, social security amendments, medicare amendments, medicaid amendments, welfare amendments, which would include the AFDC program and any changes in that area, and also your adult assistance, which applies to the aged, to the disabled, and to the blind, so that we will have a complete package in one bill.

Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the chairman. But I would rather, when we look at this total picture of assistance, believe the first thing involved is what the beneciaries are to get and how much out of the total amount of resources will be devoted to these programs; how much the Federal Government is going to put in the pot and how much the State and local governments will put in.

Further, with regard to the Federal Government contribution, it comes in two forms. One form is general funds and the other form is from social security. We are always tempted to raise it to a rather high level, the minimum of social security, depending upon public assistance, but in truth if you do that you then cut back on the amount of money you have to give as benefits to social security recipients who have paid a substantial amount of money over a long period of time. So, in truth you rob the workers to obtain the expenditures for the benefits you might otherwise not have.

Mr. MILLS. I think the gentleman from California is eminently correct.

Mr. Speaker, let me say this in conclusion: I regret that I had to conclude, along with the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES), because of the time elements involved, that it would be an idle gesture and that it would be impossible for us to accomplish anything by going to conference. Therefore, you have to conclude that it would have been inadvisable to take the bill from the Speaker's table and engage in an idle gesture of asking unanimous consent for it to go to conference and die in the conference. I would rather that we not go through any such idle gesture here but recognize, all of us, just because we may at this particular session of the 91st Congress have lost a battle, it does not mean we have lost the war. I have received letters and telegrams from a number of organizations representing our older citizens commending us on our decision on this matter. There will be another Congress either on January 4 or January 21 or sometime next year—the beginning of the 92d Congress—and I can assure all of my colleagues, as I have said to my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. VANIK), with reference to the timing of this bill, it is my intention to move the bill as quickly as is possible and I have no thought of letting anything that might develop interfere with the carrying out of that purpose insofar as I can control it. Now, certainly, I know that my friend has confidence in me, as I have in him, and I know I can join him and I know he joins me in wishing a very happy New Year to all of those who are here as well as our colleagues who are not here, but certainly to those who have remained here long enough to hear the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Arkansas settle this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

1ST SESSION

S. 2986

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER 2, 1969

Mr. SCOTT (for himself, Mr. BROOKE, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. HANSEN, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. PROUTY, Mr. SCHWEIKER, and Mr. STEVENS) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Finance

A BILL

To authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, with the following table of contents, may be cited as the "Family Assistance Act of 1969".

FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress hereby finds and declares that—

(1) the present federally assisted welfare program provides benefits which vary widely throughout the country and which are unconscionably low in many States;

(2) the program for needy families with children is often administered in ways which are costly, inefficient, and degrading to personal dignity, and is characterized by intolerable incentives for family breakup, by inadequate encouragements to and opportunities for those on the welfare rolls to enter job training and employment so that they may become self-supporting, and by the inequitable exclusion from assistance of working families in poverty, especially families headed by a male;

(3) the growth of the welfare rolls threatens the fiscal stability of the States and the Federal-State partnership; and

(4) in the light of the harm to individual and family development and well-being caused by lack of income adequate to sustain a decent level of life, and the consequent damage to the human resources of the entire Nation, the Federal Government has a positive interest and responsibility in assuring the correction of these problems.

(b) It is therefore the purpose of this Act to fulfill the responsibility of the Federal Government to expand the training and employment incentives and opportunities, including necessary child care services, for those public assistance recipients who are members of needy families with children and who can become self-supporting; to provide a more adequate level and quality of living through income support and services for dependent persons and families who, through no fault of their own, require public assistance; to provide this financial assistance in a manner designed to strengthen family life and to establish more nearly uniform national standards of eligibility and aid; and to move to greater assumption by the Federal Government of the financial burden of these activities.

TITLE I—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

SEC. 101. Title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601, et seq.) is amended by adding after part C the following new parts:

"PART D—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 441. For the purposes of providing a basic level of financial assistance throughout the Nation to needy families with children, in a manner which will strengthen family life, encourage work training and self-support, and enhance personal dignity, there is authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year a sum sufficient to carry out this part.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"ELIGIBILITY

"SEC. 442. (a) Each family, as defined in section 445—

"(1) whose income, other than income which is excluded pursuant to section 443, is less than $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family plus $300 per year for each additional member, and

"(2) whose resources, other than resources excluded pursuant to section 444, are less than $1,500, shall, in accordance with and subject to the other provisions of this title, be paid a family assistance benefit.

"AMOUNT

"(b) The family assistance benefit for a family shall be payable at the rate of $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family plus $300 per year for each additional member thereof, reduced by the amount of income, not excluded pursuant to section 443, of the members of the family.

"PUERTO RICO, THE VIRGIN ISLANDS, AND GUAM

"(c) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 464.

"PERIOD FOR DETERMINATION OF BENEFITS

"(d) (1) A family's eligibility for and its amount of family assistance benefits shall be determined for each quarter of a calendar year. Such determination shall be made on the basis of the Secretary's estimate of the family's income for such quarter, after taking into account income for a preceding period and any modifications in income which are likely to occur on the basis of changes in conditions or circumstances. Eligibility for and the amount of benefits of a family for any quarter shall be redetermined at such time or times as may be provided by the Secretary, such redetermination to be effective prospectively.

"(2) The Secretary shall by regulation prescribe the cases in which and extent to which the amount of a family assistance benefit for any quarter shall be reduced by reason of the time elapsing since the beginning of such quarter and before the date of filing of the application for the benefit.

"(3) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which income received in one period (or expenses incurred in one period in earning income) shall, for purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits, be considered as received (or incurred) in another period or periods.

"SPECIAL LIMITS ON GROSS INCOME

"(e) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the circumstances under which the gross income from a trade or business (including farming), will be considered sufficiently large to make such family ineligible for such benefits.

"INCOME

"EXCLUSIONS FROM INCOME

"SEC. 443. (a) In determining the income of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) subject to limitations (as to amount or otherwise) prescribed by the Secretary, the earned income of each child in the family who is, as determined by the Secretary under regulations, a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment;

"(2) (A) the total unearned income of all members of a family which is, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, too inconsequential, or received too infrequently or irregularly, to be included, and (B) subject to limitations prescribed by the Secretary any earned income which, as determined in accordance with such criteria, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included;

"(3) an amount of earned income of a member of the family equal to all, or such part (and according to such schedule) as the Secretary may prescribe, of the cost incurred by such member for child care which the Secretary deems necessary to securing or continuing in manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, employment, or self-employment;

"(4) the first $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods) of the total of earned income (not excluded by the preceding clauses of this section) of all members of the family plus one-half of the remainder thereof;

"(5) food stamps or any other assistance which is based on need and furnished by any State or political subdivision of a State or any Federal agency or by any private charitable agency or organization (as determined by the Secretary);

"(6) allowances under section 432(a);

"(7) any portion of a scholarship or fellowship received for use in paying the cost of tuition and fees at any educational (including technical or vocational education) institution;

"(8) home produce of a member of the family utilized by the household for its own consumptiton; and

"(9) one-half of all unearned income (not excluded by the preceding clauses of this subsection) of all members of the family

The preceding provisions of this subsection shall not apply to veterans' pensions or to payments to farmers for price support, diversion, or conservation. For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, see section 464.

"MEANING OF EARNED AND UNEARNED INCOME

"(b) For purposes of this part—

"(1) earned income shall include only—

"(A) remuneration for employment, other than remuneration to which section 209 (b), (c), (d), (f), or (k) applies;

"(B) net earnings from self-employment, as defined in section 211 other than the second and third sentences following clause (C) of subsection (a) (9) and other than clauses (A), (C), and (E) of paragraph (2) and paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), of subsection (c);

"(2) unearned income shall include among other things—

"(A) any payments received as an annuity, pension, retirement, or disability benefit, including veteran's or workmen's compensation and old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, railroad retirement, and unemployment benefits;

"(B) prizes and awards;

"(C) the proceeds of any life insurance policy;

"(D) gifts (cash or otherwise), support and alimony payments, and inheritances; and

"(E) rents, dividends, interest, and royalties.

"RESOURCES

"EXCLUSIONS FROM RESOURCES

"SEC. 444. (a) In determining the resources of a family there shall be excluded:

"(1) the home, household goods, and personal effects; and

"(2) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion.

"DISPOSITION OF RESOURCES

"(b) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to the period or periods of time within which, and the manner in which, various kinds of property must be disposed of in order not to be included in determining the family's eligibility for family assistance benefits. Any portion of the family's benefits paid for such period or periods shall be conditioned on such disposal.

"MEANING OF FAMILY AND CHILD

"COMPOSITION OF FAMILY

"SEC. 445. (a) Two or more individuals—

"(1) who are related by blood, marriage, or adoption,

"(2) who are living in a place of residence maintained by one or more of them as his or her own home,

"(3) who are residents of the United States, and

"(4) at least one of whom is a child who is not married to another of such individuals, shall be regarded as a family for purposes of this part and parts A, C, and E.

"DEFINITION OF CHILD

"(b) For purposes of this part and parts C and E, the term 'child' means an individual who is (1) under the age of eighteen or (2) under the age of twenty-one and (as determined by the Secretary under regulations) a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment.

"MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

"(c) If an individual is in the Armed Forces of the United States, then, for purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of family assistance benefits under this part, (1) he shall not be regarded as a member of a family, and (2) the spouse and children of such individual, and such other individuals living in the same place of residence as such spouse and children as may be specified in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, shall not be considered members of a family.

"DETERMINATION OF FAMILY RELATIONSHIPS

"(d) In determining whether an individual is related by blood, marriage, or adoption, appropriate State law, as determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, shall be applied.

"INCOME AND RESOURCES OF NONCONTRIBUTING ADULT

"(e) For purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of family assistance benefits for any family there shall be excluded the income and resources of any individual, other than a child or a parent of a child (or a spouse of a child or parent), which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is not available to other members of the family; and for such purposes, any such individual shall not be considered a member of such family.

"RECIPIENTS OF AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED INELIGIBLE

"(f) If an individual is receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI, or if his needs are taken into account in determining the need of another person receiving such aid, then, for the period for which such aid is received, such individual shall not be regarded as a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the family assistance benefits of the family.

"PAYMENTS AND PROCEDURES

"PAYMENTS OF BENEFITS

"SEC. 446. (a) (1) Family assistance benefits shall be paid at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary determines will best effectuate the purposes of this title.

"(2) Payment of the family assistance benefit of any family may be made to any one or more members of the family.

"(3) The Secretary may by regulation establish ranges of incomes within which a single amount of family assistance benefit shall apply.

"OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

"(b) Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of family assistance benefits has been paid with respect to any family, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments of the family or by recovery from or payment to any one or more of the individuals who are or were members thereof. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with respect to a family with a view to avoiding penalizing members of the family who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this part, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration of this part.

"HEARINGS AND REVIEW

"(c) (1) The Secretary shall provide reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any individual who is or claims to be a member of a family and is dissatisfied with any determination under this part with respect to eligibility of the family for family assistance benefits, the number of members of the family, or the amount of the benefits.

"(2) Final determination of the Secretary after such hearings shall be subject to judicial review as provided in section 205(g) to the same extent as the Secretary's final determinations under section 205.

"PROCEDURES; PROHIBITION OF ASSIGNMENTS

"(d) The provisions of sections 206 and 207 and subsections (a), (d), (e), and (f) of section 205 shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as they apply in the case of title II.

"APPLICATIONS AND FURNISHING OF INFORMATION BY FAMILIES

"(e) (1) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to families or members thereof with respect to the filing of applications, the furnishing of other data and material, and the reporting of events and changes in circumstances, as may be necessary to determine eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits.

"(2) In order to encourage prompt reporting of events and changes in circumstances relevant to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, and more accurate estimates of expected income or expenses by members of families for purposes of such eligibility and amount of benefits, the Secretary may prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which—

"(A) failure to so report or delay in so reporting, or

"(B) inaccuracy of information which is furnished by the members and on which the estimates of income or expenses for such purposes are based, will result in treatment as overpayments of all or any portion of payments of such benefits for the period involved.

"FURNISHING OF INFORMATION BY OTHER AGENCIES

"(f) The head of any Federal agency shall provide such information as the Secretary needs for purposes of determining eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, or verifying other information with respect thereto. The Secretary may from time to time pay to the head of such agency, in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be agreed upon, the cost of providing such information.

"REGISTRATION AND REFERRAL OF FAMILY MEMBERS FOR MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 447. (a) Every individual who is a member of a family which is found to be eligible for family assistance benefits, other than a member to whom the Secretary finds clause (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), or (6) of subsection (b) applies, shall register for manpower services, training, and employment with the local public employment office of the State as provided by regulations of the Secretary of Labor. If and for so long as any such individual is found by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to have failed (after a reasonable period of time), without good cause as determined by the Secretary of Labor, to so register, he shall not be regarded as a member of a family but his income which would otherwise be counted under this part as income of a family shall be so counted; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for family assistance benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for purposes of determination of the amount of such benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(b) An individual shall not be required to register pursuant to subsection (a) if the Secretary determines that such individual is:

"(1) ill, incapacitated, or of an advanced age;

"(2) a mother or other relative of a child under the age of six who is caring for such child;

"(3) the mother, or other female caretaker of a child, if the father or another adult male relative is in the home and not excluded by clauses (1), (2), (4), or (5) of this subsection;

"(4) a child;

"(5) one whose presence in the home on a substantially continuous basis is required because of the illness or incapacity of another member of the household;

"(6) working full time, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary of Labor.

An individual who would, but for the preceding sentence, be required to register pursuant to part A, may, if he wishes, register as provided in such subsection.

"(c) The Secretary shall make provision for the furnishing of child care services in such cases and for so long as he deems appropriate in the case of individuals registered pursuant to subsection (a) who are, pursuant to such registration, participating in manpower services, training, or employment.

"(d) In the case of any member of a family receiving family assistance benefits who is not required to register pursuant to subsection (a) because of such member's disability or handicap, the Secretary shall make provision for referral of such member to the appropriate State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act.

"DENIAL OF BENEFITS IN CASE OF REFUSAL OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, OR EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 448. For purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits under this part, an individual who has registered as required under section 447 (a) shall not be regarded as a member of a family, but his income which would otherwise be counted as income of the family under this part shall be so counted, if and for so long as he has been found by the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing, to have refused without good cause to participate in suitable manpower services, training, or employment, or to have refused without good cause to accept suitable employment in which he is able to engage which is offered through the public employment offices of the State, or is otherwise offered by an employer if the offer of such employer is determined by the Secretary of Labor, after notification by such employer or otherwise, to be a bona fide offer of employment; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for the purposes of determination of the amount of its benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"TRANSFER OF FUNDS FOR ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS

"SEC. 449. The Secretary shall, pursuant to and to the extent provided by agreement with the Secretary of Labor, pay to the Secretary of Labor amounts which he estimates would be paid as family assistance benefits under this part to individuals participating in public or private employer compensated on-the-job training under a program of the Secretary of Labor if they were not participating in such training.

Such amounts shall be available to pay the costs of such programs.

"PART E—STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"PAYMENTS UNDER TITLES IV, V, XVI, AND XIX CONDITIONED ON SUPPLEMENTATION

"SEC. 451. In order for a State to be eligible for payments pursuant to title V, XVI, or XIX or, part A or B of this title, with respect to expenditures for any quarter beginning on or after the date this part becomes effective with respect to such State, it must have in effect an agreement with the Secretary under which it will make supplementary payments, as provided in this part, to any family other than a family in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed.

"AMOUNT OF SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

"SEC. 452. (a) Eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments under the agreement with any State under this part shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be determined by application of the provisions of, and rules and regulations under, sections 442 (a) (2) and (d), 443, 444, 445, 446 (to the extent the Secretary deems appropriate), 447, and 448, and by application of the standard for determining need under the plan of such State as in effect for July 1969 and complying with the requirements for approval under part A as in effect on such date (but subject to such maximums and percentage reductions as were imposed under such plan on the amount of aid paid and, then, with the resulting amount of the supplementary payment to any individual further reduced by the family assistance benefit payable under part D with respect to him).

"(b) In applying the provisions of section 443 for purposes of supplementary payments pursuant to an agreement under this part—

"(1) in the case of earned income to which clause (4) of subsection (a) of such section 443 applies, the amount to be disregarded shall be $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods), plus—

"(A) one-third of the portion of the remainder of earnings which does not exceed twice the amount of the family assistance benefits that would be payable to the family if it had no income (thereby resulting in reduction of the supplementary payment by one-sixth of that portion of such remainder of the earnings), plus

"(B) one-fifth (or more if the Secretary by regulation so prescribes) of the balance of the earnings (thereby resulting in further reduction of the supplementary payment by four-fifths, or proportionately less if the Secretary has prescribed such a regulation, of that balance of the earnings) ; and

"(2) in the case of income to which clause (9) of subsection (a) of such section 443 applies, the amount to be disregarded shall be—

"(A) one-third of such income which does not exceed twice the amount of the family assistance benefits that would be payable to the family if it had no income (thereby resulting in reduction of the supplementary payment by one-sixth of that portion of such income), plus

"(B) one-fifth (or more if the Secretary by regulation so prescribes) of the balance of such income (thereby resulting in further reduction of the supplementary payment by four-fifths, or proportionately less if the Secretary has prescribed such a regulation, of that balance of the income) ; and

(3) the family assistance benefit of a family payable under part D shall not be counted to any extent. For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 464.

"(c) The agreement with a State under this part shall—

"(1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State;

(2) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to carry out or supervise the carrying out of the agreement in the State;

"(3) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency carrying out the agreement to any individual whose claim for supplementary payments is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(4) provide (A) such methods of administration (including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods) as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the agreement in the State, and (B) for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff, with particular emphasis on the full- or part-time employment of recipients of supplementary payments and other persons of low income, as community services aides, in carrying out the agreement and for the use of nonpaid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that the State agency carrying out the agreement will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(6) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments to purposes directly connected with the administration of this title; and

"(7) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for supplementary payments shall have opportunity to do so, and that supplementary payments shall be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 453. (a) (1) The Secretary shall pay to any State which has in effect an agreement under this part for any fiscal year in the period ending with the close of the fifth full fiscal year for which this part is effective with respect to such State the excess of—

"(A) (i) the total of its payments for such year

pursuant to its agreement under this part which are required under section 452, plus (ii) the difference between (I) the total of the expenditures for such fiscal year under its plan approved under title XVI as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which would have been included as aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under the plan approved thereunder and in effect for July 1969, plus so much of the rest of such expenditures as are required (as determined by the Secretary) by reason of the amendments to such title made by the Family Assistance Act of 1969 and (II) the total of the amounts determined under section 1604 for such State with respect to such expenditures for such year, over

"(B) 90 per centum of the difference between (i) the total of the expenditures which would have been made as aid or assistance (excluding emergency assistance specified in section 406(e)(1)(A), foster care under section 408, expenditures for institutional services in intermediate care facilities referred to in section 1121, expenditures for repairs to homes referred to in section 1119, and aid or assistance in the form of medical care or any other type of remedial care) for such year under the plans of such State approved under titles I, IV (part A), X, XIV, and XVI and in effect in the month prior to the enactment of this part if they had continued in effect during such year and if they had included (if they did not already do so) payments to dependent children of unemployed fathers authorized by section 407 (as in effect on July 1, 1969), and (ii) the total of the amounts which would have been determined under sections 3, 403, 1003, 1403, and 1603, or under section 1118, of such State with respect to such expenditures for such year.

The Secretary may prescribe methods for determining the amounts referred to in clause (B) on the basis of estimates and trends in expenditures and other experience of the State for prior years.

"(2) The Secretary shall also pay to each such State an amount equal to 50 per centum of its administrative costs found necessary by the Secretary for carrying out its agreement.

"(b) Payments under subsection (a) shall be made at such time or times, in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in such installments as the Secretary may determine; and shall be made on such conditions as may be necessary to assure the carrying out of the purposes of this title.

"(c) In the case of any State with respect to which the amount determined under clause (A) of subsection (a) (1) for any year is less than 50 per centum of the difference referred to in clause (B) of such subsection for such year, such State shall pay to the Secretary, at such time or times and in such installments as he may prescribe, the sum by which such amount determined under clause (A) of subsection (a) (1) is less than such 50 per centum. If such State does not pay any part of such amount at the time or times prescribed, the Secretary shall withhold such part from sums to which the State is entitled under part A or B of this title or under title V, VXI, or XIX; but the amounts so withheld shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such part or title. The withholding of amounts pursuant to the preceding sentence shall be effected at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary may deem appropriate.

"FAILURE BY STATE TO COMPLY WITH AGREEMENT

"SEC. 454. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to a State with which he has an agreement under this part, finds that such State is failing to comply therewith, he shall withhold all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of the payments to which such State is otherwise entitled under part A or B of this title or under title V, XVI, or XIX; but the amounts so withheld shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such part or title. Such withholding shall be effected at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary may deem appropriate.

"PART F—ADMINISTRATION

"AGREEMENTS WITH STATES

"SEC. 461. (a) The Secretary may enter into an agreement with any State under which the Secretary will make, on behalf of the State, the supplementary payments provided for pursuant to part E or will perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon. In any such case, the agreement shall also provide for payment by the State to the Secretary of an amount equal to the supplementary payments the State would otherwise make under part E, less any payments which would be made to the State under section 453 (a), together with one-half of the additional cost of the Secretary involved in carrying out such agreement, other than the cost of making the payments.

"(b) The Secretary may also enter into an agreement with any State under which such State will make, on behalf of the Secretary, the family assistance benefit payments provided for under part D with respect to all or specified families in the State who are eligible for such benefits or will perform such other functions in connection with the administration of part D as may be agreed upon. The cost of carrying out any such agreement shall be paid to the State in advance or by way of reimbursement and in such installments as may be agreed upon.

"PENALTIES FOR FRAUD

"SEC. 462. The provisions of section 208, other than paragraph (a), shall apply with respect to benefits under part D and allowances under part C, of this title, to the same extent as they apply to payments under title II.

"REPORT, EVALUATION, RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATIONS, AND TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 463. (a) The Secretary shall make an annual report to the President and the Congress on the operation and administration of parts D and E, including an evaluation thereof in carrying out the purposes of such parts and recommendations with respect thereto. The Secretary is authorized to conduct evaluations directly or by grants or contracts of the programs authorized by such parts.

"(b) The Secretary is authorized to conduct, directly or by grants or contracts, research into or demonstrations of ways of better providing financial assistance to needy persons or of better carrying out the purposes of part D, and in so doing to waive any requirements or limitations in such part with respect to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits for such family, members of families, or groups thereof as he deems appropriate.

"(c) The Secretary is authorized to provide such technical assistance to States, and to provide, directly or through grants or contracts, for such training of personnel of States, as he deems appropriate to assist them in more efficiently and effectively carrying out their agreements under this part and part E.

"(d) In addition to funds otherwise available therefor, such portion of any appropriation to carry out part D or E as the Secretary may determine, but not in excess of one-half of 1 per centum thereof, shall be available to him to carry out this section.

"SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR PUERTO RICO, THE VIRGIN ISLANDS, AND GUAM

"Sec. 464. (a) In applying the provisions of sections 442 (a) and (b), 443 (a) (4), 452 (b) (1), 1603 (a) (1) and (b) (1), and 1604 (1) and (2) with respect to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the amounts to be used shall (instead of the $500, $300, and $1,500 in such section 442 (a) and (b) and section 1603 (a) (1), the $720 in section 443 (a) (4) and section 452 (b) (1), the $90 in section 1603 (b) (1), the $65 in section 1604 (2), and the $50 in section 1604 (1)) bear the same ratio to such $500, $300, $1,500, $720, $90, $65, and $50 as the per capita incomes of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, respectively, bear to the per capita income of that one of the fifty States which has the lowest per capita income; except that in no case may the amounts so used exceed such $500, $300, $1,500, $720, $90, $65, and $50.

"(b) (1) The amounts to be used under such sections in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam shall be promulgated by the Secretary between July 1 and September 30 of each even-numbered year, on the basis of the average per capita income of each State and of the United States for the most recent calendar year for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce. Such promulgation shall be conclusive for fiscal year beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation: Provided, That the Secretary shall promulgate such amounts as soon as possible after the enactment of this part, which promulgation shall be conclusive for 6 calendar quarters in the period beginning with the January 1 following the fiscal year in which this part is enacted, and ending with the close of the second June 30 thereafter.

"(2) The term 'United States', for purposes of paragraph (1) only, means the fifty States and the District of Columbia.

"(c) If the amounts which would otherwise be promulgated for any year for any of the three States referred to in subsection (a) would be lower than the amounts promulgated for such State for the immediately preceding period, the amounts for such fiscal year shall be increased to the extent of the difference; and the amounts so increased shall be the amounts promulgated for such year."

MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND CHILD CARE PROGRAMS

SEC. 102. Part C of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 630 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"PART C—MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND DAY CARE PROGRAMS FOR RECIPIENTS OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE OR SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFITS

"PURPOSE

"SEC. 430. The purpose of this part is to authorize provision, for individuals who are members of a family receiving benefits under part D or supplementary payments pursuant to part E, of manpower services, training, employment, and child care and related services necessary to train such individuals, prepare them for employment, and otherwise assist them in securing and retaining regular employment and having the opportunity for advancement in employment, to the end that needy families with children will be restored to self-supporting, independent, and useful roles in their communities.

"OPERATION OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

"SEC. 431. (a) The Secretary of Labor (hereinafter in this part referred to as the 'Secretary') shall, for each person registered pursuant to part D, in accordance with priorities prescribed by him, develop or assure the development of an employability plan describing the manpower services, training, and employment which the Secretary determines each person needs in order to enable him to become self-supporting and secure and retain employment and opportunities for advancement.

"(b) The Secretary shall, in accordance with the provisions of this part, establish and assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment programs in each State for persons registered pursuant to part D or receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E. The Secretary shall, through such programs, provide or assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities necessary to prepare such persons for and place them in regular employment, including such services and opportunities which the Secretary is authorized to provide under any other Act, and including counseling, testing, institutional and on-the-job training, work experience, upgrading, program orientation, relocation assistance (including grants, loans, and the furnishing of such services as will aid an involuntarily unemployed individual to relocate in an area where he may obtain suitable employment), incentives to public or private employers to hire and train these persons (including reimbursement for a limited period when an employee may not be fully productive), special work projects, job development, coaching, job placement and follow up services required to assist in securing and retaining employment and opportunities for advancement.

"ALLOWANCES FOR INDIVIDUALS UNDERGOING TRAINING

"SEC. 432. (a) (1) The Secretary shall pay to each individual who is a member of a family and is participating in manpower training under this part an incentive allowance of $30 per month. If such member or members of a family would (but for the receipt of payments pursuant to this title) be eligible in such month, under any other statute providing for manpower training, for allowances which in total would be in excess of the sum of the family assistance benefit and supplementary payments pursuant to part E payable with respect to such month to the family, the total of the incentive allowances per month under this section for such members shall be equal to such excess, or to $30 for each such member, whichever is greater.

"(2) The Secretary shall, in accordance with regulations, also pay, to any member of a family participating in manpower training under this part, allowances for transportation and other costs to him directly related to his participation in training.

"(3) The Secretary shall by regulation provide for such smaller allowances under this subsection as he deems appropriate for individuals in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

"(b) Such allowances shall be in lieu of allowances provided for participants in manpower training programs under any other Act.

"(c) Subsection (a) shall not apply to any member of a family who is participating in a program of the Secretary providing public or private employer compensated on-the-job training.

"DENIAL OF ALLOWANCES FOR REFUSAL TO UNDERGO TRAINING

"SEC. 433. (a) If and for so long as the Secretary determines that an individual who is a member of a family and has been required to register under part D for manpower training or employment has, without good cause, ceased to participate in manpower training under this part, no allowance under this part shall be payable to such individual.

"(b) The Secretary shall provide reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to any individual with respect to whom such a determination has been made.

"(c) Final determinations of the Secretary after such hearings shall be subject to judicial review as provided by section 205(g) for final determinations under title II, and the provisions of sections 205 (a), (d), (e), and (f), 206, and 207 shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as they apply to title II.

"UTILIZATION OF OTHER PROGRAMS

"SEC. 434. In providing the manpower training and employment services and opportunities required by this part the Secretary, to the maximum extent feasible, shall assure that such services and opportunities are provided in such manner, through such means, and using all authority available to him under any other Act (and subject to all duties and responsibilities thereunder) as will further the establishment of an integrated and comprehensive manpower training program involving all sectors of the economy and all levels of government and as will make maximum use of existing manpower and manpower related programs and agencies. To such end the Secretary may use the funds appropriated to him under this part to provide the programs required by this part through such other Act, to the same extent and under the same conditions as if appropriated under such other Act and in making use of the programs of other Federal,

State, or local agencies, public or private, the Secretary may reimburse such agencies for services rendered to persons under this part to the extent such services and opportunities are not otherwise available on a nonreimbursable basis.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"SEC. 435. The Secretary may issue such rules and regulations as he finds necessary to carry out the purposes of this part: Provided, That in developing policies and programs for manpower services, training, and employment, the Secretary shall first obtain the concurrence of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with regard to such policies and programs which are under the usual and traditional authority of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (including basic education, institutional training, health, child care and other supportive services, new careers and job restructuring in the health, education, and welfare professions, and work-study programs), and shall consult with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with regard to all such other policies and programs.

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 436. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for each fiscal year a sum sufficient for carrying out the purposes of this part (other than section 437), including payment of not to exceed (except in such cases as the Secretary may determine) 90 per centum of the cost of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities provided for individuals registered pursuant to section 447. The Secretary of Labor shall establish criteria to achieve an equitable apportionment among the States of Federal expenditures for carrying out the programs authorized by section 431. In developing these criteria the Secretary shall consider the number of registrations under section 447 and other relevant factors.

"CHILD CARE AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES

"SEC. 437. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization, for not to exceed (except in such cases as the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may determine) 90 per centum of the cost of projects for the provision of child care and related services, including necessary alteration, remodeling, and renovation of facilities, which may be necessary or appropriate in order to better enable an individual who has been registered pursuant to part D or is receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part or to enable a member of a family, which is or has been (within such period of time as the Secretary may prescribe) eligible for benefits under such part D or payments pursuant to such part E, to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part; or, with respect to the period prior to the date when part D becomes effective for a State, to better enable an individual receiving aid to families with dependent children, or whose needs are taken into account in determining the need of any one claiming or receiving such aid, to participate in manpower training or employment.

"(b) Such sums shall also be available to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization for evaluation, training of personnel, technical assistance or research or demonstration projects to determine more effective methods or providing any such care and other services.

"(c) To the extent permitted by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, the non-Federal share of the cost of any such project may be provided in the form of services or facilities.

"(d) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may provide, in any case in which a family is able to pay for part or all of the cost of day care or other services provided under a project assisted under this section, for payment by the family of such fees for the care or services as may be reasonable in the light of such ability.

"ADVANCE FUNDING

"SEC. 438. (a) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available under this part, appropriations for grants, contracts, or other payments with respect to individuals registered pursuant to section 447 are authorized to be included in the appropriation Act for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which they are available for obligation.

"(b) In order to effect a transition to the advance funding method of timing appropriation action, the amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply notwithstanding that its initial application will result in enactment in the same year (whether in the same appropriation Act or otherwise) of two separate appropriations, one for the then current fiscal year and one for the succeeding fiscal year.

"EVALUATION AND RESEARCH; REPORT TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 439. (a) The Secretary shall (jointly with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare) provide for the continuing evaluation of the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part, including their effectiveness in achieving stated goals and their impact on other related programs. The Secretary may conduct research regarding, and demonstrations of, ways to improve the effectiveness of the manpower training and employment programs so provided and may also conduct demonstrations of improved training techniques for upgrading the skills of the working poor. The Secretary may, for these purposes, contract for independent evaluations of and research regarding such programs or individual projects under such programs, and establish a data collection, processing, and retrieval system.

"(b) The Secretary shall report to the Congress on or before the end of each fiscal year (with the first such report being made on or before the July 1 following the first full year after the date on which part D becomes effective with respect to any States) on the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part."

ELIMINATION OF PRESENT PROVISIONS ON CASH ASSISTANCE FOR FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

SEC. 103. (a) Section 401 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601) is amended by striking out "financial assistance and" in the first sentence.

(b) Section 402(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 602) is amended by—

(1) striking out "aid and" in so much thereof as precedes clause (1);

(2) inserting, at the beginning of clause (1), "except to the extent permitted by the Secretary,";

(3) striking out clause (4);

(4) in clause (5) (B), striking out "recipients and other persons" and inserting in lieu thereof "persons" and striking out "providing services to applicants and recipients" and inserting in lieu thereof "providing services under the plan";

(5) striking out clauses (7) and (8);

(6) in clause (9), striking out "aid to families with dependent children" and inserting in lieu thereof "the plan";

(7) striking out clauses (10), (11), and (12);

(8) in clause (14), striking out "for each child and relative who receives aid to families with dependent children, and each appropriate individual (living in the same home as a relative and child receiving such aid whose needs are taken into account in making the determination under clause (7))" and inserting in lieu thereof "for each member of a family receiving assistance to needy families with children, each appropriate individual (living in the same home as such family) whose needs would be taken into account in determining the need of any such member under the State plan (approved under this part) as in effect prior to the enactment of part D, and each individual who would have been eligible to receive aid to families with dependent children under such plan" and striking out "such child, relative, and individual" and inserting in lieu thereof "such member or individual";

(9) striking out clause (15) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(15) (A) provide for the development of a program, for appropriate members of such families and such other individuals, for preventing or reducing the incidence of births out of wedlock and otherwise strengthening family life, and for implementing such program by assuring that in all appropriate cases family planning services are offered to them, but acceptance of family planning services provided under the plan shall be voluntary on the part of such members and individuals and shall not be a prerequisite to eligibility for or the receipt of any other service under the plan; and (B) to the extent that services provided under this clause or clause (14) are furnished by the staff of the State agency or the local agency administering the State plan in each of the political subdivisions of the State, for the establishment of a single organizational unit in such State or local agency, as the case may be, responsible for the furnishing of such services;"

(10) striking out "aid" in clause (16) and "aid to families with dependent children" in clause (17) (A) (i) and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance to needy families with children" and striking out "aid" in clause (17) (A) (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance";

(11) striking out clause (19);

(12) striking out "aid to families with dependent children in the form of foster care" in clause (20) and inserting in lieu thereof "payments for foster care"; striking out "dependent child or children with respect to whom aid is being provided under the State plan" in clause (21) (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "child or children with respect to whom assistance to needy families with children or foster care is being provided";

(13) striking out "aid is being provided under the plan of such other State" in clause (A) and clause (B) of clause (22) and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance to needy families with children or foster care payments are being provided in such other State";

(14) striking out clause (23) and striking out "; and" at the end of clause (22) and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

(c) Section 402 (b) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that he shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for services under it, a residence requirement which denies services or foster care payments with respect to any individual residing in the State."

(d) Such section 402 is further amended by striking out subsection (c) thereof.

(1) striking out "aid and services" and inserting in lieu thereof "services" in so much thereof as precedes paragraph (1);

(2) amending paragraph (1) to read:

"(1) an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as payments for foster care in accordance with section 408—

"(A) five-sixths of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditures as exceeds the product of $18 multiplied by the number of children receiving such foster care in such month; plus

"(B) the Federal percentage of the amount by which such expenditures exceeds the maximum which may be counted under subparagraph (A), not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to such month as exceeds the product of $100 multiplied by the number of children receiving such foster care for such month."

(3) striking out paragraph (2);

(4) in paragraph (3), striking out "in the case of any State," in so much thereof as precedes subparagraph (A), striking out in clause (i) of such subparagraph "or relative who is receiving aid under the plan, or to any other individual (living in the same home as such relative and child) whose needs are taken into account in making the determination under clause (7) of such section" and inserting in lieu thereof "receiving foster care or any member of a family receiving assistance to needy families with children or to any other individual (living in the same home as such family) whose needs would be taken into account in determining the need of any such member under the State plan approved under this part as in effect prior to the enactment of part D, striking out in clause (ii) of such subparagraph "child or relative who is applying for aid to families with dependent children or" and inserting in lieu thereof "member of a family" and striking out in such clause (ii) "likely to become an applicant for or recipient of such aid" and inserting in lieu thereof "likely to become eligible to receive such assistance";

(5) striking out the sentences of such subsection (a) which follow paragraph (5);

(f) Subsection (b) of such section 403 is amended by striking out "records showing the number of dependent children in the State and (C)" in paragraph (1) thereof and by striking out, in paragraph (2) thereof, "(A)" and everything beginning with ", and (B)" and all that follows down to but not including the period.

(g) Section 404 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 604) is amended by striking out "(a) In the case of any State plan for aid and services" and inserting in lieu thereof "In the case of any State plan for services" and by striking out subsection (b) thereof.

(h) Section 405 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 605) is repealed.

(i) Section 406 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 606) is amended by—

(1) striking out subsections (a) and (b) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(a) The term 'child' means a child as defined in section 445 (b).

"(b) The term 'needy families with children' means families who are receiving family assistance benefits under part D and who (1) are receiving supplementary payments under part E, or (2) would be eligible to receive aid to families with dependent children, under a State plan (approved under this part) as in effect prior to the enactment of part D, if the State plan had continued in effect and if it included assistance to dependent children of unemployed fathers pursuant to section 407 as it was in effect prior to such enactment; and 'assistance to needy families with children' means family assistance benefits under such part D, paid to such families."

(2) striking out subsection (c);

(3) in subsection (e) (1), striking out "living with any of the relatives specified in subsection (a) (1) in a place of residence maintained by one or more of such relatives as his or their own home" and inserting in lieu thereof "a member of a family (as defined in section 445 (a))" and striking out "because such child or relative refused" and inserting in lieu thereof "because such child or another member of such family refused".

(j) Section 407 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 607) is repealed.

(k) Section 408 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 608) is amended by—

(1) amending so much (including the heading) thereof as precedes subparagraph (1) of paragraph (b) to read as follows:

"FOSTER CARE

"SEC. 408. For purposes of this part—

"(a) foster care shall include only such care which is provided in behalf of a child (1) who would, except for his removal from the home of a family as a result of a judicial determination to the effect that continuation therein would be contrary to his welfare, be a member of such family receiving assistance to needy families with children, (2) whose placement and care are the responsibility of (A) the State or local agency administering the State plan approved under section 402, or (B) any other public agency with whom the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such State plan has made an agreement which is still in effect and which includes provision for assuring development of a plan, satisfactory to such State agency, for such child as provided in paragraph (f) (1) and such other provisions as may be necessary to assure accomplishment of the objectives of the State plan approved under section 402, (3) who has been placed in a foster family home or child-care institution as a result of such determination, and (4) who (A) received assistance to needy families with children in or for the month in which court proceedings leading to such determination were initiated, or (B) would have received such assistance to needy families with children in or for such month if application had been made therefor, or (C) in the case of a child who had been a member of a family (as defined in section 445(a)) within six months prior to the month in which such proceedings were initiated, would have received such assistance in or for such month if in such month he had been a member of (and removed from the home of) such a family and application had been made therefor;

"(b) but only if such care is provided—";

(2) in paragraph (b)(2), striking out "'aid to families with dependent children'" and inserting in lieu thereof "foster care" and striking out "such foster care" and inserting in lieu thereof "foster care".

(3) striking out subsection (c);

(4) striking out "aid" and inserting in lieu thereof "services" in subsection (e);

(5) in subsection (f)(1), striking out "relative specified in section 406(a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "family (as defined in section 445(a))"; and

(6) in subsection (f)(2), striking out "522" and inserting in lieu thereof "422" and striking out "part 3 of title V" and inserting in lieu thereof "part B of this title".

CHANGE IN HEADING

SEC. 104. (a) The heading of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601, et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE IV—FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS, STATE SUPPLEMENTAL PAYMENTS, WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAMS, AND GRANTS TO STATES FOR FAMILY AND CHILD WELFARE SERVICES".

(b) The heading of part A of such title IV is amended to read as follows:

"PART A—SERVICES TO NEEDY FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN".

TITLE II—AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SEC. 201. Title XVI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1381 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE XVI—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1601. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance to needy individuals who are sixty-five years of age or over, blind, or disabled and for the purpose of encouraging each State to furnish rehabilitation and other services to help such individuals attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year sums sufficient to carry out these purposes, The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States having State plans approved under section 1602.

"STATE PLANS FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AND SERVICE TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1602. (a) A State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled must—

"(1) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer or supervise the administration of the State plan;

"(2) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis (but the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of individuals employed in accordance with such methods);

"(3) provide for the training and effective use of social service personnel in the administration of the plan, for the furnishing of technical assistance to units of State government and of political subdivisions which are furnishing financial assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled, and for the development through research or demonstration projects of new or improved methods of furnishing assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled;

"(4) provide for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff (with particular emphasis on the full-time or part-time employment of recipients and other persons of low income as community service aides) in the administration of the plan and for the use of non-paid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants and recipients and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for aid under the plan shall have opportunity to do so and that such aid shall be furnished with reasonable promptness with respect to all eligible individuals;

"(6) provide for the use of a simplified statement, conforming to standards prescribed by the Secretary, to establish eligibility, and for adequate and effective methods of verification of eligibility of applicants and recipients through the use, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, of sampling and other scientific techniques;

"(7) provide that, except to the extent permitted by the Secretary with respect to services, the State plan shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them;

"(8) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(9) provide that, in determining whether an individual is blind, there shall be an examination by a physician skilled in the diseases of the eye or by an optometrist, whichever the individual may select;

"(10) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency to any individual whose claim for aid under the plan is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(11) provide for periodic evaluation of the operations of the State plan, not less often than annually, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, and the furnishing of annual reports of such evaluations to the Secretary together with any necessary modifications of the State plan resulting from such evaluations;

"(12) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(13) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants and recipients to purposes directly connected with the administration of the plan (consistent with section 618 of the Revenue Act of 1951);

"(14) provide, if the plan includes aid to or on behalf of individuals in private or public institutions, for the establishment or designation of a State authority or authorities which shall be responsible for establishing and maintaining standards for such institutions;

"(15) provide a description of the services which the State makes available to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain self-support or self-care, including a description of the steps taken to assure, in the provision of such services, maximum utilization of all available services that are similar or related;

"(16) provide for periodic evaluation of the operation of the plan by persons interested in or expert in matters related to assistance and services to the aged, blind, and disabled, including persons who are recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled; and

"(17) assure that, in administering the State plan and providing services thereunder, the State will observe priorities established by the Secretary and comply with such performance standards as the Secretary may, from time to time, establish.

Notwithstanding paragraph (1), if on January 1, 1962, and on the date on which a State submits (or submitted) its plan for approval under this title, the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title X was different from the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title I and the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title XIV, then the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of such plan approved under title X may be designated to administer or supervise the administration of the portion of the State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which relates to blind individuals and a separate State agency may be established or designated to administer or supervise the administration of the rest of such plan; and in such case the part of the plan which each such agency administers, or the administration of which each such agency supervises, shall be regarded as a separate plan for purposes of this title.

"(b) The Secretary shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) and in section 1603, except that he shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for aid under the plan—

"(1) an age requirement of more than sixty-five years;

"(2) any residency requirement which excludes any individual who resides in the State;

"(3) any citizen requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States;

"(4) any disability or age requirement which excludes any persons under a severe disability, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, who are eighteen years of age or older; or

"(5) any blindness or age requirement which excludes any persons who are blind as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary.

In the case of any State to which the provisions of section 344 of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1950 were applicable on January 1, 1962, and to which the sentence of section 1002(b) following paragraph (2) thereof is applicable on the date on which its State plan was or is submitted for approval under this title, the Secretary shall approve the plan of such State for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled for purposes of this title, even though it does not meet the requirements of section 1603 (a) if it meets all other requirements of this title for an approved plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled; but payments to the State under this title shall be made, in the case of any such plan, only with respect to expenditures thereunder which would be included as expenditures for the purposes of this title under a plan approved under this section without regard to the provisions of this sentence.

"DETERMINATION OF NEED

"SEC. 1603. (a) A State plan must provide that, in determining the need for aid under the plan, the State agency shall take into consideration any other income or resources of the individual claiming such aid as well as any expenses reasonably attributable to the earning of any such income; except that, in making such determination with respect to any individual—

"(1) the State agency shall not consider as resources (A) the home, household goods, and personal effects of the individual, (B) other personal or real property, the total value of which does not exceed $1,500, or (C) other property which as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion, but shall apply the provisions of section 442 (e) and regulations thereunder;

"(2) the State agency shall not consider the financial responsibility of any individual for any applicant or recipient unless the applicant or recipient is the individual's spouse, or the individual's child who is under the age of twenty-one or is blind or severely disabled;

"(3) if such individual is blind, the State agency (A) shall disregard the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half of earned income in excess of $85 per month, and (B) shall, for a period not in excess of twelve months, and may, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, disregard such additional amounts of other income and resources, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of such plan;

"(4) if the individual is not blind but is severely disabled, the State agency may disregard (A) not more than the first $20 of the first $80 per month of earned income plus one-half of the remainder thereof and (B) such additional amounts of other income and resources, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of the plan, but only with respect to the part or parts of such period during substantially all of which he is undergoing vocational rehabilitation;

"(5) if such individual has attained age sixty-five and is neither blind nor severely disabled, the State agency may disregard not more than the first $20 of the first $80 per month of earned income plus one-half of the remainder thereof.

"(b) A State plan must also provide that—

"(1) each eligible individual, other than one who is a patient in a medical institution or is receiving institutional service in an intermediate care facility to which section 1121 applies, shall receive financial assistance in such amount as, when added to his income which is not disregarded pursuant to subsection (a), will provide a minimum of $90 per month.

"(2) the standard of need applied for determining eligibility for and amount of aid for the aged, blind, and disabled shall not be lower than (A) the standard applied for this purpose under the State plan (approved under this title) as in effect on the date of enactment of part D of title IV of this Act, or (B) if there was no such plan in effect for such State on such date, the standard of need which was applicable under—

"(i) the State plan which was in effect on such date and was approved under title I, in the case of any individual who is sixty-five years of age or older,

"(ii) the State plan in effect on such date and approved under title X, in the case of an individual who is blind, or

"(iii) the State plan in effect on such date and approved under title XIV, in the case of an individual who is severely disabled,

except that if two or more of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are applicable to an individual, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than the higher (or highest) of the standards under the applicable plans, and except that if none of such clauses is applicable to individuals, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than higher of the standards under the State plans approved under title I, X, or XIV, which was in effect on such date, and

"(3) no aid will be furnished to any individual under the State plan for any period with respect to which he is considered a member of a family receiving family assistance benefits under part D of title IV or training allowances under part C thereof for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits or allowances (but this paragraph shall not prevent payments with respect to other members of his family pursuant to title IV of this Act).

"(4) no lien will be imposed against the property of any individual or his estate on account of aid paid to him under the plan (except pursuant to the judgment of a court on account of benefits incorrectly paid to such individual), and that there will be no adjustment or any recovery of aid correctly paid to him under the plan.

"(c) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 464.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1604. From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary shall pay to each State which has a plan approved under this title, for each calendar quarter, an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each month of such quarter as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan—

"(1) 100 per centum of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditures as exceeds the product of $50 multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month; plus

"(2) 50 per centum of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under paragraph (1), not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to such month as exceeds the product of $65 multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month; plus

"(3) 25 per centum of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under paragraph (2), not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to such month as exceeds the product of the amount which, as determined by the Secretary, is the maximum permissible level of assistance per person in which the Federal Government will participate financially, multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month.

In the case of any individual in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the maximum permissible level of assistance under paragraph (3) may be lower than in the case of individuals in the other States. See also, section 464 for other special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

"ALTERNATE PROVISION FOR DIRECT FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO INDIVIDUALS

"SEC. 1605. The Secretary may enter into an agreement with a State under which he will, on behalf of the State, pay aid to the aged, blind, and disabled directly to individuals in the State under the State's plan approved under this title and perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon. In such case payments shall not be made as provided in section 1604 and the agreement shall also provide for payment to the Secretary by the State of its share of such aid, together with one-half of the additional cost to the Secretary involved in carrying out the agreement, other than the cost of making the payments.

"OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

"SEC. 1606. Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of payment has been made to any person as a direct Federal payment pursuant to section 1605, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments of the overpaid individual or by recovery from him or his estate or payment to him. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with a view to avoiding penalizing individuals who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this title, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 1607. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under this title, finds—

"(1) that the plan no longer complies with the provisions of sections 1602 and 1603; or

"(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such provision;

the Secretary shall notify such State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State or individuals within the State under this title (or, in his discretion, that payments will be limited to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure), until the Secretary is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no such further payments to the State or individuals in the State under this title (or shall limit payments to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR SERVICES AND ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 1608. (a) If the State plan of a State approved under section 1602 provides that the State agency will make available to applicants for or recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan at least those services to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care which are prescribed by the Secretary, such State shall qualify for payments for services under subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) In the case of any State whose State plan approved under section 1602 meets the requirements of subsection (a), the Secretary shall pay to the State from the sums appropriated therefor an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each quarter, as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan—

"(1) 75 per centum of so much of such expenditures as are for—

"(A) services which are prescribed pursuant to subsection (a) and are provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, or

"(B) other services, specified by the Secretary as likely to prevent or reduce dependency, so provided to the applicants or recipients of aid, or

"(C) any of the services prescribed pursuant to subsection (a), and any of the services specified in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, which the

Secretary may specify as appropriate for individauls who, within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe, have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan, if such services are requested by the individuals and are provided to them in accordance with subsection (c), or

"(D) the training of personnel employed or preparing for employment by the State agency or by the local agency administering the plan in the political subdivision; plus

"(2) one-half of so much of such expenditures (not included under paragraph (1)) as are for services provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan, and to individuals requesting such services who (within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe) have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of such aid; plus

"(3) one-half of the remainder of such expenditures.

"(c) The services referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) shall, except to the extent specified by the Secretary, include only—

"(1) services provided by the staff of the State agency, or the local agency administering the State plan in the political subdivision (but no funds authorized under this title shall be available for services defined as vocational rehabilitation services under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act (A) which are available to individuals in need of them under programs for their rehabilitation carried on under a State plan approved under that Act, or (B) which the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under that Act are able and willing to provide if reimbursed for the cost thereof pursuant to agreement under paragraph (2), if provided by such staff), and

"(2) subject to limitations prescribed by the Secretary, services which in the judgment of the State agency cannot be as economically or as effectively provided by the staff of that State or local agency and are not otherwise reasonably available to individuals in need of them, and which are provided, pursuant to agreement with the State agency, by the State health authority or the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act or by any other State agency which the Secretary may determine to be appropriate (whether provided by its staff or by contract with public (local) or nonprofit private agencies).

Services described in clause (B) of paragraph (1) may be provided only pursuant to agreement with the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act.

"(d) The portion of the amount expended for administration of the State plan to which paragraph (1) of subsection (b) applies and the portion thereof to which paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (b) apply shall be determined in accordance with such methods and procedures as may be permitted by the Secretary.

"(e) In the case of any State whose plan approved under section 1602 does not meet the requirements of subsection (a) of this section, there shall be paid to the State, in lieu of the amount provided for under subsection (b), an amount equal to one-half the total of the sums expended during each quarter as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, including services referred to in subsections (b) and (c) and provided in accordance with the provisions of those subsections.

"(f) In the case of any State whose State plan included a provision meeting the requirements of subsection

(a), but with respect to which the Secretary finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the plan, that—

"(1) the provision no longer complies with the requirements of subsection (a), or

(2) in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with such provision,

the Secretary shall notify the State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State under subsection (b) until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until the Secretary is so satisfied, no such further payments with respect to the administration of and services under the State plan shall be made, subject to the other provisions of this title, under subsection (e) instead of subsection (b).

"COMPUTATION OF PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 1609. (a) (1) Prior to the beginning of each quarter, the Secretary shall estimate the amount to which a State will be entitled under subsections 1604 and 1608 for that quarter, such estimates to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in that quarter in accordance with the provisions of sections 1604 and 1608, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in that quarter, and, if such amount is less than the State's proportionate share of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, and (B) such other investigation as the Secretary may find necessary.

"(2) The Secretary shall then pay in such installments as he may determine, the amount so estimated, reduced or increased to the extent of any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made under this section to the State for any prior quarter and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under this subsection.

"(b) The pro rata share to which the United States is equitably entitled, as determined by the Secretary, of the net amount recovered during any quarter by a State or political subdivision thereof with respect to aid furnished under the State plan, but excluding any amount of such aid recovered from the estate of a deceased recipient which is not in excess of the amount expended by the State or any political subdivision thereof for the funeral expenses of the deceased, shall be considered an overpayment to be adjusted under subsection (a) (2).

"(c) Upon the making of any estimate by the Secretary under this subsection, any appropriations available for payments under this section shall be deemed obligated.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 1610. For purposes of this title, the term 'aid to the aged, blind, and disabled' means money payments to needy individuals who are 65 years of age or older, are blind, or are severely disabled, but such term does not include—

"(1) any such payments to any individual who is an inmate of a public institution (except as a patient in a medical institution); or

"(2) any such payments to any individual who has not attained sixty-five years of age and who is a patient in an institution for tuberculosis or mental diseases.

Such term also includes payments which are not included within the meaning of such term under the preceding sentence, but which would be so included except that they are made on behalf of such a needy individual to another individual who (as determined in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary) is interested in or concerned with the welfare of such needy individual, but only with respect to a State whose State plan approved under section 1602 includes provision for—

"(A) determination by the State agency that the needy individual has, by reason of his physical or mental condition, such inability to manage funds that making payments to him would be contrary to his welfare and, therefore, it is necessary to provide such aid through payments described in this sentence;

"(B) making such payments only in cases in which the payment will, under the rules otherwise applicable under the State plan for determining need and the amount of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled to be paid (and in conjunction with other income and resources), meet all the need of the individuals with respect to whom such payments are made;

"(C) undertaking and continuing special efforts to protect the welfare of such individuals and to improve, to the extent possible, his capacity of self-care and to manage funds;

"(D) periodic review by the State agency of the determination under clause (A) to ascertain whether conditions justifying such determination still exist, with provision for termination of the payments if they do not and for seeking judicial appointment of a guardian, or other legal representative, as described in section 1111, if and when it appears that such action will best serve the interests of the needy individual; and

"(E) opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency on the determination referred to in clause (A) for any individual with respect to whom it is made.'

Whether an individual is blind or severely disabled, shall be determined for purposes of this title in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary."

REPEAL OF TITLES I, X, AND XIV OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

SEC. 202. Titles I, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 301, et seq., 1201, et seq., 1351, et seq.) are hereby repealed.

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

SEC. 203. In the case of any State which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this section, any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made to such State under section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603 of such Act with respect to a period before the approval of a plan under title XVI as amended by this Act, and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under subsection (b) of such section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603, shall, for purposes of section 1609 (a) of such Act as herein amended be considered an overpayment or underpayment (as the case may be) made under title XVI of such Act as herein amended.

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO DEFINITIONS OF BLINDNESS AND DISABILITY

SEC. 204. In the case of any State which has in operation a plan of aid to the blind under title X, aid to the permanently and totally disabled under title XIV, or aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under title XVI, of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this Act, the State plan of such State submitted under title XVI of such Act as amended by this Act shall not be denied approval thereunder, with respect to the period ending with the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after the enactment of this Act, by reason of its failure to include therein a test of disability or blindness different from that included in the State's plan (approved under such title X, XIV or XVI of such Act) as in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 301. Section 228 (d) (1) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "I, X, XIV, or" and by striking out "part A" and inserting in lieu thereof "receives payments with respect to such month pursuant to part D or E".

SEC. 302. Title XI of the Social Security Act is amended as follows:

(1) in section 1101(a)(1) by striking out "I,", "X,", and "XIV,";

(2) in section 1106(c)(1)(A) by striking out "I, X, XIV,";

(3) in section 1108 by striking out "I, X, XIV, and XVI" and inserting in lieu thereof "XVI" in subsection (a) and by striking out "section 402(a)(19)" and inserting in lieu thereof "part A of title IV" in subsection (b);

(4) by amending section 1109 to read as follows:

"SEC. 1109. Any amount which is disregarded (or set aside for future needs) in determining the eligibility for and amount of aid or assistance for any individual under a State plan approved under title XVI or XIX, or eligibility for and amount of payments pursuant to part D or E of title IV, shall not be taken into consideration in determining the eligibility for and amount of such aid, assistance, or payments for any other individual under such other State plan or such part D or E.";

(5) in section 1111 by striking out "I, X, XIV, and" and by striking out "part A" and inserting in lieu thereof "parts D and E";

(6) in section 1115 by striking out "I, X, XIV,"

TITLE IV—GENERAL

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 401. The amendments and repeals made by the preceding provisions shall become effective, and section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950 (25 U.S.C. 639) is repealed effective, on the first January 1 following the fiscal year in which this Act is enacted; except that—

(1) in the case of any State a statute of which prevents it from making the supplementary payments provided for in part E of title IV of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, the amendments made by

this Act and such repeal shall not apply with respect to individuals in such State until (if later than the date referred to above) the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after the enactment of this Act or until (if earlier than July 1) the first calendar quarter following the date on which the State certifies it is no longer so prevented from making such payments; and

(2) in the case of any State a statute of which prevents it from complying with the requirements of section 1602 of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, the amendments made by title II of this Act shall not apply until (if later than the January 1 referred to above) the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after the enactment of this Act or on the earlier date on which such State submits a plan meeting such requirements of section 1602;

and except that section 437 of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, shall be effective upon enactment of this Act.

MEANING OF SECRETARY AND FISCAL YEAR

SEC. 402. As used in this Act and in the amendments made by this Act, the term "Secretary" means, unless the context otherwise requires and except in part C of title IV of the Social Security Act, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and the term "fiscal year" means a period beginning with any July 1 and ending with the close of the following June 30.

1ST SESSION

S. 2986

A BILL

To authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes.

By Mr. SCOTT, Mr. BROOKE, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. HANSEN, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. PROUTY, Mr. SCHWEIKER, and Mr. STEVENS

Read twice and referred to the Committee on Finance

S. 2986—INTRODUCTION OF THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1969

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I introduce on behalf of myself, and other Senators, "The Family Assistance Act of 1969," comprehensive legislation addressed to one of our most serious domestic problems. This bill constitutes one of the most important domestic initiatives which the Nixon administration will undertake. It embodies the administration's proposals for a complete overhaul of our present, highly unsatisfactory welfare system. President Nixon did not overstate the case when he termed the welfare system a colossal failure and a huge monster. No one is happy with welfare as it now exists—neither the taxpaying American, administrators at the Federal, State, and local levels of government, nor the recipients themselves.

Most of the problems in the existing system center around the program known as AFDC—aid to families with dependent children. In a period of increasing prosperity, and decreasing unemployment, this program has grown steadily. Since 1960, its cost has tripled, and the number of recipients has more than doubled. This program is now responsible for payments to 6,500,000 persons. Yet this program is basically unfair. It is unfair to men who work hard for low wages. It is unfair to families that stay together, instead of breaking up. It is unfair to people who live in different States, some of whom receive a payment of $39 a month, and others of whom receive as much as $163 a month.

After a great deal of study, the administration has concluded that the best way to remedy these problems is to establish a uniform Federal payment—a family assistance payment—to families with children and with comparable amounts of income. This is not a guaranteed income program. Persons who do not accept work or training opportunities will not be eligible for payments. It is a program that guarantees that help will be available for any family, with children, where the breadwinner uses his best efforts. It is designed as a program to encourage people to help themselves. The incentives to have earnings, and to increase earnings, are large.

Under this plan, the basic benefit for a family with no income would be $500 for each of the first two persons in the family, and $300 for each additional one. Thus, in the case of a family of four without income, payments of $1,600 annually would be available. The first $720—based on $60 a month—of annual earnings, would not result in any reduction in the basic family assistance benefit. This would ordinarily cover the expenses of employment so that an individual would not be disadvantaged by going to work. Above this level, a dollar of earnings would result in only a 50-cent reduction in benefits. For each dollar of unearned income, there would be only a 50-cent reduction, thus providing a monetary incentive for child support, and for more stable work effort by individuals so that higher unemployment compensation benefits would be available.

The food stamp program which was proposed by the President, and for which legislation has now been passed by this body, will enhance the benefits available. The comprehensive manpower and training bill will make more available training opportunities in relation to local labor markets, and the opportunity for placement of welfare recipients in the type of training program most likely to fit them for available jobs. This bill will complement both programs. With regard to the latter, this bill provides funds to help defray training costs, and it vastly expands—compared with present programs—the authority for day care. Any unemployed person who is able to work or take training will be required to register with the State employment services. An exception is made in the case of mothers of children under 6 whose acceptance of training or employment is voluntary.

Under the existing system there is, as I pointed out, a very wide variation in payments. It would be unfair to significantly reduce the amount of assistance being received by individual families today. This bill, accordingly, contains provisions for State supplementation so that persons will not lose under the new arrangement. Obviously, the intact working families who are eligible for nothing today will gain, and greater equity will result.

In the program for the aged, blind, and disabled, Federal matching is materially improved. The Federal Government would provide 100 percent of the first $50 of payment per individual, 50 percent for the next $15, and 25 percent of the amount above $65. Of vital importance is the principle of a minimum income floor that would be established for the first time. As a condition for receiving Federal grants, the States would have to assure that each aged, blind or disabled individual would have at least $90 from his assistance payment and other income each month.

The bill has been designed to assure some fiscal relief under the welfare programs as compared with existing law. It includes provisions that the Federal Government will reimburse the States for any required non-Federal expenditures that exceed 90 percent of what their expenditures would be under existing law. At the same time, other provisions assure that States will expend at least one-half as much as they are spending at present. These provisions, coupled with the revenue-sharing proposals of this administration, will aid hard-pressed State treasuries.

Out of new expenditures of approximately $5 billion—$4 billion under the bill that I have introduced and $1 billion of direct revenue sharing—the savings to State treasuries is estimated at $1.7 billion, one-third of the total. The remaining expenditures will go primarily to the recipients of family assistance payments, for training costs and day care and for administration and other items.

The bill makes minimal changes in the existing provisions for social services to families. This, I understand, will be the subject of later proposals. Similarly, the bill makes only minimal changes in the medicaid program which is now under intensive review by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Mr. President, the welfare proposals contained in this bill are designed to correct four basic evils in the present system—evils which provide strong incentives for abuse. It corrects the evil inequities between male and female-headed families which today provide an incentive for them to leave home. It corrects the inequities today between the idle and the working poor which presently provide an incentive for idleness. It requires recipients to accept available work or training and provides expanded training in day care services to make this possible.

Mr. President, this bill is long; it is complex. Not all may agree with the details of every provision. Certain refinements may be suggested in committee, and on the floor. Yet, overall, I believe these proposals constitute a major improvement in the way in which we deal with one of our most troublesome problems. They warrant fully the most careful consideration by all of us, leading to enactment.

For the first time since the 1930's the emphasis in Federal programs has shifted from the merely custodial to the remedial. President Nixon recognizes that the Federal dole is demeaning to human dignity, and only encourages a cycle of dependence from one generation to the next. This bill is vitally essential to the successful implementation of his stated goal to "assist millions of Americans out of poverty and into productivity."

I am pleased to have joining me as cosponsors in this effort the following distinguished Senators: Mr. GRIFFIN of Michigan, Mr. BROOKE of Massachusetts, Mr. DOMINICK of Colorado, Mr. HANSEN of Wyoming, Mr. PROUTY of Vermont, Mr. SCHWEIKER of Pennsylvania, Mr. STEVENS of Alaska, Mr. JAVITS of New York, and Mr. PERCY of Illinois.

Mr. President, I ask that an explanatory statement by Health, Education, and Welfare Secretary Robert H. Finch, and a section-by-section analysis of the Family Assistance Act of 1969 be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the explanatory statement and section-by-section analysis will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2986), to authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. SCOTT (for himself and other Senators), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The material furnished by Mr. SCOTT follows:

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE, ROBERT H. FINCH, IN EXPLANATION OF THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1969

The Family Assistance Plan is a revolutionary effort to reform a welfare system in crisis. With this program and the Administration's proposed Food Stamp plan, the Federal Government launches a new strategy—an income strategy—to deal with our most critical domestic problems. For those among the poor who can become self-supporting, this strategy offers an avenue to greater income through expanded work incentives, training, and employment opportunities. For those who cannot work, there is a more adequate level of Federal support.

If the Family Assistance and Food Stamp proposals are enacted, we will have reduced the poverty gap in this country by some 59 percent. In other words, these two programs taken together will cut by almost 60 percent the difference between the total income of all poor Americans and the total amount they would have to earn in order to rise out of poverty. In one particular category of the poor, that of couples over 65 years of age, the Family Assistance Plan will in fact raise recipients' incomes above the poverty line altogether. This income strategy includes an Administration proposal for a 10 percent increase in Social Security benefits, coupled with an automatic cost of living escalator. This is a real war on poverty and not just a skirmish.

I. THE FAILURE OF WELFARE

On August 8 the President addressed the nation and called the present welfare system a failure. He said:

"Whether measured by the anguish of the poor themselves, or by the drastically mounting burden on the taxpayer, the present welfare system has to be judged a colossal failure. . . .

"What began on a small scale in the depression 30's has become a huge monster in the prosperous 60's. And the tragedy is not only that it is bringing States and cities to the brink of financial disaster, but also that it is failing to meet the elementary human, social and financial needs of the poor."

The failure of the system is most evident in the recent increases in welfare costs and caseloads. In this decade alone, total costs for the four federally-aided welfare programs have more than doubled, to a level now of about $6 billion.

In the Aid for Families with Dependent Children program (AFDC), costs have more than tripled since 1960 (to about $4 billion at the present time) and the number of recipients has more than doubled (to some 6.2 million persons). Even more disturbing is the fact that the proportion of persons on AFDC is growing. In the 15 years since 1955, the proportion of children receiving assistance has doubled—from 30 children per 1,000 to about 60 per 1,000 at present.

Prospects for the future show no likelihood for relief from the present upward spiral. By conservative estimates, AFDC costs will double again by Fiscal Year 1975, and caseloads will increase by 50 to 60 percent. Yet, the great irony is that despite these crushing costs, benefits remain below adequate levels in most States.

Moreover, the present AFDC program is built to fail. It embodies a set of inequities which help to cause its own destruction. First, it is characterized by unjustifiable discrepancies as between regions of the country. With no national standards for benefit levels and eligibility practices, AFDC payments now vary from an average of $39 per month for a family of four in Mississippi to $263 for such a family in New Jersey.

Second, it is inequitable in its treatment of male-headed families as opposed to those headed by a female. In no State is a male-headed family, where the mother is also in the home and the father is working full time for poverty wages, eligible for AFDC. In half the States, even families headed by unemployed males are still not eligible under the AFDC–UF program. On the other hand, families in poverty headed by women working full or part-time are almost universally covered. The result of this unfortunate discrimination is the creation of a powerful economic incentive for the father to leave home so that the State may better support his family than he can. For example, if a father employed full time in a low wage job is able to earn only $2000 per year, and welfare in the State would pay a fatherless family $3000 per year, his wife and children are financially 50 percent better off if he leaves home. And this financial incentive has taken its toll. In 1940, only 30 percent of the families on AFDC had absent fathers, but today the figure stands at over 70 percent.

Third, AFDC imposes inequities between those who work and those who do not. Because families in poverty headed by working men are not covered, it is easily possible for such a working family to be less well off than the welfare family. And what could be more debilitating to the motivation to work to see the opportunity for one's family to be better off on welfare? Moreover, the present system further undercuts the incentive to work by reducing welfare payments too rapidly and by too much as the head of the household begins to work.

II. THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

This Administration began its formal inquiries into welfare reform even before the inauguration. From the report of the Transition Task Force on Welfare to the present time, a number of reform proposals have been considered. The final result reflects the best efforts of many different people in and out of government and in different Federal agencies.

This analysis led us to the conclusion that revolutionary structural reform in the system is required. The first priority of the Family Assistance Plan has been to remove, or at least minimize the inequities of present welfare policies. It is designed to strengthen family life and incentives for employment. This strategy may not pay off immediately, but unless this investment is made now, fundamental reform will be even more expensive in the future.

The Family Assistance Plan provides fiscal relief for hard pressed States and at the same time raises benefit levels for recipients in those areas where they are lowest. Of the $2.9 billion made available in new funds under the plan for benefits to families and to aged, blind and disabled adults, an estimated $700 million will have the effect of providing fiscal relief for the States and about $300 million will be for benefit increases for present recipients. But these goals, it must be said, cannot be our first priority at the present time. There are others who would invest more of our available resources in benefit increases or in a federalization of the program designed to provide maximum fiscal relief to the States. These are not easy priorities to weigh and balance, but we have concluded that—while those other approaches might be politically more popular in many respects—they only pour more Federal money into a system doomed to failure. The system must be changed, not just its payment levels or the division of labor between the Federal and State governments within it.

The technical operation of the Family Assistance Plan is described in the attached summary. This memorandum will review its major purposes.

First, it combines powerful work requirements and work incentives for employable recipients. By including the working poor—families in poverty headed by men working full time—the new plan much reduces and in many cases eliminates the inequity of treatment between those who work and those who do not. Second, by making it possible for a family to earn $60 per month without any reduction of benefits, a recipient will have a strong financial incentive to enter employment and will be able to recoup his expenses of going to work without a drop in total income. Third, the program includes a strong work requirement: those able bodied persons who refuse a training or suitable job opportunity lose their benefits. For this reason, the program is not a guaranteed annual income. It does not guarantee benefits to persons regardless of their attitudes; its support is reserved to those who are willing to support themselves. The work requirement is made effective by a new obligation of work registration. In order to be eligible for benefits, applicants must first register with their employment service office so that training and job opportunities can be efficiently communicated to them. Mothers with children under six, are however, exempted from this requirement of work and work registration and may elect to stay at home with their children without any loss in benefits.

Second, the Family Assistance Plan treats male and female-headed families equally. All families with children, whether headed by a male or female, will receive benefits if family income and resources are below the national eligibility levels. From this structural change in coverage flows one of the key advantages of the program in terms of family stability. No longer would an unemployed father have to leave the home for his family to qualify for benefits. In fact, the family is better off with him at home since its benefits are increased by his presence. And for employed men, the system greatly reduces and in some cases reverses the financial incentive to desert. In the example cited above of the father earning $2000 in a State where his family would receive $3000 on welfare, the Family Assistance Plan would supplement his wages by $960, giving the family $2960 in income and eliminating the financial incentive for the father to leave home.

Third, the program establishes a national minimum payment and national eligibility standards and methods of administration. For a dependent family of four, the Federal benefit floor will be $1600 per year. When benefits under the President's Food Stamp proposal are also taken into account, the assistance package for such a family is about $2350 per year, or more than two-thirds of the poverty line as it has been most recently redefined. This is not, of course, a sufficient amount to sustain an adequate level of life for those who have no other income; it is, nevertheless, a substantial improvement and can be made more adequate as budget conditions permit. As a result of the establishment of the Federal benefit floor of $1600, payment levels will be raised in 10 States and for about 20 percent of present recipients.

For the aged, blind, and disabled, a nationwide income floor would be set at $90 per month per person of benefits plus other income. This comes on a yearly basis to $2160 for two eprsons, an amount which is actually above the poverty line for an aged couple. This represents an important change which we have made in the program since the President announced it on August 8; when the minimum for the adult categories was set at $65.

Perhaps at least as important as the establishment of national minimum benefit levels, however, is the provision of national eligibility standards and administrative procedures to govern the Family Assistance and State supplementary payment programs. For the first time, a single set of rules will apply throughout the nation, although the States will remain free to administer their supplementary payment programs under these uniform rules if they so desire. (The pre-existing State standards of need and payment levels will still continue to control in the supplementary payment programs with regard to eligibility anad amount of benefits.)

States will be given the option, for both the supplementary payment and the adult category programs, to contract with the Social Security Administration for Federal assumption of some or all of the administrative burdens under these programs. In this way, we should be able to move toward a single administrative mechanism for transfer payments, taking advantage of all the economies of scale which such an automated and national administered system can have. The eventual transfer of Food Stamp Program to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare—as previously proposed by the Administration—should further enhance this administrative simplification.

Fourth, the plan includes over $600 million for a major expansion of training and day care and opportunities. Some 150,000 new training opportunities will be funded under the legislation, which, when combined with the proposed Manpower Training Act is a simplified and centralized framework, should greatly broaden the opportunities for self support for recipients. Some 450,000 quality child care positions are also funded in a new and flexible program which further extends the Administration's commitment to the first five years of life.

Fifth, the Family Assistance Plan provides major fiscal relief for the States. An estimated $700 million of the $2.9 billion in new Federal money being made available for expanded cash assistance will go to the States in the form of saving on their existing welfare costs. For five years from the date of enactment, every State is assured fiscal relief at least equal to 10 percent of what its costs would have been under the old welfare program. When these savings are combined with the new money going to the States through the training and child care components and through the separate revenue sharing program, major relief for State governments is produced. In particular, by including the working poor within the Family Assistance Plan, we are establishing a wholly Federal responsibility for a category of potential recipients which an increasing number of States are beginning to assist at their own initiative. Some 7 States now have Statewide programs of relief for the working poor and another 8 States have local or experimental programs directed to these people—all entirely at State expense. By establishing a Federal program to cover the working poor, we are relieving the States of what seems to be the next likely increase in costs and coverage.

III. IMPACT ON OTHER PROGRAMS

The Family Assistance Plan has a major impact on several other Federal programs bearing on the poor.

First, we have changed the treatment of unearned income compared to the present welfare system so that the recipient of Family Assistance benefits loses only 50 cents from his benefit for each dollar of unearned income received. This results in the elimination of an important inequity which, for example, would make a female-headed family of four ineligible for Family Assistance benefits if it received $1700 per year in alimony or support payments, but would pay that family a benefit if the husband were at home and earning $1700 per year. It also has an important impact on other Federal programs such as Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance, and Unemployment Insurance by eliminating the dollar-for-dollar loss in benefits under welfare as income from these other programs is received.

Second, this legislation amends Title XIX (Medicaid) to extend mandatory coverage under that program to the AFDC-UF category. It is not possible at this time to include the working poor adults in Medicaid even though they are added to public assistance coverage under Family Assistance.

Third, Family Assistance has been carefully harmonized with the Food Stamp Program. As has already been stated, the benefits under these two programs are additive, so that a family of four receives a package of Family Assistance and Food Stamp subsidies totaling about $2350. Moreover, the eligibility ceilings have been set at virtually the same point—$4000 for a family of four—and both programs would now extend coverage to the working poor.

Finally, certain changes in the programs of services for AFDC recipients under Title IV of the Social Security Act are necessitated as a result of the Family Assistance Plan. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare will be submitting more comprehensive amendments on the service program shortly These amendments will include an expanded program of assistance to the States for foster care. In the meantime, however, we are leaving the present AFDC services provisions intact and retaining the 75-percent Federal matching for the financing of these programs.

SUMMARY OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1969

TITLE I—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

Establishment of plan

Section 101 of the bill adds new parts D, E, and F to title IV of the Social Security Act, establishing a new Family Assistance Plan providing for payment of family assistance benefits by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and supplementary payments by the States.

Eligibility and amount

The new part D of title IV of the Social Security Act authorizes benefits to families with children payable at the rate of $500 per year for each of the first two members of a family plus $300 for each additional member.

The family assistance benefit would be reduced by non-excluded income, so that families with more non-excludable income than these benefits ($1600 for a family of four) would not be eligible for any benefits.

A family with more than $1500 in resources, other than the home, household goods, personal effects, and other property essential to the family's capacity for self-support, would also not be eligible.

Countable income would include both earned income (remuneration for employment and net earnings from self-employment) and unearned income.

In determining income the following would be excluded (subject, in some cases, to limitations by the Secretary):

(1) All income of a student;

(2) Inconsequential or infrequent or irregular income;

(3) Income needed to offset necessary child care costs while in training or working;

(4) Earned income of the family at the rate of $720 per year plus ½ the remainder;

(5) Food stamps and other public assistance or private charity;

(6) Special training incentives and allowances;

(7) The tuition portion of scholarships and fellowships;

(8) Home produced and consumed produce;

(9) ½ of other unearned income.

Veterans pensions, farm price supports, and soil bank payments would not be excludable income to any extent and would, therefore, result in reduction of benefits on a dollar for dollar basis.

Eligibility for and amount of benefits would be determined quarterly on the basis of estimates of income for the quarter, made in the light of the preceding period's income as modified in the light of changes in circumstances and conditions.

Definition of family and child

To qualify for Family Assistance Plan benefits a family must consist of two or more related individuals living in their own home and residing in the United States and one must be an unmarried child (i.e., under the age of 18, or under the age of 21 and regularly attending school).

Payment of benefits

Payment may be made to any one or more members of the qualified family. The Secretary would prescribe regulations regarding the filing of applications and supplying of data to determine eligibility of a family and the amounts for which the family is eligible. Beneficiaries would be required to report events or changes of circumstances affecting eligibility or the amount of benefits.

When reports by beneficiaries are delayed too long or are too inaccurate, part or all of the resulting benefit payments could be treated as recoverable overpayments.

Registration for work and referral for training

Eligible adult family members would be required to register with public employment offices for manpower services and training or employment unless they belong to specified excepted groups. However, a person in an excepted group may register if he wishes.

The exceptions are: (1) ill, incapacitated, or aged persons; (2) the caretaker relative (usually the mother) of a child under 6; (3) the mother or other female caretaker of the child if an adult male (usually the father) who would have to register is there; (4) the caretaker for an ill household member; and (5) full-time workers.

Where the individual is disabled, referral for rehabilitation services would be made. Provision is also made for child care services to the extent the Secretary finds necessary in case of participation in manpower services, training, or employment.

Denial of benefits

Family Assistance benefits would be denied with respect to any member of a family who refuses without good cause to register or to participate in suitable manpower services, training, or employment. If the member is the only adult, he would be included as a family member but only for purposes of determining eligibility of the family. Also, in appropriate cases, the remaining portion of the Family Assistance benefit would be paid to an interested person outside the family.

On-the-job training

The Secretary would transfer to the Department of Labor funds which would otherwise be paid to families participating in employer-compensated on-the-job training if they were not participating. These funds would be available to pay the training costs involved.

STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

Required supplementation

The individual States would have to agree to supplement the family assistance benefits under a new part E of title IV of the Social Security Act wherever the family assistance benefit level is below the previously existing Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) payment level. This supplementation is a condition which the State must meet in order to continue to receive Federal payments with respect to maternal and child health and crippled children's services (title V) and with respect to their State plans for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled (title XVI), medical assistance (title XIX), and services to needy families with children (part A of title IV). Such "supplementation" would be required to families eligible for family assistance benefits other than families where both parents are present, neither is incapacitated, or the father is not unemployed. The States would thus be required to supplement in the case of individuals eligible under the old AFDC and AFDC-UF provisions; they would not have to supplement in case of the working poor.

Amount of supplementation

Except as indicated below and, except for use of the State standard of need and payment maximums, eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments would be determined by use of the rules applicable for Family Assistance benefits.

In applying the family assistance rules to the disregarding of income under the supplementary payment program—

(1) In the case of earned income of the family, the State would first disregard income at the rate of $720 per year, and would then be permitted to reduce its supplementary payment by 16⅔ cents for every dollar of earnings over the range of earnings between $720 per year and the cutoff point for family assistance (i.e., $3,920 for a family of four), and could further reduce its supplementary payments by an amount equal to not more than 80 cents for every dollar of earnings beyond that family assistance cutoff point.

(2) In the case of unearned income, these same percentage reductions would apply, although the initial $720 exclusion would not apply.

Requirements for agreements

Some of the State plan requirements now applicable in the case of Aid and Services to Needy Families with Children would be made applicable to the agreement. These include the requirements relating to:

(1) Statewideness;

(2) Administration by a single State agency;

(3) Fair hearing to dissatisfied claimants;

(4) Methods of administration needed for proper and efficient operation, including personnel standards, training, and effective use of subprofessional staff;

(5) Reporting to Secretary as required;

(6) Confidentiality of information relating to applicants and recipients;

(7) Opportunity to apply for and prompt furnishing of supplementary payments.

Payments to States

A State agreeing to make the supplementary payments would be guaranteed that its expenditures for the first 5 full fiscal years after enactment would be no more than 90 per cent of the amount they would have been if the Family Assistance Plan amendments not been enacted. This would be accomplished by Federal payment to each State, for each year, of the excess of—

(1) The total of its supplementary payments for the year plus the State share of its expenditures called for under its existing State plan approved under title XVI plus the additional expenditures required by the new title XVI, over

(2) 90% of the State share of what its expenditures would have been in the form of maintenance payments for such year if the State's approved plans under title I, IV(A), X, XIV, and XVI had continued in effect (assuming in the case of the part A of title IV plan, payments for dependent children of unemployed fathers),

On the other hand, any State spending less than 50 per cent of the State share, referred to in clause (2) above, for supplementary payments and its title XVI plan would be required to pay the amount of the deficiency to the Federal treasury.

A State would also receive ½ of its cost of administration under its agreement.

ADMINISTRATION

Agreements with States

Sufficient latitude is provided to deal with the individual administrative characteristics of the States. Provision is made under which the Secretary can agree to administer and disburse the supplementary payments on behalf of the States. Similarly the States can agree to administer portions of the family assistance plan on behalf of the Secretary, with respect to all or specified families in the States.

Evaluation, research, training

The Secretary would make an annual report to Congress on the new Family Assistance Plan, including an evaluation of its operation. He would also have authority to make periodic evaluations of its operation and to use part of the program funds for this purpose.

Research into and demonstrations of better ways of carrying out the purposes of the new Plan, as well as technical assistance to the States and training of their personnel who are involved in making supplementary payments, would also be authorized.

There are special provisions for these areas under which the amount of family assistance benefits, the $720 of earned income to be disregarded, and several other amounts under the Family Assistance Plan and the new title XVI of the Social Security Act (aid to the aged, blind, and disabled) would be reduced to the extent that the per capita income of these areas is below that of that one of the 50 States which had the lowest per capita income.

TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND DAY CARE PROGRAMS

Section 102 of the Administration bill would replace part C of title IV of the Social Security Act in its entirety.

Purpose

The purpose of the revised part C is to provide manpower services, training, and employment, and child care and related services for individuals eligible for the new Family Assistance Plan benefits (new part D) or State supplementary payments (new part E) to help them secure or retain employment or advancement in employment. The intent is to do this in a manner which will restore families with dependent children to self-supporting, independent, and useful roles in the community.

Operation

The Secretary of Labor is required to develop an employability plan for each individual required to register under the new part D or receiving supplementary payments pursuant to the new part E. The plan would describe the manpower services, training, and employment to be provided and needed to enable the individual to become self-supporting or attain advancement in employment.

Allowances

The Secretary of Labor would pay an incentive training allowance of $30 per month to each member of a family participating in manpower training. Where training allowances for a family under another program would be larger than their benefits under the Family Assistance Plan and supplementary State payments, the incentive allowances for the family would be equal to the difference, or $30 per member, whichever is larger.

Allowances for transportation and other expenses would also be authorized.

These incentive and other allowances would be in lieu of allowances under other manpower training programs.

Allowances would not be payable to individuals participating in employer compensated on-the-job training.

Denial of allowances

Allowances would not be payable to an individual who refuses to accept manpower taining without good cause. The individual would receive reasonable notice and have an opportunity for a hearing if dissatisfied with the denial.

Utilization of other programs

In order to avoid the creation of duplicative programs, maximum use of authorities under other acts could be made by the Secretary of Labor in providing the manpower training and related services under the revised part C, but subject to all duties and responsibilities under such other programs. Part C appropriations could be used to pay the cost of services provided by other programs and to reimburse other public agencies for services they provided to persons under part C. The emphasis is on an integrated and comprehensive manpower training program involving all sectors of the economy and all levels of government to make maximum use of existing manpower and manpower related programs.

Appropriations and administration

Appropriations to the Secretary of Labor would be authorized for carrying out the revised part C, including payment of up to 90 percent of the cost of training and employment services provided individuals registered under the Family Assistance Plan. The Secretary would seek to achieve equitable geographical distribution of these funds.

In developing policies and programs for manpower services, training and employment for individuals registered under the Family Assistance Plan, the Secretary of Labor would have to first obtain the concurrence of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with regard to all programs under the usual and traditional authority of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Child care and support services

Appropriations to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be authorized for grants and contracts for up to 90 per cent of the cost of projects for child care and related services for persons registered under the Family Assistance Plan and in manpower training or employment. The grants would go to any public or non-profit private agency or organization, and the contracts could be with any public or private agency or organization. The cost of these services could include alteration, remodeling, and renovation of facilities, but no provision is made for wholly new construction. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare could allow the nonfederal share of the cost to be provided in the form of services or facilities.

These provisions (unlike other provisions of the bill) would become effective on enactment of the bill.

Advance funding

To afford adequate notice of available funds, appropriations for one year to pay the cost of the program during the next year would be authorized.

Evaluation and research

A continuing evaluation of the program under part C and research for improving it are authorized.

Annual report and advisory council

The Secretary of Labor is required to report annually to Congress on the manpower training and related services.

ELIMINATION OF PRESENT PROVISIONS ON CASH ASSISTANCE FOR FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

Section 103 of the bill revises part A of title IV of the Social Security Act which relates to cash assistance and services for needy families with children. The new part A is called Services to Needy Families with Children, reflecting the elimination of the provisions on cash assistance. The cash assistance part is no longer necessary because of the Family Assistance Plan in the new part D of title IV.

The revised part A provides for continuation of the present program of services for these families. Foster care for children and emergency assistance, as included under existing law, are also continued.

Requirements for State plans

Section 402 of the Social Security Act which sets forth the requirements to be met by State plans before they are approved and qualify the State for federal financial participation in expenditures, would be revised as appropriate in the light of the elimination of the cash assistance provisions.

Payments to States

The provisions on payments to States for expenditures under approved State plans remain the same as existing law with respect to services, emergency assistance, and foster care. The matching formulas continue to vary, as in existing law, according to the kinds of services involved.

Definitions

The definitions of "family services" and "emergency assistance to needy families with children" have not been substantially changed.

The definitions of "dependent child", "aid to families with dependent children", and "relative with whom any dependent child is living" have been replaced (as no longer applicable) by definitions of

(1) "Child"—which refers to the definition in the new part D, establishing the Family Assistance Plan; this in effect substitutes a requirement that the child be a member of a "family" (as defined in the new part D) instead of having to live with particularly designated relatives;

(2) "Needy families with children" (and "assistance to such families")—this being defined as families receiving family assistance benefits under the new part D, if they are also receiving supplementary State payments pursuant to the new part E or would have been eligible for aid under the existing State plan for aid to needy families with children if it had continued in effect.

Foster care and emergency assistance

The provisions on payments for foster care of children and emergency assistance remain virtually the same as under existing law.

Assistance by Internal Revenue Service in locating parents

The provision on this subject remains the same and allows use of the master files of the Internal Revenue Service to locate missing parents in certain cases.

TITLE II—AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

This title revises the current title XVI of the Social Security Act and sets forth the revised title XVI in its entirety. One of the major changes is the removal of the provisions relating to medical assistance for the aged which, under existing law, would terminate at the end of calendar 1969. All medical assistance for which the Federal government shares costs will now be provided under approved title XIX State plans.

Requirements for State plans

Few changes are made in this section (sec. 1602), aside from deleting the provisions relating to medical assistance for the aged. The section retains, without substantial change, the requirements relating to:

(1) Administration by a single State agency (except where a separate agency is permitted for the blind as under existing law);

(2) Financial participation by the State;

(3) Statewideness;

(4) Opportunity for fair hearing;

(5) Methods of administration, including personnel standards, training, and effective use of subprofessional staff;

(6) Reporting to the Secretary as required;

(7) Confidentiality of information relating to recipients;

(8) Opportunity for application and furnishing of assistance with reasonable promptness;

(9) Establishment and maintenance by the State of standards for institutions in which there are individuals receiving aid;

(10) Description of services provided for self-support or self-care; and

(11) Determination of blindness by an ophtalmologist or an optometrist.

The present prohibition against payment to persons in receipt of assistance under title I, IV, X, or XIV would be applicable instead to cases of receipt of family security benefits under the new part D of title IV.

The provision on inclusion of reasonable standards for determining eligibility and amount of aid would be replaced by one requiring a minimum benefit of $90 per month, less any other income, and by another requiring that the standard of need not be lower than the standard applied under the State plan approved under the existing title XVI or (in case the State had not had such a plan) the appropriate one of the standards of need applied under the plans approved under titles I, X, and XIV.

While the requirement relating to the determination of need and disregarding of certain income in connection therewith has been continued (although without the authorization to disregard $7.50 per month of any income, in addition to other income which may or must be disregarded), it has been expanded in a manner parallel to family assistance benefits to include disregarding as resources the home, household goods, personal effects, other property which might help to increase the family's ability for self-support, and, finally, any other personal or real property the total value of which does not exceed $1500. There would also be a new requirement for not considering the financial responsibility of any other individual for the applicant or recipient unless the applicant is the individual's spouse or child under the age of 21 or blind or severely disabled, and a prohibition against imposition of liens on account of benefits correctly paid to recipients.

Other new requirements relate to provision for the training and effective use of social service personnel, provision of technical assistance to State agencies and local subdivisions furnishing assistance or services, and provision for the development, through research or demonstrations, of new or improved methods of furnishing assistance or services. Also added is a requirement for use of a simplified statement for establising eligibility and for adequate and effective methods of verification thereof. Finally, there are new requirements for periodic evaluation of the State plan at least annually, with reports thereof being submitted to the Secretary together with any necessary modifications of the State plan; for establishment of advisory committees, including recipients as members; and for observing priorities and performance standards set by the Secretary in the administration of the State plan and in providing services thereunder.

The present prohibitions against any age requirement of more than 65 years and against any citizenship requirement excluding U.S. citizens would be continued.

In place of the present provisions on residency, there is a new one which prohibits any residency requirement excluding any resident of the State. Also there would be new prohibitions against any disability or age requirement which excludes a severely disabled individual aged 18 or older, and any blindness or age requirement which excludes any person who is blind (determined under criteria by the Secretary).

Payments

In place of the present provision on the Federal share of expenditures under the approved State plan there is a new formula which provides for payment as follows with respect to expenditures under State plans for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled approved under the new title XVI:

With respect to cash assistance, the Federal Government will pay (1) 100 per cent of the first $50 per recipient, plus (2) 50 per cent of the next $15 per recipient, plus (3) 25 per cent of the balance of the payment per recipient which does not exceed the maximum permissible level of assistance per person set by the Secretary (which may be lower in the case of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam than for other jurisdictions).

With respect to services for which expenditures are made under the approved State plan, the Federal Government would pay the same percentages as are provided under existing law, that is, 75 per cent in the case of certain specified services and training of personnel and 50 per cent in the case of the remainder of the cost of administration of the State plan.

Payment by Federal Government to individuals

The revised title XVI includes authority for the Secretary to enter into agreements with any State under which the Secretary will make the payments of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled directly to individuals in the State who are eligible therefor. In that case, the State would reimburse the Federal Government for the State's share of those payments and for ½ the additional cost to the Secretary of carrying out the agreement, other than the cost of making the payments themselves.

Definition

The new title XVI defines aid to the aged, blind, and disabled as money payments to needy individuals who are 65 or older or are blind or are severely disabled.

Transitional and related provisions

Titles I, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act would be repealed.

Provision is made for making adjustments under the new title XVI on account of overpayments and underpayments under the existing public assistance titles.

Provision is also made for according States a grace period during which they can be eligible to participate in the new title XVI without changing their tests of disability or blindness. The grace period would end for any State with the June 30 following the close of the first regular session of its State legislature beginning after enactment of the bill.

Conforming amendments

The bill also contains a number of conforming amendments in other provisions of the Social Security Act in order to take account of the substantive changes made by the bill. Thus, the changes in the medicaid program (title XIX of the Social Security Act) would require the States to cover individuals eligible for supplementary State payments pursuant to the new part E of title IV or who would be eligible for cash assistance under an existing State plan for aid to families with dependent children if it continued in effect and included dependent children of unemployed fathers.

Effective date

The amendments made by the bill would become effective on the first January 1 following the fiscal year in which the bill is enacted. However, if a State is prevented by statute from making supplementary payments provided for under the new part E of title IV of the Social Security Act, the amendments would not apply to individuals in that State until the first July 1 which follows the end of the State's first regular session of its legislature beginning after the enactment of the bill—unless the State certified before this date that it is no longer prevented by State statute from making the payments. In the latter case the amendments would become effective at the beginning of the first calendar quarter following the certification.

Also, in the case of a State which is prevented by statute from meeting the requirements in the revised section 1602 of the Social Security Act, the amendments made in that title would not apply until the first July 1 following the close of the State's first regular session of its legislature beginning after the enactment of the bill—unless the State submitted before this date a State plan meeting these requirements. In the latter case the amendments would become effective on the date of submission of the plan.

Another exception to this effective date provision is made in the case of the new authorization, in the revised part C of title IV of the Social Security Act, for provision of child care services for persons undergoing training or employment—which would be effective on enactment of the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. I have joined as a cosponsor, Mr. President, because I wish to encourage the administration in this initiative.

I advise the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) that I reserve the right to put in another bill or move amendments, but the fundamental principle is so important and I think the initiative of the administration so sound and desirable that I felt it my duty to join as cosponsor.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the Senator from New York.

91ST CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 14173

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

OCTOBER 3, 1969

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin (for himself, Mr. GERALD R. FORD, Mr. ARENDS, Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois, Mr. CRAMER, Mr. POFF, Mr. RHODES, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BOB WILSON, Mr. SMITH of California, Mr. UTT, Mr. SCHNEEBELI, Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia, Mr. BUSH, Mr. MORTON, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means

A BILL

To authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, with the following table of contents, may be cited as the "Family Assistance Act of 1969".

FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress hereby finds and declares that—

(1) the present federally assisted welfare program provides benefits which vary widely throughout the country and which are unconscionably low in many States;

(2) the program for needy families with children is often administered in ways which are costly, inefficient, and degrading to personal dignity, and is characterized by intolerable incentives for family breakup, by inadequate encouragements to and opportunities for those on the welfare rolls to enter job training and employment so that they may become self-supporting, and by the inequitable exclusion from assistance of working families in poverty, especially families headed by a male;

(3) the growth of the welfare rolls threatens the fiscal stability of the States and the Federal-State partnership; and

(4) in the light of the harm to individual and family development and well-being caused by lack of income adequate to sustain a decent level of life, and the consequent damage to the human resources of the entire Nation, the Federal Government has a positive interest and responsibility in assuring the correction of these problems.

(b) It is therefore the purpose of this Act to fulfill the responsibility of the Federal Government to expand the training and employment incentives and opportunities, including necessary child care services, for those public assistance recipients who are members of needy families with children and who can become self-supporting; to provide a more adequate level and quality of living through income support and services for dependent persons and families who, through no fault of their own, require public assistance; to provide this financial assistance in a manner designed to strengthen family life and to establish more nearly uniform national standards of eligibility and aid; and to move to greater assumption by the Federal Government of the financial burden of these activities.

TITLE I—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

SEC. 101. Title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601, et seq.) is amended by adding after part C the following new parts:

"PART D—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 441. For the purposes of providing a basic level of financial assistance throughout the Nation to needy families with children, in a manner which will strengthen family life, encourage work training and self-support, and enhance personal dignity, there is authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year a sum sufficient to carry out this part.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"ELIGIBILITY

"SEC. 442. (a) Each family, as defined in section 445—

"(1) whose income, other than income which is excluded pursuant to section 443, is less than $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family plus $300 per year for each additional member, and

"(2) whose resources, other than resources excluded pursuant to section 444, are less than $1,500, shall, in accordance with and subject to the other provisions of this title, be paid a family assistance benefit.

"AMOUNT

"(b) The family assistance benefit for a family shall be payable at the rate of $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family plus $300 per year for each additional member thereof, reduced by the amount of income, not excluded pursuant to section 443, of the members of the family.

"PUERTO RICO, THE VIRGIN ISLANDS, AND GUAM

"(c) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 464.

"PERIOD FOR DETERMINATION OF BENEFITS

"(d) (1) A family's eligibility for and its amount of family assistance benefits shall be determined for each quarter of a calendar year. Such determination shall be made on the basis of the Secretary's estimate of the family's income for such quarter, after taking into account income for a preceding period and any modifications in income which are likely to occur on the basis of changes in conditions or circumstances. Eligibility for and the amount of benefits of a family for any quarter shall be redetermined at such time or times as may be provided by the Secretary, such redetermination to be effective prospectively.

"(2) The Secretary shall by regulation prescribe the cases in which and extent to which the amount of a family assistance benefit for any quarter shall be reduced by reason of the time elapsing since the beginning of such quarter and before the date of filing of the application for the benefit.

"(3) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which income received in one period (or expenses incurred in one period in earning income) shall, for purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits, be considered as received (or incurred) in another period or periods.

"(e) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the circumstances under which the gross income from a trade or business (including farming), will be considered sufficiently large to make such family ineligible for such benefits.

"INCOME

"EXCLUSIONS FROM INCOME

"SEC. 443. (a) In determining the income of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) subject to limitations (as to amount or otherwise) prescribed by the Secretary, the earned income of each child in the family who is, as determined by the Secretary under regulations, a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment;

"(2) (A) the total unearned income of all members of a family which is, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, too inconsequential, or received too infrequently or irregularly, to be included, and (B) subject to limitations prescribed by the Secretary any earned income which, as determined in accordance with such criteria, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included;

"(3) an amount of earned income of a member of the family equal to all, or such part (and according to such schedule) as the Secretary may prescribe, of the cost incurred by such member for child care which the Secretary deems necessary to securing or continuing in manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, employment, or self-employment;

"(4) the first $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods) of the total of earned income (not excluded by the preceding clauses of this section) of all members of the family plus one-half of the remainder thereof;

"(5) food stamps or any other assistance which is based on need and furnished by any State or political subdivision of a State or any Federal agency or by any private charitable agency or organization (as determined by the Secretary);

"(6) allowances under section 432(a);

"(7) any portion of a scholarship or fellowship received for use in paying the cost of tuition and fees at any educational (including technical or vocational education) institution;

"(8) home produce of a member of the family utilized by the household for its own consumptiton; and

"(9) one-half of all unearned income (not excluded by the preceding clauses of this subsection) of all members of the family

The preceding provisions of this subsection shall not apply to veterans' pensions or to payments to farmers for price support, diversion, or conservation. For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, see section 464.

"MEANING OF EARNED AND UNEARNED INCOME

"(b) For purposes of this part—

"(1) earned income shall include only—

"(A) remuneration for employment, other than remuneration to which section 209 (b), (c), (d), (f), or (k) applies;

"(B) net earnings from self-employment, as defined in section 211 other than the second and third sentences following clause (C) of subsection (a) (9) and other than clauses (A), (C), and (E) of paragraph (2) and paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), of subsection (c);

"(2) unearned income shall include among other things—

"(A) any payments received as an annuity, pension, retirement, or disability benefit, including veteran's or workmen's compensation and old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, railroad retirement, and unemployment benefits;

"(B) prizes and awards;

"(C) the proceeds of any life insurance policy;

"(D) gifts (cash or otherwise), support and alimony payments, and inheritances; and

"(E) rents, dividends, interest, and royalties.

"RESOURCES

"EXCLUSIONS FROM RESOURCES

"SEC. 444. (a) In determining the resources of a family there shall be excluded:

"(1) the home, household goods, and personal effects; and

"(2) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion.

"DISPOSITION OF RESOURCES

"(b) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to the period or periods of time within which, and the manner in which, various kinds of property must be disposed of in order not to be included in determining the family's eligibility for family assistance benefits. Any portion of the family's benefits paid for such period or periods shall be conditioned on such disposal.

"MEANING OF FAMILY AND CHILD

"COMPOSITION OF FAMILY

"SEC. 445. (a) Two or more individuals—

"(1) who are related by blood, marriage, or adoption,

"(2) who are living in a place of residence maintained by one or more of them as his or her own home,

"(3) who are residents of the United States, and

"(4) at least one of whom is a child who is not married to another of such individuals, shall be regarded as a family for purposes of this part and parts A, C, and E.

"DEFINITION OF CHILD

"(b) For purposes of this part and parts C and E, the term 'child' means an individual who is (1) under the age of eighteen or (2) under the age of twenty-one and (as determined by the Secretary under regulations) a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment.

"MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

"(c) If an individual is in the Armed Forces of the United States, then, for purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of family assistance benefits under this part, (1) he shall not be regarded as a member of a family, and (2) the spouse and children of such individual, and such other individuals living in the same place of residence as such spouse and children as may be specified in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, shall not be considered members of a family.

"DETERMINATION OF FAMILY RELATIONSHIPS

"(d) In determining whether an individual is related by blood, marriage, or adoption, appropriate State law, as determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, shall be applied.

"INCOME AND RESOURCES OF NONCONTRIBUTING ADULT

"(e) For purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of family assistance benefits for any family there shall be excluded the income and resources of any individual, other than a child or a parent of a child (or a spouse of a child or parent), which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is not available to other members of the family; and for such purposes, any such individual shall not be considered a member of such family.

"RECIPIENTS OF AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED INELIGIBLE

"(f) If an individual is receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI, or if his needs are taken into account in determining the need of another person receiving such aid, then, for the period for which such aid is received, such individual shall not be regarded as a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the family assistance benefits of the family.

"PAYMENTS AND PROCEDURES

"PAYMENTS OF BENEFITS

"SEC. 446. (a) (1) Family assistance benefits shall be paid at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary determines will best effectuate the purposes of this title.

"(2) Payment of the family assistance benefit of any family may be made to any one or more members of the family.

"(3) The Secretary may by regulation establish ranges of incomes within which a single amount of family assistance benefit shall apply.

"OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

"(b) Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of family assistance benefits has been paid with respect to any family, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments of the family or by recovery from or payment to any one or more of the individuals who are or were members thereof. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with respect to a family with a view to avoiding penalizing members of the family who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this part, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration of this part.

"(c) (1) The Secretary shall provide reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any individual who is or claims to be a member of a family and is dissatisfied with any determination under this part with respect to eligibility of the family for family assistance benefits, the number of members of the family, or the amount of the benefits.

"(2) Final determination of the Secretary after such hearings shall be subject to judicial review as provided in section 205(g) to the same extent as the Secretary's final determinations under section 205.

"PROCEDURES; PROHIBITION OF ASSIGNMENTS

"(d) The provisions of sections 206 and 207 and subsections (a), (d), (e), and (f) of section 205 shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as they apply in the case of title II.

"APPLICATIONS AND FURNISHING OF INFORMATION BY FAMILIES

"(e) (1) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to families or members thereof with respect to the filing of applications, the furnishing of other data and material, and the reporting of events and changes in circumstances, as may be necessary to determine eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits.

"(2) In order to encourage prompt reporting of events and changes in circumstances relevant to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, and more accurate estimates of expected income or expenses by members of families for purposes of such eligibility and amount of benefits, the Secretary may prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which—

"(A) failure to so report or delay in so reporting, or

"(B) inaccuracy of information which is furnished by the members and on which the estimates of income or expenses for such purposes are based, will result in treatment as overpayments of all or any portion of payments of such benefits for the period involved.

"FURNISHING OF INFORMATION BY OTHER AGENCIES

"(f) The head of any Federal agency shall provide such information as the Secretary needs for purposes of determining eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, or verifying other information with respect thereto. The Secretary may from time to time pay to the head of such agency, in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be agreed upon, the cost of providing such information.

"SEC. 447. (a) Every individual who is a member of a family which is found to be eligible for family assistance benefits, other than a member to whom the Secretary finds clause (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), or (6) of subsection (b) applies, shall register for manpower services, training, and employment with the local public employment office of the State as provided by regulations of the Secretary of Labor. If and for so long as any such individual is found by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to have failed (after a reasonable period of time), without good cause as determined by the Secretary of Labor, to so register, he shall not be regarded as a member of a family but his income which would otherwise be counted under this part as income of a family shall be so counted; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for family assistance benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for purposes of determination of the amount of such benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(b) An individual shall not be required to register pursuant to subsection (a) if the Secretary determines that such individual is:

"(1) ill, incapacitated, or of an advanced age;

"(2) a mother or other relative of a child under the age of six who is caring for such child;

"(3) the mother, or other female caretaker of a child, if the father or another adult male relative is in the home and not excluded by clauses (1), (2), (4), or (5) of this subsection;

"(4) a child;

"(5) one whose presence in the home on a substantially continuous basis is required because of the illness or incapacity of another member of the household;

"(6) working full time, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary of Labor.

An individual who would, but for the preceding sentence, be required to register pursuant to part A, may, if he wishes, register as provided in such subsection.

"(c) The Secretary shall make provision for the furnishing of child care services in such cases and for so long as he deems appropriate in the case of individuals registered pursuant to subsection (a) who are, pursuant to such registration, participating in manpower services, training, or employment.

"(d) In the case of any member of a family receiving family assistance benefits who is not required to register pursuant to subsection (a) because of such member's disability or handicap, the Secretary shall make provision for referral of such member to the appropriate State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act.

"DENIAL OF BENEFITS IN CASE OF REFUSAL OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, OR EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 448. For purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits under this part, an individual who has registered as required under section 447 (a) shall not be regarded as a member of a family, but his income which would otherwise be counted as income of the family under this part shall be so counted, if and for so long as he has been found by the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing, to have refused without good cause to participate in suitable manpower services, training, or employment, or to have refused without good cause to accept suitable employment in which he is able to engage which is offered through the public employment offices of the State, or is otherwise offered by an employer if the offer of such employer is determined by the Secretary of Labor, after notification by such employer or otherwise, to be a bona fide offer of employment; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for the purposes of determination of the amount of its benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"TRANSFER OF FUNDS FOR ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS

"SEC. 449. The Secretary shall, pursuant to and to the extent provided by agreement with the Secretary of Labor, pay to the Secretary of Labor amounts which he estimates would be paid as family assistance benefits under this part to individuals participating in public or private employer compensated on-the-job training under a program of the Secretary of Labor if they were not participating in such training.

Such amounts shall be available to pay the costs of such programs.

"PART E—STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"PAYMENTS UNDER TITLES IV, V, XVI, AND XIX CONDITIONED ON SUPPLEMENTATION

"SEC. 451. In order for a State to be eligible for payments pursuant to title V, XVI, or XIX or, part A or B of this title, with respect to expenditures for any quarter beginning on or after the date this part becomes effective with respect to such State, it must have in effect an agreement with the Secretary under which it will make supplementary payments, as provided in this part, to any family other than a family in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed.

"AMOUNT OF SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

"SEC. 452. (a) Eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments under the agreement with any State under this part shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be determined by application of the provisions of, and rules and regulations under, sections 442 (a) (2) and (d), 443, 444, 445, 446 (to the extent the Secretary deems appropriate), 447, and 448, and by application of the standard for determining need under the plan of such State as in effect for July 1969 and complying with the requirements for approval under part A as in effect on such date (but subject to such maximums and percentage reductions as were imposed under such plan on the amount of aid paid and, then, with the resulting amount of the supplementary payment to any individual further reduced by the family assistance benefit payable under part D with respect to him).

"(b) In applying the provisions of section 443 for purposes of supplementary payments pursuant to an agreement under this part—

"(1) in the case of earned income to which clause (4) of subsection (a) of such section 443 applies, the amount to be disregarded shall be $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods), plus—

"(A) one-third of the portion of the remainder of earnings which does not exceed twice the amount of the family assistance benefits that would be payable to the family if it had no income (thereby resulting in reduction of the supplementary payment by one-sixth of that portion of such remainder of the earnings), plus

"(B) one-fifth (or more if the Secretary by regulation so prescribes) of the balance of the earnings (thereby resulting in further reduction of the supplementary payment by four-fifths, or proportionately less if the Secretary has prescribed such a regulation, of that balance of the earnings); and

"(2) in the case of income to which clause (9) of subsection (a) of such section 443 applies, the amount to be disregarded shall be—

"(A) one-third of such income which does not exceed twice the amount of the family assistance benefits that would be payable to the family if it had no income (thereby resulting in reduction of the supplementary payment by one-sixth of that portion of such income), plus

"(B) one-fifth (or more if the Secretary by regulation so prescribes) of the balance of such income (thereby resulting in further reduction of the supplementary payment by four-fifths, or proportionately less if the Secretary has prescribed such a regulation, of that balance of the income); and

(3) the family assistance benefit of a family payable under part D shall not be counted to any extent. For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 464.

"(c) The agreement with a State under this part shall—

"(1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State;

(2) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to carry out or supervise the carrying out of the agreement in the State;

"(3) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency carrying out the agreement to any individual whose claim for supplementary payments is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(4) provide (A) such methods of administration (including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods) as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the agreement in the State, and (B) for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff, with particular emphasis on the full- or part-time employment of recipients of supplementary payments and other persons of low income, as community services aides, in carrying out the agreement and for the use of nonpaid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that the State agency carrying out the agreement will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(6) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments to purposes directly connected with the administration of this title; and

"(7) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for supplementary payments shall have opportunity to do so, and that supplementary payments shall be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 453. (a) (1) The Secretary shall pay to any State which has in effect an agreement under this part for any fiscal year in the period ending with the close of the fifth full fiscal year for which this part is effective with respect to such State the excess of—

pursuant to its agreement under this part which are required under section 452, plus (ii) the difference between (I) the total of the expenditures for such fiscal year under its plan approved under title XVI as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which would have been included as aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under the plan approved thereunder and in effect for July 1969, plus so much of the rest of such expenditures as are required (as determined by the Secretary) by reason of the amendments to such title made by the Family Assistance Act of 1969 and (II) the total of the amounts determined under section 1604 for such State with respect to such expenditures for such year, over

"(B) 90 per centum of the difference between (i) the total of the expenditures which would have been made as aid or assistance (excluding emergency assistance specified in section 406(e) (1) (A), foster care under section 408, expenditures for institutional services in intermediate care facilities referred to in section 1121, expenditures for repairs to homes referred to in section 1119, and aid or assistance in the form of medical care or any other type of remedial care) for such year under the plans of such State approved under titles I, IV (part A), X, XIV, and XVI and in effect in the month prior to the enactment of this part if they had continued in effect during such year and if they had included (if they did not already do so) payments to dependent children of unemployed fathers authorized by section 407 (as in effect on July 1, 1969), and (ii) the total of the amounts which would have been determined under sections 3, 403, 1003, 1403, and 1603, or under section 1118, of such State with respect to such expenditures for such year.

The Secretary may prescribe methods for determining the amounts referred to in clause (B) on the basis of estimates and trends in expenditures and other experience of the State for prior years.

"(2) The Secretary shall also pay to each such State an amount equal to 50 per centum of its administrative costs found necessary by the Secretary for carrying out its agreement.

"(b) Payments under subsection (a) shall be made at such time or times, in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in such installments as the Secretary may determine; and shall be made on such conditions as may be necessary to assure the carrying out of the purposes of this title.

"(c) In the case of any State with respect to which the amount determined under clause (A) of subsection (a) (1) for any year is less than 50 per centum of the difference referred to in clause (B) of such subsection for such year, such State shall pay to the Secretary, at such time or times and in such installments as he may prescribe, the sum by which such amount determined under clause (A) of subsection (a) (1) is less than such 50 per centum. If such State does not pay any part of such amount at the time or times prescribed, the Secretary shall withhold such part from sums to which the State is entitled under part A or B of this title or under title V, VXI, or XIX; but the amounts so withheld shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such part or title. The withholding of amounts pursuant to the preceding sentence shall be effected at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary may deem appropriate.

"FAILURE BY STATE TO COMPLY WITH AGREEMENT

"SEC. 454. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to a State with which he has an agreement under this part, finds that such State is failing to comply therewith, he shall withhold all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of the payments to which such State is otherwise entitled under part A or B of this title or under title V, XVI, or XIX; but the amounts so withheld shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such part or title. Such withholding shall be effected at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary may deem appropriate.

"PART F—ADMINISTRATION

"AGREEMENTS WITH STATES

"SEC. 461. (a) The Secretary may enter into an agreement with any State under which the Secretary will make, on behalf of the State, the supplementary payments provided for pursuant to part E or will perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon. In any such case, the agreement shall also provide for payment by the State to the Secretary of an amount equal to the supplementary payments the State would otherwise make under part E, less any payments which would be made to the State under section 453 (a), together with one-half of the additional cost of the Secretary involved in carrying out such agreement, other than the cost of making the payments.

"(b) The Secretary may also enter into an agreement with any State under which such State will make, on behalf of the Secretary, the family assistance benefit payments provided for under part D with respect to all or specified families in the State who are eligible for such benefits or will perform such other functions in connection with the administration of part D as may be agreed upon. The cost of carrying out any such agreement shall be paid to the State in advance or by way of reimbursement and in such installments as may be agreed upon.

"PENALTIES FOR FRAUD

"SEC. 462. The provisions of section 208, other than paragraph (a), shall apply with respect to benefits under part D and allowances under part C, of this title, to the same extent as they apply to payments under title II.

"REPORT, EVALUATION, RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATIONS, AND TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 463. (a) The Secretary shall make an annual report to the President and the Congress on the operation and administration of parts D and E, including an evaluation thereof in carrying out the purposes of such parts and recommendations with respect thereto. The Secretary is authorized to conduct evaluations directly or by grants or contracts of the programs authorized by such parts.

"(b) The Secretary is authorized to conduct, directly or by grants or contracts, research into or demonstrations of ways of better providing financial assistance to needy persons or of better carrying out the purposes of part D, and in so doing to waive any requirements or limitations in such part with respect to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits for such family, members of families, or groups thereof as he deems appropriate.

"(c) The Secretary is authorized to provide such technical assistance to States, and to provide, directly or through grants or contracts, for such training of personnel of States, as he deems appropriate to assist them in more efficiently and effectively carrying out their agreements under this part and part E.

"(d) In addition to funds otherwise available therefor, such portion of any appropriation to carry out part D or E as the Secretary may determine, but not in excess of one-half of 1 per centum thereof, shall be available to him to carry out this section.

"SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR PUERTO RICO, THE VIRGIN ISLANDS, AND GUAM

"Sec. 464. (a) In applying the provisions of sections 442 (a) and (b), 443 (a) (4), 452 (b) (1), 1603 (a) (1) and (b) (1), and 1604 (1) and (2) with respect to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the amounts to be used shall (instead of the $500, $300, and $1,500 in such section 442 (a) and (b) and section 1603 (a) (1), the $720 in section 443 (a) (4) and section 452 (b) (1), the $90 in section 1603 (b) (1), the $65 in section 1604 (2), and the $50 in section 1604 (1)) bear the same ratio to such $500, $300, $1,500, $720, $90, $65, and $50 as the per capita incomes of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, respectively, bear to the per capita income of that one of the fifty States which has the lowest per capita income; except that in no case may the amounts so used exceed such $500, $300, $1,500, $720, $90, $65, and $50.

"(b) (1) The amounts to be used under such sections in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam shall be promulgated by the Secretary between July 1 and September 30 of each even-numbered year, on the basis of the average per capita income of each State and of the United States for the most recent calendar year for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce. Such promulgation shall be conclusive for fiscal year beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation: Provided, That the Secretary shall promulgate such amounts as soon as possible after the enactment of this part, which promulgation shall be conclusive for 6 calendar quarters in the period beginning with the January 1 following the fiscal year in which this part is enacted, and ending with the close of the second June 30 thereafter.

"(2) The term 'United States', for purposes of paragraph (1) only, means the fifty States and the District of Columbia.

"(c) If the amounts which would otherwise be promulgated for any year for any of the three States referred to in subsection (a) would be lower than the amounts promulgated for such State for the immediately preceding period, the amounts for such fiscal year shall be increased to the extent of the difference; and the amounts so increased shall be the amounts promulgated for such year."

MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND CHILD CARE PROGRAMS

SEC. 102. Part C of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 630 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"PART C—MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND DAY CARE PROGRAMS FOR RECIPIENTS OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE OR SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFITS

"PURPOSE

"SEC. 430. The purpose of this part is to authorize provision, for individuals who are members of a family receiving benefits under part D or supplementary payments pursuant to part E, of manpower services, training, employment, and child care and related services necessary to train such individuals, prepare them for employment, and otherwise assist them in securing and retaining regular employment and having the opportunity for advancement in employment, to the end that needy families with children will be restored to self-supporting, independent, and useful roles in their communities.

"OPERATION OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

"SEC. 431. (a) The Secretary of Labor (hereinafter in this part referred to as the 'Secretary') shall, for each person registered pursuant to part D, in accordance with priorities prescribed by him, develop or assure the development of an employability plan describing the manpower services, training, and employment which the Secretary determines each person needs in order to enable him to become self-supporting and secure and retain employment and opportunities for advancement.

"(b) The Secretary shall, in accordance with the provisions of this part, establish and assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment programs in each State for persons registered pursuant to part D or receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E. The Secretary shall, through such programs, provide or assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities necessary to prepare such persons for and place them in regular employment, including such services and opportunities which the Secretary is authorized to provide under any other Act, and including counseling, testing, institutional and on-the-job training, work experience, upgrading, program orientation, relocation assistance (including grants, loans, and the furnishing of such services as will aid an involuntarily unemployed individual to relocate in an area where he may obtain suitable employment), incentives to public or private employers to hire and train these persons (including reimbursement for a limited period when an employee may not be fully productive), special work projects, job development, coaching, job placement and follow up services required to assist in securing and retaining employment and opportunities for advancement.

"ALLOWANCES FOR INDIVIDUALS UNDERGOING TRAINING

"SEC. 432. (a) (1) The Secretary shall pay to each individual who is a member of a family and is participating in manpower training under this part an incentive allowance of $30 per month. If such member or members of a family would (but for the receipt of payments pursuant to this title) be eligible in such month, under any other statute providing for manpower training, for allowances which in total would be in excess of the sum of the family assistance benefit and supplementary payments pursuant to part E payable with respect to such month to the family, the total of the incentive allowances per month under this section for such members shall be equal to such excess, or to $30 for each such member, whichever is greater.

"(2) The Secretary shall, in accordance with regulations, also pay, to any member of a family participating in manpower training under this part, allowances for transportation and other costs to him directly related to his participation in training.

"(3) The Secretary shall by regulation provide for such smaller allowances under this subsection as he deems appropriate for individuals in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

"(b) Such allowances shall be in lieu of allowances provided for participants in manpower training programs under any other Act.

"(c) Subsection (a) shall not apply to any member of a family who is participating in a program of the Secretary providing public or private employer compensated on-the-job training.

"DENIAL OF ALLOWANCES FOR REFUSAL TO UNDERGO TRAINING

"SEC. 433. (a) If and for so long as the Secretary determines that an individual who is a member of a family and has been required to register under part D for manpower training or employment has, without good cause, ceased to participate in manpower training under this part, no allowance under this part shall be payable to such individual.

"(b) The Secretary shall provide reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to any individual with respect to whom such a determination has been made.

"(c) Final determinations of the Secretary after such hearings shall be subject to judicial review as provided by section 205(g) for final determinations under title II, and the provisions of sections 205 (a), (d), (e), and (f), 206, and 207 shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as they apply to title II.

"UTILIZATION OF OTHER PROGRAMS

"SEC. 434. In providing the manpower training and employment services and opportunities required by this part the Secretary, to the maximum extent feasible, shall assure that such services and opportunities are provided in such manner, through such means, and using all authority available to him under any other Act (and subject to all duties and responsibilities thereunder) as will further the establishment of an integrated and comprehensive manpower training program involving all sectors of the economy and all levels of government and as will make maximum use of existing manpower and manpower related programs and agencies. To such end the Secretary may use the funds appropriated to him under this part to provide the programs required by this part through such other Act, to the same extent and under the same conditions as if appropriated under such other Act and in making use of the programs of other Federal,

State, or local agencies, public or private, the Secretary may reimburse such agencies for services rendered to persons under this part to the extent such services and opportunities are not otherwise available on a nonreimbursable basis.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"SEC. 435. The Secretary may issue such rules and regulations as he finds necessary to carry out the purposes of this part: Provided, That in developing policies and programs for manpower services, training, and employment, the Secretary shall first obtain the concurrence of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with regard to such policies and programs which are under the usual and traditional authority of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (including basic education, institutional training, health, child care and other supportive services, new careers and job restructuring in the health, education, and welfare professions, and work-study programs), and shall consult with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with regard to all such other policies and programs.

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 436. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for each fiscal year a sum sufficient for carrying out the purposes of this part (other than section 437), including payment of not to exceed (except in such cases as the Secretary may determine) 90 per centum of the cost of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities provided for individuals registered pursuant to section 447. The Secretary of Labor shall establish criteria to achieve an equitable apportionment among the States of Federal expenditures for carrying out the programs authorized by section 431. In developing these criteria the Secretary shall consider the number of registrations under section 447 and other relevant factors.

"CHILD CARE AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES

"SEC. 437. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization, for not to exceed (except in such cases as the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may determine) 90 per centum of the cost of projects for the provision of child care and related services, including necessary alteration, remodeling, and renovation of facilities, which may be necessary or appropriate in order to better enable an individual who has been registered pursuant to part D or is receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part or to enable a member of a family, which is or has been (within such period of time as the Secretary may prescribe) eligible for benefits under such part D or payments pursuant to such part E, to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part; or, with respect to the period prior to the date when part D becomes effective for a State, to better enable an individual receiving aid to families with dependent children, or whose needs are taken into account in determining the need of any one claiming or receiving such aid, to participate in manpower training or employment.

"(b) Such sums shall also be available to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization for evaluation, training of personnel, technical assistance or research or demonstration projects to determine more effective methods or providing any such care and other services.

"(c) To the extent permitted by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, the non-Federal share of the cost of any such project may be provided in the form of services or facilities.

"(d) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may provide, in any case in which a family is able to pay for part or all of the cost of day care or other services provided under a project assisted under this section, for payment by the family of such fees for the care or services as may be reasonable in the light of such ability.

"ADVANCE FUNDING

"SEC. 438. (a) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available under this part, appropriations for grants, contracts, or other payments with respect to individuals registered pursuant to section 447 are authorized to be included in the appropriation Act for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which they are available for obligation.

"(b) In order to effect a transition to the advance funding method of timing appropriation action, the amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply notwithstanding that its initial application will result in enactment in the same year (whether in the same appropriation Act or otherwise) of two separate appropriations, one for the then current fiscal year and one for the succeeding fiscal year.

"EVALUATION AND RESEARCH; REPORT TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 439. (a) The Secretary shall (jointly with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare) provide for the continuing evaluation of the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part, including their effectiveness in achieving stated goals and their impact on other related programs. The Secretary may conduct research regarding, and demonstrations of, ways to improve the effectiveness of the manpower training and employment programs so provided and may also conduct demonstrations of improved training techniques for upgrading the skills of the working poor. The Secretary may, for these purposes, contract for independent evaluations of and research regarding such programs or individual projects under such programs, and establish a data collection, processing, and retrieval system.

"(b) The Secretary shall report to the Congress on or before the end of each fiscal year (with the first such report being made on or before the July 1 following the first full year after the date on which part D becomes effective with respect to any States) on the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part."

ELIMINATION OF PRESENT PROVISIONS ON CASH ASSISTANCE FOR FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

SEC. 103. (a) Section 401 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601) is amended by striking out "financial assistance and" in the first sentence.

(b) Section 402(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 602) is amended by—

(1) striking out "aid and" in so much thereof as precedes clause (1);

(2) inserting, at the beginning of clause (1), "except to the extent permitted by the Secretary,";

(3) striking out clause (4);

(4) in clause (5) (B), striking out "recipients and other persons" and inserting in lieu thereof "persons" and striking out "providing services to applicants and recipients" and inserting in lieu thereof "providing services under the plan";

(5) striking out clauses (7) and (8);

(6) in clause (9), striking out "aid to families with dependent children" and inserting in lieu thereof "the plan";

(7) striking out clauses (10), (11), and (12);

(8) in clause (14), striking out "for each child and relative who receives aid to families with dependent children, and each appropriate individual (living in the same home as a relative and child receiving such aid whose needs are taken into account in making the determination under clause (7))" and inserting in lieu thereof "for each member of a family receiving assistance to needy families with children, each appropriate individual (living in the same home as such family) whose needs would be taken into account in determining the need of any such member under the State plan (approved under this part) as in effect prior to the enactment of part D, and each individual who would have been eligible to receive aid to families with dependent children under such plan" and striking out "such child, relative, and individual" and inserting in lieu thereof "such member or individual";

(9) striking out clause (15) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(15) (A) provide for the development of a program, for appropriate members of such families and such other individuals, for preventing or reducing the incidence of births out of wedlock and otherwise strengthening family life, and for implementing such program by assuring that in all appropriate cases family planning services are offered to them, but acceptance of family planning services provided under the plan shall be voluntary on the part of such members and individuals and shall not be a prerequisite to eligibility for or the receipt of any other service under the plan; and (B) to the extent that services provided under this clause or clause (14) are furnished by the staff of the State agency or the local agency administering the State plan in each of the political subdivisions of the State, for the establishment of a single organizational unit in such State or local agency, as the case may be, responsible for the furnishing of such services;"

(10) striking out "aid" in clause (16) and "aid to families with dependent children" in clause (17) (A) (i) and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance to needy families with children" and striking out "aid" in clause (17) (A) (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance";

(11) striking out clause (19);

(12) striking out "aid to families with dependent children in the form of foster care" in clause (20) and inserting in lieu thereof "payments for foster care"; striking out "dependent child or children with respect to whom aid is being provided under the State plan" in clause (21) (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "child or children with respect to whom assistance to needy families with children or foster care is being provided";

(13) striking out "aid is being provided under the plan of such other State" in clause (A) and clause (B) of clause (22) and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance to needy families with children or foster care payments are being provided in such other State";

(14) striking out clause (23) and striking out "; and" at the end of clause (22) and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

(c) Section 402 (b) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that he shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for services under it, a residence requirement which denies services or foster care payments with respect to any individual residing in the State."

(d) Such section 402 is further amended by striking out subsection (c) thereof.

(1) striking out "aid and services" and inserting in lieu thereof "services" in so much thereof as precedes paragraph (1);

(2) amending paragraph (1) to read:

"(1) an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as payments for foster care in accordance with section 408—

"(A) five-sixths of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditures as exceeds the product of $18 multiplied by the number of children receiving such foster care in such month; plus

"(B) the Federal percentage of the amount by which such expenditures exceeds the maximum which may be counted under subparagraph (A), not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to such month as exceeds the product of $100 multiplied by the number of children receiving such foster care for such month."

(3) striking out paragraph (2);

(4) in paragraph (3), striking out "in the case of any State," in so much thereof as preceeds subparagraph (A), striking out in clause (i) of such subparagraph "or relative who is receiving aid under the plan, or to any other individual (living in the same home as such relative and child) whose needs are taken into account in making the determination under clause (7) of such section" and inserting in lieu thereof "receiving foster care or any member of a family receiving assistance to needy families with children or to any other individual (living in the same home as such family) whose needs would be taken into account in determining the need of any such member under the State plan approved under this part as in effect prior to the enactment of part D, striking out in clause (ii) of such subparagraph "child or relative who is applying for aid to families with dependent children or" and inserting in lieu thereof "member of a family" and striking out in such clause (ii) "likely to become an applicant for or recipient of such aid" and inserting in lieu thereof "likely to become eligible to receive such assistance".

(5) striking out the sentences of such subsection (a) which follow paragraph (5);

(f) Subsection (b) of such section 403 is amended by striking out "records showing the number of dependent children in the State and (C)" in paragraph (1) thereof and by striking out, in paragraph (2) thereof, "(A)" and everything beginning with ", and (B)" and all that follows down to but not including the period.

(g) Section 404 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 604) is amended by striking out "(a) In the case of any State plan for aid and services" and inserting in lieu thereof "In the case of any State plan for services" and by striking out subsection (b) thereof.

(h) Section 405 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 605) is repealed.

(i) Section 406 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 606) is amended by—

(1) striking out subsections (a) and (b) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(a) The term 'child' means a child as defined in section 445(b).

"(b) The term 'needy families with children' means families who are receiving family assistance benefits under part D and who (1) are receiving supplementary payments under part E, or (2) would be eligible to receive aid to families with dependent children, under a State plan (approved under this part) as in effect prior to the enactment of part D, if the State plan had continued in effect and if it included assistance to dependent children of unemployed fathers pursuant to section 407 as it was in effect prior to such enactment; and 'assistance to needy families with children' means family assistance benefits under such part D, paid to such families."

(2) striking out subsection (c);

(3) in subsection (e) (1), striking out "living with any of the relatives specified in subsection (a) (1) in a place of residence maintained by one or more of such relatives as his or their own home" and inserting in lieu thereof "a member of a family (as defined in section 445 (a))" and striking out "because such child or relative refused" and inserting in lieu thereof "because such child or another member of such family refused".

(j) Section 407 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 607) is repealed.

(k) Section 408 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 608) is amended by—

(1) amending so much (including the heading) thereof as precedes subparagraph (1) of paragraph (b) to read as follows:

"FOSTER CARE

"SEC. 408. For purposes of this part—

"(a) foster care shall include only such care which is provided in behalf of a child (1) who would, except for his removal from the home of a family as a result of a judicial determination to the effect that continuation therein would be contrary to his welfare, be a member of such family receiving assistance to needy families with children, (2) whose placement and care are the responsibility of (A) the State or local agency administering the State plan approved under section 402, or (B) any other public agency with whom the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such State plan has made an agreement which is still in effect and which includes provision for assuring development of a plan, satisfactory to such State agency, for such child as provided in paragraph (f) (1) and such other provisions as may be necessary to assure accomplishment of the objectives of the State plan approved under section 402, (3) who has been placed in a foster family home or child-care institution as a result of such determination, and (4) who (A) received assistance to needy families with children in or for the month in which court proceedings leading to such determination were initiated, or (B) would have received such assistance to needy families with children in or for such month if application had been made therefor, or (C) in the case of a child who had been a member of a family (as defined in section 445(a)) within six months prior to the month in which such proceedings were initiated, would have received such assistance in or for such month if in such month he had been a member of (and removed from the home of) such a family and application had been made therefor;

"(b) but only if such care is provided—";

(2) in paragraph (b)(2), striking out "'aid to families with dependent children'" and inserting in lieu thereof "foster care" and striking out "such foster care" and inserting in lieu thereof "foster care".

(3) striking out subsection (c);

(4) striking out "aid" and inserting in lieu thereof "services" in subsection (e);

(5) in subsection (f)(1), striking out "relative specified in section 406(a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "family (as defined in section 445(a))"; and

(6) in subsection (f)(2), striking out "522" and inserting in lieu thereof "422" and striking out "part 3 of title V" and inserting in lieu thereof "part B of this title".

CHANGE IN HEADING

SEC. 104. (a) The heading of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601, et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE IV—FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS, STATE SUPPLEMENTAL PAYMENTS, WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAMS, AND GRANTS TO STATES FOR FAMILY AND CHILD WELFARE SERVICES".

(b) The heading of part A of such title IV is amended to read as follows:

"PART A—SERVICES TO NEEDY FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN".

TITLE II—AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SEC. 201. Title XVI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1381 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE XVI—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1601. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance to needy individuals who are sixty-five years of age or over, blind, or disabled and for the purpose of encouraging each State to furnish rehabilitation and other services to help such individuals attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year sums sufficient to carry out these purposes, The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States having State plans approved under section 1602.

"STATE PLANS FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AND SERVICE TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1602. (a) A State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled must—

"(1) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer or supervise the administration of the State plan;

"(2) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis (but the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of individuals employed in accordance with such methods);

"(3) provide for the training and effective use of social service personnel in the administration of the plan, for the furnishing of technical assistance to units of State government and of political subdivisions which are furnishing financial assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled, and for the development through research or demonstration projects of new or improved methods of furnishing assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled;

"(4) provide for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff (with particular emphasis on the full-time or part-time employment of recipients and other persons of low income as community service aides) in the administration of the plan and for the use of non-paid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants and recipients and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for aid under the plan shall have opportunity to do so and that such aid shall be furnished with reasonable promptness with respect to all eligible individuals;

"(6) provide for the use of a simplified statement, conforming to standards prescribed by the Secretary, to establish eligibility, and for adequate and effective methods of verification of eligibility of applicants and recipients through the use, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, of sampling and other scientific techniques;

"(7) provide that, except to the extent permitted by the Secretary with respect to services, the State plan shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them;

"(8) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(9) provide that, in determining whether an individual is blind, there shall be an examination by a physician skilled in the diseases of the eye or by an optometrist, whichever the individual may select;

"(10) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency to any individual whose claim for aid under the plan is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(11) provide for periodic evaluation of the operations of the State plan, not less often than annually, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, and the furnishing of annual reports of such evaluations to the Secretary together with any necessary modifications of the State plan resulting from such evaluations;

"(12) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(13) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants and recipients to purposes directly connected with the administration of the plan (consistent with section 618 of the Revenue Act of 1951);

"(14) provide, if the plan includes aid to or on behalf of individuals in private or public institutions, for the establishment or designation of a State authority or authorities which shall be responsible for establishing and maintaining standards for such institutions;

"(15) provide a description of the services which the State makes available to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain self-support or self-care, including a description of the steps taken to assure, in the provision of such services, maximum utilization of all available services that are similar or related;

"(16) provide for periodic evaluation of the operation of the plan by persons interested in or expert in matters related to assistance and services to the aged, blind, and disabled, including persons who are recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled; and

"(17) assure that, in administering the State plan and providing services thereunder, the State will observe priorities established by the Secretary and comply with such performance standards as the Secretary may, from time to time, establish.

Notwithstanding paragraph (1), if on January 1, 1962, and on the date on which a State submits (or submitted) its plan for approval under this title, the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title X was different from the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title I and the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title XIV, then the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of such plan approved under title X may be designated to administer or supervise the administration of the portion of the State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which relates to blind individuals and a separate State agency may be established or designated to administer or supervise the administration of the rest of such plan; and in such case the part of the plan which each such agency administers, or the administration of which each such agency supervises, shall be regarded as a separate plan for purposes of this title.

"(b) The Secretary shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) and in section 1603, except that he shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for aid under the plan—

"(1) an age requirement of more than sixty-five years;

"(2) any residency requirement which excludes any individual who resides in the State;

"(3) any citizen requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States;

"(4) any disability or age requirement which excludes any persons under a severe disability, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, who are eighteen years of age or older; or

"(5) any blindness or age requirement which excludes any persons who are blind as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary.

In the case of any State to which the provisions of section 344 of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1950 were applicable on January 1, 1962, and to which the sentence of section 1002(b) following paragraph (2) thereof is applicable on the date on which its State plan was or is submitted for approval under this title, the Secretary shall approve the plan of such State for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled for purposes of this title, even though it does not meet the requirements of section 1603(a) if it meets all other requirements of this title for an approved plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled; but payments to the State under this title shall be made, in the case of any such plan, only with respect to expenditures thereunder which would be included as expenditures for the purposes of this title under a plan approved under this section without regard to the provisions of this sentence.

"DETERMINATION OF NEED

"SEC. 1603. (a) A State plan must provide that, in determining the need for aid under the plan, the State agency shall take into consideration any other income or resources of the individual claiming such aid as well as any expenses reasonably attributable to the earning of any such income; except that, in making such determination with respect to any individual—

"(1) the State agency shall not consider as resources (A) the home, household goods, and personal effects of the individual, (B) other personal or real property, the total value of which does not exceed $1,500, or (C) other property which as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion, but shall apply the provisions of section 442(e) and regulations thereunder;

"(2) the State agency shall not consider the financial responsibility of any individual for any applicant or recipient unless the applicant or recipient is the individual's spouse, or the individual's child who is under the age of twenty-one or is blind or severely disabled;

"(3) if such individual is blind, the State agency (A) shall disregard the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half of earned income in excess of $85 per month, and (B) shall, for a period not in excess of twelve months, and may, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, disregard such additional amounts of other income and resources, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of such plan;

"(4) if the individual is not blind but is severely disabled, the State agency may disregard (A) not more than the first $20 of the first $80 per month of earned income plus one-half of the remainder thereof and (B) such additional amounts of other income and resources, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of the plan, but only with respect to the part or parts of such period during substantially all of which he is undergoing vocational rehabilitation;

"(5) if such individual has attained age sixty-five and is neither blind nor severely disabled, the State agency may disregard not more than the first $20 of the first $80 per month of earned income plus one-half of the remainder thereof.

"(b) A State plan must also provide that—

"(1) each eligible individual, other than one who is a patient in a medical institution or is receiving institutional service in an intermediate care facility to which section 1121 applies, shall receive financial assistance in such amount as, when added to his income which is not disregarded pursuant to subsection (a), will provide a minimum of $90 per month.

"(2) the standard of need applied for determining eligibility for and amount of aid for the aged, blind, and disabled shall not be lower than (A) the standard applied for this purpose under the State plan (approved under this title) as in effect on the date of enactment of part D of title IV of this Act, or (B) if there was no such plan in effect for such State on such date, the standard of need which was applicable under—

"(i) the State plan which was in effect on such date and was approved under title I, in the case of any individual who is sixty-five years of age or older,

"(ii) the State plan in effect on such date and approved under title X, in the case of an individual who is blind, or

except that if two or more of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are applicable to an individual, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than the higher (or highest) of the standards under the applicable plans, and except that if none of such clauses is applicable to individuals, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than higher of the standards under the State plans approved under title I, X, or XIV, which was in effect on such date, and

"(3) no aid will be furnished to any individual under the State plan for any period with respect to which he is considered a member of a family receiving family assistance benefits under part D of title IV or training allowances under part C thereof for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits or allowances (but this paragraph shall not prevent payments with respect to other members of his family pursuant to title IV of this Act).

"(4) no lien will be imposed against the property of any individual or his estate on account of aid paid to him under the plan (except pursuant to the judgment of a court on account of benefits incorrectly paid to such individual), and that there will be no adjustment or any recovery of aid correctly paid to him under the plan.

"(c) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 464.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1604. From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary shall pay to each State which has a plan approved under this title, for each calendar quarter, an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each month of such quarter as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan—

"(1) 100 per centum of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditures as exceeds the product of $50 multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month; plus

"(2) 50 per centum of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under paragraph (1), not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to such month as exceeds the product of $65 multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month; plus

"(3) 25 per centum of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under paragraph (2), not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to such month as exceeds the product of the amount which, as determined by the Secretary, is the maximum permissible level of assistance per person in which the Federal Government will participate financially, multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month.

In the case of any individual in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the maximum permissible level of assistance under paragraph (3) may be lower than in the case of individuals in the other States. See also, section 464 for other special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

"ALTERNATE PROVISION FOR DIRECT FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO INDIVIDUALS

"SEC. 1605. The Secretary may enter into an agreement with a State under which he will, on behalf of the State, pay aid to the aged, blind, and disabled directly to individuals in the State under the State's plan approved under this title and perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon. In such case payments shall not be made as provided in section 1604 and the agreement shall also provide for payment to the Secretary by the State of its share of such aid, together with one-half of the additional cost to the Secretary involved in carrying out the agreement, other than the cost of making the payments.

"OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

"SEC. 1606. Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of payment has been made to any person as a direct Federal payment pursuant to section 1605, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments of the overpaid individual or by recovery from him or his estate or payment to him. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with a view to avoiding penalizing individuals who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this title, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 1607. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under this title, finds—

"(1) that the plan no longer complies with the provisions of sections 1602 and 1603; or

"(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such provision;

the Secretary shall notify such State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State or individuals within the State under this title (or, in his discretion, that payments will be limited to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure), until the Secretary is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no such further payments to the State or individuals in the State under this title (or shall limit payments to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR SERVICES AND ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 1608. (a) If the State plan of a State approved under section 1602 provides that the State agency will make available to applicants for or recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan at least those services to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care which are prescribed by the Secretary, such State shall qualify for payments for services under subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) In the case of any State whose State plan approved under section 1602 meets the requirements of subsection (a), the Secretary shall pay to the State from the sums appropriated therefor an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each quarter, as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan—

"(1) 75 per centum of so much of such expenditures as are for—

"(A) services which are prescribed pursuant to subsection (a) and are provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, or

"(B) other services, specified by the Secretary as likely to prevent or reduce dependency, so provided to the applicants or recipients of aid, or

"(C) any of the services prescribed pursuant to subsection (a), and any of the services specified in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, which the

Secretary may specify as appropriate for individauls who, within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe, have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan, if such services are requested by the individuals and are provided to them in accordance with subsection (c), or

"(D) the training of personnel employed or preparing for employment by the State agency or by the local agency administering the plan in the political subdivision; plus

"(2) one-half of so much of such expenditures (not included under paragraph (1)) as are for services provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan, and to individuals requesting such services who (within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe) have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of such aid; plus

"(3) one-half of the remainder of such expenditures.

'(c) The services referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) shall, except to the extent specified by the Secretary, include only—

"(1) services provided by the staff of the State agency, or the local agency administering the State plan in the political subdivision (but no funds authorized under this title shall be available for services defined as vocational rehabilitation services under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act (A) which are available to individuals in need of them under programs for their rehabilitation carried on under a State plan approved under that Act, or (B) which the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under that Act are able and willing to provide if reimbursed for the cost thereof pursuant to agreement under paragraph (2), if provided by such staff), and

"(2) subject to limitations prescribed by the Secretary, services which in the judgment of the State agency cannot be as economically or as effectively provided by the staff of that State or local agency and are not otherwise reasonably available to individuals in need of them, and which are provided, pursuant to agreement with the State agency, by the State health authority or the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act or by any other State agency which the Secretary may determine to be appropriate (whether provided by its staff or by contract with public (local) or nonprofit private agencies).

Services described in clause (B) of paragraph (1) may be provided only pursuant to agreement with the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act.

"(d) The portion of the amount expended for administration of the State plan to which paragraph (1) of subsection (b) applies and the portion thereof to which paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (b) apply shall be determined in accordance with such methods and procedures as may be permitted by the Secretary.

"(e) In the case of any State whose plan approved under section 1602 does not meet the requirements of subsection (a) of this section, there shall be paid to the State, in lieu of the amount provided for under subsection (b), an amount equal to one-half the total of the sums expended during each quarter as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, including services referred to in subsections (b) and (c) and provided in accordance with the provisions of those subsections.

"(f) In the case of any State whose State plan included a provision meeting the requirements of subsection

(a), but with respect to which the Secretary finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the plan, that—

"(1) the provision no longer complies with the requirements of subsection (a), or

(2) in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with such provision,

the Secretary shall notify the State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State under subsection (b) until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until the Secretary is so satisfied, no such further payments with respect to the administration of and services under the State plan shall be made, subject to the other provisions of this title, under subsection (e) instead of subsection (b).

"COMPUTATION OF PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 1609. (a) (1) Prior to the beginning of each quarter, the Secretary shall estimate the amount to which a State will be entitled under subsections 1604 and 1608 for that quarter, such estimates to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in that quarter in accordance with the provisions of sections 1604 and 1608, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in that quarter, and, if such amount is less than the State's proportionate share of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, and (B) such other investigation as the Secretary may find necessary.

"(2) The Secretary shall then pay in such installments as he may determine, the amount so estimated, reduced or increased to the extent of any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made under this section to the State for any prior quarter and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under this subsection.

"(b) The pro rata share to which the United States is equitably entitled, as determined by the Secretary, of the net amount recovered during any quarter by a State or political subdivision thereof with respect to aid furnished under the State plan, but excluding any amount of such aid recovered from the estate of a deceased recipient which is not in excess of the amount expended by the State or any political subdivision thereof for the funeral expenses of the deceased, shall be considered an overpayment to be adjusted under subsection (a) (2).

"(c) Upon the making of any estimate by the Secretary under this subsection, any appropriations available for payments under this section shall be deemed obligated.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 1610. For purposes of this title, the term 'aid to the aged, blind, and disabled' means money payments to needy individuals who are 65 years of age or older, are blind, or are severely disabled, but such term does not include—

"(1) any such payments to any individual who is an inmate of a public institution (except as a patient in a medical institution); or

"(2) any such payments to any individual who has not attained sixty-five years of age and who is a patient in an institution for tuberculosis or mental diseases.

Such term also includes payments which are not included within the meaning of such term under the preceding sentence, but which would be so included except that they are made on behalf of such a needy individual to another individual who (as determined in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary) is interested in or concerned with the welfare of such needy individual, but only with respect to a State whose State plan approved under section 1602 includes provision for—

"(A) determination by the State agency that the needy individual has, by reason of his physical or mental condition, such inability to manage funds that making payments to him would be contrary to his welfare and, therefore, it is necessary to provide such aid through payments described in this sentence;

"(B) making such payments only in cases in which the payment will, under the rules otherwise applicable under the State plan for determining need and the amount of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled to be paid (and in conjunction with other income and resources), meet all the need of the individuals with respect to whom such payments are made;

"(C) undertaking and continuing special efforts to protect the welfare of such individuals and to improve, to the extent possible, his capacity of self-care and to manage funds;

"(D) periodic review by the State agency of the determination under clause (A) to ascertain whether conditions justifying such determination still exist, with provision for termination of the payments if they do not and for seeking judicial appointment of a guardian, or other legal representative, as described in section 1111, if and when it appears that such action will best serve the interests of the needy individual; and

"(E) opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency on the determination referred to in clause (A) for any individual with respect to whom it is made.

Whether an individual is blind or severely disabled, shall be determined for purposes of this title in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary."

REPEAL OF TITLES I, X, AND XIV OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

SEC. 202. Titles I, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 301, et seq., 1201, et seq., 1351, et seq.) are hereby repealed.

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

SEC. 203. In the case of any State which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this section, any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made to such State under section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603 of such Act with respect to a period before the approval of a plan under title XVI as amended by this Act, and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under subsection (b) of such section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603, shall, for purposes of section 1609 (a) of such Act as herein amended be considered an overpayment or underpayment (as the case may be) made under title XVI of such Act as herein amended.

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO DEFINITIONS OF BLINDNESS AND DISABILITY

SEC. 204. In the case of any State which has in operation a plan of aid to the blind under title X, aid to the permanently and totally disabled under title XIV, or aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under title XVI, of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this Act, the State plan of such State submitted under title XVI of such Act as amended by this Act shall not be denied approval thereunder, with respect to the period ending with the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after the enactment of this Act, by reason of its failure to include therein a test of disability or blindness different from that included in the State's plan (approved under such title X, XIV or XVI of such Act) as in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 301. Section 228 (d) (1) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "I, X, XIV, or" and by striking out "part A" and inserting in lieu thereof "receives payments with respect to such month pursuant to part D or E".

(4) by amending section 1109 to read as follows:

"SEC. 1109. Any amount which is disregarded (or set aside for future needs) in determining the eligibility for and amount of aid or assistance for any individual under a State plan approved under title XVI or XIX, or eligibility for and amount of payments pursuant to part D or E of title IV, shall not be taken into consideration in determining the eligibility for and amount of such aid, assistance, or payments for any other individual under such other State plan or such part D or E.";

(5) in section 1111 by striking out "I, X, XIV, and" and by striking out "part A" and inserting in lieu thereof "parts D and E";

(6) in section 1115 by striking out "I, X, XIV,"

and by striking out "part A" and inserting in lieu thereof "parts A and E" in so much thereof as precedes clause (a), by striking out "of section 2, 402, 1002, 1402," and inserting in lieu thereof "of or pursuant to section 402, 452," in clause (a) thereof, and by striking out "3, 403, 1003, 1403, 1603," and inserting in lieu thereof "403, 453, 1604, 1608," in clause (b) thereof;

(7) in section 1116 by striking out "I, X, XIV," in subsections (a) (1), (b), and (d), and by striking out "4, 404, 1004, 1404, 1604," in subsection (a) (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "404, 1607, 1608,";

(8) by repealing section 1118;

(9) in section 1119 by striking out "I, X, XIV," and by striking out "part A" and inserting in lieu thereof "services under a State plan approved under part A", and by striking out "3 (a), 403 (a), 1003 (a), 1403 (a), or 1603 (a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "403 (a) or 1604"; and

(10) in section 1121 (a) by striking out "a plan for old-age assistance, approved under title I, a plan for aid to the blind, approved under title X, a plan for aid to the permanently and totally disabled, approved under title XIV, or a plan for aid to the aged, blind, or disabled" and inserting in lieu thereof "a plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled", and by inserting " (other than a public nonmedical facility)" after "intermediate care facilities" the first time it appears therein.

SEC. 303. Title XVIII of the Social Security Act is amended as follows:

(1) in section 1843 (b) by striking out "title I or" in paragraph (1), by striking out "all of the plans" in paragraph (2) and substituting in lieu thereof "the plan", and by striking out "titles I, X, XIV, and XVI, and part A" in paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "title XVI and under part E";

(2) in section 1843 (f) by striking out "title I, X, XIV, or XVI or part A" both times it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "title XVI and under part E", and by striking out "title I, XVI, or XIX" and inserting in lieu thereof "title XVI or XIX"; and

(3) in section 1863 by striking out "I, XVI", and inserting in lieu thereof "XVI".

SEC. 304. Title XIX of the Social Security Act is amended as follows:

(1) in clause (1) of the first sentence of section 1901 by striking out "families with dependent children" and "permanently and totally" and inserting in lieu thereof, respectively, "needy families with children" and "severely";

(2) in section 1902 (a) (5) by striking out "I or";

(3) in section 1902 (a) (10) by amending so much thereof as precedes clause (A) to read:

"(10) provide for making medical assistance available to all individuals receiving assistance to needy families with children as defined in section 406 (b), receiving payments under an agreement pursuant to part E of title IV, or receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI; and—"

and by amending clauses (A) and (B) by inserting "or payments under such part E" after "such plan" each time it appears therein;

(4) by amending section 1902 (a) (13) (B) to read:

"(B) in the case of individuals receiving assistance to needy families with children as defined in section 406 (b), receiving payments under an agreement pursuant to part E of title IV, or receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI, for the inclusion of at least the care and services listed in clauses (1) through (5) of section 1905 (a), and";

(5) in section 1902 (a) (14) (A) by striking out aid or assistance under State plans approved under titles I, X, XIV, XVI, and part A of title IV," and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance to needy families with children as defined in section 406(b), receiving payments under an agreement pursuant to part E of title IV, or receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan aproved under title XVI,";

(6) in section 1902(a)(17) by striking out in so much thereof as precedes clause (A) "aid or assistance under the State's plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV," and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance to needy families with children as defined in section 406(b), payments under an agreement pursuant to part E of title IV, or aid under a State plan approved under title XVI," by striking out in clause (B) thereof "aid or assistance in the form of money payments under a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV" and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance to needy families with children as defined in section 406(b), payments under an agreement pursuant to part E of title IV, or aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI", and by striking out in such clause (B) "and or assistance under such plan" and inserting in lieu thereof "assistance, and, or payments";

(D) by striking out "or assistance" and "I, X, XIV, or" in clause (vi) and in the second sentence of such section 1905(a).

TITLE IV—GENERAL

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 401. The amendments and repeals made by the preceding provisions shall become effective, and section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950 (25 U.S.C. 639) is repealed effective, on the first January 1 following the fiscal year in which this Act is enacted; except that—

this Act and such repeal shall not apply with respect to individuals in such State until (if later than the date referred to above) the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after the enactment of this Act or until (if earlier than July 1) the first calendar quarter following the date on which the State certifies it is no longer so prevented from making such payments; and

(2) in the case of any State a statute of which prevents it from complying with the requirements of section 1602 of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, the amendments made by title II of this Act shall not apply until (if later than the January 1 referred to above) the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after the enactment of this Act or on the earlier date on which such State submits a plan meeting such requirements of section 1602;

and except that section 437 of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, shall be effective upon enactment of this Act.

MEANING OF SECRETARY AND FISCAL YEAR

SEC. 402. As used in this Act and in the amendments made by this Act, the term "Secretary" means, unless the context otherwise requires and except in part C of title IV of the Social Security Act, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and the term "fiscal year" means a period beginning with any July 1 and ending with the close of the following June 30.

1st SESSION

H. R. 14173

A BILL

To authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes.

By Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin, Mr. GERALD R. FORD, Mr. ARENDS, Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois, Mr. CRAMER, Mr. POFF, Mr. RHODES, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BOB WILSON, Mr. SMITH of California, Mr. UTT, Mr. SCHNEEBELI, Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia, Mr. BUSH, Mr. MORTON, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN

Referred to the Committee on Ways and Means

FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1969

(Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced H.R. 14173—the Family Assistance Act of 1969—which incorporates the administration's recommendations for comprehensive reform of our welfare laws. I will include at the end of my remarks an analysis of the bill.

Our present welfare system is a failure—marked by inequities and abuses, encouraging family breakups, and perpetuating dependence on welfare payments. The President's proposal constitutes the first major attempt to overhaul our Federal-State welfare system during the 30-year history of the program. The need to find workable solutions to the problems we face in this field must be given a high priority.

The growing costs of this welfare system to our society—both human and financial—require that new initiatives be developed to insure that all citizens have both the opportunity and responsibility to participate in our economy. The President's proposal provides new initiatives that are intended to break the cyclical heritage of poverty and dependency that has become an all too prevalent characteristic of our Federal-State-local welfare system.

The new approach incorporated in this bill is deserving of the most careful consideration by the Ways and Means Committee in connection with the hearings on welfare that will begin in the latter part of October.

The analysis of the bill follows:

SUMMARY OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1969; TITLE I—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF PLAN

Section 101 of the bill adds new parts D, E, and F to title IV of the Social Security Act, establishing a new Family Assistance Plan providing for payment of family assistance benefits by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and supplementary payments by the States.

Eligibility and amount

The new part D of title IV of the Social Security Act authorizes benefits to families with children payable at the rate of $500 per year for each of the first two members of a family plus $300 for each additional member.

The family assistance benefit would be reduced by non-excluded income, so that families with more non-excludable income than these benefits ($1600 for a family of four) would not be eligible for any benefits.

A family with more than $1500 in resources, other than the home, household goods, personal effects, and other property essential to the family's capacity for self-support, would also not be eligible.

Countable income would include both earned income (remuneration for employment and net earnings from self-employment) and unearned income.

In determining income the following would be excluded (subject, in some cases, to limitations by the Secretary):

(1) All income of a student;

(2) Inconsequential or infrequent or irregular income;

(3) Income needed to offset necessary child care costs while in training or working;

(4) Earned income of the family at the rate of $720 per year plus ½ the remainder;

(5) Food stamps and other public assistance or private charity;

(6) Special training incentives and allowances;

(7) The tuition portion of scholarships and fellowships;

(8) Home produced and consumed produce;

(9) One half of other unearned income.

Veterans pensions, farm price supports, and soil bank payments would not be excludable income to any extent and would, therefore, result in reduction of benefits on a dollar for dollar basis.

Eligibility for and amount of benefits would be determined quarterly on the basis of estimates of income for the quarter, made in the light of the preceding period's income as modified in the light of changes in circumstances and conditions.

Definition of family and child

To qualify for Family Assistance Plan benefits a family must consist of two or more related individuals living in their own home and residing in the United States and one must be an unmarried child (i.e., under the age of 18, or under the age of 21 and regularly attending school).

Payment of benefits

Payment may be made to any one or more members of the qualified family. The Secretary would prescribe regulations regarding the filing of applications and supplying of data to determine eligibility of a family and the amounts for which the family is eligible. Beneficiaries would be required to report events or changes of circumstances affecting eligibility or the amount of benefits.

When reports by beneficiaries are delayed too long or are too inaccurate, part or all of the resulting benefit payments could be treated as recoverable overpayments.

Registration for work and referral for training

Eligible adult family members would be required to register with public employment officers for manpower services and training or employment unless they belong to specified excepted groups. However, a person in an excepted group may register if he wishes.

The exceptions are: (1) ill, incapacitated, or aged persons; (2) the caretaker relative (usually the mother) of a child under 6; (3) the mother or other female caretaker of the child if an adult male (usually the father) who have to register is there; (4) the caretaker for an ill household member; and (5) full-time workers.

Where the individual is disabled, referral for rehabilitation services would be made. Provision is also made for child care services to the extent the Secretary finds necessary in case of participation in manpower services, training, or employment.

Denial of benefits

Family Assistance benefits would be denied with respect to any member of a family who refuses without good cause to register or to participate in suitable manpower services, training, or employment. If the member is the only adult, he would be included as a family member but only for purposes of determining eligibility of the family. Also, in appropriate cases, the remaining portion of the Family Assistance benefit would be paid to an interested person outside the family.

On-the-job training

The Secretary would transfer to the Department of Labor funds which would otherwise be paid to families participating in employer-compensated on-the-job training if they were not participating. These funds would be available to pay the training costs involved.

STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

Required supplementation

The individual States would have to agree to supplement the family assistance benefits under a new part E of title IV of the Social Security Act wherever the family assistance benefit level is below the previously existing Aid to Families With Dependent Children (AFDC) payment level. This supplementation is a condition which the State must meet in order to continue to receive Federal payments with respect to maternal and child health and crippled children's services (title V) and with respect to their State plans for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled (title XVI), medical assistance (title XIX), and services to needy families with children (part A of title IV). Such "supplementation" would be required to families eligible for family assistance benefits other than families where parents are present, neither is incapacitated, or the father is not unemployed. The States would thus be required to supplement in the case of individuals eligible under the old AFDC and AFDC–UF provisions; they would not have to supplement in case of the working poor.

Amount of supplementation

Except as indicated below and, except for use of the State standard of need and payment maximums, eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments would be determined by use of the rules applicable for Family Assistance Benefits.

In applying the family assistance rules to the disregarding of income under the supplementary payment program—

(1) In the case of earned income of the family, the State would first disregard income at the rate of $720 per year, and would then be permitted to reduce its supplementary payment by 16⅔ cents for every dollar of earnings over the range of earnings between $720 per year and the cutoff point for family assistance (i.e., $3920 for a family of four), and could further reduce its supplementary payments by an amount equal to not more than 80 cents for every dollar of earnings beyond that family assistance cutoff point.

(2) In the case of unearned income, these same percentage reductions would apply, although the initial $720 exclusion would not apply.

Requirements for agreements

Some of the State plan requirements now applicable in the case of Aid and Services to Needy Families with Children would be made applicable to the agreement. These include the requirements relating to:

(1) Statewideness;

(2) Administration by a single State agency;

(3) Fair hearing to dissatisfied claimants;

(4) Methods of administration needed for proper and efficient operation, including personnel standards, training, and effective use of subprofessional staff;

(5) Reporting to Secretary as required;

(6) Confidentiality of information relating to applicants and recipients;

(7) Opportunity to apply for and prompt furnishing of supplementary payments.

Payments to States

A State agreeing to make the supplementary payments would be guaranteed that its expenditures for the first five full fiscal years after enactment would be no more than 90 per cent of the amount they would have been if the Family Assistance Plan amendments not been enacted. This would be accompanied by Federal payment to each State, for each year, of the excess of—

(1) The total of its supplementary payments for the year plus the State share of its expenditures called for under its existing State plan approved under title XVI plus the additional expenditures required by the new title XVI, over

(2) Ninety percent of the State share of what its expenditures would have been in the form of maintenance payments for such year if the State's approved plans under titles I, IV(A), X, XIV, and XVI had continued in effect (assuming in the case of the part A of title IV plan, payments for dependent children of unemployed fathers).

On the other hand, any State spending less than 50 per cent of the State share, referred to in clause (2) above, for supplementary payments and its title XVI plan would be required to pay the amount of the deficiency to the Federal treasury.

A State would also receive ½ of its cost of administration under its agreement.

ADMINISTRATION

Agreements with States

Sufficient latitude is provided to deal with the individual administrative characteristics of the States. Provision is made under which the Secretary can agree to administer and disburse the supplementary payments on behalf of the States. Similarly the States can agree to administer portions of the family assistance plan on behalf of the Secretary, with respect to all or specified families in the States.

Evaluation, research, training

The Secretary would make an annual report to Congress on the new Family Assistance Plan, including an evaluation of its operation. He would also have authority to make periodic evaluations of its operation and to use part of the program funds for this purpose.

Research into and demonstrations of better ways of carrying out the purposes of the new Plan, as well as technical assistance to the States and training of their personnel who are involved in making supplementary payments, would also be authorized.

Special provisions for Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam

There are special provisions for these areas under which the amount of family assistance benefits, the $720 of earned income to be disregarded, and several other amounts under the Family Assistance Plan and the new title XVI of the Social Security Act (aid to the aged, blind, and disabled) would be reduced to the extent that the per capita income of these areas is below that of that one of the 50 States which had the lowest per capita income.

TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND DAY CARE PROGRAMS

Section 102 of the Administration bill would replace part C of title IV of the Social Security Act in its entirety.

Purpose

The purpose of the revised part C is to provide manpower services, training, and employment, and child care and related services for individuals eligible for the new Family Assistance Plan benefits (new part D) or State supplementary payments (new part E) to help them secure or retain employment or advancement in employment. The intent is to do this in a manner which will restore families with dependent children to self-supporting, independent, and useful roles in the community.

Operation

The Secretary of Labor is required to develop an employability plan for each individual required to register under the new part D or receiving supplementary payments pursuant to the new part E. The plan would describe the manpower services, training, and employment to be provided and needed to enable the individual to become self-supporting or attain advancement in employment.

Allowances

The Secretary of Labor would pay an incentive training allowance of $30 per month to each member of a family participating in manpower training. Where training allowances for a family under another program would be larger than their benefits under the Family Assistance Plan and supplementary State payments, the incentive allowances for the family would be equal to the difference, or $30 per member, whichever is larger.

Allowances for transportation and other expenses would also be authorized.

These incentive and other allowances would be in lieu of allowances under other manpower training programs.

Allowances would not be payable to individuals praticipating in employer compensated on-the-job training.

Denial of allowances

Allowances would not be payable to an individual who refuses to accept manpower training without good cause. The individual would receive reasonable notice and have an opportunity for a hearing if dissatisfied with the denial.

Utilization of other programs

In order to avoid the creation of duplicative programs, maximum use of authorities under other acts would be made by the Secretary of Labor in providing the manpower training and related services under the revised part C, but subject to all duties and responsibilities under such other programs. Part C appropriations could be used to pay the cost of services provided by other programs and to reimburse other public agencies for services they provided to persons under part C. The emphasis is on an integrated and comprehensive manpower training program involving all sectors of the economy and all levels of government to make maximum use of existing manpower and manpower related programs.

Appropriations and administration

Appropriations to the Secretary of Labor would be authorized for carrying out the revised part C, including payment of up to 90 percent of the cost of training and employment services provided individuals registered under the Family Assistance Plan. The Secretary would seek to achieve equitable geographical distribution of these funds.

In developing policies and programs for manpower services, training and employment for individuals registered under the Family Assistance Plan, the Secretary of Labor would have to first obtain the concurrence of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with regard to all programs under the usual and traditional authority of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Child care and support services

Appropriations to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be authorized for grants and contracts for up to 90 per cent of the cost of projects for child care and related services for persons registered under the Family Assistance Plan and in manpower training or employment. The grants would go to any public or non-profit private agency or organization, and the contracts could be with any public or private agency or organization. The cost of these services could include alteration, remodeling, and renovation of facilities, but no provision is made for wholly new construction. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare could allow the non-federal share of the cost to be provided in the form of services or facilities.

These provisions (unlike other provisions of the bill) would become effective on enactment of the bill.

Advance funding

To afford adequate notice of available funds, appropriations for one year to pay the cost of the program during the next year would be authorized.

Evaluation and research

A continuing evaluation of the program under part C and research for improving it are authorized.

Annual report and advisory council

The Secretary of Labor is required to report annually to Congress on the manpower training and related services.

ELIMINATION OF PRESENT PROVISIONS ON CASH ASSISTANCE FOR FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

Section 103 of the bill revises part A of title IV of the Social Security Act which relates to cash assistance and services for needy families with children. The new part A is called Services to Needy Families with Children, reflecting the elimination of the provisions on cash assistance. The cash assistance part is no longer necessary because of the Family Assistance Plan in the new part D of title IV

The revised part A provides for continuation of the present program of services for these families. Foster care for children and emergency assistance, as included under existing law, are also continued.

Requirements for State plans

Section 402 of the Social Security Act which sets forth the requirements to be met by State plans before they are approved and qualify the State for federal financial participation in expenditures, would be revised as appropriate in the light of the elimination of the cash assistance provisions.

Payments to States

The provisions on payments to States for expenditures under approved State plans remain the same as existing law with respect to services, emergency assistance, and foster care. The matching formulas continue to vary, as in existing law, according to the kinds of services involved.

Definitions

The definitions of "family services" and "emergency assistance to needy families with children" have not been substantially changed.

The definitions of "dependent child," "aid to families with dependent children," and "relative with whom any dependent child is living" have been replaced (as no longer applicable) by definitions of

(1) "child"—which refers to the definition in the new part D, establishing the Family Assistance Plan; this in effect substitutes a requirement that the child be a member of a "family" (as defined in the new part D) instead of having to live with particularly designated relatives;

(2) "needy families with children" (and "assistance to such families")—this being defined as families receiving family assistance benefits under the new part D, if they are also receiving supplementary State payments pursuant to the new part E or would have been eligible for aid under the existing State plan for aid to needy families with children if it had continued in effect.

Foster care and emergency assistance

The provisions on payments for foster care of children and emergency assistance remain virtually the same as under existing law.

Assistance by Internal Revenue Service in locating parents

The provision on this subject remains the same and allows use of the master files of the Internal Revenue Service to locate missing parents in certain cases.

TITLE II—AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

This title revises the current title XVI of the Social Security Act and sets forth the revised title XVI in its entirety. One of the major changes is the removal of the provisions relating to medical assistance for the aged which, under existing law, would terminate at the end of calendar 1969. All medical assistance for which the Federal government shares costs will now be provided under approved title XIX State plans.

Requirements for State plans

Few changes are made in this section (sec. 1602), aside from deleting the provisions relating to medical assistance for the aged. The section retains, without substantial change, the requirements relating to:

(1) Administration by a single State agency (except where a separate agency is permitted for the blind as under existing law);

(2) Financial participation by the State;

(3) Statewideness;

(4) Opportunity for fair hearing;

(5) Methods of administration, including personnel standards, training, and effective use of subprofessional staff;

(6) Reporting to the Secretary as required;

(7) Confidentiality of information relating to recipients;

(8) Opportunity for application and furnishing of assistance with reasonable promptness;

(9) Establishment and maintenance by the State of standards for institutions in which there are individuals receiving aid;

(10) Description of services provided for self-support or self-care; and

(11) Determination of blindness by an ophtalmologist or an optometrist.

The present prohibition against payment to persons in receipt of assistance under title I, IV, X, or XIV would be applicable instead to cases of receipt of family security benefits under the new part D of title IV.

The provision on inclusion of reasonable standards for determining eligibility and amount of aid would be replaced by one requiring a minimum benefit of $90 per month, less any other income, and by another requiring that the standard of need not be lower than the standard applied under the State plan approved under the existing title XVI or (in case the State had not had such a plan) the appropriate one of the standards of need applied under the plans approved under titles I, X, and XIV.

While the requirement relating to the determination of need and disregarding of certain income in connection therewith has been continued (although without the authorization to disregard $7.50 per month of any income, in addition to other income which may or must be disregarded), it has been expanded in a manner parallel to family assistance benefits to include disregarding as resources the home, household goods, personal effects, other property which might help to increase the family's ability for self-support, and, finally, any other personal or real property the total value of which does not exceed $1500. There would also be a new requirement for not considering the financial responsibility of any other individual for the applicant or recipient unless the applicant is the individual's spouse or child under the age of 21 or blind or severely disabled, and a prohibition against imposition of liens on account of benefits correctly paid to recipients.

Other new requirements relate to provision for the training and effective use of social service personnel, provision of technical assistance to State agencies and local subdivisions furnishing assistance or services, and provision for the development, through research or demonstrations, of new or improved methods of furnishing assistance or services. Also added is a requirement for use of a simplified statement for establishing eligibility and for adequate and effective methods of verification thereof. Finally, there are new requirements for periodic evaluation of the State plan at least annually, with reports thereof being submitted to the Secretary together with any necessary modifications of the State plan; for establishment of advisory committees, including recipients as members; and for observing priorities and performance standards set by the Secretary in the administration of the State plan and in providing services thereunder.

The present prohibitions against any age requirement of more than 65 years and against any citizenship requirement excluding U.S. citizens would be continued.

In place of the present provision on residency, there is a new one which prohibits any residency requirement excluding any resident of the State. Also there would be new prohibitions against any disability or age requirement which excludes a severely disabled individual aged 18 or older, and any blindness or age requirement which excludes any person who is blind (determined under criteria by the Secretary).

PAYMENTS

In place of the present provision on the Federal share of expenditures under the approved State plan there is a new formula which provides for payment as follows with respect to expenditures under State plans for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled approved under the net title XVI:

With respect to cash assistance, the Federal Government will pay (1) 100 per cent of the first $50 per recipient, plus (2) 50 per cent of the next $15 per recipient, plus (3) 25 per cent of the balance of the payment per recipient which does not exceed the maximum permissible level of assistance per person by the Secretary (which may be lower in the case of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam than for other jurisdictions).

With respect to services for which expenditures are made under the approved State plan, the Federal Government would pay the same percentages as are provided under existing law, that is, 75 per cent in the case of certain specified services and training of personnel and 50 per cent in the case of the remainder of the cost of administration of the State plan.

Payment by Federal Government to individuals

The revised title XVI includes authority for the Secretary to enter into agreements with any State under which the Secretary will make the payments of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled directly to individuals in the State who are eligible therefor. In that case, the State would reimburse the Federal Government for the State's share of those payments and for ½ the additional cost to the Secretary of carrying out the agreement, other than the cost of making the payments themselves.

Definition

The new title XVI defines aid to the aged, blind, and disabled as money payments to needy individuals who are 65 or older or are blind or are severely disabled.

Transitional and related proviisons

Titles I, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act would be repealed.

Provision is made for making adjustments under the new title XVI on account of overpayments and underpayments under the existing public assistance titles.

Provision is also made for according States a grace period during which they can be eligible to participate in the new title XVI without changing their tests of disability or blindness. The grace period would end for any State with the June 30 following the close of the first regular session of its State legislature beginning after enactment of the bill.

Conforming amendments

The bill also contains a number of conforming amendments in other provisions of the Social Security Act in order to take account of the substantive changes made by the bill. Thus, the changes in the medicaid program (title XIX of the Social Security Act) would require the States to cover individuals eligible for supplementary State payments pursuant to the new part E of title IV or who would be eligible for cash assistance under an existing State plan for aid to families with dependent children if it continued in effect and included dependent children of unemployed fathers.

Effective date

The amendments made by the bill would become effective on the first January 1 following the fiscal year in which the bill is enacted. However, if a State is prevented by statute from making the supplementary payments provided for under the new part E of title IV of the Social Security Act, the amendments would not apply to individuals in that State until the first July 1 which follows the end of the State's first regular session of its legislature beginning after the enactment of the bill—unless the State certified before this date that it is no longer prevented by State statute from making the payments. In the latter case the amendments would become effective at the beginning of the first calendar quarter following the certification.

Also, in the case of a State which is prevented by statute from meeting the requirements in the revised section 1602 of the Social Security Act, the amendments made in that title would not apply until the first July 1 following the close of the State's first regular session of its legislature beginning after the enactment of the bill—unless the State submitted before this date a State plan meeting these requirements. In the latter case the amendments would become effective on the date of submission of the plan.

Another exception to this effective date provision is made in the case of the new authorization, in the revised part C of title IV of the Social Security Act, for provision of child care services for persons undergoing training or employment—which would be effective on enactment of the bill.

FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1970

MARCH 11, 1970.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following REPORT

ADDITIONAL AND DISSENTING VIEWS

[To accompany H.R. 16311]

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 16311) to amend the Social Security Act to provide a basic level of financial assistance throughout the Nation to needy families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training of members of such families, to improve the adult assistance programs, and to make other changes to improve the public assistance programs, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

I. PRINCIPAL PURPOSES AND SCOPE OF THE BILL

President Nixon, in transmitting his recommendations on welfare reform to the Congress in October of 1969, declared—

> The present welfare system has failed us—it has fostered family breakup, has provided very little help in many States and has even deepened dependency by all too often making it more attractive to go on welfare than to go to work.
> I propose a new approach that will make it more attractive to go to work than to go on welfare, and will establish a nationwide minimum payment to dependent families with children.

The President listed the following effects of his proposal:

> For the first time, all dependent families with children in America, regardless of where they live, would be assured of minimum standard payments based upon uniform and single eligibility standards.

For the first time, the more than 2 million families who make up the "working poor" would be helped toward self-sufficiency and away from future welfare dependency.

For the first time, training and work opportunity with effective incentives would be given millions of families who would otherwise be locked into a welfare system for generations.

For the first time, the Federal Government would make a strong contribution toward relieving the financial burden of welfare payments from State governments.

For the first time, every dependent family in America would be encouraged to stay together, free from economic pressure to split apart.

The provisions of H.R. 16311, as reported by your committee are, with certain exceptions described in this report, essentially patterned after the proposals of the President.

The bill is intended to convert the existing program from one which results in people remaining in dependency to one which will encourage people to become independent and self-supporting through incentives to take training and enter employment.

Your committee's bill would make major improvements and reforms in the provisions of the Social Security Act relating to the programs which aid needy families with children, including coverage of the working poor; the programs which aid the aged, blind, and disabled; and the programs which provide manpower services, training, employment, and child care to welfare recipients.

FAMILY ASSISTANCE

First, the bill would make basic reforms in the program which furnishes assistance to needy families with children, remove inequities in treatment of the working poor and the nonworking poor, emphasize work incentives and work requirements, and improve and simplify administration of such public assistance, by providing—

(1) A new basic Federal family assistance plan, with federally assisted State supplementation, for poor families with children in place of the present program of aid to families with dependent children, but including for the first time coverage of poor families regardless of the work status of the father (the States woult not be required to supplement payments to the working poor);

(2) Requirements that, as a prerequisite to receipt of benefits, every adult in the assisted families (including the adult already working) register at the employment office for work or training (except mothers with preschool children and persons who are ill or of advanced age), or sign up for vocational rehabilitation if handicapped.

(3) Uniform, nation-wide, eligibility requirements and payment procedures, both for the basic Federal family assistance plan and the State supplementary payments;

(4) Incentives for the States to make agreements with the Federal Government to administer supplementary payments programs; and

(5) New provisions holding deserting parents responsible for Federal payments made to their families under the family assistance or State supplementary plans.

WORK AND TRAINING

Second, the bill improves the program of employment and training services and of other services (including child care) needed by recipients who are registered at employment offices by providing—

(1) A new program of manpower, training, and employment services to be administered by the Secretary of Labor through the State employment offices;

(2) A Federal program of full-cost grants and contracts for child care services to enable mothers who are required to register for training and employment (as well as those who register on a voluntary basis) to participate in work or training;

(3) A new system of providing services to support training or employment through agreements between the Federal Government and the States; and

(4) A more equitable, uniform, and effective system of incentive allowances and reimbursement of work expenses.

ADULT ASSISTANCE

Third, the bill would substantially improve the effectiveness of the adult assistance programs under the Social Security Act by providing—

(1) For combining the present categories for assistance to the aged, blind and disabled into one combined adult assistance program and for uniform requirements for such eligibility factors as the level and type of resources allowed and degree of disability or blindness;

(2) That the States assure that each aged, blind, or disabled adult will receive assistance sufficient to bring his total income up to $110 a month;

(3) Incentives for the States to enter into agreements for Federal administration of the combined program; and

(4) A simplified Federal matching formula which will result in generally more favorable Federal participation in the cost of the payments.

II. SUMMARY OF PRINCIPAL PROVISIONS

Family Assistance Plan

ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS

Each family with children whose nonexcludable income (for definition of excluded income see below) is less than the family benefit level—computed as $500 each for the first two members of the family and $300 for each additional member—would be eligible for a payment under the family assistance plan after meeting the registration for work or training and other requirements. The amount of the benefit would be the difference between these amounts and the non-excluded income. For example, a family of four with no income would be eligible for a family assistance payment of $1,600. Every needy family, both those now eligible under aid for families with dependent children (including those in families with unemployed fathers who are not covered because they are in a State which has not exercised the option to cover this group) and those not eligible because the father is working (the working poor) would be eligible.

In determining income for the purpose of establishing eligibility for and the amount of the family assistance payment, the following types and amounts of income would be excluded:

(1) All earnings of a child if regularly attending school;

(2) Infrequently or irregularly received amounts of earned or unearned income, but not more than $30 a quarter for each type;

(3) Earnings needed to pay for necessary child care;

(4) All earned income of adult members of the family at the rate of $720 per year plus one-half of the remainder;

(5) Food stamps and other public or private charity (not including veterans' pensions);

(6) The training allowance for those in training;

(7) The tuition part of scholarships and fellowships; and

(8) Homegrown and used produce.

A family with more than $1,500 in resources, other than the home, household goods, personal effects and property essential to the family's means of self-support would not be eligible for family assistance payments.

Eligibility would be computed on a quarterly basis; payments would generally be made on a monthly basis.

Parents who desert or abandon their families would be liable to the Federal Government for any Federal payments to their families under the family assistance plan and the Federal portion of the State supplementary payments (described later) or for the amount of a court support order if less. Such sums are to be collected directly or by withholding them from payments due the parents under any Federal program.

DEFINITIONS OF FAMILY AND CHILD

An eligible family must consist of two or more persons (related by blood, marriage, or adoption), living together in the United States, at least one of whom is a child who is not married to another family member and who is in the care of or dependent upon another member of the family. Appropriate State law would be applied in determining relationships. A parent or spouse of a parent who is temporarily absent from the place of residence, seeking or engaging in employment (including military service), would be considered as living in the place of residence. A "child" is an individual who is under age 18, or a full-time student under age 21.

REGISTRATION WITH PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

Each member of a family would be required to register for employment or training with a public employment office unless he or she is—

(1) unable to engage in work or training because of illness, disability, or age;

(2) a mother caring for a child under 6;

(3) the mother in cases in which the father registers;

(4) caring for an ill member of the household; or

(5) a child under 16 or under 21 if in school.

Any person who falls into one of these exempt categories could voluntarily register at the employment office.

Those who are unable to participate in work or training because of disability would be referred for vocational rehabilitation services.

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is required to provide (for as long as he deems appropriate) child care services where an individual is registered and participating in training and employment.

If an individual required to register refuses to do so without good cause, or refuses vocational rehabilitation services without good cause, he would not be taken into account (but his income would be counted) in determining the family benefit. In such a case, the family benefit may be paid to a person outside the family under a protective payment arrangement.

State Supplementation of Family Assistance Payment

REQUIREMENTS FOR STATE SUPPLEMENTATION

Each State whose AFDC payment level in January 1970 is higher than the family assistance level must agree to supplement the family assistance payment (under the conditions specified in the bill) up to that level (except where otherwise provided by the bill) or up to the poverty level if that is lower, in order to be eligible for Federal funds under Medicaid and other welfare programs. Federal matching would be available, except for the working poor, at a rate of 30 percent. The matching maximum would be the poverty level now in effect, but brought up to date annually by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to reflect increased living costs.

The States would not have to supplement payments to the working poor. However, in addition to being required to supplement cases which would be eligible under their present programs as in effect in January 1970 the States would have to supplement those cases which would be eligible if the program had the same resources limitations as the family assistance plan ($1,500 except for home, household goods, and personal effects), the same definition of family and child, and the same excludable income provisions (other than those which disregard proportions of earned income). The States also would be required to supplement the incomes of families where the father is unemployed (which is now on an optional basis), or where the child is between age 18 and 21 and regularly attending school (now also on an optional basis).

The States would be required to follow the rules that apply under the family assistance plan in computing payments except that special rules would apply in disregarding earned income for purposes of the supplementary payments.

The States would have to exclude the first $720 a year ($60 a month) of earned income, plus (1) one-third of the earnings between $720 and twice the amount of the family assistance payment which would be payable if the family had no income, plus (2) one-fifth of any earnings above that amount. The effect of the combined earnings exemptions under the State supplementation and under the family assistance plan is roughly the equivalent of present law which provides for excluding work expenses and disregarding the first $30 of monthly earnings plus one-third of earnings over that amount. For example, if the adults in a family of four had $1,200 in annual earned income the basic $1,600 family assistance payment would be reduced by one-half of the $480 remaining after $720 is deducted from $1,200. Thus, the family assistance payment would be reduced to $1,360 ($1,600—$240). If the family lived in a State where the State payment (to a family of four with no income) in January 1970 was $2,400, the required States supplement payment would be figured as follows:

The family assistance payment—$1,360—plus the earned income not disregarded—two-thirds of the $480, or $320—is subtracted from the $2,400 figure. This results in a supplementary payment of $720. The total income of such a family would consist of $1,320 in family assistance payment, $720 in the State supplementary payment and $1,200 in earnings, for a total annual income of $3,280.

ADMINISTRATION

ADMINISTRATIVE ARRANGEMENTS

The bill provides for three alternative administrative arrangements. First, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare could make an arrangement with a State for the Federal Government to administer both the family assistance plan and the State supplementary program. Under this arrangement the Federal Government would pay all administrative costs. Second, the Secretary could make an agreement with a State under which the State would administer the family assistance payments and State supplementary payments. Third, if the Secretary makes no agreement with a State the State will administer the supplementary payments and the Federal Government will administer the family assistance payments. Under the second and third arrangements, the Federal Government would pay all the cost of administering the family assistance plan and the Federal Government and the States would share equally in the administrative costs of making the State supplementary payments.

APPEALS PROCEDURE

Persons who disagree with determinations relating to eligibility for or amounts of family assistance plan payments may obtain a hearing. For persons on the rolls payments would continue until there is a decision based on the hearing, which must be rendered within 90 days of a request for hearing. If the decision based on the hearing is adverse, the money paid out in the interim by the Federal Government would have to be returned. Final determinations are to be subject to judicial review in Federal district courts but the Secretary's decisions as to any fact would be conclusive and not subject to review by the court.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR PUERTO RICO, GUAM, AND THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The family assistance plan applies to Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands, but all of the dollar figures in both the family assistance plan and the revised program of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled (except for the $720 of earnings disregarded under the family assistance plan) program are to be modified (but only downward) by the same proportion that the per capita income of each bears to the per capita income of the lowest per capita-income State.

Work and Training Programs

EXISTING PROGRAM REPEALED

The existing work incentive program (which went into effect in all the States on July 1, 1969) would be repealed and a new program would be established to take its place.

OPERATION OF PROGRAM

The Secretary of Labor would, under his own priorities for the selection of participants, assure the development of an employability plan for each individual registered with the employment office under the program. The training and employment potentials of the working poor who are registered will be closely examined toward the end of lessening, or completely eliminating, their dependency on cash benefits under the program. Mothers with pre-school children who volunteer would be given the same consideration for participation as those who are referred on a mandatory basis.

The individuals would then receive the services and training called for under the plan (including grants to relocate a family to find employment). The training and services would be similar to those currently provided under the WIN program, including special work projects for the performance of work in the public interest through contracts with governmental agencies and nonprofit organizations. The Secretary of Labor would be required to use other manpower programs to the maximum extent feasible. The State welfare departments would be required to provide health and other supportive services to facilitate the participation of individuals in the training program.

Appropriations are authorized to meet up to 90 percent of the cost of the training program. The non-Federal contribution could be made in cash or in kind. If the required non-Federal matching of 10 percent was not met in any State, a portion of its Federal share of medicaid and other welfare program expenditures would be withheld until the deficit was made up. Authorization is also made for advance funding. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may transfer to the Secretary of Labor the amount of money that family assistance recipients would have received if they were not being paid wages under a Labor Department on-the-job training program. These funds are to be available to support such programs.

TRAINING ALLOWANCES

Each person participating in the training program would receive an allowance of $30 a month. Larger incentive payments may be available for participants in institutional programs where MDTA allowances are payable. The Secretary of Labor would also provide allowances to cover the transportation and other costs directly associated with the training.

REFUSAL TO ACCEPT TRAINING OR EMPLOYMENT

An individual who, without good cause, refuses to accept suitable training or employment would receive the same treatment as a person who refuses to register.

CHILD CARE

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare both directly (by contract or grant to public or private agencies) and through a system of prime grantees is required to provide necessary child care services for individuals participating in training or employment under the manpower program. The Secretary is authorized to make grants for up to 100 percent of the costs of child care projects to public or nonprofit private agencies which, in a particular geographic area, will assure that day care is provided to manpower training participants. Such prime grantees would be designated by the appropriate elected or appointed official or officials in such area and would have to demonstrate a capacity to work effectively with the manpower agency. Where appropriate, group or institutional care for children attending school would be provided through arrangements with a local educational agency. Child care would be provided in the light of the different circumstances and needs of the children involved, and where a family is able to pay for care the Secretary could charge a fee reasonably related to that ability. Appropriations (no dollar amount specified) and advance funding are authorized.

EVALUATION AND ANNUAL REPORT

The Secretaries of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare would be required to provide continual evaluation of the manpower and employment program. The Secretary of Labor may contract for independent evaluation, and he may establish a data collection, processing, and retrieval system. The Secretary of Labor would file an annual report with the Congress on the operation of the training program, and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would report similarly on the child care and supportive services provided under the bill. The first of such reports would be due on or before September 1, 1972. An authorization of $15 million a year is provided for research and evaluation activities relating to work and training.

Social Services for Families With Dependent Children

The present program of aid to families with dependent children would be changed by removing all cash assistance provisions. The provisions of present law under which the costs of social services, certain foster care, and emergency assistance are subject to 50–75 percent Federal matching would be retained.

Aid to the Aged, Blind, and Disabled

FEDERAL STANDARDS AND REQUIREMENTS

The present provisions for programs for aid to the needy aged, blind, and disabled are repealed and a new combined Federal-State program is established to cover essentially the same people.

Under the new program, the States could not have (1) any duration of residence requirement, (2) any citizenship requirement which includes any U.S. citizen, or (3) a requirement which would exclude aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence who have resided in the United States continuously for 5 years immediately prior to application, or (4) relative responsibility provisions other than for spouses or parents of recipients.

The States would be required to (1) provide a payment sufficient to bring an individual's total income up to at least $110 a month, or, if higher, the standard in effect on the date of enactment, (2) follow the Secretary's definitions of blindness and disability, (3) make applicable to the disabled the mandatory disregard of the first $85 a month of earned income plus one-half of the remainder, now applicable to the blind, (4) make applicable to the aged on an optional basis the same earnings exemption ($60 a month plus one-half of additional earnings) applicable to the family assistance plan, and (5) use the Federal definition of allowable resources applicable to the family assistance plan ($1,500 plus home, personal effects, and income-producing property essential to the person's support). The provision in the Social Security Amendments of 1969 requiring the States to pass along to adult assistance recipients $4 of the social security benefit increase, which as enacted applies only to the months of April, May, and June 1970, would be continued indefinitely.

FEDERAL MATCHING PROVISIONS

The Federal Government would pay 90 percent of the first $65 of average payments made to eligible adult assistance recipients, and 25 percent of the remainder up to a limit to be set by the Secretary. The Federal Government would also pay 50 percent of the administrative costs of the adult programs.

ADMINISTRATION

The States could continue to administer the adult programs, or the Secretary could enter into an agreement with a State under which the Federal Government would perform all or some of the functions involved in making payments under the program. In the latter case, the Federal Government would pay all administrative costs.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The provisions of the bill (except for authorization for money to support child care projects which would be effective upon enactment) would be effective on July 1, 1971, with special provisions for States with statutes that would prevent them from complying with the bill at that time.

III. GENERAL DISCUSSION OF THE BILL

A. ESTABLISHMENT OF A PLAN FOR ASSISTANCE TO FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN

Your committee is very concerned about the rapid growth in the number, as well as the increase in the proportion, of children receiving aid under AFDC programs. Since 1960, the number of recipients has increased from 2.4 million to about 6.7 million. Moreover, the proportion of children receiving assistance has been rapidly increasing—from 30 children per 1,000 in 1955 to about 60 children per 1,000 in 1970. In addition the costs of these programs have more than tripled during the last 10 years (to about $4 billion at present) and, according to estimates by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, could more than double again during the next 5 years unless action is taken now to deal with the underlying causes of this crushing increase in both costs and numbers of recipients.

The major part of the increase has resulted from the added number of families who receive aid because the father is absent from the home. These cases, including those in which the father has abandoned his family and cases in which the mother is not married to the father, now make up over three-fourths of the families on the AFDC rolls.

Your committee made a number of modifications in the family assistance provisions of the bill proposed by the administration which are designed to halt the trends that have existed in the growth of the number of families on the AFDC rolls.

During its deliberations, the principal efforts of your committee were in the direction of strengthening the provisions of the legislation to assure the establishment of an effective work and training program, building upon the groundwork that has been laid in putting the existing work incentive program into operation. It is the clear intention of your committee, based upon assurances given by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor, that the work and training program will provide a method of guaranteeing that all adult members of families receiving assistance under the family assistance plan will receive all available training and employment services and other supportive services, including child care, necessary to assist them in obtaining employment and ultimately attaining self-support.

Your committee wishes to emphasize its clear understanding that all adult family assistance recipients, except for those specifically exempted by the bill, must register for training or employment. Contrary to the administration's proposal, under the committee bill this requirement applies to the working poor as well as to those who are unemployed or working part time. The committee believes this is an essential difference and a material improvement in the bill. Under this modification the employment status of many of the working poor parents will be improved and upgraded.

Your committee also added to the bill provisions holding parents who abandon their families responsible for Federal assistance received by their families. This new approach plus greater emphasis by the Federal Government and the States in implementing the determination of paternity, the location of absent parents and the enforcement of support provisions of the 1967 Social Security Amendments should have some effect in reducing the growth of the assistance rolls.

Several times in the past your committee has attempted, within the framework of the existing AFDC programs, to provide measures through which families could be assisted in maintaining stability and achieving economic independence. In the course of the last decade, major legislation providing for a wide range of services to AFDC families and for strong emphasis on work and training for assistance recipients has been enacted. The legislation enacted in 1962 and 1967 attempted to reverse the increasing dependence of families on assistance. It has become obvious, however, that basic structural and administrative changes in the AFDC programs are necessary if the present trends of family instability and dependence on welfare are to be halted and reversed.

The major thrust of the bill is toward:

1. Equitable treatment of working poor families;
2. The reduction of variations in payment levels among the States through the introduction of a Federal floor for family assistance payments;
3. Assisting families in achieving economic independence through a national uniform requirement to register for employment and training and the establishment of a strengthened manpower training program.

The overall plan represents a new direction for family assistance and was designed to carry out the intent of your committee to reduce dependence on assistance and restore more families to employment and self-reliance, and thereby eventually reverse the present trend of spiraling cost and increasing dependence upon welfare.

1. THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

a. Eligibility for and amount of family assistance payments

(1) Eligibility.—Each family with children under 18 (or under 21 if attending school) whose income (other than that excluded) is less than $500 per year for each of the first two family members and $300 per year for each additional family member, and whose resources (other than those excluded—the home, the household goods, personal effects, etc.) are less than $1,500 would be eligible to receive a family assistance benefit.

Your committee believes that one inequity in the present AFDC program that should be remedied at this time is the exclusion of needy families where the father is in the home and fully employed. Your committee believes it is bad social policy to have families in like situations treated differently because of the employment status of the family head. The exclusion of families in which the father is working has acted as an incentive to fathers to become unemployed or leave home in order to qualify their families for assistance. The bill would, therefore, include working poor families under the program and provide a uniform earnings exemption which is equally applicable to families with male and female heads as well as those who are fully and partially employed. For purposes of Federal benefits under the family assistance plan, the first $60 a month in earnings would be disregarded plus one-half of the remainder, so that it would be possible, for example, to have a family of four receiving some benefits under the program up until its income exceeds $3,920.

Your committee's bill would eliminate two other situations of lack of equal treatment. At present, AFDC benefits are available to families with unemployed fathers in some States, but not in others. Second, unemployment has been defined by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare as working for less than 30 hours a week, which may be an incentive for many families to restrict their work activities. These two distinctions would be eliminated as to Federal benefits under the new program.

The committee agrees with the administration that it is essential that we do not perpetuate the situation where working people see little or no economic advantage in continuing in employment and drop out of the work force to become totally dependent on the welfare system.

(2) Amount.—The family assistance benefit would consist of $500 per year for each of the first two family members, plus $300 per year for each additional family member, and would be reduced by nonexcluded income. In any family there are certain common expenses in housing, utilities, fuel, etc., which must be met. Since the smallest family that will be covered is one consisting of two persons, your committee believes that it is logical that the amount provided for each of the first two members of the family be larger than the amounts provided for each additional member of the family.

These payment rates establish a Federal income maintenance floor which in most States will be increased by required State supplementation for all families except the working poor. In the eight States whose AFDC payments are now lower than the basic Federal floor, the bill provides an increase in the level of aid to needy families with children. The amount of payments may be lower in the case of individuals in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam than in the States, but would be substantially higher than at present.

(3) Period for determination of benefits.—Your committee's bill provides that a family's eligibility for benefits, and the amount of its benefits would be determined for each calendar quarter on the basis of estimates of income for that quarter, made in the light of income received in previous quarters. The estimates could be modified in the light of changes in circumstances and conditions, and in accordance with regulations regarding applications filed late in a quarter, or in cases in which income and expenses in one period are to some extent attributed to another period. Provision is also made for rendering a family ineligible for benefits if its gross income from a trade or business is unduly large.

The bill would provide for use of a calendar-quarter accounting period rather than a shorter period, such as a month, or a longer period, such as a year. One important advantage of the quarterly accounting period is that it would facilitate verification of earnings through use of social security records, since social security earnings are reported on a quarterly basis. Records of monthly earnings are not available from either the Social Security Administration or the Internal Revenue Service.

Your committee's bill would allow the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to prescribe by regulation the circumstances under which and extent to which a family's payments will be reduced because the application for payments was filed some time after the beginning of a quarter. Many potential applicants would not know that they would lose payments by not filing when they were first eligible, and in addition, there would be many reasons why an application could not be filed as soon as the need arose—e.g. the only adult member of the family could be ill, or unaware of possible help, with the result that he would fail to file as early in the calendar quarter as he should.

Your committee has concluded that, in some cases, in order to prevent inequity it would not be appropriate to count as income for a quarter all income received in that quarter, a part of which should properly be distributed to prior or subsequent quarters. For example a self-employed farmer often receives the bulk of his income in the fall when his crops are sold, and little or no income during the rest of the year. If such a person's income were counted in the quarter in which it is received, he could get no payments for that quarter. Conversely, the amount of income received in a single quarter might be sufficient to disqualify a family for any payments during the year. Your committee's bill provides, therefore, that, in determining eligibility and payment amounts, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may allocate income received in a given quarter to prior or subsequent quarters In the case of self-employment income, your committee expects that the Secretary would ordinarily allocate the annual income evenly to each of the four quarters of the year, unless the nature and circumstances of the self-employment income were such as to make this allocation inappropriate. Payment amounts would be determined as though income were earned in the quarter to which the income is assigned.

(4) Special limits on gross income.—Your committee believes that the net earnings from farming and certain other businesses require special treatment. People in such businesses may have substantial gross incomes during a year but net earnings small enough to qualify themselves and their families for payments under the family assistance plan. The net earnings of a family whose income is derived from a business can fluctuate considerably from year to year. The net earnings may be high in one year and very low the next year. One reason for this is that a businessman has considerable control over the amount of his net earnings; he may choose the time to incur a number of business expenses in order to increase or decrease his net earnings in any given year.

Also the amount of net earnings depends to a large extent on business expenses, which are deductible for income tax purposes. Depreciation allowances and other income tax deductions, for example, reduce the net earnings of a businessman without actually reducing his spendable income.

In the opinion of your committee it would be inappropriate to permit people who have a large gross income to get family assistance payments when they have a substantial cash flow from which they live in moderate or better-than-moderate circumstances. For this reason, your committee's bill permits the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to consider ineligible a family that has substantial gross income from a trade or business.

(1) Meaning of income.—

Earned income is defined as remuneration from employment and net earnings from self-employment. Earned income from employment excludes certain items that are also excluded from covered wages under old-age, survivors, and disability insurance.

Net earnings from self-employment are defined in the bill by reference to the present definition applicable to old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, with the exception of certain provisions of the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance definition which your committee believes inappropriate for the family assistance plan, such as the special provision under which a farmer's net income may be presumed to be a given percent of his gross income.

Under your committee's bill, certain items are specifically included in unearned income in order to avoid the necessity of deciding close questions as to whether they are to be treated as earned or unearned. Thus, annuities (which frequently result from past earnings) are counted as unearned income, as are prizes and the proceeds of life insurance.

(2) Exclusions from income.—

(a) Student income.—Your committee's bill would provide, subject to limitations prescribed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, for exclusion of the earned income of a child who is regularly attending school. Existing law, in addition to excluding the earned income of a child who is a full-time student, also excludes the earned income of a part-time student with a less than full-time job.

Your committee continues to believe that special treatment of earnings of students is warranted so that these earnings may help to finance school attendance and offer tangible rewards that encourage work habits. The purpose of authorizing the Secretary to prescribe limitations on the earned income of a student that may be excluded is to make allowance for the fact that a few students may have exceptionally large earned incomes, at least some of which should go to reduce the family benefit.

(b) Irregular income of $30 or less a quarter.—In determining income under the family assistance plan, the Secretary is authorized to exclude unearned income of $30 or less a quarter and in addition earned income of $30 or less a quarter, provided that such earned and unearned income is received infrequently or irregularly. Your committee believes that the provision for exempting such income would facilitate administration since it would be possible to ignore very small amounts of income irregularly or infrequently received. A small cash gift, for example, could be excluded. Similarly, earnings within the $30 quarterly limits from occasional work, such as babysitting, performed on an irregular or infrequent basis, could be excluded.

(c) Child care expenses.—Your committee's bill would provide for the exclusion of an amount of earned income ofa family equal to all or part (according to a schedule prescribed by the Secretary) of the cost of child care which was necessary for securing or continuing manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, or employment. Your committee believes that, since child care is frequently costly, failure to exclude the cost of this care from income in determining the amount of the family assistance payment might well create a disincentive, if not a total barrier, to employment on the part of some mothers. Under other provisions in the bill the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is required to assure that child care is available for mothers who are in training.

(d) First $720 of earnings a year plus one-half of the remainder.—Under present AFDC programs, a State is required to disregard student income, necessary expenses of employment, and the first $30 a month of the total of the family's earned income plus one-third of the remainder of such income. (In addition, a State may, but is not required to, disregard not more than $5 per month of additional income.) Your committee's bill provides for removing the present provisions and provides instead for exempting the first $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods) of earned income of the family in determining the amount of the family assistance payment. This exclusion is intended to take account of work-related expenses and to avoid any disincentive to employment that such expenses—for example, the cost of transportation, lunches, and employment taxes—might otherwise create. The bill would also exclude one-half of the family's earned income above the exempt amount. (As indicated above the earned income of a student would generally be excluded entirely). Your committee believes that this treatment of earned income would set a uniform standard and provide a strong incentive both to take employment or to increase employment activity.

(e) Other aid based on need.—Your committee's bill would provide that food stamps and other assistance (not including veterans' pensions) provided on a basis of need by a public or private agency would have no effect on the amount of the family assistance payment. Your committee believes that any other policy would tend to have a circular effect and would render the food stamps or other assistance largely meaningless. (See p. 30 for further discussion of the correlation of family assistance payments and food stamps.) Veterans' pensions based on a test of income, though, would be included in determining a family's income under the family assistance plan. Your committee believes that it is preferable to keep the long-established veterans' pension program intact by requiring that family assistance benefits be reduced dollar for dollar by the amount of any veterans' pension received by a family member.

(f) Training allowances.—The bill would exclude from income the allowances provided by the Secretary of Labor to individuals undergoing training. If the family assistance benefits were reduced on account of receipt of these allowances, their purpose, which is to provide an incentive for training, would be largely nullified. Training incentive allowances for individuals undergoing vocational rehabilitation are intended to be excluded.

(g) Scholarships and fellowships.—The bill would exclude from consideration as income any portion of a scholarship or fellowship received for use in paying the costs of tuition and fees at any educational institution. Any portion of such payments which are used for general living expenses, however, would be included as unearned income. Your committee believes that if the portions of any scholarship or fellowship which are earmarked for costs to the educational institution were treated as family income, the objective of the scholarship or grant might well be defeated.

(h) Home produce.—The bill would provide for the exclusion of home produce of a family used by the household for its own consumption. This provision is necessary to avoid the administrative difficulties in evaluating the value of such home produce, and is consistent with the results of studies which indicate that there is generally very little net financial gain from home produce consumed at home.

c. Resources

(1) Exclusions from resources.—Under present law there is a wide variation in the manner in which resources, such as a person's home, are treated by the State public assistance programs. Many States exclude the home as a resource while others consider the home only if its value exceeds a specified amount. Household goods, and personal effects are generally excluded under present programs. Your committee believes that a family's home, household goods, and personal property, as well as other property which is essential to a family's means of self-support, should not be considered resources and the bill so provides. Since one of the purposes of the bill is to help families take their place as productive members of society, it seems appropriate to remove disincentives to homeownership and to the accumulation of other reasonable personal effects. The exclusion of resources essential to a family's means of self-support, such as an automobile needed for purposes of employment, the tools of a tradesman, or the machinery of a farmer, is, of course, also important from the standpoint of the objective of strengthening the family's capacity for self-support.

(2) Disposition of resources.—Under the bill, other types of property would be subject to a $1,500 limitation. Families with resources which are readily negotiable, such as stocks or bonds, can generally dispose of such resources and should be expected to dispose of resources above the $1,500 limitation before they are considered eligible for family assistance payments. Proceeds from the disposal of such resources would, of course, be expected to be used by the family for their support and would be counted as cash income, which would be considered in determining the family eligibility for assistance and the payment amount. The disposal of certain other types of assets, such as buildings or land, would often require some time. Your committee's bill, therefore, would authorize the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to prescribe time limits governing the disposition of various kinds of property and to make conditional family assistance payments during the time allotted for the disposal of the property in question. Income received from the disposition of resources would be expected to be used to support the family and would be considered to have been received during the period when the family was receiving conditional family assistance payments, and the family would be obliged to repay overpayments made to it subject to the conditions set forth in the provisions of the bill governing overpayments.

d. Meaning of family and child

(1) Composition of family.—Numerous witnesses who appeared before your committee expressed their deep concern over the effects of the present AFDC program and stated that it is characterized by incentives to family breakup and by the inequitable exclusion from assistance of poor families in which the father is employed.

The definition of family in the bill would eliminate the eligibility requirements in existing law under which families with children are eligible for assistance only if the child is living with designated relatives and is dependent by reason of the death, continued absence, or incapacity of a parent or, on an optional basis with the States, the unemployment of a father. Under the bill, a father could remain with his family, and even if he were employed, he and his family could be eligible for benefits under the family assistance plan if the other eligibility conditions are met.

As indicated by the term "family assistance," the new program would be based upon the existence of a family unit. The presence of a child in the household would be the key to eligibility. When a family meets the income and resources tests, payments under the plan would be made for all members who were related by blood, marriage, or adoption, as long as they were living in the same residence and as long as at least one family member was under age 18, or under 21 if regularly attending school.

The bill would require that at least one child not be married to another family member and also that this same child be in the care of or dependent upon another family member in order to qualify the family for benefits. This would avoid making payments to a family consisting only of a husband and wife where the wife is under age 18 or a student. It would also avoid payment of benefits in situations where, for example, two brothers were living together and attending college on scholarships with neither being dependent upon nor supported by the other.

Although generally family members must be living in the same place of residence in order to qualify as a family for benefit purposes, the bill provides that a parent of a child living in the family residence, or the spouse of such a parent, who is temporarily away from home for the purpose of engaging in or seeking employment (including military service) or self-employment, would nevertheless be considered to be living in the home where such child resides. Your committee believes that it is clearly reasonable to consider such an individual as a family member and to consider any income he may have as income to the family.

If such a provision were not included, temporary absence from the home could disqualify the parent as a family member, with the result that the absent individual's income would not automatically be considered income to the family. Moreover, if the absent parent were the only parent in the family, a child who is temporarily left with a nonrelative by this parent while he is away working or seeking work would be ineligible for benefits until the parent returned.

(2) Definition of child.—The bill defines a child as an individual who is under age 18 or under age 21 and a full-time student. There is no substantive difference between this definition and the definition in existing law.

(3) Determination of family relationships.—Your committee's bill follows the most usual approach of programs that make payments based on relationship—namely, basing determinations of relationship on State law. Under public assistance, each State, of course, applies its own laws bearing on the determination of relationships. Determinations of relationships under the social security program and the veterans' programs also are based on applicable State laws (those governing marriage and adoption as well as State intestacy laws). Under your committee's bill, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would have the authority to determine which State's law would be governing in particular cases and the Secretary could decide whether the law of the State in which the child was born or the law of the State in which the parents were married was to be used in determining whether a child was the child of another family member. The Secretary would also have the authority to determine, for example, which of two laws of the same State would be most appropriate in determining the relationships in a particular family.

(4) Income and resources of noncontributing adult.—Your committee's bill would exclude from consideration, in determining eligibility for, and the amount of, benefits under the family assistance plan the income and resources of any individual which are not available to the rest of the family. An individual whose income and resources are not so available would not be considered a family member and the benefit amount payable to the family would be computed without counting him. However, this rule would not apply to parents (or their spouses) since their income and resources should ordinarily be available to the family and since the exclusion of their income or resources might easily lead to abuses of the system.

(5) Recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled.—Your committee's bill continues the usual rule against payment of benefits under more than one of the Federal-State public assistance plans by excluding from benefits under the family assistance plan any individual who elects to receive aid under the title XVI plan (assistance for needy adults). (A similar prohibition in title XVI against duplication is continued from existing law.)

e. Payments and procedures

Under your committee's bill, payment would be made to one or more members of a qualified family, or to another interested person, at such times and in such installments as the Secretary determines. Appropriate adjustments in future payments, or recovery from or payment to the family, would be made to rectify overpayments and underpayments.

The Secretary would prescribe regulations regarding the filing of applications and supplying of data to determine eligibility of a family and the amounts for which the family is eligible. Beneficiaries would be required to report events or changes of circumstances affecting eligibility or the amount of benefits. When reports by beneficiaries are delayed too long or are too inaccurate, part or all of the resulting benefit payments could be treated as recoverable overpayments.

(1) Payment of benefits.—It is the intent of your committee that payments would ordinarily be made (after determination of eligibility and registration for manpower training, services, and employment) on a monthly basis to the head of the family. To take account of diverse family situations and to facilitate administration, however, a provision in the bill would allow the Secretary to make payments to other members of the family or to other interested persons, and also to make payments at such times and in such installments (e.g., semimonthly, quarterly, semiannually, or annually) as might be indicated by the circumstances. For example, a quarterly payment could be made to facilitate administration in situations where the family would, because of earnings, be eligible for only a small monthly payment.

To further facilitate administration, your committee's bill would permit establishment of ranges of income—that is, permit use of income brackets—within which a single benefit amount would apply.

(2) Overpayments and underpayments.—Your committee's bill would permit adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments to be made by adjusting future benefits of the family or by recovery from any family member. The bill, however, would preclude recovery of overpayments where the family is without fault and recovery would either defeat the purpose of the family assistance plan or be against equity and good conscience or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration.

Your committee believes that, generally, determinations of "without, fault" would be made on an individual basis, and in determining whether an individual is without fault, the Secretary could be expected to consider an individual's age, education, and physical and mental condition. An individual would not be found to be without fault if an incorrect payment which was made to him or on his behalf resulted from his statement which he knew or should have known to be incorrect or from his failure to furnish information which he knew or should have known to be material, or from his acceptance of payment which he either knew or could have been expected to know was incorrect.

(3) Hearings and review.—Your committee's bill requires that there be notice and opportunity for hearings to any individual who disagrees with any determination with respect to eligibility for payments, the number of members of the family, or the amount of the payments. The individual would have to request the hearing within 30 days. Decisions would be rendered within 90 days following a properly submitted request, and although families already receiving assistance payments would continue to do so while their hearing is pending, such payments would be considered overpayments if the Secretary's initial determination were sustained. Final determination of the Secretary would be subject to judicial review in Federal district court; however, determinations as to the facts which the Secretary makes after a hearing provided by him would not be subject to review by the court.

(4) Applications and furnishing of information by families.—To enable the Secretary to obtain the information needed to determine eligibility or payment amount, your committee's bill would authorize the Secretary to require that individuals file applications, furnish evidence, and report events and changes that might affect eligibility or payment amounts. Since it would be necessary, to a substantial extent, to rely on information supplied by recipients, it seems important to your committee to encourage accurate and prompt reporting. Therefore, your committee's bill would authorize the Secretary to prescribe those situations where failure to report or the filing of delayed or inaccurate reports would result in the treatment of payments to the family as overpayments and subject to full recovery. It is the committee's intention that the Secretary provide for tight administration of the processing of claims under the program and that to the extent feasible methods adopted be as detailed and effective as those that have been utilized to substantiate applications under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program.

(5) Furnishing of information by other agencies.—In determining eligibility and the amount of payments under your committee's bill, the Secretary would verify the information on income and other information given by the claimant. Several Federal agencies have information that may be useful for this purpose. Information on certain benefits and payments could be obtained from the Social Security Administration and from other Federal agencies such as the Railroad Retirement Board and the Veterans' Administration. The Social Security Administration has direct access to information about earnings from employment and self-employment covered by social security. If a recipient has income other than from earnings covered by social security, information from another source would be required in order to verify information given by the claimant. The Treasury Department would be able to furnish data from income tax returns. Your committee's bill would require the head of any Federal agency to provide information needed by the Secretary to verify information affecting eligibility or payment amount.

f. Registration and referral of family members for manpower services, training, and employment

Your committee believes that registration for work and training is a very essential part of the family assistance plan. While the present AFDC program contains a registration requirement, it has been implemented as was intended. This requirement is strengthened in the committee bill.

Present law has a general requirement that State welfare agencies refer those persons for registration whom they deem "appropriate," with several categories of persons specifically excluded. State agencies have taken varying attitudes toward who is appropriate for referral, with some taking an extremely restrictive approach and thus crippling the training effort.

Under the bill reported by your committee, the word "appropriate" is removed from the law, and only clearly specified groups are exempt from registration. This will strengthen the work requirement and at the same time provide for nationally uniform administration insuring that all persons appropriate for training and employment programs will be seen by the employment service offices.

Your committee believes that in the administration of the registration provisions, there should be enough flexibility to assure the efficient operation of the training and employment provisions of the bill. This means that short forms could be used for the initial registration. Employment service representatives should be stationed in the offices administering family assistance benefits to insure prompt registration at the time of application for payments.

It is the intention of the committee that employability plans be developed for registered recipients as promptly as possible. However, in order to assure orderly and effective administration of the manpower programs, the bill authorizes the Secretary of Labor to establish priorities for developing employability plans.

The committee recognizes that in the development of employability plans, there are factors over which the Secretary has no control, such as the condition of the labor market. In setting priorities for developing employability plans, the Secretary will need to take these factors into account, in addition to such considerations as family status and personal characteristics of the individual. Mothers who volunteer will be given the same consideration for participation as those who are referred on a mandatory basis.

Your committee specifically deleted a provision of the administration bill exempting the working poor from registering with the employment service. Requiring the working poor to register will provide assurance that every able-bodied individual in family assistance families will be registered for employment, except mothers with preschool children or persons who must care for a disabled individual in the home. In addition, registration will aid the employment service in assisting the working poor in upgrading their skills and income.

An individual required to register and who does not do so would not be counted as a member of the family for purposes of determining the amount of benefits, but any income that he has would be counted as a part of the family's income. An individual refusing to register would not be paid any part of the family assistance payment; the Secretary could, if he deemed it appropriate, pay the family's benefits to a person who is not a member of the family, but who is interested in, or concerned with, its welfare. These provisions closely follow those in present law.

Exclusions from the requirement to register would be made in the case of individuals who are so ill, incapacitated or of advanced age that they are unable to engage in gainful employment. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare could by regulation prescribe when the age of a particular person, taking into account the person's health, education, and former training and any other pertiment conditions, was so advanced as to make registration unnecessary. In the case of any individual who is not required to register because of incapacity, provision is made for referral to the vocational rehabilitation agency so that rehabilitation for employment can be initiated. All existing rehabilitation services available should be applied in order to enhance the individual's capacity for self-support. The primary objective of rehabilitation services should be economic self-sufficiency through gainful employment. The vocational rehabilitation agency will make initial determinations of incapacity which precludes the individual from gainful employment, in a manner similar to that followed under present law by the Social Security Administration where the vocational rehabilitation agency makes initial disability determinations under the social security law. Subsequent review of the individual's incapacity and continuing need for vocational rehabilitation services would be made as necessary by the State agency, or, in the case of an individual who is not totally and permanently disabled, at least once each quarter.

Your committee believes that the effectiveness of the training and employment programs in the bill will be materially enhanced by the provisions requiring that persons not referred to the Department of Labor because of incapacity be referred to the vocational rehabilitation program. This program has demonstrated that large numbers of persons with vocational handicaps can, with medical care, counseling, and training around their handicaps, be made wholly or largely economically independent. The requirements for referral are the same as for persons being sent directly to manpower agencies. Undoubtedly some of the individuals initially sent to manpower agencies will be found to need vocational rehabilitation services before other training and placement can be effective. Such referrals can and should be made under the authority in the bill. Penalties equal to those for failure to participate in other manpower programs are appropriate and the bill so provides.

Your committee's bill would also exclude from mandatory registration children who are under age 16 or under age 21 and regular students. The administration's bill would only have required the registration of individuals over age 18. However, your committee believes that the training aspects of the family assistance program could be of great use in preparing youths age 16 and 17 not attending school for employment.

A mother of a child under the age of 6 who is actually caring for the child is not required to register. As a practical matter, the committee expects a large percentage of these mothers to voluntarily register for employment and take advantage of child-care provisions and training incentives and opportunities. That has been the experience under the present WIN program.

An additional exclusion is provided for the mother or other female caretaker of a child if there is an adult male related to the child in the home who is required to register and does so register. These mothers will also be entitled to voluntarily register for training and employment. If the father in this situation refuses to register, the mother would have to register.

A person whose presence in the home is required on a substantially continuous basis in order to care for an ill or incapacitated member of the household would not be required to register. This type of illness or incapacity would likely be more severe than the types discussed above, since a regular caretaker would have to be found necessary.

The Secretary is required to furnish child care services for so long as he determines appropriate when the individuals, after having been required to register, are participating in manpower services, training, or employment. No mother would be required to undertake training or employment without the assurance of adequate and necessary child care.

g. Denial of benefits in case of refusal of manpower services, training, or employment

Since the intent of your committee's bill is to insure that individuals have every opportunity to increase their capacity for self-support, provision has been made in the bill to insure that individuals who register actually participate in suitable manpower services, training, or employment. Your committee is proposing that a member of a family who, after registration and without good cause, refuses to participate or continue to participate in suitable manpower services, training, or employment would, after notice and opportunity for hearing, not be considered a family member for purposes of determining the family's benefit amount, except that his income would be counted. Good cause is determined by examining how a reasonable individual would act in the same circumstances. Thus, for example, employment or training opportunities could be refused if the individual were ill, or had an allergic reaction to materials with which he would be working in the course of employment or training. A woman might refuse such opportunities if the position offered were in a dangerous locality and at late hours. Similarly, a mother could refuse training or employment if adequate child care were not available.

In establishing standards of "suitability", your committee has relied heavily on the definition long in use under the State unemployment insurance laws, with modifications appropriate to the client group to be served.

The bill provides that in no event may employment be considered suitable if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lockout, or other labor dispute (including an organizational dispute); if the wages, hours, or other terms or conditions of employment are contrary to or less than those prescribed by Federal, State, or local law or are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality; or if, as a condition of being employed, the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization. It is your committee's intent that registrants should not be referred to positions where any of these conditions exist. These protections for the individual are based on similar provisions in the Federal Unemployment Tax Act. The suitable work provision operates both to protect the individual from unreasonable work requirements, and to assure that employment is required.

In those cases where exclusion from the family of such an individual would make a child ineligible for payments as in a two-member family, your committee's bill requires that such an individual should be considered a member of the family for eligibility but not for payment purposes. Furthermore, the bill requires that benefits for the other family members not be paid to the individual who refuses manpower services, training, or employment, but rather to another family member or to a person outside the family who is interested in, or concerned with, the welfare of the family.

The provisions governing hearings by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare are made applicable to hearings by the Secretary of Labor in cases of refusal of manpower services, training, or employment. While it is a Federal responsibility to provide these hearings, your committee contemplates that the Secretary of Labor will utilize the expertise of the State employment security agencies in meeting this responsibility. Your committee expects the Secretary of Labor to contract with these agencies to furnish the required hearings, but your committee wishes to make clear that the Secretary of Labor will bear the responsibility to insure that hearings are held within the required 90 days.

h. Transfer of funds for on-the-job training programs

Under your committee's bill, the estimated amount of family assistance benefits that would otherwise be paid to individuals participating in public or private employer-compensated on-the-job training programs of the Secretary of Labor if they were not participating would be made available to the Secretary of Labor to help pay the costs of such programs. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor shall provide by agreement the method of estimating the family assistance benefits and making the transfer of funds.

2. STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

Your committee recognizes that the new family assistance benefits, would generally not provide a level of support for families equal to that now provided in many States for AFDC recipients. The bill requires, therefore, that the benefits would be augmented by supplementary payments under State plans. The bill provides that each State that was making AFDC payments higher than the new family assistance benefit, would be required to maintain the levels of payments in effect as of January 1, 1970, or, if lower, a level corresponding to the poverty level as defined in the bill. The bill provides also for partial Federal financing of State supplementary payments in order to support the efforts of the States in making such payments. There would not be any Federal financing of any State supplementary payments to the working poor, nor is there any requirement that the States supplement payments to the working poor.

Your committee's bill would establish a formula for reimbursement of administrative expenses which would provide incentives for the States to contract with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for Federal administration of both the family assistance plan and the State supplementary programs. Your committee feels strongly that needy people should not be shuttled from window to window or agency to agency and that a single point of contact for recipients is highly desirable if the committee's proposals are to be effective.

a. Payments to States for other welfare programs conditioned on supplementation

Your committee's bill would require that in order for a State to be eligible to continue to receive Federal payments under part A of title IV (services to needy families with children) and part B (child-welfare services), title V (maternal, child health, and crippled children's services), title XVI (aid to the aged, blind, and disabled), and title XIX (medical assistance), the State would have to agree to supplement the family assistance benefits so that present payment levels (or, if lower, the poverty level) would be maintained. This supplement would be required for all families eligible for family assistance benefits except those where both parents are present, neither is incapacitated; and the father is not unemployed. Generally, this would mean that the States would supplement family assistance benefits for all recipients who could have been eligible under present law and—whether or not the State previously covered them—families with an unemployed parent. Since families headed by a father working full time are not assisted under present law, the States would not be required to supplement the family assistance benefits of these families.

b. Eligibility for and amount of the supplementary payments

Your committee's bill would provide that eligibility for, and the amount of, the supplementary payments would be determined generally under the rules and regulations that apply to the family assistance plan. Your committee believes that not only is this an important step toward the establishment of needed nationwide uniform standards for assistance, but a necessary one to facilitate Federal administration of the program.

As stated previously the bill would require that the amount of State supplementation be sufficient to assure payment levels at least as high as those in effect in the State in January 1970, or the poverty level, if lower. Thus in determining the State supplementary payment amounts, the State standards of need and payment limitations in effect for January 1970 would be applied (or if lower, the poverty level) unless the State wishes to apply a higher standard of need. If a State plan in effect on January 1, 1970 provided for meeting less than 100 percent of its needs standards or for considering less than 100 percent of its requirement in determining need, the Secretary would, by regulations, prescribe standards for insuring that the January 1970 payment levels would be maintained.

The amount of the supplementary benefit of a family would be reduced as under the family assistance plan, except that with respect to earned income the State would be required to disregard (1) $720 of earned income per year plus (2) one-third of the earnings between $720 and twice the amount of the unreduced family assistant benefit (2×$1,600 or $3,200 for a family of four), plus (3) one-fifth (or more, if the Secretary so prescribes by regulation) of any remaining income.

For example, assume that a family of four has earned income of $3,500 in a State which has a need standard of $3,000.

A step-by-step computation of the State supplementary payment

State standard in January 1970	$3,000
Treatment of family income:
Family earnings	3,500
State to disregard—
Amount set by law	−720
Remainder	2,780
Less ⅓ of remainder (up to $3,200)	−927
Earnings chargeable	1,853
Family assistance benefit	1,600
Less ½ of $2,780 ($3,500 of earnings less $720)	−1,390
Family assistance benefit	210
Total income chargeable	−2,063
State supplementary payment	937
Total income of family:
Earnings	3,500
Family assistance payment	210
State supplementary payment	937
Total	4,647

Your committee's bill would require that agreements with the State for making supplementary payments would generally follow the lines of those in existence under the present AFDC programs. Generally, the plan must—

(1) Be in effect statewide;

(2) Designate a single State agency to carry out or supervise the agreement in the State;

(3) Provide opportunity for a fair hearing;

(4) Provide proper and efficient methods of administration, as well as for effective use of a paid subprofessional staff;

(5) Agree to make reports as required by the Secretary;

(6) Provide safeguards that restrict the disclosure of information; and

(7) Provide that all individuals who wish to apply for payments shall have an opportunity to do so.

c. Payments to States

In order to assist the States in making supplementary payments the bill provides that the Federal Government generally would pay a State 30 percent of the amount expended by the State in making such payments each fiscal year, not including any supplementary payments made to the working poor. However, there would be no Federal payment for that part of the supplementary payment which exceeds the difference between the applicable poverty level and the sum of the family assistance payment and any income of the family not disregarded in computing the supplementary payments. An example of how the Federal payment to a State would be figured for a family of four is as follows:

State standard	$3,000
Family income:
Family earnings	1,000
State to disregard—
Amount set by law	−720
Remainder	280
Less ⅓ of remainder (up to $3,200)	−93
Earnings chargeable	187
Family assistance benefit	1,600
Less: ½ of $280 ($1,000 of earnings, −$720)	−140
Family assistance chargeable	−1,460
Total income chargeable	−1,647
State supplement	1,353
Poverty level	3,720
Less total income chargeable	1,647
Difference	2,073

Since the State supplementary payment ($1,353) does not exceed the difference ($2,073) between the poverty level ($3,720) and the family assistance benefit plus the earnings not disregarded ($1,647), the Secretary would pay to the State $405.90 (30 percent of the State supplementary payment of $1,353). This complete computation would not actually be necessary in the case of any State which has a standard below the poverty level. Your committee has been informed that only one State has a standard above the poverty level at the present time.

The bill makes provision for annual redetermination of the poverty level by the Secretary. The Secretary would, between July 1 and September 30 of each year, promulgate the poverty level for various sizes and types of family groups to be effective for the purpose of setting the ceiling on Federal participation during the fiscal year beginning on the July 1 following the year of promulgation.

For purposes of the promulgation, this base for determining the level will be the 1969 poverty level for a family group as set fourth below:

Family size poverty level:
1	$1,920
2	2,460
3	2,940
4	3,720
5	4,440
7 or more	6,120

Between July 1 and September 30 of each year beginning with 1970, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall review and increase, if necessary, the poverty level amounts for each size of family group by the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index (published each month by the Bureau of Labor Statistics) for the second calendar quarter of each such year over the Consumer Price Index for 1969; such increases shall be effective with respect to Federal matching for the year beginning July 1 of the next succeeding year.

d. Failure by State to comply with agreement

Your committee's bill permits the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing, to withhold all or such portion as he deems appropriate of the payments otherwise due a State under titles IV (parts A, B, and E), V, XVI, and XIX if the Secretary finds that the State has failed to comply with its agreement.

Your committee is concerned by information that has been brought to its attention indicating that some States have not met effective dates promptly for some requirements of the Social Security Amendments of 1967 and that a few States have not met all of them even at this late date. It expects the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to take whatever steps may be necessary to assure full and prompt compliance with the requirements of Federal law.

3. ADMINISTRATION

It is the intent of your committee that a new agency would be established in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to administer the family assistance plan. The new agency would be responsible for establishing and managing local family assistance plan offices and would carry out other necessary functions with the exception of those which it may find appropriate to contract with other agencies to carry out. The committee would expect that other agencies within the Department, as well as other governmental agencies outside the Department, would lend their support to the extent that doing so would be consistent with the performance of the duties required to carry out their own programs, to assist the new agency in carrying out the provisions of the plan. For example, while the administration of the family assistance plan would be completely separate and distinct from the social insurance programs, the committee would expect that the computer equipment and other capabilities of the Social Security Administration would be utilized in the administration of the family assistance plan to the extent it is economical and efficient to do so, taking into account the mission of the new agency. No part of the cost of rendering such service, however, would be chargeable to the Trust Funds administered by the Social Security Administration.

Because the full development of administrative policies, procedures, and methods to carry out the program will require considerable time, and since the time permitted between enactment and effective date is limited, the committee believes it would be desirable for the Department to request an advance appropriation to cover the costs of full-scale administrative planning for implementing the program.

a. Agreements with States

Your committee's bill, as previously indicated, calls for State supplementation of Federal family assistance payments. However, your committee felt some concern lest such a dual program arrangement lead to unnecessarily complicated and expensive dual administrative systems—a Federal system for part D benefits, and state systems for part E benefits. Therefore, in addition to requiring that State supplementary plans follow Federal uniform definitions of eligibility and treatment of income, your committee has included provisions to encourage unified administration of the family assistance plan and the State supplementary plans and it is the hope of the committee that the States will take advantage of these provisions. Under these provisions, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare can enter into an agreement with any State under which the Secretary can administer and make State supplementary benefit payments on behalf of the State. Conversely, the provisions permit agreements between the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and a State under which the State would administer and disburse the family assistance benefits provided for under part D as well as the State supplementary benefits.

If the Secretary entered into an agreement with a State to have the Federal Government administer the State's supplementary program, the Federal Government would then pay all administrative costs for the family assistance program and all administrative costs for the State's supplementary program, so that the State would realize substantial savings in administrative costs through such an arrangement. If a State chose to administer its own supplementary program, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would pay one-half of the State's administrative costs for its supplementary program. If the State agreed to administer the family assistance benefits provided for under part D, the Federal Government would reimburse the State for all of its administrative costs for part D and one-half the administrative costs of the State's supplementary program.

b. Penalties for fraud

Your committee strongly believes that every person attempting by unlawful means to obtain payments not due him under the plan, or otherwise violating any of the penal provisions of the Social Security Act, would represent a threat to an effective program. The threat goes beyond the potential drain on the funds appropriated for the program; a more important consideration is the impact such violations might have on public confidence in the integrity of the program. Under the Federal-State assistance programs, a State is required to make provisions for dealing with fraud committed by recipients. Federal regulations require that a State define fraud in accordance with State law, include criteria for identifying and investigating suspected fraud, and provide for the referral of appropriate cases to law enforcement officials. However, the procedures used in the States vary widely as to fraud in welfare cases. The criminal statutes of some States contain separate provisions for cases of welfare fraud; in other States, welfare fraud is prosecuted under the laws governing theft or one of any number of other crimes.

Your committee believes that for the family assistance plan the penalties for fraud should be the same as those provided under the social security program since the considerations that lead to provision of such penalties under social security would be equally relevant to the family assistance plan. These fraud provisions would apply only with respect to the basic family assistance program and not to the State supplementary programs.

c. Report, evaluation, research and demonstrations, and training and technical assistance

Your committee is very concerned about the need to improve the effectiveness of our national income maintenance programs. Accordingly, the bill would require a constant process of self-examination by the administrators of the family assistance program and regular reports to the Congress and the President. Evaluation by outside consultants is also authorized.

Authorization would be given to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to conduct research and demonstration projects. Since such experimentation may well involve approaches or other ideas which have no specific sanction in existing statutes or regulations, authority would also be provided for the Secretary to operate experiments (limited in scope) without regard to the eligibility and payment-amounts provisions of the plan. As in the case of evaluations, the Secretary would be authorized to use contractors to conduct such research and demonstration projects.

The bill would also authorize the Secretary to provide technical assistance to States and to provide for such training of State personnel as the Secretary deems appropriate to assist the States in improving administration of assistance to people in need. Your committee believes that the additional funds available to carry out these provisions for evaluation activities, research and demonstrations, and technical assistance and training should be limited to no more than $20 million per fiscal year and the bill so provides.

d. Obligation of deserting parent

One of the major causes of instability among AFDC families is parental desertion. To discourage abandonment of families, your committee's bill provides that an individual who has deserted or abandoned his spouse, child, or children shall owe a monetary obligation to the United States by the deserting parent equal to the total amount of family assistance benefits, plus the Federal share of any State supplementary payments, paid to the spouse or child during the period of desertion or abandonment. The liability of a deserting parent would be reduced by the amount of any payment he made to his family during the period of desertion.

In those cases where a court has issued an order for the support and maintenance of the deserted spouse or children, the obligations of the deserting parent would be limited to the amount specified by the court order.

To the extent these amounts are not collected directly from the individual involved, the amount due the United States under these provisions could be collected from any amounts otherwise due the deserting parent by any officer or agency of the United States or under any Federal program.

The terms desertion or abandonment are much broader than their meaning under State law. Physical absence from the home and a specific intention to desert need not be demonstrated, since a liability is created to the extent that an individual's failure to use his income and resources to support his spouse, child, or children, require that family assistance payments (and supplementary payments where applicable) be made to support them.

The individual applicant for family assistance benefits must, of course, cooperate to the fullest extent possible in establishing eligibility. In this connection, an individual applicant will be expected to cooperate in every possible way in assisting the authorities to identify and locate a deserting parent.

Your committee feels very strongly about these provisions and expresses unequivocally its intent that all Federal and State enforcement machinery should cooperate to the fullest extent possible in implementing these provisions.

e. Treatment of family assistance benefits as income for food stamp purposes

The bill provides that family assistance benefits shall be taken into account in determining entitlement to, and the cost of, food stamps.

Your committee feels that there is some merit in providing assistance to the needy both in the form of cash and in the form of food stamps. Doing so helps to assure that the family will spend a certain portion of its entire benefit for food. Your committee also feels that there is merit in providing assistance entirely in cash. The latter approach provides the recipient with more flexibility and is obviously more attractive from the standpoint of administration since a cash program is simpler to administer.

Your committee spent considerable time and effort attempting to work out a modification of the family assistance plan that would substitute additional cash payments for food stamps, but was unable to devise a satisfactory amendment. One possible change in the bill, to which the committee gave a great deal of attention, was that of combining the family assistance plan and the food stamp plan into a single, integrated cash-benefit program. Your committee finds that a program which provides all of its benefits in cash is substantially more expensive than one in which a portion of benefits are provided in cash and a portion in in-kind benefits, such as food stamps because the weighted structure of the food stamp benefit is such that the rate of participation declines as family income increases. Relatively few families are willing to tie up substantial portions of their cash in food stamps merely to obtain a small amount of additional food purchasing power. These same families would, of course, elect to take the value of their food stamp benefit if it were provided in cash. Your committee also notes that the food stamp plan provides a benefit to families who would not be covered by the family assistance plan. It also recognizes that present recipients now receiving payments larger than those provided under the family assistance plan would lose the privilege of purchasing food stamps without receiving a compensating amount of cash.

Your committee notes that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Agriculture have both stated that cash assistance should eventually be substituted for food stamps in a way that would leave the individual at least as well off in total benefits. Your committee urges that the executive branch continue to explore the possibility and potential implication of combining food assistance programs and cash assistance programs into a single integrated system which meets all the maintenance requirements of needy families. Your committee feels very strongly that a solution to this problem must be achieved and it is recommended that the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Agriculture jointly work out legislation at the earliest opportunity that would provide for integration of the two programs under a unified administration.

4. MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND CHILD CARE PROGRAMS

Since the AFDC program is being repealed, the work incentive program for AFDC recipients is replaced by a broadened, strengthened program of manpower training and child care for recipients of the new family assistance program.

a. Operation of training and employment program

Your committee over the years has believed that a mechanism has to be developed which would make it possible for welfare recipients to develop into citizens who play a significant role as workers in the economy of the Nation. It is toward this end that your committee's bill includes provisions to train, prepare for employment, and otherwise assist recipients of family assistance and State supplementary payments in securing and retaining regular employment and having the opportunity for advancement in employment. It was also to this end that your committee first reported out legislation in 1962 which initiated the community work and training programs. These programs—and the title V programs of the Economic Opportunity Act which followed—were welfare agency administered work and training programs which often emphasized work at the expense of meaningful training that would lead to the family leaving the public assistance rolls. When Congress authorized the work incentive (WIN) program in 1967, it was with the belief that the growing experience of the Department of Labor and the State employment offices in providing manpower training for the disadvantaged made it logical that they administer the program.

This decision has been justified in many respects. One illustration of this is the innovative development of the manpower "team" staffing arrangement which makes available an assortment of specialists to the enrollees (including "coaches" often of the same ethnic background) as opposed to the more traditional approaches used in earlier manpower programs.

Your committee has just completed a survey of WIN projects in some 29 jurisdictions, and has heard the testimony of numerous WIN administrators and experts in the field, including the organization—the Auerbach Corporation—which has the prime contract for evaluation of the program. The performance of the WIN program to date has been mixed. In many jurisdictions it has performed well—the welfare agencies and the employment services cooperating in such a manner that the program is running relatively smoothly and with considerable promise of fulfilling the objectives outlined by Congress. In other jurisdictions—including, unfortunately, some of our largest metropolitan areas—the program has gotten off to a slow start. Often these programs have been characterized by minimal welfare and employment service cooperation and, in a few instances, the hostility of one agency toward the other has been openly expressed.

Moreover, the problem of competing bureaucracies has not been restricted to the State level. Secretary of Labor Shultz stated in his testimony before the committee:

> Unfortunately, our two Departments [Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare] have not always worked together as smoothly as they should. The study made by the Legislative Reference Service of the enactment of WIN establishes this fact. There have been gaps in communication, and a history of competition for running the work training program.

The committee strongly supports Secretary Shultz's position that Health, Education, and Welfare and Labor should work with the maximum of coordination in the administration of family assistance. This is essential to the effective operation of the proposed program.

This situation just outlined, coupled with a slowly developing program of child care for WIN mothers, which will be discussed subsequently in this section, makes necessary, however, a number of legislative changes in the training program.

(1) Uniform referral system.—The system of welfare agency determination of "appropriateness" of recipients for participation in the program and the resulting wide disparity in referral policy between the States are eliminated by the bill. Specific definition of the persons who are expected to register with the employment service office will eliminate the situation where, according to Department of Health, Education, and Welfare statistics, over 96 percent of the welfare recipients assessed for WIN participation in West Virginia were referred, while less than 7 percent of those assessed were referred in New York. Under the system proposed by the committee bill, welfare administrators and workers will not be able to substitute their own ideas of who should be trained for work for the national policy laid down by Congress. As a result, administrators of the manpower programs should, in all areas, have an adequate supply of candidates for their manpower training slots.

(2) Supportive services and training expenses.—Lack of necessary health and other supportive services has been particularly damaging to the effective operation of the WIN program in a number of States. The lack of medical examinations, the lack of ability to remedy minor health problems, and the lack of counseling services which might solve serious family problems all lead to unnecessary and wasteful terminations of participation in training or employment. Some States have established units in their welfare agencies which have worked effectively in getting welfare recipients into the program and in working with the manpower team in keeping them in training and on the job when they do enter employment. Under an amendment added by the committee, the bill would require, under threat of loss of Federal matching, that welfare agencies provide those supportive services which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare determines to to be necessary to support the work and training aspects of the program. The bill emphasizes the importance of such services by providing 90-percent Federal matching as opposed to the 75-percent matching for other social services which are not connected with the training program. Under the bill a State must have an agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare under which it must provide health, vocational rehabilitation, counseling, social and other supporting services for persons who undertake or continue manpower training or employment.

Your committee wishes to emphasize its intention that employment service-type activities in the welfare agencies should not be financed through the existing regular social service provision, or through the supporting services provision which was added by your committee's bill.

Another related problem of existing law has been reimbursement for training expenses which must come from the welfare side of the program. This has often resulted in delayed payments, multiple checks, and general inconvenience to the trainee which have had an adverse effect on his attitude toward the program. Under your committee's bill, the employment service could reimburse the trainee for necessary expenses directly related to his participation in training, such as transportation, lunches, special clothes, and supplies needed for the training.

(3) Comprehensive manpower services.—The 1967 WIN legislation authorized a comprehensive array of manpower and employment services. Your committee's bill is equally comprehensive as to the services made available and gives sufficient authority to the Department of Labor and the State employment service offices so that they may develop individual employment plans to meet the needs of individuals who have serious vocational, social, and educational handicaps. The committee bill will also assure access to services and opportunities available under existing manpower programs such as MDTA, CEP, JOBS, and other training programs of nationwide applicability. Such services and opportunities would include counseling, testing, work experience, institutional and on-the-job training, upgrading, program orientation, job development, coaching, job placement, and followup services required to assist in securing and retaining employment and opportunities for advancement. It is not intended by your committee that these programs should provide assistance which would be supportive of firms or industries which have high rates of turnover of labor because of low wages, seasonality or other factors.

(a) On-the-job training.—Your committee has been disappointed in the implementation of a number of the components of the existing program. On-the-job training opportunities under the WIN program—which currently are running at about 500 slots—have not been commensurate with the importance that the Congress has placed on this type of training. Spokesmen of the Department of Labor before the committee indicated that they have the administrative authority to deal with some of those elements which have impeded the development of OJT, such as voluminous small-print contracts which frighten small employers away from the program. The committee expects the Labor Department and the State employment services to devote special attention to the goal of making OJT a meaningful part of the program.

To make certain that such training is adequately financed, your committee's bill includes a special provision to provide funds for OJT. As stated previously, the estimated amount of family assistance benefits that would otherwise be paid to individuals participating in public or private employer-compensated OJT programs of the Secretary of Labor if they were not participating, would be made available to the Secretary of Labor to pay the costs of such programs.

It is not the intention of the committee, however, that the above provision will replace the regular authorized appropriations for OJT under this program, but will add to the overall effort.

(b) Special work projects.—The committee is also distressed that the special work project provision in WIN has only been implemented in a meaningful way in one State, despite the fact that the law required their implementation in all States. The bill renews and emphasizes the special work projects and eliminates the complex financing arrangements which the Department of Labor declares has inhibited their growth. Your committee fully expects wide implementation of special work projects. Your committee also believes that these projects may be of critical importance to the training and placement of welfare recipients if employment rates fall below existing levels.

The bill provides authority for special work projects which meet real public needs and which are conducted through grants and contracts with public or nonprofit private agencies or organizations. The employment records of participants in these projects shall be reviewed at least every 6 months for the purpose of determining whether it would be feasible to place such individuals in regular employment or in other kinds of training. The projects themselves should be selected for as much training value as possible so that they will improve the employability of the participants. It is not the intention of the committee that such projects be used for permanently subsidized employment, and measures should be taken to move participants into regular jobs.

The bill retains certain safeguards in present law with respect to special work projects. No wage rates provided under any special work project would be lower than the applicable minimum wage for the particular work concerned. In addition, appropriate workmen's compensation protections, and standards for the health, safety, and other conditions applicable to the performance of work and training would be established and maintained. Conditions of work, training, education, and employment should be reasonable in light of such factors as the type of work, geographical region, and proficiency of the participant.

(c) Relocation assistance.—Authority for relocation assistance is provided under the bill in situations where an individual volunteers to move from an area where the prospects for employment are poor to one that has a shortage of workers. Such assistance would be provided only when there is assurance, by the employment service office in the area to which the individual would be moved, that an actual full-time, full-year job is available. Further, such jobs must lead to wages sufficient to remove the family being assisted in the relocation from the family assistance rolls. The committee believes that such assistance should not be provided in the case of seasonal employment.

b. Allowances for individuals undergoing training

In some instances training incentive allowances have been unfair to WIN participants in that a person enrolled in a manpower development and training (MDTA) class might be sitting beside an MDTA enrollee who was receiving a substantially higher allowance. Your committee's bill would continue the WIN allowance of $30 per month for each individual who is a member of a family and is participating in manpower training, but if his allowance under the MDTA program would be more than $30 higher than family assistance payments (plus the State supplement), the incentive allowance to the family assistance trainee would be the difference between the two allowances.

Under the Manpower Development and Training Act, the basic allowance is computed on the basis of the average weekly gross unemployment compensation payment (including allowances for dependents) for a week of total unemployment in the State making such payments during the most recent four-calendar-quarter period for which such data are available. This amount may be increased by up to $10, and in addition $5 a week for each dependent over two up to a maximum of four additional dependents. There are special provisions to deal with the situation in which an individual's unemployment compensation benefits would exceed his training allowance.

Thus, in most cases the financial incentive to take training will be in excess of $30. In the case of North Dakota, for example, family assistance plus the State supplement would equal $188 a month for a family of four. However, since the Manpower Development and Training Act allowance in that State for the head of a family of four is $255, the incentive payment would be $67 per month—the difference between $188 and $255.

The bill would provide for smaller training allowances for recipients in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

c. Utilization of other programs

Your committee's bill would provide that the Secretary of Labor, in providing manpower training and employment services, would be authorized to use other existing programs and all sectors of the economy to the maximum extent feasible so that the establishment of an integrated and comprehensive program would result. The Secretary of Labor would be authorized to reimburse other public or private agencies, where necessary, for services rendered to persons under this part.

d. Appropriation and non-Federal share

Your committee's bill would authorize appropriation of funds sufficient to carry out the manpower provisions of the bill, including payment of up to 90 percent of the cost of training and employment and related supportive services for people registered under the family assistance plan. If the non-Federal matching requirement of 10 percent (which could be made in cash or in kind) was not met in any State, a portion of its Federal share of medicaid and other welfare expenditures would be withheld until the deficit was made up. The Secretary of Labor would apportion appropriated funds equitably among the States. In developing criteria for apportionment, the Secretary of labor shall consider the number of registrations and other relevant factors.

In addition to the training slots currently contemplated under the existing WIN program, the Administration has stated that training would be expanded to a total of 225,000 slots, including 75,000 for upgrading the skills of the working poor, in the first full year of the operation of the family assistance plan.

e. Child care. Your committee has been disturbed because necessary child care has not been available in many cases when it has been needed to enable a parent to participate in training and employment under the existing work incentive program. Lack of child care has, in fact, been one of the major drawbacks in the functioning of the program, as was shown by the committee's survey of WIN projects and by the evaluation study of the Auerbach Corp.

Your committee believes that a major effort is needed to remove lack of child care as a deterrent to training and employment. It also recognizes that the availability of necessary child care is crucial to the success of the family assistance plan. The child care provisions, therefore, are aimed at making available the appropriate kind of child care needed by families who are covered by the Family Assistance Act.

Your committee's bill requires the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, both directly (by contract or grant to public or private agencies) and through a system of prime grantees, to provide child care for individuals participating in training or employment under the manpower program. The Secretary is authorized to make grants for up to 100 percent of the costs of child care projects (including transportation, and the alteration, remodeling and renovation of facilities) to public or nonprofit private agencies which, in a particular geographic area will assure that child care is provided to persons entitled to receive it under the Family Assistance Act. The organization or agency to serve as the prime grantee for a geographical area is to be designated by the appropriate elected or appointed official or officials in that area. The prime grantee will be required to demonstrate a capacity to work effectively with the manpower agency. Where appropriate, group or institutional care for children attending school would be provided through local school systems arrangements with local educational agencies. Child care programs provided under the act would be of various kinds, providing for the kind of care needed in the light of different circumstances and needs of the children to be served. The Secretary is also authorized to charge a fee for part or all of the cost of child care if a family has the ability to make a payment.

Your committee believes that the child care provisions of the Family Assistance Act will help to overcome some of the obstacles which have inhibited the development and provision of child care services in the past. By providing for Federal initiative and responsibility and full Federal funding, your committee is making it possible for the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to move expeditiously and quickly, without being required to wait for State or local organizations and agencies to provide matching programs and funding.

The committee also expects that the Department will use its grant and contract authority to make certain that the organizations and agencies involved will provide for a greater diversity in the kinds of child care than that which is currently available. For example, school age children could, in many cases, be most appropriately cared for in the school when care is needed in out-of-school hours. Parents should have the option, too, of using babysitters of their choice, if they do not care to use, or do not have available, group child care facilities which are appropriate for their children. The committee does not expect that day care centers will be used in cases where other kinds of care are more appropriate.

By requiring that the prime grantees demonstrate a capacity to work effectively with the manpower agency, the committee believes that a greater degree of coordination of manpower and child care services can be achieved than has been the case in previous programs.

The committee bill will make it possible to use a wider variety of child care resources than has been possible in the past. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will be able to make grants and contracts according to his determination of how family assistance recipients can be served most effectively. He will be able to utilize public agencies, as well as private, nonprofit and profitmaking agencies and organizations. Thus, both the public and private sectors will be used in the provision of child care. The same authority will be available to prime grantees in entering into agreements within their areas of responsibility.

Your committee believes that well-designed child care programs, in addition to benefiting parents by freeing them for work, can also be of great benefit to the child and can help to break the cycle of poverty. Child care for the preschool child should not be merely custodial care, but should provide for child development, through the provision of health, educational, and other necessary services.

However, your committee is also concerned that unreasonable Federal, State, and local standards and licensing requirements have interfered with the provision of essential child care services, and may prove a barrier to the development and provision of the services essential to the success of the family assistance plan. Therefore, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is requested to furnish the committee by February 1, 1971, a report and recommendations based on a thorough review, in cooperation with State and local officials, of existing Federal standards as well as State and local licensing requirements, in order to determine those requirements which are essential both to protecting the child and assuring an appropriate program for him.

Your committee's bill also authorizes funds for grants to, and contracts with, any public or private agency or organization for part or all of the costs for evaluation, research, training of personnel, technical assistance or research or demonstration projects to determine more effective methods of providing child care services.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has told the committee that it intends to request budget authority of $386 million for child care purposes for the first full year of operation of the child care program. It estimates that it will provide services for 300,000 school age children at an estimated cost of $400 per child and for 150,000 preschool children at an estimated cost of $1,600 per child. A total of $26 million would be designated for alteration, remodeling and renovation of facilities and for staff training and research and demonstration projects.

In order to assure that child care resources will be developed as rapidly as possible, your committee has provided that the child care provisions will be effective as soon as the bill is enacted into law.

f. Advance funding

(1) In order to give adequate notice of available funding, under your committee's bill, appropriations for one year to pay the cost of the program during the next year would be authorized.

(2) In order to make the transition to advance funding, initial funding under your committee's bill would provide for the year of enactment of this bill and for the next following year.

g. Evaluation and research: Reports to Congress

(1) Your committee's bill would provide for continuing evaluation and research by the Secretaries of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare of the manpower training and employment programs provided under this act, including their effectiveness in achieving stated goals and their impact on other related programs. The Secretary of Labor may conduct research and demonstration projects to improve the effectiveness of the manpower training and employment programs. He may also conduct demonstrations of improved training techniques for upgrading the skills of the working poor. The Secretary of Labor may, for these purposes, contract for independent evaluations of and research regarding such programs or individual projects under such programs, and establish a data collection, processing, and retrieval system.

Sums not to exceed $15 million would be authorized for such research and evaluation in any fiscal year.

(2) The bill would require an annual report to the Congress from the Secretary of Labor on the programs for manpower training and employment services. The committee believes that an information and accounting system should be maintained so that the amount of money expended and services rendered under this program may be clearly distinguishable from those under other manpower programs. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare also is required to file an annual report on the programs for child care and supportive services.

5. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS RELATING TO ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN

Your committee's bill would eliminate the provisions of the present AFDC program that relate to cash payments for families with dependent children, but would not substantially alter those provisions of title IV which provide services for families, foster care for children and emergency assistance. The requirement of the present AFDC program that the State plan of aid and services to families with children must be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State would be modified, as it would apply only to services. The bill would authorize the Secretary to permit certain exceptions to the "Statewideness" requirement.

B. Changes in the Program for the Aged, Blind, and Disabled

1. AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

Your committee has a continuing deep concern for those of our citizens who are in financial need because of old age or because of blindness or other crippling disabilities. Your committee believes that it is important at this time to revise the programs aiding these people in order to improve the substance and operation of these programs.

2. GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

Your committee's bill amends the existing title XVI of the Social Security Act and sets forth the revised title XVI in its entirety. The existing title I (Old-age Assistance), title X (Aid to the Blind), and title XIV (Aid to the Permanently Disabled) would be repealed. Under the bill the new title represents the only federally aided public assistance program for needy aged, blind, or disabled individuals. In addition, Federal definitions would be substituted for those of the individual States. The more uniform requirements are necessary to facilitate Federal administration of the program. The changes in the individual sections of title XVI are set forth below.

a. Appropriations

The section of your committee's bill which authorizes appropriations for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under State plans, is amended to remove any reference to medical assistance, including medical assistance for the aged. This is because existing provisions of law preclude, as of January 1, 1970, Federal financial participation in medical assistance provided under any of the public assistance titles except title XIX (Medicaid).

b. State plans for financial assistance and services to the aged, blind, and disabled

Your committee's bill retains most of the existing State plan requirements relating to the programs of aid to the aged, blind and disabled, and adds several new requirements. Among new requirements is a periodic evaluation of the State plan at least annually, and an obligation on the part of the States to observe priorities and performance standards set by the Secretary in the administration of the State plan and in providing services thereunder.

The present prohibition against any age requirement of more than 65 years and against any citizenship requirement excluding U.S. citizens have been retained. Also, the bill requires that payments cannot be denied by a State, because of lack of citizenship, to an alien who has been residing in the United States for 5 years.

Your committee's bill prohibits any residency requirements that would exclude any resident of the State.

c. Determination of need

Your committee's great concern with the inadequacy and unevenness of assistance payments now being made to people in need because of old age, blindness, or disability, is reflected in the bill's provisions governing determination of need. The bill requires the States to pay cash assistance in an amount which, when added to nonexcluded income from other sources, guarantees income of at least $110 per month per recipient. The bill would also require that the standard of need not be lower than the standard applied on the date of enactment under the State plan approved under the existing title XVI or (in case the State had not had such a plan) the appropriate one of the standards of need applied under the plans approved under titles I, X, and XIV. (It is recognized that some individuals in nursing homes and institutions have a large part of their needs met under other programs and that any dollar minimum should not apply to them.)

The bill would require the States to use the same definition of allowable resources as provided for in the family assistance plan (see page 3).

Your committee's bill would also provide that the States could not impose any responsibility for a relative to support the individual; except that a State could require that a spouse support the recipient or that parents support a child who is under 21 or blind or severely disabled.

Under existing law, a State may (at its option) disregard the first $20 of earnings of an aged person and one-half of the next $60 per month. Your committee's bill changes the optional disregard provision to make it the same as that in the family assistance program—the first $60 per month plus one-half of the remainder.

Your committee also believes that the earnings exemption for the severely disabled should be liberalized and made mandatory on the States and the bill so provides. The bill makes it consistent with that which has been in effect for some years for the blind, i.e., a mandatory exemption of $85 per month plus one-half of the remainder, together with any additional amounts that are disregarded under an approved plan of vocational rehabilitation. Your committee believes this change will provide more meaningful encouragement for severely disabled persons to accept rehabilitation services and employment within their capacities and will assure equitable treatment as between blind individuals and individuals with other forms of severe disability.

The bill would retain the present mandatory disregard of the exemption of the first $85 of earnings per month in the case of the blind. Also, as under present law, $7.50 in any income for the aged, blind, or disabled, could be disregarded at the option of the States.

d. Payments to States for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled

Your committee's bill would establish the following new Federal matching formula with respect to expenditures for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under State plans approved under the new title XVI. With respect to such assistance, the Federal Government would make the following Federal contribution: (1) 90 percent of the first $65 of average payment, plus (2) 25 percent of the balance up to a maximum set by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

e. Alternative provision for direct Federal payments to individuals

The bill contains new authority which would permit the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to enter into agreements with any State under which the Secretary would make the payments directly to the eligible individuals. Under such an agreement the Federal Government would pay all of the administrative costs. Your committee believes that this authority will make possible economies in operation that are generally associated with unified administration.

f. Overpayments and underpayments

Your committee's bill would require that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare make appropriate provision to avoid penalizing recipients for past overpayments if they were without fault and if adjustment or recovery would defeat the purposes of the program or be against equity or good conscience or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration.

g. Operation of State plans

The bill sets out conditions under which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would withhold Federal funds in whole or in part when the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency, finds that the State plan for aid to the aged, blind and disabled no longer complies with the plan requirements.

h. Payments to States for services and administration

The bill provides, that, with respect to services for which expenditures are made under the approved State plan, the Federal Government would pay the same percentages of costs as under existing law—that is, 75 percent in the case of the training of personnel and certain specified services and 50 percent in the case of the other costs of administering the State plan. The bill also retains the provision under which 75-percent matching is available only when the State plan provides for the minimum services for self-support or self-care prescribed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

i. Computation of payments to States

Your committee's bill authorizes the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to estimate before each quarter the amount a State is entitled to for aid, services, and administration for that quarter, and authorizes the Secretary to pay the estimated amount in installments adjusted by any overpayment or underpayment for any prior quarter. This continues the arrangement under present law.

j. Definition

Under existing law eligibility on account of disability is limited to those who are permanently and totally disabled, while your committee's bill would provide aid to those who are "severely" disabled. The bill would also specify that whether an individual is blind or severely disabled would be determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, whereas under present law there are no federally prescribed criteria for determining whether an individual is blind or totally disabled.

The committee expects that severely disabled will be interpreted to mean persons whose physical or mental conditions substantially preclude them from engaging in gainful employment or self-employment. It is also expected that the disability is one that has or can be expected to last for a period of 12 months or result in death. Thus, the definition of severely disabled would follow closely the definition now used for disability insurance benefits under title II.

Your committee understands that all but a very few States use essentially the same definition of blindness insofar as central visual acuity is concerned (i.e., less than 20/200 in the better eye with maximum correction). It accordingly believes that a uniform national definition is warranted at this time.

k. Repeal of titles I, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act

Your committee's bill would repeal titles I, X, and XIV, which are replaced by the provisions of the present bill.

C. Miscellaneous Conforming Amendments

Your committee's bill would make a number of necessary conforming changes in titles IV, XI, XVIII, XIX of the Social Security Act.

It would also amend the Social Security Amendments of 1969. Section 1007 of these amendments is a provision for passing along some of the social security benefit increase provided under those amendments to public assistance recipients. The provision requires each State to assure that every recipient in the adult categories of public assistance who receives a social security benefit will receive a $4 monthly increase in total income (either by disregarding that part of the social security benefit or by raising the State's standard of assistance for all recipients). This provision was made applicable only through June 1970.

Under your committee's bill the requirement would be made permanent.

D. General

1. EFFECTIVE DATE

The changes made in the bill, other than the child care provisions would be effective with July 1, 1971, except for those States which have statutes which prevent them from making the supplementary payments required by the new part E of title IV and whose legislatures have not met and adjourned by July 1, 1971. The committee has been informed that only a few States would be in this situation. The bill would be effective on July 1, 1972, or earlier if the State certifies that the statutory impediment no longer exists. The child care provisions would be effective upon enactment of the bill.

2. SAVING PROVISION

Your committee's bill assures that for 2 fiscal years after the year in which the supplementary payment provisions become effective a State's expenditures for supplementary payments and payments under title XVI (from its own funds) would not by reason of the requirements of this act have to exceed its expenditures (non-Federal) under existing law for the same year. The bill provides that for these 2 fiscal years the Federal Government would meet the excess of non-Federal expenses made necessary by the bill over what the non-Federal expense would have been under present law. States and localities would thus be guaranteed no required increase in expenditures for assistance payments as compared with what would have been expended under existing law for the same period. Since most States would not be required to incur additional costs as a result of enactment of this bill, this provision would act as a saving provision for a few States that would incur relatively modest welfare costs under the bill.

3. SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR PUERTO RICO, THE VIRGIN ISLANDS, AND GUAM

Your committee's bill includes special provisions for Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam under which the amount of family assistance benefits, and all of the amounts used under the family assistance plan (other than the $720 amount of annual earnings to be disregarded) and the new title XVI of the Social Security Act (aid to the aged, blind, and disabled), would be adjusted (but only downward) as the per capita income of each is related to the per capita income of the lowest per capita income State.

IV. FINANCING THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT

The cost in calendar year 1968 terms to the Federal Government of your committee's bill is $4.4 billion above expenditures under present law, the same as the cost of the welfare recommendations submitted to the Congress by President Nixon in October 1969. This estimate is based upon information furnished to your committee by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The 1968 figures are the latest available and the reason they are used is explained in the discussion below under the heading Federal Control of Costs. However, the components of cost differ, as shown in the table below:

NET COST COMPARISON: PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL VS. COMMITTEE BILL, CALENDAR YEAR 1968[1]

	President's proposal	Committee bill
	(billions)	(billions)
Payments to families[2]	$3.0	$2.6
Payments to States under pt. E[3]	.1	.4
Adult assistance	.4	.5
Training and day care[4]	.6	.6
Administration and other	.3	.3
Total	4.4	4.4

[1] The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare was not able to furnish all of the cost information presented on the basis of the figures applying to the fiscal year 1972, the first full year under the proposed programs. The costs are expressed, therefore, in terms of what the programs would have cost had they been in operation in 1968 (but including the effects of the 15 percent general increase in social security benefits effective this year).

[2] This item is the estimated cost of the family assistance plan payments to low-income families with children minus the cost of the Federal share of AFDC payments under existing law.

[3] For the President's proposal, this item is the cost of the "50-90" rule (explained below). For the committee bill, it is the cost of the 30-percent Federal matching of State supplemental payments plus the cost of the saving provision described on page —.

[4] These figures are not in the bill; they are the figures the administration has indicated it will include in the 1972 budget for such purposes.

Several of the changes made by your committee affect the way in which the Federal Government will incur costs and the financial impact on individual States. Chief among the changes were (1) deletion of a provision which permitted one-half of unearned income to be disregarded in computing the family assistance benefits; (2) deletion of a provision which assured the States a savings of 10 percent of their costs in the federally-assisted public assistance programs and which also required certain States to spend at least 50 percent of these costs (the "50–90" rule); (3) the inclusion of a new provision under which the Federal Government will pay 30 percent of a State's supplementary payment costs (up to the poverty level); and (4) increasing the minimum income payment (to an individual with no other income) in the adult categories from $90 per recipient to $110 per month.

The deletion of the unearned income exemption resulted in lowered costs sufficient to finance your committee's changes. In addition, the recently enacted changes in social security benefits lowered costs of public assistance for both the Federal Government and the States. A summary of the cost impact of these changes is shown below.

	Billion
Reduction in cost due to deletion of unearned income exemption	−$0.4
Reduction in cost due to deletion of "50–90" rule	−.1
Reduction in cost from social security benefit increases	−.1
Cost of 30-percent Federal matching of State supplementary payments	+.4
Cost of increasing the minimum income standards in the adult categories	+.2
Total	0.0

The total fiscal savings afforded to the States by your committee's bill are about the same as those which the States would have achieved under the administration's proposal. The way in which the States share in this fiscal relief, however, is substantially changed. In general, States which have been making greater fiscal effort in their welfare programs achieve more savings than they would have under the President's proposed legislation. This results from the combined impact of the change to the 30 percent matching in State supplementary payment costs, which helps States with higher benefit levels, and the increased minimum income standards, which require States which have relatively low benefit levels in their adult category programs to increase their fiscal effort. A comparison of fiscal relief under the administration's initial proposals and under your committee's bill is shown below.

[1] Family program costs are actual for calendar year 1968 whereas adult program costs are based on 1 month, and annualized to reflect full-year costs. Figures for adult programs are slightly higher than actual calendar year 1966 experience. Data are for federally assisted programs only; i.e., general assistance programs are not included.

*These States have extensive General Assistance programs for the working poor. They will derive additional fiscal relief from the Family Assistance Plan beyond what is shown here.

[1] The impact of the saving provision is shown in the combined program columns. States that would otherwise incur costs from the Committee bill are shown as obtaining no fiscal relief. Federal costs are increased by the amount estimated as reimbursable to the State.

[1] Estimates include impact of 15-percent social security increase and $4 "pass through" as well as effects of committee bill. Federal payments in family programs are the costs of FAP payments to current recipients (plus UF cases where States do not now have such programs) plus 30 percent of the estimated State supplements.

[2] Does not include estimated payments to the working poor.

[3] These payments are very crudely estimated on the basis of the distribution of poverty among the States in 1960.

ALTERNATIVE BENEFIT LEVELS CONSIDERED

Your committee also considered the basic elements affecting the cost and coverage of plans like the family assistance plan. These elements are: (1) the amount of benefit provided to a family with no other income (the basic benefit level); (2) the rate at which this benefit level is reduced by the presence of earnings (the disregard formula or marginal tax rate); and (3) the level of family income at which it is no longer eligible for any benefit (the breakeven point). Any two of these elements determine the third.[1] They thus also determine the cost of the plan and the number of eligible families.

Raising the basic benefit level is consistent with the desire to provide more adequate support for those families who have no other means of support. Increasing it $100, however, and keeping other parts of the family assistance plan the same, raises the family breakeven point by $200, increases the cost by $500 million and the number of eligible families by 300 thousand. The cost of such increases in general gets progressively higher; i.e. each additional $100 in the basic benefit costs more than the preceding one. The costs and number of eligible families under plans otherwise identical to the family assistance plan, but with different basic benefit levels are shown below. The costs shown are gross costs and are not directly comparable to the net costs shown above.

[1] Actually, the basic benefit level and the breakeven point jointly determine only the average tax rate; a variable marginal tax rate, low in certain ranges of income and high in others, can be designed to produce any necessary average.

TABLE VI—ESTIMATED GROSS COSTS OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN AT DIFFERENT BENEFIT LEVELS,[1] CALENOAR YEAR 1968

[1] Cost figures are for families with children only; i.e., they do not include costs of changes in adult categories. Administrative costs are not included.
[2] The proportion of the $500 for the first two members to $300 for additional members in the $1,600 plan is maintained at the higher benefit levels.
[3] Ooes not include fiscal relief from savings in general assistance programs.

Raising the marginal tax rate, thereby lowering the breakeven point, is consistent with the desire to reduce costs and prevent families with moderately higher incomes from becoming eligible for benefits. But it is inconsistent with the desire to provide positive financial incentives for work. For example, your committee's bill permits the first $60 per month of earned income to be completely disregarded in determining a family's benefit under the family assistance plan. Deleting this particular provision would reduce the cost of the bill by $840 million. Unfortunately, it would also produce many situations in which family heads would find themselves with less total disposable income when working than when not working. This is because expenses are incurred by going to work. In fact, the figure $60 was chosen because it represents the average amount of work related expenses as determined by studies of the Department of Labor. Your committee finds that providing this disregard is necessary if appropriate work incentives are to be maintained. It also finds that providing a flat amount is preferable to existing law, which places no ceiling on the allowable deductions for work related expenses which States may permit in their current AFDC programs. Providing incentives for work is one thing; encouraging workers to take jobs which, in the absence of a family assistance or AFDC program, would yield them very little additional net income is quite another.

Your committee recognizes that there is little empirical information with which to decide precisely the appropriate marginal tax rate or benefit reduction formula. It is unfortunate that there is little more information today then there was when your committee was considering the 1967 amendments to the Social Security Act.

Beyond the basic disregard of $60 a month, your committee's bill provides that family assistance benefits be reduced 50 cents for each additional dollar of earnings. State supplementary payments to families eligible for them will be reduced by 17 cents for each dollar of additional earnings, if the family is receiving family assistance benefits. The combined effect of the two reduction formulas is that families receiving both family assistance and State supplementary benefits will have their total benefits reduced by 67 cents for each dollar of earnings above $60. Families whose incomes are sufficiently high that they are no longer eligible for family assistance benefits but are still eligible for some State supplementary payment will have their benefits reduced 80 cents for each additional dollar of earnings above the family assistance break-even point.

EXTENSION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE TO SINGLE ADULTS AND CHILDLESS COUPLES

Your committee investigated the cost and coverage implications of extending the family assistance plan concept to couples and unrelated individuals. With a basic benefit level of $500 per year for a single individual and $1,000 for a couple, family assistance gross payments would increase by $1 billion and the number of persons covered by 4.5 million. Of course, net additional costs would be somewhat less, as the costs of the adult categories would decline. However, there would still have to be a substantial amount of Federal sharing of State supplementary payments within these categories, since the family assistance plan extended in this way would come nowhere near replacing the present Federal share of costs. (The present average annual Federal cost per OAA recipient is approximatley $565; under an extended family assistance plan concept, the average direct Federal payment would be less than $300.) Further, every State would have to supplement the Federal payments to the aged, blind, and disabled because the maximum Federal payment to an individual with no other income would be $41.66 per month. Because of the cost, and because no substantial improvements in the adult categories would be derived, your committee does not believe it wise to extend the family assistance plan concept to childless couples and unrelated individuals.

FINANCING ADULT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Your committee's bill does make several substantial improvements in the adult categories although it does not revise the basic nature of the program.

The administration had proposed a new Federal matching formula of 100 percent of the first $50, 50 percent of the next $15, and 25 percent thereafter (of the average payment per recipient). Your committee's bill proposes that the formula be 90 percent of the first $65 and 25 percent thereafter. This increases the Federal cost by about $30 million but prevents possible situations in which a State might make no contribution.

The administration had proposed a minimum income standard in the adult categories of $90 per month per recipient. (A minimum income standard requires the State to make payments to individuals, which in combination with the individual's other income, equals the minimum standard.) Your committee's bill has a minimum income standard of $110 a month per recipient.

It should be noted that the administration proposals were submitted prior to the recently enacted social security benefit increase. Since many of the recipients in the adult categories also receive social security benefit payments, changes in the latter program affect the Federal costs of public assistance. The savings due to the social security increase are estimated to be about $100 million. These savings, along with other changes in the administration proposal, offset the increased cost of raising the minimum income standard.

Your committee explored the cost implications of minimum income standards above $110 per month. It finds that they would require substantial additional Federal expenditures and require changes in the proposed Federal matching formula. The latter change would be necessary to protect the States from incurring costs that would not be offset by other provisions of your committee's bill[1]. The cost implications of higher minimum income standards are shown below.

TABLE VII.—CHANGES IN ANNUAL FEDERAL AND STATE EXPENDITURES IN ADULT CATEGORY PROGRAMS FOR DIFFERENT MINIMUM INCOME STANDARDS, CALENDAR YEAR 1968

FEDERAL CONTROL OF COSTS

Your committee has been concerned in recent years about the open-ended public assistance matching formula and the indications that the costs of the present welfare program, if the program is left unchanged, will continue to spiral upwards. The bill represents an effort to gain control over these ever-increasing costs. Under existing legislation, the Federal Government has virtually no control over welfare expenditures. This is especially true where States have elected to use the Federal matching formula provided by title XIX of the Social Security Act. Under that formula there is no limit on the extent to which the States can raise benefit levels or permit their caseloads to increase, and still receive 50 percent or higher Federal matching of their welfare costs. In contrast, substantial Federal control over welfare costs is achieved through three separate provisions of your committee's bill: (1) the basic benefit levels in the family assistance plan can only be changed by congressional action; (2) the Federal Government will only share in the States' supplementary payments that result from the use of a need standard at or below the poverty level; and (3) the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare can establish an upper limit to the Federal Government's matching of State costs in the adult category programs.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has not provided detailed estimates of the costs of H.R. 16311 for periods later than calendar year 1968. (Procedures developed by the Department for estimating costs were devised during 1969 when the only available data was for 1968.) The Department has indicated that it will provide more current estimates as soon as possible. In the meantime, it is possible to indicate how the costs of public assistance might change under your committee's bill over time.

[1] The saving provision would, of course, protect the States. But at higher minimum income standards many more States would be eligible for reimbursement under this clause.

Under your committee's bill, the cost components of maintenance payments are different than under existing legislation. Family assistance gross payments are direct Federal payments to low-income families with children. In addition, there will be a 30-percent Federal matching of State supplementary payments. These two components constitute an approximate counterpart to the present Federal share of payments in the aid to families with dependent children program. Under your committee's bill, the Federal share of the adult category costs is more generous but otherwise unchanged.

Potential increases or decreases in these costs components are discussed below.

Total gross family assistance payments will be determined by the number of low-income families with children and their income other than assistance. With constant benefit levels, as population increases, costs increase; as incomes increase, costs decrease. If the earned income of the working poor continues to increase as it has in the past, the savings will more than offset the impact of increasing population. Preliminary studies of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare indicate that gross payment costs are likely to decline at the annual rate of about $70 to $100 million per year. These estimates do not allow for the impact of the training programs, disincentive effects, a change in the rate of family breakup, or changes in the rate of unemployment.

The cost of the 30 percent Federal matching of State supplemental payments is likely to increase over time—barring an abrupt reversal of recent trends in public assistance. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has indicated that, were these trends to continue, this cost component would increase about $120 to $150 million per year.

The rate of increase in the costs of the adult categories is unlikely to be affected by your committee's bill. However, that rate would now be applied to a larger Federal share. Based on recent trends, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare indicated that the Federal costs in the adult categories under your committee's bill are likely to increase about $210 million per year. (The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare could place a ceiling on Federal participation in the adult categories. Such a ceiling would only affect a few States with high payments.)

A summary of potential annual changes in Federal costs under your committee's bill is shown below.

TABLE VIII.—Potential annual changes in cost under committee bill[1]

Item	Annual cost change (million)
Reduced cost of family assistance plan gross payments	$85
Increased cost of 30 percent Federal matching of State supplemental payments	135
Increased costs in adult category program	210

[1] Assumes that the basic benefit level of $500 for the first two family members and $300 for each additional member in the family assistance plan remains unchanged. For illustrative purposes only, estimates also assume that present trends in public assistance are not changed by the provisions of H.R. 16311.

Under the Department's assumptions that (1) the recent growth in caseload and costs will continue unabated, (2) that the levels of family assistance payments will remain unchanged, and (3) that if the present system were continued the States would be willing to pick up a larger share of these increased costs, the net additional costs of your committee's bill in 1975, as estimated by the Department, is shown in the following table:

TABLE IX.—POTENTIAL FEDERAL COSTS UNDER COMMITTEE BILL COMPARED TO EXISTING LEGISLATION, 1971–75[1]

	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Committee bill:
Payments to families with children	3.8	3.8	3.7	3.6	3.5
30 percent matching of State supplementals	.8	.9	1.0	1.2	1.3
Subtotal	4.6	4.7	4.7	4.8	4.8
Federal share of adult category cost	2.7	2.9	3.2	3.4	3.6
Total	7.3	7.6	7.9	8.2	8.4
Existing legislation:
Federal share of AFDC	2.5	2.9	3.4	3.9	4.5
Federal share of adult categories	2.0	2.3	2.5	2.7	2.8
Total	4.5	5.2	5.9	6.6	7.3

[1] Assumes that, with constant benefit levels, family assistance gross payment decline slightly. Other cost items are assumed to increase at the same rate as they have during the last 3 years (see discussion in text above).

Your committee believes that the additional restraints on State expenditures, a decrease in family breakup, increased activities to obtain support from parents, and the impact of work and training programs provided for in the bill will materially affect the present rapidly increasing costs of public assistance, thereby reducing the actual net additional costs somewhat below those shown above.

V. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE BILL

The first section contains the short title of the bill—the "Family Assistance Act of 1970"—and the table of contents.

TITLE I—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

SECTION 101. ESTABLISHMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

Section 101 of the bill amends title IV of the Social Security Act by adding parts D, E, and F to establish a new family assistance plan. Part D provides for the payment of family assistance benefits by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; part E provides for State supplementation of these benefits; and part F contains administrative provisions.

PART D—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

SECTION 441. APPROPRIATIONS

Section 441 authorizes the appropriation each year of a sum sufficient to carry out part D, for the purpose of providing a basic level of financial assistance throughout the Nation to needy families with children in a manner which will strengthen family life, encourage work training and self-support, and enhance personal dignity.

SECTION 442. ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

Eligibility

Section 442(a) provides that each family (as defined in section 445) whose income other than that excluded under section 443(b) is less than $500 per year for each of the first two family members plus $300 per year for each additional member, and whose resources other than those excluded under section 444 are less than $1,500, will be paid a family assistance benefit.

Amount

Section 442(b) provides that the amount of the family assistance benefit is $500 per year for each of the first two family members plus $300 per year for each additional member, reduced by the amount of the family's income not excluded under section 443(b).

Period for determination of benefits

Section 442(c)(1) provides that a family's eligibility for family assistance benefits, and the amount of such benefits, is to be determined for each calendar quarter by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare on the basis of his estimates of the family's income for such quarter, taking into account income for an earlier period and any likely changes in conditions which would affect the family's eligibility or the amount of the benefits. Redeterminations for any quarter are to be made at such times as the Secretary may prescribe, effective prospectively.

Section 442(c)(2) provides that the Secretary may reduce a family's assistance benefits for a quarter if the family files its application for such benefits after that quarter begins.

Section 442(c)(3) provides that the Secretary may, for purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits, consider income actually received in one period (or expenses incurred in earning income in one period) to have been received (or incurred) in another.

Special limits on gross income

Section 442(d) provides that the Secretary by regulation may prescribe circumstances under which gross income from a trade or business (including farming) is large enough to preclude eligibility for family assistance benefits.

Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam

Section 442(e) is a cross-reference to section 1108(e) of the Act (as added by section 403 of the bill), which sets out the special method by which family assistance benefits are to be determined for families in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

SECTION 443. INCOME

Meaning of income

Section 443(a) provides that, for purposes of the family assistance benefit program, income means both earned and unearned income.

(1) Earned income is defined in paragraph (1) as—

(A) remuneration from employment (i.e., remuneration for services performed as an employee (as defined in section 210(j) of the Act)), but excluding—

(i) payments (described in section 209(b) of the Act) made to an employee or his family on account of retirement, sickness, or accident, medical or hospital expenses, or death, under a plan or system, and payments on an employee's behalf into such a system (with the payments being counted as unearned income when made to the employee or his family out of the plan or system, but not being counted as either earned or unearned income when made by the employer into the plan or system),

(ii) payments (described in section 209(c)) made to an employee on account of retirement but not under a plan or system,

(iii) payments (described in section 209(d)) made on account of sickness or accident disability, or medical or hospital expenses in connection with sickness or accident disability, not under a plan or system, after the six calendar months following the month in which the employee last worked (with payments during the first six months being counted as earned income),

(iv) payments (described in section 209(f)) made by an employer for unemployment compensation,

(v) payments (described in section 209(k)) made by an employer on account of moving expenses of an employee,

(vi) payments for certain services actually performed as an employee but treated as self-employment; and

(B) net earnings from self-employment as defined in section 211 of the Act (except for that part of section 211 which deals with the optional definition of net earnings from farming), including certain services performed by ministers, Christian Science practitioners, and members of religious orders, and by certain members of religious faiths who have received an exemption from coverage.

(2) Unearned income is defined in paragraph (2) as all income other than earned income (as defined in paragraph (1)), including specifically any payments received as annuity, pension, retirement, or disability benefits, veterans' or workmen's compensation, old-age, survivors, and disability insurance benefits, railroad retirement benefits, unemployment benefits, prizes, awards, life insurance policy proceeds, gifts (cash or otherwise), support and alimony payments, inheritances, rents, dividends, interest, and royalties.

Exclusions from income

Section 443(b) provides that the following are to be excluded in determining a family's income:

(1) Earned income of a child regularly attending school, subject to limitations (as to amount or otherwise) prescribed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare;

(2) the total unearned income of the family in a calendar quarter which (as determined under criteria prescribed by the Secretary) is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such unearned income does not exceed $30 in the quarter, and the total earned income of the family in a calendar quarter which (as determined under such criteria) is received too irregularly or infrequently to be included, if such earned income does not exceed $30 in the quarter;

(3) part or all of any earned income which (under regulations prescribed by the Secretary) is necessary to pay the cost of child care so that the family member incurring such cost can participate in manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, employment, or self-employment;

(4) the first $720 a year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods) of the total earned income (not previously excluded) of all family members plus one-half of the remainder;

(5) food stamps or other assistance (not including veterans' pensions) which is based on need and is furnished by a State or locality or a Federal agency, or by a private charitable organization (as determined by the Secretary);

(6) the training and other allowances provided under the new section 432(a) (discussed below);

(7) the tuition and fees portion of any scholarship or fellowship at an educational institution; and

(8) home produce produced and used by the family.

SECTION 444. RESOURCES

Exclusions from resources

Section 444(a) provides that, in determining a family's resources, its home, household goods, and personal property are to be excluded, along with any other property which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare determines by regulation is essential to the family's means of self-support.

Disposition of resources

Section 444(b) directs the Secretary, by regulation, to prescribe the period or periods within which, and the manner in which, a family's property must be disposed of in order not to be included in determining the family's eligibility for family assistance benefits. Any benefits paid during such a period are to be conditioned on such disposal and considered overpayments (and therefore recoverable) to the extent that they would not have been paid had the disposal occurred at the beginning of the period for which the benefits were paid.

SECTION 445. MEANING OF FAMILY AND CHILD

Composition of family

Section 445(a) defines a family (for purposes of parts A, C, and E as well as the family assistance benefit program) as two or more people who are related by blood, marriage, or adoption and who are residents of the United States living together in a place of residence maintained as a home by one or more of them. At least one of the family members must be a child who is not married to another family member and who is in the care of, or dependent upon, another family member. A parent (of a child living in the place of residence), or a spouse of such a parent, who is determined by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to be temporarily absent from the place of residence in order to engage in or seek employment or while he is in the military service is to be considered as living in the residence.

Definition of child

Section 445(b) defines a child (for purposes of parts C and E as well as the family assistance benefit program) as an individual who is under age 18, or is under age 21 and (as determined by the Secretary under regulations) a student regularly attending a school, college. or university or a course of training in preparation for employment.

Determination of family relationships

Section 445(c) provides that in determining whether two individuals are related by blood, marriage, or adoption, appropriate State law is to be applied.

Income and resources of noncontributing individual

Section 445(d) provides that the income and resources of an individual other than a parent or the spouse of a parent which (as determined under criteria prescribed by the Secretary) is not available to other members of the family is to be excluded in determining the family's eligibility for and amount of benefits, and an individual (other than such a parent or spouse) any of whose income and resources is not available to a family will not be considered a member of the family (except that if such individual is a child who would otherwise be considered a member of the family, he will be considered a member of the family for purposes of determining the family's eligibility (but not the amount of its benefit)).

Recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled ineligible

Section 445(e) provides that an individual who is receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI of the Act (as amended by section 201 of the bill), or whose needs are taken into account in determining the need of another individual receiving such aid, will not be considered a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the family's benefits.

SECTION 446. PAYMENTS AND PROCEDURES

Payments of benefits

Section 446(a)(1) provides that family assistance benefits are to be paid at such times and in such installments as the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare determines.

Section 446(a)(2) provides that a family's benefits may be paid to any one or more family members, or (on behalf of the family, if the Secretary deems it appropriate) to another person who is interested in or concerned with the family's welfare.

Section 446(a)(3) allows the Secretary to prescribe regulations establishing ranges of incomes within which single amounts of family assistance benefits will apply.

Overpayments and underpayments

Section 446(b) provides that when more or less than the correct amount of family assistance benefits has been paid to a family the Secretary will make proper adjustments by increases or decreases future payments or by recovery from or payment to one or more individuals who are or were members of the family, with appropriate provision to avoid penalizing family members who were without fault if adjustment or recovery would defeat the purpose of the program, be against equity or good conscience, or impede efficient or effective administration.

Hearings and review

Section 446(c)(1) provides that the Secretary will furnish reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any person who is or claims to be a family member and is in disagreement with a determination on eligibility for family assistance benefits, the amount of the benefits, or the number of persons in the family, if a request for such hearing is made within thirty days after notice of the determination is received. If payments of benefits are already being made to the family, they will be continued until a determination is made on the basis of the hearing (or the claim is otherwise disposed of), but any benefits so paid will be considered overpayments (and therefore recoverable) if the determination is that they were incorrectly paid.

Section 446(c)(2) provides that a determination by the Secretary must be made within ninety days after the individual requests the hearing.

Section 446(c)(3) provides that a final determination by the Secretary after a hearing will be subject to judicial review as provided under section 205(g) of the Act except that all determinations of fact on the basis of such hearing will be conclusive and not subject to review by any court.

Procedures; prohibition of assignments

Section 446(d) provides that sections 206 and 207 of the Act, and subsections (a), (d), (e), and (f) of section 205 of the Act, will apply with respect to family assistance benefits the same as they apply to OASDI benefits. Section 206 of the Act authorizes the Secretary to prescribe rules and regulations governing representation of claimants and to prescribe maximum fees which may be charged for services performed in connection with any claim. Section 207 of the Act provides that the right of any person to future payments will not be transferable or assignable or subject to execution, levy, attachment, garnishment, or other legal process. Subsections (a), (d), (e), and (f) of section 205 of the Act give the Secretary the authority to make rules and regulations concerning evidence and the submission thereof, and to issue subpoenas for the purpose of any hearing, investigation, or other procedure.

Applications and furnishing of information by families

Section 446(e)(1) provides that the Secretary is to prescribe regulations with respect to the filing of applications, the furnishing of information, and the reporting of events and circumstances, as necessary to determine eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits.

Section 446(e)(2) provides that in order to encourage prompt reporting of events and circumstances relevant to eligibility for and amount of benefits and more accurate estimates of expected income or expenses the Secretary may treat as overpayments all or part of any payments made for a period during which there was a failure or delay in reporting, or inaccurate reporting of information on which the estimates of income or expenses were based.

Furnishing of information by other agencies

Section 446(f) provides that the head of any Federal agency is to furnish the Secretary any information needed for determining eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits or for verifying other information.

SECTION 447. REGISTRATION AND REFERRAL OF FAMILY MEMBERS FOR MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT

Section 447(a) provides that every individual who is a member of an eligible family and who is not excepted by section 447(b) must register with the local State public employment office for manpower services, training, and employment as provided by regulations of the Secretary of Labor. If and for so long as any individual fails to register as required, he will not be considered a family member for purposes of determining his family's eligibility for or amount of benefits but his income will be counted as family income in the regular way; except that if he is the only family member other than a child he will be considered a family member for purposes of determining the family's eligibility for benefits (but not their amount). No part of any family assistance benefit may be paid to any individual who fails to register for manpower services, training, or employment as required; but the Secretary may, if he deems appropriate, pay the benefits due the family to any person, other than a member of the family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

Section 447(b) provides that an individual will not be required to register for manpower services, training, or employment if the Secretary determines that such individual is (1) unable to engage in work or training by reason of illness, incapacity, or advanced age, (2) a mother or other relative of a child under the age of six who is caring for such child, (3) the mother or other female caretaker of a child, if the father or another adult male relative is in the home and is not otherwise exempted from the requirement of registration, so long as such father or other adult male relative has not refused to register or to participate in work or training, (4) a child under age 16 or in school, or (5) one whose presence in the home is required because of the illness or incapacity of another member of the household. An individual who is not required to register for manpower services, training, or employment may nevertheless register if he so desires.

Section 447(c) directs the Secretary in all appropriate cases to make provision for furnishing child care services for individuals registered for or participating in manpower services, training, employment, or vocational rehabilitation under the program.

Section 447(d) provides that the Secretary will refer to the appropriate State agency for vocational rehabilitation services any individual who is a family member and who is not required to register for manpower services, training, or employment because of incapacity. Review of such individual's incapacity and need for rehabilitation services will be made as necessary (except for individuals determined to be permanently and totally disabled) but not less often than quarterly. If the individual refuses without good cause to accept rehabilitation services, he will be treated as though he were an individual who refused to register for manpower services, training, or employment when required to do so.

SECTION 448. DENIAL OF BENEFITS IN CASE OF REFUSAL OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, OR EMPLOYMENT

Section 448(a) provides that any individual who is a family member and has registered for manpower services, training, or employment pursuant to section 447 but who refuses without good cause (as determined after a hearing by the Secretary of Labor, whose decision is final and nonreviewable) to participate in suitable manpower services, training, or employment will not be considered a family member for purposes of determining his family's eligibility for or amount of benefits but his income will be counted as family income in the regular way; except that if he is the only family member other than a child he will be considered a family member for purposes of determining the family's eligibility for benefits (but not their amount). No part of any family assistance benefit may be paid to any individual during a period when he has without good cause refused manpower services, training, or suitable employment as required; but the Secretary may, if he deems appropriate, pay the benefits due the family to any person, other than a member of the family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

Section 448(b) provides that in determining whether employment is suitable for an individual (for purposes of part C (relating to manpower services, training, employment, etc.), as well as for purposes of section 448(a)), the Secretary of Labor will consider the degree of risk to the individual's health and safety, his physical fitness for the work, his prior training, experience, and earnings, the length of his unemployment, his prospects for obtaining work based upon his potential and the availability of training opportunities, and the distance of the available work from his residence. In addition, employment is not to be considered suitable for an individual (1) if the job offered is vacant due to a labor dispute, (2) if the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are contrary to or less than those prescribed by law or substantially less favorable than those prevailing for similar work in the locality, or (3) if, as a condition of employment, the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization.

SECTION 449. TRANSFER OF FUNDS FOR ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS

Section 449 provides that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will to the extent provided by agreement with the Secretary of Labor pay to the Secretary of Labor such amounts as would be paid as family assistance benefits to individuals participating in public or private employer-compensated on-the-job training programs if such individuals were not participating in such training. Sums so paid to the Secretary of Labor will be available to pay the costs of such on-the-job training programs.

PART E—STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

SECTION 451. PAYMENTS UNDER TITLES IV, V, XVI, AND XIX CONDITIONED ON SUPPLEMENTATION

Section 451 provides that a State must enter into an agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to supplement the family assistance payments made under part D of title IV in order to become or remain eligible for Federal payments under part A (services to needy families with children) and part B (child-welfare services) of such title, or under title V (maternal and child health, and crippled children's services), title XVI (aid to the aged, blind, and disabled), or title XIX (medical assistance), except in the case of the working poor—i.e., except in the case of families where both parents are present, neither is incapacitated, and the father is not unemployed.

SECTION 452. ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

Section 452(a) provides that eligibility for and the amount of a State's supplementary payments will be determined generally under the rules and regulations applicable to the Federal family assistance payments and by applying the State's standard of need and payment limitations as in effect (and in compliance with the requirements of part A) in January 1970, unless the State chooses to apply a higher standard; except that supplementary payments are not required in any case above the applicable poverty level determined under section 453(c) (discussed below). The resulting amount is to be reduced by the family assistance payment (if any) and by any income not excluded under section 443(b) (except for the first $720 a year of the family's earned income and one-half of its remaining earned income) or under section 452(b). Any limitations imposed by the State on the amount of aid paid must not (in combination with the other plan provisions) be more stringent in result than those in effect in January 1970. If the State plan provides for meeting less than 100 percent of its need standard or for considering less than 100 percent of requirements in determining need, the Secretary will by regulation prescribe the method to be used to ensure that these results are achieved.

Section 452(b) provides that in computing the amount of a family's supplementary payments, a State will disregard (1) $720 of the family's earned income, plus (2) one-third of its earned income between $720 and twice the amount of its family assistance benefit prior to any reduction for income, plus (3) at least one-fifth of any remaining earned income.

Section 452(c) requires that a State agreement for payment of supplementary benefits must provide for—

(1) statewide application of the agreement,

(2) administration or supervision by a single State agency,

(3) an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency for any individual whose claim is denied or is not promptly acted upon,

(4) methods of administration necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the State agreement, and training and effective use of a paid subprofessional staff with emphasis on employment of recipients of supplementary payments,

(5) reporting to the Secretary as required,

(6) safeguards to protect the confidentiality of information, and

(7) an opportunity for all to apply for benefits, and payments with reasonable promptness.

SECTION 453. PAYMENTS TO STATES

Section 453(a)(1) provides that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will pay each State 30 percent of the amount expended by it each fiscal year for supplementary payments, not counting that part of such payment to any family which exceeds the difference between (A) the applicable poverty level (determined under section 453(c)) and (B) the family assistance benefit payable to the family plus any income of the family not disregarded in computing the supplementary payment.

Section 453(a)(2) provides that the Secretary will pay each State one-half of its administrative costs incurred in carrying out the agreement for supplementary payments.

Section 453(b) provides that payments to States under section 453(a) will be made at such times and in such installments as the Secretary determines.

Section 453(c)(1) provides that the "poverty level" for a family of any given size is the amount shown for a family of that size in the following table, adjusted as provided in section 453(c)(2):

Family size	Basic amount
One	$1,920
Two	2,460
Three	2,940
Four	3,720
Five	4,440
Six	4,980
Seven or more	6,120

Section 453(c)(2) provides that between July 1 and September 30 of each year (beginning with 1970) the Secretary is to adjust the amount shown for each size of family in the table by increasing such amount by the percentage by which the average level of the price index for the second calendar quarter of such year exceeds the average level of the price index for months in 1969, and is to promulgate the adjusted amounts as the poverty levels for families of various sizes. The new amounts will apply for the fiscal year beginning July 1 after such promulgation.

Section 453(c)(3) defines the term "price index" to mean the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

SECTION 454. FAILURE BY STATE TO COMPLY WITH AGREEMENT

Section 454 provides that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may withhold all or an appropriate part of the payments he would otherwise make to a State if, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, he finds the State is failing to comply with its agreement.

SECTION 461. AGREEMENTS WITH STATES

Section 461(a) provides that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may enter into an agreement with any State to make the supplementary payments on its behalf, or perform functions related to the making of such payments, or both. The State would pay the Secretary the amount of the supplementary payments less the Federal share of such payments under section 453(a), and could request joint audit of such payments.

Section 461(b) provides that the Secretary may enter into an agreement with any State under which the State will make family assistance payments on behalf of the Secretary with respect to all or specified families in the State, or perform other functions as agreed upon. The State would be paid the cost of carrying out the agreement.

SECTION 462. PENALTIES FOR FRAUD

Section 462 provides penalties for fraud, with respect to family assistance benefits and supplementary payments, similar to those provided in section 208 of the Act with respect to OASDI benefits.

SECTION 463. REPORT, EVALUATION, RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATIONS, AND TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Section 463(a) provides that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is to make an annual report to the President and the Congress on the operation of the family assistance benefit and supplementary payment programs.

Section 463(b) authorizes the Secretary to conduct research and experiments to determine better ways of providing financial assistance to needy persons, waiving the requirements of the family assistance program to the extent he deems it appropriate.

Section 463(c) authorizes the Secretary to provide technical assistance to the States, and training for State personnel, to assist the States in carrying out their supplementary payment programs.

Section 463(d) places a limitation of $20 million per fiscal year (from amounts appropriated for the family assistance benefit and supplementary payment programs) on the funds which may be used in carrying out this section.

SECTION 464. OBLIGATION OF DESERTING PARENTS

Section 464 provides that receipt of family assistance benefits or State supplementary payments by the spouse or children of a deserting parent during his absence will result in a monetary obligation to the United States by the deserting parent equal to the total amount of the family assistance benefits received by the deserting parent's spouse and children plus any amount paid to the State under section 453. The deserting parent's obligation is reduced by any payments which he actually makes to his family during the period and which are excluded in computing the family assistance benefits paid to his spouse and children; and in no case would his obligation exceed the amount (if any) ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction for the support and maintenance of his spouse or children, less any payments made under such order. The amount due the United States is to be collected from any amounts otherwise due or becoming due the deserting parent from any officer or agency of the United States or under any Federal program. (Under the amendments made by section 103(b)(1)(K), (O), and (P) of the bill, the existing State-Federal arrangements for locating deserting parents and obtaining support for their families, under the program of services to needy families with children, are expanded to take account of deserted spouses as well as children.)

SECTION 465. TREATMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS AS INCOME FOR FOOD STAMP PURPOSES

Section 465 provides that family assistance benefits will be taken into consideration for purpose of determining any household's entitlement to, and the cost of, food stamps under the Food Stamp Act of 1964.

SECTION 102. MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, CHILD CARE, AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES PROGRAMS

Section 102 of the bill completely rewrites part C of title IV of the Social Security Act to provide new programs of manpower services, training, employment, child care, and related supportive services for members of families receiving family assistance benefits or supplementary payments under part D or part E of such title.

PART C—MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, CHILD CARE, AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES PROGRAMS FOR RECIPIENTS OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS OR SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

SECTION 430. PURPOSE

Section 430 sets forth the purpose of the revised part C—to provide programs and services for recipients of family assistance benefits or supplementary payments in order to train them, prepare them for employment, and otherwise assist them in securing and retaining regular employment with opportunity for advancement so that needy families with children will be restored to self-supporting, independent, and useful roles in their communities.

SECTION 431. OPERATION OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

Section 431(a) provides that the Secretary of Labor is to develop an employability plan for each person registered under the family assistance benefits program (part D of title IV of the Act), in order to enable him to secure employment and remain self-supporting.

Section 431(b) provides that the Secretary of Labor is to establish and maintain manpower services, training, and employment programs in each State for persons registered under the family assistance benefits program and persons receiving State supplementary payments under part E of title IV.

Section 431(c) provides for the establishment of such manpower services, training, and employment programs as are necessary to carry out the purpose of part C, including (1) any services which the Secretary is authorized to provide under any other Act; (2) counseling, testing, training, work experience, and job placement; (3) relocation assistance to aid unemployed individuals in relocating in areas where there is assurance of suitable employment (offered through public employment offices) which will lead to self-support without public assistance; and (4) special work projects.

Section 431(d) defines a "special work project" as a project which consists of the performance of work in the public interest through grants to or contracts with public or nonprofit private agencies or organizations. Wage rates for special work projects cannot be lower than the applicable minimum wage for the particular work concerned; appropriate health and safety standards are to be maintained; the project must not displace employed workers; the conditions of work, training, education, and employment must be reasonable from the standpoint of the type of work, the geographic location, and the proficiency of the participant; workmen's compensation protection must be provided; and the project must improve the employability of the participants. The Secretary of Labor must, at least every six months, review each participant's employment record and any other pertinent information and determine whether it would be feasible to place him in regular employment or in training.

SECTION 432. ALLOWANCES FOR INDIVIDUALS UNDERGOING TRAINING

Section 432(a)(1) directs the Secretary of Labor to pay each participant in manpower training under the revised part C an incentive allowance of $30 per month or, if greater (in a case where the participant is eligible for a training allowance under section 203 of the Manpower Development and Training Act), the difference between the sum of the participant's family assistance benefits and supplementary payments under parts D and E and the amount of such training allowance (or so much thereof as does not exceed the training allowance which would be payable under such section 203 as in effect on March 1, 1970).

Section 432(a)(2) provides that the Secretary of Labor is to pay, to any participant in manpower training under part C, allowances for transportation and other expenses necessary for and directly related to such training.

Section 432(a)(3) provides that the Secretary of Labor by regulation is to provide for such smaller allowances as he deems appropriate for participants in manpower training in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

Section 432(b) provides that allowances under section 432(a) are to be in lieu of allowances provided under any manpower training program under any other Act.

Section 432(c) provides that allowances under section 432(a) will not be payable to any person who is participating in a program sponsored by the Secretary of Labor providing public or private employer-compensated on-the-job training.

SECTION 433. UTILIZATION OF OTHER PROGRAMS

Section 433 authorizes the Secretary of Labor, using all authority granted to him under any other Act, to provide the manpower training and employment services required by the revised part C in such manner as will make maximum use of existing manpower programs and agencies and will further the establishment of an integrated and comprehensive manpower training program; and to use the funds appropriated under part C to provide the required programs through such other Acts and to reimburse public and private agencies for services rendered to persons under part C when such services are not otherwise available on a nonreimbursable basis.

SECTION 434. RULES AND REGULATIONS

Section 434 authorizes the Secretary of Labor to issue such rules and regulations as he finds necessary to carry out the purposes of the revised part C.

SECTION 435. APPROPRIATIONS; NONFEDERAL SHARE

Section 435(a) provides that funds sufficient to carry out the purposes of the revised part C (other than the funds required for child care and supportive services) are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Labor each year, including funds for payment of up to 90 percent of the cost of providing manpower services, training, and employment for persons registered under the family assistance program. The Secretary of Labor is to establish criteria to achieve equitable apportionment among the States of Federal expenditures for the programs of manpower services, training, and employment which are authorized under section 431.

Section 435(b) provides that if a State fails to contribute its 10-percent share of the cost of manpower services, training, and employment provided for individuals under the family assistance program who are registered under section 447, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may, after notice and opportunity for hearing, withhold payments which would otherwise be made to the State under sections 403(a) (services to needy families with children), 453 (State supplementary payments (discussed above)), 1604 (aid to the aged, blind or disabled (discussed below)), and 1903(a) (medical assistance) until the amount withheld, less any contribution made by the State, equals such 10-percent share. (Under the amendment made by section 103(b)(1)(M) of the bill, this 10-percent State contribution must be required by the State's plan for services for needy families with children under part A of title IV of the Act.)

SECTION 436. CHILD CARE

Section 436(a)(1) authorizes the appropriation each year to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare of sufficient funds to enable him to make grants to public and nonprofit private agencies and organizations and contracts with public and private agencies and organizations to cover part or all (100 percent) of the cost of projects for the provision of child care to permit individuals registered or referred for vocational rehabilitation under part D or receiving supplementary payments under part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under the revised part C, or to permit individuals who are or have been eligible for payments under part D or part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under the revised part C, or, with respect to the period prior to the date part D becomes effective, to permit individuals who are receiving aid to families with dependent children (or whose needs are taken into account in determining the need of persons claiming or receiving such aid) to participate in manpower training or employment.

Section 436(a)(2) provides that the grants or contracts made under section 436(a)(1) may be made directly or through grants to a public or nonprofit private agency, designated by the appropriate elected or appointed official or officials in the area, which will work with the local manpower agency. To the extent appropriate, the arrangements are to be made with the local educational agency to provide care for children attending school.

Section 436(a)(3) provides that various types of child care will be provided, based upon the needs and circumstances of the children involved.

Section 436(b) provides that the Secretary may use sums appropriated under section 436(a)(1) to make grants to any public or private nonprofit agency or organization, or contracts with any private or public agency or organization, for evaluation, training of personnel, technical assistance, or research and demonstration projects to determine more effective methods of providing child care.

Section 436(c) provides that the Secretary may establish reasonable fees for the child care provided for any family that is able to pay for part or all of the cost thereof.

SECTION 437. SUPPORTIVE SERVICES

Section 437(a) provides that no payments will be made to a State under title V (maternal and child health and crippled children's services), title XVI (aid to the aged, blind, and disabled), title XIX (medical assistance), or part A or B of title IV for expenditures for any calendar quarter beginning on or after the date the family assistance program becomes effective, unless such State has an agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare under which it will provide health, counseling, social, vocational rehabilitation, and other supportive services which the Secretary determines are necessary to permit an individual registered under part D or receiving supplementary payments under part E to undertake or continue manpower training and employment.

Section 437(b) provides that the supportive services required under section 437(a) are to be furnished in cooperation with the manpower training and employment services provided under the revised part C.

Section 437(c) provides for payments to a State, at such times and in such installments as are deemed appropriate by the Secretary, of up to 90 percent of the cost of the supportive services provided by the State under its agreement under section 437(a).

SECTION 438. ADVANCE FUNDING

Section 438(a) provides that appropriations for grants, contracts, and other payments under the revised part C with respect to persons registered under part D may be included in the appropriation Act for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which they are to be used.

Section 438(b) provides that in order to effect a transition to the advance funding procedure two separate appropriations may initially be made in the same fiscal year, one for that year and one for the following fiscal year.

SECTION 439. EVALUATION AND RESEARCH: REPORTS TO CONGRESS

Section 439(a)(1) provides that the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will jointly make provision for continuing evaluation of manpower training and employment programs provided under the revised part C, and that the Secretary of Labor may conduct research and establish demonstration projects regarding ways to improve the effectiveness of manpower training and employment programs, contract for independent evaluations and research regarding such programs, and establish a system for collection, processing, and retrieval of data.

Section 439(a)(2) authorizes the appropriation, for the costs of the evaluation and research provided for in section 439(a)(1), of up to $15,000,000 for any fiscal year.

Section 439(b) provides that on or before September 1 following each fiscal year the Secretary of Labor is to report to the Congress on the manpower training and employment programs provided under the revised part C, and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is to report to the Congress on the programs of child care and supportive services provided under such part.

SECTION 103. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS RELATING TO ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN

Section 103 of the bill extensively amends part A of title IV of the Social Security Act—the present program of aid to families with dependent children—to eliminate all money payments; under the bill cash payments to needy families with children are to be made under the new family assistance program (part D) with State supplementation (part E), and the social and other services which are necessary or appropriate for such families are to be provided under State plans approved under part A.

Except for the changes which are necessary to conform the requirements and conditions of part A to those included in parts D and E (e.g., the definitions of applicable terms) and the changes referred to above in the discussion of sections 464 and 435(b), the provisions of this section are designed solely to make the amendments required to eliminate money payments from part A programs and the technical, clerical, and conforming changes necessitated by those amendments.

TITLE II—AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SECTION 201. GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

Section 201 of the bill completely rewrites title XVI of the Social Security Act, which provides for grants to States for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled.

TITLE XVI—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SECTION 1601. APPROPRIATIONS

Section 1601 authorizes appropriations for the purpose of enabling each State, under a State plan approved under section 1602,to furnish financial assistance to needy individuals who are 65 years of age or over, blind, or disabled and for the purpose of encouraging each State (under such plan) to furnish rehabilitation and other services to help such individuals attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care.

SECTION 1602. STATE PLANS FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AND SERVICES TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

Section 1602(a) provides that an approved State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled must provide for—

(1) a single State agency to administer (or supervise the administration of) the plan;

(2) administrative methods necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis;

(3) the training and effective use of social service personnel, technical assistance to units of State and local government which are furnishing financial assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled, and the development through research or demonstration projects of new and improved methods of furnishing such assistance or services;

(4) the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff (including recipients and others of low income), and the use of nonpaid or partially paid social service volunteers;

(5) opportunity to apply for aid and the assurance of its prompt payment;

(6) the use of a simplified statement, as prescribed by the Secretary, to establish eligibility, with effective methods for verifying eligibility through use of sampling and other scientific techniques;

(7) Statewide application of the plan, with the exception of services to the extent prescribed by the Secretary;

(8) financial participation by the State;

(9) the determination of blindness either by a physician skilled in diseases of the eye or by an optometrist, whichever the individual selects;

(10) an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency for individuals whose claims for aid under the plan are denied or are not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

(11) an evaluation (at least annually) of the operation of the plan, under standards prescribed by the Secretary, with reports to the Secretary including any planned modifications;

(12) reports to be made as the Secretary requires;

(13) safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants and recipients to purposes directly connected with the administration of the plan;

(14) the designation of a State authority to be responsible for standards for public or private institutions if the plan includes aid to or on behalf of individuals in such institutions;

(15) description of the services which the State makes available to applicants or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain self-support or self-care; and

(16) agreement by administering States to observe priorities established by the Secretary and comply with performance standards established by the Secretary.

Section 1602(a) permits a State (notwithstanding paragraph (1)) to designate the State agency which previously administered or supervised the administration of the State's plan for aid to the blind approved under title X as the agency to administer or supervise the administration of that portion of the State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which relates to blind individuals, if on January 1, 1962, and on the date in which such State submits its plan for approval under the revised title XVI, the State's title X agency was different from the State agency or agencies that administered or supervised the administration of the State plans approved under title I (old-age assistance) and title XIV (aid to the permanently and totally disabled). In such a case, the part of the plan which each agency administers or supervises is to be regarded as a separate plan.

Section 1602(b) directs the Secretary to approve any plan which fulfills the conditions in section 1602(a) and the provisions relating to determination of need in section 1603, except that the Secretary may not approve any plan which imposes as a condition of eligibility—

(1) an age requirement of more than 65 years,

(2) a residence requirement which excludes any individual who resides in the State,

(3) a citizenship requirement which excludes any United States citizen, or any lawfully admitted resident alien who has resided in the United States for at least 5 years,

(4) a disability or age requirement which excludes any persons age 18 or older who are under a severe disability, as determined under criteria prescribed by the Secretary, or

(5) a blindness or age requirement which excludes any persons who are blind, as determined under criteria prescribed by the Secretary.

Section 1602(b) provides a special exception for certain States providing aid for the blind without regard to need. As in the existing title XVI, the Federal sharing is limited to expenditures for those in need.

SECTION 1603. DETERMINATION OF NEED

Section 1603(a) provides that each State plan must require the State agency in determining need to take into account any income and resources of an individual claiming aid, along with necessary expenses incurred in earning such income, except that—

(1) the State agency is not to take into account the home, household goods, or personal effects of the individual, or any other personal or real property which does not exceed $1,500 in value, or any other property necessary for the family's self-support (subject to any limitation on gross income which may be imposed as provided in section 442(d));

(2) the State agency is not to consider the financial responsibility of any other individual for the applicant or recipient; except that the State agency may in its discretion, if it is so provided or permitted under State law, consider the financial responsibility of another individual for the applicant or recipient if the applicant or recipient is such individual's spouse, or is such individual's child who is under the age of 21 or is blind or severely disabled;

(3) if the individual is blind or severely disabled, the State agency will disregard his earned income up to $85 per month plus one-half of his earned income above that figure, and will disregard additional amounts necessary for achieving self-support pursuant to a State plan for a twelve-month period which may be extended to as long as thirty-six months (except that such additional amounts will be disregarded in the case of an individual who is disabled (but not blind) only if he is undergoing vocational rehabilitation); and

(4) if the individual has attained age 65 and is neither blind nor severely disabled, the State agency may disregard his earned income up to $60 per month and one-half of his earned income above that figure.

Section 1603(a) also permits the State agency in determining an individual's need (before disregarding any amounts under the preceding paragraphs) to disregard up to $7.50 of any income, and refers by cross reference to the additional $4 disregard which is required in the case of OASDI recipients by section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969 (discussed below under section 203 of the bill).

Section 1603(b) requires a State plan to provide also that—

(1) each eligible individual, other than an individual who is institutionalized, will receive financial assistance equal to at least $110 per month less any income which is not disregarded under section 1603(a);

(2) the standard of need applied for determining eligibility for and amount of aid will not be lower than (A) the standard applied for this purpose under the State's title XVI plan as in effect on the date of the enactment of the family assistance program, or (B) if the State had no such plan on that date, the standard of need which was in effect and approved on such date under the State's plan under title I, X, or XIV, whichever would apply to the individual (or the highest such standard which was or would have been applicable if the individual falls within two or more categories or does not fall within any of them); and

(3) no payments will be made under the plan to an individual who is considered a member of a family receiving family assistance benefits or supplementary payments under part D or E of title IV or training allowances under part C of such title (but the individual may in any case elect not to be considered a member of such a family).

Section 1603(c) contains a cross-reference to the special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam under section 1108(e) (as added by section 403 of the bill).

SECTION 1604. PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

Section 1604 directs the Secretary to pay to each State which has a plan approved under the revised title XVI, for each calendar quarter, an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each month of such quarter as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the plan—

(1) 90 percent of such expenditures up to the product of $65 multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month; plus

(2) 25 percent of the amount by which such expenditures exceed those which may be counted under paragraph (1), but only up to the product of the maximum permissible level of assistance per person in which the Federal Government will participate financially, as determined by the Secretary, multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month.

Section 1604 further provides that in the case of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam the maximum permissible level of assistance under paragraph (2) may be lower than in the case of individuals in the other States.

SECTION 1605. ALTERNATE PROVISION FCR DIRECT FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO INDIVIDUALS

Section 1605 provides that the Secretary may enter into an agreement with any State under which he will make the payments of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled provided for under the State plan directly to individuals in such State, and perform related State functions. The State would reimburse the Secretary for the State's share of such payments.

SECTION 1606. OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

Section 1606 provides for adjustments of overpayments and underpayments where the Secretary makes direct payment to individuals in a State as provided in section 1605. In the case of overpayments, the Secretary is to avoid penalizing people who were without fault if adjustment or recovery would defeat the program's purposes, or be against equity and good conscience, or might, because of the small amounts involved, impede effective administration.

SECTION 1607. OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

Section 1607 provides that if the Secretary finds after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing that a State is not meeting the Federal requirements, he will withhold further payments under the State plan, or under the part of the plan affected, until the noncompliance is corrected.

SECTION 1608. PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR SERVICES AND ADMINISTRATION

Section 1608(a) provides that a State may qualify for increased Federal payments as provided in section 1608(b) for services made available to applicants for and recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled if the State plan provides at least those services which are prescribed by the Secretary to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care.

Section 1608(b) provides that the Secretary will pay to each State an amount equal to 75 percent of its expenditures for services to help applicants or recipients attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, other services likely to prevent or reduce dependency, and services directed toward the training of personnel employed or preparing for employment in the State or local agency administering the plan, plus an amount equal to one-half of its expenditures for other services furnished under the plan.

Section 1608(c) provides that the services are to be furnished by the State or local agency staff except as specified by the Secretary.

Section 1608(d) provides that the rate of the Federal payment with respect to amounts expended for administration are to be determined under methods and procedures permitted by the Secretary.

Section 1608(e) provides that the State may be paid for only one-half its expenditures for services in any quarter if its plan does not include the self-support or self-care services prescribed under or specified in section 1608 (a) and (b).

Section 1608(f) provides that if the Secretary finds after notice and opportunity for hearing that a State's plan providing services prescribed under or specified in section 1608 (a) and (b) is failing to comply with the requirements of such section, or that in the administration of such plan there is a failure to comply substantially with its provisions, he may make the payments for any or all of such services at the 50-percent rate (as in the case of a State to which section 1608(e) applies) instead of at the 75-percent rate otherwise applicable until such failure ceases.

SECTION 1609. COMPUTATION OF PAYMENTS TO STATES

Section 1609(a) authorizes the Secretary to estimate, before each quarter, the amount to which the State is entitled under its plan for aid, services, and administration, and to pay the estimated amounts in installments adjusted for any prior overpayments or underpayments.

Section 1609(b) provides that the pro rata share due the United States for recovery of any aid furnished is to be adjusted as described in section 1609(a).

Section 1609(c) provides that when the Secretary's estimate is made, available appropriations are deemed obligated.

SECTION 1610. DEFINITION

Section 1610 defines "aid to the aged, blind, and disabled" to mean money payments to needy individuals who are age 65 or older or are blind or severely disabled, other than inmates of a nonmedical public instutution and patients under age 65 in a mental or tuberculosis institution. The term also means payments to another person on behalf of such a needy individual if the applicable State plan provides (1) for a determination of the individual's inability to manage funds where making direct payment would be contrary to his welfare, (2) for making payments to such other person only if the individual's needs will be met by doing so, (3) that special efforts will be made to improve the individual's capacity to manage funds, (4) for a periodic review of the determination to pay another person and for appointment of a legal guardian, if appropriate, and (5) an opportunity for a fair hearing.

The standards for determining blindness and severe disability are to be established by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

SECTION 202. REPEAL OF TITLES I, X, AND XIV OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Section 202 of the bill repeals title I of the Social Security Act (grants to States for old-age assistance and medical assistance for the aged), title X of the Act (grants to States for aid to the blind), and title XIV of the Act (grants to States for aid to the permanently and totally disabled). The aid under these three programs will be provided in the bill under one program—title XVI (as amended by section 201 of the bill).

SECTION 203. ADDITIONAL DISREGARDING OF INCOME OF OASDI RECIPIENTS IN DETERMINING NEED FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

Section 203 of the bill amends section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969 to make permanent the provision (now applicable only through June 1970) which requires a State to disregard up to $4 per month of an individual's benefit under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program in determining such individual's need for aid under the State's title XVI program if disregarding such amount is necessary to ensure that his total income under the two programs will reflect the 15-percent increase in benefits made by the 1969 Amendments.

SECTION 204. TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

Section 204 of the bill provides for adjustment under title XVI of the Act (as amended by section 201 of the bill) of any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made to a State under the existing title I, X, or XIV of the Act (which are repealed by section 202 of the bill), or the existing title XVI of the Act (which is amended by section 201 of the bill).

SECTION 205. TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO DEFINITIONS OF BLINDNESS AND DISABILITY

Section 205 of the bill gives the States a grace period during which they can be eligible to participate under title XVI of the Act (as amended by section 201 of the bill) without changing their tests of disability or blindness. The grace period will end for any State with the July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of its State legislature beginning after the enactment of the bill.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Title III of the bill amends various provisions of the Social Security Act to reflect the programs established under titles I and II of the bill and to eliminate references to titles I, X, and XIV of the Act (which are repealed by section 202 of the bill).

SECTION 301. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 228(d)

Section 301 of the bill changes references in section 228(d)(1) of the Act, which precludes benefits under section 228 (benefits at age 72 for certain uninsured individuals) for individuals receiving cash benefits under the programs established by the bill.

SECTION 302. AMENDMENTS TO TITLE XI

Section 302 of the bill amends title XI of the Act (general provisions) by repealing section 1118 (alternative Federal payment with respect to public assistance expenditures) and by changing references in several other sections.

SECTION 303. AMENDMENTS TO TITLE XVIII

Section 303 of the bill amends title XVIII of the Act by changing references in section 1843 (State agreements for coverage of eligible individuals who are receiving money payments under public assistance programs (or are eligible for medical assistance)) and section 1863 (consultation with State agencies and other organizations to develop conditions of participation for providers of services).

SECTION 304. AMENDMENTS TO TITLE XIX

Section 304 of the bill changes references in various provisions of title XIX (grants to States for medical assistance programs), and requires the States to provide medical assistance for individuals who are eligible for State supplementary payments under part E of title IV of the Act (as added by section 101 of the bill) or who would be eligible for cash assistance under an existing State plan for aid to families with dependent children if it continued in effect and included dependent children of unemployed fathers.

TITLE IV—GENERAL

SECTION 401. EFFECTIVE DATE

Section 401 of the bill provides that the amendments made by the bill will become effective on July 1, 1971, except that—

(1) in the case of a State which (on that date) is prevented by statute from making supplementary payments under the new part E and the legislature of which does not meet in a regular session closing after the enactment of the bill and on or before that date, none of such amendments will apply until the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of such legislature closing after that date (unless the State theretofore certifies that it is no longer prevented from making the payments, in which case the amendments become effective at the beginning of the first calendar quarter following the certification); and

(2) in the case of a State which (on that date) is prevented by statute from meeting the requirements contained in the revised section 1602 and the legislature of which does not meet in a regular session closing after the enactment of the bill and on or before that date, the amendments made by title II of the bill will not apply until the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of such legislature closing after that date (unless the State theretofore submits a State plan meeting those requirements, in which case the amendments made by title II become effective on the date of submission of the plan).

The special 1950 rule relating to public assistance for Navajo and Hopi Indians is repealed, effective at the same time as the amendments made by the bill. An exception to the general effective date provision is made in the case of the new authorization (in the revised part C of title IV of the Act) for child care services for persons undergoing training or employment; this authorization is effective upon the enactment of the bill.

SECTION 402. SAVING PROVISION

Section 402(a) of the bill provides that for each quarter beginning after June 30, 1971, and prior to July 1, 1973, the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare will reimburse any State making supplemental payments under the new part E of title IV and payments of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the revised title XVI, to the extent that 70 percent of the payments required under part E plus the State's share of expenditures under the revised title XVI exceeds the State's share of the expenditures which would have been incurred under title I (old-age assistance and medical assistance for the aged), part A of title IV (aid and services to needy families with children), title X (aid to the blind), title XIV (aid to permanently and totally disabled), and the existing title XVI had they continued in effect.

Section 402(b)(1) provides that the non-Federal (or State's) share of expenditures for a quarter subsequent to June 1971 under the revised title XVI of the Act means the difference between (1) of the total payments made under title XVI for such subsequent quarter which would have been included as aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under the plan in effect in June 1971, plus the additional expenditures required under such title as revised by the bill, and (2) the total amounts determined under section 1604 of the Act for such State with respect to the State's expenditures for such subsequent quarter.

Section 402(b)(2) provides that the non-Federal share of expenditures for a quarter subsequent to June 1971 which would have been made had titles I, IV, X, and XVI of the Act continued in effect means the difference between (1) the payments which would have been made under such titles as in effect in June 1971 if the plans under such titles as then in effect had continued in effect during such subsequent quarter and had included payments to dependent children of unemployed fathers, and (2) the amounts which would have been determined under sections 3, 403, 1003, 1403, and 1603, or under section 1118, of the Act with respect to expenditures for such quarter.

SECTION 403. SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR PUERTO RICO, THE VIRGIN ISLANDS, AND GUAM

Section 403 of the bill adds to section 1108 of the Act a new subsection (e) to provide that in Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands—

(1) the eligibility level for and amount of family assistance benefits,

(2) the irregular income excluded,

(3) the resources limitations,

(4) the first cut-off point in the Federal reimbursement formula for payments to the aged, blind, and disabled, and

(5) the income floor for the aged, blind, and disabled will be reduced in proportion to the extent by which the per capita income of each is below that one of the fifty States which has the lowest per capita income.

The new section 1108(e) also provides that the Secretary will promulgate between July 1 and September 30 of each even-numbered year the amounts to be used for these purposes during the following 2-fiscal-year period in Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands, and that in no case will the amounts determined for one period be lower than the amounts for the preceding period.

SECTION 404. MEANING OF SECRETARY AND FISCAL YEAR

Section 404 defines the term "Secretary" to mean the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (unless the context otherwise requires), and defines the term "fiscal year" to mean a period beginning any July 1 and ending with the close of the following June 30.

VI. ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF CONGRESSMAN SAM M. GIBBONS ON H.R. 16311

I voted for the family assistance program in the Ways and Means Committee, and I plan to vote for it on final passage.

But unless we consider the existing food stamp program we are going to create a scrambled welfare mess.

Congress created the food stamp program in 1964 for the purpose of providing food for the needy.

It has failed to accomplish this basic goal—and at a great administrative expense. Only 40 percent of those who are eligible have ever been able to participate in it because of its high administrative expenses and because it has not been made available on a nationwide basis. The Federal administrative expenses of this program for fiscal 1969 were about 10 percent of the food stamp benefit. The local administrative expenses have been running about 5 percent of the food stamp benefit and the poor have ended up with something that many regard as "funny" money.

This indicates to me that there are serious flaws in the program, which in my opinion are incurable under any stamp system.

For these and other reasons, I have concluded that we should convert from food stamps to cash payments of the same bonus amount above and beyond the benefit paid under the family assistance program.

Under present law, the food stamp applicant must put up a relatively small sum of his own cash (from whatever source) and receive in return a larger amount in food stamps. The difference between what he pays in cash and what he can buy with the stamps is the free food stamp bonus.

I propose that the bonus now given in extra food stamps be given an equivalent amount of cash. Whether the recipient receives case or food stamps his purchasing power will not be affected, but Federal and local governments will save administrative costs if the benefits are distributed in cash rather than in stamps.

Why have I come to the conclusion that we should abandon the food stamp program for cash payments?

There are several reasons, but basically two.

The first is that under the present food stamp bonus plan, there is excessively expensive and duplicative administration. These costs could be reduced to a minimum under a cash plan.

The second reason is that the present plan imposes such degrading and discouraging experiences that less than half of those who need and are entitled to food stamps get any help under the food stamp plan.

A third reason is that almost all the knowledgeable experts on this matter, including the President and his Secretaries of Health, Education, and Welfare, and Agriculture, agree that a cash bonus is better than stamps. Yet they have failed to put forward a solution. My opinion is that we should solve this problem now. Congress should not avoid this responsibility because others fail to lead.

I will expand on my reasons for proposing a change later in these remarks, but first I want to explain in detail how the cash plan I urge would work.

There are 20 million individuals eligible under the family assistance plan and about 3 million adults now receiving categorical assistance (blind, disabled, etc.). They would, under my proposal, be entitled to the cash equivalent of the bonus stamps which they would have received according to the food stamps issuing schedule now in effect.

In sum, the added cash payment to each family above and beyond the FAP payments would be the same as the food stamp bonus they would have received if enrolled in the food stamp program.

To illustrate, let us use a family of four, with no income except the minimum of $1,600 under the family assistance plan. Its monthly net income would be $133.33. For a payment of $34 in cash, this family would receive $106 in food stamps. The $72 difference between the cash paid and stamps received would equal its monthly food stamp bonus.

Under my proposal, this same $72 would be paid the family as a cash bonus, on top of its $133.33 in monthly FAP payment, thus yielding the family a cash total of $205.33 a month.

Under existing law, the family in the food stamp program would have to pay $34 of its $133.33 FAP cash assistance to get the extra stamps, leaving it $99.33 in cash and $106 in food stamps. However, monthly purchasing power would be the same, $205.33 in either case.

The proposal that I advocate is not new. In the President's budget for this year (1971) on page 176 the following illustration is made, and the only difference between that illustration and with the one I have just given you is that it is given in annual terms, whereas, I have given you the figures on a monthly basis. The President's proposal on page 176 is stated as follows:

> Taken together, FAP and the improved food stamp program would provide significantly improved benefit levels for many poor families. A family of four with no other income would receive a total of $2,464 annually—$1,600 in cash from FAP, and $864 in the form of the food stamp bonus ($1,272 in stamps less a purchase price of $408).

The following table sets this out schematically for a family of four at the $1,600 level:

BENEFITS

	Month	Year
(a) Separate programs.
Cash	$133.33	$1,600
Less cash spent for food stamps	34.00	408
Total cash	99.33	1,192
Value of food stamps	106.00	1,272
Total purchasing power	205.33	2,464
(b) Merged programs:
Cash	133.33	1,600
Cash value of food stamps	72.00	864
Total purchasing power	205.33	2,464

Note: There is no change in family purchasing power except under the separate program the family ends up with 48 percent cash and 52 percent in food stamps; whereas, under the merged programs the family ends up with the entire purchasing power in cash.

For a family of four at the $3,000 level from any combination of FAP payments, state supplementation, and earnings, the following would occur:

BENEFITS

	Month	Year
(a) Separate programs:
Cash	$250	$3,000
Less cash spent for food stamps	72	864
Total cash	178	2,136
Value of food stamps	106	1,272
Total purchasing power	284	3,408
(b) Merged programs:
Cash	250	3,000
Cash value of food stamps	34	408
Total purchasing power	284	3,408

Note: There is no change in family purchasing power except under the separate program the family ends up with 63 percent cash and 37 percent in food stamps; whereas, under the merged programs the family ends up with the entire purchasing power in cash.

For an aged adult receiving $110 a month and nothing more, the following would obtain:

BENEFITS

	Month	Year
(a) Separate programs:
Cash	$110	$1,320
Less cash spent for food stanps	−18	−216
Total cash	92	1,104
Value of food stamps	+28	336
Total purchasing power	120	1,440
(b) Merged programs:
Cash	110	1,320
Cash value of food stamps	+10	+120
Total purchasing power	120	1,440

Note: There is no change in the adult purchasing power except under the separate program he ends up with 77 percent cash and 23 percent in food stamps; whereas, under the merged programs the adult ends up with the entire purchasing power in cash.

The above arithmetic, particularly for the $1,600 family, dramatically demonstrates part of my case for changing from bonus food stamps to bonus cash benefits.

What family in America, poor or otherwise, wants to be compelled to receive over half its total purchasing power in the form of script which can only be used for one of its needs—food—and this on penalty of receiving no family food assistance at all unless it submits to this cumpulsory budgeting?

What family wants even more than one-third of its purchasing power tied up in food, untouchable in emergency? The average American family spends only 16.5 percent of its disposable income on food. Granted the average family's income is higher than that of a typical poor family, but must the poor be locked into a forcible formula which makes them spend three times the average for food alone? I think not, and I want to detail some of my reasons as to why not.

As I have already noted, most of the experts, including the President, think cash payments are superior to stamp bonuses.

Let me quote administration sources first:

In his Welfare message to Congress on August 11, 1969, President Nixon himself said, in part:

"For dependent families there will be an orderly substitution of food stamps by the new direct monetary payments" (p. 106 of hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, pt. 1 of 7).

In this same speech, the President said:

> This Administration, after a careful analysis of all the alternatives is committed to a new departure that will find a solution for the welfare problem. The time for denouncing the old is over; the time for devising the new is now (p. 104).

But apparently not right now!

The President went on to say that the "new system will lessen welfare redtape and provide administrative cost savings * * *" (p. 108). But this will not be true if the present food stamp program, which entails huge and disproportionate administrative costs is retained. (I detail these costs later in this statement.)

Again, earlier on May 6, 1969, the President gave it as his view that "the food stamp and direct (commodity) distribution programs * * * both programs are clearly in need of revision."

He then went on to urge a $1 billion increase in spending for the food stamp and other food programs.

On September 15, 1969, before the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs, Secretary of Agriculture Hardin spoke in a similar vein.

He said, in part "* * * When the President delivered his message of May 6 (1969), he made it clear that it was time to go ahead and reshape the food stamp program and make it workable, available and attractive * * *"

My only difference with the President and Secretary Hardin is how and when we should start making the food stamp program all of those things.

My view is that the food can only be made fully available and the dispensing of it workable by substituting a cash bonus plan for stamps now.

Why wait? Why not realize these savings, administrative and otherwise, by converting food stamps into cash, with the payments administered by the same agency which will administer family assistance?

HEW Secretary Finch told this same Senate Committee on the same day that—"For several reasons, our ultimate goal over the years should be to move toward a wholly cash income support system and away from in-kind multiple programs * * *. This Administration believes that over the years cash assistance would eventually be substituted for food stamp programs in a way which leaves the individual at least as well off in total benefits * * *." Why not now?

Secretary Finch further said that the "welfare and food stamp systems need to be viewed together as part of a single package and the Congress should consider reforms of those systems at the same time with an eye to their relationship to each other." Why not now?

Secretary Finch is also on the record as saying that "cash assistance provides the maximum flexibility and personal responsibility for the individual. Cash enables the recipient to substitute his own judgment of how best to meet his needs for the determination of a faraway government. The individual determines how he allocates his income and how much to spend on food."

Other knowledgeable experts, not so intimately associated with the Nixon administration, have endorsed a cash plan such as I proposed, and suggested it be immediately.

Dr. Harold Watts of the University of Wisconsin, who testified before the Ways and Means Committee, says that "food stamps are a bad bargain in comparison to general cash benefits."

The President's Commission on Income Maintenance Programs made a similar recommendation.

The latter group also notes the difficulty of policing an augmented food stamp program. Since many families will have more stamps than cash in hand, there will be a strong inducement to either buy ineligible items with stamps or else sell the stamps or food obtained with them for cash. Either way, there will be strong pressure to violate the law.

I have not dwelt on the personally degrading and harassing experiences which food stamp recipients must undergo to get their stamps such as waiting hours in long lines, going to outdoor windows of banks which issue the stamps, even in snow or rain, and how they become conspicuous at grocery counters where they must separate stamp eligible items in one stack and other purchases in another stack. I might add that such embarrassments and harassments, which this program inflicts on those who must use it or go hungry, is doing nothing to solve the already acute and explosive problems in our slum ghettoes where many of the food recipients live. It aggravates such problems.

But leaving aside the indignity and inconvenience of the stamp program, there is an overwhelmingly strong argument against it: This is the expensive and duplicative administrative cost and procedures which could be reduced to a minimum under a combined food and FAP cash program.

Administrative costs of the present food stamp program are considerable. To disperse $228.8 million in stamp bonuses in fiscal 1969, the Government had to spend $22.2 million or 10 percent of the added bonuses in administrative costs. In fiscal 1971, with a projected $1.2 billion food stamp program, projected administrative costs are estimated at $50 million. That estimate is prohably low. But even if correct, when the planned $2.5 billion food stamp program takes effect early in fiscal 1972, Federal administrative costs will run to a minimum of $100 million and perhaps as high as $250 million, given last year's operating experience.

There will be other administrative expenses as well. The Federal Government pays 62.5 percent of State costs for certifying nonpublic assistance households as eligible for food stamps. This will soar further when all individuals eligible for the existing program take advantage of it. With a cash plan in operation, there would be no necessity for this second certification.

Local costs of this program, which are not reimbursed by the Federal Government are also substantial. Some banks, for example, charge as much as 90 cents every time they sell a book of stamps to an eligible recipient. Should stamps be issued more than once a month in the future, this cost would go up still more. State and local government costs for issuance could run to $125 million, not counting the certification costs.

Under a cash plan, double certification, double staffs, double investigations and all the other duplicative administrative procedures could be eliminated.

With food stamps and family assistance programs merged into a single cash payment, there would be no added administrative cost for calculating the food stamp bonus and adding the cash equivalent to the FAP cash payment.

Indeed, overall, there would be less administrative cost. We could save most of the $150 million it will cost the Federal Government to administer the food stamp program by fiscal 1972, and the possible $175 million it will cost local and State governments for the same program.

To sum up, there is a simple and rational substitute for the "funny money," which we call food stamps and which now cost $2.20 for every $2 in stamps issued. It is to convert to cash payments and to abolish food stamps and to do it now. By so doing, we will simplify administration and liquidate excessive expenses which are inherent in any stamp plan.

VII. DISSENTING VIEWS OF HON. AL ULLMAN, HON. PHIL LANDRUM, AND HON. OMAR BURLESON ON H.R. 16311

We concur that the Federal welfare system should be renovated, and agree with portions of the bill that help attain that objective.

We do not concur, however, with provisions of the bill under which another 15 million Americans, the working poor, would be added to the welfare rolls. The aim of assisting low-income wage earners is frustrated by the very provisions of the bill.

The argument that the bill requires welfare recipients for the first time to register with public employment service agencies begs the issue. Neither the funding nor the administrative provisions of the bill are sufficient to cope with the massive increase in paperwork and job placement problems that would follow the addition of nearly 3 million new names to the work registration rolls. The increase in job-training slots and funding planned under the bill would, in our judgment, fall far short of meeting the needs of the present number of welfare recipients, much less those of millions more.

Virtually no improvement is offered for the administrative tangle that makes the existing welfare program so ineffective. The bill merely places a new Federal layer on top of a system that is already a bureaucratic quagmire.

For all the rhetoric about work incentives, the bill clearly puts cash payments first. It ultimately establishes the basis for a guaranteed annual income through a negative tax formula. We do not concur that the cash incentive approach to welfare is either proven or sound, or that it would ever attain its purported objective of reducing the welfare rolls. Research in this whole area is fragmentary and entirely inconclusive.

We fully concur that the Federal payments in the adult category—to the aged, the blind, and the disabled—be significantly increased as provided by the bill. We believe that the inflationary pressures of the economy today make it impossible for individuals in these welfare categories to exist on their present fixed incomes.

But we do not concur with the thrust of the bill in its family assistance provisions. It would permanently consign more than 10 percent of our population to welfare handouts. The bill would institutionalize proverty, not eliminate it.

We believe the need is for tigheter Federal standards applied to the present system and aimed at more efficient and effective administration. Above all, the need is for greatly expanded funding of existing programs—the work incentive (WIN) program, special projects, JOBS and child care. We believe that these programs, properly funded well beyond the bill's limited provisions, can produce positive results.

In our judgement, the first step in welfare reform should be to make our present system effective for the 10 million Americans already on the welfare rolls, and offer them a real opportunity to lift themselves out of poverty. Only after we have successfully achieved a sound structure should we consider bringing millions more into the system.

91ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 16311

[Report No. 91-904]

MARCH 5, 1970

Mr. MILLS (for himself and Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means

MARCH 11, 1970

Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

A BILL

To authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, with the following table of contents, may be cited as the "Family Assistance Act of 1970".

TITLE I—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

SEC. 101. Title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) is amended by adding after part C the following new parts:

"PART D—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 441. For the purpose of providing a basic level of financial assistance throughout the Nation to needy families with children, in a manner which will strengthen family life, encourage work training and self-support, and enhance personal dignity, there is authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year a sum sufficient to carry out this part.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"Eligibility

"SEC. 442. (a) Each family (as defined in section 445)—

"(1) whose income, other than income excluded pursuant to section 443 (b), is less than—

"(A) $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family, plus

"(B) $300 per year for each additional member, and

"(2) whose resources, other than resources excluded pursuant to section 444, are less than $1,500, shall, in accordance with and subject to the other provisions of this title, be paid a family assistance benefit.

"Amount

"(b) The family assistance benefit for a family shall be payable at the rate of—

"(1) $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family, plus

"(2) $300 per year for each additional member, reduced by the amount of income, not excluded pursuant to section 443(b), of the members of the family.

"Period for Determination of Benefits

"(c) (1) A family's eligibility for and its amount of family assistance benefits shall be determined for each quarter of a calendar year. Such determination shall be made on the basis of the Secretary's estimate of the family's income for such quarter, after taking into account income for a preceding period and any modifications in income which are likely to occur on the basis of changes in conditions or circumstances. Eligibility for and the amount of benefits of a family for any quarter shall be redetermined at such time or times as may be provided by the Secretary, such redetermination to be effective prospectively.

"(2) The Secretary shall by regulation prescribe the cases in which and extent to which the amount of a family assistance benefit for any quarter shall be reduced by reason of the time elapsing since the beginning of such quarter and before the date of filing of the application for the benefit.

"(3) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which income received in one period (or expenses incurred in one period in earning income) shall, for purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits, be considered as received (or incurred) in another period or periods.

"Special Limits on Gross Income

"(d) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the circumstances under which the gross income from a trade or business (including farming) will be considered sufficiently large to make such family ineligible for such benefits.

"Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam

"(e) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"INCOME

"Meaning of Income

"SEC. 443. (a) For purposes of this part, income means both earned income and unearned income; and—

"(1) earned income means only—

"(A) remuneration for services performed as an employee (as defined in section 210(j)), other than remuneration to which section 209 (b), (c), (d), (f), or (k), or section 211, would apply; and

"(B) net earnings from self-employment, as defined in section 211 (without the application of the second and third sentences following clause (C) of subsection (a) (9)), including earnings for services described in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of subsection (c); and

"(2) unearned income means all other income, including—

"(A) any payments received as an annuity, pension, retirement, or disability benefit, including veteran's or workmen's compensation and old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, railroad retirement, and unemployment benefits;

"(B) prizes and awards;

"(C) the proceeds of any life insurance policy;

"(D) gifts (cash or otherwise), support and alimony payments, and inheritances; and

"(E) rents, dividends, interest, and royalties.

"Exclusions From Income

"(b) In determining the income of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) subject to limitations (as to amount or otherwise) prescribed by the Secretary, the earned income of each child in the family who is, as determined by the Secretary under regulations, a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment;

"(2) (A) the total unearned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $30 in such quarter, and (B) the total earned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which, as determined in accordance with such criteria, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $30 in such quarter;

"(3) an amount of earned income of a member of the family equal to all, or such part (and according to such schedule) as the Secretary may prescribe, of the cost incurred by such member for child care which the Secretary deems necessary to securing or continuing in manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, employment, or self-employment;

"(4) the first $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods) of the total of earned income (not excluded by the preceding paragraphs of this subsection) of all members of the family plus one-half of the remainder thereof;

"(5) food stamps or any other assistance (except veterans' pensions) which is based on need and furnished by any State or political subdivision of a State or any Federal agency, or by any private charitable agency or organization (as determined by the Secretary);

"(6) allowances under section 432(a);

"(7) any portion of a scholarship or fellowship received for use in paying the cost of tuition and fees at any educational (including technical or vocational education) institution; and

"(8) home produce of a member of the family utilized by the household for its own consumption.

"RESOURCES

"Exclusions From Resources

"SEC. 444. (a) In determining the resources of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) the home, household goods, and personal effects; and

"(2) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion.

"Disposition of Resources

"(b) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to the period or periods of time within which, and the manner in which, various kinds of property must be disposed of in order not to be included in determining a family's eligibility for family assistance benefits. Any portion of the family's benefits paid for any such period shall be conditioned upon such disposal; and any benefits so paid shall (at the time of the disposal) be considered overpayments to the extent they would not have been paid had the disposal occurred at the beginning of the period for which such benefits were paid.

"MEANING OF FAMILY AND CHILD

"Composition of Family

"SEC. 445. (a) Two or more individuals—

"(1) who are related by blood, marriage, or adoption,

"(2) who are living in a place of residence maintained by one or more of them as his or their own home,

"(3) who are residents of the United States, and

"(4) at least one of whom is a child who (A) is not married to another of such individuals and

(B) is in the care of or dependent upon another of such individuals, shall be regarded as a family for purposes of this part and parts A, C, and E. A parent (of a child living in a place of residence referred to in paragraph (2)), or a spouse of such a parent, who is determined by the Secretary to be temporarily absent from such place of residence for the purpose of engaging in or seeking employment or self-employment (including military service) shall nevertheless be considered (for purposes of paragraph (2)) to be living in such place of residence.

"Definition of Child

"(b) For purposes of this part and parts C and E, the term 'child' means an individual who is (1) under the age of eighteen, or (2) under the age of twenty-one and (as determined by the Secretary under regulations) a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment.

"Determination of Family Relationships

"(c) In determining whether an individual is related to another individual by blood, marriage, or adoption, appropriate State law shall be applied.

"Income and Resources of Noncontributing Adult

"(d) For purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of family assistance benefits for any family there shall be excluded the income and resources of any individual, other than a parent of a child (or a spouse of a parent), which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is not available to other members of the family; and for such purposes such individual—

"(1) in the case of a child, shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determining the family's eligibility for such benefits but not for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits, and

"(2) in any other case, shall not be considered a member of the family for any purpose.

"Recipients of Aid to the Aged, Blind, and Disabled Ineligible

"(e) If an individual is receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI, or if his needs are taken into account in determining the need of another person receiving such aid, then, for the period for which such aid is received, such individual shall not be regarded as a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the family assistance benefits of the family.

"PAYMENTS AND PROCEDURES

"Payments of Benefits

"SEC. 446. (a) (1) Family assistance benefits shall be paid at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary determines will best effectuate the purposes of this title.

"(2) Payment of the family assistance benefit of any family may be made to any one or more members of the family, or, if the Secretary deems it appropriate, to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(3) The Secretary may by regulation establish ranges of incomes within which a single amount of family assistance benefit shall apply.

"Overpayments and Underpayments

"(b) Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of family assistance benefits has been paid with respect to any family, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments to the family or by recovery from or payment to any one or more of the individuals who are or were members thereof. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with respect to a family with a view to avoiding penalizing members of the family who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this part, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration of this part.

"Hearings and Review

"(c) (1) The Secretary shall provide reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any individual who is or claims to be a member of a family and is in disagreement with any determination under this part with respect to eligibility of the family for family assistance benefits, the number of members of the family, or the amount of the benefits, if such individual requests a hearing on the matter in disagreement within thirty days after notice of such determination is received. Until a determination is made on the basis of such hearing or upon disposition of the matter through default, withdrawal of the request by the individual, or revision of the initial determination by the Secretary, any amounts which are payable (or would be payable but for the matter in disagreement) to any individual who has been determined to be a member of such family shall continue to be paid; but any amounts so paid for periods prior to such determination or disposition shall be considered overpayments to the extent they would not have been paid had such determination or disposition occurred at the same time as the Secretary's initial determination on the matter in disagreement.

"(2) Determination on the basis of such hearing shall be made within ninety days after the individual requests the hearing as provided in paragraph (1).

"(3) The final determination of the Secretary after a hearing under paragraph (1) shall be subject to judicial review as provided in section 205(g) to the same extent as the Secretary's final determinations under section 205; except that the determination of the Secretary after such hearing as to any fact shall be final and conclusive and not subject to review by any court.

"Procedures; Prohibition of Assignments

"(d) The provisions of sections 206 and 207 and subsections (a), (d), (e), and (f) of section 205 shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as they apply in the case of title II.

"Applications and Furnishing of Information by Families

"(e) (1) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to families or members thereof with respect to the filing of applications, the furnishing of other data and material, and the reporting of events and changes in circumstances, as may be necessary to determine eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits.

"(2) In order to encourage prompt reporting of events and changes in circumstances relevant to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, and more accurate estimates of expected income or expenses by members of families for purposes of such eligibility and amount of benefits, the Secretary may prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which—

"(A) failure to so report or delay in so reporting, or

"(B) inaccuracy of information which is furnished by the members and on which the estimates of income or expenses for such purposes are based, will result in treatment as overpayments of all or any portion of payments of such benefits for the period involved.

"Furnishing of Information by Other Agencies

"(f) The head of any Federal agency shall provide such information as the Secretary needs for purposes of determining eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, or verifying other information with respect thereto.

"REGISTRATION AND REFERRAL OF FAMILY MEMBERS FOR MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 447. (a) Every individual who is a member of a family which is found to be eligible for family assistance benefits, other than a member to whom the Secretary finds paragraph (1), (2), (3), (4), or (5) of subsection (b) applies, shall register for manpower services, training, and employment with the local public employment office of the State as provided by regulations of the Secretary of Labor. If and for so long as any such individual is found by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to have failed to so register, he shall not be regarded as a member of a family but his income which would otherwise be counted under this part as income of a family shall be so counted; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for family assistance benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for purposes of determination of the amount of such benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(b) An individual shall not be required to register pursuant to subsection (a) if the Secretary determines that such individual is—

"(1) unable to engage in work or training by reason of illness, incapacity, or advanced age;

"(2) a mother or other relative of a child under the age of six who is caring for such child;

"(3) the mother or other female caretaker of a child, if the father or another adult male relative is in the home and not excluded by paragraph (1), (2), (4), or (5) of this subsection (unless the second sentence of subsection (a), or section 448 (a), is applicable to him);

"(4) a child who is under the age of sixteen or meets the requirements of section 445 (b) (2); or

"(5) one whose presence in the home on a substantially continuous basis is required because of the illness or incapacity of another member of the household.

An individual who would, but for the preceding sentence, be required to register pursuant to subsection (a), may, if he wishes, register as provided in such subsection.

"(c) The Secretary shall make provision for the furnishing of child care services in such cases and for so long as he deems appropriate in the case of (1) individuals registered pursuant to subsection (a) who are, pursuant to such registration, participating in manpower services, training, or employment, and (2) individuals referred pursuant to subsection (d) who are, pursuant to such referral, participating in vocational rehabilitation.

"(d) In the case of any member of a family receiving family assistance benefits who is not required to register pursuant to subsection (a) because of such member's incapacity, the Secretary shall make provision for referral of such member to the appropriate State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, and (except in such cases involving permanent incapacity as the Secretary may determine) for a review not less often than quarterly of such member's incapacity and his need for and utilization of the rehabilitation services made available to him under such plan. If and for so long as such member is found by the Secretary to have refused without good cause to accept rehabilitation services available to him under such plan, he shall be treated as an individual to whom subsection (a) is applicable by reason of refusal to accept or participate in employment or training.

"DENIAL OF BENEFITS IN CASE OF REFUSAL OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, OR EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 448. (a) For purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits under this part, an individual who has registered as required under section 447 (a) shall not be regarded as a member of a family, but his income which would otherwise be counted as income of the family under this part shall be so counted, if and for so long as he has been found by the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing (which shall be held in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as a hearing under section 446 (c) (1) and (2)), to have refused without good cause to participate or continue to participate in suitable manpower services, training, or employment, or to have refused without good cause to accept suitable employment in which he is able to engage which is offered through the public employment offices of the State, or is otherwise offered by an employer if the offer of such employer is determined by the Secretary of Labor, after notification by such employer or otherwise, to be a bona fide offer of employment; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for the purposes of determination of the amount of its benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(b) (1) In determining whether any employment is suitable for an individual for purposes of subsection (a) and part C, the Secretary of Labor shall consider the degree of risk to such individual's health and safety, his physical fitness for the work, his prior training and experience, his prior earn ings, the length of his unemployment, his realistic prospects for obtaining work based on his potential and the availability of training opportunities, and the distance of the available work from his residence.

"(2) In no event shall any employment be considered suitable for an individual—

"(A) if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lockout, or other labor dispute;

"(B) if the wages, hours, or other terms or conditions of the work offered are contrary to or less than those prescribed by Federal, State, or local law or are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality; or

"(C) if, as a condition of being employed, the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization.

"TRANSFER OF FUNDS FOR ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS

"SEC. 449. The Secretary shall, pursuant to and to the extent provided by agreement with the Secretary of Labor, pay to the Secretary of Labor amounts which he estimates would be paid as family assistance benefits under this part to individuals participating in public or private employer compensated on-the-job training under a program of the Secretary of Labor if they were not participating in such training. Such amounts shall be available to pay the costs of such programs.

"PART E—STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"PAYMENTS UNDER TITLES IV, V, XVI, AND XIX CONDITIONED ON SUPPLEMENTATION

"SEC. 451. In order for a State to be eligible for payments pursuant to title V, XVI, or XIX, or part A or B of this title, with respect to expenditures for any quarter beginning on or after the date this part becomes effective with respect to such State, it must have in effect an agreement with the Secretary under which it will make supplementary payments, as provided in this part, to any family other than a family in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

"SEC. 452. (a) Eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments under the agreement with any State under this part shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be determined by application of the provisions of,

and rules and regulations under, sections 442 (a) (2), (c), and (d), 443 (a), 444, 445, 446 (to the extent the Secretary deems appropriate), 447, and 448, and by application of the standard for determining need under the plan of such State as in effect for January 1970 (which standard complies with the requirements for approval under part A as in effect for such month) or, if lower, a standard equal to the applicable poverty level determined pursuant to section 453 (c) and in effect at the time of such payments, or such higher standard of need as the State may apply, with the resulting amount reduced by the family assistance benefit payable under part D and further reduced by any other income (earned or unearned) not excluded under section 443 (b) (except paragraph (4) thereof) or under subsection (b) of this section; but in making such determination the State may impose limitations on the amount of aid paid to the extent that such limitations (in combination with other provisions of the plan) are no more stringent in result than those imposed under the plan of such State as in effect for such month. In the case of any State which provides for meeting less than 100 per centum of its standard of need or provides for considering less than 100 per centum of requirements in determining need, the Secretary shall prescribe by regulation the method or methods for achieving as nearly as possible the results provided for under the foregoing provisions of this subsection.

"(b) For purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments to a family for any period pursuant to an agreement under this part, in the case of earned income to which paragraph (4) of section 443(b) applies, there shall be disregarded $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods), plus—

(1) one-third of the portion of the remainder of earnings which does not exceed twice the amount of the family assistance benefits that would be payable to the family if it had no income, plus

(2) one-fifth (or more if the Secretary by regulation so prescribes) of the balance of the earnings.

For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"(c) The agreement with a State under this part shall—

"(1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State;

"(2) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to carry out or supervise the carrying out of the agreement in the State;

"(3) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency carrying out the agreement to any individual whose claim for supplementary payments is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(4) provide (A) such methods of administration (including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods) as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the agreement in the State, and (B) for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff, with particular emphasis on the full- or part-time employment of recipients of supplementary payments and other persons of low income, as community services aides, in carrying out the agreement and for the use of nonpaid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that the State agency carrying out the agreement will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(6) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments to purposes directly connected with the administration of this title; and

"(7) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for supplementary payments shall have opportunity to do so, and that supplementary payments shall be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 453. (a) (1) The Secretary shall pay to any State which has in effect an agreement under this part, for each fiscal year, an amount equal to 30 per centum of the total amount expended during such year pursuant to its agreement as supplementary payments to families other than families in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed, not counting so much of the supplementary payment made to any family as exceeds the amount by which (with respect to the period involved)—

"(A) the family assistance benefit payable to such family under part D, plus any income of such family (earned or unearned) not disregarded in determining the amount of such supplementary payment, is less than

"(B) the applicable poverty level as promulgated and in effect under subsection (c).

"(2) The Secretary shall also pay to each such State an amount equal to 50 per centum of its administrative costs found necessary by the Secretary for carrying out its agreement.

"(b) Payments under subsection (a) shall be made at such time or times, in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in such installments as the Secretary may determine; and shall be made on such conditions as may be necessary to assure the carrying out of the purposes of this title.

"(c) (1) For purposes of this part, the 'poverty level' for a family group of any given size shall be the amount shown for a family group of such size in the following table, adjusted as provided in paragraph (2):

"FAMILY SIZE:	BASIC AMOUNT
One	$1,920
Two	2,460
Three	2,940
Four	3,720
Five	4,440
Six	4,980
Seven or more	6,120

"(2) Between July 1 and September 30 of each year, beginning with 1970, the Secretary (A) shall adjust the amount shown for each size of family group in the table in paragraph (1) by increasing such amount by the percentage by which the average level of the price index for the months in the calendar quarter beginning April 1 of such year exceeds the average level of the price index for months in 1969, and (B) shall thereupon promulgate the amounts so adjusted as the poverty levels for family groups of various sizes which shall be conclusive for purposes of this part for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation.

"(3) As used in this subsection, the term 'price index' means the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"FAILURE BY STATE TO COMPLY WITH AGREEMENT

"SEC. 454. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to a State with which he has an agreement under this part, finds that such State is failing to comply therewith, he shall withhold all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of the payments to which such State is otherwise entitled under this part or part A or B of this title or under title V, XVI, or XIX; but the amounts so withheld from payments under such part A or B or under title V, XVI, or XIX shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such part or title. Such withholding shall be effected at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary may deem appropriate.

"PART F—ADMINISTRATION

"AGREEMENTS WITH STATES

"SEC. 461. (a) The Secretary may enter into an agreement with any State under which the Secretary will make, on behalf of the State, the supplementary payments provided for under part E, or will perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon, or both. In any such case, the agreement shall also (1) provide for payment by the State to the Secretary of an amount equal to the supplementary payments the State would otherwise make pursuant to part E, less any payments which would be made to the State under section 453 (a), and (2) at the request of the State, provide for joint audit of payments under the agreement.

"(b) The Secretary may also enter into an agreement with any State under which such State will make, on behalf of the Secretary, the family assistance benefit payments provided for under part D with respect to all or specified families in the State who are eligible for such benefits or will perform such other functions in connection with the administration of part D as may be agreed upon. The cost of carrying out any such agreement shall be paid to the State by the Secretary in advance or by way of reimbursement and in such installments as may be agreed upon.

"PENALTIES FOR FRAUD

"SEC. 462. The provisions of section 208, other than paragraph (a), shall apply with respect to benefits under part D and allowances under part C, of this title, to the same extent as they apply to payments under title II.

"REPORT, EVALUATION, RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATIONS, AND TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 463. (a) The Secretary shall make an annual report to the President and the Congress on the operation and administration of parts D and E, including an evaluation thereof in carrying out the purposes of such parts and recommendations with respect thereto. The Secretary is authorized to conduct evaluations directly or by grants or contracts of the programs authorized by such parts.

"(b) The Secretary is authorized to conduct, directly or by grants or contracts, research into or demonstrations of ways of better providing financial assistance to needy persons or of better carrying out the purposes of part D, and in so doing to waive any requirements or limitations in such part with respect to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits for such family, members of families, or groups thereof as he deems appropriate.

"(c) The Secretary is authorized to provide such technical assistance to States, and to provide, directly or through grants or contracts, for such training of personnel of States, as he deems appropriate to assist them in more efficiently and effectively carrying out their agreements under this part and part E.

"(d) In addition to funds otherwise available therefor, such portion of any appropriation to carry out part D or E as the Secretary may determine, but not in excess of $20,000,000 in any fiscal year, shall be available to him to carry out this section.

"OBLIGATION OF DESERTING PARENTS

"SEC. 464. In any case where an individual has deserted or abandoned his spouse or his child or children and such spouse or any such child (during the period of such desertion or abandonment) is a member of a family receiving family assistance benefits under part D or supplementary payments under part E, such individual shall be obligated to the United States in an amount equal to—

"(1) the total amount of the family assistance benefits paid to such family during such period with respect to such spouse and child or children, plus the amount paid by the Secretary under section 453 on account of the supplementary payments made to such family during such period with respect to such spouse and child or children, reduced by

"(2) any amount actually paid by such individual to or for the support and maintenance of such spouse and child or children during such period, if and to the extent that such amount is excluded in determining the amount of such family assistance benefits;

except that in any case where an order for the support and maintenance of such spouse or any such child has been issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, the obligation of such individual under this subsection (with respect to such spouse or child) for any period shall not exceed the amount specified in such order less any amount actually paid by such individual (to or for the support and maintenance of such spouse or child) during such period. The amount due the United States under such obligation shall be collected (to the extent that the claim of the United States therefor is not otherwise satisfied), in such manner as may be specified by the Secretary, from any amounts otherwise due him or becoming due him at any time from any officer or agency of the United States or under any Federal program. Amounts collected under the preceding sentence shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"TREATMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS AS INCOME FOR FOOD STAMP PURPOSES

"SEC. 465. Family assistance benefits paid under this title shall be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining the entitlement of any household to purchase food stamps, and the cost thereof, under the food stamp program conducted under the Food Stamp Act of 1964."

MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, CHILD CARE, AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES PROGRAMS

SEC. 102. Part C of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 630 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"PART C—MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, CHILD CARE, AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES PROGRAMS FOR RECIPIENTS OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS OR SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

"PURPOSE

"SEC. 430. The purpose of this part is to authorize provision, for individuals who are members of a family receiving benefits under part D or supplementary payments pursuant to part E, of manpower services, training, employment, child care, and related supportive services necessary to train such individuals, prepare them for employment, and otherwise assist them in securing and retaining regular employment and having the opportunity for advancement in employment, to the end that needy families with children will be restored to self-supporting, independent, and useful roles in their communities.

"OPERATION OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

"SEC. 431. (a) The Secretary of Labor shall, for each person registered pursuant to part D, in accordance with priorities prescribed by him, develop or assure the development of an employability plan describing the manpower services, training, and employment which the Secretary of Labor determines each person needs in order to enable him to become self-supporting and secure and retain employment and opportunities for advancement.

"(b) The Secretary of Labor shall, in accordance with the provisions of this part, establish and assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment programs in each State for persons registered pursuant to part D or receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E.

"(c) The Secretary of Labor shall, through such programs, provide or assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities necessary to prepare such persons for and place them in regular employment, including—

"(1) any of such services, training, employment, and opportunities which the Secretary of Labor is authorized to provide under any other Act;

"(2) counseling, testing, coaching, program orientation, institutional and on-the-job training, work experience, upgrading, job development, job placement, and follow up services required to assist in securing and retaining employment and opportunities for advancement;

"(3) relocation assistance (including grants, loans, and the furnishing of such services as will aid an involuntarily unemployed individual who desires to relocate to do so in an area where there is assurance of regular suitable employment, offered through the public employment offices of the State in such area, which will lead to the earning of income sufficient to make such individual and his family ineligible for benefits under part D and supplementary payments under part E); and

"(4) special work projects.

"(d) (1) For purposes of subsection (c) (4), a 'special work project' is a project (meeting the requirements of this subsection) which consists of the performance of work in the public interest through grants to or contracts with public or nonprofit private agencies or organizations.

"(2) No wage rates provided under any special work project shall be lower than the applicable minimum wage for the particular work concerned.

"(3) Before entering into any special work project under a program established as provided in subsection (b), the Secretary of Labor shall have reasonable assurances that—

"(A) appropriate standards for the health, safety, and other conditions applicable to the performance of work and training on such project are established and will be maintained,

"(B) such project will not result in the displacement of employed workers,

"(C) with respect to such project the conditions of work, training, education, and employment are reasonable in the light of such factors as the type of work, geographical region, and proficiency of the participant,

"(D) appropriate workmen's compensation protection is provided to all participants, and

"(E) such project will improve the employability of the participants.

"(4) With respect to individuals who are participants in special work projects under programs established as provided in subsection (b), the Secretary of Labor shall periodically (at least once every six months) review the employment record of each such individual while on the special work project and on the basis of such record and such other information as he may acquire determine whether it would be feasible to place such individual in regular employment or in on-the-job, institutional, or other training.

"ALLOWANCES FOR INDIVIDUALS UNDERGOING TRAINING

"SEC. 432. (a) (1) The Secretary of Labor shall pay to each individual who is a member of a family and is participating in manpower training under this part an incentive allowance of $30 per month. If one or more members of a family are receiving training for which training allowances are payable under section 203 of the Manpower Development and Training Act and meet the other requirements under such section (except subsection (l) (1) thereof) for the receipt of allowances which would be in excess of the sum of the family assistance benefit under part D and supplementary payments pursuant to part E payable with respect to such month to the family, the total of the incentive allowances per month under this section for such members shall be equal to the greater of (1) the amount of such excess or, if lower, the amount of the excess of the training allowances which would be payable under such section 203 as in effect on March 1, 1970, over the sum of such family assistance benefit and such supplementary payments, and (2) $30 for each such member.

"(2) The Secretary of Labor shall, in accordance with regulations, also pay, to any member of a family participating in manpower training under this part, allowances for transportation and other costs to him which are necessary to and directly related to his participation in training.

"(3) The Secretary of Labor shall by regulation provide for such smaller allowances under this subsection as he deems appropriate for individuals in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

"(b) Allowances under this section shall be in lieu of allowances provided for participants in manpower training programs under any other Act.

"(c) Subsection (a) shall not apply to any member of a family who is participating in a program of the Secretary of Labor providing public or private employer compensated on-the-job training.

"UTILIZATION OF OTHER PROGRAMS

"SEC. 433. In providing the manpower training and employment services and opportunities required by this part the Secretary of Labor, to the maximum extent feasible, shall assure that such services and opportunities are provided in such manner, through such means, and using all authority available to him under any other Act (and subject to all duties and responsibilities thereunder) as will further the establishment of an integrated and comprehensive manpower training program involving all sectors of the economy and all levels of government and as will make maximum use of existing manpower and manpower related programs and agencies. To such end the Secretary of Labor may use the funds appropriated to him under this part to provide the programs required by this part through such other Act, to the same extent and under the same conditions as if appropriated under such other Act and in making use of the programs of other Federal, State, or local agencies, public or private, the Secretary may reimburse such agencies for services rendered to persons under this part to the extent such services and opportunities are not otherwise available on a nonreimbursable basis.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"SEC. 434. The Secretary of Labor may issue such rules and regulations as he finds necessary to carry out his responsibilities under this part.

"APPROPRIATIONS; NONFEDERAL SHARE

"SEC. 435. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Labor for each fiscal year a sum sufficient for carrying out the purposes of this part (other than sections 436 and 437), including payment of not to exceed 90 per centum of the cost of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities provided for individuals registered pursuant to section 447. The Secretary of Labor shall establish criteria to achieve an equitable apportionment among the States of Federal expenditures for carrying out the programs authorized by section 431. In developing these criteria the Secretary of Labor shall consider the number of registrations under section 447 and other relevant factors.

"(b) If a non-Federal contribution of 10 per centum of the cost specified in subsection (a) is not made in any State (as required by section 402(a)(13)), the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may withhold any action under section 404 on account thereof and if he does so he shall instead, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the appropriate State agency or agencies, withhold any payments to be made to the State under sections 403(a), 453, 1604, and 1903(a) until the amount so withheld (including any amounts contributed by the State pursuant to the requirement in section 402(a)(13)) equals 10 per centum of such costs. Such withholding shall remain in effect until such time as the Secretary of Labor has assurances from the State that such 10 per centum will be contributed as required by section 402(a)(13). Amounts so withheld shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such sections and shall be paid by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to the Secretary of Labor.

"SEC. 436. (a)(1) For the purpose of assuring that individuals receiving benefits under part D or supplementary payments pursuant to part E will not be prevented from participating in training or employment by the unavailability of appropriate child care, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization, for part or all of the cost of projects for the provision of child care, including necessary transportation and alteration, remodeling, and renovation of facilities, which may be necessary or appropriate in order to better enable an individual who has been registered pursuant to part D or is receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part, or to enable an individual who has been referred pursuant to section 447 (d) to participate in vocational rehabilitation, or to enable a member of a family which is or has been (within such period of time as the Secretary may prescribe) eligible for benefits under such part D or payments pursuant to such part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part; or, with respect to the period prior to the date when part D becomes effective for a State, to better enable an individual who is receiving aid to families with dependent children, or whose needs are taken into account in determining the need of any one claiming or receiving such aid, to participate in manpower training or employment.

"(2) Such grants or contracts for the provision of child care in any area may be made directly, or through grants to any public or nonprofit private agency which is designated by the appropriate elected or appointed official or officials in such area and which demonstrates a capacity to work effectively with the manpower agency in such area (including provision for the stationing of personnel with the manpower team in appropriate cases). To the extent appropriate, such care for children attending school which is provided on a group or institutional basis shall be provided through arrangements with the appropriate local educational agency.

"(3) Such projects shall provide for various types of child care needed in the light of the different circumstances and needs of the children involved.

"(b) Such sums shall also be available to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization, for evaluation, training of personnel, technical assistance, or research or demonstration projects to determine more effective methods of providing any such care.

"(c) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may provide, in any case in which a family is able to pay for part or all of the cost of child care provided under a project assisted under this section, for payment by the family of such fees for the care as may be reasonable in the light of such ability.

"SUPPORTIVE SERVICES

"SEC. 437. (a) No payments shall be made to any State under title V, XVI, or XIX, or part A or B of this title, with respect to expenditures for any calendar quarter beginning on or after the date part D becomes effective with respect to such State, unless it has in effect an agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare under which it will provide health, vocational rehabilitation, counseling, social, and other supportive services which the Secretary under regulations determines to be necessary to permit an individual who has been registered pursuant to part D or is receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E to undertake or continue manpower training and employment under this part.

"(b) Services under such an agreement shall be provided in close cooperation with manpower training and employment services provided under this part.

"(c) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall from time to time, in such installments and on such conditions as he deems appropriate, pay to any State with which he has an agreement pursuant to subsection (a) up to 90 per centum of the cost of such State of carrying out such agreement. There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

"ADVANCE FUNDING

"SEC. 438. (a) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available under this part, appropriations for grants, contracts, or other payments with respect to individuals registered pursuant to section 447 are authorized to be included in the appropriation Act for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which they are available for obligation.

"(b) In order to effect a transition to the advance funding method of timing appropriation action, subsection (a) shall apply notwithstanding that its initial application will result in enactment in the same year (whether in the same appropriation Act or otherwise) of two separate appropriations, one for the then current fiscal year and one for the succeeding fiscal year.

"EVALUATION AND RESEARCH; REPORTS TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 439. (a) (1) The Secretary shall (jointly with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare) provide for the continuing evaluation of the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part, including their effectiveness in achieving stated goals and their impact on other related programs. The Secretary may conduct research regarding, and demonstrations of, ways to improve the effectiveness of the manpower training and employment programs so provided and may also conduct demonstrations of improved training techniques for upgrading the skills of the working poor. The Secretary may, for these purposes, contract for independent evaluations of and research regarding such programs or individual projects under such programs, and establish a data collection, processing, and retrieval system.

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums, not exceeding $15,000,000 for any fiscal year, as may be necessary to carry out paragraph (1).

"(b) On or before September 1 following each fiscal year in which part D is effective with respect to any State—

"(1) the Secretary shall report to the Congress on the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part in such fiscal year, and

"(2) the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall report to the Congress on the child care and supportive services provided under this part in such fiscal year."

(2) Section 422 (a) (1) (B) of such Act is amended by striking out "provided for dependent children" and inserting in lieu thereof "provided with respect to needy families with children".

(o) References in any law, regulation, State plan, or other document to any provision of part A of title IV of the Social Security Act which is redesignated by this section shall (from and after the effective date of the amendments made by this Act) be considered to be references to such provision as so redesignated.

CHANGES IN HEADINGS

SEC. 104. (a) The heading of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601, et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE IV—FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS, STATE SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS, WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAMS, AND GRANTS TO STATES FOR FAMILY AND CHILD WELFARE SERVICES".

(b) The heading of part A of such title IV is amended to read as follows:

"PART A—SERVICES TO NEEDY FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN".

TITLE II—AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SEC. 201. Title XVI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1381 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE XVI—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1601. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance to needy individuals who are sixty-five years of age or over, blind, or disabled and for the purpose of encouraging each State to furnish rehabilitation and other services to help such individuals attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year sums sufficient to carry out these purposes. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States having State plans approved under section 1602.

"STATE PLANS FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AND SERVICES TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1602. (a) A State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled must—

"(1) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer or supervise the administration of the State plan;

"(2) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis (but the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of individuals employed in accordance with such methods);

"(3) provide for the training and effective use of social service personnel in the administration of the plan, for the furnishing of technical assistance to units of State government and of political subdivisions which are furnishing financial assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled, and for the development through research or demonstration projects of new or improved methods of furnishing assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled;

"(4) provide for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff (with particular emphasis on the full-time or part-time employment of recipients and other persons of low income as community service aides) in the administration of the plan and for the use of non-paid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants and recipients and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for aid under the plan shall have opportunity to do so and that such aid shall be furnished with reasonable promptness with respect to all eligible individuals;

"(6) provide for the use of a simplified statement, conforming to standards prescribed by the Secretary, to establish eligibility, and for adequate and effective methods of verification of eligibility of applicants and recipients through the use, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, of sampling and other scientific techniques;

"(7) provide that, except to the extent permitted by the Secretary with respect to services, the State plan shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them;

"(8) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(9) provide that, in determining whether an individual is blind, there shall be an examination by a physician skilled in the diseases of the eye or by an optometrist, whichever the individual may select;

"(10) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency to any individual whose claim for aid under the plan is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(11) provide for periodic evaluation of the operations of the State plan, not less often than annually, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, and the furnishing of annual reports of such evaluations to the Secretary together with any necessary modifications of the State plan resulting from such evaluations;

"(12) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(13) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants and recipients to purposes directly connected with the administration of the plan;

"(14) provide, if the plan includes aid to or on behalf of individuals in private or public institutions, for the establishment or designation of a State authority or authorities which shall be responsible for establishing and maintaining standards for such institutions;

"(15) provide a description of the services which the State makes available to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain self-support or self-care, including a description of the steps taken to assure, in the provision of such services, maximum utilization of all available services that are similar or related; and

"(16) assure that, in administering the State plan and providing services thereunder, the State will observe priorities established by the Secretary and comply with such performance standards as the Secretary may, from time to time, establish.

Notwithstanding paragraph (1), if on January 1, 1962, and on the date on which a State submits (or submitted) its plan for approval under this title, the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title X was different from the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title I and the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title XIV, then the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of such plan approved under title X may be designated to administer or supervise the administration of the portion of the State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which relates to blind individuals and a separate State agency may be established or designated to administer or supervise the administration of the rest of such plan; and in such case the part of the plan which each such agency administers, or the administration of which each such agency supervises, shall be regarded as a separate plan for purposes of this title.

"(b) The Secretary shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) and in section 1603, except that he shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for aid under the plan—

"(1) an age requirement of more than sixty-five years;

"(2) any residency requirement which excludes any individual who resides in the State;

"(3) any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States, or any alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence who has resided in the United States continuously during the five years immediately preceding his application for such aid;

"(4) any disability or age requirement which excludes any persons under a severe disability, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, who are eighteen years of age or older; or

"(5) any blindness or age requirement which excludes any persons who are blind as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary. In the case of any State to which the provisions of section 344 of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1950 were applicable on January 1, 1962, and to which the sentence of section 1002(b) following paragraph (2) thereof is applicable on the date on which its State plan was or is submitted for approval under this title, the Secretary shall approve the plan of such State for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled for purposes of this title, even though it does not meet the requirements of section 1603(a), if it meets all other requirements of this title for an approved plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled; but payments to the State under this title shall be made, in the case of any such plan, only with respect to expenditures thereunder which would be included as expenditures for the purposes of this title under a plan approved under this section without regard to the provisions of this sentence.

"DETERMINATION OF NEED

"SEC. 1603. (a) A State plan must provide that, in determining the need for aid under the plan, the State agency shall take into consideration any other income or resources of the individual claiming such aid as well as any expenses reasonably attributable to the earning of any such income; except that, in making such determination with respect to any individual—

"(1) the State agency shall not consider as resources (A) the home, household goods, and personal effects of the individual, (B) other personal or real property, the total value of which does not exceed $1,500, or (C) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion, but shall apply the provisions of section 442 (d) and regulations thereunder;

"(2) the State agency may not consider the financial responsibility of any individual for any applicant or recipient unless the applicant or recipient is the individual's spouse, or the individual's child who is under the age of twenty-one or is blind or severely disabled;

"(3) if such individual is blind, the State agency (A) shall disregard the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half of earned income in excess of $85 per month, and (B) shall, for a period not in excess of twelve months, and may, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, disregard such additional amounts of other income and resources, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of such plan;

(4) if such individual is not blind but is severely disabled, the State agency (A) shall disregard the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half of earned income in excess of $85 per month, and (B) shall, for a period not in excess of twelve months, and may, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, disregard such additional amounts of other income and resources, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of the plan, but only with respect to the part or parts of such period during substantially all of which he is undergoing vocational rehabilitation;

"(5) if such individual has attained age sixty-five and is neither blind nor severely disabled, the State agency may disregard not more than the first $60 per month of earned income plus one-half of the remainder thereof; and

"(6) the State agency may, before disregarding any amounts under the preceding paragraphs of this subsection, disregard not more than $7.50 of any income. For requirement of additional disregarding of income of OASDI recipients in determining need for aid under the plan, see section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969.

"(b) A State plan must also provide that—

"(1) each eligible individual, other than one who is a patient in a medical institution or is receiving institutional services in an intermediate care facility to which section 1121 applies, shall receive financial assistance in such amount as, when added to his income which is not disregarded pursuant to subsection (a), will provide a minimum of $110 per month;

"(2) the standard of need applied for determining eligibility for and amount of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled shall not be lower than (A) the standard applied for this purpose under the State plan (approved under this title) as in effect on the date of enactment of part D of title IV of this Act, or (B) if there was no such plan in effect for such State on such date, the standard of need which was applicable under—

"(i) the State plan which was in effect on such date and was approved under title I, in the case of any individual who is sixty-five years of age or older,

"(ii) the State plan in effect on such date and approved under title X, in the case of an individual who is blind, or

"(iii) the State plan in effect on such date and approved under title XIV, in the case of an individual who is severely disabled,

except that if two or more of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are applicable to an individual, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than the higher (or highest) of the standards under the applicable plans, and except that if none of such clauses is applicable to an individual, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than the higher (or highest) of the standards under the State plans approved under titles I, X, and XIV which were in effect on such date; and

"(3) no aid will be furnished to any individual under the State plan for any period with respect to which he is considered a member of a family receiving family assistance benefits under part D of title IV or supplementary payments pursuant to part E thereof, or training allowances under part C thereof, for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits, payments, or allowances (but this paragraph shall not apply to any individual, otherwise considered a member of such a family, if he elects in such manner and form as the Secretary may prescribe not to be considered a member of such a family).

"(c) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1604. From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary shall pay to each State which has a plan approved under this title, for each calendar quarter, an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each month of such quarter as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan—

"(1) 90 per centum of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditures as exceeds the product of $65 multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month; plus

"(2) 25 per centum of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under paragraph (1), not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to such month as exceeds the product of the amount which, as determined by the Secretary, is the maximum permissible level of assistance per person in which the Federal Government will participate financially, multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month.

In the case of any individual in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the maximum permissible level of assistance under paragraph (2) may be lower than in the case of individuals in the other States. For other special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"ALTERNATE PROVISION FOR DIRECT FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO INDIVIDUALS

"SEC. 1605. The Secretary may enter into an agreement with a State under which he will, on behalf of the State, pay aid to the aged, blind, and disabled directly to individuals in the State under the State's plan approved under this title and perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon. In such case payments shall not be made as provided in section 1604 and the agreement shall also provide for payment to the Secretary by the State of its share of such aid (adjusted to reflect the State's share of any overpayments recovered under section 1606).

"OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

"SEC. 1606. Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of payment has been made to any person as a direct Federal payment pursuant to section 1605, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments of the overpaid individual or by recovery from him or his estate or payment to him. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with a view to avoiding penalizing individuals who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this title, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 1607. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under this title, finds—

"(1) that the plan no longer complies with the provisions of sections 1602 and 1603; or

"(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such provision; the Secretary shall notify such State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State or individuals within the State under this title (or, in his discretion, that payments will be limited to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure), until the Secretary is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no such further payments to the State or individuals in the State under this title (or shall limit payments to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR SERVICES AND ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 1608. (a) If the State plan of a State approved under section 1602 provides that the State agency will make available to applicants for or recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan at least those services to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care which are prescribed by the Secretary, such State shall qualify for payments for services under subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) In the case of any State whose State plan approved under section 1602 meets the requirements of subsection (a), the Secretary shall pay to the State from the sums appropriated therefor an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each quarter, as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan—

"(1) 75 per centum of so much of such expenditures as are for—

"(A) services which are prescribed pursuant to subsection (a) and are provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, or

"(B) other services, specified by the Secretary as likely to prevent or reduce dependency, so provided to the applicants for or recipients of aid, or

"(C) any of the services prescribed pursuant to subsection (a), and any of the services specified in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, which the Secretary may specify as appropriate for individuals who, within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe, have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan, if such services are requested by the individuals and are provided to them in accordance with subsection (c), or

"(D) the training of personnel employed or preparing for employment by the State agency or by the local agency administering the plan in the political subdivision; plus

"(2) one-half of so much of such expenditures (not included under paragraph (1)) as are for services provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan, and to individuals requesting such services who (within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe) have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of such aid; plus

"(3) one-half of the remainder of such expenditures.

"(c) The services referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) shall, except to the extent specified by the Secretary, include only—

"(1) services provided by the staff of the State agency, or the local agency administering the State plan in the political subdivision (but no funds authorized under this title shall be available for services defined as vocational rehabilitation services under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act (A) which are available to individuals in need of them under programs for their rehabilitation carried on under a State plan approved under that Act, or (B) which the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under that Act are able and willing to provide if reimbursed for the cost thereof pursuant to agreement under paragraph (2), if provided by such staff), and

"(2) subject to limitations prescribed by the Secretary, services which in the judgment of the State agency cannot be as economically or as effectively provided by the staff of that State or local agency and are not otherwise reasonably available to individuals in need of them, and which are provided, pursuant to agreement with the State agency, by the State health authority or the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act or by any other State agency which the Secretary may determine to be appropriate (whether provided by its staff or by contract with public (local) or nonprofit private agencies).

Services described in clause (B) of paragraph (1) may be provided only pursuant to agreement with the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act.

"(d) The portion of the amount expended for administration of the State plan to which paragraph (1) of subsection (b) applies and the portion thereof to which paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (b) apply shall be determined in accordance with such methods and procedures as may be permitted by the Secretary.

"(e) In the case of any State whose plan approved under section 1602 does not meet the requirements of subsection (a) of this section, there shall be paid to the State, in lieu of the amount provided for under subsection (b), an amount equal to one-half the total of the sums expended during each quarter as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, including services referred to in subsections (b) and (c) and provided in accordance with the provisions of those subsections.

"(f) In the case of any State whose State plan included a provision meeting the requirements of subsection (a), but with respect to which the Secretary finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the plan, that—

"(1) the provision no longer complies with the requirements of subsection (a), or

"(2) in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with such provision,

the Secretary shall notify the State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State under subsection (b) until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until the Secretary is so satisfied, no such further payments with respect to the administration of and services under the State plan shall be made, but, instead, such payments shall be made, subject to the other provisions of this title, under subsection (e).

"COMPUTATION OF PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 1609. (a) (1) Prior to the beginning of each quarter, the Secretary shall estimate the amount to which a State will be entitled under sections 1604 and 1608 for that quarter, such estimates to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in that quarter in accordance with the provisions of sections 1604 and 1608, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in that quarter, and, if such amount is less than the State's proportionate share of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, and (B) such other investigation as the Secretary may find necessary.

"(2) The Secretary shall then pay in such installments as he may determine, the amount so estimated, reduced or increased to the extent of any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made under this section to the State for any prior quarter and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under this subsection.

"(b) The pro rata share to which the United States is equitably entitled, as determined by the Secretary, of the net amount recovered during any quarter by a State or political subdivision thereof with respect to aid furnished under the State plan, but excluding any amount of such aid recovered from the estate of a deceased recipient which is not in excess of the amount expended by the State or any political subdivision thereof for the funeral expenses of the deceased, shall be considered an overpayment to be adjusted under subsection (a) (2).

"(c) Upon the making of any estimate by the Secretary under this section, any appropriations available for payments under this title shall be deemed obligated.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 1610. For purposes of this title, the term 'aid to the aged, blind, and disabled' means money payments to needy individuals who are 65 years of age or older, are blind, or are severely disabled, but such term does not include—

"(1) any such payments to any individual who is an inmate of a public institution (except as a patient in a medical institution); or

"(2) any such payments to any individual who has not attained 65 years of age and who is a patient in an institution for tuberculosis or mental diseases.

Such term also includes payments which are not included within the meaning of such term under the preceding sentence, but which would be so included except that they are made on behalf of such a needy individual to another individual who (as determined in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary) is interested in or concerned with the welfare of such needy individual, but only with respect to a State whose State plan approved under section 1602 includes provision for—

"(A) determination by the State agency that the needy individual has, by reason of his physical or mental condition, such inability to manage funds that making payments to him would be contrary to his welfare and, therefore, it is necessary to provide such aid through payments described in this sentence;

"(B) making such payments only in cases in which the payment will, under the rules otherwise applicable under the State plan for determining need and the amount of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled to be paid (and in conjunction with other income and resources), meet all the need of the individuals with respect to whom such payments are made;

"(C) undertaking and continuing special efforts to protect the welfare of such individuals and to improve, to the extent possible, his capacity for self-care and to manage funds;

"(D) periodic review by the State agency of the determination under clause (A) to ascertain whether conditions justifying such determination still exist, with provision for termination of the payments if they do not and for seeking judicial appointment of a guardian, or other legal representative, as described in section 1111, if and when it appears that such action will best serve the interests of the needy individual; and

"(E) opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency on the determination referred to in clause (A) for any individual with respect to whom it is made.

Whether an individual is blind or severely disabled shall be determined for purposes of this title in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary."

REPEAL OF TITLES I, X, AND XIV OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

SEC. 202. Titles I, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 301 et seq., 1201 et seq., and 1351 et seq.) are hereby repealed.

ADDITIONAL DISREGARDING OF INCOME OF OASDI RECIPIENTS IN DETERMINING NEED FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SEC. 203. Section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969 is amended by striking out "and before July 1970".

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

SEC. 204. In the case of any State which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this section, any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made to such State under section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603 of such Act with respect to a period before the approval of a plan under title XVI as amended by this Act, and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under subsection (b) of such section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603, shall, for purposes of section 1609 (a) of such Act as herein amended, be considered an overpayment or underpayment (as the case may be) made under title XVI of such Act as herein amended.

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO DEFINITIONS OF BLINDNESS AND DISABILITY

SEC. 205. In the case of any State which has in operation a plan of aid to the blind under title X, aid to the permanently and totally disabled under title XIV, or aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under title XVI, of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this Act, the State plan of such State submitted under title XVI of such Act as amended by this Act shall not be denied approval thereunder, with respect to the period ending with the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after the enactment of this Act, by reason of its failure to include therein a test of disability or blindness different from that included in the State's plan (approved under such title X, XIV or XVI of such Act) as in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(12) by repealing section 1903(c);

(13) by striking out "highest amount which would ordinarily be paid to a family of the same size without any income or resources in the form of money payments, under the plan of the State approved under part A of title IV of this Act" in section 1903(f)(1)(B)(i) and inserting in lieu thereof "highest total amount which would ordinarily be paid under parts D and E of title IV to a family of the same size without income or resources, eligible in that State for money payments under part E of title IV of this Act";

(14) (A) by striking out "the 'highest amount which would ordinarily be paid' to such family under the State's plan approved under part A of title IV of this Act" in section 1903 (f) (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "the 'highest total amount which would ordinarily be paid' to such family", and

(B) by striking out "section 408" in such section and inserting in lieu thereof "section 406";

(15) by striking out "I, X, XIV, or XVI, of part A" in section 1903 (f) (4) (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "XVI or under an agreement under part E"; and

(16) (A) by striking out "aid or assistance under the State's plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title VI, who are—" in the matter preceding clause (i) in section 1905 (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "payments under part E of title IV or aid under a State plan approved under title XVI, who are—",

(B) by striking out clause (ii) of such section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(ii) receiving assistance to needy families with agreement under part E of title IV of such Act, for each quarter beginning after June 30, 1971, and prior to July 1, 1973, in addition to the amount payable to such State under such title and such agreement, an amount equal to the excess of—

(1) (A) 70 per centum of the total of those payments for such quarter pursuant to such agreement which are required under sections 451 and 452 of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act), plus (B) the non-Federal share of expenditures for such quarter required under title XVI of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act) as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled (as defined in subsection (b) (1) of this section), over

(2) the non-Federal share of expenditures which would have been made during such quarter as aid or assistance under the plans of the State approved under titles I, IV (part (A)), X, XIV, and XVI had they continued in effect (as defined in subsection (b) (2) of this section).

(b) For purposes of subsection (a)—

(1) the non-Federal share of expenditures for any quarter required under title XVI of the Social Security Act, referred to in clause (B) of subsection (a) (1), means the difference between (A) the total of the expenditures for such quarter under the plan approved under such title as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which would have been included as aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under the plan approved under such title as in effect for June 1971 plus so much of the rest of such expenditures as is required (as determined by the Secretary) by reason of the amendments to such title made by this Act, and (B) the total amounts determined under section 1604 of the Social Security Act for such State with respect to such expenditures for such quarter; and

(2) the non-Federal share of expenditures which would have been made during any quarter under approved State plans, referred to in subsection (a) (2), means the difference between (A) the total of the expenditures which would have been made as aid or assistance (excluding emergency assistance specified in section 406(e) (1) (A) of the Social Security Act and foster care under section 408 thereof) for such quarter under the plans of such State approved under title I, IV (part A), X, XIV, and XVI of such Act and in effect in the month prior to the enactment of this Act if they had continued in effect during such quarter and if they had included (if they did not already do so) payments to dependent children of unemployed fathers authorized by section 407 of the Social Security Act (as in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act), and (B) the total of the amounts which would have been determined under sections 3, 403, 1003, 1403, and 1603, or under section 1118, of the Social Security Act for such State with respect to such expenditures for such quarter.

SEC. 403. Section 1108 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) (1) In applying the provisions of sections 442 (a) and (b), 443 (b) (2), 1603 (a) (1) and (b) (1), and 1604 (1) with respect to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the amounts to be used shall (instead of the $500, $300, and $1,500 in such section 442 (a), the $500 and $300 in such section 442 (b), the $30 in clauses (A) and (B) of such section 443 (b) (2), the $1,500 in such section 1603 (a) (1), the $110 in such section 1603 (b) (1), and the $65 in section 1604 (1)) bear the same ratio to such $500, $300, $1,500, $500, $300, $30, $1,500, $110, and $65 as the per capita incomes of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, respectively, bear to the per capita income of that one of the fifty States which has the lowest per capita income; except that in no case may the amounts so used exceed such $500, $300, $1,500, $500, $300, $30, $1,500, $110, and $65.

"(2) (A) The amounts to be used under such sections in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam shall be promulgated by the Secretary between July 1 and September 30 of each even-numbered year, on the basis of the average per capita income of each State and of the United States for the most recent calendar year for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce. Such promulgation shall be effective for each of the two fiscal years in the period beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation.

"(B) The term 'United States', for purposes of subparagraph (A) only, means the fifty States and the District of Columbia.

"(3) If the amounts which would otherwise be promulgated for any fiscal year for any of the three States referred to in paragraph (1) would be lower than the amounts promulgated for such State for the immediately preceding period, the amounts for such fiscal year shall be increased to the extent of the difference; and the amounts so increased shall be the amounts promulgated for such year."

MEANING OF SECRETARY AND FISCAL YEAR

SEC. 404. As used in this Act and in the amendments made by this Act, the term "Secretary" means, unless the context otherwise requires, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and the term "fiscal year" means a period beginning with any July 1 and ending with the close of the following June 30.

TITLE I—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

SEC. 101. Title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) is amended by adding after part C the following new parts:

"PART D—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 441. For the purpose of providing a basic level of financial assistance throughout the Nation to needy families with children, in a manner which will strengthen family life, encourage work training and self-support, and enhance personal dignity, there is authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year a sum sufficient to carry out this part.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"Eligibility

"SEC. 442. (a) Each family (as defined in section 445)—

"(1) whose income, other than income excluded pursuant to section 443 (b), is less than—

"(A) $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family, plus

"(B) $300 per year for each additional member, and

"(2) whose resources, other than resources excluded pursuant to section 444, are less than $1,500, shall, in accordance with and subject to the other provisions of this title, be paid a family assistance benefit.

"Amount

"(b) The family assistance benefit for a family shall be payable at the rate of—

"(1) $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family, plus

"(2) $300 per year for each additional member, reduced by the amount of income, not excluded pursuant to section 443(b), of the members of the family.

"Period for Determination of Benefits

"(c) (1) A family's eligibility for and its amount of family assistance benefits shall be determined for each quarter of a calendar year. Such determination shall be made on the basis of the Secretary's estimate of the family's income for such quarter, after taking into account income for a preceding period and any modifications in income which are likely to occur on the basis of changes in conditions or circumstances. Eligibility for and the amount of benefits of a family for any quarter shall be redetermined at such time or times as may be provided by the Secretary, such redetermination to be effective prospectively.

"(2) The Secretary shall by regulation prescribe the cases in which and extent to which the amount of a family assistance benefit for any quarter shall be reduced by reason of the time elapsing since the beginning of such quarter and before the date of filing of the application for the benefit.

"(3) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which income received in one period (or expenses incurred in one period in earning income) shall, for purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits, be considered as received (or incurred) in another period or periods.

"Special Limits on Gross Income

"(d) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the circumstances under which the gross income from a trade or business (including farming) will be considered sufficiently large to make such family ineligible for such benefits.

"Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam

"(e) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"INCOME

"Meaning of Income

"SEC. 443. (a) For purposes of this part, income means both earned income and unearned income; and—

"(1) earned income means only—

"(A) remuneration for services performed as an employee (as defined in section 210(j)), other than remuneration to which section 209 (b), (c), (d), (f), or (k), or section 211, would apply; and

"(B) net earnings from self-employment. as defined in section 211 (without the application of the second and third sentences following clause (C) of subsection (a) (9)), including earnings for services described in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of subsection (c); and

"(2) unearned income means all other income, including—

"(A) any payments received as an annuity, pension, retirement, or disability benefit, including veteran's or workmen's compensation and old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, railroad retirement, and unemployment benefits;

"(B) prizes and awards;

"(C) the proceeds of any life insurance policy;

"(D) gifts (cash or otherwise), support and alimony payments, and inheritances; and

"(E) rents, dividends, interest, and royalties.

"Exclusions From Income

"(b) In determining the income of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) subject to limitations (as to amount or otherwise) prescribed by the Secretary, the earned income of each child in the family who is, as determined by the Secretary under regulations, a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment;

"(2) (A) the total unearned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $30 in such quarter, and (B) the total earned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which, as determined in accordance with such criteria, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $30 in such quarter;

"(3) an amount of earned income of a member of the family equal to all, or such part (and according to such schedule) as the Secretary may prescribe, of the cost incurred by such member for child care which the Secretary deems necessary to securing or continuing in manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, employment, or self-employment;

"(4) the first $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods) of the total of earned income (not excluded by the preceding paragraphs of this subsection) of all members of the family plus one-half of the remainder thereof;

"(5) food stamps or any other assistance (except veterans' pensions) which is based on need and furnished by any State or political subdivision of a State or any Federal agency, or by any private charitable agency or organization (as determined by the Secretary);

"(6) allowances under section 432 (a);

"(7) any portion of a scholarship or fellowship received for use in paying the cost of tuition and fees at any educational (including technical or vocational education) institution; and

"(8) home produce of a member of the family utilized by the household for its own consumption.

"RESOURCES

"Exclusions From Resources

"SEC. 444. (a) In determining the resources of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) the home, household goods, and personal effects; and

"(2) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion.

"Disposition of Resources

"(b) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to the period or periods of time within which, and the manner in which, various kinds of property must be disposed of in order not to be included in determining a family's eligibility for family assistance benefits. Any portion of the family's benefits paid for any such period shall be conditioned upon such disposal; and any benefits so paid shall (at the time of the disposal) be considered overpayments to the extent they would not have been paid had the disposal occurred at the beginning of the period for which such benefits were paid.

"MEANING OF FAMILY AND CHILD

"Composition of Family

"SEC. 445. (a) Two or more individuals—

"(1) who are related by blood, marriage, or adoption,

"(2) who are living in a place of residence maintained by one or more of them as his or their own home,

"(3) who are residents of the United States, and

"(4) at least one of whom is a child who (A) is not married to another of such individuals and

(B) is in the care of or dependent upon another of such individuals, shall be regarded as a family for purposes of this part and parts A, C, and E. A parent (of a child living in a place of residence referred to in paragraph (2)), or a spouse of such a parent, who is determined by the Secretary to be temporarily absent from such place of residence for the purpose of engaging in or seeking employment or self-employment (including military service) shall nevertheless be considered (for purposes of paragraph (2)) to be living in such place of residence.

"Definition of Child

"(b) For purposes of this part and parts C and E, the term 'child' means an individual who is (1) under the age of eighteen, or (2) under the age of twenty-one and (as determined by the Secretary under regulations) a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment.

"Determination of Family Relationships

"(c) In determining whether an individual is related to another individual by blood, marriage, or adoption, appropriate State law shall be applied.

"Income and Resources of Noncontributing Adult

"(d) For purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of family assistance benefits for any family there shall be excluded the income and resources of any individual, other than a parent of a child (or a spouse of a parent), which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is not available to other members of the family; and for such purposes such individual—

"(1) in the case of a child, shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determining the family's eligibility for such benefits but not for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits, and

"(2) in any other case, shall not be considered a member of the family for any purpose.

"Recipients of Aid to the Aged, Blind, and Disabled Ineligible

"(e) If an individual is receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI, or if his needs are taken into account in determining the need of another person receiving such aid, then, for the period for which such aid is received, such individual shall not be regarded as a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the family assistance benefits of the family.

"PAYMENTS AND PROCEDURES

"Payments of Benefits

"SEC. 446. (a) (1) Family assistance benefits shall be paid at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary determines will best effectuate the purposes of this title.

"(2) Payment of the family assistance benefit of any family may be made to any one or more members of the family, or, if the Secretary deems it appropriate, to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(3) The Secretary may by regulation establish ranges of incomes within which a single amount of family assistance benefit shall apply.

"Overpayments and Underpayments

"(b) Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of family assistance benefits has been paid with respect to any family, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments to the family or by recovery from or payment to any one or more of the individuals who are or were members thereof. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with respect to a family with a view to avoiding penalizing members of the family who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this part, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration of this part.

"Hearings and Review

"(c) (1) The Secretary shall provide reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any individual who is or claims to be a member of a family and is in disagreement with any determination under this part with respect to eligibility of the family for family assistance benefits, the number of members of the family, or the amount of the benefits, if such individual requests a hearing on the matter in disagreement within thirty days after notice of such determination is received. Until a determination is made on the basis of such hearing or upon disposition of the matter through default, withdrawal of the request by the individual, or revision of the initial determination by the Secretary, any amounts which are payable (or would be payable but for the matter in disagreement) to any individual who has been determined to be a member of such family shall continue to be paid; but any amounts so paid for periods prior to such determination or disposition shall be considered overpayments to the extent they would not have been paid had such determination or disposition occurred at the same time as the Secretary's initial determination on the matter in disagreement.

"(2) Determination on the basis of such hearing shall be made within ninety days after the individual requests the hearing as provided in paragraph (1).

"(3) The final determination of the Secretary after a hearing under paragraph (1) shall be subject to judicial review as provided in section 205(g) to the same extent as the Secretary's final determinations under section 205; except that the determination of the Secretary after such hearing as to any fact shall be final and conclusive and not subject to review by any court.

"Procedures; Prohibition of Assignments

"(d) The provisions of sections 206 and 207 and subsections (a), (d), (e), and (f) of section 205 shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as they apply in the case of title II.

"Applications and Furnishing of Information by Families

"(e) (1) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to families or members thereof with respect to the filing of applications, the furnishing of other data and material, and the reporting of events and changes in circumstances, as may be necessary to determine eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits.

"(2) In order to encourage prompt reporting of events and changes in circumstances relevant to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, and more accurate estimates of expected income or expenses by members of families for purposes of such eligibility and amount of benefits, the Secretary may prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which—

"(A) failure to so report or delay in so reporting, or

"(B) inaccuracy of information which is furnished by the members and on which the estimates of income or expenses for such purposes are based, will result in treatment as overpayments of all or any portion of payments of such benefits for the period involved.

"Furnishing of Information by Other Agencies

"(f) The head of any Federal agency shall provide such information as the Secretary needs for purposes of determining eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, or verifying other information with respect thereto.

"REGISTRATION AND REFERRAL OF FAMILY MEMBERS FOR MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 447. (a) Every individual who is a member of a family which is found to be eligible for family assistance benefits, other than a member to whom the Secretary finds paragraph (1), (2), (3), (4), or (5) of subsection (b) applies, shall register for manpower services, training, and employment with the local public employment office of the State as provided by regulations of the Secretary of Labor. If and for so long as any such individual is found by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to have failed to so register, he shall not be regarded as a member of a family but his income which would otherwise be counted under this part as income of a family shall be so counted; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for family assistance benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for purposes of determination of the amount of such benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(b) An individual shall not be required to register pursuant to subsection (a) if the Secretary determines that such individual is—

"(1) unable to engage in work or training by reason of illness, incapacity, or advanced age;

"(2) a mother or other relative of a child under the age of six who is caring for such child;

"(3) the mother or other female caretaker of a child, if the father or another adult male relative is in the home and not excluded by paragraph (1), (2), (4), or (5) of this subsection (unless the second sentence of subsection (a), or section 448 (a), is applicable to him);

"(4) a child who is under the age of sixteen or meets the requirements of section 445 (b) (2); or

"(5) one whose presence in the home on a substantially continuous basis is required because of the illness or incapacity of another member of the household.

An individual who would, but for the preceding sentence, be required to register pursuant to subsection (a), may, if he wishes, register as provided in such subsection.

"(c) The Secretary shall make provision for the furnishing of child care services in such cases and for so long as he deems appropriate in the case of (1) individuals registered pursuant to subsection (a) who are, pursuant to such registration, participating in manpower services, training, or employment, and (2) individuals referred pursuant to subsection (d) who are, pursuant to such referral, participating in vocational rehabilitation.

"(d) In the case of any member of a family receiving family assistance benefits who is not required to register pursuant to subsection (a) because of such member's incapacity, the Secretary shall make provision for referral of such member to the appropriate State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, and (except in such cases involving permanent incapacity as the Secretary may determine) for a review not less often than quarterly of such member's incapacity and his need for and utilization of the rehabilitation services made available to him under such plan. If and for so long as such member is found by the Secretary to have refused without good cause to accept rehabilitation services available to him under such plan, he shall be treated as an individual to whom subsection (a) is applicable by reason of refusal to accept or participate in employment or training.

"DENIAL OF BENEFITS IN CASE OF REFUSAL OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, OR EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 448. (a) For purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits under this part, an individual who has registered as required under section 447(a) shall not be regarded as a member of a family, but his income which would otherwise be counted as income of the family under this part shall be so counted, if and for so long as he has been found by the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing (which shall be held in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as a hearing under section 446(c) (1) and (2)), to have refused without good cause to participate or continue to participate in manpower services, training, or employment, or to have refused without good cause to accept employment in which he is able to engage which is offered through the public employment offices of the State, or is otherwise offered by an employer if the offer of such employer is determined by the Secretary of Labor, after notification by such employer or otherwise, to be a bona fide offer of employment; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for the purposes of determination of the amount of its benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provided for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(b) No family shall be denied benefits under this part, or have its benefits under this part reduced, because an individual who is (or would, but for subsection (a), be) a member of such family refuses work under any of the following conditions:

"(1) if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lockout, or other labor dispute;

"(2) if the wages, hours, or other terms or conditions of the work offered are contrary to or less than those prescribed by Federal, State, or local law or are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality;

"(3) if, as a condition of being employed, the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization; or

"(4) if the individual has the demonstrated capacity, through other available training or employment opportunities, of securing work that would better enable him to achieve self-sufficiency.

"TRANSFER OF FUNDS FOR ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS

"SEC. 449. The Secretary shall, pursuant to and to the extent provided by agreement with the Secretary of Labor, pay to the Secretary of Labor amounts which he estimates would be paid as family assistance benefits under this part to individuals participating in public or private employer compensated on-the-job training under a program of the Secretary of Labor if they were not participating in such training. Such amounts shall be available to pay the costs of such programs.

"PART E—STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"PAYMENTS UNDER TITLES IV, V, XVI, AND XIX CONDITIONED ON SUPPLEMENTATION

"SEC. 451. In order for a State to be eligible for payments pursuant to title V, XVI, or XIX, or part A or B of this title, with respect to expenditures for any quarter beginning on or after the date this part becomes effective with respect to such State, it must have in effect an agreement with the Secretary under which it will make supplementary payments, as provided in this part, to any family other than a family in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

"SEC. 452. (a) Eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments under the agreement with any State under this part shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be determined by application of the provisions of,

and rules and regulations under, sections 442(a)(2), (c), and (d), 443(a), 444, 445, 446 (to the extent the Secretary deems appropriate), 447, and 448, and by application of the standard for determining need under the plan of such State as in effect for January 1970 (which standard complies with the requirements for approval under part A as in effect for such month) or, if lower, a standard equal to the applicable poverty level determined pursuant to section 453(c) and in effect at the time of such payments, or such higher standard of need as the State may apply, with the resulting amount reduced by the family assistance benefit payable under part D and further reduced by any other income (earned or unearned) not excluded under section 443(b) (except paragraph (4) thereof) or under subsection (b) of this section; but in making such determination the State may impose limitations on the amount of aid paid to the extent that such limitations (in combination with other provisions of the plan) are no more stringent in result than those imposed under the plan of such State as in effect for such month. In the case of any State which provides for meeting less than 100 per centum of its standard of need or provides for considering less than 100 per centum of requirements in determining need, the Secretary shall prescribe by regulation the method or methods for achieving as nearly as possible the results provided for under the foregoing provisions of this subsection.

"(b) For purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments to a family for any period pursuant to an agreement under this part, in the case of earned income to which paragraph (4) of section 443(b) applies, there shall be disregarded $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods), plus—

(1) one-third of the portion of the remainder of earnings which does not exceed twice the amount of the family assistance benefits that would be payable to the family if it had no income, plus

(2) one-fifth (or more if the Secretary by regulation so prescribes) of the balance of the earnings.

For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"(c) The agreement with a State under this part shall—

"(1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State;

"(2) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to carry out or supervise the carrying out of the agreement in the State;

"(3) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency carrying out the agreement to any individual whose claim for supplementary payments is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(4) provide (A) such methods of administration (including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods) as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the agreement in the State, and (B) for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff, with particular emphasis on the full- or part-time employment of recipients of supplementary payments and other persons of low income, as community services aides, in carrying out the agreement and for the use of nonpaid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that the State agency carrying out the agreement will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(6) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments to purposes directly connected with the administration of this title; and

"(7) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for supplementary payments shall have opportunity to do so, and that supplementary payments shall be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 453. (a) (1) The Secretary shall pay to any State which has in effect an agreement under this part, for each fiscal year, an amount equal to 30 per centum of the total amount expended during such year pursuant to its agreement as supplementary payments to families other than families in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed, not counting so much of the supplementary payment made to any family as exceeds the amount by which (with respect to the period involved)—

"(A) the family assistance benefit payable to such family under part D, plus any income of such family (earned or unearned) not disregarded in determining the amount of such supplementary payment, is less than

"(B) the applicable poverty level as promulgated and in effect under subsection (c).

"(2) The Secretary shall also pay to each such State an amount equal to 50 per centum of its administrative costs found necessary by the Secretary for carrying out its agreement.

"(b) Payments under subsection (a) shall be made at such time or times, in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in such installments as the Secretary may determine; and shall be made on such conditions as may be necessary to assure the carrying out of the purposes of this title.

"(c) (1) For purposes of this part, the 'poverty level' for a family group of any given size shall be the amount shown for a family group of such size in the following table, adjusted as provided in paragraph (2):

"FAMILY SIZE:	BASIC AMOUNT
One	$1,920
Two	2,460
Three	2,940
Four	3,720
Five	4,440
Six	4,980
Seven or more	6,120

"(2) Between July 1 and September 30 of each year, beginning with 1970, the Secretary (A) shall adjust the amount shown for each size of family group in the table in paragraph (1) by increasing such amount by the percentage by which the average level of the price index for the months in the calendar quarter beginning April 1 of such year exceeds the average level of the price index for months in 1969, and (B) shall thereupon promulgate the amounts so adjusted as the poverty levels for family groups of various sizes which shall be conclusive for purposes of this part for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation.

"(3) As used in this subsection, the term 'price index' means the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"FAILURE BY STATE TO COMPLY WITH AGREEMENT

"SEC. 454. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to a State with which he has an agreement under this part, finds that such State is failing to comply therewith, he shall withhold all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of the payments to which such State is otherwise entitled under this part or part A or B of this title or under title V, XVI, or XIX; but the amounts so withheld from payments under such part A or B or under title V, XVI, or XIX shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such part or title. Such withholding shall be effected at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary may deem appropriate.

"PART F—ADMINISTRATION

"AGREEMENTS WITH STATES

"SEC. 461. (a) The Secretary may enter into an agreement with any State under which the Secretary will make, on behalf of the State, the supplementary payments provided for under part E, or will perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon, or both. In any such case, the agreement shall also (1) provide for payment by the State to the Secretary of an amount equal to the supplementary payments the State would otherwise make pursuant to part E, less any payments which would be made to the State under section 453 (a), and (2) at the request of the State, provide for joint audit of payments under the agreement.

"(b) The Secretary may also enter into an agreement with any State under which such State will make, on behalf of the Secretary, the family assistance benefit payments provided for under part D with respect to all or specified families in the State who are eligible for such benefits or will perform such other functions in connection with the administration of part D as may be agreed upon. The cost of carrying out any such agreement shall be paid to the State by the Secretary in advance or by way of reimbursement and in such installments as may be agreed upon.

"PENALTIES FOR FRAUD

"SEC. 462. The provisions of section 208, other than paragraph (a), shall apply with respect to benefits under part D and allowances under part C, of this title, to the same extent as they apply to payments under title II.

"REPORT, EVALUATION, RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATIONS, AND TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 463. (a) The Secretary shall make an annual report to the President and the Congress on the operation and administration of parts D and E, including an evaluation thereof in carrying out the purposes of such parts and recommendations with respect thereto. The Secretary is authorized to conduct evaluations directly or by grants or contracts of the programs authorized by such parts.

"(b) The Secretary is authorized to conduct, directly or by grants or contracts, research into or demonstrations of ways of better providing financial assistance to needy persons or of better carrying out the purposes of part D, and in so doing to waive any requirements or limitations in such part with respect to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits for such family, members of families, or groups thereof as he deems appropriate.

"(c) The Secretary is authorized to provide such technical assistance to States, and to provide, directly or through grants or contracts, for such training of personnel of States, as he deems appropriate to assist them in more efficiently and effectively carrying out their agreements under this part and part E.

"(d) In addition to funds otherwise available therefor, such portion of any appropriation to carry out part D or E as the Secretary may determine, but not in excess of $20,000,000 in any fiscal year, shall be available to him to carry out this section.

"OBLIGATION OF DESERTING PARENTS

"SEC. 464. In any case where an individual has deserted or abandoned his spouse or his child or children and such spouse or any such child (during the period of such desertion or abandonment) is a member of a family receiving family assistance benefits under part D or supplementary payments under part E, such individual shall be obligated to the United States in an amount equal to—

"(1) the total amount of the family assistance benefits paid to such family during such period with respect to such spouse and child or children, plus the amount paid by the Secretary under section 453 on account of the supplementary payments made to such family during such period with respect to such spouse and child or children, reduced by

"(2) any amount actually paid by such individual to or for the support and maintenance of such spouse and child or children during such period, if and to the extent that such amount is excluded in determining the amount of such family assistance benefits;

except that in any case where an order for the support and maintenance of such spouse or any such child has been issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, the obligation of such individual under this subsection (with respect to such spouse or child) for any period shall not exceed the amount specified in such order less any amount actually paid by such individual (to or for the support and maintenance of such spouse or child) during such period. The amount due the United States under such obligation shall be collected (to the extent that the claim of the United States therefor is not otherwise satisfied), in such manner as may be specified by the Secretary, from any amounts otherwise due him or becoming due him at any time from any officer or agency of the United States or under any Federal program. Amounts collected under the preceding sentence shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"TREATMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS AS INCOME FOR FOOD STAMP PURPOSES

"SEC. 465. Family assistance benefits paid under this title shall be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining the entitlement of any household to purchase food stamps, and the cost thereof, under the food stamp program conducted under the Food Stamp Act of 1964."

MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, CHILD CARE, AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES PROGRAMS

SEC. 102. Part C of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 630 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"PART C—MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, CHILD CARE, AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES PROGRAMS FOR RECIPIENTS OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS OR SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

"PURPOSE

"SEC. 430. The purpose of this part is to authorize provision, for individuals who are members of a family receiving benefits under part D or supplementary payments pursuan to part E, of manpower services, training, employment, child care, and related supportive services necessary to train such individuals, prepare them for employment, and otherwise assist them in securing and retaining regular employment and having the opportunity for advancement in employment, to the end that needy families with children will be restored to self-supporting, independent, and useful roles in their communities.

"OPERATION OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

"SEC. 431. (a) The Secretary of Labor shall, for each person registered pursuant to part D, in accordance with priorities prescribed by him, develop or assure the development of an employability plan describing the manpower services, training, and employment which the Secretary of Labor determines each person needs in order to enable him to become self-supporting and secure and retain employment and opportunities for advancement.

"(b) The Secretary of Labor shall, in accordance with the provisions of this part, establish and assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment programs in each State for persons registered pursuant to part D or receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E.

"(c) The Secretary of Labor shall, through such programs, provide or assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities necessary to prepare such persons for and place them in regular employment, including—

"(1) any of such services, training, employment, and opportunities which the Secretary of Labor is authorized to provide under any other Act;

"(2) counseling, testing, coaching, program orientation, institutional and on-the-job training, work experience, upgrading, job development, job placement, and follow up services required to assist in securing and retaining employment and opportunities for advancement;

"(3) relocation assistance (including grants, loans, and the furnishing of such services as will aid an involuntarily unemployed individual who desires to relocate to do so in an area where there is assurance of regular suitable employment, offered through the public employment offices of the State in such area, which will lead to the earning of income sufficient to make such individual and his family ineligible for benefits under part D and supplementary payments under part E) ; and

"(4) special work projects.

"(d) (1) For purposes of subsection (c) (4), a 'special work project' is a project (meeting the requirements of this subsection) which consists of the performance of work in the public interest through grants to or contracts with public or nonprofit private agencies or organizations.

"(2) No wage rates provided under any special work project shall be lower than the applicable minimum wage for the particular work concerned.

"(3) Before entering into any special work project under a program established as provided in subsection (b),

the Secretary of Labor shall have reasonable assurances that—

"(A) appropriate standards for the health, safety, and other conditions applicable to the performance of work and training on such project are established and will be maintained,

"(B) such project will not result in the displacement of employed workers,

"(C) with respect to such project the conditions of work, training, education, and employment are reasonable in the light of such factors as the type of work, geographical region, and proficiency of the participant,

"(D) appropriate workmen's compensation protection is provided to all participants, and

"(E) such project will improve the employability of the participants.

"(4) With respect to individuals who are participants in special work projects under programs established as provided in subsection (b), the Secretary of Labor shall periodically (at least once every six months) review the employment record of each such individual while on the special work project and on the basis of such record and such other information as he may acquire determine whether it would be feasible to place such individual in regular employment or in on-the-job, institutional, or other training.

"ALLOWANCES FOR INDIVIDUALS UNDERGOING TRAINING

"SEC. 432. (a) (1) The Secretary of Labor shall pay to each individual who is a member of a family and is participating in manpower training under this part an incentive allowance of $30 per month. If one or more members of a family are receiving training for which training allowances are payable under section 203 of the Manpower Development and Training Act and meet the other requirements under such section (except subsection (l) (1) thereof) for the receipt of allowances which would be in excess of the sum of the family assistance benefit under part D and supplementary payments pursuant to part E payable with respect to such month to the family, the total of the incentive allowances per month under this section for such members shall be equal to the greater of (1) the amount of such excess or, if lower, the amount of the excess of the training allowances which would be payable under such section 203 as in effect on March 1, 1970, over the sum of such family assistance benefit and such supplementary payments, and (2) $30 for each such member.

"(2) The Secretary of Labor shall, in accordance with regulations, also pay, to any member of a family participating in manpower training under this part, allowances for transportation and other costs to him which are necessary to and directly related to his participation in training.

"(3) The Secretary of Labor shall by regulation provide for such smaller allowances under this subsection as he deems appropriate for individuals in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

"(b) Allowances under this section shall be in lieu of allowances provided for participants in manpower training programs under any other Act.

"(c) Subsection (a) shall not apply to any member of a family who is participating in a program of the Secretary of Labor providing public or private employer compensated on-the-job training.

"UTILIZATION OF OTHER PROGRAMS

"SEC. 433. In providing the manpower training and employment services and opportunities required by this part the Secretary of Labor, to the maximum extent feasible, shall assure that such services and opportunities are provided in such manner, through such means, and using all authority available to him under any other Act (and subject to all duties and responsibilities thereunder) as will further the establishment of an integrated and comprehensive manpower training program involving all sectors of the economy and all levels of government and as will make maximum use of existing manpower and manpower related programs and agencies. To such end the Secretary of Labor may use the funds appropriated to him under this part to provide the programs required by this part through such other Act, to the same extent and under the same conditions as if appropriated under such other Act and in making use of the programs of other Federal, State, or local agencies, public or private, the Secretary may reimburse such agencies for services rendered to persons under this part to the extent such services and opportunities are not otherwise available on a nonreimbursable basis.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"SEC. 434. The Secretary of Labor may issue such rules and regulations as he finds necessary to carry out his responsibilities under this part.

"APPROPRIATIONS; NONFEDERAL SHARE

"SEC. 435. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Labor for each fiscal year a sum sufficient for carrying out the purposes of this part (other than sections 436 and 437), including payment of not to exceed 90 per centum of the cost of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities provided for individuals registered pursuant to section 447. The Secretary of Labor shall establish criteria to achieve an equitable apportionment among the States of Federal expenditures for carrying out the programs authorized by section 431. In developing these criteria the Secretary of Labor shall consider the number of registrations under section 447 and other relevant factors.

"(b) If a non-Federal contribution of 10 per centum of the cost specified in subsection (a) is not made in any State (as required by section 402(a)(13)), the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may withhold any action under section 404 on account thereof and if he does so he shall instead, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the appropriate State agency or agencies, withhold any payments to be made to the State under sections 403(a), 453, 1604, and 1903(a) until the amount so withheld (including any amounts contributed by the State pursuant to the requirement in section 402(a)(13)) equals 10 per centum of such costs. Such withholding shall remain in effect until such time as the Secretary of Labor has assurances from the State that such 10 per centum will be contributed as required by section 402(a)(13). Amounts so withheld shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such sections and shall be paid by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to the Secretary of Labor.

"CHILD CARE

"SEC. 436. (a)(1) For the purpose of assuring that individuals receiving benefits under part D or supplementary payments pursuant to part E will not be prevented from participating in training or employment by the unavailability of appropriate child care, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization, for part or all of the cost of projects for the provision of child care, including necessary transportation and alteration, remodeling, and renovation of facilities, which may be necessary or appropriate in order to better enable an individual who has been registered pursuant to part D or is receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part, or to enable an individual who has been referred pursuant to section 447 (d) to participate in vocational rehabilitation, or to enable a member of a family which is or has been (within such period of time as the Secretary may prescribe) eligible for benefits under such part D or payments pursuant to such part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part; or, with respect to the period prior to the date when part D becomes effective for a State, to better enable an individual who is receiving aid to families with dependent children, or whose needs are taken into account in determining the need of any one claiming or receiving such aid, to participate in manpower training or employment.

"(2) Such grants or contracts for the provision of child care in any area may be made directly, or through grants to any public or nonprofit private agency which is designated by the appropriate elected or appointed official or officials in such area and which demonstrates a capacity to work effectively with the manpower agency in such area (including provision for the stationing of personnel with the manpower team in appropriate cases). To the extent appropriate, such care for children attending school which is provided on a group or institutional basis shall be provided through arrangements with the appropriate local educational agency.

"(3) Such projects shall provide for various types of child care needed in the light of the different circumstances and needs of the children involved.

"(b) Such sums shall also be available to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization, for evaluation, training of personnel, technical assistance, or research or demonstration projects to determine more effective methods of providing any such care.

"(c) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may provide, in any case in which a family is able to pay for part or all of the cost of child care provided under a project assisted under this section, for payment by the family of such fees for the care as may be reasonable in the light of such ability.

"SUPPORTIVE SERVICES

"SEC. 437. (a) No payments shall be made to any State under title V, XVI, or XIX, or part A or B of this title, with respect to expenditures for any calendar quarter beginning on or after the date part D becomes effective with respect to such State, unless it has in effect an agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare under which it will provide health, vocational rehabilitation, counseling, social, and other supportive services which the Secretary under regulations determines to be necessary to permit an individual who has been registered pursuant to part D or is receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E to undertake or continue manpower training and employment under this part.

"(b) Services under such an agreement shall be provided in close cooperation with manpower training and employment services provided under this part.

"(c) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall from time to time, in such installments and on such conditions as he deems appropriate, pay to any State with which he has an agreement pursuant to subsection (a) up to 90 per centum of the cost of such State of carrying out such agreement. There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

"ADVANCE FUNDING

"SEC. 438. (a) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available under this part, appropriations for grants, contracts, or other payments with respect to individuals registered pursuant to section 447 are authorized to be included in the appropriation Act for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which they are available for obligation.

"(b) In order to effect a transition to the advance funding method of timing appropriation action, subsection (a) shall apply notwithstanding that its initial application will result in enactment in the same year (whether in the same appropriation Act or otherwise) of two separate appropriations, one for the then current fiscal year and one for the succeeding fiscal year.

"EVALUATION AND RESEARCH; REPORTS TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 439. (a) (1) The Secretary shall (jointly with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare) provide for the continuing evaluation of the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part, including their effectiveness in achieving stated goals and their impact on other related programs. The Secretary may conduct research regarding, and demonstrations of, ways to improve the effectiveness of the manpower training and employment programs so provided and may also conduct demonstrations of improved training techniques for upgrading the skills of the working poor. The Secretary may, for these purposes, contract for independent evaluations of and research regarding such programs or individual projects under such programs, and establish a data collection, processing, and retrieval system.

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums, not exceeding $15,000,000 for any fiscal year, as may be necessary to carry out paragraph (1).

"(b) On or before September 1 following each fiscal year in which part D is effective with respect to any State—

"(1) the Secretary shall report to the Congress on the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part in such fiscal year, and

"(2) the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall report to the Congress on the child care and supportive services provided under this part in such fiscal year."

TITLE II—AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SEC. 201. Title XVI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1381 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE XVI—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1601. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance to needy individuals who are sixty-five years of age or over, blind, or disabled and for the purpose of encouraging each State to furnish rehabilitation and other services to help such individuals attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year sums sufficient to carry out these purposes. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States having State plans approved under section 1602.

"STATE PLANS FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AND SERVICES TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1602. (a) A State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled must—

"(1) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer or supervise the administration of the State plan;

"(2) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis (but the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of individuals employed in accordance with such methods) ;

"(3) provide for the training and effective use of social service personnel in the administration of the plan, for the furnishing of technical assistance to units of State government and of political subdivisions which are furnishing financial assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled, and for the development through research or demonstration projects of new or improved methods of furnishing assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled;

"(4) provide for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff (with particular emphasis on the full-time or part-time employment of recipients and other persons of low income as community service aides) in the administration of the plan and for the use of non-paid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants and recipients and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for aid under the plan shall have opportunity to do so and that such aid shall be furnished with reasonable promptness with respect to all eligible individuals;

"(6) provide for the use of a simplified statement, conforming to standards prescribed by the Secretary, to establish eligibility, and for adequate and effective methods of verification of eligibility of applicants and recipients through the use, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, of sampling and other scientific techniques;

"(7) provide that, except to the extent permitted by the Secretary with respect to services, the State plan shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them;

"(8) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(9) provide that, in determining whether an individual is blind, there shall be an examination by a physician skilled in the diseases of the eye or by an optometrist, whichever the individual may select;

"(10) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency to any individual whose claim for aid under the plan is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(11) provide for periodic evaluation of the operations of the State plan, not less often than annually, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, and the furnishing of annual reports of such evaluations to the Secretary together with any necessary modifications of the State plan resulting from such evaluations;

"(12) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(13) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants and recipients to purposes directly connected with the administration of the plan;

"(14) provide, if the plan includes aid to or on behalf of individuals in private or public institutions, for the establishment or designation of a State authority or authorities which shall be responsible for establishing and maintaining standards for such institutions;

"(15) provide a description of the services which the State makes available to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain self-support or self-care, including a description of the steps taken to assure, in the provision of such services, maximum utilization of all available services that are similar or related; and

"(16) assure that, in administering the State plan and providing services thereunder, the State will observe priorities established by the Secretary and comply with such performance standards as the Secretary may, from time to time, establish.

Notwithstanding paragraph (1), if on January 1, 1962, and on the date on which a State submits (or submitted) its plan for approval under this title, the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title X was different from the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title I and the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title XIV, then the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of such plan approved under title X may be designated to administer or supervise the administration of the portion of the State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which relates to blind individuals and a separate State agency may be established or designated to administer or supervise the administration of the rest of such plan; and in such case the part of the plan which each such agency administers, or the administration of which each such agency supervises, shall be regarded as a separate plan for purposes of this title.

"(b) The Secretary shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) and in section 1603, except that he shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for aid under the plan—

"(1) an age requirement of more than sixty-five years;

"(2) any residency requirement which excludes any individual who resides in the State;

"(3) any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States, or any alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence who has resided in the United States continuously during the five years immediately preceding his application for such aid;

"(4) any disability or age requirement which excludes any persons under a severe disability, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, who are eighteen years of age or older; or

"(5) any blindness or age requirement which excludes any persons who are blind as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary.

In the case of any State to which the provisions of section 344 of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1950 were applicable on January 1, 1962, and to which the sentence of section 1002(b) following paragraph (2) thereof is applicable on the date on which its State plan was or is submitted for approval under this title, the Secretary shall approve the plan of such State for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled for purposes of this title, even though it does not meet the requirements of section 1603 (a), if it meets all other requirements of this title for an approved plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled; but payments to the State under this title shall be made, in the case of any such plan, only with respect to expenditures thereunder which would be included as expenditures for the purposes of this title under a plan approved under this section without regard to the provisions of this sentence.

"DETERMINATION OF NEED

"SEC. 1603. (a) A State plan must provide that, in determining the need for aid under the plan, the State agency shall take into consideration any other income or resources of the individual claiming such aid as well as any expenses reasonably attributable to the earning of any such income; except that, in making such determination with respect to any individual—

"(1) the State agency shall not consider as resources (A) the home, household goods, and personal effects of the individual, (B) other personal or real property, the total value of which does not exceed $1,500, or (C) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion, but shall apply the provisions of section 442 (d) and regulations thereunder;

"(2) the State agency may not consider the financial responsibility of any individual for any applicant or recipient unless the applicant or recipient is the individual's spouse, or the individual's child who is under the age of twenty-one or is blind or severely disabled;

"(3) if such individual is blind, the State agency (A) shall disregard the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half of earned income in excess of $85 per month, and (B) shall, for a period not in excess of twelve months, and may, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, disregard such additional amounts of other income and resources, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of such plan;

(4) if such individual is not blind but is severely disabled, the State agency (A) shall disregard the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half of earned income in excess of $85 per month, and (B) shall, for a period not in excess of twelve months, and may, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, disregard such additional amounts of other income and resources, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of the plan, but only with respect to the part or parts of such period during substantially all of which he is undergoing vocational rehabilitation;

"(5) if such individual has attained age sixty-five and is neither blind nor severely disabled, the State agency may disregard not more than the first $60 per month of earned income plus one-half of the remainder thereof; and

"(6) the State agency may, before disregarding any amounts under the preceding paragraphs of this subsection, disregard not more than $7.50 of any income.

For requirement of additional disregarding of income of OASDI recipients in determining need for aid under the plan, see section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969.

"(b) A State plan must also provide that—

"(1) each eligible individual, other than one who is a patient in a medical institution or is receiving institutional services in an intermediate care facility to which section 1121 applies, shall receive financial assistance in such amount as, when added to his income which is not disregarded pursuant to subsection (a), will provide a minimum of $110 per month;

"(2) the standard of need applied for determining eligibility for and amount of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled shall not be lower than (A) the standard applied for this purpose under the State plan (approved under this title) as in effect on the date of enactment of part D of title IV of this Act, or (B) if there was no such plan in effect for such State on such date, the standard of need which was applicable under—

"(i) the State plan which was in effect on such date and was approved under title I, in the case of any individual who is sixty-five years of age or older,

"(ii) the State plan in effect on such date and approved under title X, in the case of an individual who is blind, or

"(iii) the State plan in effect on such date and approved under title XIV, in the case of an individual who is severely disabled, except that if two or more of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are applicable to an individual, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than the higher (or highest) of the standards under the applicable plans, and except that if none of such clauses is applicable to an individual, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than the higher (or highest) of the standards under the State plans approved under titles I, X, and XIV which were in effect on such date; and

"(3) no aid will be furnished to any individual under the State plan for any period with respect to which he is considered a member of a family receiving family assistance benefits under part D of title IV or supplementary payments pursuant to part E thereof, or training allowances under part C thereof, for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits, payments, or allowances (but this paragraph shall not apply to any individual, otherwise considered a member of such a family, if he elects in such manner and form as the Secretary may prescribe not to be considered a member of such a family).

"(c) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1604. From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary shall pay to each State which has a plan approved under this title, for each calendar quarter, an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each month of such quarter as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan—

"(1) 90 per centum of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditures as exceeds the product of $65 multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month; plus

"(2) 25 per centum of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under paragraph (1), not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to such month as exceeds the product of the amount which, as determined by the Secretary, is the maximum permissible level of assistance per person in which the Federal Government will participate financially, multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month.

In the case of any individual in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the maximum permissible level of assistance under paragraph (2) may be lower than in the case of individuals in the other States. For other special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"ALTERNATE PROVISION FOR DIRECT FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO INDIVIDUALS

"SEC. 1605. The Secretary may enter into an agreement with a State under which he will, on behalf of the State, pay aid to the aged, blind, and disabled directly to individuals in the State under the State's plan approved under this title and perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon. In such case payments shall not be made as provided in section 1604 and the agreement shall also provide for payment to the Secretary by the State of its share of such aid (adjusted to reflect the State's share of any overpayments recovered under section 1606).

"OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

"SEC. 1606. Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of payment has been made to any person as a direct Federal payment pursuant to section 1605, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments of the overpaid individual or by recovery from him or his estate or payment to him. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with a view to avoiding penalizing individuals who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this title, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 1607. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under this title, finds—

"(1) that the plan no longer complies with the provisions of sections 1602 and 1603; or

"(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such provision;

the Secretary shall notify such State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State or individuals within the State under this title (or, in his discretion, that payments will be limited to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure), until the Secretary is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no such further payments to the State or individuals in the State under this title (or shall limit payments to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR SERVICES AND ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 1608. (a) If the State plan of a State approved under section 1602 provides that the State agency will make available to applicants for or recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan at least those services to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care which are prescribed by the Secretary, such State shall qualify for payments for services under subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) In the case of any State whose State plan approved under section 1602 meets the requirements of subsection (a), the Secretary shall pay to the State from the sums appropriated therefor an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each quarter, as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan—

"(1) 75 per centum of so much of such expenditures as are for—

"(A) services which are prescribed pursuant to subsection (a) and are provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, or

"(B) other services, specified by the Secretary as likely to prevent or reduce dependency, so provided to the applicants for or recipients of aid, or

"(C) any of the services prescribed pursuant to subsection (a), and any of the services specified in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, which the Secretary may specify as appropriate for individuals who, within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe, have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan, if such services are requested by the individuals and are provided to them in accordance with subsection (c), or

"(D) the training of personnel employed or preparing for employment by the State agency or by the local agency administering the plan in the political subdivision; plus

"(2) one-half of so much of such expenditures (not included under paragraph (1)) as are for services provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan, and to individuals requesting such services who (within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe) have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of such aid; plus

"(3) one-half of the remainder of such expenditures.

"(c) The services referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) shall, except to the extent specified by the Secretary, include only—

"(1) services provided by the staff of the State agency, or the local agency administering the State plan in the political subdivision (but no funds authorized under this title shall be available for services defined as vocational rehabilitation services under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act (A) which are available to individuals in need of them under programs for their rehabilitation carried on under a State plan approved under that Act, or (B) which the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under that Act are able and willing to provide if reimbursed for the cost thereof pursuant to agreement under paragraph (2), if provided by such staff), and

"(2) subject to limitations prescribed by the Secretary, services which in the judgment of the State agency cannot be as economically or as effectively provided by the staff of that State or local agency and are not otherwise reasonably available to individuals in need of them, and which are provided, pursuant to agreement with the State agency, by the State health authority or the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act or by any other State agency which the Secretary may determine to be appropriate (whether provided by its staff or by contract with public (local) or nonprofit private agencies).

Services described in clause (B) of paragraph (1) may be provided only pursuant to agreement with the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act.

"(d) The portion of the amount expended for administration of the State plan to which paragraph (1) of subsection (b) applies and the portion thereof to which paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (b) apply shall be determined in accordance with such methods and procedures as may be permitted by the Secretary.

"(e) In the case of any State whose plan approved under section 1602 does not meet the requirements of subsection (a) of this section, there shall be paid to the State, in lieu of the amount provided for under subsection (b), an amount equal to one-half the total of the sums expended during each quarter as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, including services referred to in subsections (b) and (c) and provided in accordance with the provisions of those subsections.

"(f) In the case of any State whose State plan included a provision meeting the requirements of subsection (a), but with respect to which the Secretary finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the plan, that—

"(1) the provision no longer complies with the requirements of subsection (a), or

"(2) in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with such provision,

the Secretary shall notify the State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State under subsection (b) until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until the Secretary is so satisfied, no such further payments with respect to the administration of and services under the State plan shall be made, but, instead, such payments shall be made, subject to the other provisions of this title, under subsection (e).

"COMPUTATION OF PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 1609. (a) (1) Prior to the beginning of each quarter, the Secretary shall estimate the amount to which a State will be entitled under sections 1604 and 1608 for that quarter, such estimates to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in that quarter in accordance with the provisions of sections 1604 and 1608, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in that quarter, and, if such amount is less than the State's proportionate share of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, and (B) such other investigation as the Secretary may find necessary.

"(2) The Secretary shall then pay in such installments as he may determine, the amount so estimated, reduced or increased to the extent of any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made under this section to the State for any prior quarter and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under this subsection.

"(b) The pro rata share to which the United States is equitably entitled, as determined by the Secretary, of the net amount recovered during any quarter by a State or political subdivision thereof with respect to aid furnished under the State plan, but excluding any amount of such aid recovered from the estate of a deceased recipient which is not in excess of the amount expended by the State or any political subdivision thereof for the funeral expenses of the deceased, shall be considered an overpayment to be adjusted under subsection (a) (2).

"(c) Upon the making of any estimate by the Secretary under this section, any appropriations available for payments under this title shall be deemed obligated.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 1610. For purposes of this title, the term 'aid to the aged, blind, and disabled' means money payments to needy individuals who are 65 years of age or older, are blind, or are severely disabled, but such term does not include—

"(1) any such payments to any individual who is an inmate of a public institution (except as a patient in a medical institution); or

"(2) any such payments to any individual who has not attained 65 years of age and who is a patient in an institution for tuberculosis or mental diseases.

Such term also includes payments which are not included within the meaning of such term under the preceding sentence, but which would be so included except that they are made on behalf of such a needy individual to another individual who (as determined in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary) is interested in or concerned with the welfare of such needy individual, but only with respect to a State whose State plan approved under section 1602 includes provision for—

"(A) determination by the State agency that the needy individual has, by reason of his physical or mental condition, such inability to manage funds that making payments to him would be contrary to his welfare and, therefore, it is necessary to provide such aid through payments described in this sentence;

"(B) making such payments only in cases in which the payment will, under the rules otherwise applicable under the State plan for determining need and the amount of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled to be paid (and in conjunction with other income and resources), meet all the need of the individuals with respect to whom such payments are made;

"(C) undertaking and continuing special efforts to protect the welfare of such individuals and to improve, to the extent possible, his capacity for self-care and to manage funds;

"(D) periodic review by the State agency of the determination under clause (A) to ascertain whether conditions justifying such determination still exist, with provision for termination of the payments if they do not and for seeking judicial appointment of a guardian, or other legal representative, as described in section 1111, if and when it appears that such action will best serve the interests of the needy individual; and

"(E) opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency on the determination referred to in clause (A) for any individual with respect to whom it is made.

Whether an individual is blind or severely disabled shall be determined for purposes of this title in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary."

REPEAL OF TITLES I, X, AND XIV OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

SEC. 202. Titles I, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 301 et seq., 1201 et seq., and 1351 et seq.) are hereby repealed.

ADDITIONAL DISREGARDING OF INCOME OF OASDI RECIPIENTS IN DETERMINING NEED FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SEC. 203. Section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969 is amended by striking out "and before July 1970".

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

SEC. 204. In the case of any State which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this section, any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made to such State under section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603 of such Act with respect to a period before the approval of a plan under title XVI as amended by this Act, and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under subsection (b) of such section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603, shall, for purposes of section 1609 (a) of such Act as herein amended, be considered an overpayment or underpayment (as the case may be) made under title XVI of such Act as herein amended.

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO DEFINITIONS OF BLINDNESS AND DISABILITY

SEC. 205. In the case of any State which has in operation a plan of aid to the blind under title X, aid to the permanently and totally disabled under title XIV, or aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under title XVI, of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this Act, the State plan of such State submitted under title XVI of such Act as amended by this Act shall not be denied approval thereunder, with respect to the period ending with the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after the enactment of this Act, by reason of its failure to include therein a test of disability or blindness different from that included in the State's plan (approved under such title X, XIV or XVI of such Act) as in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 228(d)

SEC. 301. Section 228 (d) (1) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "I, X, XIV, or", and by striking out "part A" and inserting in lieu thereof "receives payments with respect to such month pursuant to part D or E".

TITLE IV—GENERAL

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 401. The amendments and repeals made by this Act shall become effective, and section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950 (25 U.S.C. 639), is repealed effective, on July 1, 1971; except that—

(1) in the case of any State a statute of which (on July 1, 1971) prevents it from making the supplementary payments provided for in part E of title IV of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, and the legislature of which does not meet in a regular session which closes after the enactment of this Act and on or before July 1, 1971, the amendments and repeals made by this Act, and such repeal, shall become effective with respect to individuals in such State on the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which closes after July 1, 1971, or (if earlier than such first July 1 after July 1, 1971) on the first day of the first calendar quarter following the date on which the State certifies it is no longer so prevented from making such payments; and

(2) in the case of any State a statute of which (on July 1, 1971) prevents it from complying with the requirements of section 1602 of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, and the legislature of which does not meet in a regular session which closes after the enactment of this Act and on or before July 1, 1971, the amendments made by title II of this Act shall become effective on the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which closes after July 1, 1971, or (subject to paragraph (1) of this section) on the earlier date on which such State submits a plan meeting the requirements of such section 1602;

and except that section 436 of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, shall be effective upon the enactment of this Act.

SAVING PROVISION

SEC. 402. (a) The Secretary shall pay to any State which has a State plan approved under title XVI of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, and has in effect an agreement under part E of title IV of such Act, for each quarter beginning after June 30, 1971, and prior to July 1, 1973, in addition to the amount payable to such State under such title and such agreement, an amount equal to the excess of—

(1) (A) 70 per centum of the total of those payments for such quarter pursuant to such agreement which are required under sections 451 and 452 of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act), plus (B) the non-Federal share of expenditures for such quarter required under title XVI of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act) as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled (as defined in subsection (b) (1) of this section), over

(2) the non-Federal share of expenditures which would have been made during such quarter as aid or assistance under the plans of the State approved under titles I, IV (part (A)), X, XIV, and XVI had they continued in effect (as defined in subsection (b) (2) of this section).

(b) For purposes of subsection (a)—

(1) the non-Federal share of expenditures for any quarter required under title XVI of the Social Security Act, referred to in clause (B) of subsection (a) (1), means the difference between (A) the total of the expenditures for such quarter under the plan approved under such title as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which would have been included as aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under the plan approved under such title as in effect for June 1971 plus so much of the rest of such expenditures as is required (as determined by the Secretary) by reason of the amendments to such title made by this Act, and (B) the total amounts determined under section 1604 of the Social Security Act for such State with respect to such expenditures for such quarter; and

(2) the non-Federal share of expenditures which would have been made during any quarter under approved State plans, referred to in subsection (a) (2), means the difference between (A) the total of the expenditures which would have been made as aid or assistance (excluding emergency assistance specified in section 406(e) (1) (A) of the Social Security Act and foster care under section 408 thereof) for such quarter under the plans of such State approved under title I, IV (part A), X, XIV, and XVI of such Act and in effect in the month prior to the enactment of this Act if they had continued in effect during such quarter and if they had included (if they did not already do so) payments to dependent children of unemployed fathers authorized by section 407 of the Social Security Act (as in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act), and (B) the total of the amounts which would have been determined under sections 3, 403, 1003, 1403, and 1603, or under section 1118, of the Social Security Act for such State with respect to such expenditures for such quarter.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR PUERTO RICO, THE VIRGIN ISLANDS, AND GUAM

SEC. 403. Section 1108 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) (1) In applying the provisions of sections 442 (a) and (b), 443(b)(2), 1603 (a)(1) and (b)(1), and 1604(1) with respect to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the amounts to be used shall (instead of the $500, $300, and $1,500 in such section 442(a), the $500 and $300 in such section 442(b), the $30 in clauses (A) and (B) of such section 443(b)(2), the $1,500 in such section 1603(a)(1), the $110 in such section 1603(b)(1), and the $65 in section 1604(1)) bear the same ratio to such $500, $300, $1,500, $500, $300, $30, $1,500, $110, and $65 as the per capita incomes of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, respectively, bear to the per capita income of that one of the fifty States which has the lowest per capita income; except that in no case may the amounts so used exceed such $500, $300, $1,500, $500, $300, $30, $1,500, $110, and $65.

"(2)(A) The amounts to be used under such sections in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam shall be promulgated by the Secretary between July 1 and September 30 of each even-numbered year, on the basis of the average per capita income of each State and of the United States for the most recent calendar year for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce. Such promulgation shall be effective for each of the two fiscal years in the period beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation.

"(B) The term 'United States', for purposes of sub-paragraph (A) only, means the fifty States and the District of Columbia.

"(3) If the amounts which would otherwise be promulgated for any fiscal year for any of the three States referred to in paragraph (1) would be lower than the amounts promulgated for such State for the immediately preceding period, the amounts for such fiscal year shall be increased to the extent of the difference; and the amounts so increased shall be the amounts promulgated for such year."

MEANING OF SECRETARY AND FISCAL YEAR

SEC. 404. As used in this Act and in the amendments made by this Act, the term "Secretary" means, unless the context otherwise requires, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and the term "fiscal year" means a period beginning with any July 1 and ending with the close of the following June 30.

Passed the House of Representatives April 16, 1970.

Attest: W. PAT JENNINGS,

Clerk.

91st CONGRESS
2d SESSION

H. R. 16311

AN ACT

To authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes.

APRIL 21, 1970

Under the order of April 20, 1970, received, considered as having been read twice, and referred to the Committee on Finance

FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1970

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 916 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

H. RES. 916

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 16311) to authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes, and any point of order against said bill pursuant to clause 3, Rule XIII, is hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed six hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SMITH), pending which I yield myself 7 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this begins the consideration of one of the most important pieces of legislation which this House will consider during the 91st Congress, because it very specifically represents what I believe to be the breaking of new ground in the field of social legislation, particularly as it pertains to welfare and to those who fall in the category of the poor.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 916 provides a closed rule with 6 hours of general debate for consideration of H.R. 16311, to authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs, and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes. The resolution also waives any point of order against the bill pursuant to clause 3, rule XIII—which, of course, is the Ramseyer rule.

The bill, H.R. 16311, is designed to amend the Social Security Act to provide incentives for employment and training of certain members of needy families, to improve the adult assistance programs and to improve the public assistance programs.

Assistance for more than 2 million families who make up the "working poor" is included in this legislation with the idea of helping them achieve self-sufficiency rather than dependency upon welfare in the future. Training and work opportunities are provided as incentives to millions of families who would otherwise be locked into the welfare system for generations and the Federal Government, under this legislation, would make a contribution toward relieving the financial burden of welfare payments by State governments.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are two main objectives of H.R. 16311. The first is to encourage every dependent family in America to stay together, free from the economic pressures which might split them apart. Second, the bill is intended to convert the existing programs, which in too many situations have encouraged dependency, to an integrated program which will encourage people to become independent and self-supporting through incentives to take training and enter employment.

The Committee on Ways and Means, which reported this legislation, testified that this measure would make major improvements and reforms in the provisions of the Social Security Act relating to the programs which aid needy families with children, including coverage of the working poor; the programs which aid the aged, blind, and disabled; and the programs which provide manpower services, training, employment, and child care to welfare recipients.

It is estimated that in the first year of operation, it will cost the Federal Government $4 billion-plus above the costs required by the various welfare programs now in existence.

In fiscal year 1972 the cost is estimated to be something over $12 billion in addition to what the States will spend.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very controversial and complicated piece of legislation which some claim will change the philosophy of our family assistance program, but it is a bill which has been endorsed by the overwhelming majority of the members of one of the greatest committees in the House. So on that basis, Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of the resolution in order that the Committee on Ways and Means may be permitted to debate this issue and to explain the details of the bill.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. SISK. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I have the usual question: What valid reason is there for bringing this bill before the House under a completely closed rule?

Mr. SISK. I believe the fairest answer I can give my friend from Iowa is that I have no basic argument to make to justify it.

This was a request by the Committee on Ways and Means. I would not assume it was unanimously agreed to by the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, but at least it was a request from the very distinguished chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS), and the distinguished ranking minority member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES), for a closed rule.

Of course, it does deal with a very complex and complicated issue.

I might say, there was a difference of opinion in the Committee on Rules. I found myself in the situation where I felt compelled to vote for a closed rule on this bill.

I am not in a position today to attempt to defend that vote to any great extent, because, I might say to my good friend, in spite of my great respect—and there is no Member of the House I have greater respect for than the gentleman from Arkansas, who I see is now on his feet—I have reservations about this bill, and strong reservations. In fact, to be honest about it, if I had to vote right now I would vote against the passage of this bill.

I am for the rule. I am here supporting the rule. I am supporting the right of the committee to debate the issue. I am terribly concerned about the implications in this bill. I do believe the distinguished members of the committee are entitled to discuss the issues before the House and to debate the merits and the demerits, because theer are two sides to the issue. Then we can vote it up or down.

I might say to my good friend, that is not necessarily an answer to his question, but that is the best I can give him at the moment.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Arkansas for any comment he might wish to make.

Mr. MILLS. On the question raised by my friend from Iowa, it is my information that this bill would be subject to amendment, without the closed rule, not just for the many titles which are involved in the bill itself—and that is a great number—but even for other titles of the Social Security Act.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I yield further to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman does not even talk in terms of a modified closed rule to limit it to the subject matter of the bill, to the titles or sections or anything else.

Is it just simply fashionable? Is it a fashion that cannot be broken? Even mini skirts, apparently, are going to change; they are going to get longer. Even fashions do change.

Is it just fashionable that the Ways and Means Committee comes in with every bill under a closed rule, or almost every bill? Is it because of fashion, or what?

Mr. SISK. Seriously, let me say to my good friend from Iowa, I believe it is a rather complicated bill. There was serious consideration given to a modified rule. It was a proposal made, for a modified rule; that is, a rule which would make in order certain amendments.

The problem we were confronted with, as an example, was that the gentleman from Florida was desirous of offering an amendment having to do with food stamps, and the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURLESON) were interested in making in order a bill which they have which eliminates the so-called guaranteed annual income provision and the working poor.

There were some other proposals. It came down to this situation. Frankly, I can tell my friend from Iowa my position is, if you are going to open it up for one individual or one group to offer amendments, then it is unfair to deny the opportunity to others. So really our decision was finally made that, all right, if you are going to come down here with a wide open rule or a closed rule, then you should make it that for everyone. Generally, Mr. MILLS and Mr. BYRNES and others who discussed it made it pretty evident that in all fairness, for good procedure, we had probably better stick with the closed rule, and that was the decision that was made. Maybe it was a bad judgment, but, at any rate, that was our decision in the committee.

Mr. GROSS. I do not care to pursue this very much further, because obviously, or it seems to me obviously, nothing is going to be done about it and the rule will be adopted, although I think it ought to be defeated and this bill opened up to amendment on the part of Members. The House ought to have an opportunity to work its will on it. The point is we might as well adopt the rule and vote on the bill, because I think we are all reasonably well acquainted with the contents of it. Why waste 6 hours of time debating something that you cannot amend or do anything with? The gentleman from California himself says that as of now he thought he would be prepared to vote against the bill. I feel the same way about it. I do not see much point in wasting 6 hours of time, if it can be called wasted, in listening to it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Let me say quickly that this is a very complex proposition. There are various philosophies involved. There are some innovative things in this bill. I am concerned about possible precedents and the direction in which we are going. I question as to whether or not there has been a case made for work incentives in this bill. I think the facts and arguments and discussions were brought before the Committee on Rules which raised the question as to whether there was work incentive in it. It is my understanding that Mr. MILLS, Mr. BYRNES, and I are concerned about getting a work incentive that will cause people to want to work and go out and improve their economic conditions and support their families. I am concerned that there is not sufficient incentive in this bill to do that. I want to listen, and I hope and urge Members to stay on the floor during the 6 hours of debate, because I think it could be very beneficial. There will be people here raising very important questions on this matter. If I could be convinced that the work incentive is in here to the extent that I know in all sincerity my friend, Mr. MILLS, feels it is in it, then I will support the bill, but I do have grave reservations about it and about the implications and philosophy of having a guaranteed national wage. I have always opposed it, because I think it contrary to our whole philosophy and to the private enterprise system in this country. That is why I am getting a lot of mail against, and I am sure that other Members are, also. It will be a very controversial issue as we go down the road in this discussion of this bill between now and the time when something may be done in connection with enacting a law.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LATTA. As a member of the Committee on Rules, I do not think we should leave the impression stand here that the Committee on Rules was powerless to write a rule that would take care of the objection raised by the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS). We could certainly have written a rule that would have permitted the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LANDRUM) to offer his bill and also one that would have permitted the gentleman from Florida to offer his substitute on the food stamp plan without putting the rest of the bill with the entire social security system in jeopardy. I want that on the RECORD so we do not leave that impression here.

Mr. SISK. Let me say to my good friend from Ohio that I agree with him. There is no question we could have written such a rule as I indicated to my good friend from Iowa. It was a matter of judgment on the part of the Committee on Rules, and the majority of the committee. It was not a unanimous vote by any means.

It was not a unanimous vote by any means.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding. I have only one question for the purpose of information only. Do I understand from House Resolution 916 as written only points of order pursuant to the Ramseyer rule are waived?

Mr. SISK. The gentleman is exactly correct. We waived it only on that point.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, then we will be able, is it fair for me to assume, to make other points of order within other rules of procedures of this House which would stand on their own merits if presented against the bill?

Mr. SISK. The gentleman states it exactly as I understand it.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the gentleman from California for yielding.

This is coming up under a closed rule; is that correct?

Mr. SISK. That is correct.

Mr. GONZALEZ. That is, no one who belongs to this House who is not a member of the Ways and Means Committee or for that matter the Rules Committee will have a chance to really offer anything meaningful in the way of amendments or modifications to the bill as put forth by the committee?

Mr. SISK. The gentleman speaks the facts as I understand them.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Will the gentleman explain to me why?

Mr. SISK. I would rather permit the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) to explain that. This was a request by the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Committee on Rules, after considerable discussion and after several other proposals had been offered, finally voted, in its wisdom, to grant a 6-hour closed rule. It might not have been the proper thing to do, but that is what was done.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I do not mean to put the gentleman as an individual on the spot. This is a very pertinent question. I think every conscientious Member of the House asks himself is there a special attribute that surrounds the Ways and Means Committee, since I am sure other committees would like to get closed rules?

Mr. SISK. No. Let me say, generally I do not think that is true. The facts are that the subject matter with which the Committee on Ways and Means deals covers taxes and social security which are extremely complicated matters. This does not mean that every Member of the House cannot be knowledgeable. But the facts are that it does deal with matters of balance where a minor amendment or what appeared to be a minor amendment in connection with either social security payments or tax law could throw the whole program out of balance. I think it has been generally considered a very difficult situation to attempt to amend or change tax laws or social security laws. These are, of course, the primary subjects with which the Committee on Ways and Means deals They are not covered by this blanket rule.

Let me say that legislation coming from the Committee on Ways and Means is privileged legislation and I am sure my friend from Texas knows that they do not need a rule in order to bring a bill to the floor of the House for consideration. They can bring a bill to the floor any time they are ready, whether the Rules Committee looks at it or not because it is privileged. But the point is that they come to us for a closed rule.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, there are 478 pages in the compilation of the social security laws alone. I do not know but what there are, perhaps, 3,000 or 4,000 social security bills that are pending before the Ways and Means Committee, all of which might be in order under an open rule. There are broad references to this Internal Revenue Code within the Social Security Act itself that could or could not open up the entire Revenue Code.

The purpose of the Committee on Ways and Means in asking for a closed rule, historically on tax matters and social security matters, is to as best we can provide for an orderly procedure for the consideration of the legislation presented before the House. That is the only reason.

The gentleman from California remembers that in the other body they operate without a closed rule.

And I mean to tell you they operate. The last Social Security Act contained better than 500 amendments to the social security bill, and every one of them cost a devil of a lot more than we had in the House-passed bill, and it was the responsibility of the House conferees to take the brunt of the criticism to get those amendments out in the conference.

(Mr. GONZALEZ asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

[Mr. GONZALEZ' remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 12 minutes.

(Mr. SMITH of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to clarify a point of jurisdiction?

Mr. SMITH of California. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, under this rule could the right be denied to a committee if it feels that its jurisdiction has been usurped by the conditions of this bill?

For instance, let me read:

> This bill will contain a new program for manpower training employment services to be administered by the Secretary of Labor through the State employment offices.

Am I right or wrong in that—that that is strictly the jurisdiction of the Committee on Labor?

Mr. SMITH of California. We will get into some discussion on that, I am certain, in the general debate, but I am not going to yield all of my time on this rule. We have 6 hours to discuss this whole matter.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 916, the resolution on the rule, provides for 6 hours of debate with a closed rule except for committee amendments, and waives points of order so far as the Ramseyer Rule is concerned. No one except members of the Committee on Ways and Means—and I would assume that to mean the chairman himself, and probably with the agreement of the ranking minority member—could or would offer an amendment.

It means that none of us who are not on the Committee on Ways and Means, including those of us on the Committee on Rules, can do so. We are apparently not capable of having sufficient information or ability to offer amendments or suggestions to this new program.

The rule was requested by the distinguished chairman, by the distinguished ranking minority member, by the administration and by HEW. There was concern as to the fact that it might open up the entire subject.

Accordingly, the majority of us on the Committee on Rules voted for a closed rule.

One of the arguments was that if the rule is open, or if a special rule is made to open up the so-called guaranteed annual income payments, that they would probably be increased on the floor of the House. One Member testified before the Committee on Rules that he would like to have the rule open so that the amount could be increased, and one individual who was a visitor in the committee the first day during the entire day's session—and who was on television that night—stated that she thought it was a good program, but she thought it was not enough—that they want $5,500 a year to any needy family.

So apparently there is some feeling to increase the amount over and above the $1,600 for a family of four. I believe that after the bill is passed it will start growing a year from then, and from then on the sky will be the limit.

As to the bill itself, according to what the report states, the purpose of H.R. 16311 is to repeal the current jumble of federally assisted welfare programs, and to replace them with a unified program of aid to the Nation's poor.

This new program will provide financial assistance based unpon a formula to be applied nationwide.

Also included is a program of work training for those who require it, and child care, day-care centers to enable mothers to work.

Since 1960 the number of recipients within the welfare system has increased from $2.4 million to about $6.7 million and minor children make up most of this increase.

In this same period costs of the program have tripled to about $7.8 billion.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare estimates that the costs could double in the next 5 years under the present system.

This bill restructures that entire system. It places increased stress on work-training programs and the development of child day-care centers. It requires all of the adult recipients to register at employment centers and accept suitable work; and sets a nationwide scale of assistance payments to all eligible families.

Each family with children whose income is less than the family benefit level—computed at $500 each for the first two members of the family and $300 for each additional member—would be eligible to receive a payment. To qualify to receive such assistance, members of the family must meet the registration for work or training requirements. The amount of payment each family receives will be based on the difference between the family benefit level and the amount of income earned by the family. For example, the family of four with no income would be eligible to receive $1,600—$500 plus $500 plus $300 plus $300.

Every needy family in the Nation would be eligible to receive assistance, but a family with $1,500 or more in resources, excluding its home and household goods and personal effects, would not be eligible for any assistance. Certain types of income would be excluded in determining the total Federal benefit level. Excludible income includes:

First, the first $720 per year of each adult member of the family, plus one-half of the remainder.

Second, food stamps and other public or private charity, including veterans' pensions.

Third, all earnings of a child in school.

Each family member would be required to register for employment or work training with a public employment office. Exceptions to this rule are children under 21 who are in school, those who are ill or disabled, a mother with a child under the age of 6, one who is caring for an ill family member, or whose husband is registered under the program.

Any individual who refuses to register or to accept vocational rehabilitation will not be counted in determining the amount of the family benefit.

The several States will have to supplement the family assistance payments up to the level of their aid for dependent children programs or the poverty level—whichever is lower—in order to be eligible for Federal funds under medicaid and other welfare programs. States will not, however, have to supplement Federal payments to the working poor.

An appeals procedure is provided. Any person who disagrees with any decision relating to his eligibility for, or the amounts of his family assistance payments may obtain a hearing. Any final determination can be reviewed in the local district court, where factual determinations previously made by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be conclusive.

The bill terminates the present work incentive program and creates a new one operated by the Secretary of Labor. Training would be provided all registrants who need it. Concurrently, State welfare agencies would be required to provide health and other benfits to facilitate the participation of individuals in the training program. Federal appropriations are authorized to cover up to 90 percent of the costs of the new training program with the State responsible for the remaining 10 percent. If a State fails to provide its 10 percent, Federal assistance to other welfare programs within such State would be reduced by the amount of the State's deficit. Each person in the training program will receive an allowance of $30 per month for incidental and travel expenses. Funds to cover such costs as transportation and other costs directly connected with the training program can also be paid out by the Secretary of Labor.

Day-care centers for minor children are to be provided. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is authorized to make grants covering up to 100 percent of the costs to public and private nonprofit agencies to assure that such assistance is provided for all training program participants who require it.

The present separate assistance programs for the aged, blind, needy, and disabled are eliminted. In their place, a new combined Federal-State unified program is instituted to cover the same groups of people. Following federally set definitions and qualifications, the State will be required to provide a payment sufficient to bring an individual's total income up to at least $110 per month. No restrictions such as residency or citizenship requirements could be instituted. The Federal Government would pay 90 percent of the first $65 of the average monthly payment, and 25 percent of the remainder, up to the limits set by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. Fifty percent of all State administrative costs would also be paid by the Government.

The effective date is July 1, 1971, with special provisions for States with statutes which prevent them from complying by that date.

The cost of the bill to the Federal Government in its first year of operation is approximately $4.4 billion above the costs required by the present welfare programs. The total Federal outlay in fiscal 1972, the first year of the new program, is estimated to be approximately $12.2 billion with the States expending another $5.5 billion. The cost of the bill is about the same as that proposed by President Nixon. The major change is that the reported bill treats the States differently, and in so doing will reduce the overall State expenditures by some $567,600,000. This results from a change in State matching supplemental payments which help States with higher benefit levels, and the increased minimum income standards which require States with low support levels to increase their fiscal effort.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURLESON), introduced H.R. 16600 on March 23 as a substitute. The Rules Committee did not make that bill in order as a substitute, so the provisions of that bill will not be before the House. It contains much of the language of the present bill, with the exception of certain guaranteed income payments.

It seems to me the idea that is presented in H.R. 16311 has been around here for a number of years. It has been dusted off a little bit and some frosting put on it. It has been introduced as a welfare program. If it had been introduced by the last administration in the form it is in, many Republican Members would have opposed it very bitterly.

Almost everyone agrees that we need some welfare reform, that the present system is not working. But is this welfare reform? I believe it was introduced originally as welfare reform, but I do not think it turned out to be a welfare reform program. In my opinion, it is more of a welfare expansion program.

It has been estimated that the bill would add approximately 15 million people to the welfare rolls of the United States. The California State Department of Social Welfare has not been able to estimate the cost to the State of the welfare program.

Now, some of the problems: I refer you to pages 21 and 22 of the bill, where the conditions are set forth and the exceptions are set forth, and I particularly refer to the question of what is suitable employment. The person has to take suitable employment. What is suitable employment? Who is going to determine what suitable employment is?

Suppose an individual is trained and he is told to take a job 1 mile away. There is no transportation, public or private. He must travel 1 mile each way. He says:

I can't walk that far. I can only walk two miles a day, one mile to work and one mile back.

Would that be suitable employment? And after training, would he then go back on the welfare program? I do not know, and there is no language in the bill that will help definitely to determine that question.

Suppose a person does not like the job to which he is sent. In some plants employees cannot smoke. In plants manufacturing aircraft they have 15-minute breaks twice a day so that employees can go outside to certain areas where they can smoke. Suppose an individual does not like the job. He stays out 22 minutes. His foreman or supervisor says, "Where have you been?" He says, "I took a little extra time."

Suppose he does not like the work and throws a monkey wrench in the machinery and breaks it.

How long are the employers going to have to keep these people there if they do not like the job and think it is not suitable? It seems to me that we must have more definite, more specific language as to what suitable employment is going to be and who is going to enforce it and what we do if the individual who is trained will not take the employment. We have to have more specific language in this bill to tell us what we will do if this employment is not considered suitable.

Take domestics. In my area we cannot get domestic workers. I have some families where the father and mother both are working, one where they have three children, one of whom is semi-handicapped. They cannot get anybody to take the job. The State employment agency does not have anybody. No private employment agencies have. We have tried to get a woman in from Mexico who was willing to come up here. They cannot get certification from the Labor Department. They always place an "x" in the box that says there are plenty of available people. People apparently do not want to be domestic workers.

Are we going to train them for that? Will that be considered suitable employment, if they do not want that employment?

Take the engineers. Some have lost their jobs because of the shortage of contracts. They want jobs but there are not any. What do we do about those people? It seems to me we have to have some jobs available for these engineers who are out of work now.

I have talked to brokerage firms in New York, I talked to the heads of two of them yesterday. They told me that at the present time they are just barely able to keep their heads above water. They said, "ALLEN, why don't you solve a crisis in Washington?" I said, "What crisis do you have in mind?" They said, "Well, solve Vietnam or something, because we cannot keep going as we are."

I think the administration is trying to solve Vietnam, but it is not as easy as that.

I have two plants in my area, two corporations which a year or 2 ago sent in proposals saying that they were willing to train 200 people. This is not on-the-job training. They will have facilities, counselors, and teachers and all that is necessary to determine what work the people can do. They guaranteed they would train 200 people per year and guaranteed them jobs if the Government would simply pay half the cost of the expenses. I could not get a nickle downtown in the last administration or in this one. Yet the two corporations were perfectly willing to spend their own money to do that.

I think we have some problems from that standpoint, and I thought those two fine companies would have interesting pilot programs. They were interested in doing it.

I was talking to some executives the last time I was home, in a plant which is a subsidiary in my district, and they said they are scared to death because there are so many imports coming in they do not know how they can keep going unless conditions get better.

Now, what about the professional poor? There are a million or a million and a half of them. We will not let them starve. We do not believe in that. So if they will not work and they take the program and they register once, what are we then going to do about that?

I only mention these things because it seems to me the bill ought to be more clear. The proponents claim this will create incentives to work and keep families together. I certainly hope so, but I doubt it very much. None of us has a crystal ball. We cannot look into the future. They say, "Let us try the program." But we must keep in mind that we have other programs which are spending money in education, in clean air, water pollution, environmental control, veteran problems, Vietnam, and on and on. This program is going to cost more and more money.

Will we have to increase the debt before June 30? Will we have to have an extension of the surtax? People feel now that they are being taxed to death. If we keep on, they are liable to say, "Throw all the rascals out in Washington and replace the whole Congress."

This starts a Federal means test for the first time. I do not know whether that is good or bad. The facts will be placed into a computer. The answer comes out that the father does not make enough money to support his children. Do we then tell the children that your father is not capable of supporting them? Is that for the good of the children?

It starts a guaranteed income program. I am all for a guaranteed work program, but I am opposed to a guaranteed income program. There will be statements made by Member after Member that we now have a guaranteed annual income which was written into the law some years ago. From a practical standpoint, that may be true with the State programs and the social welfare, and so forth, and maybe there is a certain amount that certain families actually will receive.

But this is the first time to my knowledge that we will actually write into the Federal law that we will guarantee a family a certain amount of money per year depending upon that family. I believe the U.S. Treasury is liable to be opened wide for the first time in our history to pay people a certain amount of money.

I believe that this bill needs more study. I am all for improving the program, as everybody is, but I would hope that the committee would give consideration to further studying this program, to figuring out what suitable work is and who is going to decide it, what it is going to cost, and then come in here, and perhaps have a little better legislation than we will have under a strictly closed rule, if this bill reaches that point.

So far as I am concerned, I intend to vote against the bill in its present form.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI).

(Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, on March 11, I joined with my colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means in reporting H.R. 16311. This bill symbolizes a great step forward in providing a basic level of financial assistance throughout the Nation to needy families with children. In addition, the bill is intended to convert the existing public assistance program from one which results in people remaining in dependency to one which will encourage people to become independent and self-supporting through incentives to take training and enter employment.

Since 1960, the number of recipients receiving aid under AFDC programs has increased from 2.4 million to about 6.7 million. Moreover, the proportion of children receiving assistance has been rapidly increasing—from 30 children per 1,000 in 1955 to about 60 children per 1,000 in 1970. In addition the costs of these programs have more than tripled during the last 10 years—to about $4 billion at present. Estimates made by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare indicate these costs could more than double again during the next 5 years unless action is taken now to deal with the underlying causes of this crushing increase in both costs and numbers of recipients.

It is clear that the type of welfare legislation that has been enacted in recent years has not been very effective in dealing with the massive problems that are plaguing the welfare programs. It is equally clear that a new direction must be taken to handle these problems.

As reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, H.R. 16311 represents just such a new direction for family assistance. It is designed to carry out the committee's intent to reduce dependence on assistance and restore more families to employment and self-reliance. It is my firm belief that this will gradually reverse the present trend of spiraling cost and increasing dependence upon welfare.

Basically, the family assistance plan provides that each family with children under 18—or under 21 if attending school—whose nonexcludable income is less than $500 per year for each of the first two family members and $300 per year for each additional family member, and whose resources—other than those excluded—the home, household goods, personal effects, and so forth, are less than $1,500 would be eligible to receive a family assistance benefit.

Unlike present law, the family assistance plan contained in the bill includes needy families where the father is in the home and fully employed. The bill provides a uniform earnings exemption which is equally applicable to families with male and female heads and well as those who are fully and partially employed.

For purposes of Federal benefits under the family assistance plan, the first $60 a month in earnings would be disregarded plus one-half of the remainder. A family of four would therefore be able to receive some benefits under the program until its income reaches $3,920.

Under the program, a family without other income will receive $500 per year for each of the first two family members, plus $300 per year for each additional family member. These payment rates establish a Federal income maintenance floor which in most States will be increased by required State supplementation for all families except the working poor. The bill provides that each State that was making AFDC payments higher than the new family assistance benefit, would be required to maintain the levels of payments in effect as of January 1, 1970, or, if it is lower, a level corresponding to the poverty level as defined in the bill.

In order to assist the States in making supplementary payments, H.R. 16311 provides that the Federal Government generally would pay a State 30 percent of the amount expended by the State in making such payments each fiscal year, not including any supplementary payments made to the working poor. However, there would be no Federal payment for that part of the supplementary payment which exceeds the difference between the applicable poverty level and the sum of the family assistance payment and any income of the family not disregarded in computing the supplementary payments.

H.R. 16311 also provides much needed assistance to the States in meeting the costs of their public assistance programs. Under present law, in Illinois the costs of family programs of assistance were $158.1 million in 1968. The Federal Government bore $78.9 million of this cost, and the State paid $79.2 million. Under H.R. 16311, for 1968, these total costs would have been $173.6 million. The Federal Government's share would have been $127.4 million and the State's share, $46.2 million. Thus, H.R. 16311 would provide a total increase in assistance to families in Illinois of $15.5 million while decreasing the costs of the program to the State by $33 million.

I am also pleased that the Committee on Ways and Means included in H.R. 16311 significant improvements in the programs which assist the aged, blind, and disabled. The bill provides for combining the present categories for assistance to these groups into one combined adult assistance program and for uniform requirements for all States for eligibility factors such as the level and type of resources allowed and degree of disability or blindness.

More importantly, under H.R. 16311, States must assure that each aged, blind, or disabled adult will receive assistance sufficient to bring his total income up to $110 a month. In addition, incentives are provided for the States to enter into agreements for Federal administration of the combined program and a simplified Federal matching formula which will result in generally more favorable Federal participation in the cost of the payments. For instance, in my home State of Illinois, the difference between existing law and H.R. 16311 for the year 1968 would result in a savings of $6.7 million for Illinois and an increase in expenditures by the Federal Government of $11.5 million. The increase in payments of assistance under the adult categories in Illinois would be $4.8 million.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, I would like to state my strong support of this bill and urge the House to take prompt action on its approval. Overall, the bill will provide equitable treatment of working poor families; reduction in financial incentives for family breakup; reduction of variations in payment levels among the States through the introduction of a Federal floor for family assistance payments; establishment of a strengthened manpower training program; and improvements in the level of help and effectiveness of the adult assistance programs.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LANDRUM).

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Speaker, I find myself today in a most awkward position, yet awkward as it is I am not uncomfortable.

It is awkward for me to find myself in opposition to the distinguished chairman of my committee, and one of the most distinguished men of the Congress.

It is likewise awkward to find myself opposing the distinguished minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES).

But, as I said, it is not uncomfortable. If such an incongruity as that statement implies appears to be impossible of acceptance, then allow me to ask the Members to study carefully during the next 6 hours of debate and discussion on this floor the incongruities in this piece of legislation, and what I just said will seem as compatible as a newly married couple.

In reflecting upon the provisions of this legislation and what I see in it for the future of this country, if the legislation becomes law, there comes to my mind the opening lines of Charles Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities." I hope the Members will indulge me if I recall those opening lines.

It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of light, it was the season of darkness, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to heaven, we were all going direct the other way—in short, the period was so far like the present period, that some of its noisiest authorities insisted on its being received, for good or for evil, in the superlative degree of comparison only.

Now, in this bill we have some of the very best things. No Member of this House, and certainly no member of the Committee on Ways and Means who heard the testimony, can disagree with the fact that we need reform in all of our welfare programs and in our welfare legislation. But, in its entirety the bill is not really reform but revolutionary change that ought to be subjected to amendments which this rule precludes.

And, when you study carefully the innovations in this bill to bring about that reform, I think we must, of necessity, come to the conclusion that some of the worst things ever proposed to this Congress are contained in it, and one of them is a guaranteed annual income.

Make no mistake about it, ladies and gentlemen—make no mistake about it—you vote this legislation into law and you go down the road of no return, because you have guaranteed an income out of public funds to people employed and to people unemployed. To me that is not the age of wisdom; that is the age of foolishness; that is the age of recklessness.

To think that I must confront such a proposition with my responsibility as a Member of this body and report to my constituents that I am foreclosed from offering an amendment in the House of Representatives to give this body a chance to vote on it, I have to say, as Dickens said, "This is the age of despair." That is because I cannot offer an amendment here under this rule to take out this objectionable feature of the guaranteed income. I have to swallow it if I want to vote for the improvements that are in this bill for aid to dependent children, for the aged, for the blind, and for the unfortunate of this country. So I despair to have to come here today and admit to myself that we are foreclosed by the leadership of this House and the leadership of this committee by the demand for a closed rule.

Incidentally, I was not a part of that request for a closed rule. I voiced my objections to it, as the chairman will recall, when the request was made in the committee.

The leadership of this House says, bring this on under a closed rule. Now, what is wrong with any Representative in this House facing up to an amendment that affects the course of welfare legislation of this country and changes the fundamental structure of our Nation more than any other single piece of legislation in the 18 years that I have been a Member of Congress?

What does a guaranteed income promise? Let us take two workingmen, two wage earners, working side by side, with equal skills, drawing the same identical wage. We will just use $2 an hour as an example. One, being rather prolific himself and perhaps having a prolific mate, has a large family, let us say five or six.

And the other, not being so inclined or so constructed, has probably one or two. Yet, the one with the large family will draw from the Federal Government, just like the employees of the Federal Government, a check every month to supplement his income to bring him up to the level of income the Government says a family of his size should have. And, mind you, it will come from the wages of the man working alongside him simply because the man working alongside him chose to have a family of smaller proportions and does not receive from his Government a subsidy payment. But he pays his tax.

You cannot deny that, gentlemen. The leadership of this House cannot deny it, if they have studied this bill. My distinguished friends in the Committee of Ways and Means with their great capacity as legislators and as statesmen cannot deny it because they know it is here.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I cannot offer an amendment designed to stop provisions in the bill which will add literally hundreds of thousands of employees to the employment rolls of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Why?

Mr. Speaker, we now have about 2 million people on the welfare rolls as I understand it—perhaps, a little less—but we are with this bill about to add 15 million as a minimum estimate, but as a maximum estimate in my judgment between 25 million and 30 million. And to administer the law for all these new welfare recipients literally thousands of new employees will be required. We are going to be saying in law as the distinguished gentleman from California said awhile ago, "Listen, fellow, your daddy is working; your daddy has got five children; you have got four brothers and sisters; your daddy has got a wife and there are seven in your family." In other words, he is working and he is making $6,120. To my way of thinking that fellow has a pretty substantial pride in his family relationship and in his accomplishments. He is not going to be able to furnish each one of those children two pairs of shoes all the time, the best cuts of meat all the time, two suits and he is not going to ride in Cadillacs, even though it might be a "welfare Cadillac." But his children have pride in the fact that their father is making them a living. Yet, we are coming in here on page 28 of this bill and saying to that man because he makes less than $6,120 and has that many children, he is in poverty. And, we are saying to those children, "Your daddy is in poverty. Your Government is going to keep you up."

Mr. Speaker, by doing this we will destroy the motivation of that child, we will destroy the incentive of that man to improve his skill. Further, we are proposing a statute, that does something we have never done before by telling a workingman—not a loafing man—telling a man working that because you make less than so much you are in poverty and the Government is going to take public money and pay you a subsidy.

That will require great sums of money. New revenue must be found. Surtaxes will be added and increased—not reduced or eliminated as now planned. Budget deficits will grow—not decline and all because we take the tragic step proposed in this bill of guaranteeing to a man—whether or not he works—annual income equal to a figure the Government decides he should have.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Speaker, this bill puts the benefits in this order: Cash, food, and work. So long as we keep the priorities in that order, gentlemen, we are going to be faced with the welfare recipient saying, "No; I am not going to work because I have already got that cash and I have also got my food."

Now, if you turn it around the other way and put work first and cash last, then we will get along the road that seems to me more American.

Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to tax every man and woman in this country for what is necessary to take care of the aged and to take care of the unfortunates and to take care of those who cannot take care of themselves. But I am unwilling to levy a single copper of tax in America to take care of any person who simply will not work. And, that is exactly what you are doing with this bill.

Mr. Speaker, if I had the opportunity to amend it, I would take that out and vote for the other, but not having that chance to, I must say to my distinguished chairman and my distinguished friend from Wisconsin and my friends in the House, despite my concern for the training programs that are provided for in this bill, as well as other fine programs, I will have to oppose this bill because in my view we are going down the road of no return.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield briefly to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. LANDGREBE).

(Mr. LANDGREBE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANDGREBE. Mr. Speaker, there has been no discussion at all on how the Supreme Court's March 23 ruling on welfare is going to affect this program.

Briefly stated, the High Court ruled that it is unconstitutional for States and cities to stop welfare payments until they give recipients a chance to defend their rights to the benefits.

The Court ruled that a welfare recipient is entitled to a hearing before his payments are cut off and the hearing must include these four features:

First. The needy person must be heard in person. A written statement on his behalf is no longer good enough.

Second. The recipient must be allowed the opportunity to confront and to question any witnesses who say that he is ineligible.

Third. If the recipient wishes, he may have a lawyer at the hearing but this is not required.

Fourth. The official deciding eligibility must write out the reasons why he made his decision and cite evidence he relied upon.

Now, what does this ruling have to do with FAP The answer is: No one is sure.

We do know that under the family assistance program, a person receiving payments has his allotment scaled down as he makes more money. As for the so-called working poor, the same is true with a definite cutoff point at a certain level beyond which no more FAP money is given the recipient. What the Supreme Court ruling has at least made a possibility is that FAP recipients can now demand a full evidentiary hearing if the Government either cuts off or scales down their welfare payment.

Chief Justice Warren Burger alluded to this possibility in his dissent in the case when he said:

> Aside from the administrative morass which today's decision could well create, the Court should also be cognizant of the legal precedent it may be setting. The majority holding raises intriguing possibilities concerning the right to a hearing at other stages in the welfare process which effect the total sum of assistance, even though the action taken might fall short of complete termination. For example, does the Court's holding embrace welfare reductions or the denial of increases as opposed to terminations, or decision concerning initial applications or requests of special assistance. The Court supplies to distinguishable considerations and leaves these crucial questions unanswered.

In a footnote to his dissent, Chief Justice Burger noted that Los Angeles County alone employs 12,500 welfare workers to process grants to 500,000 people under various welfare programs. He said:

> The record does not reveal how many more employees will be required to give this newly discovered "due process" to every welfare recipient whose payments are terminated for fraud or other factors of ineligibility or those whose initial applications are denied.

But the outlook is not good.

Ohio State Welfare Director Denver White says the Court ruling is, quote, "terrible."

> It is going to cause a taxpayers revolt. Now we must have more scrutiny of anyone applying for welfare. Last month, we closed 3,000 cases . . . now we would have to have hearings on all of these . . . and that's 36,000 cases a year.

The New York Post the day after the Court ruling, reported that because of it New York State welfare officials may face the possibility of a huge administrative logjam because up until now they have given welfare recipients only a chance to reply in writing to contest their payment termination.

An additional danger of this Court ruling is that it will give welfare rights militants such as George Wiley, head of the National Welfare Rights Organization, a powerful new legal tool to combat and harass Government efforts to enforce welfare work requirements.

With FAP adding some 15 million additional individuals to the welfare rolls, the opportunity will now be greatly enhanced for militant welfare organizers to bog down the system by simply demanding hearings on every welfare termination, reduction, or denied application.

And there should be no doubt as to the way these groups feel about welfare work requirements. George Wiley was quoted recently in the Philadelphia Inquirer as saying:

> We're going to fight against forcing people to work in order to get welfare. We're prepared to beat it in the streets. We're prepared to refuse to take jobs that are given us.

The goal of the welfare militants, Mr. Chairman, has always been to break down the present welfare system and substitute in its place a guaranteed annual income. As long ago as June of 1966, Joseph Loftus reported in the New York Times:

Activists who are impatient with the Johnson antipoverty campaign are firing up a campaign of their own. The objective, simply stated, is a guaranteed, Federerally financed annual income. The strategy of the activists is to demand welfare payments for all who qualify . . . to . . . double the welfare rolls, and impel the politicians to accept a guaranteed income as a solution.

In short, the latest Supreme Court ruling on welfare coupled with the family assistance program, could open a Pandora's box of hundreds of thousands of frivolously requested welfare hearings which, in turn, could lead to a complete and total breakdown of the present welfare system.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON).

(Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule that would make in order the Family Assistance Act of 1970.

Most of the time thus far consumed under the rule has been spent I think in attacking the provisions of this legislation. I was not privileged to be a Member of this body back in 1935 when we adopted social security legislation. I feel quite sure that many of the fears and trepidations that assailed the Members of Congress at that time about the wisdom of embarking on so sweeping and far-reaching and novel a program as that, that many of those same doubts exist in this Chamber today.

Yet, I want to say that I think this afternoon of that night when I listened to the President of the United States in August of 1968 when he unveiled his idea of a new federalism, something that would refurbish and restore new strength and vigor to the institutions of this country.

At that time he spoke of the keystone in that arch as the reform of the welfare program. And those of you who believe in the federal system, if you want to nourish and reinvigorate the roots of federalism in this country, cannot ignore the problem that we face with respect to the welfare system in our country today.

I am not going to discuss the substantive details of that legislation. Let me in this time pay tribute to the distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking minority member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) who for three days sat patiently before the Committee on Rules and gave us ample evidence of their complete expertise in this area. And I would hope our time this afternoon and tomorrow will not be wasted in 6 hours of debate in listening to those gentlemen and the rationale that they give you in support of this program. But I would suggest that if we really want to do something to reform this program we have to take a close look at this program, because really what it is is synergistic—I think that is the word—in its effect: That is, the sum total of this legislation, the impact that it can have on this country, is much greater than simply the sum total of the various parts.

That is precisely why the Committee on Rules gave a closed rule; not merely because of precedent, because there is ample precedent to do that, not simply because of the complexity of the legislation with which we deal, although it is complex, but because I think we ought to take the bit between our teeth and vote this bill up or down one way or another.

If we accept the premise that I do, that it can lead to real reform in this country, to the basic institutions in our country, then we ought to be proud to cast our vote for this legislation.

With respect to what my distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LANDRUM) has said, "We are going to be levying a tax, we are going to load the already overburdened taxpayer of this country still more, and tax him for those who simply will not work." Well, if I can understand the very clear and concise English with which the chairman and the ranking minority Member spoke, that is just not so; because if a man wants to qualify for this program, under this legislation he is going to be registered, he is going to be willing to work, he is going to be willing to take training, and he is going to be willing to do all of those things to qualify for a single penny, and I would submit we are not taxing——

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman if I have time.

Let me suggest in the very few minutes remaining that I have that it would be utterly illusory this afternoon to assume that our job is done when we pass this legislation.

I would again salute the members of the Committee on Ways and Means for their complete candor in discussing this legislation with us when they said they could not give us any guarantee that it is going to work perfectly. I would indeed suppose that we will have to come back many times with amendments to this legislation perhaps in the light of experience and in the light of what we are able to do under this bill, and provide more training slots, make it easier for people to get the kind of training that will qualify them for the job market.

But it is a beginning. It is more than just a small beginning. It is a very large step in the direction that we want to go.

I talked to the Illinois director of public aid the other day when he was in Washington, and he said that next year in his State they are going to spend $856 million just on public aid, an increase of $186 million in 1 year alone. And he said more than half of the 18 percent increase in the public assistance rolls of Illinois, more than half of the people who were going to be added to those rolls, are going to be fathers who have deserted their families. And if there is one thing——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman yield me additional time?

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker I yield 30 additional seconds to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing that impresses me about this bill it is the fact that the basic thrust is to try to hold that family together, to keep the father from deserting his wife and children, and to preserve the very basic unit of American society.

For that reason alone—for that reason alone I think we will make history, and the right kind of history, if we adopt this legislation today.

I strongly feel that the administration's plan is the only sound and viable alternative to the colossal welfare mess which now exists. I do not think there is anyone in this Chamber who would defend the existing welfare system; there is general agreement among people of all political and ideological persuasions that it has been an enormous failure and that it is in drastic need of a complete overhaul.

The merit of a welfare system can be determined by the extent to which it helps those who are unable to help themselves and promotes eventual self-reliance and independence among those who are able to help themselves. Existing welfare schemes have failed the recipient on both counts: they have failed to adequately meet the needs of the permanently dependent and have also failed to elevate the potentially independent. In the decade of the sixties welfare costs doubled and the welfare rolls have swollen from 5.8 million to 10 million people. If nothing is done to change the present aid to dependent children program—AFDC—it is estimated that by 1975 its total cost will soar from today's $4.3 billion to $12 billion, and the poor will be just as entrenched and dependent as ever before, only in greater numbers. This can hardly be termed genuine and effective welfare; it is institutionalized poverty. President Nixon described this monumental mess best in his August 11, 1969, welfare message:

The present welfare system has failed us—it has fostered family breakup, has provided very little help in many States and has even deepened dependency by all-too-often making it more attractive to go on welfare than to go to work.

The bill before us today provides for a comprehensive reform of the welfare system and goes to the very heart of the glaring deficiencies and failures of present programs. President Nixon has characterized the family assistance plan as, "a new approach that will make it more attractive to go to work than to go on welfare, and will establish a nationwide minimum payment to dependent families with children." Again, to quote the President:

This would be total welfare reform—the transformation of a system frozen in failure and frustration into a system that would work and would encourage people to work.

Let me explain briefly how the family assistance plan would work and how it would encourage people to work. The family assistance plan would replace AFDC programs and would establish a basic income for all parents who cannot adequately support their families. For example, the Federal payment to a family of four with no more than $720 annual income would be $1,600. FAP payments would be uniform throughout the Nation and thus eliminate the gross disparities and inequities which exist in different States under present programs. As a family's income increases, it would continue to receive Federal income supplements in reduced amounts until the family has climbed above the poverty line. For example, that same family of four with an annual income of $2,000 would receive a supplementary payment of $960.

Another provision in FAP would require States having AFDC payment levels—as of January, 1970—which are higher than family assistance levels to supplement the family assistance level up to that level or the poverty level, whichever is lower, in order to continue eligibility under medicaid and other welfare programs. Federal matching funds for the State supplement would be available at a rate of 30 percent, except for the working poor. The State would not be required to supplement payments to the working poor.

For example, in my own State of Illinois, current AFDC payments to a family of four—one parent and three children—are $3,228. Under the FAP formula, a family of four with $2,000 annual income would receive a $960 Federal supplement and a $1,415 State supplement provided that the family is classified as nonworking poor, that is, a family in which no member worked over 30 hours a week. The total supplemented income of that family would be $4,375 per year.

So, to those who claim that the $1,600 Federal floor is too low a minimum benefit, I would like to point out that welfare recipients in 42 of our 50 States will also be receiving these State supplementary payments; and, in addition, families will also be eligible for Federal food stamps. So, our family of four having no income would not only receive a $1,600 annual Federal payment, and in most cases a State supplement, but $864 per year in food stamps as well.

Now let me move on to what I consider to be the real heart of this welfare reform proposal, the work requirements and the work incentives. As I pointed out previously, under the present welfare system, there is little or no incentive for a welfare family to become a workfare family. In my own State of Illinois a survey has demonstrated that while a large percentage of the mothers on welfare would like to work and would much prefer to work, they are disinclined to do so because they are getting a much better deal financially on welfare than they would in taking a job and thereby forfeiting welfare benefits.

The family assistance plan contains a requirement to register for work and strong incentives to accept training and employment. If a person fails to register for work, he will not receive the benefits; and if he refuses a suitable job or training, his benefits will be canceled. Only carefully defined groups would be exempted from the registration requirement. I know that some critics of FAP claim that the work incentive approach will not work and they cite the WIN program as an example. I think it is important at this point to say why certain WIN programs were less than successful, and to show how the FAP approach will avoid these pitfalls. Under the WIN program, a great deal of discretionary power was put in the hands of State social workers to define who was appropriate for referral to manpower training programs and employment. In the words of Jerome M. Rosow, the Assistant Secretary of Labor for policy:

> Many state welfare agencies circumvented the intent of the law by refusing to refer clients to the manpower program, or referred such small numbers as to seriously hamper training efforts to reduce the welfare rolls.

Because of the wide latitude in discretionary powers left to State welfare agencies, we find great disparities in the percentage of AFDC adults deemed appropriate for referral from State to State. In our two largest States, for example, New York and California, this point is borne out. In New York, where there were 703,000 potentially eligible people on AFDC, only 6.9 percent were deemed appropriate for referral. In California, on the other hand, where there were 200,000 potentially eligible people on AFDC, 35.8 percent were deemed appropriate for referral. And looking at one of our smaller States, Nebraska, where there were 52 potentially eligible people on AFDC, 100 percent were deemed appropriate for referral to manpower training.

The family assistance plan would strengthen the work requirement now in effect under WIN by completely eliminating these wide discretionary powers of referral. Instead, a new Federal agency would determine who is to register, and the guidelines on exemption would be explicit rather than discretionary and would be strictly enforced. Once a person has registered with the Employment Service, an individual employability plan would be worked out specifying what steps are necessary to insure permanent attachment to the labor force. And a team of specialists would be responsible for the follow-through on that plan. Job placement would be followed by the necessary coaching designed to prevent a high rate of job dropouts.

As I mentioned earlier, the family assistance plan couples work requirements with work incentives. The strongest work incentives, of course, are the natural market benefits which accrue to a wage earner. But there are other incentives built into the plan. These include the following:

First, there would be no reduction in benefits for the first $720 in earnings. This is double the present earning disregards.

Second, States would be required under Federal law to disregard earnings in computing benefits. The present system operating in 23 States for unemployed fathers still taxes 100 percent of income. Under FAP the incentive to work would not be choked off by this procedure since fathers would receive the same treatment on retention of earnings as mothers now on welfare.

Third, two new factors would increase the incentive to enter training programs. First, the amount of extra training bonus has been raised; and secondly, the manpower agency would reimburse trainees for the cost of attending training programs, such as transportation, clothes, and supplies.

Fourth, the family assistance plan provides for child care which will make training and employment possible for a large number of mothers. An additional 450,000 child care opportunities would be available in the first year.

And finally, the family assistance plan provides for additional training slots for welfare recipients—an additional 250,000 slots in the first year.

Let me turn now to a controversial feature of the family assistance plan, the inclusion of the working poor. I realize that there are some who object to this on the grounds that we would be adding another 10 million people to the welfare rolls. And yet, it is my firm conviction that the inclusion of the working poor is the real key to the success of FAP. Let me quote from a question answer sheet issued jointly by the Departments of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare:

> By providing help for the first time to fathers who work full time but for poverty wages, we reverse the present policy of penalizing work and rewarding non-work. No longer will a man have to quit his job or leave his family in order for his family to receive assistance. Rather, we offer a boost to the man who is already trying to climb toward ultimate independence and self-reliance.

Mr. Speaker, earlier I pointed out that one of the two criteria of an effective and successful welfare program is the extent to which we help those who are able to help themselves climb out of poverty. By assisting the working poor we would be rewarding rather than penalizing work and providing a ladder to enable the working poor to climb out of poverty.

I totally reject the argument that including the working poor under family assistance will create a new and permanent breed of welfare recipient. To quote again from Jerome M. Rosow:

> One fact to bear in mind about the working poor is that they are not likely to become long-term recipients of assistance payments. Because of rising wage scales due to increased productivity, about 200,000 of the working poor rise above the poverty line every year. Upgrading efforts on the part of the manpower agency will increase this movement to self-sufficiency.

Finally, in connection with the workfare approach, let me address myself to what some critics call the myth of employability among the welfare population. These critics contend that very few welfare recipients are either capable or willing to take employment. Allow me to explode that myth by citing a recent study done by the Department of Labor in collaboration with the Urban Institute. That study concludes that, of those adults who would be covered by the Family Assistance Plan, 3.2 million or 47 percent of the adults covered could be made employable. The study goes on to point out that of the 1.4 million male family heads classified as employable, only an estimated 30,000 have done no work at all during a 12-month period. And even among the female family heads, some 60 percent have work experience during part of the year. In the words of Jerome Rosow:

The employment goals of the Family Assistance Plan are neither unreasonable or unobtainable.

To make these work goals a complete success, it is obvious that we must rely heavily on the private sector to play its part. There is already substantial evidence that the private sector is willing and able to play such a social role. The JOBS program of the National Alliance of Businessmen is one such example of the way in which business and government can work together to satisfy manpower needs. We will soon be considering the administration's Comprehensive Manpower Training Act which is aimed at consolidating and improving Federal training programs and eventually turning them over to States and localities. I am proud to be a cosponsor of the Comprehensive Headstart Child Development Act of 1970 which would further expand child care opportunities which are so important to the working mother. All these programs and services will certainly complement what we are trying to accomplish under the family assistance plan which is a transition and transformation from welfare to workfare.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that if we do not come to grips with this problem now by adopting this comprehensive reform of our welfare system, the next time around we may be so helplessly and hopelessly bogged down in this welfare mire that we will be unable to take even one step in the direction of reform, and we will be guilty of assigning millions of Americans to a permanent state of poverty and dependency.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA).

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, let me say that I am opposed to a closed rule on this bill. I voted against a closed rule in the Committee on Rules and there were several other members on our committee who voted likewise, and for a modified open rule. I favor a modified open rule. I think it is pretty well known that the very able chairman of our committee favored a modified rule so that the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LANDRUM) might have had the opportunity to submit his bill as a substitute. I do not think Members of this House should be precluded from amending such an important piece of legislation. They would have no opportunity to do so under a closed rule and would have only one vote—for or against the bill as reported by the Ways and Means Committee.

By voting for a modified open rule, we would not be opening up the complete Social Security Act for amendment as has been suggested.

I happen to believe that Members of this House should have the same opportunity to amend this bill as Members of the Senate will have when the matter is considered on the Senate floor. They will not be debating this bill under a closed rule and we should not be doing so in the House.

Mr. Speaker, there is a way left which will give us an opportunity to amend it on the floor. Vote down the previous question and then the issue will be opened up giving us an opportunity to amend this bill. I would urge that this be done.

Let me say, we have heard a lot on our side of the aisle that this is an administrative bill. Let me say, I do not take a back seat to anyone in my support of the President of the United States. I am one of those who supported him long before Miami, and I will support him long after this bill passes.

Let me say, this guaranteed income idea was not conceived in this administration. It has been kicked around by the ADA for many years. The only real difference being that they want to start at a much higher figure.

Back in 1966, if you please, a Presidential commission under President Johnson recommended a $3,000 guaranteed annual income. It got exactly nowhere.

So what do we have here today? We have a guaranteed annual income being presented to us under a different name—the family assistance plan. You are going to have to register for work and for training. This is a joke when one reads the section dealing with employment and then looks at the past record on retraining.

It was pointed out before the Committee on Rules, that it had only 81,000 in training or retraining last year—a mere drop in the ocean of need, if you please.

Let us not kid ourselves. Let us not kid the American people that Government is going to train or retrain the millions of people who will come under this program. Also, let us not kid ourselves or the American people that you are going to get these people all working under the terms of this bill because you have seven—mark this—seven escape hatches on page 21 and page 22.

If you will turn with me to page 21, let me read them to you. They do not have to go to work unless it is suitable employment. Look for a minute at this matter of suitability, on line 21 of page 21:

In determining whether any employment is suitable for an individual for purposes of subsection (a) and part C, the Secretary of Labor shall consider—

(1) The degree of risk to such individual's health and safety.

(2) His physical fitness for the work.

(3) His prior training and experience.

(4) His prior earnings.

(5) The length of his unemployment.

(6) His realistic prospects for obtaining work based on his potential and the availability of training opportunities.

(7) The distance of the available work from his residence.

If that is not enough—let us look at subsection (2), if you please, which says:

In no event shall any employment be considered suitable for an individual—

"(A) if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lockout, or other labor dispute;

"(B) if the wages, hours, or other terms or conditions of the work offered are contrary to or less than those prescribed by Federal, State, or local law or are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality; or

"(C) if, as a condition of being employed, the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization.

And I stress "company union"—it says nothing about joining an international union. Why require a person to join an international union as a matter of law? What about our right-to-work States, if you please? What does this language do to those States? Why, if a man in a bona fide way is referred for work in a plant having an international union and says, "I haven't ever joined a union. It is against my conscience," should he be precluded from benefits by such language?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. LATTA. I appreciate my friends yielding me this time.

Let me say there are many provisions in this bill which will require more than 6 hours debate time to explain. We have heard about the goodies in this bill for the benefit of those not working. We have not heard anything about the burdens the taxpayers of this Nation—the little people the gentleman from Georgia talked about—are going to have to carry to pay the cost of such a program. We have not heard—nor will we hear at present—anything about the taxes which will have to be collected to support the 15 million additional people this bill will put on welfare.

We have a lot of proud people, hard-working people, in the Fifth Congressional District of Ohio who will never—never ask for a dime under this bill, but are earning less than $6,000 a year, with the requisite number of children placing them in the poverty classification under this bill. Nevertheless, these individuals will have to dig deeper into their pockets to pay this bill.

In conclusion, let me say that as I listened to the testimony before the Rules Committee and heard all about the goodies in this bill and what the Government ought to do I could not help but be reminded of a statement by the late President John F. Kennedy:

Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country.

I fear not only what this bill could do to the country but what it could do to the incentive of a great many people to better their economic status in life on their own initiative and through their own labors.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. DENNIS) the remainder of my time.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

(Mr. DENNIS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule. I do it reluctantly, but I do it because I believe with the poet that "to sit in silence when you should protest makes cowards out of men," and this is such an occasion. We are being asked here today, Mr. Speaker, to adopt one of the most far-reaching measures we have ever been asked to adopt in this House. It is a measure which provides a direct subsidy out of the Federal Treasury for every poor family in the Nation. It is a measure which extends Federal relief for the first time to the working poor. It is a measure which abolishes and abandons the philosophy of welfare as an emergency relief, and enshrines it as a fundamental American right.

It is a measure which starts welfare reform by doubling the welfare rolls, and it is a measure which, to a large extent, if not completely, adopts the principle of the guaranteed annual income.

Now, I am not prepared to adopt a measure as sweeping as this without a lot more public consideration and debate than it has yet had, and I am not prepared to do it without a fair opportunity to debate it and amend it in this body. We are being asked to adopt a measure of this sweeping and fundamental character under a closed rule, with no possibility of being usefully heard or of changing a single thing on the floor. In my short time here I have conceived a great affection for this body and its Members and its procedures; but I tell you, we like to say we are the greatest deliberative body in the world, but when we come to consider a measure of this kind without any meaningful deliberation and without any opportunity to engage in debate which will lead to any significant action, we do not deserve the name of a deliberative body. To treat us like this is to denigrate the office of U.S. Representative. The procedure offends me.

It makes a rubberstamp out of Representatives. What are we here for if we cannot usefully debate a measure of this magnitude and consider it on its merits, but just have to take it as it is and vote it up or down?

I submit to the Members, in all good humor, that to take up a measure of this character and of this importance under a closed rule is practically to treat the Members of this honorable body as the idiot children of the whole political process. I do not think we ought to do it. I think we ought to debate this here with some chance to take some action if we want to.

Maybe—maybe if we did that, somebody could persuade me that this measure was entitled to my support. They cannot do it under this procedure. I intend to vote no. I hope Members will vote down the rule.

Mr. SCHADEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I am totally opposed to a closed rule on H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970. It is my firm opinion that any legislation as far reaching as this bill is, if passed or rejected, must reflect the will of the majority of the Members of the House and not merely the majority of one of its constituted committees.

Unless the House of Representatives is given the opportunity to clarify certain language in the bill; unless we can be assured that there are no other alternatives to correcting the ovehwhelming inconsistencies and failures of the present welfare system than this massive program which would add 15 million Americans to the present welfare load; and unless we have the opportunity to make constructive amendments that could prevent this Nation from galloping down the road to a guaranteed annual income, I cannot either in conscience, or in the best interests of my hard working, tax paying constituents, vote for the final passage of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I was a cosponsor of the original family assistance legislation. On two separate occasions I requested the assistance of my entire constituency in corresponding with me on the matter of welfare reform. I received several hundred informative letters. I made special efforts to meet with groups and organizations, both private and government, in order to give them the opportunity to make recommendations which would strengthen the bill and work out problem areas in welfare programs.

I corresponded and met with members of the Wisconsin Legislature in order to find out how various proposals would affect the State's programs and the State's financial obligations. I have been looking forward to the opportunity when I, as a Member of the House of Representatives, could represent these views in open debate on welfare reform legislation.

The closed rule on the Family Assistance Act of 1970 will preclude me from adequately representing the many people I have contacted, whose expressions have been made on the assumption that they could be brought to the House to be incorporated into Federal legislation. Instead of an open rule, under which I, and other Members of the House not on the Ways and Means Committee, could express the will of the people of the Nation, who will be required to pay for and comply with welfare reform proposals, the closed rule insures that the will of a majority of a committee must either be accepted or rejected.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot see the wisdom or the justice in denying the entire membership of the House of Representatives the privilege of improving this bill. When this legislation comes before the other body of Congress, its Members will be permitted to work their will. This will leave us with only two alternatives when the conference report comes before us for consideration: First, to accept the Senate version of a bill we in the House were not permitted to improve; and second, to vote against any possible improvement of a welfare system we all know is in need of correction.

If the House accepts a closed rule, I will be forced to vote against the passage of the bill. My constituents, who have expressed overwhelming support for responsible welfare reform, have in the past received my assurances that I would work for reform. I regret to say that the irresponsibility of a closed rule precludes me from doing just that. The entire membership of the House of Representatives will have been denied the constitutional obligation of contributing our will and that of the people who have elected us to legislate in the most responsible manner possible.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote against the rule under which the House will consider H.R. 16311. My principle reason for this is because the rule is a closed rule, and no amendments whatsoever can be offered from the floor.

Those of us who are on record as opposed to proposals for a guaranteed annual income will not be afforded any opportunity to consider and debate amendments which would remove provisions which essentially enact guaranteed income provisions in this bill.

For a long time, Mr. Speaker, I have concerned myself with congressional reform. It is regrettable that this body, which we sometimes refer to as the greatest deliberative body in the world, has been so reluctant to bring its procedures up to date. It seems to me that this is a good example as to why our procedures are in serious need of reform.

This legislative proposal has been heralded as a welfare reform measure. It seems incongrous that legislation thus heralded would be considered by the House under a closed rule which makes it impossible to offer amendments, to consider amendments, to debate amendments, or to vote on amendments. It is true that welfare needs reform. It is even more true that the House needs reform.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I intend to oppose the adoption of the resolution which would provide a closed rule with 6 hours of debate to consider the Family Assistance Act of 1970.

In nearly every instance I support the rule which sets the time and terms of debate for bills to be considered on the floor of the House. The reason is, I believe every Member should have the opportunity for open and adequate debate. However, it should be clearly recalled nearly all of the rules or resolutions which are presented for our approval or rejection by the Committee on Rules are what we call open rules under which the opportunity exists to offer multiple amendments which in many instances make good legislation after amendment out of poor or bad legislation as we first receive it on the floor of the House.

A closed rule such as we are asked to accept today denies Members an opportunity to offer amendments. Even to refer to such a rule as closed is too respectful and is being overgenerous. Such a rule should be labeled according to its true description and referred to as a gag rule. Because that is exactly what it is. Unfortunately, it seems that we Members of the House have visited against us these kind of gag rules only at the request of the Committee on Ways and Means.

For some reasons the members of this distinguished committee invariably insist upon the procedure of a closed rule. Now, I have great confidence in the Committee on Ways and Means but I know of no reason that the other Members of this body must accept in total or reject in total the legislative judgment of the 25 members that make up that committee. I know I speak like many Members of this House who regularly vote against a closed rule as an expression that they do not intend to abdicate to the members of the Commitee on Ways and Means our responsibility to legislate for the people of the congressional district which each of us represent.

Is it necessary to recall that should the Family Assistance Act pass the House, which I sincerely hope does not happen, and the bill goes to the other body of the Congress, Members of that body will have carte blanche to make any changes to the amending process which the persuasion of the Member offering the amendment can accomplish.

Who on our side of the Congress can fail to recall the monstrosities the other body have sent back to us as a result of floor amendments from the north side of the Capitol on tax legislation on which we in the House were gagged, muzzled, and muted in the matter of amendments?

Oh, I suppose there could be some slight justification argued in behalf of a closed rule in purely tax matters, particularly those which are intended to raise revenue but that is not the case in this instance. This is a welfare bill and has entirely to do with the expenditure of revenue. There is no reason for a closed rule. Those who support such a gag rule in effect are voting to limit to 6 percent of the total membership of this House, which is the percentage of the membership on the Committee on Ways and Means bears to the total membership, the rights and responsibilities to legislate on a matter that will affect in one way or another all the people we represent.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members desiring to speak on the rule may have the opportunity to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 204, nays 183, not voting 43, as follows:

Mr. MADDEN and Mr. FINDLEY changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 16311) to authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 16311, with Mr. DINGELL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS) will be recognized for 3 hours, and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) will be recognized for 3 hours.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 16311 is one of the most important bills this Congress will consider.

I recognize there is probably a great deal of feeling about the bill outside of the Congress.

I also believe there is a great deal of misunderstanding about the bill outside of the Congress. One organization, for example, took a position opposed to the bill 2 weeks before the committee reported it, not knowing, of course, what amendments had been adopted in the committee or what the language was, and then evidently expects Members to follow its recommendations on that kind of a basis. It is beyond me how they can do so.

Mr. Chairman, let me talk first about our committee consideration of the matter, the present situation, and what we are trying to do.

The committee conducted 4 weeks of hearings on social security legislation, principally in the area of welfare reform, last October and November. Commencing on January 19, the day Congress reconvened, the committee met regularly in executive session over a period of 7 full weeks in drawing up this legislation, and in studying the administration and the operation of the programs providing cash assistance for the needy, and the existing work-training and day-care programs for AFDC recipients. During its deliberations, the committee had the benefit of hearing from a number of State and local officials engaged in running our welfare and training programs and others who have studied particular areas of those programs. Through this process, we gained many valuable insights into the problems that exist and what should be done to correct them.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is essentially patterned after the bill presented by the administration but with some major changes, tightening, sharpening and improving many of the specific provisions. The committee also added some provisions of its own. Some of these changes are very important, as I will delineate later.

At the present time we have categories of assistance known as the old age assistance program, the program for aid to families with dependent children and unemployed fathers, the disability program, and the program for the blind.

The program of old-age assistance, the program for the disabled, and the program for the blind have not in recent years presented any serious problems to the Ways and Means Committee or to the Congress. The number of people on the old-age assistance program has declined. It could have been expected it would be reduced as more and more of our people became eligible for social security benefits.

The program we added, allowing a social security cash payment to those who had become disabled and who had a work record, has naturally reduced the number who would be eligible for and want the welfare program known as the disability program, or the program for the blind.

Also it is significant to note that in the case of a widow whose husband has died and left her with minor children, the numbers who go on AFDC from that category do not rise, because of the survivorship benefits of the social security program.

The number of children in male-headed families has not risen over the years, and has remained essentially static for some 25 years, in fact.

Mr. Chairman, the program that has risen most, however, of all of these programs is that part of AFDC that has to do with children in female-headed families, where the father for some reason is absent from the home or, as a matter of fact, where there has never been a marriage with respect to that home.

Now let me talk to you a little bit about the runaway growth in case loads and costs under AFDC. In 1935 the original act was passed. By 1950 there was a total cost in the program of some $500 million. In 1969, for the fiscal year, which is the last year I have figures on, the number of families—and this is families—who were on AFDC has risen to 1.7 million and the total cost of providing for this program was approximately $4.5 billion. The cost of that program has doubled in 3 years. Think of that. If you project down the road this present cost on the basis of the way it has been rising in recent years, by the year 1975 it will be well over $8 billion, and some people within the Department think it could be as much as $12 billion.

The proportion of children in this country dependent on welfare has doubled over the last 15 years. Today, six children in every 100 are on AFDC, and the rate is still increasing. In some States the rate is almost double the national rate.

Now, that is the existing program we have. The level of spending is not determined by the Federal Government; it is determined by the State governments. Under existing law, we match the State of New York or any other State not less than 50 percent of the cost of this program regardless of where they fix the level. If you want an example of an open-ended proposition where we are completely helpless to put any restraints, controls, or limitations on it or make any improvements to it, it is in this present program.

Mr. Chairman, this program worries me greatly insofar as the cost is concerned, but there is another matter of concern to me. The AFDC program encourages family breakup. Do not think for 1 minute that it has not made a contribution to many, many fathers leaving their families in order that the family could eat and have clothing to wear. Yes. Take my word for it. The present AFDC program puts a premium and an incentive on the breakup of a home.

Yet, the Federal Government and the taxpayers in your State are paying the amounts provided under these various State formulas whether they pay the same amount in that particular State or not. There is one State that pays in the range from zero to $49 a month for a family of four under AFDC.

Mr. Chairman, there are two States that pay as much as $250 to $299. Some of these States actually pay a family of four on AFDC, which is not, of course, subject to any tax, more money than a man working at a job can make at the minimum wage, working practically full time, all year long.

Not only is there this incentive to break up the family, this incentive in many States now for the person who is working to quit his job and go on AFDC—and do not think for a minute that does not happen. The Director of the program in the city of New York said that women quit jobs at department stores as saleslades and went immediately on welfare because they had minor children and could receive more than they could earn while engaged in that type of employment in the city of New York.

But, what else does the present program do? The present AFDC program is a tremendous disincentive for anyone to work. I shall try to give you some facts about this situation.

Many of you feel like there ought to be a reform, but when a reform comes down the road there are questions about it. Did you know that there was not one solitary substantive alternative offered in the Committee on Ways and Means during the course of the public hearings and in the executive sessions—and we were in executive sessions for days and weeks on end on this program—nothing of substance was offered by anyone in substitution for this program which President Nixon hopes to breathe life into. His administration has tried to breathe some life into this welfare program we now have.

Mr. Chairman, the Members of the House know I have not been satisfied with the present program. We passed amendments in 1962 in the direction of trying to provide some inducement for people on welfare to get off it. Why? Because, as I said before, 60 out of every 1,000 of our child population nationwide are on welfare. Ask anyone that is on it if that is a preferable way to raise a child. In a home where there are no work habits, in a home where there is hardly enough to eat, in a home where there are not enough clothes to wear and not enough to pay the rent. You will find there is very little incentive on the part of that parent to see to it, even though the State law may require it, that that child even goes to grade school.

Mr. Chairman, in 1967 we tried again and we provided an incentive. We put the mandate on the States to see to it that these unfortunate people who had no training or who had no jobs would be given an opportunity for such training if they were qualified to absorb the training and then be given a job in keeping with that training. Some of the States did a fair job. The State of California has done one of the best jobs of all States. The State of New York did not even start its program in a substantial way until a very few months ago. Whereas California has referred about 30 percent of the people on AFDC for training, New York has referred less than 7 percent. Why? Because certain people did not think it appropriate for any of these people to be assigned.

Why do I feel so strongly about this? After a woman gets her youngest child to the age of 18 and she is on welfare, what is left for her? In most States she may be 45 years of age at that time. She has no training. Of course, she knows how to sweep the house, but she has no industrial training nor anything to commend her for a job and no work habits. She is past the age where people want to employ a person for the first time. I think that is one of the greatest tragedies that perhaps exists on the domestic scene in the United States today—that we have not tried to do something to help that person to help herself, to learn some occupation before it becomes time for her to lose all opportunity for work and for training.

So what happens? She has to move into the home of one of her daughters who has minor children, and who is on welfare. This is why it is that in some States where a welfare program was initiated before the Federal program was enacted that you have as many as four generations, one after the other, four generations on welfare. Since the adoption of the welfare program in many States there is a percentage—yes, it is small, but a disturbing percentage to me even if it is one or two people—that represent the third generation on welfare.

So we thought it was high time in 1962 and in 1967 to try to do something about this because of the disincentive to work, because of the fact that it was conducive to the breaking up of homes, because of the States' variation in payments, because of the overall rising cost of this program.

Now, if there is a man or woman Member of this House on the floor today who is satisfied with the present operation of the welfare program in his or her State, I would be glad to yield so that they can tell me why it is so good, and why it is so perfect.

No, you cannot say it is, and I know it. Thus should we not repeal it? Should we not repeal it? That is what we are doing in this bill. We are repealing the welfare program as it has been known up to now. The 1st of July, 1971, there will no longer be a program of AFDC, there will no longer be a program of old-age assistance, or aid to the blind, or aid to the disabled.

What have we done? We have repealed three programs applicable to adults, and we have placed them under one program, and we apply the same formula of Federal assistance across the board in all three categories. And what are we doing? We are saying in the case of these adult programs under this bill that we in Congress think that the bare minimum of income that a man 65 years of age or older, who has no other income, needs to subsist on, is $110 a month. And we say to the States, every one of them, by July 1, 1971, you are going to pay those people who are 65 years of age and older, enough so that their total income will reach $110 a month and the same for the blind and the disabled.

We say we will pay 90 percent out of the Federal Treasury of the first $65 of the average payments to needy adults, and then we will pay 25 percent of that which remains above the $65—up to a limit set by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

We are placing a limitation on our participation, but we are also placing a floor for the first time in Federal legislation to see to it that these people, these unfortunates referred to in the course of the debate on the rule, have enough to live on.

All right; that covers the adult part of the program, but it is a major part, in my opinion, of this bill, the care of these unfortunate aged, blind, and disabled individuals.

What do we do with the AFDC program? We repeal it completely, and we drastically change the approach and the concept. Why? Because many of the States found it impossible to even agree to the mandate of the Federal law on occasion, or even to avail themselves of opportunity to try to help these unfortunate people when we gave them that opportunity in 1962.

The 1st of July 1971, there will be a new Federal program replacing the States program known as AFDC.

This new Federal program will be called the family assistance plan.

Yes, we established Federal standards of eligibility—we changed it from top to bottom, because the Federal Government will pay the first $1,600 of benefits under that program, in all of the States, in cases of a family of four, provided they do the same thing.

What do they have to do under present law? They go to the welfare office and sign up. The Supreme Court says that if a man and his wife and children—because in my State we have not taken care of the unemployed fathers—if he cannot find a job in Arkansas, he can go to California where they have the unemployed father program and can apply for benefits the first day he lands in California. An individual can go from any State where benefits are low to a State where the benefits are higher.

You talk about a drain on the State treasuries? I do not know of any greater drain that we can experience on the domestic scene than the migration of people under the present program to those States that have been more generous with these unfortunate citizens.

There is another group—the so-called working poor. This is perhaps the bone of contention in this whole bill. I had serious doubts about covering them in the beginning. As I said publicly, the administration's new approach to family assistance was good in every respect in my mind except the fact that it might add 10 million or so people to the 10 million people already on welfare and that it would cost an additional $4.4 billion a year to do it.

But I became convinced that this was the right thing to do. Let me tell you how I reached that conclusion.

Where do the people who go on AFDC come from in the first place? Do they come from good-paying jobs that enable them to own a home or to live in a very fine apartment in your cities or in your rural areas? Where do they come from? They come from this group of people that we have grown accustomed to calling the working poor. As fast as we have been able, under the present WIN program, adopted in 1967, to train people presently on AFDC, there have been two and three and four or more families added to the rolls in these States for every one that we have taken off.

So, that looks to me like you are making progress—retrogressively. We are making progress, but going backward at the same time in reducing the cost and reducing the numbers on the rolls.

Back in 1967, I had many, many letters from all over the United States. I had letters from New York City and from Chicago and from the bigger cities and from the rural areas. They were so pleased that the Congress then was moving in the direction of trying to provide some work incentive to try to get people who are on relief back to jobs.

These women, whose husbands had divorced them or deserted them, and who described themselves by race and all in their letters to me, described their situations. They were living in an apartment house. They were working and had four children. But another woman who lived on the same floor around the corner from them had four children and they were on welfare and did not work.

In essence they were saying to me: "I think it is asking too much of me to work to support my children and pay my taxes—and some of my taxes go to keep up this lady and her children when she was further along in school when she quit than I was—and when she is just as able to work as I am."

It is getting pretty bad when a person points out the difference in status between neighbor and neighbor.

You can call this bill anything you want to, if you do not want to vote for changing the present system. I can make a good argument against the bill if I wanted to do so, because I used to debate and all of us who did had to be able to debate both sides of the question. I could make a better argument against this bill than any argument I have yet heard made by any of you, I believe, because the thoughts I heard expressed went through my mind, too, to debate against it. I think I could do it. Certainly I could make a plausible argument against it.

Those of you who say that you are never going to vote for a guaranteed annual income, let me talk to you a minute. I have said the same thing, and I will say the same thing, and when I vote for this bill I am not voting for a guaranteed annual income. What I am voting for is an amount, call it whatever you want to—subsidy, relief, income, whatever you want to call it—I am voting for a supplement to the income of the individual who is working and not making enough to supply his family with the ordinary needs of life, but who is not now on welfare. Why? Because I tell him, "I will do that for you, Mister, if you will go down to your nearest Employment Security Offices" and we have them in every county of the United States, in every State of the United States—"go down there, sign up for work, and see first, whether they can find a job that pays you more. If they do not, let them counsel with you. Go through their diagnosis. Let them prescribe a course of training for you that they think you have the ability to absorb, that will enlarge your capacities and make it possible for you to earn more money."

But, second, I will pay this supplement and get this man to the employment office because I am convinced that within that man's lifetime, if something is not done, he will be one of the additional millions that will be added to the AFDC program.

Oh, you say, "They will not accept it in my district."

I want to talk to my southern friends. I said this in the Rules Committee. Who are the working poor? What are they like? Over 50 percent of the working poor families covered under the bill live in the South; only 12 percent live in the Northeast. A high proportion of such families live in rural areas and on small farms. Seventy percent of them are white; 30 percent are nonwhite.

I have said to chambers of commerce and every group I could talk to in my own congressional district and in my own State that I am willing to pay any reasonable amount to help anyone in that position, to help him to improve so that he can better help his family.

What do I think about most in this whole affair? I think about the sad plight of many of these children. They have had nothing to do with the ability of their father and mother to earn, or the willingess of their father or mother to take a job. They have had nothing to do with that. They have had nothing whatsoever to do with whether the father has left home in order that they might go on welfare. But they are the ones who suffer in the long run.

Malnutrition and lack of medical attention from conception to 6 years of age, doctors tell me, can reduce a normally born child to the same mental condition as that of a child who was born with an injured brain.

What is the future for such children as these? Nothing but more AFDC.

Members can say what they want to about the definitions of suitable work. I could find 101 things in this bill I could fuss about if I wanted to. I have never told this House that any piece of legislation I have ever supported which comes from the Ways and Means Committee was perfect. But do not be misled. The term "suitable work" is mentioned in the unemployment compensation laws. That is one thing. We do not require a carpenter who goes to the employment security officer in our State, in Members' States or in mine, to get his unemployment check to lay aside his carpentry and take a job as a common laborer. No; that is not suitable employment within the definition of that act.

What does suitable employment mean here in this bill? Let me tell Members. It means employment that is suitable to that particular man's capabilities and his training, along with some other obvious things like the state of his health.

There is talk about all these ways we have left the door open for people to get out of the requirements to take work or training under the program. Well, Members can say a mother with children under 6 years of age ought to go to work. The committee did not. We felt that during those years before the child goes to school, the mother should not be required to take training, but when that child goes to school, then she will take training and she will take training knowing that the child of hers is receiving just as good care or better care during the time she is absent from it that day, in a day-care center.

We are going to arrange for this care with the schools, we are going to arrange it with private organizations, with nonprofit organizations. We are going to get the very best of day care possible for these children.

This lady with a child under 6 can, if she wants to, volunteer for training. Do Members know that in the State of California they have had more people with children under 6, volunteer for training than they have had with any other group of citizens?

So do not tell me these people do not want training. Do not tell me these people do not want a lifting hand to help them lift themselves up out of their economic circumstances.

Yes, we have a few people that do not work as hard as others. I have known doctors and lawyers and businessmen, who I could say did not work as hard as others in their profession. There are people in my district that do not think I work as hard, for example, as the gentleman from Virginia, DICK POFF, or the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. PERKINS), whom I see here in front of me. Oh, yes, they get critical of us sometimes because they do not think we work as hard as another or the same hours as others, even though we get an equal amount of pay. Of course, many people do not know I have earned a great deal of overtime since I have been in Congress for which I do not get paid—and I know other Members have.

But, as I say, do not characterize these people generally as being lazy or shiftless or without motivation or desire. Most of them are without training. That is why they are where they are. So it is important, I think, that we pass this legislation and repeal what we have and start over anew.

If there had been any better way to do it than the way President Nixon gave us, we would have adopted it, but no suggestions came from within the committee or from the general public either about how to deal with it. This is largely the President's plan.

During its deliberations, the principal efforts of the Committee on Ways and Means were in the direction of strengthening the provisions of the legislation to assure the establishment of an effective work and training program, building upon the groundwork that has been laid in putting the existing work incentive program into operation. It is the clear intention of the committee, based upon assurances given by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor, that the work and training program will provide a method of guaranteeing that all adult members of families receiving assistance under the family assistance plan will receive all available training and employment services and other supportive services, including child care, necessary to assist them in obtaining employment and ultimately attaining self-support.

I cannot emphasize too strongly that all adult family assistance recipients, except for those specifically exempted by the bill, must register for training or employment. Contrary to the administration's proposal, under the committee bill this requirement applies to the working poor as well as to those who are unemployed or working part time. This is an essential difference and a material improvement in the bill. Under this modification, the employment status of many of the working poor parents will be improved and upgraded.

I would like to emphasize in the strongest possible terms, Mr. Chairman, that the Commitee on Ways and Means and its staff intends to monitor, constantly and closely, the operation of the work and training provisions of this legislation. We are relying heavily upon these provisions to take substantial numbers of families off of welfare or substantially reduce their dependency.

We placed reliance upon the provisions of the 1967 amendments establishing the work incentive program and were disappointed with the records of achievements in many of the States. I think we have at least gained much useful experience under the WIN program which we will benefit from in putting the work and training provisions of this bill into operation. For instance, we have learned that it is necessary to have a mandatory registration provision, requiring all those adult recipients who are not specifically excluded under the bill to register. We will no longer tolerate the situation in some States where the philosophical inclinations of social workers and administrators have replaced the basic intent of Congress.

I believe that the present WIN operations can be very easily adapted to the provisions of this bill, and I fully expect early and encouraging results. I also expect that the Committee on Ways and Means will be kept informed as to the progress that is made in the work and training program. The nature and extent of the information the committee has received concerning the WIN program has not been sufficient for it to do the oversight job it deems necessary, and the committee expects that an improvement in the WIN information systems will be forthcoming.

Mr. Chairman, another significant contribution of the committee in developing the legislation was the addition of a provision holding parents who abandon their families responsible for Federal assistance received by their families. This provision was added to the bill to act as a brake upon parental desertion and births out of wedlock, two of the most significant problems that plague the present AFDC program. This new approach plus greater emphasis by the Federal Government and the States in implementing the determination of paternity, the location of absent parents, and the enforcement of support provisions of the 1967 Social Security Amendments should have some effect in reducing the growth of the assistance rolls.

I think it well to remind that we did enact such provisions that were approved just a little over 2 years ago on January 2, 1968. In a sense, this legislation is building upon the welfare reforms we started at that time. These provisions have just recently been put into operation in most States and their effects are just starting to be felt. The committee discussed their operation with representatives of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in executive session and received assurances that they will be vigorously applied in the future. As I said with respect to the work and training provisions a moment ago, I repeat with respect to these provisions that the committee will be looking closely at their operation and expects to be kept fully informed concerning them.

The greatest loss of resources that we have in the United States, that we have had throughout our history in the United States, is the loss of that individual trained to the maximum of his ability.

I would hope that the House would pass this bill, finding it, as I am sure the Members will as they study it, far preferable to the provisions of existing law.

I have said very frankly I cannot give anyone any guarantee as to what is going to happen under it. I thought in 1962 there would be more people put to work when we gave the States the responsibility to administer the work-training program. I thought in 1967 there would be more put to work when we told the States certain recipients had to participate, but the States did not find enough of them suitable for training and work. That is why, under the bill before us, they have lost the opportunity to be copartners with us in this enterprise.

My friends from the South, I would urge you above anybody else in this House to be for this legislation. It will do more, in my opinion, for the Southern States than any proposition I have ever had the privilege of supporting or being for on the floor of the House. Think of it: 50 percent of the total number of all of these poor working families are in our several Southern States.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS OF H.R. 16311

Mr. Chairman, let me now briefly describe the principal provisions of the bill, including those which I have already mentioned.

This bill is introduced on behalf of myself and the gentleman from Wisconsin at the direction of the committee. I want to take occasion, Mr. Chairman, to express my appreciation for the attendance, cooperation, and assistance given us in the committee by every member of the committee, on both sides, in the development of the provisions of the bill.

This bill makes amendments in those programs of the Social Security Act that provide for cash public assistance payments to needy individuals and families. Specifically it provides major amendments in the public assistance programs under titles I, IV, X, XIV, and XVI of the Social Security Act; most significantly, in the program of aid to families with dependent children.

The bill consists, as Members can see from reading it, of four titles. Title I revises and improves the assistance program for needy families—part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, or "AFDC." This part of the bill replaces the existing AFDC program with the basic Federal family assistance plan for all needy families, including the working poor, and a program for State supplemental payments. This title includes new and expanded work incentives and requirements and an expanded and improved program for child care and supporting services. It also includes provisions under which the States could agree to have direct Federal administration of all of the cash assistance programs.

Title II provides for a minimum payment level of $110 a month for each recipient under the federally assisted adult public assistance program; a new Federal matching formula with respect to adult assistance which is more favorable to the States; and other improvements in the public assistance programs for the aged, blind, and disabled, consolidating titles I, X, and XIV in a revised title XVI.

Titles III and VI contain miscellaneous and conforming provisions and certain general provisions.

FAMILY ASSISTANCE

The bill would make basic reforms in the program which furnishes assistance to needy families with children by providing:

First, a new basic Federal family assistance plan, with federally assisted State supplementation, for poor families with children in place of the present program of aid to families with dependent children, but including for the first time coverage of poor families regardless of the work status of the father. The States would not be required to supplement payments to the working poor;

Second, requirements that, as a prerequisite to receipt of benefits, every adult in the assisted families—except those who are specifically exempted, such as mothers with preschool children or persons who are ill or of advanced age but including adults already working—must register at the employment office for work or training or sign up for vocational rehabilitation if handicapped;

Third, uniform, nationwide eligibility requirements and payment procedures, both for the basic Federal family assistance plan and the State supplementary payments; and Fourth, new provisions holding deserting parents responsible for Federal payments made to their families under the family assistance or State supplementary plans.

WORK AND TRAINING

The bill improves the program of employment and training services and of other services—including child care—needed by recipients who are registered at employment offices by providing:

First, a new program of manpower, training, and employment services to be administered by the Secretary of Labor through the State employment offices;

Second, a Federal program of full-cost grants and contracts for child care services to enable mothers who are required to register for training and employment—as well as those who register on a voluntary basis—to participate in work or training;

Third, a new system of providing services to support training or employment through agreements between the Federal Government and the States; and Fourth, a more equitable, uniform, and effective system of incentive allowances and reimbursement of work expenses.

ADULT ASSISTANCE

The bill would substantially improve the effectiveness of the adult assistance programs under the Social Security Act by providing:

First, that the States assure that each aged, blind, or disabled adult will receive assistance sufficient to bring his total income up to $110 a month; and

Second, a simplified Federal matching formula which will result in generally more favorable Federal participation in the cost of payments.

I think we all would agree, Mr. Chairman, that the adult public assistance recipients—the old, the halt, and the blind—are most deserving of any additional help we can give them.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

The bill also contains a number of miscellaneous and conforming amendments that are necessary in order for the family assistance plan to work in smoothly with the provisions of present law. While there are certain references to the medicaid program and to the parts of the law dealing with services for needy families, the committee is not making any substantive amendments to these programs at this time.

OTHER SOCIAL SECURITY LEGISLATION PENDING BEFORE THE COMMITTEE

The committee is currently considering additional amendments to the Social Security Act relating to the medicare and medicaid programs and we expect to consider amendments to the social security cash benefits program soon. And, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has indicated that it hopes to soon forward proposals relating to the social services provisions of the Social Security Act for our consideration. The bill before us today relates essentially only to cash welfare payments—it is not directed to issues relating to services for welfare recipients.

Some of you may recall that last winter, when we were considering the 15-percent social security cash benefit increase that was enacted in December, I indicated that we hoped to have additional amendments to the social security cash benefits program ready for consideration by the House by the end of March of this year. However, as I have said before, when we reconvened this January, it was the Department's wish—as expressed by Under Secretary John G. Veneman—that we first consider the welfare reform proposals. And, as I have indicated, our work on the welfare reform proposals has been very time consuming.

COST AND FISCAL IMPACT

Mr. Chairman, the American people want to be certain, and should be able to be certain, that when, of necessity, money is spent for assistance payments, it is spent in such a way as to promote the public interest, and the public well-being of our people. While this bill does entail substantial increases in Federal expenditures for welfare payments in the short run, I think we have built into the bill, for the long run, provisions that will mean that we can begin to hold the line in the future. For example, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare estimates that over the period 1971–75, Federal payment costs under present law would increase by about 62 percent, whereas under H.R. 16311 they are expected to increase by only about 15 percent. This data is set forth in table IX on page 53 of the committee report, which I insert at this point in the RECORD:

TABLE IX.—POTENTIAL FEDERAL COSTS UNDER COMMITTEE BILL COMPARED TO EXISTING LEGISLATION, 1971–75 [1]

[In billions of dollars]

	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Committee bill:
Payments to families with children	3.8	3.8	3.7	3.6	3.5
30 percent matching of State supplementals	.8	.9	1.0	1.2	1.3
Subtotal	4.6	4.7	4.7	4.8	4.8
Federal share of adult category cost	2.7	2.9	3.2	3.4	3.6
Total	7.3	7.6	7.9	8.2	8.4
Existing legislation:
Federal share of AFDC	2.5	2.9	3.4	3.9	4.5
Federal share of adult categories	2.0	2.3	2.5	2.7	2.8
Total	4.5	5.2	5.9	6.6	7.3

[1] Assumes that, with constant benefit levels, family assistance gross payment decline slightly. Other cost items are assumed to increase at the same rate as they have during the last 3 years (see discussion in text above).

The new welfare proposal does ease the costs of welfare to most of the States, shifting a greater burden to the Federal Government. Overall, according to estimates of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the bill developed by the committee shows slightly greater fiscal relief to the States than the bill that was originally introduced by the President. In general, the effect of the committee changes in the administration bill is to give more savings to those States which have been making greater fiscal effort in their welfare programs.

It is estimated that the combined impact of the family assistance plan and the program for adults will be a net reduction in State expenditures for cash assistance in all but about nine States. With regard to the States whose expenditures would be increased, there is a special saving provision in the bill which provides that, for the first 2 fiscal years under the program, the Federal Government will meet any additional State costs that result from the enactment of the family assistance plan or the proposed new title XVI for the needy aged, blind and disabled.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Chairman, this bill deals with a most controversial subject. It will not please everybody; it would be impossible to do so. Some will say that by providing benefits to working poor families, we would be starting down the road to a guaranteed income program. I do not agree, because the bill also requires the employable adults in these poor families—working or otherwise—to register for training or employment services, thus bringing them under a program that will assist them in improving their skills and increasing their income. My understanding of a guaranteed income system is one that gives an individual a choice of not working and settling at a certain income and living standard, the standard that is guaranteed. This the bill certainly does not do. It offers no such choice. It says to the employable adult members of assisted families: "You must accept suitable employment or training or lose your welfare payment, and if need be have the payments to your family made to someone outside the family." There is a great difference between this legislation and a guaranteed annual income.

It cannot be expected that this welfare reform proposal can solve all of our country's grevious social problems. But there is reason to think that it will be a highly significant step forward. It is designed to promote individual integrity and efforts toward self-help. It is designed to help to stabilize poor families. These are important goals, and if we start to attain them, we will have made a valuable contribution toward improving the lives of the needy people of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time yielded by the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes for the purpose of answering questions.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHBROOK).

Mr. ASHBROOK. There will be many questions raised later in the debate, but there is one point which I believe would help to clarify this at this time.

First I should like to thank the gentlemen from the Ways and Means Committee, speaking as a person not in favor of this bill, for I would say the committee has been 100 percent helpful in providing information to me which I hope I can use to help in this debate to shed light on the subject.

I note that the gentleman in his remarks mentioned the situation under the present law where a family on welfare could get more than a family working full time at the minimum wage or near minimum wage, referred to.

I am sure the gentleman would not want to leave the impression this early in the debate that this bill would completely alleviate that situation.

Mr. MILLS. It may not in some States.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It would narrow the situation, rather than bring about a situation where there would be an absolute work incentive in every case.

Mr. MILLS. It would not cover all cases.

The gentleman very kindly gave me a copy of his figures. What he is doing in his figures is including many things that are not within this bill.

There is a reference to medicaid. The medicaid program may be available both under the welfare program and for the working poor, depending entirely on the State law.

The food stamp program may or may not be utilized by these people. It is not utilized by all of them. If it were it would cost several more billion a year, someone told me, and we do not appropriate anything like that amount for it now.

What I am talking about is what the individuals have in cash as a result of being on welfare, working and receiving this supplemental payment under the family benefit program.

Mr. ASHBROOK. On that point, will the gentleman not agree, regardless of whether he has another set of figures or what the case might be, nonetheless, even if this bill were to be fully implemented it would not totally alleviate the situation he referred to, where there is in some cases the ability to get as much or more when one is on welfare, as against when working. The gentleman told me they worked to narrow the disincentive.

Mr. MILLS. There is no question about the total.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Even if the bill passes, it could not be said we had alleviated the situation, where there would not be a situation where a nonworking welfare family would receive more.

Mr. MILLS. That is true. We are only helping them up to the poverty level, and it is my recollection that at least one State has a line of assistance under AFDC which is quite a bit above the poverty level and some of the other States have payments, depending on the size of the family in those States, that would be above the poverty level. So we are not going to help the States under this with levels above the poverty level. We help them up to that poverty level.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ICHORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ICHORD. I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas for his usually excellent presentation.

First of all, I want to state that I do not think there has ever been a bill in the Congress in the 10 years that I have been here that I have personally had more difficulty on in making up my mind as to how to vote.

I have two questions of the gentleman from Arkansas.

You mentioned the fact that the AFDC program had doubled in cost during the last 2 years previous.

Mr. MILLS. Three years, I say.

Mr. ICHORD. There are now 1.7 million families drawing AFDC.

Mr. MILLS. That is approximately 10 million individuals all together on all welfare programs.

Mr. ICHORD. The gentleman did not break that 1.7 million families down into those where the father, the male, had left the home for some reason or where there had been no marriage in the family. Would the gentleman advise me as to what part of this 1.7 million families fall in that latter category?

Mr. MILLS. About 75 percent where the father is not in the home. About 75 percent of the total number are in that category and about 25 percent in the remaining part.

Mr. ICHORD. One more question I would like to have the gentleman answer. The gentleman in his presentation has only spoken as to income requirements. Are there any asset requirements for eligibility under this?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, yes. We have asset requirements.

Mr. ICHORD. What are those?

Mr. MILLS. We disregard assets up to $1,500. A home or personal effects do not count against the $1,500 limitation. That is done in many States, anyway, under present law.

Mr. ICHORD. You mean the home would be exempt and not counted as part of the $1,500?

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. ICHORD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT).

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman to understand my vote on the previous question does not indicate my final vote on the legislation one way or another. I voted in that instance because I would have liked to have seen an open rule in that we are studying the minimum wage laws. We are faced with the problem of creating a new base for that. However, under the minimum wage law and all of the major union contracts that I have seen there is no such thing as a family consideration for the payment of wages or income based on the number of children in the family and the number of dependents. The only program that was anywhere near like this program that I knew about was when we were studying the national levels of income with low rates. We found in France that they have a program whereby all employers paid into a fund but all paid the same wage. However, for each child over and above two in that family they had a common pool which would pay back into the family or to the head of the family enough money to give them an income, such as we are doing here. If a person has two children or four children, he would have a guaranteed minimum income under this law of $3,900.

Mr. MILLS. No. He would not have that much.

Mr. DENT. I am not talking about relief. I understand this better than some of my colleagues who have been condemning my vote on this. It gives a guaranteed minimum income for relief——

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. DENT. But it does not increase the relief payment one cent. It might help the treasury of a State that does not have a higher payment.

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, what will happen is that those who are not working now under the present minimum wage law, if they worked 52 weeks a year and every eligible work day in that calendar year which they could work, if they have a family of 4, 6, 8, or 10, they can earn $3,338 total income under this bill. But we are saying that we have recognized that to be too small and I want you to know that I think it is too small at this time.

Mr. MILLS. It is the level to which one refers as the poverty level.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I want it clearly understood that we are now studying the minimum wage and we have to take a completely new view of it because in our consideration of the minimum wage we had to take into consideration the basic income and what would be the poverty level. Since these guidelines are in here we will have to establish the minimum wage on the same basis as the guidelines of a dependent child in the family, or else——

Mr. MILLS. What we are trying to do, if I may interject, to state the facts of the bill—what we are trying to do is to take care of a whole lot of people that do not even get your present-day minimum wage.

Mr. DENT. I understand that, I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas, but I want to explain clearly that if we do not do that, if we establish a minimum wage for a family of four on the basis of what you have established it here—and that is as high as you could probably go without creating a great deal of opposition at this time—if that same person happens to have four children will he be subsidized from the Government through the employer who is only paying the minimum wage?

What I want to do is to provide language in here with a percentage base over the poverty level rather than a per child dependent figure. Under that procedure, I think there would be an incentive for a worker who is working at the present minimum because he will not be able under any minimum wage law to keep from working for an employer if he has 10 chilren and working at a minimum wage.

Mr. MILLS. We provide for training here, as the gentleman knows, but we still must have a program under any concept of relief which is based upon the size of the family and the needs of the family. We maintain that concept here.

Mr. DENT. I understand that and I compliment you, because something must be done about it. But what do I do about the minimum wage? What do I establish for a family of 4, 6, 8, or 10? What do we pay out of the Treasury? That is what I want to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additonal minutes.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

(Mr. MAHON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAHON. As the gentleman knows I have great admiration and respect for the ability of the gentleman from Arkansas and for his dedication.

Mr. MILLS. I know it is not my argumentative ability, and, as the gentleman knows, I have the greatest respect for him, and especially so when the gentleman and I are together on these matters.

Mr. MAHON. The thing that concerns me, and I believe many others, is that at times we pass legislation incurring additional expenditures without adequately considering whether or not the revenues are available.

Mr. MILLS. I am glad the gentleman brings that up.

Mr. MAHON. I would like to take a moment, if I may, to pursue this further. As the gentleman knows, under the administrative budget which was in use prior to fiscal year 1969, the budget for the current fiscal year would be in the red by the estimated sum of about $8 billion.

We have just voted for a pay increase for Federal civilian and military employees, and so forth. Many are very much interested in more money for education and more money with which to fight pollution. I, personally, cannot see how we can carry out these programs without raising additional revenue.

My question is this: Does the gentleman see any way that we can finance these programs without raising additional revenue? It is easy to get spending bills through but it is hard to get revenue-raising bills through, as the gentleman knows better than I.

I wish the gentleman would explain whether or not he thinks that the pending bill is going to cause additional spending, and cost additional revenue? And in view of the whole environment, the whole atmosphere, the trend of the times, is it inevitable that we will have to raise taxes, and probably early?

Mr. MILLS. Let me answer the gentleman this way. First of all, this does not affect the upcoming fiscal situation for fiscal year 1971 except to the extent that some day-care centers may be established, which are already provided for under existing law, to help care for the children of the mothers who will avail themselves of the WIN training programs which were established in 1967.

None of this goes into effect, none of it, in this proposed program, none of it, even the enlarged payments to the elderly, until July 1, 1971. That is the first day that any part of this can go into effect.

There are two reasons for this. First of all, all of the States will have to amend their laws in order to comply with the new adult assistance program; and, second, we are trying to do even better than the President himself was doing by not imposing any of those costs upon what I thought was already a very tight budget situation for the 1971 fiscal year. He did actually budget expense for some of this to go into effect in fiscal year 1971, but the committee decided we would let no part of it go into effect until 1971. And we have been criticized in some quarters because of that.

But to me this whole thing of Federal spending is a question of priorities, as I know the gentleman knows.

I will tell you one thing: I think some of these problems we have at home, and some of the trends that we have at home that can be corrected and improved by some new program that may cost some additional amount in the immediate future, must be related in importance to some of the programs that we perhaps have had on the books for many, many years. We have to determine whether or not those programs which have eaten deeply into the Treasury, are worthwhile programs, or whether there is something new we should adopt.

If we took the position that the budget was so tight because of all of our old programs that we could never do anything new, we would never solve any problems that might be on the horizon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MILLS. Let me carry on just briefly, because I have not answered the gentleman fully.

You must also compare this new program, and what is capable of being done under it through proper attention and proper administration, with what will occur under existing programs, which, as I said, some people within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare predicted for aid to families with dependent children and other elements of cash welfare, that it will cost around $12 billion just 4 fiscal years from now.

This new program altogether will be a material amount of money. It will cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $8 billion by fiscal year 1975, all added together. But I think the program under present law, contrary to some tables that we have in the report, even will cost us at least $4 billion more by fiscal 1975 because recipients will not be taken off and put to work under the existing law, and they will be under this program.

Mr. MAHON. Let us assume that this has very little impact in fiscal 1971——

Mr. MILLS. It does not have any.

Mr. MAHON. But there are many other programs not related to this.

Mr. MILLS. I am not in favor of delaying or stopping this program because the gentleman's committee may want to add $1 billion to something else. I might vote against that $1 billion amendment. I think this program is entitled to a very high priority, just as I think the education of our children enjoys a very high priority.

Mr. MAHON. Can we do the things that we are going to want to do without providing additional revenue?

Mr. MILLS. We are not providing for one penny of cost over the program that the President submitted to us.

The President mentioned this program as the first matter of legislation when he appeared here and gave us his state of the Union message. Welfare reform was the first thing he wanted done.

To me welfare is one of the most important domestic issues that faces us. If we can ever get out of Vietnam—if we ever get out of that problem we must avoid what the Department of Defense was able to do when we found with respect to the 1970 budget that we could cut back the dollar cost of Vietnam by $3½ billion. Who got it? You know who got it under the President's budget—both Presidents' budgets. What the Congress made available—the President did not spend it all—we gave right back to the Department of Defense for other purposes. I will say, I am not going to argue on priority here. But I do not know but what this has about as much priority as the solution of some of the things for which we spend the taxpayer's dollars today. I am not talking about defense, but I am talking about some domestic programs.

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, in response to a question propounded by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. MAHON) has not, in my judgment, answered categorically what ought to be stated here. It seems to me, the answer ought to be, "Yes, we are going to have to raise more money."

Mr. MILLS. No; I am not going to say that. If it becomes necessary, I will say I will be out on the House floor supporting it.

Mr. LANDRUM. Will the gentleman permit me to say one sentence further?

Mr. MILLS. Go ahead.

Mr. LANDRUM. Immediately following the disclosures last summer by President Nixon on television of his welfare reform proposal, there came on the screen a panel of folks in this field of welfare and among them was former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Mr. Wilbur Cohen, and Mr. Moynihan of the White House—and Mr. Moynihan said, as I recall it, as we had all during our committee sessions, that this bill would cost no more than $4½ billion or $5 billion additional money.

Mr. Cohen, who supports this program and who is a part of its genesis——

Mr. MILLS. No, no.

Mr. LANDRUM. I am not talking about the bill—I am talking about the program and I am talking about the philosophy of it.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, yes.

Mr. LANDRUM. He is a part of its genesis and we know that. We may as well admit that he is a brilliant man in his field. He said, "No, not $4½ billion or $5 billion, but it is much closer to $14 billion or $15 billion." I am talking of the fiscal year 1971, I am talking about this program that is on the way and there is not going to be any revision of the surtax.

Mr. MILLS. My friend, the gentleman from Georgia, has I think been misled by a lot of statements made by a lot of people. If Wilbur Cohen said that, he does not know what he is talking about. He does not know what he is talking about in some of these programs with respect to the costs—and he is a great friend of mine. Just do not be misled by that—do not be misled, I mean, by following just everything that Wilbur says. I just never could follow everything he said. But you ask him if he would not go further with this program and I will guarantee that he will say—yes. Maybe what he wanted was a program which cost $14 or $15 billion.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. I am one of those who is seeking guidance on this. I have not made up my mind one way or another.

Mr. MILLS. Before the gentleman asks me his question, would you not admit that the greatest loss of resources that we have is the idleness of these people?

Mr. LONG of Maryland. I agree with that, sir. That has a bearing on my question. The gentleman has indicated that one of the reasons why this bill might not cost us much as present programs, as many people think, is because there are incentives here to put people to work in other programs. It has been my understanding, and I have not made a study of this, but only heard of cases, that there has been a pilot program on the question of whether these guaranteed annual income programs would give people the incentive to work. My understanding is they have been generally inconclusive and do not show anything much in one way or another.

I wonder if the gentleman would throw some light on that?

Mr. MILLS. You do not want ever to draw a conclusion from an experiment like this conducted over, say, a year's time or some such limited period. A man conducting it will want you to give him 2 or 3 years to report on experiences under it. But the experience so far in connection with the New Jersey-Pennsylvania project, which is the one to which the gentleman is referring—and there is one about to begin in North Carolina if it has not already started—is that it indicates that their final report will indicate the success of that experiment. They have had success in different income levels up to date. But they could go on in the next month and something could reverse it. So far they have had no reversals.

Let me read just exactly what they say in the report. These are the preliminary results of the New Jersey experiment.

We believe that these preliminary data suggest that fears that a family assistance program would result in extreme, unusual, or unanticipated responses are unfounded. There is no evidence that work effort declined among those receiving income support payments. On the contrary, there is an indication that the work effort of participants receiving payments increased relative to the work effort of those not receiving payments.

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PUCINSKI. Obviously, the key to the success or failure of this program are the child care centers.

Mr. MILLS. Yes, I would agree to that, plus the attention you give to training.

Mr. PUCINSKI. The question I have, Mr. Chairman, because obviously the largest number of recipients under these programs are mothers with small children, is this: Is there an override in this legislation where a federally financed day care center which fails to meet local zoning codes or building codes can operate? One of the problems across the country, one reason why the program has been a failure, is that churches want to participate——

Mr. MILLS. There is no question but what churches and schools can have day-care centers. They have them. They can operate day-care centers. Schools can operate day-care centers. As I said earlier, nonprofit organizations can set them up. They can be set up by any group.

The Secretary has the authority to see to it that they are operated under sound health and safety rules.

Mr. PUCINSKI. If they fail to meet a local building code——

Mr. MILLS. If they do not meet a local building code you do not think the Secretary would qualify them, do you? If they cannot meet the present State standards, he will not talk to them. But if the State does not have any standards, then, of course, he can make up his own mind whether the program is operated in a healthy and safe manner.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VANIK. I appreciate the gentleman's thorough explanation of the bill, and I support the bill. I would like to inquire whether a fully trained unemployed worker covered by unemployment benefits with three dependents, who exercised his unemployment compensation benefits for prolonged unemployment, for better than a year, whether such a person would be permitted to participate in the program without disposing of his equity in his home or his equity in his automobile.

Mr. MILLS. He would. That is also true in the States that disregard the ownership of a home and take care of the family with an unemployed father. The gentleman knows about 50 percent of them do that now.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CAREY. I wish to commend the gentleman in the well, the Chairman, for the way in which he has exonerated my reasoning and rationale on the old bill, the 1967 amendments that you brought forth. At that time I had a colloquy with the distinguished chairman and I predicted that with the rate of increase of beneficiaries coming on the rolls in New York City, the cost of the program would triple. I wish I had not been so accurate.

Mr. MILLS. I wish it had merely tripled. It is more than that.

Mr. CAREY. We could foresee that.

Mr. MILLS. We did not offer enough incentive, I guess, for the city to refer welfare recipients to work and training programs.

Mr. CAREY. Let me indicate why I think we are on the right track on this bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Chairman, aside from the experiment the chairman referred to, in New York City, acting on our own initiative, faced with an increase of 20,000 new cases a month coming on the rolls, we undertook some experiments in allowing the workers to keep certain income from the welfare benefit, coupled with an incentive to work, and the requirement to take upgrading training. We found the flow of cases to the welfare rolls was beginning to decrease from 20,000 to 7,000 a month. We have seen movement off the rolls for the first time.

So much of what the gentleman is describing has been experimented with favorably in New York City. Therefore I think it deserves a chance.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, let us see where we would be if we decided not to pass this legislation in the House, and I will leave it in the hands of Members and to their good judgment. We will be without any change in the present welfare system, because the committee and those on the outside, in looking at this whole matter, have been unable to come up with any other changes that we could make that would offer any hope of curtailing the rising costs of some of these programs. This is all we could think of.

We could not possibly get back to the floor any time this year with something new unless somebody who has not talked about it in the past would come forward with something new.

I think we ought to give them a chance to have this program. I think it can work. As I said to those in the administration, I hope they will give it the amount of attention required. They must see to it that the employment offices give to it the amount of attention needed in counseling these people and in diagnosing them and in training them and in offering them a job.

But, as we told the departments, let us not train these people for employment that does not exist. Let us not train them for jobs that have disappeared. Let us take the business community into this and let us find out what jobs within an area are going begging—and they are going begging, my friends. Let us find out what they are. Let us train people for these jobs. The worst thing we can do from the point of view of the morale of these people is to spend 6 months training them only to have them find, when they walk up and down the streets, that nobody will employ them. Let us not have that happen. If we do not let it happen, then the program can succeed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman advises the gentleman from Arkansas he has consumed 58 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes. Mr. Chairman, I know of no more complex or serious problem, among the numerous problems that require solution, than the problem of dealing with our present Federal-State-local welfare program.

If we could find the perfect solution by waving a magic wand to insure that no families with children remain below the poverty level, we would all feel much happier. But that is not the situation we face. Instead, we have the existing program of aid to families with dependent children—AFDC—that was designed to assist families with children who have been deprived of parental support by death, incapacity, or continued absence from the home and who do not have sufficient income or resources to keep body and soul together, to provide food, clothing, and shelter. But we know that this AFDC program is a mess, is a can of worms.

This program is out of hand. It is accomplishing little while experiencing dramatic increases in the number of recipients and the costs incurred by the Federal, States, and local governments.

I would repeat what the chairman has said. I do not believe there is a single individual in this House who would defend the continuation of the program as it is now constituted. I do dot believe there is a soul who would defend the status quo.

Those who oppose this bill certainly are not doing so on the theory that what we have is sound, that we need not be concerned about the present program, that we should not adopt this legislation because what we have is appropriate, also let us recognize that we are going to be able to find questions and to be concerned about any new approach. I was concerned from the beginning. I am still concerned about the need to make this program work.

But my first concern prescinds from my knowledge that the present system will not work, because it does not reflect the philosophy that people should be transferred from the welfare rolls to the employment rolls and that individual efforts to achieve self-sufficiency should be a prerequisite to assistance.

What is the underlying philosophy of the present AFDC program? It is simply a guaranteed annual income. The States simply establish need levels for various family sizes and pay each family a cash payment equal to all or part of its needs. These payments, which today range from a low of $828 to a high of $4,164 annually for a family of four, are made with little or no regard for the efforts of the adult family members to achieve self-sufficiency through work or training.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a guaranteed annual income. The amount of the guarantee varies from State to State in accordance with the standards they have established. Let me give you some examples to illustrate the level of the present income we are guaranteeing. A family of four presently receives a guaranteed annual income of $2,220 in Alaska, $2,124 in Arizona, $2,292 in Colorado, $3,684 in Massachusetts, $3,468 in Minnesota, and $2,376 in my own State of Wisconsin.

We have all of the States listed, and this is available to the Members. That is the level of guaranteed income that we now have. If the Family Assistance Act simply extended the guaranteed annual income to more people, we would not be making any progress at all, and I would be unalterably opposed to the bill. Instead we are converting the present guaranteed annual income our welfare program provides to a system that condition assistance on individual efforts to work and take training.

This is an entirely different proposal from the one recommended by the commission that Mr. LANDRUM referred to. He was the gentleman who said that a commission under the last administration made a proposal that was the genesis of this bill. Were there any conditions imposed on the cash assistance provided under that proposal. Absolutely not. There was no condition that able-bodied adults had to take training or go to work. The basic concept involved a guaranteed income whereby the Government would make up the difference between the families income and their needs over a given period of time.

Our program is fundamentally different from both that proposal and existing law. Under this program we are no longer going to have a guaranteed annual income. Under this bill, society's assistance will be conditioned on the head of a family doing everything to help himself and his family that he is capable of doing. He must take training; get a job, and go to work.

If we are going to be honest with ourselves and with the public, we should stop talking about this bill making a radical change by introducing a guaranteed annual income. People who favor a guaranteed annual income may think the work requirements in this bill are a step backwards, and we have heard this position argued. The work and training requirements, which form the backbone of this legislation, are the big difference.

Let me say to you if this bill were only for the purpose of paying more money to more people, I would be up here opposing it with as much sincerity as I come here to support it today. But that is not the philosophy of this bill. The philosophy of this bill is to get people off the treadmill of welfare—dependency upon a government check—and enable them to become self-sufficient participants in the American economic system.

Nearly everyone from whom I have heard during our consideration of this bill has agreed that we should put the emphasis on work. I agree 100 percent.

Mr. Chairman, one of the opponents of this legislation, in a speech before this House, uttered words that I would adopt as my own. He said:

> It is essential that we recognize that occupational rehabilitation is the only corrective mutually beneficial solution to the problem of able-bodied, needy American adults with a work potential, and the conclusion is that only a program leading to a job and self sufficiency can succeed in reducing the welfare burden.

Mr. Chairman, that is the objective of this bill. That is where this legislation differs from the programs we have today.

Mr. Chairman, let me review with the Members some of my reasoning in becoming convinced that the present system is unworkable. The present system simply keeps people on the welfare treadmill, receiving welfare checks into the second and third generations. In my opinion it is the worst thing in the world for a child to grow up in a household where no one gets up and goes to work in the morning, but just goes down to a welfare office and picks up a check once a week. That is the poorest example you can establish. The best individual and family therapy in the world for these children is to imbue them with the American philosophy that there is a correlation between individual effort and economic well-being.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I became convinced that the concept of work is a fundamental ingredient in welfare reform. The present system rewards idleness and penalizes work.

If you are in a nonworking poor family, if you do not work, if you do not have a job, you are eligible for assistance in these States—about half of them—that cover the unemployed parent.

But if the family head is working, then the family is not eligible for benefits in any jurisdiction, even though the family income is below the needs standard established for welfare in the State.

How can you encourage unemployed people, to whom you are paying assistance, to go to work if you are going to penalize them by making them ineligible for assistance when they do go to work? If you want to move people from the nonworking poor into employment, you have to provide them with assistance or your attempts will be futile.

The present program keeps an individual and his family welfare as long as they are unemployed. But if they get up in the morning, go through the extra expense of working and come home tired at night, they are no longer eligible for assistance. They are no longer nonworking poor individuals, they are earning something, and the present law says we are not going to take care of them.

Now that issue—providing coverage for the working poor—is the fundamental issue before us today.

This is the group of additional individuals we will be providing assistance to—some 19 million who would be under the new program as against 7 million individuals who are covered through the aid to families with dependent children program. This added group is fundamentally what we call the working poor.

Failing to cover the working poor results in two inherent defects of the present system. The first defect is the incentive for family break-up, the father leaving the home, if he was the breadwinner there, because his family would be economically better off if he deserted them and qualified them for assistance as an AFDC family. The second defect is the disincentive to work for those intact families where the father is unemployed—the problem I discussed earlier.

Let me just ask why a poor family with minor children should be ineligible for any assistance just because there is a man in the house who is working? Why should that automatically make a family ineligible for any assistance, even though their income is less than the need standard the State has established for AFDC families, to enable them to keep body and soul together.

Why should work make you ineligible for assistance in meeting your needs? We cannot give an answer to that. No one can give an answer to that.

That is why we covered the working poor. That is why I became convinced of the need to cover this group—to discourage family disintegration, to foster family stability, and to encourage work.

Let me take a simple illustrative case, using figures from a conservative and moderate State, the State of Wisconsin. The figures in States like New Jersey would provide a more compelling cure, because their welfare payments are higher, but I am selecting a moderate State to illustrate my point.

Take a family in the State of Wisconsin, with the male in the home working at $1.50 an hour. He has a wife and three children. His gross income at $1.50 an hour on a monthly basis is $260. If you deduct from these earnings his work expenses—such as transportation costs, social security tax, and special clothes that he has to have, all of which are estimated by the Department of Labor to be about $60 a month—he will have a net income of $200 a month for himself, his wife, and his three children. He is not eligible for any assistance under the aid to families with dependent children program.

But the AFDC family consisting of a mother and three children would get $189 a month from welfare under the Wisconsin program of aid to families with dependent children. This is practically as much as the family with the employed male gets in net income at the end of the month. Yet, the family with the mother and three children, receiving $189, has one less mouth to feed, one less person to shelter, and one less person to clothe. Economically, they are better off?

The family with the employed male would be ahead economically, if the father left and qualified them for AFDC.

This is the family breakup incentive the present program provides. There is an economic inducement for the father to leave. Certainly this is not the only reason for family breakups, but we are on unsound ground to continue a program which provides an economic incentive to the breadwinner to leave home, creating a fatherless household with no one working.

If we take the case of an individual with a wife and three children who is working at below the minimum wage—and there are between 6 and 7 million individuals working full time at below the minimum wage in this country—the incentive for family breakup is even greater. A man earning $1.25 per hour would have gross monthly wages of $215, and an economic income, after deducting work expenses, of $155 a month. He is not eligible for assistance because we do not cover the working poor. In this particular case the family is $48 better off if he leaves home, and there is still one mouth less to feed, one person less to clothe, and one person less to shelter. Can we continue a program that has these kinds of results? I do not think we can.

Let me give you some figures as to what an individual must earn in various States in order for his family of four to be as well off as a family of four on welfare.

In Illinois he must be earning $1.85 an hour for his family of four to be better off than a family of four on welfare. In Massachusetts, it is $2.16; Michigan, $1.95. In Wisconsin, as I indicated, it is $1.50. This is the encouragement we provide today for family disintegration. And these are the disincentives we provide for work. We must cover the working poor if we are going to avoid this.

Let me give you another case in my own State, and this could occur in about half of the States. Consider that intact family, which we have already discussed, with the father earning, after work expenses, $200 a month. The family is not eligible for assistance because the father is working. Then consider another family of four, with the father unemployed. Yet because he is not working, he becomes eligible immediately for a family benefit, in the State of Wisconsin, of $220. In this case it put $20 into his pocket to be unemployed.

Where is the incentive to work when we penalize work in a simple case like this? As I said, you can make cases in some States with higher welfare standards that involve a greater disincentive to work.

Does this system make sense? Of course not. What do we have to do? I think we have to adopt the underlying philosophy of this bill. We have to cover the working poor.

Additionally, we have to provide incentive to the individual to work. We do that in this bill in two ways. First, we let him keep the first $720 he earns annually—or $60 per month—without suffering a diminution in benefits in order to cover his work expenses.

Second, we let the man keep 50 cents out of every additional dollar he earns, reducing his assistance by only 50 percent of his earnings up to the break-even point—$3,920 for a family of four receiving a basic benefit of $1,600. This provides encouragement for him to get a job and go to work, and to continue working and improving himself.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Chairman, this is a little bit technical business, which the gentleman knows more about than I do, so I hope the gentleman bears with me. But the work incentive is one of the very important things in this bill.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. In my judgment, it is very important.

Mr. DENNIS. All right. That comes basically from the idea that after this first $720, the man is allowed to keep 50 percent of whatever additional he may earn? Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. That is correct. Yes, a 50-percent income disregard is provided.

Mr. DENNIS. Is it correct, according to the people in this field, that we have to have the rate that low at least, that we cannot take away from him much more than 50 percent and retain any substantial incentive?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Let me be honest with the gentleman. I do not know that we can say with any certainty that there is anything magic about the 50 percent.

Mr. DENNIS. At any rate, the gentleman will agree with that?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. There are those who contend, as we have heard the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHBROOK), that the income disregard is too low, that we do not provide enough incentive, particularly when we calculate the disregard under cases that will involve State supplementation. If the limitation in the value of food stamps with increased income is included, the disregard is somewhat smaller, or conversely, the "marginal rate" is somewhat higher.

Mr. DENNIS. But at any rate, if we take away more than half of what he earns in addition, this reduces his incentive to work. We have to agree on that.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Yes, or it increases his incentive to become unemployed, if he is working.

Mr. DENNIS. Yes. This is the technical part, but is it not a fact that under the provisions of the bill where the allotment for food stamps and so forth is affected and is reduced by the amount he is allowed to keep, that as a matter of fact, although we talk about 50 percent, we are keeping him from retaining substantially more than that?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. That is why I responded that there are those who suggest that the total incentive may be insufficient. But the incentives provided in the disregard included in this bill are an improvement over existing law, so that the bill cannot be challenged because we have not gone far enough in taking care of the working poor.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Chairman, is it true that actually the rate gets up in the seventies and above rather than in the fifties when we calculate the food stamp allowance?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. There are cases where that will be true, but again we cannot generalize because in the first place food stamps are not available in all areas. For instance, I have many counties in my congressional district that do not have food stamps. I do not know if or when they will have them, but not every area has food stamps. We cannot fault this legislation because of provisions that are in the Food Stamp Act.

Mr. DENNIS. But we have to consider everything together to find out what we are talking about taking away from the man and what our taxes come to.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I will agree there are cases where the marginal rate is above 70 percent, but for most income levels it is substantially below that. We must compare that with the greater disincentives found in present law.

Mr. DENNIS. But the gentleman is more than doubling the welfare rolls, to begin with. His hope of a future reduction—that is all it can be now, a hope—depends on this incentive. I am suggesting to the gentleman, if the incentive is in fact much less than we generally contend, the hope decreases materially.

I believe it is fair to point out that certain knowledgeable people, such as Professor Friedman, testified to that effect before the committee.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Professor Friedman did feel that we were taking away too much of the individual's earnings that we had not made the disregard high enough when we included food stamps and other factors.

What is done by this is to fault the bill on the basis that we are not spending more money than is proposed under this bill, that we are not enlarging it beyond what the bill calls for, that we are not doing more for the working poor than what we have done in this bill. But some individuals are contending we should not even cover the working poor. We must do this, it seems to me, if we are to get rid of the underlying concept of the present program and implement the philosophy that people should go to work.

That is the only argument I can make in favor of the incentive we have here, that it is much more than we have today.

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McCLORY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to compliment the gentleman on this very clear statement and the description of this legislation. I agree generally with the philosophy in the bill.

There is one question I have. In connection with the inducements to secure employment and to receive training for employment I question the provision with regard to the exemption of women who have children under 6 years of age. I wonder whether it is not possible that a woman might continue to have children one after another so that she would have one or more children under 6 years of age for an extended period of time, and thus defeat this inducement we are trying to develop through this legislation.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I doubt that we will find many people who will think they can come out ahead at the end of the year on a basis of a $300 bonus, if that is what one wants to call it, for an additional child.

We have had a lot of correspondence recently saying that a $600 deduction in the income tax was not enough to take care of the cost of a child and that we were not making the proper allowance. So in the last tax bill we did try to move in the direction of an improvement in that situation.

I do not believe we will find that anyone is going to look at it as an economic incentive to have more children to get the amount of the allowance we provide in this bill for each individual child.

The CHAIRMAN. The time yielded by the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The Chair advises the gentleman from Wisconsin that he has consumed 40 minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I hope before he concludes the gentleman will allude to one matter in the bill I did not refer to; that is, these special works projects we have included in the bill for the purpose of seeing that people who do not find jobs in regular employment may have the opportunity to get work in those projects.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield time to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MILLS. I will yield time to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for an additional 5 minutes.

I dwelt on the work incentives because this is tied in to the fact that you cannot just deal with the problem of the nonworking poor. If you are going to move in the direction of getting people to work, to become self-sufficient, you cannot then turn your back on them as soon as they become working poor. That is why we have this incentive and this encouragement to work built into the bill.

Let me point out another important provision in this bill that is not in present law. Under present law we require the States to refer "appropriate individuals" to the employment service for work training and work. Who makes that determinations? The social worker, the welfare worker. What has been the result? It has varied all over the lot between States, but in too many cases the social worker has decided that it was not appropriate, for a mother with children to work. Not only have they said, I would say to my good friend from Illinois, that it is not appropriate for a woman with preschool children to work, but they say it is not appropriate for any woman with children to work.

We do not use the word "appropriate" in this bill to determine who shall be referred for work and training. We say everyone shall be required to register and take training and work, with a few exceptions specifically written into the law—such as mothers with children under 6 and the disabled. But even in the case of the disabled we require them to register with the rehabilitation agency to see if their disability can be corrected.

We encourage mothers of preschool children to volunteer and provide them with child care. We direct the employment service and the Department of Labor to train these people and to give them equal opportunities even though their participation is voluntary.

By spelling out the exceptions in the statute we do not leave to the discretion of some welfare worker whether an individual should be referred to work and training. The emphasis in this bill is on employment, so we charge the employment service with this responsibility under carefully specified conditions. The responsibility is with our principal manpower and employment agency—right where it belongs.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I have some questions concerning this legislation. I have been told the only pilot project which has been conducted for precisely this type of program for workers on welfare is one in New Jersey. I understand it was carried on under the auspices of the Office of Economic Opportunity. I was further informed it was based on an enrollment of 80 to 90 families and that only 1 year of the project was considered, and it had another 2 years to go. Is that rather sketchy information correct?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Not entirely. I do not recognize the figures you refer to as being those associated with that study. We can make available to the gentleman the conclusions of this study, because we did call in the group that conducted the study, and they are developing further information now.

But this study was not concerned with welfare cases. It had to do with the person who is currently working, and whether a supplement to these families would discourage them from working and improving themselves. Their conclusion was that there was an incentive to work even though there was some assistance being given to this individual.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Am I right that this was a New Jersey study under the auspices of the Office of Economic Opportunity?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. The Office of Economic Opportunity participated in it and the overall contract was under their auspices.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, am I correctly advised that the study has not been fully completed?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Oh, no, it has not been fully completed, but it has gone to the point that they were able to draw conclusions.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me at that point?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COLLIER. I would like to add something to that. The idea of providing incentive and encouraging people to work is not new. This is not a new program. For years out in my State where general welfare assistance and welfare programs were conducted by the various township supervisors and administrators of general assistance, this was a common practice. I happened to have served in that capacity for 4 years in a township. It was not unusual at all to help a lower income family by getting them either a part-time job or by getting them training, whether it was to work in a local gas station or what not. It worked, I can tell you that. It worked in more than one town. This is not a new concept. It is just as basic as apple pie.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further,

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Yes, I yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I do not wish to get into a debate on this precise point. But I have had experiences with the earning limitation on social security. I know about that and I hope to goodness that the members of the Committee on Ways and Means know that many people when they get up to the earnings limitation, they stop work even if they could still get $1 out of every $2 earned after that limitation.

Another question; what would be the chance of a college student who is married and, perhaps, has one or two children, with no earnings income or no assets? Would he or would he not qualify as one of the families under this program?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. The individual, if my memory serves me correctly, and correct me if I am wrong here—would probably be eligible on the basis that he was the head of a household taking training.

Mr. CLEVELAND. And this would be so regardless of whether his father was a millionaire or not? In other words, do you go into the family background to see if there is sufficient income to take care of this particular situation? Do you stop right there with the new young family itself?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. We do not impose a father's responsibility for an adult child. But we do have a minor child provision. In fact, there is a new provision in this bill. To the degree that that the Federal Government is paying family assistance to any child or the wife of an individual, he now has a financial liability to the Federal Government for the amount that has been paid by the Federal Government to support his family. I assume this is an independent household with, perhaps, a child. We would look into that individual's resources.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I am talking about the family case where the college student is married and has a couple of children and maybe is in postgraduate school because his family has been able to arrange for him to continue education, start a family, and stay out of the draft by providing postgraduate training. There he sits as an independent family. I am wondering whether he is entitled to these benefits or not.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. The question is, are the resources of this parent available to this child. If they are, then this child will not be eligible.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the distinguished Chairman.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, on the point raised by the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND), first of all I would say to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES), that we must bear in mind that the individual was required to make himself available through the employment office, to call there for a job. Of course, he most likely would not be in need of any training, and if they found a job for him he would have to take that job. If he could not earn enough to bring his income up to the standard he might get some supplementation but in that particular case I do not think there is any real possibility that he would be eligible for benefits.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I do not think a graduate student would be covered, but the individual who is still an undergraduate might be, because he might be considered in training.

Mr. CLEVELAND. And would it be true for a technical or vocational school or how about college or an engineering school?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. If it is considered to be part of the appropriate training for this individual.

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. For work.

Mr. CLEVELAND. That is why people want to go to college, and why we want everybody to go to college, to get an education and prepare for work.

Another question; how about a couple on social security, and they adopt a grandchild or even have had a child? Would they be eligible for relief under this?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from New Hampshire, I think that they could be.

Mr. CLEVELAND. My reading of the bill, which I admit is somewhat cursory, leads me to believe they might be, because if the person were in need and had a dependent in the family under 21 years of age, and that would be the adopted person or child I am referring to, they would be eligible.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I think the gentleman is correct. Of course, their social security income would reduce their family assistance benefit dollar for dollar, as there is no income disregard applicable to unearned income. The registration and work requirements would also be applicable to this individual unless he was unable to engage in work by reason of his advanced age.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, even though a person may be in training he cannot prescribe his own type of training and then run down to the welfare office, and say "I am in training, so send me a check." He must undertake that course of training prescribed by the employment office. The employment office must say to the fellow that as part of the training we think appropriate for him he is going to the vocational school. If he does not go, then he would not be eligible.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Continuing the suggestion that the chairman has given us, if we take this young married person, if he has two children and a wife, and he goes down to the employment office, and if he tells the employment office "I might be able to go to college if I can get a little help for the family," are you telling me the employment office would not approve that, as going into training?

Mr. MILLS. I do not know what they would do because it is not intended to supply money for those in school. Let us get that point clear. But it might be that the employment office would decide that in order to train a person who is already on AFDC that it would be necessary for them to at least complete another year of school, but this program is not intended to apply to people going to college, whatsoever.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman says this has no application to a person to go to college?

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. GROSS. No application whatever to the person under this program?

Mr. MILLS. They are not available for full-time work in the first place.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

My BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out in regard to the question raised by the gentleman from New Hampshire that you just cannot do it under this program, there is not enough money in this whole project. We are talking about 80 cents a day to feed a child. You are not going to be able to feed one for that price unless you are willing to do something else to earn income. And we are only talking about for adults a little more than that per day, so there is just not enough money in the whole program to do the kind of things the gentleman is pointing out even if it were legally possible.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LATTA. To me, the gentleman's argument on this bill is based on the fact that you are attempting to keep the father in the home and keep the family together so that he does not have to absent himself from the family in order for them to get some relief. Is that not one of the purposes of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. That is one of the problems encouraged by the present law and this bill attempts to correct it.

Mr. LATTA. Let me give you a hypothetical situation under this bill and see whether or not by splitting up a family of a husband and wife and four children, the way this bill is now written, you would not come up with more money.

Take a family of a husband, wife, and four children. Under the terms of this bill, they would get $2,200. It would be easy to figure under the composition of a family as set forth on page 11 and 12. If you are really looking out for dollars and cents, which you are trying to get away from through the present system, under the provision of this bill the father could take two children and the mother could take two children and each set up a home and so get $2,600 as opposed to $2,200.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. As a matter of economics, if you get down to the precise figures there are additional costs in setting up a completely separate household rather than staying in one household. I do not think you have a very good case when you consider the additional cost they are going to incur.

Mr. LATTA. That is the same argument, however, that the gentleman is using and that the proponents of this bill are using against the present welfare system, where the husband would stay away from his home State or go to another place to live and go where he could get more money. But now you are saying you cannot use those same arguments against this situation. I would suggest to the gentleman to clear up the language of this bill and prevent this situation from happening when it goes to conference.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Ohio in the Committee on Rules raised the question about the language of the bill.

As I said in my opening remarks, I am certainly not going to contend that every word in this bill is perfect. But I do not see, if we made even one mistake or two in the bill, that that is any excuse for killing the whole theory of the redirection of this program.

Actually, I do not think we have made all these mistakes. But, if we have, this legislation will be amended just as all other legislation is amended.

In the instance that the gentleman mentions where the father is in the household, he would have to register for work and employment. Whereas now both the father and the mother would have to do that.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Additionally, the father would have a liability to Uncle Sam for the amount of Federal funds paid to his wife and child as a result of the father leaving them. I doubt that he would find this would be a very advantageous situation.

Mr. LATTA. Is the gentleman inferring that there is no liability now?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. There is no Federal liability.

Mr. LATTA. I know that. But how about State liability?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. There is to the extent the State enforces it. But now we make it a Federal responsibility. We do this to make sure that there is proper enforcement and also to assist in the problem that occurs when a father absents himself from the State and it becomes difficult for the local authorities to trace him into another State. This is new under this legislation—the imposition of the Federal responsibility.

Mr. LATTA. If the gentleman will yield for just one further question—as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Wisconsin, that this not only requires the husband to go out and seek employment but also puts the responsibility on the mother in the case where she has children above the age of 6.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Right.

Mr. LATTA. As I pointed out before the Committee on Rules, as the gentleman remembers, I am very much opposed to this because I think a mother's place is in the home when they have children 6 and 7 years of age.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Well, you differ with the gentleman from Illinois who is criticising the bill because we do not make the mother with children under 6 register. That shows the difficulty we have in trying to reach a happy medium.

Mr. LATTA. My friend, the gentleman from Illinois, does not cast my vote nor does he think for me.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I know that.

Mr. LATTA. But I am stressing the fact, and I am hoping your great committee, when you get this matter into conference will give a little thought about keeping the mother in the home, as well as the father.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I think it is most important to respond to that. First, if there are no children under 6 it means that the children are in school during the daytime. The mother in this case does not have to be there during the daytime to take care of these children. Why should she not be at work.

Second, it seems to me the greatest therapy for these kids is to have them see somebody get up in the morning and go to work and not just grow up in a family that has had to rely on a welfare check. So as far as my particular viewpoint is concerned, I see nothing wrong at all in requiring mothers with children who are over 6 years old to register to take training and to take work. That is why I disagree with the gentleman.

I must yield the floor at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BROYHILL) such time as he may require.

(Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16311 because I believe it is a move in the right direction.

If there appears to be a suggestion of some hesitancy in my voice, there is. But the engulfing welfare mess we are now in has convinced us all that the present welfare system has failed. While I do not have the confidence that the family assistance plan will lead us quickly from our dilemma, it is a new approach, a new hope, that can lead those caught in welfare and the poverty cycle to the greener pasture of self-sufficiency and off welfare rolls onto tax rolls.

For those who are concerned, as I am, about guaranteed annual wage, the family assistance plan is not that. It adds to the current "guaranteed income," if you will, of present welfare handouts, the condition that qualified ablebodied members register—take training—and get to work or improve themselves for a better job. By contrast, the Heineman Commission report contains no such condition to its income maintenance payments.

I am convinced that too long we have heard the voice of the social theorists overpersuading poverty level persons that they have a right to welfare, that the almighty Government owes them a living whether they work or not. I am against force that destroys human dignity as much as the social theorists. But studies now bear me out that this coddling attitude has been wrong all along. If we listen to the mothers on welfare and to the majority in the poverty cycle, they want to work, if they can have some help on child-care needs and training.

Even in this bill, mothers with children under age 6 are exempt from the registration requirement, though such persons may voluntarily register and enter a training program, utilizing day-care assistance.

How many of us know families in the middle income, and even affluent group, who have working parents, with children under age 6 at home or in special facilities? Why must we continue to force a coddling attitude on those on welfare, when they prefer to respond to opportunity. A survey in New York City among welfare mothers showed that six out of 10, who had children under age 6, said they would prefer to work if they had child-care help.

We need to get rid of the overkill approach to welfare. Even in the family assistance plan there is this lurking element in the day-care plan. Federal funds will provide 100 percent of the rehabilitation and renovation of the proposed day-care centers. The emphasis in meeting the day-care needs appears to be directed toward elaborate centers with specially qualified professional persons.

But it does not require a genius to take care of a child. One study showed that retarded children reared by women with IQ of less than 80, became productive workers, while a controlled group of similar retarded children left behind in the care of an institution never became productive in their lifetime.

Without denying the value and need of such day-care centers, it is my apprehension that the emphasis of the administrative professionals is to go heavy in this direction. This is despite the fact a majority of welfare and working mothers would prefer to make their own child-care arrangements, either with a relative or neighbor, rather than transport their child to a more distant elaborate center. The working families who live in your neighborhood and my neighborhood do not have a day-care supervisor for their children with a master's degree.

What the poverty families want is not overkill. They are not demanding a Cadillac, but they could use a compact. They want basic help, opportunity for training for a job that exists after taking that opportunity, and some financial help with day care while taking that training and working.

I also am concerned that disappointment may set in when it is realized that the task of providing training for jobs that exist cannot be met overnight for all those for whom this program is intended to serve. We are taking a big bite that will take us longer than we think to digest.

But I do like the more positive approach to this program. It has been shown that rising economy itself reduces gradually the number of persons in the poverty levels of income, yet our welfare rolls have increased with this burdgeoning economy.

I am glad that this plan recognizes the working poor—the folks who have been wearing the white hats. It is time that we give a helping hand to those who have not shirked in their effort to break out of the poverty cycle, despite the present incentive to join their more affluent neighbors on welfare.

It is a program designed to help families stay together.

It establishes Federal standards to reduce the flow of welfare-oriented families to the urban areas.

It seeks to do something about holding deserting fathers—and mothers—financially responsible for their families.

It raises the level of adult assistance for the aged, blind, and disabled to $110 a month.

It brings a measure of financial relief to the States.

And, importantly, it places a lid on the ceilingless Federal payments that have been growing by leaps and bounds for aid to families of dependent children.

Mr. Chairman, I recommend the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILBERT).

(Mr. GILBERT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in full and complete support of the Family Assistance Act of 1970. As a member of the Committee on Ways and Means who helped formulate the bill before us today, I commend my chairman (Mr. MILLS), as well as the ranking minority member (Mr. BYRNES). I believe the bill as it is before us today represents a substantial improvement in the proposal submitted by President Nixon to Congress last year.

The bill offers a meaningful step forward toward easing the burdens of welfare in this Nation, not only for those who desperately need assistance but for those citizens who must pay the bill.

I commend the committee particularly for important improvements in categories relating to assistance for the aged, the ill, the handicapped, and the blind.

Mr. Chairman, none of us are ever completely satisfied with a bill when it leaves the committee, and this bill, no matter how revolutionary, is no exception. I, among others, strongly urged the committee to raise the minimum levels per family. I believe the proposed allotments now in the bill of $500 for the first two members of a family and $300 for each additional member, are simply not adequate to provide a satisfactory base.

I would hope that once this program is implemented, it will become clear to the administration that minimum levels must be raised in the next fiscal budget. Nevertheless, I view the bill in its present form as an important first step that must be taken and I am hopeful that a majority of the House will so agree.

This bill is, of course, as controversial as any that will come before this body this year. But let me discuss briefly just several of the provisions in the bill that, to me, make its passage essential.

The bill will extend family assistance coverage from 7 million persons to 20 million Americans. And in the critical area of programs for the aged, the blind, and the handicapped, coverage will be extended from 3 million to 4 million persons.

And for the first time, our social welfare program will encourage, rather than discourage, a male head of household to remain in the home and help provide needed balance to his family.

For the first time, welfare is recognized as a national rather than a local problem. This bill will not only ease the overwhelming financial burden on local governments, it will at last put an end to the need for the heartbreaking migration of untrained rural citizens to our Nation's cities.

Mr. Chairman, my own city of New York has long carried out the most liberal of family assistance programs. And as the costs grew ever more awesome, attempts were made periodically to "weed out" the so-called welfare cheats. But, even though there have been some spectacular exceptions, the general conclusions of these investigations proved simply that a great many people had valid cause to be on welfare rolls.

The inescapable fact is that a great many of our citizens do need assistance if they are to survive. I believe it is the responsibility of Government to offer that assistance until such time as they can be helped to become self-supporting citizens once again.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, let me close with these simple thoughts. Our Nation is one of wealth and abundance. In less than 200 years we have fashioned the most progressive, forward-looking Nation ever to exist. We believe devoutly in fundamental freedoms, in justice, equality, and opportunity. We have shared our riches with many nations; indeed, we have often been more generous abroad than we have at home. Let us now use part of our resources to help our own people. I believe it is an investment this Nation will look back on with pride, for after all, it is an investment in our own future.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. ULLMAN).

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it grieves me to find myself in opposition to my chairman and my friend from Wisconsin. The chairman was reminiscing to me the other day about the two greatest mistakes he made since he was in the Congress, and I would say to the chairman that, compared to what you are doing today, those others will fade into insignificance.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ULLMAN. I yield to the distinguished chairman.

Mr. MILLS. I have been praying the Lord that he will deliver me from all of these many mistakes I have made.

Mr. ULLMAN. I am hopeful, too, Mr. Chairman.

The chairman very eloquently pointed out the deficiencies of the present welfare system, and I think most of us would concur. But I would say you do not have to adopt this remedy to cure the deficiencies that he pointed out. For example, the problem of the family breakup. All it would take would be a simple Federal standard requiring unemployed fathers to be covered in all States. Obviously that would cure that problem.

With respect to the problem of the WIN program referrals, all we would have to require here is the Federal standard making it mandatory to refer whomever we saw fit to the employment agencies. But at any rate, the big problem we have here today is trying to understand a complex piece of legislation. I hope this Committee will not, just because there are deficiencies in the present program, go headlong into a new program that is so totally untried and so full of pitfalls that I will attempt to outline very briefly here today.

Mr. Chairman, today we are considering one of the most far-reaching pieces of legislation to come before Congress in recent years.

Passage of this welfare reform bill would mark a turning point in American social and economic history. The Federal Government would embrace the philosophy that American citizens are entitled to a guaranteed annual income. It is true that we limit that guarantee to those with limited assets, those with families and those who register at the employment office. But within those limitations the taxpayers of the Nation will be charged with permanent income maintenance for all.

Because I disagree with this basic concept as well as many specific provisions of the bill, I oppose its passage. I am not, however, an opponent of welfare reform. In my judgment, it is possible to devise an effective Federal program that will bring meaningful help to the poor. It is not, however, possible through this bill. I have great compassion for the poor. I believe that we can eliminate poverty and that should be one objective.

The action of this bill is to dispense cash. There is a great deal of talk about work incentives. But the bill offers little that is new in the employment area except the basic proposition that everybody on welfare who is eligible to work must register to work. Once registered, the poor will face most of the same frustrations and disillusionments they now encounter under the present welfare-work system. Few improvements would be instituted. The significant difference is that 3 million more heads of families would be registered for the course in frustration and disillusionment.

The administration indicates that it will provide for an increase in funding for job training and child care in the first full year of the family assistance program. But the increase is not enough to overcome the inadequacies of the existing programs, much less enough to meet the demands of a greatly expanded new program.

Mr. Chairman, we have before us a bill with imposing consequences and serious deficiencies. It deserves the full understanding and careful consideration of the Congress before action is taken.

We cannot afford to say simply: "Anything is better than the present system." The stakes are too high.

I will vote for a straight recommittal of the bill. The committee can produce a bill that is responsive to the need, yet preserves the integrity of the system.

I would like to take a few minutes now to describe some of the questions that this bill has raised in my mind during the 6 months it has been before the committee. In my judgment, these questions still need to be answered.

Before us is a complex bill that overnight would nearly triple the size of the Nation's welfare rolls to 25 million and double the Federal cost of welfare to more than $8 billion a year.

The cost of the family assistance program is to be met by open-ended appropriation of the Congress from general tax revenues. The administration says the first-year cost of the new program to the Federal Government will be an added $4.4 billion. The committee proposes legislation that on top of total coverage of the Federal floor, would commit the Federal Government to pay 30 percent of the supplemental costs of the States, up to the limits of the poverty level.

This, of course, is only a beginning. An extra $4 billion for Federal floor benefits in the early 1970's will easily become an extra $8 billion by the late 1970's. A 30-percent share in supplemental payments will undoubtedly be increased to 60 percent or higher within a few years. Congress will face annual pressure until the total cost of the welfare system is assumed by the Federal Government. This bill goes a long way toward federalizing the cost of the welfare system. The few steps remaining after its passage would merely be a matter of time.

The bill places a Federal floor under the adult categories in the system—the aged, the blind, and the disabled. Here there is no controversy. The increases in benefits that will result from the new floor are necessary to help those locked into a fixed income to meet the erosions of inflation on their benefit dollar. The system will continue to be operated in a conventional manner by the States.

Beneficiaries in these adult categories comprise less than 30 percent of the total number of persons receiving welfare checks. Their number has remained relatively level in recent years.

In the other major welfare category, family assistance, families are strictly defined. A minimum family requires two persons, an adult and a child under 18 or if he is a student, under 21. Single persons and couples without children are not eligible under the bill. This provision, incidentally, strikes me as one of the bill's most glaring anomalies. How can one accept the principle of guaranteed income for families and refuse to do it for single persons and couples?

Aid to families, of course, is the source of our mushrooming welfare costs, with the number of persons enrolled under the existing program having nearly tripled in the past decade. Later I will discuss how this total cost will mushroom in the future. But cost alone is not a sufficient reason for opposition.

What does this program do? First and, of course, the most important significant thing that it does, and the thing that has most of the Members of the Congress greatly concerned, within certain limitations it does prescribe for the first time in the history of this country a guaranteed family income program. I am going to cover that in a bit of detail later on. But we have never had this kind of family guaranteed income program under any circumstances in this country before.

Second—and I think this is very important—the United States under this program does directly assume the full responsibility for the welfare program, for determination of basic eligibility for all family welfare recipients.

That goes to the determination of income, to the determination of assets. The U.S. Government will administer the means test to the family status, and any other requirements under the program.

In assuming this responsibility the United States will be charged with the responsibility for that welfare determination, the determination of eligibility, as well as making the payments. These welfare payments across the land in every community and in every State will be paid directly out of the Federal Treasury. This includes all the 1.7 million families now on the AFDC program as well as this broad new designation that we call the working poor. So this bill would add 2.9 million new families—and that amounts to 15 million new people—to the welfare rolls in this country on a 100 percent Federal basis.

I was horrified in the committee in listening to the witnesses from the administration tell us how this program will work. I want to say it is an administrative monstrosity, that it does not eliminate any of the bureaucracy, but it just adds another layer. This, I think, is tremendously significant. I had hoped, personally, that when we had a proposal to reform welfare, we would use that opportunity to clean up the mess of bureaucracy we have operating in this whole area of poverty.

The Family Assistance Act moves toward nationalization of the welfare system, but it does not simplify the administration of the system.

A new Federal agency will have to be established in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to administer the family assistance plan. A whole new bureaucracy would be born.

The payment program would operate essentially on a declaration basis. The prospective beneficiary would declare his basis for eligibility under the uniform standards, and once approved and registered in the employment office, he would begin to receive a benefit check. The declaration system is already in use at some New York City welfare centers, replacing personal interviews and investigation as the basis for eligibility. It is viewed by many welfare experts as a major step in the shift from a work-oriented welfare system to an income maintenance system.

Spot checking of a sampling of initial declarations is planned to ensure accurate reporting of income. This is clearly an inadequate safeguard against abuse of the system.

The Federal Government will have its hands full coping with the high turnover of families in need, and the fluctuation of income in the poverty level. Under the existing program, in 1968 some eight million separate persons received welfare checks, even though the average monthly number of recipients in that year was only 5.7 million. Determining the amount of the monthly check for the working poor will be extremely difficult. As one expert witness told the committee during hearings:

> There is a very large amount of up and down in the income of people in these lower income levels, and in percentage terms it is immense. Fifty percent, 60% variations are not at all uncommon.

There will be critical administrative problems under the work registration requirements of the bill, too. The Secretary of Labor has the full responsibility under the bill to develop programs for manpower services, training, and employment, and is expected to utilize State employment services in many cases to implement these programs. According to the Secretary of Labor's own description before the committee, his department would work on a joint basis with State and local agencies to develop manpower and employability plans for recipients. The Secretary would get guidelines for these plans, but actual implementation, in his words, would go "office by office." The failure of State agencies to use imaginative, innovative approaches in placing welfare beneficiaries in training programs is a major source of concern about the existing system.

The food stamp program, which is billed as an integral part of FAP's attack on poverty, will in fact remain very much outside FAP for administrative purposes, continuing under the direction of the Department of Agriculture. The committee recognizes the inefficiency and potential ineffectiveness of this division of the poverty program.

Thus, we will keep much of the bureaucratic mess we have. On top of it we will add a new layer of Federal bureaucracy operating both in Washington and in hundreds of American cities.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ULLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman had some testimony before his committee on the administration of this program. I just wonder if the gentleman had any testimony on how much it will cost to administer this program.

Mr. ULLMAN. It would be a guess, whatever we said. The administration had some figures as to what it would cost, but they are not based upon anything in the world of reality at all. If we are talking about proper administration, if we are talking about a real determination of assets and not just opening up the Federal Treasury to everybody who fills out a form, then the administration costs would be completely beyond anything that has been proposed by the administration.

Mr. KYL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ULLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KYL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is making a fine statement. My major concern about this whole procedure is this. The first time the matter came before the Congress which would try to enforce making a person work before she or he could get welfare, I am convinced this body would turn its back on the philosophy of this program and say we just cannot force a person to go to work to get welfare, and we would be right back where we were except we will have the guaranteed annual wage on top of this program.

Mr. ULLMAN. I think the gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ULLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, do I understand from my friend, the gentleman from Iowa, that he is disappointed because the bill requires these people to take training, to go to work?

Mr. KYL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ULLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KYL. Mr. Chairman, what I am saying is with the social system in the United States and with the court system working as it is in the United States, no one is going to force anyone in the final analysis to go to work, no matter how lofty or honorable a goal it would be.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman assures us that is not the case, that there are 3 million, 200 thousand of these people who either possess training or are capable of training and after training go to work. Would the gentleman like to see them working?

Mr. KYL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I would ask the gentleman from Arkansas this question: Did not this Congress a few years ago adopt a policy which would have forced the ADC mothers, for instance, to go to work?

Mr. MILLS. No, we did not. We put the onus on the States to see to it that they had training.

The States decided that none of them were "appropriate for training." They got out of it in practically every State.

Now we are taking over the program, and we will have Federal employees making that decision under the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare must assume the responsibility if the program is not administered properly.

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Chairman, let me proceed with an analysis very quickly of this work requirement. In my judgment this is the most overrated provision in this whole bill.

The administration has sold the family assistance plan on the proposition that its program will achieve this goal. The fanfare for "workfare" raises the expectations of hundreds of thousands of Americans that new and better jobs will develop under FAP. But the program neither lays the foundation for these jobs nor provides adequate funding for training and child care to make working feasible.

This is the problem. It takes money to train people. There is not that kind of money in the President's budget, to even break the surface of the overall problem.

I have a chart here indicating 1969, 1970, 1971, and 1972, indicating what the funding provisions in the bill are, and at the break what the problem is. We are not even beginning to cope with the problem of training these people. It is an extremely expensive proposition.

When we say we are going to refer them to the Employment Bureau, the employment agencies will have a hard time just handling the paperwork of registering them. Insofar as the training and work placement are concerned, I see nothing in the bill that would implement those programs.

The key work program for welfare beneficiaries now is the work incentive program—WIN. Authorized in 1967 by Congress, WIN got off to a slow start but has gained momentum steadily in the recent months. Although there are many defects in the program, WIN has its strong supporters. The director of California's WIN program, Aaron Levin, who is a veteran administrator of four succeeding Federal manpower programs, told the committee that WIN is "to me the most heart warming, the most comprehensive, the most flexible program I have ever seen for training and employment of welfare recipients."

Levin observed that WIN brings together the three major systems required for a successful program—education, labor and welfare. It is tailored at the State and local level to meet the special needs of local and regional problems. It employs a unique team approach to solving individual cases, including coaching by other welfare beneficiaries already enrolled in the program.

An important deficiency in WIN has been the lack of adequate funding for the program.

In fiscal 1969, Federal outlays for WIN totals only $33 million to cover 81,000 slots. Budgets for fiscal 1970 and 1971 call for sizable increases but not nearly enough to meet demand in many areas. For example, New York City has 9,600 training slots in fiscal 1970. But officials told the committee that the need is for 48,000 slots.

Nothing like this kind of a quantum jump is planned under FAP. WIN is to be repealed by FAP, and replaced apparently by a program much like it. The administration plans in the first full year to open up 150,000 new training slots and to provide training to upgrade skills of 75,000 of the 3 million newly registered working poor at a total cost of $210 million. The scope of the proposed program is clearly inadequate.

There are, in fact, a long list of problems with FAP that must be solved if work incentives are to be anything but hollow rhetoric. These include:

First. Transportation. A marked shift in the makeup of the welfare population will occur under FAP from urban to rural, largely because of the addition of the working poor. Most of the working poor live in nonurban areas.

Among the existing welfare population, 73 percent live in urban areas, 27 percent in nonurban areas. According to one study presented before the committee, the FAP population will break down almost 50–50 between urban and nonurban. Among the nonurban FAP population, 75 percent will live in towns of less than 2,500 population.

Besides making job training programs more uneconomical, the shift in the welfare population toward nonurban areas presents a transportation problem. Lack of adequate transportation is already a serious concern under existing programs. In rural areas, enrollees in the WIN program are stranded miles from program centers without cars or access to public transportation facilities.

FAP's nonsolution is a cruel one. Persons living in rural areas where private or public transportation opportunities are not available will be required to register for FAP, but will not be required to participate in the program. These people will not be considered priority cases under FAP. Government public transportation services will receive low-priority attention, Labor Department officials admit.

Special works projects: This current program could be one of the most fruitful in finding jobs in the public sector when they are not available in private industry. The program would employ welfare recipients through Federal, State, and local public and nonprofit agencies, offering particular usefulness in times of high unemployment in the private sector.

Adequate financial incentives to participate in this program have not been forthcoming, and public agencies have virtually ignored the program. Only about 765 slots have been activated, with 750 in one State, West Virginia. Funding is running below $1 million a year.

The committee calls for a renewed emphasis on this program in its report, and expresses the hope that there will henceforth be "wide implementation of special work projects."

But it should be noted that the administration's original bill barely mentioned special projects, and no estimates of future funding are available. In my judgment, there are no grounds for optimism that this important vehicle for expanding employment opportunities for welfare workers will be utilized any more effectively than it has been in the past.

CHILD CARE

A critical area if any new welfare program is to succeed is child care. FAP would expand the federally aided day-care program by adding 450,000 more children. This is an important step forward.

But more can and should be done in child care. Among the adult family welfare population, there are 750,000 women with recent full- or part-time work experience. This Labor Department statistic suggests the need for at least a further doubling of day-care slots and funding beyond the FAP proposal.

The FAP annual unit costs allocated per child of $1,600 for full-time day care and $400 for part-time care fall below the "acceptable" level of child care as defined by experts before the committee. These unit costs are only marginally above the minimum level of care, where the health and safety of the child are the primary concerns, and little attention can be given to developmental needs. Many experts in this field observe that the disadvantages to children of a minimum level of care far outweigh the advantages of having mothers work.

Token funds of $24 million would be authorized in the first full year for renovation and remodeling of child-care centers. No money is earmarked for construction of new day-care facilities. This is considered a serious shortcoming under the present program, and will obviously prove more serious under a greatly expanded program.

Beyond these specific problems, there are broad defects in the job provisions of FAP. A basic fault of this entire exercise in so-called fundamental welfare reform is the administration's failure to attempt some streamlining of the myriad numer of Federal programs now operating, and daily overlapping, in the manpower development area.

The Department of Labor presented an exhibit to the committee that showed there are 24 federally assisted manpower number of Federal programs now operaterating—some under the Labor Department, others under HEW, Defense, Commerce, and HUD.

Critics of this bureaucratic nightmare who appeared before the committee spoke of "unproductive competition among manpower programs," and "redundant calls to personnel managers," to mention only a couple of comments.

The provisions of the FAP program aimed at consolidation amount to fine tuning, not major adjustment. In my judgment, most of the 24 programs should be consolidated under a single welfare-experienced agency.

Another major problem area that FAP does not solve is where the new and improved jobs will be found at the end of the training programs.

A study by the Auerbach Corp. of Philadelphia presented to the committee stressed that "much more needs to be known about the actual availability" of jobs related to Federal manpower programs. The study recommended that a job analysis, on a site-by-site basis, should be made with particular emphasis on the relative potential of the public and private sectors of the economy to supply jobs.

A manpower program for the poor has to be developed around the existing market, not merely assumptions that jobs will be available at the end of the training program. The size of local welfare manpower programs is presently determined by the size of the welfare population. As the Auerbach study rightfully points out;

It would make some sense to let the project size be governed by actual job availability.

The study adds:

Labor market analysis would also ensure that training programs were suitable for existing jobs.

There is no hint that FAP will correct these errors. There is only every indication that the program will carry the Nation further into the mire by a massive expansion of the work-registration rolls without any knowledge of the possibilities for placement in new or improved jobs.

We have had some talk about the penalties, that if one does not work he will lose his welfare payment. What is the situation? If the family head refuses to work the only penalty here that we impose upon him is a loss of $300 a year in the amount of the payment. His wife would then get $500 and the first child would get $500, and it would be $300 for each child beyond that. So the only penalty we are imposing for refusing to work is $300 a year.

I have a chart here I will show in a moment which indicates the magnitude of what we are talking about in terms of Federal assistance.

Let us look very briefly at how this guaranteed income program works. I want to point out, this is something new. We have never had it under any guise as a program in this country.

I believe the best way to illustrate how it would work is to show the Members a table. I am sorry you are not able to read the numbers. I will insert it in the RECORD for your study. This is the kind of table that will obviously be available to every so-called working-poor family in this country. All one has to do is to get a copy of it.

Number of children

Let us take a couple of examples. First let us go down to the $720 level. Anyone in the country could earn $720 and still get 100 percent of family assistance payments under this program. So a family of two would get $1,300 and a family of three $1,600, and on up to a family of 10, which would get $4,000 under this program, assuming all they earned was $720. But where it gets more complicated is the 2.9 million new families of working poor that we are putting under the program. We assume a lot of them have never been on welfare. But suppose they are making $2,500 a year and have a family of six children. You go up the column and you find the Federal Government then would start paying them $1,910 every year. They would start getting a check for that amount the next month. If you will take a larger family, you could go up to $5,000 in income. Take a family of nine children. The Federal Government would pay them $1,560 every year. They would start getting that check the next month. Of course, this assumes the means test will be passed, which is $1,500 in assets. Remember, though, that the home is exempt and whatever assets are required to hold down a job. Presumably an automobile that would be used to travel back and forth to the job would be also exempt.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mrs. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ULLMAN. Insofar as the State supplements are concerned, we are going to pay up to the poverty level 30 percent of all of the costs of State supplementation on top of this all-Federal program. Adding it up, this program opens up the Treasury of the United States in a way that it has never been opened up before in our history. An individual fills out a form and says "I have $1,500 of assets and I have so much income." He fills it out and sends the form in to Washington. It presumably runs through a computer to see if the man has reported his income correctly or not. Then this table is consulted to determine how much he is eligible for. Then the check goes out. Every 100 persons or some such figure will be spot checked. However, I want to remind you that it is terribly expensive in a program like this to check. There is not sufficient money here for any kind of adequate check on the payments. Remember we are talking about 2.9 million new family heads that will begin receiving checks from the Federal Government on top of the existing 1.7 million welfare recipients already receiving checks from the State.

Mr. HUNGATE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ULLMAN. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNGATE. The report mentioned reform in here. Is there any place that this would reduce the number of those on welfare? Is there any contention by the gentleman to that effect?

Mr. ULLMAN. Of course this would not reduce it. This would add 2.9 million families. And the people who talk about an incentive to get off of welfare are just talking about pie in the sky. Everybody who is a realist knows that it will not happen. If you look at this kind of a table, there is nothing in there to induce anybody to get off of it, in my judgment.

Mr. HUNGATE. On that issue of reform, is there any place that you can reduce the cost of the welfare programs to the Government?

Mr. ULLMAN. In this program?

Mr. HUNGATE. Yes.

Mr. ULLMAN. No. This would add on top of all the welfare costs we have today well over $4 billion, but I think it would be far beyond that by the time the program gets into operation.

Let me go on very quickly.

Let us look at the integrity of social security. For years we have had a basic principle that you do not mix welfare and social security.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has again expired.

Mrs. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ULLMAN. But, under this program we are putting the Social Security Administration into the welfare business.

Further, and contrary to what has been said, it will not stop desertions or reunite families. The statistics are very clear. Many States that do include unemployed fathers like New York have a much higher rate of desertion than States that do not include them. You cannot find a correlation between the two.

The work requirement is a delusion. There is not any question about it. You would have to give the poor $2 billion that you have for the working poor and put it all into work training and child care to even make a dent in the problem of taking care of the people already on welfare, let alone these 2.9 million new families that we are adding to the welfare rolls.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are all kinds of loose ends in this program. The first thing that I think Members are beginning to feel already is the pressure to increase the $1,600 base.

These pressures are going to grow by leaps and bounds. There is no anchor in this program. We have got a movable feast of figures. There is no rationale. Once we pass this bill, then I think all the stops are out, and we are on our way, and in place of a $5 billion program, this is going to wind up a $20 billion program.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ULLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt the train of thought of the gentleman, but I understand the gentleman says that this is going to be administered as part of the Social Security Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Act, or Social Security Administration, as we think of it in those terms.

Mr. ULLMAN. I said by the Social Security Administration. The Social Security Administration will administer the act.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. But I think the gentleman should recognize that the committee made it clear that is exactly what we do not want done. If the gentleman will turn to page 27 of the report, he will see where we say:

> It is the intent of your committee that a new agency would be established in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to administer the family assistance plan.

We also say—and I will not read the whole paragraph, but we also say:

> For example, while the administration of the family assistance plan would be completely separate and distinct from the social insurance programs, the committee would expect that the computer equipment and other capabilities of the Social Security Administration would be utilized in the administration of the family assistance plan to the extent it is economical and efficient to do so.

So we make it very clear it is not going to be administered by the Social Security Administration.

Mr. ULLMAN. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will yield further, I say that, as I think the gentleman remembers, that I, too, had that concern if you would intermingle this plan with the administration of the old-age and survivors insurance system by the Social Security Administration, and that it would be inadvisable. And it was the result of those concerns that I had, and others had, that we put this language specifically into the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I may have 2 additional minutes to respond?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for the additional time.

Mr. Chairman, all I can say is this: Time after time in our hearings, and in our executive sessions, Mr. Ball, the Administrator of the Social Security Administration, indicated that in some instances this would be handled in the social security offices, and others it would not. Be that as it may, then that you are saying is that we are going to have a completely new welfare office in every community across this land.

Now, on top of everything else, on top of all the bureaucratic mess, we have these new welfare offices all across the land.

Mr. Chairman, let me summarize:

First. The bill does not achieve fundamental reform. Reform should be built on the solid foundation of experience, and should be backed by clearly defined principles understood by all. In my judgment, the bill is deceptive in nature and clearly understood by very few. The heart of welfare reform should be human rehabilitation. There is little of that in this bill.

Second. The bill does not provide a sound work incentive program. It raises the expectations of the poor for jobs through a universal work registration requirement, and then dashes them by grossly underfinancing the programs needed to make the jobs possible.

Third. The bill means more bureaucracy, not less. It gives sweeping authority to the Secretaries of Health, Education, and Welfare and of Labor to direct the new program, but provides little guidance for administrative reform. The mess of the existing system will be compounded under the new program.

Fourth. The bill establishes the basis for a guaranteed annual income through a negative tax formula. It would permanently consign more than 10 percent of our national population to welfare handouts.

The expansion of the Federal welfare rolls to include 3 million families classified as the "working poor" is a risky experiment based on an untried formula. We know next to nothing about the effects of guaranteeing the annual income of low-wage earners. The administration has trumpeted results of tests it has conducted in this area as evidence that the effect is positive, and that the desire to work is not destroyed by supplemental cash handouts.

While there are some encouraging aspects to these tests, it would be a grave mistake to use them as any kind of precedent for this legislation. The evidence so far is at best fragmentary. The OEO project in New Jersey involves a few hundred families and has been underway for only about a year. The director of this project, Harold Watts, told the committee earlier this year that his team has so far achieved "very incomplete and preliminary findings about low-income work behavior." He uses completely different criteria and the program is overburdened with administrative costs.

He also told the committee that the $64 question remains unanswered: Will cash handouts motivate low-income workers to increase their skills and make it on their own after the payments end? Much more research is needed on matters of this magnitude.

In my judgment, there is a strong possibility that the grand design for the working poor under FAP may go badly awry, and in fact result in a disincentive rather than an incentive to work. Cash handouts from the Federal Government to raise their earned incomes could replace the desire to earn additional wages. Tax-free Federal benefits and access to food stamps could in many cases provide a strong incentive for remaining in the low-income group and on the welfare rolls.

Without question, there is need for real reform of our welfare system. We need to make a real effort to streamline and consolidate the administrative network that operates the national welfare system. When we have cut down the bureaucracy, we could hope to apply successfully uniform standards for welfare eligibility and uniform procedures for dispensing benefits.

Above all, we need to expand greatly our federally aided programs aimed at employing welfare workers. These include the work incentive program, the special projects program for employment in the public sector, the JOBS program coordinated with the business community, and child care. We need to launch an organized effort to ensure that jobs for the trained welfare beneficiary will be available when he is ready to go to work.

The extra billions to be spent on welfare should go in this direction, not toward larger and larger cash payments for millions of Americans. This bill would pretend to go both ways at the same time. This is impossible. If work is to be emphasized, we cannot also underwrite a broad system of cash payments. If we accept the cash payment approach as proposed by this bill, then we have begun to move away irrevocably from work incentives to solve our poverty problems. A choice of this magnitude should not be made lightly.

I would say in conclusion that this bill should be recommitted. This bill will not eliminate poverty. It is only going to institutionalize it, and it is going to lead to unending problems year after year for every Member of this body.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ULLMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Rules Committee, I was privileged to listen to the pros and cons on the bill (H.R. 16311) to authorize a family assistance program providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to an extensive degree.

I voted to grant a rule to permit the consideration of this measure by the full House. I will vote again for the passage of H.R. 16311 because I believe that in theory it is a step in the right direction. I am especially pleased to note the inclusion of an incentive program designed to encourage those now on the welfare rolls to seek employment, and where not trained for employment to be prepared for employment under a proposed training program. However, as I observed during the Rules Committee hearings, I doubt very much that the program as outlined in the pending bill will succeed. I say this because the administration appears to be headed in the opposite direction where the unemployment situation is concerned.

On the one hand, the administration is proposing that those now on relief be trained for jobs to become self-sustaining. On the other hand, the administration appears bent on increasing the unemployment rate to as much as 5.5 percent in its effort to stem the tide of inflation. In the view of many economists, with whom I agree, the administration is acting on a mistaken theory. How can the administration hope to place newly trained workers into jobs when it is doing nothing to create jobs into which they can be placed. Instead, the administration, by its economic policy, is now eliminating jobs and increasing the unemployment roll to such an extent that those previously employed will be competing with the newly trained former welfare recipients for the limited number of jobs available, if any.

Mr. Chairman, unless the President reverses his present position, in the realization that his policy of stemming inflation through increased unemployment is a failure, and unless the President awakens to the fact that inflation is not a necessary complement to full employment, his so-called workfare program embodied in the pending bill can never be successfully launched. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, H.R. 16311 is a step in the right direction in theory, but in practice the program which it proposes will fail miserably unless the President's policy on unemployment is altered. In voting for this measure, I will do so in the fervent hope that the President will take immediate action to alter his policy to insure the success of this program.

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to follow my chairman and my ranking minority leader. After the very brilliant and comprehensive statements they have made in support of this bill, I feel that anything I may say will be anticlimax. I certainly want to associate myself with their remarks.

Mr. Chairman, to me some of the problems we have had in trying to resolve this issue is the same we have had with respect to any number of bills. In other words, the complaints I get are, "I am for welfare reform, except—." It is the same situation we had on the tax reform bill—"I am for tax reform—except—." It is the same we have when it comes to economy in government—"I am for economy in government, except so long as it does not affect me."

I want to repeat what the chairman said. I sat throughout all of the hearings, and I attended a majority of the executive sessions. I failed to hear anybody present any other welfare reform measure then. The only testimony we had in our committee, so far as I am able to recall—and I am willing to be corrected if I am wrong—were statements either for the bill or against the bill and nothing constructive, so far as any substitute program is concerned.

So that makes the problem of the Committee on Ways and Means just a little bit difficult.

This is a complicated and comprehensive bill. I do not want to appear to be oversimplifying it, but my only purpose is to make a few brief observations and sort of pinpoint some of the answers to the objections that we have received along the lines the chairman and the minority leader have expressed on the floor.

The first objection we hear is that it is a guaranteed income. Let me say in response to that that it is no more a guaranteed income than present welfare programs which are simply Federal contributions to State programs, for welfare payments on the basis of poverty levels or payment levels or some other assurance that people on welfare are going to get definite relief.

Now the classic definition of guaranteed income is an income which assures income regardless of work or need or earnings. This present formula of $1,600 is exactly the opposite. In my opinion, it is a ceiling instead of an assurance of a minimum. It places a ceiling up to which the Federal Government is going to contribute, taking into consideration all the other factors of work and of earnings and need. So really, and I think the chairman made this very plain as well as the minority leader, that in no sense of the word so far as the classic definition is concerned is this a guaranteed income.

Second, there is the complaint about costs. This is in a sense repetition, but I think it is worth it and it is in the report if you have read it.

In the last 10 years the number of people on the payroll as recipients under the present welfare programs has increased from 2.4 million persons to 6 million persons—in 10 years.

Also, the cost of the present welfare program in the last 5 years has tripled to $4 billion. The plain fact is simply this: If you want to continue a program such as that, a good way to do it is to vote against this bill, because that would be assurance that you are going to continue a program which has been tripling its expenses every 4 years.

The main thrust of this bill is grafted to an attempt to reduce these costs. Some of you may have read in the last few days, or at least a couple of weeks—I think it came to the office of every Member—a statement from the National Association of Manufacturers, which is certainly not regarded as a liberal organization, analyzing, I think in a friendly way, the possibility of reducion of costs in this welfare proposal. It says, simply stated, that in spite of the fact that there will certainly be an increase in the cost of this program immediately, that it had the potential of ultimate reduction in cost.

I was very much interested and almost intrigued by a statement which appeared in the February issue of the New England Letter, which is put out by the First National Bank of Boston, and which I assume also is certainly not a liberal organization. I wish to quote from it:

> The goal of employment rather than dependency is widely acclaimed, as is the prospect that welfare families would stay put rather than flock to the states and cities with the most generous payments. The present system is so hated by recipient and taxpayer alike that the estimated cost of an added $4 billion per year is less of a hurdle even at this time of budget stringency. As the plan moves into Congressional debate much sniping can be expected, and such adjuncts or alternatives as family allowances and a negative income tax or promise of a small guaranteed income will receive attention. Liberals and conservatives will find it difficult to oppose these improvements in a welfare system which has become increasingly out of step with reality.

The third objection is the one of adding the working poor. I think the figure usually given is 12 million without taking into consideration the fact that these are simply temporary additions until the program gets underway, after which the whole philosophy, the whole purpose, the whole main thrust is to remove people from the welfare programs and reduce the cost.

I took it upon myself last Monday to take the floor and to address myself to the opposition, which I think was pretty widespread, and all Members of Congress were well aware of it, of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce to this bill. I pointed out in a 1-minute speech last Monday that the chamber of commerce last fall had taken a poll of its members and 86 percent of them had responded in favor of this bill, citing the work incentive program as the reason for their support. I said I did that on Monday so, in fairness, the chamber of commerce could reply before the bill was brought up for debate. And they did, in a letter to me dated April 14, which I have permission to put into the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

But I want to read this one paragraph from this letter, which I think is important from the point of view of the House Members considering who is and who is not in opposition to this bill and how much.

> The National Chamber supports welfare reform and believes that some parts of the House bill are progressive. Our objection is directed only at the part of the bill that commits taxpayers to begin guaranteeing an income to families with fully employed fathers. Once this concept is established, we can visualize it would not be long before one-third or more of the National population would be receiving income supplements, at a cost of $20 billion or more annually.

As I read this letter from an organization which was widely reputed to have been in opposition to this bill. But, and I repeat, it says that its opposition is limited to the concept of the guaranteed income as it applies only to the working father or to the working poor.

The concept of the working poor, as has been well explained by the chairman and by the ranking minority member, is part of the main thrust of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Ohio 10 additional minutes.

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Chairman, the bulk of all the complaints I have received over the years to welfare programs is that too many people under the present programs are allowed to work and receive welfare at the same time. It is this current exclusion of the working poor families which makes it possible for the working people to be better off by getting welfare than by working. The very thing this bill does, is to remove this objection.

The third objection is, of course, the work incentive, and there seems to have been a great deal of comment about a New Jersey plan and about this work incentives program is a complete failure. As I sat in the committee and listened to all these people testify, as far as I know nobody spoke against the program. They did explain—and I can be corrected if I am wrong—that there are many aspects that could be improved.

That is the main thrust of their testimony, but nobody as I can recall has said that the WIN program is a failure.

Let me call the attention of Members, to a statement made by the Ohio Governor, James A. Rhodes, not long ago, and I am reading now from a clipping which appeared in a newspaper circulated widely in Ohio.

Governor James A. Rhodes last week praised the 20 counties which are making use of the Work Incentive Program to help get individuals in jobs and families off welfare rolls.

The Governor said that from Jan. 1, 1969, through Jan. 25, 1970, these counties have placed 892 enrollees of the Work Incentive (WIN) Program in meaningful employment and that welfare rolls have been reduced as a result by a total of 4,480 persons.

This has resulted in a monthly savings of $247,643 in welfare payments, he noted.

I mention this, not only because it comes from my State but also because it is pretty concrete proof that if this WIN program is given an opportunity to work, it will.

As I said, I do not want to oversimplify the issues here, but I simply want to try to pinpoint some of the answers to the objections to the bill.

In conclusion I want to point out this to the Members of the House. The President of the United States and two executive departments, the Department of Health, Eduction, and Welfare and the Department of Labor, have spent hours and months trying to come up with some solution to the age-old complaints about the present welfare programs. This is their answer. The Ways and Means Committee has spent hours and days and weeks of deliberations and has, with refining amendments, approved this proposal overwhelmingly.

On the basis of this tremendous amount of work, honest and conscientious effort to answer the objections which have been made to the present welfare program over the years, I do not hesitate to ask the House to support this bill.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I insert the letter I referred to earlier from the Chamber of Commerce dated April 14, 1970:

CHAMBER OF COMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., April 14, 1970.

Hon. JACKSON E. BETTS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BETTS: I was sorry to learn, from your statement in the Congressional Record of April 13, that you apparently have some trouble reconciling the National Chamber's current opposition to H.R. 16311 with the results of the informal poll conducted last fall at our Urban Action Forums in 15 cities, which seemed to show support for the President's welfare reform proposal.

Actually, the poll did not deal with the welfare issue as it stands today.

The poll, taken of our members and others in atendance at the meetings, showed 86.5% in favor of "welfare reforms" promised by the Administration. But at that time, the Administration's program was not recognized as something that would guarantee on income for many families with fully employed fathers.

Of the 2,163 persons poled, 47% said that what they wanted most was "to require welfare recipients who can do so, to take work or take training." Another 31% said they wanted most "to make taxpayers out of many welfare recipients." Clearly, majority opinion in the poll was for substituting workfare for welfare, where possible.

But when the legislation came along, it provided for welfare expansion, not reform, by tripling the number of persons on welfare. It would add to the welfare rolls some 3 million more families (15 million persons), all headed by fathers already working full time.

This provision had been thoroughly camouflaged in earlier discussions of the program, and no wonder, because it's the entry wedge for the guaranteed annual income. It extends the guarantee, as a starter, to families with fully employed fathers. If any head of such a family refused to work, or to take a better paying job if he was already working, his share ($300 a year) would be deducted from the family welfare allotment, but the rest of the family allotment is guaranteed, with nothing required and no questions asked about how the money is spent.

Once a program like that got started, where would it end? Even at the outset, large families with incomes of more than $7,000 would qualify for this new federal relief. The average worker's pay is $6,000. A family with seven children, earning $6,000 would get $460 a year in tax-free welfare. Businessmen polled last fall had no hint that anything like this was in the works.

Our position relative to the pending welfare issue was developed only after long and careful consideration. It was recommended by a Special Committee on Welfare Programs and Income Maintenance, made up of 14 distinguished top business executives who studied the welfare problem for more than a year. Our Board of Directors, whose 64 members come from all types of business in all parts of the country, formulated our policy, based on the committee's recommendations, in February, 1969. Our Board received a progress report in November, 1969 and reaffirmed our position in February, 1970.

The National Chamber Federation comprises 2,700 local, state and regional chambers and American chambers abroad, 1,100 trade and professional associations and 37,000 business firms and individuals.

It should be no surprise that the Chamber opposes the concept of a guaranteed income. We believe this is in accord with public sentiment. A Gallup Poll in 1968 revealed 58% opposed, 36% in favor, and 6% with no opinion.

The National Chamber supports welfare reform and believes that some parts of the House bill are progressive. Our objection is directed only at the part of the bill that commits taxpayers to begin guaranteeing an income to families with fully employed fathers. Once this concept is established, we visualize it would not be long before one-third or more of the National population would be receiving income supplements, at a cost of $20 billion or more annually.

Considering the potential impact of this legislation on taxpayers, it does seem appropriate that the bill come before the House on April 15 or thereabouts.

I would appreciate your placing this letter in the Congressional Record, as our answer to your statement.

Cordially,

HILTON DAVIS,
General Manager, Legislative Action.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETTS. I yield to the gentleman.

(Mr. BUSH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BUSH. Mr. Chairman, in my view the family assistance bill reported out of the Ways and Means Committee is a meaningful breakthrough in welfare legislation. It addresses itself to the ethical and financial realities of work in America today. The heritage of this country emphasizes the importance, fullfilment, and goodness of work. Yet we find ourselves today with a system of welfare under which people are better off manipulating the system and getting onto welfare than in working at a low wage job.

One of the most common complaints I hear from people back home is "How can people be out of work when the want ads are full of jobs?" They are disturbed that people take welfare when they could be working and they have a right to be disturbed. It is their tax dollars that are supporting the welfare program.

It is time we did something to help the man who is working for a living, trying to educate his children and trying to feed them as costs rise out of sight. The Ways and Means Committee kept this problem in mind and tried to find a better way of taking care of those who cannot help themselves while at the same time building work incentives into the program for those who are unemployed or now hold low-paying jobs and may be thinking of "going to welfare."

In designing an effective welfare program we cannot ignore the movement between the working poor and welfare status for there is a positive statistical correlation here. In Texas, for example, a man with a family of four is entitled to a welfare payment equal to $179 per month. For a nonwelfare family of four to do as well, the head of the household must earn the equivalent to $221 per month and this adds up to an hourly wage of $1.25. In Michigan it comes out to $1.94 per hour; in Massachusetts, $2.16; and in New York, $2.23. Why should a man or woman take a job for anything less? Yet most do. And this is one of the wonderful things about this country—people would rather work than not work.

Yet, we are endangering this important national characteristic by perpetuating a system that actually encourages people not to work. We have encouraged individuals who expect the Government to take care of them. The incentives in the present program that encourage this should be changed and I think this bill can do the job—I think it should be tried. It provides positive incentives by requiring those who accept welfare to register for work or work training; by permitting those who work to keep substantial portions of their earned income; and by expanding job training and day-care opportunities.

There are those who feel that this program is too expensive and I, for one, believe they have a valid point. But the alternative—the present Federal-State-local welfare system is even more expensive. If we do nothing, the costs of the program will be $12 billion by 1975 and we will have spawned a new generation of welfare recipients and broken homes.

There are others who feel that the program will only provide the framework for an even more expensive welfare system—one that in the future would provide a $5,500 guaranteed annual income for everyone. If this were a characteristic of this program, it would not have my support, the support of the Ways and Means Committee or the support of President Nixon. The family assistance plan, reported by the committee, is oriented toward work and is aimed only at families—these are not characteristics of a guaranteed annual income plan. Further, the present Federal-State welfare system comes a great deal closer to being a guaranteed annual income as it encourages idleness by making it more profitable to be on welfare than to work and provides no method by which the States may limit the number of individuals added to the rolls.

I must confess that I have one major worry about the program and that is that the work incentive provisions will not be enforced. In order to be successful, it is essential that the program be administered as visualized by the Ways and Means Committee; namely, if an individual does not work, he will not receive funds. Enforcement is essential; if the work requirement is not enforced it could simply lead to another boondoggle.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, we need to reform the welfare system, build work incentives into it, help with job training, provide day-care centers and job placement and, in short, permit families to work their way off welfare. The family assistance plan can do this.

The handout approach has failed. The existing system strips a man of his dignity. Let us reform the welfare system with work incentives—not crush it further by more giveaways.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETTS. I yield to the gentleman.

(Mr. MORTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, President Nixon has submitted to the Congress several innovative proposals which provide a needed new direction toward what he calls the "new federalism."

This Family Assistance Act of 1970 is a major piece of legislation which I believe will help achieve that objective. It is a bold move to effect a more significant coordination of effort between the Federal, State, and local governments. With the Federal Government providing the uniform floor for eligibility and payment requirements and absorbing the necessary increased costs, we are moving toward an equitable and efficient reform of our troubled welfare system.

In his message to the Congress proposing the transformation of welfare into "workfare," a new work-rewarding system, the President stressed that the effect of his plan would be:

For the first time, all dependent families with children in America, regardless of where they live, would be assured of minimum standard payments based upon uniform and single eligibility standards.

For the first time, the more than two million families who make up the "working poor" would be helped toward self-sufficiency and away from future welfare dependency.

For the first time, training and work opportunity with effective incentives would be given millions of families who would otherwise be locked into a welfare system for generations.

For the first time, the Fderal Government would make a strong contribution toward relieving the financial burden of welfare payments from State governments.

For the first time, every dependent family in America would be encouraged to stay together, free from economic pressure to split apart.

The bill before us, H.R. 16311, would bring about those effects.

Mr. Chairman, President Nixon stated in his message proposing a comprehensive Manpower Training Act, which I hope will soon be coming before us for enactment, that such a manpower program "is a good example of a new direction in making federalism work." I feel that the same applies to the pending Family Assistance Act of 1970.

The President stated further in his manpower program message:

We can relate substantial Federal-State manpower efforts to other efforts, tax sharing and economic opportunity, marshaling the resources of the departments and agencies involved to accomplish a broad mission.

I quote that statement to emphasize that aid to and greater cooperation with the cost-beleaguered States is one of the foremost needs which the Federal Government must meet. In attacking the social ills of the day, the new federalism is going to the root causes of poverty.

The Family Assistance Act of 1970 will tackle one of the most troublesome problems confronting our State and local governments. Those governments are crying for financial relief, and the needy people of the Nation are struggling against the ever-increasing cost of living. They will all be helped—the State and local governments and the dependent Americans—by enactment of this bill. They and the country's taxpayers will be helped further toward improvement in our economic climate when President Nixon's manpower and tax sharing programs are translated into law.

Let us, therefore, Mr. Chairman, take that first big step, make that start-up cost investment in a better America for all, by the expeditious passage of H.R. 16311.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises that the minority side has consumed 1 hour and 43 minutes and the majority side has consumed 1 hour and 33 minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. VANIK), a member of the committee. The gentleman is our last speaker for the day on this side.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, the Family Assistance Act of 1970 which we are considering today is an imperfect bill, designed to deal with circumstances and conditions which have developed in our imperfect society. The proposal is unique in that it draws support from these forces which seek to restrain welfare expenditures as well as from those who are determined to improve the life of those who are unemployed, underemployed, and on welfare.

In any event, the legislation moves toward the federalization of welfare, establishing minimum standards of family support without geographical discrimination and provide a uniform system of review of work eligibility of the unemployed.

Insofar as the Federal contribution toward welfare will be increased, it constitutes a revenue sharing with the States.

There has been and there will continue to be extensive discussion as to the cost of the family assistance program. It is difficult to estimate costs when economic conditions make it so difficult to forecast the extent of unemployment and the resulting need for family assistance or the potential need for adjusting family assistance allocations to meet the escalating cost of living.

The chart on additional costs of this program submitted by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and set forth in the committee report on page 53, is incredibly naive and unrealistic. Although the table assumes a 4-percent growth, no provision is made for the increase in the cost of living or the effect of increased eligibility resulting from further and mounting unemployment which lurks in the wings. These etsimates are optimistic beyond reason.

We must relate the family assistance program to the fearful contingency of increased unemployment which appears to be designed in our economic structure.

I cannot share the feeling of security which prevails on the present condition of the unemployment compensation fund and its capacity to face up to a difficult economic challenge.

At the resent time, there are 50.9 million workers covered under State unemployment compensation laws. The wages of these workers in 1968 totaled $331,562,-437,000. Can we assume that 3.5 percent of the total wages of 1 year is a sufficient reserve? This reserve is sufficient for only the mildest of attacks of unemployment.

For each of the almost 51 million workers in the insured work force of the United States, there is about $262 in the unemployment insurance fund. Six percent unemployment of insured workers would cost the unemployment insurance fund $6 to $7 billion per year. Two years of 6 percent unemployment of insured workers, a rate which prevailed in 1958, would completely deplete the unemployment insurance fund. It certainly would not carry us through anything more than a mild recession.

What we must realize in considering the Family Assistance Act is that it may be extensivly used to back up and reinforce the unemployment compensation program which is rapidly becoming unresponsive to its avowed purpose of income support for the unemployed.

The family assistance program may very well constitute a huge dip into General Treasury funds to assume an obligation we thought would be undertaken by employers under the Unemployment Compensation Act. In a great measure, the burden of responsibility for income maintenance for the trained but unemployed worker will shift from the employer to the general taxpayer. We must understand what we are about.

If a fully trained insured worker with three dependents is unemployed in Ohio for 1 year, he receives $61 per week for 26 weeks or $1,586. In Florida, such a worker would receive a maximum of $40 per week for 26 weeks, or a total of $1,040, while in New York State such a worker would receive $65 per week for 26 weeks or a total of 1,690. All of these situati$ons are entitled to supplementation under the family assistance program—at an open-end cost. Do we really intend to use the family assistance program as a substitute for a meaningful unemployment compensation program which provides income maintenance for a trained insured worker during a period of prolonged unemployment?

As presently constituted the unemployment compensation program is a most inadequate law—designed only for the best of times. It is incapable of performing as an income maintenance system during conditions of growing and persistant unemployment. The needs of the unemployment compensation system should not be dependent upon the family assistance program.

During our discussions on this proposal, we also studied the comparative effect of family assistance under this program with family assistance for military dependents under prevailing military wage scales.

It appears that a family of four sustained by a member of the armed services in the lower three grades is compelled to exist on resources below poverty levels and below what we provide under this bill. Today, almost 150,000 military dependents live below the income levels provided under this bill. It is incredible that our Nation should conscript a citizen and then order his family to live on public welfare—but such is the case for many. To meet this problem, we must insure an adequate increase in dependency allowances for military dependents, particularly in the lower grades.

The recent postal employees strike in New York demonstrated the error of income levels which make no allowance for cost-of-living differentials. The same problem is built into this legislation and I hope that our oversight will be corrected by the other body. It is readily apparent that the income maintenance needs are certainly higher in my community and other high-cost urban areas than they are in rural or small-town communities.

In full knowledge of the great shortcomings and uncertainties which are present in this proposal, I give it my support because it improves what we have, it moves in the right direction and represents an effort to meet the challenge.

Mr. BURKE of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I join with those that feel that no American family should go hungry and that no child should suffer—certainly, that every individual should have the opportunity to gain self respect and family security—are facts that I certainly do not contest. However, I am worried about the new concept of welfare that we consider today. I endorse its intent to train and put the unemployed into the field of employable and productive jobholders, but, I fear that if this legislation passes we will create instead a new class of welfare recipients. While the President's laudable proposals to bring order to the present chaotic conglomerate of welfare programs are commendable and desperately needed, the prospect of 12 million Americans becoming new members of the growing welfare state appalls me.

We have seen welfare grow into a professional and practical way of life, for some and to become intermeshed as a part of our Nation's economy and social character. When it was begun in the depression days of the 1930's under the New Deal, it was considered only a stopgap, and President Roosevelt himself then admitted that the Nation "must and shall quit this business of relief"—and, he further added:

> To dole out relief in this way is to administer a narcotic, a subtle destroyer of the human spirit.

His advice was not followed and hence we have what is today called the welfare mess.

President Nixon properly proposes that we reverse the direction of the welfare system. His proposals to establish training programs through work incentives and a means to credit higher education are a commendable step in the right direction. But a further step in this direction and one that I believe would have a more practical result without additional cost to the taxpayer is the proposal—H.R. 2067—known as the Human Investment Act that I introduced and which would give a tax credit to business firms for inplant training of workers.

I do not believe that the bill before us—H.R. 16311—which, under the rule, we are asked to consider without opportunity to offer amendments, achieves the goals that are needed today or even that President Nixon has set. Instead it seems inevitable that the number of those added to the roles of the profitably unemployed—those who seek a reason not to work will increase even more with the years than it has in the past.

In this day of inflation and ever increasing taxes we are faced with the fact that this bill before us will increase the Federal budget some $5 billion or more. The proposed Federal contribution to family assistance in the first year is expected to cost $3.8 billion plus $386 million which is allocated for day care. In addition, we may add to this the extra costs of job training and increased benefits to the blind, aged, and disabled who cannot work. But the important factors are that we can envision in the next 3 to 4 years a proposed increase of 12 million plus new welfare recipients at possible skyrocketing future costs. An outpouring of more and more money from the pockets of the active hard-working wage earners of the country bring questions from them.

My State of Florida is today faced with a severe test of its ability to absorb an ever growing population and further State participation in today's welfare programs. We must accept the recent Supreme Court ruling that residence requirements no longer apply when applying for welfare benefits. The number of needy who could move into Florida because of our natural attractions may mount an alarming rate. It would greatly affect and imperil Florida's overall economy and strain its present tax structure beyond limits.

I feel the biggest factor we must consider in this legislation is that the proposal begins for all practical purposes the creation of a "minimum income" for all Americans. Expanded socialism, if you please. It does so through establishment of full benefits for a family of four at a $1,600 level and it even increases this schedule despite 50 percent earnings retention provisions to $3,920 for the same family. It is inevitable that in the years that will follow these limits might be the target of some demagog or ambitious politician who, through such socialistic measures, could attempt to control and run from Washington the lives of every man, woman, and child in America.

In this program for the benefit of poverty families with dependent children there also lurks the insidious and dangerous creation of another powerful voting political bloc—that of those on the relief roles—a bloc that could easily number into the millions. Indeed, it has already begun with the formation of the National Welfare Rights Organization, whose first demand is elimination of all requirements for a work-training program, increase of proposed benefits, and raising of the poverty level determination. In these days, such requests could lead to more marches, disruptions, disorder, and division within our country.

I hope this Congress can, and I expect it will, move quickly to help those families which are truly needy and deserving who require the assistance of both the State and Federal Governments. But I suggest that my colleagues in the Congress will recognize that self-help, job training, education, and above all pride of the family are the important factors required in America today. Poverty must not be accepted with pride. It must be overcome with compassion and understanding without creating the ogre of a national welfare state.

Mr. Chairman, I wish that I could support the President by voting for this legislation but unfortunately I cannot. I do not believe that this legislation is anything more than an extension of socialism in our country. Even if it is, as some would like us to believe, better than our present welfare system, it is, at the most, a poor substitute. I hope it will work if it becomes law, but as for me I cannot support it, because I do not think it is the answer that America needs. We need a full review of the entire welfare program with the intent to help the needy—including the American workingman who will be called upon to pay the bill.

Mr. MINISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in qualified support of H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970. While the legislation contains many shortcomings and inadequacies, which I will deal with, it does represent a worthwhile attempt to reorder the Nation's antiquated methods of assistance for her less fortunate citizens.

As a Representative from one of the Nation's most highly urbanized and densely populated areas, I have been greatly concerned by the growing welfare crisis and its adverse impact upon both welfare recipients and overburdened taxpayers. My home county in New Jersey, Essex, contains less than one-seventh of the population of the State, yet its welfare expenditures represent over one-third of the statewide cost. More than a quarter of a million persons now receive AFDC assistance in New Jersey—83,900 in Essex County alone. The county's welfare budget has grown from $3 million in 1958 to more than $17 million presently. It is clear the Federal Government must provide more assistance to those areas of the country, like Essex County, N.J., which are straining their resources and their taxpayers to deal with a problem which is actually national in character.

Recognizing that welfare is a national problem and that substantial relief must be granted to those parts of the Nation which have assumed a disproportionate share of the welfare burden, I introduced H.R. 11374 on May 15, 1969. This legislation would go much further than the family assistance plan to improve the lot of the average taxpayer and the family on welfare. Under my measure, AFDC would become a wholly Federal program administered by local agencies under federally prescribed terms and conditions including national minimum standards with the cost being fully borne by the Federal Government. The bill accepts the national character of the welfare problem and faces the fact that its challenge can be met most effectively and justly by the Federal Government.

The legislation before us today establishes a new Federal program to replace the aid for dependent children program. The family assistance plan would apply to all low-income persons with children and provides a $1,600 allowance for a family of four with no other income. The full allowance would go to persons earning up to $720 per year, with subsequent benefits cut by 50 cents for each dollar earned. Therefore, the beneficiaries will always find themselves with a higher income through employment. In contrast, the present welfare system allows for the deduction of earnings from benefits—a 100-percent tax.

While it is true that this bill will eliminate the inequity of very low benefits in some States and end the State-by-State variations in eligibility rules, H.R. 16311 will provide little real relief to the urban areas of our Nation so overburdened by spiraling welfare costs. A minimum floor of $1,600 for a family of four is barely enough to cover the food budget of a poor family, and certainly not enough to cover even half the amount presently paid such a family by an urban State like New Jersey.

In order to prevent a cutback from existing levels of assistance, the bill provides that States offering benefits in excess of the family assistance plan in January 1970 must supplement the Federal plan to the January figure or to the poverty level, whichever is lower. The Ways and Means Committee has made a significant improvement over the administration proposal in this section. Under the administration bill only 10 percent of the supplemental costs to the States would be paid for by Federal assistance. The committee has increased this supplemental payment to 30 percent. However, if the hard-pressed urban centers are to experience real relief from welfare costs, the Federal Government eventually assumes 100 percent of welfare costs.

Another area of concern to me in the Family Assistance Act involves the work and training requirements under section 447 and 448. I strongly believe that a wholesome home life must not be sacrificed and I am pleased the committee has included some safeguards in this area. A mother of a child under the age of 6 is not required to register for training or employment. Additionally an exclusion is provided for the mother or other female caretaker of a child if there is an adult male related to the child in the home who does register. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will be required to provide adequate and convenient day care for children of mothers who are undergoing work training or have been employed.

Unfortunately, the work and training provisions contain no specific minimum standards regarding the kinds of jobs or the levels of wages which are to be offered and accepted by FAP beneficiaries. The plan should be strengthened in this area by the formulation of explicit Federal standards governing work referral and wages.

In conclusion, I support the Family Assistance Act. If enacted, it will set national eligibility standards for benefits, help keep intact the families receiving aid, provide assistance for the working poor, encourage initiative by allowing a recipient to keep a portion of his earnings, and provide for the first time a floor, albeit modest, under family income.

The legislation comes to the House floor under the traditional closed rule for such bills and cannot be amended by this body. Hopefully the Senate will give careful consideration to the points I have raised and act to improve and strengthen the family assistance plan.

Mr. O'NEILL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I think it is of special significance that the executive heads of three major religious organizations have jointly endorsed and urged enactment of H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970.

The statement was signed by the Most Reverend Joseph Bernadin, general secretary of the U.S. Catholic Conference; Rabbi Henry Siegman, executive vice president of the Synagogue Council of America, and Dr. H. R. Edwin Espy, general secretary of the National Council of Churches—Protestant and Eastern Orthodox. They said, in part:

> In introducing the Family Assistance Plan last August, the President termed the present welfare system a "colossal failure".
>
> The present system—if indeed it can be called a system at all—disrupts families, often fails to provide minimal subsistence, demeans the recipients, reaches less than half of those in need, fosters dependence and is geographically inequitable.
>
> Furthermore, under present cost-sharing principles, it is straining the resources of many localities and states.
>
> The House bill would move toward correcting some of these failures. It would set national eligibility standards, aid families while still intact, extend help for the first time to the working poor, encourage initiative, establish a minimum Federal floor under family income and provide some fiscal relief to states and localities.
>
> These are important steps toward making the system more responsive to human needs and more equitable. Furthermore, the requirement that able-bodied heads of households register for and accept jobs or job training should help shatter the myth that the aspirations and ambitions of the welfare recipients somehow differ from those of the rest of society.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. Chairman, after hearing so many varied comments regarding the proposed family assistance plan—FAP—H.R. 16311, I would like to urge my colleagues to recommit the bill to committee.

I urge this action because I feel that there are many unanswered questions about the FAP. Some of these questions have been raised in a comprehensive report entitled "Time for Change," a study done by the California counties welfare modernization task force. Speaking of the FAP, the report states:

> It is impossible to determine the net fiscal effect on either the state or the counties of California. The Federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare has estimated that California would have realized a net savings of $107 million, based on 1968 cost and caseload data. Discussion with HEW officials indicates that in making these estimates they did not consider earned income exemptions, work and training expense allowances, or administrative costs. Hence, we believe that the figure is questionable.

I would like, at this time, to summarize some of the other questions raised in the report and say that I do not necessarily agree or disagree with some of the implications of the criticisms, but merly offer them as proof that there are many unanswered questions about the FAP.

The report charges that one of the "most serious deficiencies" in the FAP is the continuation of State programs to supplement Federal payments. The requirement of a State supplemental program continues the inequities which now exist in the present AFDC program.

If a major reason for establishing a federal plan of family assistance is the wide unpopularity of the present AFDC program and its inquities—

Says the report—

There is no justification for making it mandatory to continue the program under a different name.

The report further states that the problems of operating a supplemental assistance program would be "an administrative nightmare."

Cost: The disadvantages are that no one knows what the new FAP will cost or what the cost of the State supplemental program will be. For the State to contract with the Federal Government means a loss of State and local control of a program involving a great deal of money. It continues the inequities of the difference in payment levels between States.

The working poor: Although the working poor are included in the Federal program, they are not included in the supplemental program. These families are also excluded from medical benefits. For the marginal worker this means a chaotic economic situation in which he variously qualifies for and loses supplemental benefits and medical care.

There would be a strong incentive to seek the security of being unemployed or only partially employed—

Says the report.

Work incentives: The report notes that the FAP requires registration for employment as a requisite for receiving assistance, but that this is nothing new. California and several other States have had such a requirement for years. Under the FAP, there is also a penalty loss of benefits equal to the benefits of only one person. The report says:

We now have this and it has proven less effective as a device for controlling behavior and attitudes than the former policy of termination of total assistance to the family.

California is not the only State with serious reservations about the FAP. A random telephone check by my office has revealed that there are several others who also feel that there are many unanswered questions.

Mr. Morris Priebatch, chief of administration and planning for the Mississippi State Department of Public Welfare, feels that the FAP definitely is a large step toward a guaranteed income. He also feels that the estimates of how many working poor will qualify under the new program have been greatly underestimated. He told my office:

There are a lot of unanswered questions about this program. I think the total costs are going to be a lot higher than the estimates.

New York's Deputy Commissioner of Public Welfare, George W. Chesbro, addressing himself to the work training aspects of the FAP, said that of the total 1,300,000 people on welfare in New York, only 6 percent, or 82,000 are employable. Of these 82,000, he said 42,000 are now employed. The other 40,000 are employable, he noted, but are unskilled and could only work at low-paying jobs. Jobs which, I might add, would most likely not be deemed "suitable" under the provisions of the FAP.

Harold Strode, director of social welfare for the State of Nebraska, summed up his feeling about the FAP with a simple—

We don't know if the state can afford it.

Strode said that he strongly supported the concept of a pilot program on the FAP before national implementation. He advised:

We should look at what happened to Medicare.

As for the idea of getting people off welfare rolls and onto payrolls, Strode said that in Nebraska, only four-tenths of 1 percent of welfare recipients are trainable for new jobs.

Texas commissioner of social welfare, Burton Hackney, was very outspoken in his criticism of the FAP:

We were told the FAP could save Texas $73 million, but our figures now indicate that it would cost the state an additional $18 million . . . we are not going to kid ourselves about opening up the welfare rolls to other categories. Nobody knows the effect the adding of the working poor will have on the size of the welfare rolls. It is going to cost. The most expensive cost of the welfare is medical care. Who is going to pay for this additional cost? There are a lot of unanswered questions?

Denver White, director of social welfare for the State of Ohio, also had his doubts about the FAP:

It's too difficult to determine what the effect adding the working poor to the welfare rolls will have. Our real concern is how to evaluate the costs of putting these people on welfare.

On work incentives and how the WIN program has worked in Ohio, White said:

We can't brag about our success. It did not take off as well as it could have, even though we had some success.

Again the medical care issue was raised when White said:

When other states put the medically indigent on the government programs . . . many problems were caused because of unsound financing. Our concern is that this does not happen under the FAP.

Assistant to the director of public welfare in Missouri, John Pletz, voiced similar criticisms and raised similar questions; reservations about who administers the program, how medical care figures in the FAP and what happens to social services programs.

Thus, it is clear from the survey by my office of various State welfare officials, that while they may differ as to how the problem of welfare should be handled, they are all in agreement that they simply do not know enough about the FAP at this point.

It is because of these reasons that I urge my colleagues to recommit the family assistance plan, H.R. 16311, to committee.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, the welfare system in the United States verges on chaos.

It is a bewildering patchwork of laws—laws that vary region by region, State by State, community by community.

Welfare payments in some areas—the tidelands of Mississippi, for example, or the mountain country of West Virginia—are so heartbreakingly small that poor families live with hunger every day of their lives.

In other areas—New York City comes to mind as a striking example—payments have steadily risen to astonishingly high levels.

Yet these very same payments, in terms of actual benefits to the poor, still lag far behind what most people would consider even a minimum standard of living. But, to the rural poor, both white and black, such payments appear enormous.

They are virtually streaming into our northern cities in a futile search for a better way of life. Their hopes, of course, are dashed at once.

They exchange a country shack for a ghetto slum, a diet of dried rice and beans for one of packaged rice and canned beans.

The migration from the countryside to the city has helped turn our inner cities into teeming slums. It has helped breed the crime, the dope addiction, the street rebellions now making headlines throughout the United States.

Another problem in our welfare system—perhaps the greatest problem of all—is its tendency to discourage work.

Even the most piddling earned income disqualifies most people from receiving welfare payments. As a result, many of the poor shun jobs.

Why, a young man might ask, should I wash dishes for $60 a week when I can get $55 for doing nothing?

The Congress can show him why today.

The bill now before us promises to clear away most of the problems now hampering our welfare system.

First, the bill would set national minimum standards for welfare payments—standards that would give all welfare recipients a comparable living standard and stop the migration into our cities.

Second, the bill would encourage work by allowing poor families a sliding scale of welfare benefits as their earned income increases or decreases. It would always pay—and pay relatively well—to have a job.

Third, the bill would literally compel people on welfare to take jobs or job training.

This legislation is much more than just another welfare bill.

It is a work bill, and it is high time the Congress passed it.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, would the Chair be kind enough to advise at this point as to the time remaining for both sides in general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The majority has remaining 1 hour and 25 minutes. There is remaining 1 hour and 48 minutes for the minority.

Mr. MILLS. Together that is as much as 3 hours or more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the gentleman from Arkansas that there is a total of 3 hours and 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, in view of that fact, it is quite evident to me that we will not be able to complete all general debate and have a vote on the bill on final passage as early tomorrow afternoon as I had hoped to be the case. I had told many Members that I was hopeful we could have the vote by not later than 2 o'clock. However, it now looks as if it might be later than that. We do not intend to use any further time this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, in view of these circumstances, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ALBERT) having assumed the chair, Mr. DINGELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 16311) to authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

H.R. 16311—THE NEW WELFARE PROGRAM

(Mr. FOREMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FOREMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have some very serious reservations about H.R. 16311, the guaranteed annual wage welfare program. Admittedly, the present welfare program is costly and inequitable—however, I believe this bill would move us in the wrong direction because it will probably add several million more persons to the welfare rolls, more social workers, more Federal control, bureaucracy, and dependence at an estimated additional annual taxpayer cost of $4 billion or more than we are now spending. Our objective should be to seek a reduction, not an increase, of overloaded welfare rolls. We should work to reduce the cost and control of government by the enactment of programs that encourage individual work, incentive, and responsibility—not reward nonproductivity and irresponsibility. We need to work toward more jobs and permanent job security rather than permanent relief.

Welfare was originally designed as a method to aid people who were sick, disabled, or temporarily in need—however, it has gradually come to be regarded as a means of bringing about a more nearly equal distribution of income—and this is a most serious threat to individual initiative and excellence. This new program violates the basic principles of individual incentive, responsibility, and free enterprise that have built this great country.

This country has always been a work-, property-, and incentive-oriented society—and it should continue to be. Most Americans who work for their living have little sympathy for the concept that every man should be guaranteed an income by the Government regardless of whether he can or will work. A Federal Government guaranteed annual income will destroy self-reliance, individual responsibility, self-respect, and the incentive to work. Therefore, in good conscience, I cannot support or vote for this program that I sincerely believe can eventually destroy the moral fiber of the United States of America.

FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1970

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 16311) to authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 16311, with Mr. DINGELL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS) had 1 hour and 25 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) had 1 hour and 48 minutes remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS).

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 10 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Michigan (Mrs. GRIFFITHS), a member of the committee.

Mrs. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the President's bill on welfare.

I feel that it is an amendment that is long overdue. I would like for you to look at it for just a moment from a different view than others have taken.

At the present time, one of the heaviest burdens that rests upon your State or your city has been placed there by the Federal Government—and it is the burden of welfare. This is the thing that is destroying most of America's cities. As that tax burden on property becomes heavier and heavier to pay these welfare costs, more and more people move out of the city and more businesses move out. If there were no other reason for voting for this bill, the proper reason for voting for it is that welfare should not rest upon the property in cities or in States, but it should be paid for by the Federal Government out of the General Treasury of the United States.

This is the burden of every person, not merely the burden of those who live in a specific area. The Federal Government is in the best position to pay and the Federal Government should pay.

I will admit that under this bill they will not pay the full bill, but I am sure the day will come when this burden will be taken off the taxpayers in the various States as a State tax and placed where it properly belongs.

I would like to tell you some of the things that I think are wrong with the bill and that I think should be corrected and I am sure will be corrected.

In the first place, this bill pays only if you have a child. I think that is a mistake. I think that the poor, the single poor and the married childless poor should be paid also. I think it is an error to pay only if there is a child. But I am sure this problem will be taken up in later Congresses and corrected. I think additionally it is a mistake to say that a woman can stay at home as long as she has a child under 6. I do not believe the society gives her a choice. I think the social workers make that choice, and I think this was proved in the WIN program in New York City, where they found that few women were able to go out and work, and at the end of the year I believe they had trained 106 women. I think the social workers make that choice. I think most of these women want to work and they can work and they are anxious to do so. But they have to be given an opportunity to work.

I would like to explain also another amendment that I offered to this bill which was not accepted. I hope that amendment will be placed in the bill over in the Senate. I feel that a teenage girl who becomes pregnant should be required to continue in school after the birth of the child, or should be given further training.

I would like to explain to you that in New Haven, Conn., a survey was made of 100 girls who had left school because of pregnancies. At the end of 5 years, 387 children had been born to those 100 girls. That is almost a baby per year. In New York they then selected 100 girls who were pregnant. They gave them all kinds of assistance. They gave them additional training, and at the end of 2 years only 11 children had been born. There is no person in our society on whom a greater burden is going to be placed than the teenage girl who bears a child, and we are money ahead if we aid her to support herself and her child.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise informally in order that the House may receive a message.

FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1970

The Committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose informally to receive the message, the gentlewoman from Michigan had the floor. The gentlewoman will proceed.

Mrs. GRIFFITHS. I would like to point out again that while I do not believe this bill is perfect, a good start has been made. In every State in this Union there will be some saving to the local taxpayers. But this is the only possible remedy that local taxpayers can ever look forward to as saving their homes literally from condemnation to take over this welfare burden.

In the State of Massachusetts alone the welfare burden is the equivalent of 25 percent of the State budget. I repeat to each Member that this burden did not come from Massachusetts. It is not exclusively their fault that these people are on welfare. Some of them came from other States. They came there of course looking for work. But in my opinion welfare is a national responsibility. It is not the burden of a locality, and this is not the way it should be handled.

I congratulate the President. I feel he has offered a good first step. I urge every person to vote for this bill before his own community is destroyed.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GROSS).

(Mr. GROSS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the gentlewoman from Michigan. I certainly agree with her that the tax burdens of the States and local communities are onerous, but I do not agree with her premise that the Federal Government is in better shape to solve all the problems of the States and local subdivisions of government. I cannot recall when the the Federal Government last had a balanced budget. It has been running deficits as high as $20 billion a year, piling up the Federal debt until it now approaches $385 billion. No, I cannot subscribe to the theory that the Federal Government is in better shape to take care of the problems of the entire body politic, including the entire welfare system of this country.

I regret the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS), the sponsor of this bill, is not here because I wanted to address a question or two to him.

In the first place, I am getting all kinds of figures as to the real cost of this bill. Some say it is $4,400,000,000 more than is already on welfare. I wonder if the gentleman from Wisconsin could help me with this. I have talked with other Ways and Means Committee members and they have given me other figures, running to much higher totals than $4½ billion. I would appreciate it if the gentleman could tell us what this bill would cost in addition to what we are now spending for welfare.

I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will refer to the committee report, on page 53, he will see that we included a table projecting Federal costs for the first year of operation. For that year, 1971, the basic payments of $1,600 per family, plus the 30 percent matching of State supplements, would total $4.6 billion.

Existing legislation—that is, the Federal share of AFDC—would call for a cost that year of $2.5 billion. So the additional cost, as far as that aspect of the program is concerned, is the difference between $4.6 and $2.5 billion, or $2.1 billion. That is the difference between 1971 costs of the AFDC program—aid to families with dependent children—and the cost that would be incurred under the family assistance program.

If we are dealing in dollars and cents, the cost difference involving that part of the program on which we have had most debate is this difference between $4.6 billion and $2.5 billion.

The gentleman may get confused—and it is understandable—on the overall cost of the bill, because in addition to the family assistance changes, we are changing the cost of what we call the adult assistance category; that is, our assistance to the aged, to the blind, and to the disabled.

Under the new bill, the Federal share of adult assistance will be $2.7 billion. That cost today is $2 billion. So there will be an increase of $700 million in that category.

If we combine the costs of those two facets of the bill—the one which is more controversial and the one which apparently is not so controversial—the total cost under the legislation will be $7.3 billion.

The total cost of the present legislation, projected on a full year basis, is $4.5 billion. So there will be an increase of $2.8 billion for the first year under the new bill.

Mr. GROSS. Then the figure which someone gave yesterday——

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. That figure I mentioned is the cash outlay. I should add that there will be training, day care, and administrative costs, which could account for another $900 million. So the total comes to $3.7 billion, so far as the basic change in cost under this bill is concerned.

I also should call the gentleman's attention—so that he has a proper perspective on this situation—to the projections of the costs of the current program, and of the proposed legislation beyond 1971. Those figures are also shown in the table on page 53, and it is noteworthy that by 1975, according to these projections, the cost difference between this bill and the current program would drop from $2.8 billion to $1.1 billion. And much of this added sum would be recaptured, hopefully, as more and more welfare recipients turn from welfare rolls to payrolls.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to say that the total additional cost of the so-called family assistance plan is beyond calculation at this time, because there is going to be a new department set up in HEW to handle the administration of this plan. Today, no one knows how many people are going to be needed to staff that new department.

In addition to that, this bill provides for the recovery of any money fraudulently collected from the Government. In my opinion this is going to mean almost a doubling of the size of our present Justice Department.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman have a total figure for that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. In spite of my efforts to get some concrete figures on the amount of personnel which will be necessary to administer this law, I have been unable to get any figures.

Mr. GROSS. I thank both the gentlemen for their remarks. The gentleman from Pennsylvania points up the utter uncertainty as to cost.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me on that particular subject?

Mr. GROSS. I am always pleased to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I asked the gentleman to yield not because I have any expertise on the matter, or any accurate figures. I tried to listen to the testimony of the various advocates as well as the opponents of this proposal before the Committee on Rules. I can safely say that there was no testimony which placed the additional cost of this program over the present program at less than $4.5 billion. Some of the estimates ran much higher.

There was a general consensus that the minimum was $4.5 billion and that it was almost impossible to get any accurate figures.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee for that contribution, because that is the minimal figure which was given here yesterday. Yet, others say the add-on cost of this bill may well be above $6 billion. I am just trying to get some kind of firm answer and again I am disappointed that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is absent. As the sponsor of this socialistic legislation, he should be able to provide specific cost figures as well as inform the House where the revenue is to be obtained to meet the spending of additional billions.

Now, the chairman of the committee (Mr. MILLS) has been widely quoted in the newspapers as saying that if the base of $1,600 is increased in the other body he will divorce himself from support of the bill. I wish he had remained on the floor so that I might ascertain whether this is correct.

I address a question to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) as to whether he is going to go to the other body, if this bill passes, and agree to an increase in the base figure of $1,600.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. Yes. I gladly yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. The chairman of the committee and I agreed, not only between ourselves, but publicly through an announcement before the Rules Committee that we were holding—and that we would hold—to the ceiling of $1,600. We said that was our limit, and that if the other body saw fit to go beyond that, they would face the same situation they faced on a few other occasions: We would just refuse to go to conference and there would be no legislation. I have not changed my opinion on that, and I believe I am at liberty to say that I am not advised by the chairman that he has changed his opinion. I am sure, if he had, he would have let me know.

Mr. GROSS. I am glad to have the answer from the ranking minority member of the committee, but I well recall what happened when the bill, extending certain excise taxes, was sent to the Senate. It was understood then, and without qualification, that members of the House Ways and Means Committee would not permit the Senate to write tax legislation by inserting in the excise bill a 10-percent surtax. As Members of the House well know the Senate initiated that surtax legislation and the House conferees accepted it. But even at $1,600, the door to guaranteed annual income and full blown socialism has been opened.

Mr. Chairman, passage of this legislation will put a premium on the production of more illegitimate children and encourage indolence on the part of those who have no desire to work. And the added billions of cost will mean either higher taxes or more borrowing, more debt, deficit, and inflation.

I cannot support this legislation in its present form even though I agree that reorganization of welfare is overdue. Neither President Nixon nor the Ways and Means Committee had to go to this length to attain the result of reorganization and coordination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. FULTON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURLESON).

(Mr. BURLESON of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there have been some very able speeches made on this subject today and yesterday. Our able and distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) were very convincing in presenting the case for the measure before us.

This whole proposal is convincing in theory. It sounds so good on the surface. But I remember in 1962 and in 1967 what happened. As a matter of fact, looking at child welfare, it started in 1935. This is no new program. However, in 1962 and 1967 the able chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the gentleman from Wisconsin, the ranking minority member, just like the vast majority of you, sold me on it and I voted for it on the proposition that "You are going to take people off of the welfare rolls and put them on the payrolls."

And here we are again today with the same slogans and cliches. You know, incidentally there is a remarkable thing about this whole business. If this had been proposed during the Kennedy administration or the Johnson administration, there would have been holes in the top of this ceiling right over here on the Republican side of the aisle. You know that as well as I do.

Now, several have inquired as to the cost of this program. Why, I say to you, there is nobody who can tell you the cost of it. We are going to be back in here before too long to ask you to raise the debt limit, and if we have any integrity in the Federal Government, we are going to be back here asking you to raise taxes. And people just got through paying them last night. There is no one who can tell you what this program is ultimately going to cost as a matter of fact there is no clear estimate of what the additional cost will be for the first year.

They talk about training. Why we have a training program on every corner in all the Federal programs already in effect. Here is a list of them.

I think there are nine or 10 training and retraining programs, and now it is proposed to create one bigger than any of them. Here they are. There are six pages of training programs under manpower training programs which come out of the Committee on Education and Labor and those programs which come out of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as well as the Committee on Ways and Means. There is no use of my reading them, but look at them and you will find all sorts of other such programs. In addition, this bill provides for the creation of another WPA and any other make-work programs which the Federal Government may devise.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we say we are going to train people to get off the welfare rolls and onto the payroll. How good it sounds. However, do not be misled. We are going down the road of no return. This is just a start. Have you seen Federal programs of this kind shrink?

Talk about a guaranteed annual income? I heard my good friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES), say yesterday that we already have one. But, at least, there is some judgment exercised on the part of welfare workers and others who carry on the present program—they have some judgment and discretion as to who goes on it, but this program puts people on welfare automatically. About all they have to do is consent. The Supreme Court just a few days ago ruled that once on welfare a recipient cannot be removed until and unless a Federal court rules on the question.

Mr. Chairman, a family of four has been used in the report on this bill and as an example in most of this debate. There are many families in this country who have more than two children. There are many families of seven, eight, nine, and 10 who will qualify under this program. Face it—you know and I know that these size families are likely to be those who are more likely to qualify.

The wage earner in that family would be having to make almost $8,000 a year, or else it would be more beneficial if they went on this program. Where is the incentive in these conditions?

Mr. Chairman, great emphasis has been placed on training and retraining under the provisions of this proposal. Under this program a man can say, "I will go to work if it is a job located at a distance of not more than 1 mile, but if it is 2 miles, that is too far."

There is no definition of "suitable" employment. You cannot tell what it means. One thing we could do, however, is to send this bill back to the Committee on Ways and Means. Everyone seemingly agrees that the present program is a failure. This being the case, surely our committee will be willing to take action toward corrections.

The present program has been referred to as a "mess," and that I can agree with. I am just thankful, but it is of little consolation to me, that I have not been a part of it. I have not been a part of the Great Society's relief programs. Therefore, I am free to say about this one that it will be a mess, too. So, we are going to cut off our nose to cure our sinus. That is about what it amounts to. We are going to put one failure on top of another.

With reference to the motion to recommit this bill, it will probably contain language to change a word or two, but to be reported back "forthwith," will be meaningless.

Mr. Chairman, it is not going to make any difference whether we have a motion to recommit. It will be pretty tough to vote against this bill because it has increased the adult benefits and with that I agree. Inflation, for which the Federal is largely responsible, in my judgment, is causing hardship on people in this category.

Mr. Chairman, I propose, if the situation permits, to offer a motion at the appropriate time to strike the enacting clause and give to the members of the committee a straight vote on this measure. I believe if such a motion is adopted the Ways and Means Committee can bring you something much better than what is offered to you today.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON).

(Mr. DICKINSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for yielding. If I may have the gentleman's attention I would like to propound a question to the gentleman, if it has not been answered already in the brief time I was away from the floor. If I may have the attention of either the ranking minority member on my side or the proponents of the legislation on the other side, as I understand it, at least, this is designed to keep families together and to keep the husband at home where he can live up to his responsibilities.

But, is there anything contained in this bill that would keep a family from splitting up, whether it be done by official act such as a divorce decree or by separation and the husband leaves taking with him two of the children and leaving three of them with his wife. Will they both become eligible if both of them set up two diffrent units or households and receive payment for these two separate households?

Would this be possible under this bill, or is there a prohibition against that?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, we do not prohibit it this as such. But if they establish two homes they will have more expense than the amount of additional assistance they would receive under the provisions of this bill.

Let me also call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is an entirely new concept written into this bill which is not in the current law concerning the financial responsibility of the father to support their families. He can not avoid this financial responsibility by moving into a separate household or out of the State. Under this law there is a responsibility of this father to the Federal Government. The Federal Government says any money that we pay out under this program for the benefit of your children or your wife is a charge that we have against you. We can collect this directly or we can withhold funds to you at any time by the Federal Government to recoup what we have paid out on behalf of your children and wife.

We do not say that poor people have to live under the same roof, but we do say to the fathers that you cannot avoid your financial responsibility to your family by failing to do so. We do not rely on the law as it is today, I would say to the gentleman from Alabama, to enforce through a local agency the father's obligation to support. This now becomes a Federal matter, a Federal responsibility, and a responsibility of the parent to the Federal Government.

Mr. DICKINSON. I would like to say—and I thank the gentleman for his answer, and I hope that it will work, because if it does it will certainly be refreshing. But after over 8 years as a judge of the domestic relations court and juvenile court, and based on my personal experience, it is my opinion that you may well have a family split and a claim of part of the children both ways. There is no provision to keep checking on these people to see that they, after they have established this basis of living separately, do not move back into the same house, stay under the same roof, sleep in the same bed as husband and wife—because they do not have to be divorced—and how do we police this? How do we guard against it, and what makes it certain that it will not come about under the provisions of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Alabama. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from his experience if he has not found that one of the real problems that we have had is the lack of enforcement of responsibility on the parents toward the support of their children?

Mr. DICKINSON. Absolutely.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. And does not the gentleman think that we have made a good step forward where we impose a subrogation, in the sense that the Federal Government is able to go against this individual for any funds that Uncle Sam has paid out in his regard?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would say to the gentleman that I think it is fine in theory, but it just is not workable under the Uniform Reciprocal Support Act.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. That is why we made it a Federal offense, because the Reciprocal State Act, as the gentleman well knows, depends on one State getting the permission of another State, whereas in this case a Federal agent moves in, and there is no need of getting permission from a State.

Mr. DICKINSON. Who is the Federal agent who is going to move in? That is what I do not understand as to how this can be enforceable. Do we have a cadre, a police group that goes around enforcing this, or does each agency have so many enforcers and investigators?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. The Federal Government will put the responsibility, as far as turning over these cases is concerned, up to the proper prosecutors, which would be Federal, and to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, which has paid out the money. Say you have some money that you paid out. You paid it out in behalf of Mr. Jones for his children. You find Mr. Jones and prosecute him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. Chairman, let me also call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to this case of splitting up. If the family wants to live together, then there is a responsibility on the part of the father to register. We do not insist that they both register.

Now, there are some critics who say that both the husband and wife should be required to register. That is not required in this particular case, where the two are living together. But once they separate, once they start two different households, then both the male living over in one household has to register, and the woman living in the other household has to register. And they must do more than register—they have to take jobs, so they will both go to work under this circumstance, and maybe we would save money in the long run if we had both people working.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Just let me say, I have heard the previous speaker in the well, the gentleman from Texas, and I wish I had said what he said because to me he summed it up very aptly and very ably. I believe in everything he said and I subscribe to his statement.

I talked with my welfare director at home and he says that this present plan will cost the State $9 million more than it is presently having to pay.

According to my director, if we are forced to match what will be available in 1971 we will be forced to spend $9 million more to match the Federal portion. Whether this is so or not, I do not know, but I do know this—no one knows exactly what it is going to cost. It is another layer on top of a layer, and I hope everyone who votes for this bill will vote for it with the firm conviction and in the sure knowledge that you are going to have to vote a tax increase to pay for this. If you are not willing to vote for a tax increase, then do not vote for this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FULTON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT).

(Mr. DENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I voted against the rule.

Last night I tried to read what I could on this legislation and I made a decision that is not one I normally make. But this being the kind of legislation—and I want to vote for some kind of legislation dealing with problems in this important area, I decided that if there is a vote that will send it back to the committee meaningfully so that we can have an opportunity to look at it, I am going to vote for that motion.

Failing in that, then I am going to vote for the bill on final passage in the hope that I will get another look at it and will get an opportunity to present my views to the Senate.

First of all, the view that I take of this is that it steps into an area that I am not so sure the Committee on Ways and Means has the expertise to discuss and present to the House, without some consideration being given to what they are doing.

There are in America today about 13 million Americans who are not covered by the minimum wage law. Automatically—and I studied this all night, I am as positive about this as I am of the fact that I am standing up here—automatically will be put under annual wages, outside of a single person, one not without a family. You are actually covering 13 million Americans at a rate of yearly minimum wages—I mean a rate of minimum pay wage that is above anything that we even try to put through this Congress or intended to try to put through this year for a worker to receive.

A worker in the $3,000 class which is roughly the minimum wage in America today, and the highest payment under the family allowance for a worker in the family of 4 group. If he has no children at all or just has a wife or it is the case of a wife with a child, they would receive—that wife with a child—would receive $160 above the minimum wage.

However, carrying that through—the four examples that I personally got this morning from the four girls who clean offices—the smallest family in that group was six and the largest was nine. In a family of nine, in addition to that girl's pay, it would amount to an added $2,560 of $5,260 total pay.

How can I, as chairman of the Committee on Minimum Wage, attempt to come before this Congress with any kind of sensible and reasonable minimum wage bill, not considering a man working full time under a positive pay plan, without considering his family?

You are now at this time, at this stage of our history, and I want it clearly understood, I hope you know what you are doing, and it may be the right thing to do. I have the greatest faith in and I have the greatest friendship for the chairman of this committee. I know he would not deliberately upset every union contract in the country and yet he may well do this if a large number of workers are added to the work force under this act.

The rate of pay under the union contracts is based upon the classification of a job and not upon the number of members in the family.

If you are basing it upon the number of members in a family, you find yourself in a position where men working alongside each other, doing exactly the same classification of job, will be earning the same set rate of pay, because that is the classification of that job under either union contract or individual job placement.

But if the employee happens to have a large family, he will receive more money for the work he performs. The only difference is that it will not cost the producer any more money. We shall now start again on the never-ending road of subsidy of the production of goods in this country. Every farm helper in America will receive a minimum pay under this bill greater than we have ever been able to give them.

It took 30 years—and during some 18 of those years I have been at the forefront of the battle—to cover every worker in America under new wage laws. We had to go to the far extreme of taking the largest farms on a limited number of days of work to pass the most minimal pay of $1 an hour, reaching to $1.25 in 1971, February 1. But this automatically changes it, and the only area that your Committee on General Labor can function in dealing with the minimum wage will be in that area of income for an individual or a man and wife living together. It is only in that area. This bill is based upon the premise that more manpower training is going to create more jobs. Let me tell all of you right now that what most of us do not understand is that the greater bulk of the number of persons on permanent relief in this country are unemployable persons. Studies reveal, if you will look into the matter, that the average work year in America encompasses 210 days of work. Persons today with large enough a family who are making as much as $2.40 an hour will find themselves drawing a supplement.

Do you know that the average wage, under contract, of textile workers in America is $2.40 an hour? Do you know that the average wage of the clothing workers and garment workers is only 25 to 50 cents above the minimum wage? You will be establishing for the first time in the history of our Nation a new base for the payment of labor, and I remind you of the warning given many years ago that when you get into this type of legislation, keep in mind that the minimum becomes the maximum. The maximum becomes the minimum.

I just came back from Mexico. I went down there to spend 2 days on my own to look into the Proneff Territory. Fifty thousand jobs had moved over into that territory in 2 years and 7 months. There were no training programs, and every one of those industries will tell you that in the United States, if they do not have manpower training programs, they have no jobs for these people. In Mexico they take raw labor and put them to work. They have moved across the necessary production machinery, the same production machinery we have in the United States, into the Proneff Territory of Mexico, where they are paying $3 a day in the same classified jobs in electronics served $3 in the United States. I want you to look long at this bill, because the error of the 1970's is going to be the critical error in our lifetimes. The critical decade in our lifetimes will be the 1970's when the question will be decided as to whether we survive as a free-enterprise system or not. Unless I am miserably mistaken, what we are doing is to establish the base for the deterioration of the kind of free labor and free-enterprise system in which labor and management have bargained together. We are subsidizing industry the same as we subsidize agriculture. We have never been able to get out from under that, and we will never be able to get out from under this load, because if any person who has just been given a job can get $3,000 as a minimum wage and $2,600 as a Government subsidy, the employer does not pay the subsidy.

I tell you that when you are working alongside a man, doing exactly the same job he is doing and he receives only $3,000, and you receive $5,600 he does not want to know or care how many children you have. He has been brought up in an economy where you get paid for what you do, not for how many children you have. What is the use of talking about easier abortion laws; what is the use of talking about pills? What is the use of talking about cutting down the birth rate when we are introducing a program that would increase the birth rate? I do not know where to go. I do not know where to turn. Do I vote against poverty people on do I vote aye and hope for a chance to correct the inequities in the Senate.

This I do know: I am a troubled Member of this Congress this day. We have not had a chance to offer amendments because of the closed rule.

There is not any sound reason for this, because we are not going to remove people from welfare, because in this country today we still have millions of persons who are not earning this money. We have close to 13 million Americans we have tried since 1938 to put under the minimum wage law.

In the last instance, when the bill came before me, we had reached $1.60 an hour, but we had to reach it in a 3-year stretch—and in a 4-year stretch for some classifications. Why did we move in the area of minimum wages on classifications? Because we followed the historical lines of a free enterprise society, and we paid for the job that is done. We did not pay for the number of children people had. If this becomes the concept, we will find, as sure as we are in this room today in this great Congress of ours, that the minimum will become the maximum.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. DEVINE).

(Mr. DEVINE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Chairman, I rise with some reluctance today on this legislation.

Of course, I am not a member of the Ways and Means Committee. However, I do feel rather strongly about this bill that apparently is classified as an administration bill. I think when the ultimate vote comes, there will be a crosssection and quite a change in the thinking of a number of our colleagues, and I do not think we will find any particular coalition supporting or opposing the legislation.

When this originally was proposed a number of months ago, I visited administration offices to try to analyze just exactly what was coming off. I bow to no one in my support of our President. I think he is a great man doing a great job, but I do not consider myself a rubber stamp.

In analyzing this program as it was originally introduced—and I would stress the word "originally"—it was pointed out, first, that our current welfare programs acoss this Nation are in a shambles, in chaos, they are in a terrible situation, and they should be eliminated. I would agree 100 percent.

It was pointed out further that the so-called Nixon welfare program, that has had its name changed two or three times, changed to family assistance program and changed to workfare, or changed to anything to get away from the label of the guaranteed annual income, I would say no matter how we slice it, it is still that, guaranteed annual income.

The proposal is this, that it would not be another layer on our ADC, it would not be another layer on the food stamp program, that it would substitute for these. It would get rid of the ADC program and all problems connected with it, and the food stamp program also would be phased out.

It contained at that time work incentive provisions. I do not think there is anybody who opposes work incentive provisions. If we talk to the people across the country, if we feel their pulse, we will find the American people across this country are perfectly willing to help and assist those unable—and I underline unable—to help themselves, but there is a growing reluctance by the American people, the American taxpayer to be forced to support those unwilling to help themselves.

I look at the Members on both sides of the aisle and find that we talk about work incentives. What work incentive did Members have to get where they are and do what they were doing before they came to Congress? Most of us had the incentive that we like to eat, and most of us had the incentive that we wanted to support and educate and take care of our families to the best of our ability. That is sufficient incentive.

But the work incentives in this bill, when we get into "suitable" employment, create much concern among those of us who have misgivings about much that is in this bill.

After this matter was heard before the Committee on Ways and Means—and there were long hearings, though most of them were on social security, I admit—what happened? No longer does this substitute for the program. It does not substitute for the aid to dependent children. It does not substitute for the food stamp program. It is another layer upon them.

The sponsors of the bill say this: "Well, admittedly this will add from 12 million to perhaps 15 million additional people to the welfare rolls, but looking down the road 5 or 10 or 15 years this will be cheaper than the current welfare reform programs."

Assuming that this is correct—I doubt it very seriously, but assuming that this is correct—most of us will not be here to gain the benefits of this cheaper welfare program, because that far on down, if this welfare list goes up 12 to 15 million people higher than it is today, there will be between 12 and 15 percent of the people of the United States on welfare.

Is that not a great endorsement for this program?

It seems to me we are adopting a philosophy which is completely contrary and foreign to the basic American philosophy of the free enterprise system of rewarding incentive.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVINE. I would prefer not to yield at this time, but I yield.

Mr. HAYS. I want to get the question in now about the cost. Does the gentleman have any figures on the cost? I cannot get anybody to tell me that.

Mr. DEVINE. I woud say to the gentleman from Ohio, so far as the cost is concerned, the estimated cost I have seen for the first year, trying to make a study of this program, is an additional $4.4 billion for the first year.

Mr. HAYS. I wonder if they are as far wrong on that as they were on medicare, on which they just estimated the cost exactly at 30 percent of what the real cost was. If that should be true, the $4 billion would be more like $14 billion, would it not?

Mr. DEVINE. It certainly would. I agree with the gentleman. I have the same misgivings about the estimated cost on this program. It probably would be much higher than anticipated.

Mr. HAYS. I thank the gentleman. That is the first time I have been able to get anybody to tell me what they are thinking about on the cost.

Mr. DEVINE. I would hope that the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, who have made a deep study of this, would come up with some accurate figures.

Another gentleman from Ohio, Mr. ASHBROOK, worked with the minority counsel of the Ways and Means Committee in an effort to come up with a legitimate and good faith cost on this. He gave an example of a family of four with a certain income, a certain amount of money each week. They worked at great length and were unable to come up with a figure that they could agree upon.

In talking about work incentives, I would invite attention to an article which appeared March 21, 1970, in the Scripps-Howard newspaper, talking about the work-incentive program. This particular release, under the name of Robert J. Havel, out of the Plain Dealer Bureau, Cleveland, with a Washington dateline, says:

> The U.S. Department of Labor considers Ohio's work-incentive program for welfare recipients a flop and is unlikely to provide any money for the program in fiscal 1971.
>
> This is the same program, conducted in 20 Ohio counties, which Gov. James A. Rhodes recently praised as helping to get people off the welfare rolls and onto payrolls.
>
> The national program, referred to as WIN, is designed primarily to train welfare mothers for such jobs as nurse's aides and clerks.

It goes on further:

> This is basically the same program as President Nixon's "work fare" in his new welfare plan, on which the House will act soon.

That is what we are talking about today.

Mr. BETTS Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVINE. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BETTS. I should like to make one comment to the gentleman. He is one of my close friends. I do not like to contradict him, but I just want to make sure the statement he read is compared with the statement I read yesterday quoting Governor Rhodes, in which he praised the program in Ohio. He stated how many had been taken off the rolls, and that the WIN program had reduced the expense of welfare in Ohio over $200,000 a month.

I just wonder whether that is not as important a consideration as the statement of some Federal official as to how he looks at it.

Mr. DEVINE. What is important is I am merely quoting an article which appeared in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

One of the things which concerns me further is the auction game we are getting into with this legislation. I do not know whether they call it a ceiling or a floor, but they are talking about a floor of $1,600. In the next election year it will be $2,000 or $2,500. Already some are talking about $5,000. Each year they will bid higher and higher. Where will it end, and will it get everybody on here?

The senior Senator from New York spoke in the other body yesterday. I would invite the attention of our colleagues to the RECORD for April 15, published today, page S5753, in which he says:

> I shall propose an amendment exempting mothers of school-age children and other relatives who care for such children from the work and training requirements of the bill.

Then in another part he says:

> As I request cosponsorship for this amendment in the coming days, I hope that many of the Members of the Senate will join with me, whether or not they support the family assistance plan, to indicate their strong opposition to the inclusion of any such work requirement in the crucial welfare-reform legislation which will be acted upon by the Congress this year.

So if and when this matter leaves here and goes to the other body, I do not believe you will recognize it. The floor will become the ceiling and the ceiling will become the floor, and the $1,600 figure will be in the area of $5,000 or $6,000. We will be in a category where I am reminded of the old farmer when he was talking about helping people. He said, "You know, if everybody climbs in the wagon, who is going to pull it?" If we get over 10 or 12 percent of the population on welfare, do you think the rest of us will be able to pick up the load? It is a dangerous step and I think the House ought to defeat this legislation. I am opposed to it, and will vote against it, and I am convinced the Nation will regret the day this philosophy was adopted, if the House does indeed, pass this unworkable legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FULTON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to a member of the committee, the gentleman from California (Mr. CORMAN).

(Mr. CORMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act.

Our chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS), has explained in great detail the reforms which this bill will bring about. I would like to underline three which are of particular importance.

First, it is the work incentive provision This bill will require recipients who have the ability to work to register for training and employment as a condition to receiving benefits. I would not overstate the importance of this provision because I am convinced that almost every American wants to work, and the mandatory nature of this provision is not going to significantly change that situation.

Another incentive has to do with that portion of one's earned income which a recipient will be permitted to keep. Under the present program, a mother who goes to work may be in danger of losing her assistance payment. While at work, she has the additional disadvantage of not knowing how her children are faring without her. The reform bill will assure that her children are being cared for while she is at work, and will permit her to keep a reasonable share of her earnings, in addition to her assistance payment.

The second and certainly the most important part of this bill, as far as the State of California is concerned, is that a substantial increase in the share of welfare costs will be borne by the Federal Government. For California, this will amount to about $200 million in the first full year of the implementation of the act, assuming that the State will take advantage of the Federal Government's offer to administer the program. It would then be possible for the State government to assume the balance of California's welfare costs, thereby completely relieving the counties in the State of this financial burden.

Such a step would permit welfare costs to be shifted to the broader State and Federal tax base, leaving the local tax base free to bear the cost of educational and other municipal requirements.

The third important reform is the establishment of a Federal minimum payment. Let us take a look at this Federal minimum. Is it really dangerously high? For a family of four without income, the minimum is $2,400 a year; $1,600 in cash and $800 in food stamps. Now, it just happens that I support a family of four and it also happens that my take-home pay is approximately $2,400 a month. I assume each of us is generally in that same category. If you would like to know the adequacy of this minimum payment, take next month's paycheck home to your wife and tell her she must support your family on it for a year. I believe she will convince you that it is not excessive.

I have been surprised to hear some of my colleagues worry about the willingness of Americans to work if we remove the incentive of hunger. I cannot accept the proposition that a man works only if and when he is hungry. The fact of the matter is that the state of hunger undoubtedly diminishes one's mental and physical capacity to work. I believe that Americans are inspired to seek work for many more reasons than just the need of food. I think that we have come a long way from that rather primitive notion of why people work.

Finally, a number of Members have been critical of the Ways and Means Committee because we cannot tell the exact amount of the cost of this program. I would have to say to you that if you can tell me how many people in the Nation will be unemployed in the next year, and the next, and the next, then I can give you a reasonably accurate figure as to the cost of this program. For instance, if we have full employment—if everyone who has the ability has the opportunity for a job—then the cost of the program will be relatively low. And, we will then be taking care only of the aged, the blind, the physically disabled, and orphaned children whose parents are dead or in prison or for some other reason are not capable of taking care of them. But, if the present trend continues and unemployment increases and we find millions of Americans willing and eager to work but unable to find jobs, then the cost of this program will be substantial.

We do not report to you that this bill will solve the Nation's economic ills. We do say that it will, in a modest way, provide some decent living standard for those who because of economic circumstances find themselves in dire straits.

Let us look at the alternatives. What happened after 1929? Americans, unable to work, stood in soup lines. Children begged or stole for food. Families were made homeless because they were unable to continue payments on their homes or were unable to pay rent. This country is not going back to those conditions and practices.

There are lots of things that need to be done in this country. We need more and better schools; more and better medical care. We need to end pollution of our streams and air. Programs such as these—and many more like them—create jobs, and jobs cut down the cost of welfare.

But, we are not authorizing such programs in this bill. All we are saying in this bill is that if there are jobs, then needy people who qualify under the bill's provisions, must be trained for jobs and required to take them. If they have the physical and mental ability to do that, then out of the generosity of the American people, they will be given enough to keep body and soul together. If jobs are not available, neither will they have to starve or steal.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 16311.

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KAZEN. I agree with some of the things which the gentleman from California has said.

Mr. CORMAN. I hope the gentleman, then, will support the bill.

Mr. KAZEN. However, the point is, with reference to this bill, that it is not going to create jobs. I come from an area where there is a great degree of unemployment. The gentleman talks about a 4- or 5-percent unemployment rate. I have an 11-percent unemployment rate in some parts of my district. The reason for that is the fact that there are no jobs available. We have trained people for all kinds of work under the various programs that now exist but when all of the training was over, they did not have a job at which to work.

What in the world are we going to do with that problem?

Mr. CORMAN. There is provision in this bill for public works projects where we can federally fund certain projects in areas such as one which the gentleman has described, on the condition that the program in that area will enable some of these people to become ultimately employed in the private sector. It is in a sense a small WPA. True, it is only a short-term answer, but again we cannot take care of all the economic ills of the Nation in any welfare assistance bill. This must be taken care of under the private enterprise system and other fiscal decisions which we must make.

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the thing that worries at least this gentleman is the fact that here we are discussing guaranteeing a minimum annual income while I think what we ought to direct ourselves to is a more pressing need—that of guaranteeing a job for those able to work before we guarantee any income minimums.

Mr. CORMAN. I will say to the gentleman that there is a legitimate case which can be made for the Federal Government becoming an employer of last resort. However, I have some misgivings about that, but if unemployment continues to rise, we may find it necessary.

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COLLIER).

(Mr. COLLIER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, over the past two decades, I can think of no single domestic program in this country which has been more consistently or bitterly criticized than the welfare system.

The criticism of our welfare system has come from a spectrum ranging from the man on the street to the legislative and executive leaders in the country.

The present system has been called deplorable, unfair, parasitic, and intolerable.

I have never refuted these criticisms because they properly describe the present welfare system, which is unfair and is deplorable and is intolerable. In fact, the present system breeds irresponsibility that feeds on itself.

I have also heard many of the ardent critics of the present welfare system say, "We ought to help people who are willing to help themselves," and I have heard them say, "We ought to help people help themselves." And I wholeheartedly agree.

But in listening to these same critics attack the legislation before us today, I find them strangely inconsistent.

I had hoped that there would be strong support to get rid of the present welfare system and replace it with one that conforms to the lipservice reform over the years.

Yet I do not find a single item of legislation introduced by those who have attacked the present program and are making a career out of criticizing the one which is proposed in this legislation.

If the present welfare system is so deplorable and if the proposed legislation is unacceptable, it is only logical to ask why those who find themselves in this position have not done something about offering a constructive alternative.

Yet throughout the hearings on this bill, no one came forward with anything that resembled a replacement in the broad sense for the present obsolete program.

The attacks I have heard on the proposed legislation have not been directed to the concept or the principle of this legislation, but rather to fear based on conjecture that it will not be administered in accoradnce with our legislative intent. Well, now, let me tell you that no program, no matter how carefully devised, will be any more effective than the manner in which it is administered. This is certainly obvious under any conditions.

And I have heard such arguments against this bill in the last 2 days as would provide the attitudes of the courts as a reason to oppose this legislation. And, of course, I have been around here long enough to know that when arguments based on conjecture rather than fact fail to satisfy the need for any type of reform, you can always fall back on the "foot in the door" or the "camel's nose under the tent" approach—and this has not been overlooked by the opponents—yet I think we must understand that these cliches of foreboding really fail to address themselves to the real issue.

It is all right to agree that we have a problem—but when we do it seems to me that we ought to agree that there should be some solution.

I see no need at this point in the debate to belabor the excellent presentations of Chairman MILLS and the ranking minority member of the committee, JOHN BYRNES. But I would like to summarize my own position as concisely as my remaining time permits.

We can no longer accept and condone a welfare system that has failed miserably, a welfare system that has fostered disintegration of the family unit. We can no longer accept and condone a system which frequently makes it more attractive to go on the welfare rolls than to work. We can no longer tolerate a welfare system that is a failure and one which grows worse each day.

I am convinced that if there is any solution to the growing welfare problem in this country, and if there is any hope for helping the people in the lowest economic strata of our society, it lies in the approach embraced in this legislation. To suggest it does not is to suggest there is no hope. To suggest that those who are economically depressed fall into a singular category of people who are not and do not want to help themselves is to again say we must continue the present system in the hopeless fashion of increasing welfare costs year after year.

Well, I am neither naive nor am I a dogooder. While I offer no one an insurance policy on the success of this program, I sincerely believe that on a long-term basis it will cost the people of this country a great deal less in both dollars and human resources.

And permit me to remind every Member of this House, including those who are opposed to this bill, that we are providing a structure upon which improvements can be made through the process of revision and amendment. If it is necessary to provide more stringent enforcement of the work provisions, it is the responsibility of Congress to do so. And I happen to think the Congress will do so if we are able to integrate the work and training provisions with the welfare payments and correct the gross inequities in the existing program.

I urge every Member of this House to give welfare reform a chance. To do anything less is to accept the present program, with all of its present shortcomings, and its inevitable social doom.

Mr. FULTON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SCHEUER).

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to praise the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means for his admirable leadership in preparing the forward-looking bill indeed, the precedent shattering bill we are considering today—and for the excellent committee report on that bill.

In the report the committee regretted that many manpower programs in the past "often emphasized work at the expense of meaningful training that would lead to the family leaving the public assistance rolls."

Of course, that is a major goal of this bill—to enable people to acquire the education and job training to become employed, financially independent, and self-supporting.

Section 431 (c) (2) of H.R. 16311, evidently a suggestion how to rectify those mistakes, mentions the following services for the trainees in manpower training and employment programs: "counseling, testing, coaching, program orientation, institutional and on-the-job training, work experience, upgrading, job development, job placement and follow up services required to assist in securing and retaining employment and opportunities for advancement."

Mr. Chairman, am I right in understanding these sections as endorsements of efforts to contribute to the broader adoption of new methods of structuring jobs and of providing career-ladder opportunities?

Mr. MILLS. Upgrading the skills of the working poor is an important part of the proposal, and it is a very important part.

Mr. SCHEUER. I thank the distinguished chairman.

Mr. Chairman, section 433 of H.R. 16311 states that the Secretary of Labor should try to "further the establishment of an integrated and comprehensive manpower training program involving all sectors of the economy and all levels of government" and to "make maximum use of existing manpower related programs and agencies."

Mr. Chairman, will the jobs encompassed under these programs include those designed to improve the social and economic conditions of the community by upgrading the quality of the public services in health, education, welfare, and public safety?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; I might say to the gentleman, if they are a part of an established training program.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, the committee report for H.R. 16311 states:

> By requiring that the prime grantees demonstrate a capacity to work effectively with the manpower agency, the Committee believes that a greater degree of coordination of manpower and child care services can be achieved than has been the case in previous programs.

Would this improved coordination of manpower and child care services include the use of the children's parents as aides and for some of them—in time and after the proper training—as professionals at the child care centers?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; it is so intended.

Mr. SCHEUER. The distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in my view, is to be congratulated for encouraging relief recipients to become economically independent. Recently the Washington Post had an article on the city welfare department's decision to cut off the welfare of an unwed welfare mother in her last semester of high school.

I assume that the distinguished chairman would favor helping a relief recipient to complete high school since, demonstrably, such education and high school degree is so necessary to help her get a good job and thus achieve financial independence for herself and her children. Would that be a fair statement of the intent of the House?

Mr. MILLS. The answer would depend upon the individual case. As I said earlier, this bill is not intended to support students primarily, but if a person is close to completing her education, it could be determined by the Employment Security Office that completing education is appropriate training.

Mr. SCHEUER. I very much appreciate the chairman's answer. I appreciate his candor in answering all of these questions. I wish to express my admiration for the great job the committee has done during untold months of hearings and in producing a bill and a committee report that in many respects is one of the most far-reaching, imaginative, and creative pieces of legislation we have considered in many years.

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WILLIAMS).

(Mr. WILLIAMS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the proposed Family Assistance Act of 1970—H.R. 16311—would prove a dreadful hoax on the American people.

This so-called "family assistance program" would immediately add a minimum of $4.4 billion to Federal welfare costs, and would place additional millions of people on welfare rolls. The only welfare program that FAP would phase out would be aid to families with dependent children, on which the Federal Government now spends $2.1 billion per year.

Past experience has proved that whenever a new welfare program is created for the purpose of solving a problem, that problem is only accentuated and its cost escalated. Be assured that FAP will be no exception.

The Federal share of FAP for each family would be based on an annual $500, each, for the first two members of a family, plus $300 for each additional family member with the States required to supplement the massive Federal payment.

Obviously, it would only be a matter of time until FAP-guaranteed payments would be increased in response to well-established pressures by self-seeking officials, liberal social theorists, and hard core professional welfarists.

A major FAP weakness would be in the fact that eight types of income would be excluded from consideration before FAP payments would be determined. Since each family's payments would have to be determined individually in accordance with income earned, a virtual army of investigators and accountants would be needed for this operation alone.

FAP would require recipients to register for suitable training or employment. But FAP would conveniently exclude five classes of people from that same registration. Further, it would provide no spelling out the definition of precisely what "suitable" training or employment would really be. Nor would FAP spell out any procedure that might be applied to those who accept jobs but purposefully fail to perform properly in order to be fired and return to welfare.

FAP would provide for recovery of any funds fraudulently collected from the Federal Government, with enforcement resting with the Department of Justice. However, with the tens of thousands of fathers who have deserted their families, and with thousands of unenforced court orders already out on fathers in behalf of dependent children, it would require a doubling of the size of the Justice Department just to enforce FAP's recovery of fraudulent collection provision.

FAP would provide that a new agency be established within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to administer FAP's provisions. This new agency would have to employ thousands of people and, in short order, could, in fact, easily result in doubling the present size of HEW, itself.

An abundant history makes it perfectly obvious that this so-called family assistance program would prove to be nothing more than just another gigantic giveaway which would further reward the indolent and the malcontent. This would be accomplished at the expense of those who work and support their families despite the evermore oppressive odds of high taxes borne, in great part, of too many "something for nothing" schemes.

I have also heard in this Chamber this afternoon that the State of Massachusetts is using approximately 25 percent of its budget for welfare purposes and that States and other localities need help. Let me tell the Members something. We can go from one section of this country to another, and we would have to look hard to find any State in as poor financial condition as our Federal Government.

Next year alone we are going to have to refinance over $100 billion in Federal obligations that are going to mature, and we are not prepared to pay off one penny of that $100 billion in Federal obligations that are going to mature during fiscal year 1971, which starts July 1, 1970. We are going to be fortunate to be able to refinance this $100 billion in maturing obligations at interest rates as low as 8 percent.

We have reached a point where every 3 years and 8 months we have to refinance our entire national debt, and if we have to refinance our entire national debt of over $360 billion at 8 percent, that is going to be a $30 billion a year annual payment on interest alone.

This will mean on welfare and interest on the national debt we are going to be spending far more than 25 percent of our budget, so as it turns out the States are in much, much better condition than our Federal Government.

Relief of human misery, easement of the pains of recovery, and assurance of equitable opportunity fall in one category—but to elevate and lock in professional welfarism as a part of the so-called American way of life falls into quite another category which the people of this Nation simply could not afford and would not long knowingly tolerate.

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN).

(Mr. CHAMBERLAIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16311, a bill providing comprehensive changes in our Federal, State, and local welfare program. Everyone who has studied the present program agrees on one salient fact: that it is deficient in almost every respect.

Our present program has grown dramatically in recent years, both in terms of the individuals covered and total dollar costs. Between 1961 and 1970, the number of families and individual recipients more than doubled—to a total of 1.8 million families and 7 million individuals. During this same period total costs have nearly doubled to the present total of $4.2 billion.

This runaway pattern is expected to continue into the future unless fundamental reforms are made, with the number of recipients nearly doubling again by 1975 and the total costs more than doubling. The immense burden that this program imposes on taxpayers at all levels of government demands that we address ourselves to this chaotic situation rather than turning our heads to look the other way and hope the problem will go away.

The present program discourages work and self-sufficiency by providing a "guaranteed annual income" to individuals who qualify for welfare virtually without regard to their own efforts. In many cases individuals are financially better off on welfare than they are working. By discriminating against the working poor, the present program not only encourages idleness but provides a strong incentive for family disintegration. Only by leaving home can a working poor father qualify his family for benefits under the aid to families with dependent children program.

The bill before the House today will go a long way toward correcting these defects. Instead of an incentive for idleness, the bill will insure that individuals will always be better off if they are working. Rather than providing a "guaranteed annual income" regardless of an individual's efforts, assistance will be contingent on an individual making every effort to become self-sufficient through work, training, and employment. The incentive for family breakup under present law will be substantially diminished and in many cases eliminated by proving coverage for the working poor.

The emphasis in this new program is to help people care for themselves by developing their potential. This will, of course, cost additional money in the first few years, but it must be remembered that this is a long-range program and given time it is our hope that it will be less expensive—both in human and in dollar costs.

I would like to take this occasion to point out that the bill does create one very serious inequity for working people who will not receive benefits under this bill that, in my opinion, we cannot ignore. One of the reforms in this bill provides day care for small children in order to enable adults who would normally care for them to receive training and employment so that they may become self-sufficient. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare intends to request $386 million for child care purposes for the first full year of operation. It is estimated that this will provide care for 300,000 school age children at an estimated cost of $400 per child, and for 150,000 preschool children at an estimated cost of $1,600 per child. These day care provisions of the bill are essential to enable individuals to move from the welfare rolls to the employment rolls, and I support them.

However, as we face up to the actual costs of child care we find that the amounts involved are much more generous than the deductions we now allow under the Internal Revenue Code for nonwelfare taxpayers who have to pay for child care themselves in order to be available to work. The Internal Revenue Code provides a child care deduction of $600 where one child is involved, and $900 where two children are involved. In addition, under the law this allowance is reduced by $1 for every dolar that the parents' income exceeds $6,000. This means that the child care deduction is eliminated when income reaches $6,600 in the case of one child and $6,900 in the case of two children.

Thus, in New Jersey, under the new bill, a welfare mother with two preschool children and one school age child, would be entitled to child care benefits approximating $3,600, as long as her income from earnings and public assistance does not exceed $6,547—the Secretary has discretion to continue paying child care expenses at even higher income levels for a period of time. Yet a working couple with three children of similar age earning $6,457 would be entitled to a child care deduction of only $343. Assuming the couple is in the 15 percent income tax bracket, this deduction would provide a net benefit of only $51.45. And if the couple should increase their income to $6,900, they would not be entitled to any deduction.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot ask the working couple to pay taxes to support not only public assistance recipients, but to provide them with child care allowances far in excess of the meager income tax deduction taxpayers are allowed. This is wrong. Current allowable deductions for child care are unrealistic. Equity requires that the child care deduction in our income tax law be liberalized to provide benefits commensurate with the current cost of child care.

In order to accomplish this, I have joined in introducing legislation that would increase the deduction for child care expenses to $1,200 in the case of one child, and to $2,400 where two or more children are involved. The legislation would also repeal the provisions of present law that phase out the deduction when the taxpayer's income exceeds $6,000. This would recognize that child care expenses that are incurred to enable a taxpayer to work, are expenses sufficiently related to the taxpayer's job to justify deduction as a business expense.

In my judgment this is a matter of high priority. In the bill we are considering today we are trying to provide incentives and opportunities for people to get off the welfare roles. In doing so we should not ignore the effort of those who have managed by one means or another to take care of themselves. We should not create or condone a dual cost approach to child care by recognizing the actual cost of this service for welfare recipients and something less than the actual cost for those who have had the initiative to get a job to help take care of themselves. How in good conscience, I ask, can we deny these working parents a realistic deduction and then use their tax money, in part, to give a benefit unavailable to them to others?

The Committee on Ways and Means is aware of this gross inequity, and I feel the members are disposed to see that it is corrected. It is my hope that our chairman will make certain that this matter receives early consideration to the end that remedial legislation may be enacted.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the matter which I have just discussed is not the only problem area that will be discovered as this reform measure is implemented. I well realize that the family assistance plan is not without its critics for I, too, have reservations. However, as we have worked on this bill—week after week—month after month—I have been impressed with the fact that no one seems to have a better plan to suggest. Nor have I heard anyone offer any strong defense of the present system. While I am well aware that we cannot solve our complex welfare problems by any legislative magic, I am satisfied that society's greatest hope lies in a new philosophical approach to our aggravated welfare problems . . . one which encourages work and neither stifles nor destroys individual initiative. It is for this reason, and with this hope, that I support H.R. 16311.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to call to the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan that in more than half of the States the father does not have to leave the household in order for the family to receive aid under the program of aid to dependent children.

However, I do want to agree with the point which has been made by the gentleman that the AFDC program is a totally insufficient program. It is inadequate and doing nothing but accentuate the problem.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe everyone agrees with the gentleman's statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to say to the gentleman from Michigan and to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COLLIER) and anyone else who is interested that I have worked on a substitute plan which I think I have fairly well refined now which would phase out AFDC over a period of time and which would produce much, much better results, while this phasing out is being accomplished.

I would welcome the opportunity to talk to the gentleman in his office at any time about this alternate plan.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would say to my colleague that I am pleased to hear this. I feel it is unfortunate that we have not had the benefit of his suggestions at an earlier date in order that they could have been considered by the committee as this matter has been under review. I think anyone who has any constructive suggestion to help us out of the mess we are in right now should come forward. We would be glad to hear from anyone who has a better plan.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserve your decision because you may not agree with my plan.

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON).

(Mr. HUTCHINSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, we are all agreed that the present ADC program is a mess and that it is now, or soon will be, completely out of hand. It must be replaced. The administration has proposed the bill now before us as a new approach—workfare instead of welfare, it is called. Many of us have great reservations about this particular approach, but some have been able to resolve those doubts in favor of the legislation, while others, and I am one of those, have found the doubts so great that in good conscience we cannot support it. I propose to state briefly, Mr. Chairman, those questions about the bill which have persuaded me that, much as a new approach to welfare is needed, this is not the answer. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I doubt that the situation will be one whit improved but rather worsened by the enactment of this legislation.

The ADC program will be abolished by this bill, and that is all to the good, and a family assistance program instituted in its place. But the new program of family assistance does not change much the ADC program as it applies to fatherless homes. So long as there is a child under 6—and there most usually is a child under 6 in those homes—the mother need not register for employment or take work training in order to obtain the Federal benefit, and the State in which the family is living is required to supplement the Federal program up to the level of payments that family now receives from ADC. As to that family, therefore, the ADC program continues, in everything but name. And, Mr. Chairman, the vast majority of present ADC cases fall within the category of a family without a man in the house. To all intents and purposes, the proposal in this bill carries forward the present ADC program without change. Under the present program an ADC mother is encouraged to take work training and better her lot in life thereby—on a voluntary basis. This bill carries the same approach.

As to those cases where there is a man in the house, the bill requires him to register with the employment service, receive their counsel, take their training program, and accept a job they find for him. But the proferred employment must be suitable work. Now that term, "suitable work," has acquired a meaning in the law. It is a term well understood in unemployment compensation systems. It means that an unemployed individual need not take a job beneath his skills, but only such employment as he has regularly had in the past. It is argued that in the case of the newly trained individual without work experience this unemployment compensation meaning of suitable work will not apply. I anticipate that it will mean that if a man is trained for a particular skill, no other type of employment will be deemed suitable for him, even though there may be no need for such employment in his community. I expect that the term "suitable work" will have the same narrowing meaning in the requirement for employment within the family assistance program as it has had in unemployment compensation.

But if a newly trained individual is put to work within the scope of his new training, there is no compulsion upon him to do his best to keep the job. Suppose he quits, or is fired for cause. What then? Will his eligibility under the family assistance program continue?

And even if he refuses to work, the only economic penalty upon him is a loss of $300 in family assistance benefit to his family unit. Benefits to the other members of his family continue, and if he leaves home, his wife and children can comply with the ADC requirements, with their family benefits supplemented by State grants up to the level now provided.

I doubt this family assistance plan has enough economic inducement within it to achieve that goal of keeping families together.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation we now consider is intended to meet the problem, made infinitely worse by recent Supreme Court decisions outlining residency requirements for welfare assistance, which results from a variation of benefits among the States. Some, like Michigan, have become a magnet to those people because of the generosity of their welfare payments. Some way must be found to level off the benefit structures between the States and to discourage the inmigration of welfare cases into some States where the benefits are generous—but so is the cost of living in those States high. The requirement in this bill that those States must supplement the Federal payments on ADC cases to their present levels means the inmigration of such cases will likely continue.

A fundamental change in this new approach is to embrace the working poor into the welfare system. I had hoped the solution to our welfare problems would be programs to reduce the dependence of people on welfare. This bill increases that dependence. True, it purports to contain inducements sufficient to persuade large numbers of people to lift themselves out of that dependence. The ambitious will be so encouraged. But for many if not most, I suspect they will not feel sure enough of themselves to want to completely separate themselves from the security of tax free welfare income, and the welfare system as we now it—but greatly expanded in costs and in numbers—will continue.

Much as I concur, Mr. Chairman, in the need for a complete change in our welfare system, I do not believe this legislation will accomplish it. This bill is not the answer we seek. I wish I knew the answer. I believe we must look further for it.

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHBROOK).

(Mr. ASHBROOK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PRICE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

(Mr. PRICE of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PRICE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to announce that I cannot in good conscience support the proposed Family Assistance Act of 1970.

My opposition is based on three factors: The sentiment of the voters in the 18th District of Texas, my belief that welfare reform has been turned into a political football, and my deep-seated reservations about the act itself. I would like to discuss each of these factors in turn.

The opposition of the voters in the 18th Congressional District of Texas, to the proposed Family Assistance Act is overwhelming. The message has come to me through attitudinal surveys, congressional correspondence, and numerous discussions I have had on the issue with constituents. The message is loud and clear—vote "no" on the proposed welfare reforms. I agree with this message; in addition, as the Representative of the 18th District, I feel bound by the elected expression of the voters' views on this issue.

I also believe that the welfare reform proposed by the President have been turned into a political football, and that the issue will be used in an attempt to discredit the President's good faith effort to reform the national welfare system. By way of explanation, in the normal case, the President proposes legislation to Congress. The legislation is then introduced and referred to an appropriate committee where substantial rewriting and redrafting is affected. The reason for this is clear. It is not possible for the President to anticipate in advance what each particular committee member must have in a bill before he can support it. Consequently, the President is forced to propose legislation to Congress which presents his programs in such a manner that an appropriate committee can have the opportunity to modify it to suit its preference; hopefully, without killing the President's basic proposals in the process.

This was not the case, however, with the proposed welfare reforms. The majority on the House Ways and Means Committee approved the bill almost as it was written by the President. They then went before the Rules Committee in an effort to insure that the bill would be debated under a rule not allowing for the submission of corrective amendments from the House floor.

This is most unusual. A President's proposals usually do not receive such uniform approval from a House committee. This is especially true when the President belongs to a different political party than does the majority of committee members. The majority Members are normally too jealous of their legislative prerogatives and too partisan to bend without challenge to the Presidential will.

The President's comprehensive tax reform program is an excellent example of the tendency to which I am referring. The President submitted his proposals to Congress last year, and by the time the House Ways and Means Committee got through rewriting the proposals, their original form was hardly recognizable.

I can think of one good reason why the President's welfare reform proposals were so uniformly approved by the Ways and Means Committee. The legitimate cause of welfare reform has become fatally involved with partisan politics, and liberal members of the majority party want to fabricate a campaign issue for the November elections. They have to make up campaign issues because the President by his actions has not handed them any. He is trying in the best fashion he knows how, to lead the country into a productive and peaceful decade. The other party knows this; but more importantly, the American people know it also. That is why the issue is being fabricated. It is a lame attempt to discredit the President. I will have no part of it.

In making his proposals to Congress, President Nixon made a good faith effort to interest Congress in addressing itself to the cancerous problem of welfare; unfortunately, House liberals seem more interested in partisan politics than meaningful reform.

Finally, I have some strong reservations about the merits of the Family Assistance Act as it is presently written. I think the present welfare system is cancerous because it benefits neither the welfare recipient, the taxpayer who supports the program, nor society in general which must continue to strive for progress despite the continued drag caused by the sizeable number of individuals who would rather take a Federal relief check than a job.

Our present welfare system has made it more profitable for some people to loaf than to work. In addition to the individual and family problems this directly creates, think for a minute what it does to the incentives of an individual who works a full work week and earns for his labors only a few dollars more than does the wastrel on relief.

This is just a bare bones description of the negative effects of the present system, effects we have heard more fully described in other speeches here in the House Chamber yesterday and today. For this reason, I will not dwell on the negative parts of the welfare system at any greater lengths, but will turn to a brief explanation of why I do not think the proposed Family Assistance Act solves the Nation's welfare problem.

The act proposes that the Federal Government finance minimum annual welfare payments of $500 for each of the first two members of a family and $300 for each additional member. This means that a family of four, the statistical average American family, would be entitled to $1,600. This amount would be supplemented by State payments so that no family would receive less under the act than it presently receives. Add to this the fact that welfare recipients will be able to obtain $16 worth of federally financed food stamps for every $10 they spend on the stamps, and it works out to an additional $800 or so in welfare benefits. We are really, then talking about $2,400 in guaranteed benefits for a family of four, which is nothing more, nothing less than a guaranteed annual income. Calling it an income maintenance floor does not change anything but the name by which it is referred to.

I am unalterably opposed to a guaranteed annual income system. I believe it would wreck our incentive system of production, the system that couple with the free enterprise system, has brought the United States to the productive heights it has achieved today. People just would not work, if they could get paid for not working. This is not a blanket indictment, however, for some people would work anyway. But if people get something for nothing, it generally would erode their will to work and contribute to society.

Another objection I have to the proposed bill is that it would add about 15 million new individuals to the welfare rolls. In my mind, this would not solve our welfare problem, it would just increase it.

I also object to the $4.4 billion that the program will cost, and this is just for the first year of its operation. I do not believe that this program would be exempt from the bureaucratic pressures that accompany all other Federal efforts, pressures that turn small Federal programs into gigantic ones, and minimal Federal expenditures into excessive and wasteful ones. This is the very nature of the bureaucratic process. And this is one chief reason why I believe the Government should keep its activities to the bare irreducible minimum.

Moreover, I do not think that the Federal Government should even consider spending $4.4 billion on a new welfare program when this Nation is locked in a titanic struggle with inflation. Particularly when $2.1 billion will be allocated just to cover the welfare costs of the 15 million new welfare recipients that will be added by the act.

Finally, while public assistance certainly should be given the sick, the blind, the disabled, and the needy young, I do not think that public assistance should be given to the working poor. By including them and restructuring the welfare system along the lines of a guaranteed income approach, welfare is made more comfortable and respectable rather than less so. It gives it more of the color of a "inalienable right" rather than the true color of "temporary maintenance" as was originally envisioned by the architects of welfare.

I would think my colleagues could profit well by harking to the words of the father of the New Deal, President Franklin D. Roosevelt. He said in 1935:

> The Federal Government must and shall quit this business of relief—continued dependence upon relief induces a spiritual and moral disintegration, fundamentally destructive to the national fiber. To dole out relief in this way is to administer a narcotic, a subtle destroyer of the human spirit.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the Family Assistant Act, despite all its rhetoric of workfare and job incentives, is basically a program giving people "something for nothing." In my view, this is the least effective way to help people help themselves.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take time in outlining what I feel are some of the problems involved in this legislation and some of the shortcomings but, rather, to raise some specific questions. My basic objections have already been summarized in the RECORD.

Having worked with this for better than a month in trying to reduce the written legislation into actual dollars-and-cents figures, I can guarantee you it is a very, very difficult thing to do. It is going to be contingent upon many different interpretations in the various States and in HEW.

Mr. Chairman, I think one of the basic weaknesses I see in the program is the argument that bringing the program to the Federal level will automatically straighten out all of the problems in the States. I think most of us find that argument just a little bit hollow. We are never completely sure that HEW intends to carry out even the stated intention of the Congress, let alone straighten out the problem.

However, Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise several specific questions and I would ask the able chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS), for the purpose of legislative history several questions.

On page 33 of the committee report there is language which I think will be most difficult to interpret. In the middle of the page it says:

> It is not intended by your committee that these programs should provide assistance which would be supportive of firms or industries which have high rates of turnover of labor because of low wages, seasonality or other factors.

I would ask the able chairman whether or not he has some concern in the administration of this program, and the regulations that will carry it out, whether or not this in effect would not in the future likely remove the tendency for employment security offices to refer potential workers in so-called work incentive programs to what might be called marginal industries. These would include hotels, motels, laundries and restaurants which traditionally have been low-wage industries. Does the gentleman see any danger in putting language such as this in the bill? Would its effect be to make it unlikely to refer people to such low-income industries?

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman will yield, yes, I would not deny that there is some problem. What we are trying to do in the report, as I am sure the gentleman in the well knows, is to give some clarity or better guideline to the Department of Labor in the establishment of regulations as to the feeling of the committee, at least, about these matters.

We do not want these people to be working in just seasonal jobs if we can find for them annual jobs. We do not want to put them into all of these low-paying jobs, because we think some of them as a result of training, particularly those that have as much as a high school education, can be trained for better paying jobs.

Mr. ASHBROOK. But will the gentleman agree that while it is the legislative intent to encourage getting these people the best jobs possible——

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That it could very well give some future bureaucrat from the Office of HEW or Labor the option of saying "Wait, we are not going to send these people to the lower paying industries such as restaurants, laundries, motels, and hotels?"

Mr. MILLS. No. That is not intended.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Because these are, in the language of the committee, low-wage industries?

Mr. MILLS. No.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Everybody knows they are low-wage industries, but they might possibly form the only jobs available to them.

Mr. MILLS. If they were full-time jobs they might conform.

Mr. ASHBROOK. So it is not the intention of the committee to rule out some what might be called future employment in the low-wage industries?

Mr. MILLS. We are not overlooking the fact that some people may be assigned to low-wage jobs, and they may not be all assigned to a full-time annual job in the very beginning.

Some of them may have to take some seasonal jobs to begin with, but we hope the bulk of them will not.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I think since we might be trying to make a little legislative history, I think first of all we do not rule out any job.

Mr. MILLS. No. No; we do not.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. It is not our intention to exclude any jobs because the whole thrust and purpose of this bill is to get people into a posture to help themselves. We want to make the job basically compatible for that individual, but there is nothing in the bill that says they can hold out for a high skilled job when there is a lower skilled opportunity available right now.

Mr. MILLS. That is correct.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think the gentleman is correct. I certainly agree with the concept and the desire, it is obvious that everybody would like to be in high paid employment, but I think some of us have fears that in the social climate in which we live, and possibly because of bureaucratic regulations, there is a strong likelihood that people will not be referred to jobs of this type simply because they are at the lower rung of the economic ladder.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. That is one of the reasons we went into detail on some of these criteria. We wanted to make sure that the Secretary could substitute his own subjective judgment for the intent of the committee and the Congress.

If this person had very little work experience or no work experience, then of course he is going to have to take a lower paying job. He is going to have to take a lower job consistent with his background. In other words, we do not rule out any jobs. He has to recognize that while maybe the job that is open is not a particularly desirable job, the person who has not had that work or experience, can fill that job and acquire work experience and discipline that will enable himself to qualify for a better job in the future.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think the gentleman is certainly optimistic in his outlook. Having had a little more experience with HEW guidelines and Department of Labor guidelines, I would have to observe somewhat facetiously—I am afraid not as facetiously as it might seem—that I will sit back and wait for the very first person who is denied his family assistance because he refused to accept one of these lower rung jobs. If that time comes, I will frankly tell you that you are right and I am wrong—but I am not going to hold my breath until that happens, I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Let me say for the record that there is an additional aspect of this that we had better recognize and that the Secretary of Labor should recognize—and I think he does. The entire work incentive program has two purposes. One is the betterment of the individual. But also there will be reduction in the cost of the program that will enable us to keep it within bounds when individuals work. We cannot continue the present program because it does not encourage people to go to work at all. That is why the costs are running up as much as they are. The Secretary has a definite obligation under this bill, not only as to the welfare of these individuals, but also to the Treasury of the United States to see that these people get to work.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I thank the gentleman for that, and I appreciate the gentleman making that legislative history.

I have one last question which I would direct to the distinguished chairman or the ranking minority member.

Again, consider one of the premises that I happen to believe is a little weak in argument—although I think what the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Wisconsin are saying is accurate in concept.

Most of us worry about how it is going to work out in its actual implementation. One of the things I think is fairly weak in its premise is adding anywhere from 11 to 13 million on what might be called the welfare rolls on the theory that the program will work and they will work themselves off the welfare rolls. Another faulty premise is that the program in the long run will cost less.

I would like to ask one specific question as to whether or not either the gentleman from Arkansas or the gentleman from Wisconsin, either one, do not have some misgivings on these premises.

Does the gentleman honestly feel that over a reasonable period of time these people, the 11 or 12 million people being added, will in fact work themselves off the rolls?

I think it is clear that there is not a strong work incentive in this legislation. Anybody who has any doubt can look at page E3226 of the RECORD of yesterday. If there is not a strong built-in work incentive, can we honestly build such a superstructure on the theory that they will work themselves off the rolls and the coverage of this bill over a period of time?

Will the gentleman respond to that?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, I will be glad to.

No one, may I say to the gentleman, on the Committee on Ways and Means or anywhere in the Government can tell you with any degree of precision that we will work all of these people into better paying jobs or will work them all off of welfare.

There are two reasons, in my opinion, why we are justified in offering the working poor this incentive to take training. Those we are talking of largely are full-time employees which means they are working 40 hours or more than 30 hours a week. They apparently are not making enough to provide the income for their family sufficiently to provide them with these basic necessities of life.

There is the danger first that they may find out that their welfare program, in the State of Ohio or the State of New York or elsewhere, will pay them more money and give them more take-home pay than they can make while earning on a job.

If that is the threat, why do we not offer them this supplemental income while they are working full time in return for their taking training? In theory, it is good. I have said all the way through the success of the program depends entirely, in my opinion, on the attention that is given these individuals on an individual basis by the employment security agencies of all of our States, but I would not want to tell you that, I could assure you. I do not believe anybody would say that. But this is legislatively an improvement, I think, in every way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. WAGGONNER) such time as he desires.

(Mr. WAGGONNER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WAGGONNER. Mr. Chairman, my August 1966 newsletter was titled, "Full Scale Socialism for All Advocated in Advisory Council Recommendation." The opening lines of that newsletter were these:

In a 148-page report the like of which no Socialist dreamer ever dared propose seriously before, a Committee of "Great Society" planners has recommended to the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare that a program should be undertaken immediately to provide every man, woman and child in the United States a guaranteed annual income.

In August of 1966, this was only a recommendation to the Johnson administration. Less than 4 years later, today, we find this is a proposal by the Nixon administration. This dream of every Socialist of having the Government guarantee him an income is wrapped up in the bill we are now considering.

As was to be expected, the minute this guaranteed annual income feature was unveiled last year, the bandwagon started to roll. The predictable gaggle of liberals, leftists, and radicals were, at first, astounded that a supposedly conservative Republican administration was proposing national welfarism in a greater magnitude than even the most liberal Democrat in the history of the Nation. They regained their composure quickly, if not their intelligence, and began an outpouring of statements, position papers and conferences calling for increases that stagger the imagination and would empty the pocketbooks of the working public. No sum, it seems, is too much to take from the pockets of the taxpayers and dole out to those unwilling to work. I used the word "unwilling" only after making a careful choice among many words, because anyone willing to work today, except for the lame, the halt and the blind, can find a job by simply picking up a newspaper and reading the begging help wanted ads.

The proposal before us calls for a cash donation of $1,600 per year to every family of four in the United States whose income is under that figure, or whatever it takes to reach that sum plus an additional $860 in food stamps, for a total of $2,460, all of which is, of course, tax free. And it must be remembered that this is only the beginning. Each year, the demand from the welfare receivers and their liberal representatives in and out of the Congress will be irresistible. The figures will climb with the regularity of the sun in the sky.

This was made crystal clear by Mr. R. E. Patricelli, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, when he addressed a meeting of Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York late last year. He said:

When the budgetary situation improves, we might look toward increases in the federal base payment.

He also stated that the program "should be made universal," meaning that childless couples and single persons should also be included in the future.

No one believes more than I that the present welfare system needs a massive overhaul. I agree with the President when he says it is a failure. It has robbed a significant portion of the population of their will or interest in providing for themselves; it has made them wards of the state. But what is needed is not an overhaul which more than doubles the number now on the rolls as this proposal would—not an overhaul which adds another $4½ billion to the already staggering burden of welfare costs as this proposal would.

In the past 10 years, the number of people receiving some form of relief assistance has increased 52 percent and the cost of these programs has advanced 211 percent. All of this in only 10 years. It is now estimated that the Federal, State, and local costs exceed $72 billion per year.

And, needless to add, each of these $72 billion comes out of the pocket of the taxpayers who work for their livelihood.

Third- and fourth-generation families are now appearing on the welfare rolls, demanding higher and higher payments and less and less supervision of what they use the money for or whether or not they are even eligible for the payments. Welfare is, many now claim, their "constitutional right," an attitude which has been upheld more than once recently by various courts. The traditional concept of welfare as temporary assistance for those who are in need because of reasons beyond their control, no longer exists.

In an effort to soft-pedal the full, socialist impact of this proposal, the Nixon administration is attempting to sell it as a "work fare" proposal. If it were this, it would be more acceptable, but an examination of the facts reveals that the work requirements are almost nonexistent and those that do exist are unenforceable.

There are presently 9,600,000 persons now on welfare. Of these, exactly half are children; 1,500,000 are their mothers; 2,000,000 are aged; 728,000 are disabled; and 80,000 are blind. All of these would be exempt from work under exemptions provided by the Nixon proposal. This leaves 500,000—or one-nineteenth—who would be eligible for work. But, even then, there is another catch. These 500,000 would be required to accept only those jobs which are, in the opinion of the Secretary of Labor, "suitable." Would be, some future Secretary or some liberal adviser or employment security official consider a job as a dishwasher "suitable"? Or as a janitor, a lawncutter, maid, busboy, window cleaner or any of the other such manual labor jobs which the unemployed says are "demeaning"? I frankly doubt it.

This program, like many Federal programs, is offered up as the total answer to all the problems of the poor. Yet I cannot help but recall that, a few short years ago, the so-called poverty program was sold to the Congress and the people as being the one sure way of ending poverty and welfare in this Nation forever. Countless billions of wasted dollars later, the program is in a shambles, having done little for the poor but a great deal for the manipulators of the poor and the leeches who feed off the misery of others. Other impractical, visionary programs have likewise failed to live up to their publicity.

This proposal, in the jubilant words of liberal-leftist James Reston, "proposes more welfare, more people on public assistance than has any other President in the history of the Republic." It goes far beyond the socialist's dream of providing for each according to his needs. This proposal provides where there is no need and does not require that need even be demonstrated.

There is a need in this country for a welfare program, honestly administered, to assist the needy who are needy for no fault of their own, for the aged, the lame, the halt, and the blind. This kind of program I have supported and will always support. There is a need also for a program of temporary assistance for the willing and able-bodied who cannot find jobs; a program that requires some form of public work in the interim to pay for their support by the public. But, in this time of unparalleled prosperity, of jobs crying for workers, of opportunities for all regardless of race, sex, creed, or color, there is no justification for turning this Nation into a socialist welfare state. What's wrong with a guaranteed annual income? Nothing, if you believe in socialism. Everything, if, like me, you believe in democracy and the free enterprise system.

A number of items have appeared in the press since this proposal was first unveiled that I would like to include here at the end of my remarks because it is vital to me that the record show that there was no doubt but that this Congress knew the road it was taking this country down when it enacted this legislation. It would be convenient, in years to come, for those who are going to vote for this bill to say they had no idea that it would develop into what it will be before many years go by. I want to close that escape route so that every man who votes for this proposal will have to admit that the facts were on the table but he chose to ignore them. These are the items I have in mind.

From the February 24, 1970, issue of National Review:

THE NIXON PLAN: COMPOUNDING THE WELFARE MESS

(By Henry Hazlitt)

Ironically, the professional staff of the House Ways and Means Committee, a group controlled by the Democrats, has criticized the Republican Nixon welfare program chiefly from a conservative point of view.

The staff analysis asserts that, by extending welfare to working families, "the government, in a sense, would be telling a working father that he is officially not capable of supporting his family at what the government believes is the necessary level. One possible reaction of some fathers may be to let the government take over the job of completing supporting his family." Another criticism is that when he looks at how the plan applies to his family, a father "may soon realize that the only way for him to increase his income is to have a larger family. . . ." A third criticism is that some families might buy goods to reduce their cash assets, "a color TV, for example." A fourth is that 'government supplements to the wages of the working poor could create a subsidized pool of cheap labor to employers."

This report, however, no doubt inspired by Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, by no means assures that the Democratic Congress will flatly reject the Nixon plan. More likely it will put together a welfare package that the Democrats can call their own, and outbid even the Nixon plan in total cost.

Because the President's proposal, which he first put forward on television on August 8, was couched entirely in the rhetoric of conservatism, many conservatives were misled, and it was weeks before the plan received effective criticism. By far the best analysis is the 23-page study put out by the American Conservative Union. Among the points it makes are these:

The new plan makes it more comfortable to be on welfare, both by eliminating any means test and by increasing benefits for many welfare clients while decreasing benefits for none.

Mr. Nixon proposes that the federal level be $1,600 for a family of four with no outside income. A family of ten would be eligible to receive an income of $3,400 a year from the Federal Government, with any state allowance in addition.

One great danger in federalizing welfare is the new opportunity it provides for manipulation by organized groups. Welfarists will be able to concentrate all their pressures directly on Washington. This very tactic has often been employed to force increases in Social Security benefits and minimum wage laws. Already the AFL–CIO and other pressure groups are attacking President Nixon's recommendation of $1,600 maximum annual payment to a family of four as totally inadequate. They demand no less than a full $3,500, the minimum federal poverty level income.

The program will more than double the number of welfare recipients, adding twelve million more to the nearly ten million already on the rolls.

It will cause an initial increase of $5 billion in the federal budget, and perhaps double that.

It was put forward as a "workfare" program. "Everyone," said Mr. Nixon, "who accepts benefits must accept work or training, provided suitable jobs are available. . . . The only exceptions would be those unable to work and mothers of pre-school children." But the ACU points out that after we deduct the blind, the disabled, the aged, the children and the mothers of pre-school children from the 9.6 million people now receiving aid, only about 500,000 or 5 percent, would be required to accept work or receive job training under the Nixon plan. Whether the work requirement could be enforced even for these is more than doubtful. Already the professional welfare advocates are charging that any work requirement would amount to "involuntary servitude."

The Administration itself has greatly expanded the program since it was announced. White House aides said at first that the Family Security plan would at least eliminate food stamps. A few months later they announced that food stamps would not only remain, but that the annual appropriation for them would be doubled. This means that each family of four would not receive a federally guaranteed annual income of $1,600 (not counting state payments) but an additional food stamp allotment bringing the total federally paid income to $2,380.

The Nixon plan is in fact a "guaranteed annual income." The President himself said on December 8: "All of us want the poor to have a minimum floor [under their income], and that floor to be as high as possible." In other words, a person who will not work has a "right" to live permanently off the earnings of another man who can and does.

To these cogent criticisms I would like to add one point that has been generally neglected. Mr. Nixon deplores the wide state-by-state variations in relief payments. He claims as an outstanding merit of his plan that it would provide, if not uniformity, at least a "basic national minimum payment" everwhere. But this overlooks the wide divergencies in prevailing income and living standards among the states. The 1960 census showed that the median money income of families in Connecticut was 138 per cent greater than of families in Mississippi—or inversely, that the median income of Mississippi families was only 42 per cent of that of Connecticut families, with other states diverging within this range.

This means that even a uniform minimum national income guarantee that might do relatively minor harm in California or the Northeast would be so high compared with prevailing earned incomes in the Deep South as to tempt a third or more of the population to quit their jobs and climb aboard the welfare wagon, or to draw supplemental handouts. This could put a tremendous strain on precisely the state budgets that could least afford it.

A uniform minimum national welfare handout, in a nation with divergencies of up to 138 per cent in median earned family incomes among the states, would create far more serious problems than any it might solve.

From the report, "Solution or Socialism," prepared by the American Conservative Union:

IN CONCLUSION

In any evaluation of the Nixon welfare proposals, conservatives must look beneath the rhetoric, to which they are eager to respond, and seek out the substantive purpose. Viewed in this light, the Nixon welfare reform can be seen simply as a program which will more than double the welfare rolls, and add 12 million new recipients of Federal welfare payments to the nearly 10 million already on the rolls.

The program will cause an initial increase of $5 billion in the Federal budget, half of which will go to direct payments to welfare families, old and new. This is a quantum jump in the number of welfare clients and in Federal spending on welfare.

Though conservatives were almost alone a few years ago as critics of the welfare system, today everyone—conservatives, liberals, radicals—can agree with President Nixon that "nowhere has the failure of government been more tragically apparent than in its efforts to aid the poor, and especially in the system of public welfare." When one gets down to the philosophy behind this statement the conservative differs markedly from the present day liberal or radical.

President Nixon is proposing not only to expand welfare, but also to establish it on a more legitimate footing by calling it "family assistance", eliminating the means test, and administering it through the Social Security Administration. Only the inclusion of a work requirement saves Nixon from advocating the complete liberal package—welfare as a right of any American.

The Nixon program, despite its doubtless sincere intentions, will in the long run greatly exacerbate the "welfare mess" for three basic reasons:

(1) It makes welfare more comfortable when it should be made less comfortable.

(2) By moving toward a guaranteed income, it makes welfare more respectable, more of a "right" when it should be made less respectable, less of a "right."

(3) It drastically increases the number of recipients, thus risking corrupting 12 million more American citizens, when desperate efforts ought to be made to decrease the number of persons receiving unearned checks from government.

In a 1935 message to Congress, President Franklin D. Roosevelt said: "The Federal government must and shall quit this business of relief—continued dependence upon relief induces a spiritual and moral disintegration, fundamentally destructive to the national fibre. To dole out relief in this way is to administer a narcotic, a subtle destroyer of the human spirit."

While subsequent history showed that FDR's fears were well-founded, few recall that even he had begun his "New Deal" with the good intention of getting the government out of the "business of relief." Today, few would doubt that President Nixon's intentions are the same—to get people off welfare.

Yet there is truth in a statement made by Secretary of Housing and Urban Development George Romney. In discussions about the welfare program with President Nixon, the Secretary recalls that he told the President, "You shouldn't just hand people things . . . the least effective way to help people is just to give them something." Whether this proposition is true or false is perhaps the most important question that the Congress will have to decide in acting on President Nixon's welfare proposals in 1970.

From the September 2 issue of the National Review Bulletin:

AT HOME

(By M. Stanton Evans)

Will the "new federalism" proclaimed by President Nixon in the field of social welfare cure the Nation's relief problems or make them worse?

The Nixon program starts from a commendable awareness that the present welfare system has failed, and it is apparent the President and his advisers have given a good deal of thought to the various components of that failure. In particular, they have focused closely on those aspects of the existing system which draw people out of the work force rather than into it, and break up families as a condition of relief payments.

Whether the affirmative part of the Nixon presentation will overcome these deficiencies, however, is another question. Although the stated intention is to transfer as many people as possible from the welfare rolls to positions of employment, the net effect of the "new federalism" as outlined by the President and his subordinates could easily be the reverse. As the Administration spokesmen acknowledge, everything depends on the effectiveness of various "work incentives" to be built into the program.

In its opening phases, the Nixon plan runs clearly counter to the "less relief" idea, since it would cause an estimated doubling of the number of people receiving assistance (from ten million to 22.4 million) and would almost double the cost (another $4 billion a year or so on top of the existing $5 billion). It is this development which causes liberal James Reston to rejoice that Nixon "proposes more welfare, more people on public assistance . . . than any other President in the history of the republic."

The Nixon planners argue that the increase is only a short-term matter, that the upward relief cycle will be broken by the "work incentives." The success of the program therefore rests entirely on these provisions, which include stepladder payments whereby a portion of relief funds will be continued even if earned income is received, day-care centers to tend the children of welfare mothers who seek employment, and a requirement that able-bodied relief recipients accept offers of work or training, or else lose their benefits.

Examination of the data made available so far suggests these incentives may not be enough to overcome the contrary push of increased payments and broadened coverage. Once-guaranteed payments of $1,600 a year for a family of four are voted by Congress, the pressures for increasing the floor levels will be enormous.

It is indicative, in fact, that major criticisms of the Nixon proposal from the liberal sector have centered on the charge that payment levels are not high enough—that the plan doesn't do anything financially for relief recipients in big-city areas who are already getting as much as or more than the "floor" Nixon is urging. Given the power and persistence of the spending lobbies in many localities, it is probable that a drive will be launched in the larger states to add the federal guarantee money to high-level state benefits, rather than substituting the federal funds for them.

This would create a fat schedule of benefits running strongly counter to the work incentive idea. Recipients who can get all or most of the existing payments in certain big-city states, plus some portion of the federal money, would have less reason to seek employment, not more. Such an arrangement would, of course, also maintain the discrepancy between state payment levels which the program is supposed to eliminate. As explained by Nixon spokesmen in recent press briefings, there would be nothing to prevent this from occurring. The official prospectus simply says "no state . . . is required to spend more than 90%" of its existing outlay in the covered categories.

Add to these considerations the fact that "family assistance" does not affect the existence of countless other welfare provisions apart from aid to dependent children, the aged, the blind and the disabled. The Nixon guarantee, rather than becoming a complete welfare substitute as envisioned by Prof. Milton Friedman, would be laid on top of a system containing countless subsidies and restrictions which serve to discourage employment. The documented effects of the minimum wage is pushing marginal workers out of jobs, and the obvious counterincentive of high unemployment payments, suggest the nature of this difficulty.

Granted that the stepladder provisions for aid to the working poor would eliminate at least one positive incentive to idleness, the absence of negative incentives against idleness would be even more noticeable than it is today. This potential problem is accentuated by the fact that. under the Nixon program, there will be only perfunctory efforts to guard against fraud. Eligibility will be determined by a simple declaration from the relief recipient, confirmed by occasional spot checks.

Finally, there is the question of the "work requirement" provision which would deny assistance to anyone who did not accept a job or training. Will Congress actually vote a tough requirement to this effect? And if it does, who is going to make the hard-nosed and possibly unjust decision that a given individual and his family be thrown out into the cold for refusing offered opportunities?

In short, the Nixon program would make it virtually certain that the number of people receiving relief payments in the relevant categories would be more than doubled. But whether it would subsequently succeed in moving these recipients into the active work force seems very uncertain indeed.

From the January 31, 1970, issue of Human Events:

FOOT-IN-THE-DOOR WELFARE PLAN

Just days before President Nixon was touting his No. 1 legislative priority—welfare reform—in his State of the Union message, a key Administration official revealed to a pro-welfare group in New York the truly revolutionary nature of the program. Moreover, this same official indicated it would not only be extremely costly to the taxpayer, but that its passage would probably be the first step toward an even greater outpouring of lavish welfare benefits—an outpouring that the Nixon Administration appears to actually welcome.

Though this official didn't exactly say so, the thrust of his remarks suggests the Nixon package is designed to clear the way for a complete federal takeover of welfare and the start of a guaranteed annual income for every person that falls below the upward spiraling "poverty line."

Speaking to a meeting of the Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York, Robert E. Patricelli, deputy assistant secretary of health, education and welfare and the Administration's chief lobbyist for the measure, frankly acknowledged the mammoth size of the "reform" package.

"The total cost in new federal dollars of the proposal," he stated—and some think vastly understated—"is $4.4 billion per year, and the coverage under the Family Assistance portion of the program will be some 25 million people—up from the present 10 million recipients [emphasis ours]."

While the common conception is that the federal government will provide only $1,600 yearly to a family of four, Patricelli pointed out that to "that $1,600 base must also be added the expanded food stamp subsidies which the President has proposed and which the Administration has already moved to implement as much as possible by administrative action. Under that program, a family of four receiving $1,600 in Family Assistance benefits would also receive about $860 in food stamp subsidies for a total package of $2,460 in federal income maintenance payments" And all this, of course, is to be supplemented by state payments.

Yet, suggested Patricelli, this was just the beginning. "First and quite properly," he remarked, "our critics point out that the Family Assistance Plan is not universal in its coverage. It does not provide federal assistance to non-aged childless couples or single persons. But that omission in the plan traces not to any disagreement in principle with the need to cover such persons, but rather to the need to accommodate to what we hope will be short-term budgetary limitations.

"Within the $4.4 billion available, we chose to place our emphasis upon families with children, but there is no disagreement in principle that the system should be made universal when resources permit."

Second, said Patricelli, "critics point out that $1,600 for a family of four is far from adequate. That, too, is certainly the case and we have never suggested that the Family Assistance Plan provides a guaranteed adequate income. It does, however, when combined with food stamps, provide over two-thirds of the amount up to the poverty line. . . . Again, when and if the budgetary situation improves, we might look toward increases in the federal base payment."

Thus, even before the legislation is launched, Administration spokesmen are selling the program to welfare pressure groups—those that can effectively lobby Congress—by stressing that the Nixon welfare package is just a foot-in- the-door proposal.

Contrary to initial impressions conveyed by the Nixon Administration, furthermore, the new welfare program is a giant leap away from the President's concept of a "New Federalism" that would return powers to the states. Patricelli himself thinks the welfare system "should ultimately be fully administered by the federal government and financed wholly or in major part by that level of government." Financial "incentives" in the Nixon proposal, in fact, would help "persuade" the state governments to turn over their own welfare programs to the federal Social Security Administration.

"This would be," said Patricelli, "to my knowledge, an unprecedented arrangement in federal-state relations—an upstream delegation by the states to the federal government for the administration of a wholly state-financed program."

Nor does this exhaust the astonishing aspects of this proposal. A central feature of the President's initiative that had a certain appeal to the public was the "workfare" formula requiring all able-bodied welfare recipients (excepting mothers of pre-school children) to accept either training or suitable jobs so they could work themselves off welfare.

Yet this ingredient is far less revolutionary than originally believed, for a similar "workfare" formula is continued in the current welfare program, the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC).

Under 1967 amendments to the Social Security Act, mothers in the AFDC program were to seek work training. The legislation provides that an attempt be made to find jobs for those who are employable and that those in need of training be trained and given $30 a month as incentive payment. Those who refuse to accept work or undertake training are to lose their welfare benefits. The legislation also provides 80 per cent federal matching funds for the cost of the work training program and day-care centers for pre-school children of mothers in training or on jobs.

Despite these supposed "workfare" provisions, however, the number of persons on AFDC has increased substantially and the federal contribution has soared more than $500 million. Patricelli himself told Human Events that these provisions "hadn't worked as well as anybody wanted them to work. . . ."

The Administration proposal, nevertheless, is deliberately designed to weaken the existing workfare formula. Many people, says Patricelli, have criticized the inclusion in the Nixon welfare plan of the "work requirement which they feel is regressive and punitive." In fact, says Patricelli, "President Nixon's work requirement does represent a significant liberalization of the similar requirement found in the present law, for it does exempt women with children under six from its operation, and it does require that jobs provided be 'suitable', under guidelines to be established by the secretary of labor."

As Patricelli suggests, then, the Nixon "workfare" proposal, under the guidance of a secretary of labor and a juggling of the word "suitable," will actually make it less compelling for a welfare recipient to take a job and more easy for him to take welfare than the current law provides—even though the current law has also failed to prevent the mushrooming of welfare rolls.

In short, President Nixon appears intent on fastening upon the nation and his party one of the costliest welfare programs ever devised. Thus, Human Events readers are advised to write their congressmen and tell them they are opposed to this "welfare reform" package. Do the Republicans, it should be asked, wish to be known as the "welfare" party, the party that added 15 million people to the relief rolls?

From the March 24, 1970, issue of National Review:

DEEPER AND DEEPER STILL

President Nixon's "Family Assistance Plan" has something for almost everyone: more money for those on welfare, larger welfare rolls and higher taxes for the nation, and trouble for the Republican Party. Little wonder that the liberals of the House Democratic Study Group have lined up behind the bill; little wonder that Democrat Wilbur Mills has suddenly decided that it is a fine thing, eminently deserving of his services as floor manager now that it has been approved by his Ways and Means Committee.

Time was when the Nixon welfare plan had, or seemed to have, something for conservatives as well. When the plan was unveiled last August, conservatives welcomed it—because it was Richard Nixon's and because it seemed to be a giant step toward dismantling the existing Charles Addams welfare edifice and replacing it with something sane, realistic and workable. But it soon became apparent that after all, all that was contemplated was the adding of yet another wing—and that (in liberal Hugh Scott's phrase) the conservatives were getting the rhetoric while the liberals got the action.

Conservatives were soon reminded of one of their own first principles: That government programs tend inevitably to grow in size and cost. On August 8, Nixon stated clearly that "for dependent families there will be an orderly substitution of food stamps by the new direct monetary payments." By August 19, a member of the Presidential staff with a vested interest in the continuation of the food stamp program was saying "both [food stamps and income supplements] are essential and will continue together for some time." Came the autumn, and food stamps were officially back in; came the 1971 budget, and the Administration was asking that the appropriation for them be doubled. Similarly, Nixon began by calling for a minimum $65 monthly payment to the blind, aged and disabled. When the bill embodying his welfare plan was drawn up, the minimum was found to have jumped to $90. By the time the bill cleared Ways and Means, the figure was $110.

Indeed, when stripped of rhetoric about "workfare" and "family assistance," the Nixon welfare plan emerges as an extension of the present non-system. Where ten million people now receive $5 billion annually in federal welfare payments, 25 million will receive at least $10 billion. And no one, liberal or conservative, will seriously contend that those antes will not be upped considerably in years to come. "Work incentives"? When the aged, the disabled and mothers of preschool children are subtracted from the ten million now on relief, about 500,000 able-bodied unemployed are left; work incentive and training programs aimed at those 500,000 have so far resulted in a mere handful working themselves off the relief rolls. Helping the "working poor" (fifteen million of whom will receive government checks if the Nixon plan becomes law)? But many poor people who have hitherto managed to support themselves will decide, once the checks start coming in, to let the government carry the whole load. Most important, the principle will have been established once and for all that welfare is a way of life, a permanent condition, rather than a temporary leg-up.

And so Democrats will support the welfare bill—liberal Democrats, because it continues, on an enlarged basis, the system they love so well; all Democrats, because Nixon's welfare plan can only damage his standing with the job-holding, taxpaying majority that elected him. So far, most Republicans are lining up obediently, because the bill is a Republican President's. National Review regretfully joins others in the conservative mainstream in urging the defeat of this welfare scheme—on grounds that its passage will be a victory that neither the President nor the nation can afford.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. SCHERLE).

(Mr. SCHERLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHERLE. Mr. Chairman, I favored an open rule on H.R. 16311 because I believe there are simply too many unanswered questions surrounding the Family Assistance Act of 1970.

My primary concern about the legislation is its workability. President Nixon last February told the National Governors Conference here in Washington that the family assistance program, and I quote here "has never been tried, not tried on a national basis. I cannot guarantee that the new family assistance program will work," he told the Governors.

As a matter of fact, a check by my office with the Department of Labor has revealed that there will be no pilot program on the family assistance program until August of this year when the entire State of Vermont will be used as a FAP guinea pig. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the passage of this sweeping welfare reform message was asked of Congress 1 year before a pilot study of the program was instituted to see if it would work. Thus, in effect, we are asked to hop aboard a plane which has never been flight-tested.

There has been a work incentive pilot program conducted in New Jersey to study the effect of Federal supplements on the so-called working poor. But this study did not address itself to the key question; that is, how many of those people receiving Federal payments in the New Jersey project ultimately worked themselves entirely off the welfare roll. I asked OEO, "Who paid for the study?" and was told that the data had not been computed and anyway it was "irrelevant."

Another note on work incentives. The White House recently sent out a booklet entitled "The Family Assistance Plan: Questions and Answers." In this publication, it was stated that FAP remedies the present WIN—work incentive—program in six ways. It then went on to enumerate the ways. I am a bit puzzled as to how anyone at this point knows what improvements to make on the present WIN program since an official government evaluation of the 1967 work incentive program is not due until July 1 of this year. Thus it seems that any program built upon a new, improved WIN program is on very shaky ground since we do not yet fully understand the inadequacies of the program which is being improved.

Two other areas which I believe require much more debate are the cost and the coverage of this program.

While we have been most solemnly assured that the "startup" costs of this program will be $4.4 billion, the record is replete with Government programs whose costs have skyrocketed out of sight. A few examples:

Medicare. A headline in the April 3, 1970, Wall Street Journal tells us: "Hospitals To Get Higher Payments Under Medicare." The story says that under heavy pressure from hospitals, the Social Security Administration has decided to liberalize its payments to hospitals and nursing homes to the tune of an extra $60 million for fiscal 1970.

If you will recall, in 1965 it was estimated that medicare's hospital insurance for the elderly would cost $3.1 billion in 1970. Latest estimates now that 1970 is here stand at about $5.8 billion. In 1946, old-age and survivors pensions under social security were forecast at $5 billion for 1970. Actual costs will be about $27 billion.

The Federal highway system. A Library of Congress study has shown that the first estimates of this program were reported in 1948 to be $11.3 billion. In 1956, when the means of financing the system were changed, the total cost was $37.6 billion. In 1968, the estimated total cost of the system was put at $56.5 billion. At the present time revised estimates for the total cost are being prepared once again.

The way welfare costs tend to grow has been written about most interestingly by Harvard professor of government, Edward C. Banfield, in a recent article in the publication the Public Interest. Professor Banfield noted:

> Those who decide about the funding of a welfare system naturally base their decisions on estimates of the number of persons who will be eligible and will apply for benefits under its terms. Characteristically they underestimate these numbers seriously. They fail to realize that the substantial increase of benefits may induce many people to take steps—often simple ones that do not constitute "chiseling" by any stretch of the imagination—to reduce their incomes enough to make themselves eligible. They tend to assume that the percentage of eligibles actually applying will be no greater in the future than in the past. As a result of these errors, the demand for welfare frequently exceeds the amount of funds available and a "crisis" exists. Obviously the "crisis" could eventually be met by increasing appropriations if benefit levels were not allowed to rise further. In practice, however, they are allowed to rise, perhaps at an even faster rate than appropriations, and so the "crisis" grows.

One need not belabor the point here. We are all familiar with the propensity of Government programs to grow.

Now, how many people will be added to the welfare rolls by FAP? Again there are doubts.

U.S. News & World Report, in an article on the family assistance program, quotes the White House estimate at 12.4 million—in addition to the 10.1 million now on the rolls—but says "other Government agencies have sharply different sets of figures."

Indeed, in a speech to a Catholic charity group in New York City, one of the brain trust behind the family assistance program indicated that the plan should be expanded as soon as the budget would allow.

Responding to criticism that FAP was not universal enough in its coverage, Assistant Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Robert Patricelli said, and I quote:

> Omission in the plan traces not to any disagreement in principle with the need to cover such persons (non-aged childless couples and single persons), but rather to the need to accommodate what we hope will be short-term budgetary limitations. . . . [T]here is no disagreement that the system should be made universal when resources permit.

Mr. Patricelli, in that same speech, also stated that when and if the budgetary situation improves, quote:

We might look toward increases in the Federal base payment.

How much more universality is planned when the budgetary condition improves? How much will the base payment be increased? At this point, we do not know. But it should be investigated.

Another vital question on which we must have an unequivocal answer is: Does the family assistance program constitute a guaranteed annual income? Again, to quote from the White House pamphlet, we are told that it does not. But there are disturbing indications that it is at least a large step in that direction.

In a speech to the National Jewish Welfare Board, the spiritual mentor behind FAP, Dr. Daniel P. Moynihan, described the family assistance program, and I quote:

Simply put, it is a proposal to place a floor under the income of every American family. Whether the family is working or not. United or not. Deserving or not.

The press has also described the program as a guaranteed annual income.

Knight newspaper reporter James K. Batten, in a story about FAP in the Buffalo Evening News, wrote:

We seem to be on the brink of a guaranteed income for all families.

How could it happen under a Republican President? Batten explained:

The main reason seems to be this: A President like Richard Nixon, whose conservative credentials are in good order, is able to bring off a radical reform more easily than a liberal President like Mr. Johnson. Conservative critics would have shrieked that Mr. Johnson, always a suspect liberal, had finally gone off the deep end with a wild, left-wing scheme guaranteeing handouts to everybody. But nobody can accuse Mr. Nixon of being a wild-eyed radical.

Syndicated columnist Roscoe Drummond, writing in the Christian Science Monitor, called FAP, quote, "a significant stride toward a guaranteed annual income."

The Chicago Tribune, which originally spoke favorabley of the family assistance program, editorialized on March 30, quote:

The "work incentive" element of President Nixon's welfare reform proposal was introduced as a sugar coating for the guaranteed annual income pill.

Another aspect of FAP which I think should be more fully discussed, Mr. Chairman, is how eligibility will be determined. As I understand it, spot checks will be conducted of recipients on a random basis much like the IRS checks taxpayers. I do not believe this is sufficient. Examples of high rates of welfare ineligibility abound:

A recent statewide audit of the California AFDC rolls revealed an ineligibility rate of some 15 percent, representing a loss of $59 million a year.

A 1969 GAO check of AFDC rolls in New York City showed 10.7 percent of the families ineligible and 34.1 percent receiving overpayments. The combination of these two amounted to about a $74 million loss yearly just in the city.

Mr. Chairman, there is currently a controversial little ditty making the rounds entitled "Welfare Cadillac." One of the verses goes something like this:

But things are still gonna get better, at least that's what I understand.
They tell me this new President has put in a whole new poverty plan.

Well, I for one, do not share the optimism of the songwriter that this whole new poverty plan is going to make things better. And it is for this reason that I again urge that the family assistance program be debated more fully and brought to the floor of the House of Representatives under an open rule.

WORKFARE OR WELFARE?

Practically no one has a kind word to say about the current welfare system. It is costly and complicated to administer demeaning to its recipients, and often ineffectual to help them.

President Nixon's decision to attempt a complete overhaul of the system was therefore greeted with approval in most quarters. Many people evinced considerable enthusiasm for the basic aims of the proposed reforms. The administration hopes: First, to eliminate much of the bureaucratic redtape connected with a multitude of separate assistance programs, replacing them with a single income payment, and second, to provide at the same time an incentive for the heads of welfare families to work. These are undeniably admirable goals. But the mechanics of their implementation raise some serious questions about their effectiveness.

The core of the administration's plan is the replacement of the aid to families of dependent children—AFDC—program by a single annual grant to each family: $500 for each adult and $300 for every child, or $1,600 for a family of four. With a total of 6.6 million recipients receiving $3.5 billion, the present AFDC program accounts for fully two-thirds of the national welfare case load. It is also the fastest growing of all welfare programs.

The rest of the President's proposals are intended to insure the effectiveness of the first. Day-care centers for children and training programs for adults are designed to make it possible for welfare mothers to work. All able-bodied welfare recipients, except the mothers of preschool children, will be required to accept suitable employment, if available, as a condition for receiving financial aid. A cash bonus of $30 a month for enrolling in training programs furnishes an added incentive.

On the surface this sounds like a package with something for everybody: A guaranted minimum income to please the liberals, and a simplified administration plus a work incentive plan to placate the conservatives. Upon closer examination, however, it appears that there are many pitfalls in the new arrangement.

The House Ways and Means Committee approved the bill and sent it to the House floor as a complete package; that is, not subject to amendment. Several changes were made in the bill in committee, but they do not substantially alter the proposals. They do tend, however, to increase the Federal share of the financial burden.

The main thrust of the reform program remains centered around a guaranteed minimum income or benefit floor of $1,600 for a family of four, supplemented by Federal food stamps and State grants. Marginal earnings would not disqualify the members of the family for relief. They would remain eligible for welfare payments on a gradually decreasing scale until their income exceeded the poverty line—$3,500 annually for a family of four. Thus the head of a welfare family would have an incentive to work even while on welfare..

This plan contains a number of hidden drawbacks. First, it would greatly expand the welfare rolls, from approximately 11 to about 22 million. This would amount to 11 percent of the country's total population. Included under the new plan for the first time are working poor; that is, all those families whose income is less than $3,500 a year.

Then, too, the guaranteed minimum income is not intended to exclude other forms of assistance, but only to provide a floor for them. The Federal food stamp program will be continued. A family of four, for example, would receive an additional $750 worth of stamps, bringing their income up to about $2,350 a year. The States are also encouraged by means of a revenue-sharing program to supplement the minimum payment.

The administration estimates that the cost of its reform will be $4.4 billion in the first year. One economist believes it could rise as high as $10 billion. Many Members of Congress fear that it will exceed the official estimate by at least $1 billion, if not more.

There is considerable concern in some quarters that the centralization of the welfare function under the Social Security Administration could result in more complicated bureaucracy, not less, despite the proposed simplification of investigatory procedures. All that will be required of a welfare applicant under the new system is an income statement. Followup investigations will be conducted as spot checks only. In itself, this provision could cost the taxpayer considerably in unauthorized welfare payments.

The work incentive portion of the plan raises questions, too. It has not been demonstrated to most people's satisfaction that the incentives are sufficiently strong to induce those who would not otherwise work to seek employment. Presumably the heads of working poor families are already earning as much as they can. Under the Nixon plan, a wage earner is allowed to keep a portion of every dollar he earns over $750 until his income passes the poverty line.

Further, since most of the people now on welfare are either young children, their mothers, or the old or disabled, the work requirement would actually apply to a mere fraction of the welfare rolls, some 500,000 recipients. It these applicants refuse to accept suitable employment, they would forfeit their portion of the allotment only. That is their dependents would still be entitled to their payment. Thus the hypothetical family of four could receive $1,100 plus their food stamps even if the father refused to work.

The definition of suitable employment, moreover, is anyone's guess. It is not clear whether the administration means "employment for which the applicant is qualified," or whether more subjective leeway is to be allowed in the definition and the applicant is to decide for himself what constitutes a suitable job.

In view of the problems and ambiguities inherent in the present proposals, it is doubtful whether such reforms would really improve the welfare mess. It is much more likely that they would only add to the confusion. I am therefore writing to Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Robert H. Finch, to ask him to clarify the administration's position. Unless he can give some assurance that these problems will be solved, I cannot support this bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

(Mr. OBEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas, the distinguished chairman of the committee on yesterday. It seems to me that was one of the most enlightening descriptions of this proposal which I have seen anywhere.

Mr. Chairman, the present welfare system is in drastic need of overhaul, and the legislation proposed by the President and reported by the Ways and Means Committee would be an improvement over present law.

Nonetheless, I have some misgivings about what we are being asked to erect in its place. For one thing, it will cost considerably more than the President has estimated, in my judgment.

For another, the family assistance plan looks more like a cash-food-work program than a work-food-cash program, and for that reason none of us should be overly optimistic about it.

This proposal has been touted in some quarters as a workfare plan, but that is a misnomer. It is actually a guaranteed cash income plan, and I am concerned about its adequacy as a means of identifying and providing jobs.

The family assistance plan requires a head of household to take a job or enlist in a job-training program, provided a suitable one is available. This is a work incentive notion, and the Office of Economic Opportunity claims it has evidence that work incentives do what theory contends they will.

If the President really believes this evidence confirms his approach as the right one, then I will support him in it.

I believe we may need a greater emphasis on job training and job opportunities. There are several manpower development proposals in the House—among them, a bill I am cosponsoring with the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. O'HARA).

Our welfare system is in great need of overhaul, and I will certainly not stand in the way of efforts to improve it. For that reason I will support the President's proposal. It is an improvement over present law, and I congratulate the President and the members of the Ways and Means Committee for taking the first step toward welfare reform.

But after it passes, I would hope that the President will back legislation to beef up this country's manpower development program. I regard welfare reform as a two-step process.

The first is a better and soundly administered welfare system, and the second is a strong and much improved manpower training program. We need both if we are to effectively reduce our welfare rolls.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, the chairman of the Rules Committee (Mr. COLMER).

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Arkansas for yielding me this time, which I chose rather than to use time I could have had under the rule. I am grateful, I repeat, to the gracious gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I wish I had the capability, I wish I had whatever it requires—I should say maybe the ability of the able gentleman from Arkansas, for whom I have the greatest admiration—to express my feelings about this proposal we have here today.

Unquestionably it is the most controversial, it is the most important, it is the most complex and disturbing piece of legislation that I have had occasion to consider possibly in my whole career here as a Member of this body.

I am very much disturbed about this bill. I am very much disturbed about the threat that it poses to our system of government, to our way of life.

I am more disturbed about this when I realize that my able friend from Arkansas is one of the chief proponents of this bill, as well as my friend the President of the United States, for whom I also have a very high regard and much respect. When these two gentlemen advocate this type of legislation it does not necessarily mean that I am casting any reflections or aspersions on either of them, and certainly that is not the purpose of my remarks.

But here we have one of the greatest innovations that has ever been proposed in the domestic affairs of this Government of ours. What we do here is to propose that we are going to guarantee—and nobody can deny that—to every working man, a man who is willing to work, a guaranteed income, under conditions of family life such as the figures that are used of a family of man and wife and two children, which the able chairman and most of the Members of the committee have placed at $1,600 a year.

One member of the distinguished Ways and Means Committee says that that is an error. He says that it is $2,600. I do not know who is right, but the principle is there regardless of the amount.

Now, as disturbed as I am about the threat that this philosophy of legislation poses to our country, I recognize, and other Members have to recognize, that this is just the beginning. We have seen these programs enacted here by the Congress with popular political appeal time after time on a modest level, and yet we have never seen one of them repealed, nor have we ever seen one maintained at that level. They are always accelerated. The demands are ever greater and greater, and the Congress succumbs to them.

Now, this utopian proposal is made at a time when the administration is talking about a surplus in the budget. It must be obvious to all who observe the additional costs of this and other programs, old and new, that we will not have a surplus nor a balanced budget but, on the contrary, we will again put the Government's budget in the red. Again. Mr. Chairman, one member of the Ways and Means Committee, who voted against the bill in committee, estimates that 43 percent of the budget now is for welfare as against 34 percent for national defense, even with the Vietnam war going on. All of this adds up to more and more inflation when the greatest problem confronting our people is inflation. No one can successfully contend that to the contrary.

I say that this thing, like all of the others that have been established, will grow, just as the fictional Topsy grew on schedule.

Now, what is the cost of it? Well, that has been discussed here today as it was yesterday. Frankly, I do not know what the cost is. I might add that frankly I do not believe anybody else knows what the cost is going to be, not even the proponents of the bill, because everyone who has discussed this matter in my presence, either on the Committee on Rules or on the floor of this House, has said that it was difficult to estimate and an estimate was the only way you could arrive at a figure. The best and the lowest estimate that has been made is $4.5 billion additional cost—and if I am not correct about this, I would like to be corrected—over the present program for the fiscal year that this goes into effect. This will be a minimum of $4.5 billion. There are estimates of up to $10 billion over the present cost of this program. Again I want to emphasize that this is but the beginning.

Mr. Chairman, this is a political body. Thank God it comes up for reelection every 2 years. I am talking about the House. I have never subscribed to the theory that the House of Representatives should have more than 2 years, because I think, as the Founding Fathers thought, that the people should have an opportunity every 2 years, if I may use an expression of my own, to turn the rascals out.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to my good friend from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. First, I want to commend the gentleman from Mississippi for his splendid remarks. The gentleman never ceases to warn the House of the financial peril that is facing this country. Yesterday the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. MILLS, was asked the question, "Where are you going to get the money to pay for these additional billions of costs of this legislation? Do you propose to raise taxes?" The gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS), said that he did not propose to sponsor a bill increasing taxes. Now, where is the money to come from to finance this vastly expanded program, and when is it expected we return to some financial sanity in this Government, either by stopping the expansion of programs or abandoning some of the programs already in existence? It cannot be both ways.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COLMER. I thank my friend, the able chairman, for this additional time.

Let me say to my friend from Iowa and to any and all others who might be interested that there is an old trite saying that we still are operating under a system where the people have to support the Government and the Government cannot support the people.

Mr. Chairman, there is only one way for the Government to get money with which to pay for these appealing programs and that is through taxes.

Now, we are confronted here with a national debt greater than all the rest of the free world put together. We will be faced before the final gavel is sounded here in this Congress with a request to increase that national debt limitation. We have scheduled a repeal of the surtax. The gentleman from Iowa and most of the others who give thought to this subject know that if we continue with these programs, even with this program, that we are not only going to have a surplus as the administration hopes, but we are going to be in the red again and we are going to have to retain all of the present taxes and probably add more.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I would be happy to yield to my friend, but my time is rather limited. Would the gentleman make his question brief?

Mr. COLLIER. I shall do so.

What will the present program cost 10 years from now? Does anyone know? I do not know.

Mr. COLMER. I am not an expert in this field. I would prefer that the gentleman ask someone on the Ways and Means Committee that question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the whole thrust and the objective of this bill is placed in the pious hope that this bill is going to put people to work and take them off welfare. Well, that is a nice thought and I think everyone of us would subscribe to that 100 percent. But I challenge that that will be done under this bill.

I do not have time to go into that, but there are entirely too many loopholes in this thing as to how you are going to make it work and get off welfare. Are you going to train a man for a job that does not exist, for instance?

Are you going to train a man for a job that is in another area? Is the Government going to take these people and remove them from Colorado to New York or some other State? It just simply is not going to work. The best that you can say for it is that there is a great gray area in there where it is impractical for it to work.

Now, let me say that with deference to all and disrespect for none.

I tried my best in my limited way and capacity as chairman of the Rules Committee, No. 1, to see that hearings were continued there for a reasonable time so that the people, the Congress particularly, would have an opportunity to know what was in this bill other than the present and appealing slogan of taking people off the dole and putting them on the payroll.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. COLMER. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and I appreciate the very gracious action of the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I confess that I have used my best efforts to see that our committee had unusually extensive and thorough hearings on this bill which I regard as containing many inequities and impracticalities. I feel that we have succeeded at least to a degree. I think the public, and particularly this House, have benefited from those hearings. At the risk of seemingly being guilty of self-serving statements, I would like to add that I used my best efforts to bring this bill out under a modified closed rule, realizing that an open rule under present circumstances was unobtainable. I wanted to see a rule that would make it in order for the House to pass its will and use its discretion as to whether this guaranteed income phase of the bill should remain therein or be stricken out. Unfortunately, under the precedents of this House in the matter of closed versus open rules, plus the activities of the leadership on both sides of the aisle, as well as the able chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and his opposite member, the ranking minority member, my efforts proved fruitless.

I have always maintained since I have had the privilege of being a member of the Rules Committee that the Members of this body are as capable of legislating as the Members on the north wing of this Capitol who legislate in a free atmosphere and without gag rules. Unfortunately, the efforts of those who share my views in this parliamentary procedure were unable to overcome this combined opposition to which I have just referred and, as this bill is being considered under a closed rule which not only denies an amendment that would strike this provision but denies any and all other amendments that any of the elected Members of this House might desire to offer other than amendments from the Ways and Means Committee. I think it is important here to note that the vote on the adoption of the rule, in spite of the fact that no organized effort was made against it, was very close—204 for and 183 against. Certainly this is indicative of the feeling of the membership of this House on this type of a gag rule. Again, are we in the House admitting that we are not as capable of legislating as the Members of the other House, the Senate? In fact, are we not implying that we are second-class legislators?

I used my best efforts to try to bring you out a rule here that would make in order the consideration of a bill that would give you all of the benefits that are in this bill, but would strike out this impractical provision that you have here which is the beginning, if not the end, of a guaranteed income for all of our citizens.

But who am I, when arraigned against the powers that be, the leadership on both sides, not to mention the persuasiveness of the able gentleman from Arkansas and the able gentleman from Wisconsin, so we failed.

And it is interesting to note that a majority of the Committee on Rules voted against this rule yesterday on the floor. I impugn the motives of no one: And I say, looking back, had I known that the House was as cognizant of what was involved in this bill yesterday, as I think I know now, we might have defeated this rule.

So what are we left here with? Under this closed rule whereby we indicate that we are second-class legislators, that we are not capable of legislating, we are second-class to the other body which can legislate in a free atmosphere. We are left now with two options, the option that the minority has over here to recommit and the option to defeat the bill on final passage.

Mr. DINGELL. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, again I thank the gentleman.

So we are left with these options.

Now, I understand that a motion will be made by the minority—and the powers that be of course on the minority side will see that the most advantageous motion to recommit from their viewpoint will be made. I am assuming, rather than running the risk of permitting somebody over here on this side of the aisle to offer a motion to recommit with instructions, that they will exercise their prerogative which, under the Rules of the House, the minority justly has.

So you will have an opportunity, then, to recommit the bill which frankly, I think, would be better than just voting it down. Let it go back to this distinguished Committee on Ways and Means and have them give further consideration to it and come up with something that would be more palatable to get us out of the admitted mess that we are in in this welfare program.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I cannot impose upon the few faithful here, and upon my gracious friend. But just let me wind up where I started.

I am worried—I am concerned about the future of this Republic and the future of the enterprise system that we enjoy, the liberties that we enjoy, and their perpetuation for future generations.

I wonder how many of you recall the letter that Lord McCauley wrote to his friend Henry S. Randall some 113 years ago in which he said that he had studied our American system of government and he was sorry to say that it could not prevail; that it was all sail and no anchor; that the day would come—and this is in substance what he said and not a verbatim quote—that the day would come when the demands of the people upon their elected Representatives would be so great that they could not be met and the whole American dream would collapse.

Mr. Chairman, I think this bill should be recommitted.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. DENNIS).

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Chairman, I am under no illusion that anything I say here today is likely to sway the course or to affect the result of this debate; nor do I claim any expertise in the welfare field; but this is a landmark piece of legislation, I have to vote upon it, and I feel impelled to say a few words which express my feelings and my doubts and reservations on this matter, and which set forth my point of view.

This is a bill for welfare reform which commences by more than doubling the number of persons on the welfare rolls; certainly a somewhat anomalous situation. The argument is that, in the end, the number on these rolls will be decreased, by reason of the incentives built into the measure, which are designed to encourage recipients to become employed and to support themselves.

Whether this will in fact prove to be the case has to remain, in the nature of things, within the realm of speculation; while the immediate increase in number of recipients, in dollar costs, and in the necessity of taxation to meet these costs, is a palpable and present fact.

At this point two queries at least cross my mind: Why do we not make further efforts than we yet have at the use of incentives for self-removal from welfare programs in respect to those already on the welfare rolls, before we add millions to their number? And why do we not undertake and, for some reasonable and significant number of years, observe, evaluate, and, where we can, improve, a true pilot program in one or two localities, before we undertake this sweeping and costly experiment on a national basis?

All are agreed, I think, that the heart of the matter, the justification for this legislation, is the so-called workfare provisions of the bill. It is these provisions which are designed to encourage and to bring about voluntary self-removal from the welfare rolls; and it is one the effectiveness of these provisions, in practice, that the claimed virtues of this legislation must depend.

These workfare provisions, in turn, have two aspects. One is the work requirement; the other is the work incentive. A basic query here is, how efficient and how effective are this work requirement and this work incentive likely to be?

The work requirement is, basically, that, in order to qualify for the family assistance payment, a man must register and must accept, if it is available, suitable employment in which he is able to engage. If he refuses, without good cause, to accept such employment his assistance payment is forfeited—and, under the bill as drawn, this amounts to a loss of $300 per year. Aside from the fact that the penalty hardly seems to be a very large one, I think that I can foresee all kinds of trouble with the word "suitable"—particularly when it is further statutorily defined, in part, as it is, by reference to a man's past training and experience. I raise the question why the word "suitable"—at least as presently defined—should be retained in this legislation, if there is truly a desire to provide a strong work requirement. I do not believe that it is too much to require—or that it is hardhearted or reactionary to require—that, if an able-bodied man is to be subsidized by the American taxpayer, he should be required, as a condition precedent to receiving that subsidization, to accept any employment in which he is physically able to engage—and, if the word "suitable" is to be retained, that it should be defined as meaning and including any type of employment in which the recipient is, physically, reasonably able to engage. To do less, it seems to me, emasculates this work requirement provision.

The work incentive provision in this bill is, basically, that a welfare recipient shall be able to keep for himself half of what he earns; that is, that his welfare benefits shall be reduced by only 50 cents for each $1 he earns for himself. However, as was brought out in my colloquy with the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) yesterday, when all factors are considered, such as the effect on food stamp eligibility of the provisions of this legislation and other factors, the actual percentage of earnings which a recipient is able to keep without a decrease of his benefits is, in many cases, not 50 percent but more like 40 or 30 percent or below; or, putting it in more technical language, the so-called marginal tax rate goes up to 60 and 70 percent, or more. Thus the incentive which we hear about is, in fact in this legislation, substantially watered down and decreased.

When one considers, in addition, that many of those on welfare are minor children, the aged, and the ill, and that many others are the mothers of preschool children to whom the work-fare provisions and requirements do not apply, one cannot but wonder how effective these incentive-to-work provisions can prove to be in practice.

Again I say that we start out by more than doubling the welfare rolls, while the efficacy of the provisions relied on to, in time, offset this fact are certainly subject to debate and doubt.

The social implications of public subsidy to the working poor—including statutorily defined "poverty" and widespread use of public day-care centers for the rearing of children, and other factors—which I have not attempted to discuss—are also clearly open to very serious question.

It has been said that our present welfare system is a mess. It has also been said that, up to date, no satisfactory alternative for the plan proposed in H.R. 16311 has been suggested.

All this may be so, but these are scarcely arguments for the adoption, at this time, of this particular measure regardless of its own merits or its lack thereof. The real question before us is whether this bill will do the job.

We may well, indeed, need to pause, to wait, to study the problem, and to seek further.

What we do know is that, with the adoption of this bill, we place millions more of our fellow Americans on the public dole; and, say what you will, we guarantee these Americans a stipend from the Public Treasury. What we emphatically do not know is how, or whether, we will ever get them off the dole again; or how, or to what extent, this bill will operate to do so.

I fear we may well wind up with a bad situation merely magnified.

I believe that we may well be dashing off too hastily down a road which leads we know not where; and along which it may prove difficult or impossible ever to return, should the need arise.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. TAYLOR).

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, we all recognize the need for reform in welfare legislation. The work-training provisions of the bill are proper and have my support. But why not apply these work-training regulations to the 10 million people already on welfare rolls and see how successful we are in removing them from welfare rolls to payrolls as the first step. If the work-training programs operate successfully with these people, we could then consider bringing additional millions under a welfare program which is working effectively. The welfare structure needs housecleaning and tightening, but not expanding.

My objection to this bill is that it clearly puts cash payments from the Government first. It consigns some 15 million additional American citizens to welfare handouts. It would increase the cost of welfare for the first year by about $4.5 billion and probably cost $14 or $15 billion per year in a few years.

When we pass this law, we are going down the road of no return by guaranteeing a minimum income to people who are employed and people who are not employed. With each session of Congress, the demands will be for more and more. The tendency of welfare rolls is to go up—never down. When we adopt this bill, we will more than double the number receiving welfare checks from the Government. This will probably prove to be the most inflationary legislation considered since I became a Member of Congress.

Government spending is a question of priorities. Today, the Nixon administration is reducing the money to operate veterans hospitals, providing fewer Hill-Burton funds for badly needed local and regional hospitals, has recommended no money for the agricultural conservation program, has not provided enough funds to open the national forest campgrounds this spring as in the past, has approved less money than Congress recommended for education; yet it recommends this costly guaranteed income program which, in my opinion, should have a lower priority for Federal spending than any of the items mentioned above.

At present, welfare recipients receive guidance from a trained counselor. Many people need this guidance as much as they need money, but under this proposal in many cases the guidance would be gone and checks would just be mailed out from Washington.

This bill would encourage large families to be supported at public expense at a time when we need to work toward population control and family planning.

I favor working toward guaranteed employment, rather than a guaranteed income. The best way to end poverty is to go all out in providing all workers with needed skills and provide enough good jobs to go around. I cannot help but believe that welfare payments in many cases stifle the initiative and the pride of the recipients and perpetuate their poverty by destroying their get-up-and-go and their ambition.

We all favor providing adequately for the disabled and for those who are unable to provide for themselves, but for able-bodied people, I favor a route which encourages training and employment.

We are telling a workingman who is now supporting himself and his family with pride, that he is in poverty, that the Government is going to support his family and guarantee him a minimum family income. Such would destroy his self-respect and initiative. To obtain true economic independence, the initiative and the pride of the poor must not be stifled. Changing the name of a program does not change the fact that it is unwise to encourage our citizens to depend upon the Government for the support of their families.

(Mr. TAYLOR asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. RYAN).

(Mr. RYAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, income maintenance is an idea whose time has come. Two years ago when I introduced in the Congress the first bill to provide for a guaranteed annual income, the idea was accepted in academic circles and by theorists, but it was dismissed by so-called pragmatists as politically impractical. Today the idea is respectable, and I think the administration deserves credit for making it respectable. Today it is endorsed by both political parties on the floor of this House through the action of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means (Mr. MILLS) and the distinguished ranking minority member of the committee (Mr. BYRNES) in reporting out H.R. 16311—the Family Assistance Act of 1970—which establishes a guaranteed annual income for at least a portion of the people in this country who desperately and deservedly need this income, and who are looking to us to responsibly meet that need.

I believe the Ways and Means Committee and all the members who supported this in the committee deserve credit for bringing it to the floor and making it possible for the Congress to face up to the failure of the present welfare system and to begin to lay the groundwork for an adequate guaranteed annual income.

Despite the efforts of the Ways and Means Committee, I believe there are a number of deficiencies in this bill to which I would like to address myself. I regret that, because of the parliamentary situation, there is not an opportunity to offer amendments to improve this bill. I testified on April 14 before the Rules Committee in favor of a rule which would make it possible to offer specific amendments to improve because it can be decidedly improved, although it is a step in the right direction, a first step, but one which it is essential this Congress take.

Let us recognize to begin with that a guaranteed annual income is not a privilege. It should be a right to which every American is entitled. No country as affluent as ours can allow any citizen or his family not to have an adequate diet, not to have adequate housing, not to have adequate health services and not to have adequate educational opportunity—in short, not to be able to have a life with dignity.

While there may be differences as to the mechanics of implementing an income maintenance system, there should be no dispute as to its need. There can be no dispute that poverty in the midst of this affluent country is insufferable and unconscionable.

Certainly, an improvement over both the administration bill and the bill reported out of the Ways and Means Committee would be the Income Maintenance Act which I first introduced in the 90th Congress, and which I reintroduced in revised form in the 91st Congress as H.R. 14773. It is this bill on which I testified before the Ways and Means Committee last November 13. Obviously, H.R. 14773 was not adopted by the Ways and Means Committee.

Accepting the concept of income maintenance, and establishing the mechanics for implementing that concept are two far different things. We do well to embrace the concept; but at the same time we are being presented with a plan for its implementation which is seriously flawed. It is these flaws which I want to address, so that they will be clearly perceived, and so that we will be clear as to what improvements must be made after this bill is passed.

Let us look at some of the areas where H.R. 16311 is deficient. Some of the deficiencies were in the original administration bill (H.R. 14173). Some are new.

First, I think it is essential that the benefit levels provided for in H.R. 16311 be raised. Under this bill, the basic allowance payable to a family of four with no other income is $1,600 annually. This amount is totally inadequate. Even given the fact that some States will provide supplementary benefits, there can be no acceptance of a $1,600 level for a family of four without accepting as well that this would be a failure to provide meaningful help to the poor. That this is, in fact, the case is demonstrated by the statistics showing that only in 8 States will families experience a rise in assistance levels.

While the benefit levels for the aged, blind, and disabled have been improved by H.R. 16311, the levels for families remain the same as in the administration bill. And the figures prepared by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare show how few families are adequately aided under these benefit levels.[1] Only 301,000 families will rise above the poverty line; 2,708,000 families will remain below it. In addition, 2,082,000 families whose incomes now fall between the poverty line and the low-income line will remain there. Only 77,000 families will rise above the income line. The administration's estimates further reveal that of 9,556,000 children now below the poverty line, 8,416,000 will remain there under the presently proposed benefit levels. And of the 6,946,000 children whose families' incomes now fall between the poverty line and the low-income line, only 341,000 will rise above it; 6,605,000 will not.

Yet, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, it costs a family of four living on a lower budget $6,771 a year in New York City. Nationally, the National Welfare Rights Organization is calling for a $5,500 level. And according to the Gallup poll of January 25, 1970—

> The average American believes a family of four needs a minimum of $120 per week ($6,240 per year) to make ends meet.

In brief, the benefit levels for the family assistance plan proposed by H.R. 16311 are totally inadequate. In addition, while the committee is to be commended for raising benefits for the aged, blind and disabled, the increases are not sufficient to provide a decent income.

Second, H.R. 16311 should be modified to cover single adults and childless couples. At present, the bill only applies to families with children. Yet, the need of families, without children, and single adults, is no less dire.

Third, a higher percentage of the costs for state supplementary benefits should be borne by the Federal Government. The Ways and Means Committee bill provides for 30 percent Federal matching funds. At the least, the matching provision should be raised to 50 percent and, instead of matching State supplemental payments only up to the poverty line, the matching provision should apply to those State payments made in excess of the poverty line, as well.

What is more, the matching provision should not in any way penalize the poor. As H.R. 16311 was reported out, it abolished the provision in the administration proposal permitting disregard of one-half unearned income. The money—$600 million—thereby saved was offset by the added expenditures incurred in providing for matching Federal funds. The consequence is to take money from the poor. While the aim of alleviating the burden borne by the States is commendable, it cannot justify denying the poor.

Actually, the solution is to provide for full federalization of income maintenance. Under the present scheme, States which already have made the effort to meet their obligations to their disadvantaged citizens by providing relatively better AFDC benefits, such as New York, are penalized. Their burden is lightened by 30 percent Federal matching, but the remaining load of 70 percent is an onerous one.

It is clear that Federal matching, if it is to really aid those States which most need Federal moneys because they are most responsibly meeting their obligations, must be far greater than the 30 percent provided in H.R. 16311.

Fourth, the matching provision for State supplementary benefits should be expanded to apply to those benefits paid to the working poor. Section 453 of H.R. 16311 precludes Federal sharing in the cost of these benefits. This limitation is unjustifiable for several reasons. For one thing, one of the objectives of the Family Assistance Act is to do away with the distinction between the working and the nonworking poor. This objective stems from the penalization which has been imposed upon the working poor by virtue of their being ineligible for welfare benefits in most States. This bill institutionalizes the distinction, rather than obliterating it.

In addition, once again those progressive States which have implemented welfare programs for the working poor—such as New York—even though they received no Federal assistance for such programs, are penalized. They still will not be receiving any Federal funds for these programs.

Fifth, the Federal Government should assume 100 percent of the costs of the programs for the aged, disabled, and blind.

Again, as I said earlier, only the Federal Government has the resources to assume this burden. The States simply are not financially able to readily meet the welfare needs of their citizens. Full federalization, not only of the programs for the aged, disabled, and blind, but of the entire income maintenance program, is urgently needed. Provision should be made for a 3- to 5-year phasing-in transition to this end.

6. Sixth, the coercive work requirement embodied in H.R. 16311 is undesirable. Philosophically, it is objectionable; forced work is alien to individual choice and freedom. Pragmatically, the fact is that there really are very few persons who would work, but who do not. The coercive work requirement is a misguided approach to a problem which really lies in the failure of the economy to provide places for these potential workers, and the failure of government—Federal, State, and local—to provide adequate job training to enable these people to develop skills which will make them attractive to employers.

Seventh, the work requirement for mothers with school age children is especially egregious. Again, this is a philosophically objectionable requirement. No mother should be required to substitute day care custodians for her care and love. We certainly would not conceive of requiring that of mothers with adequate incomes, and there can be no justification for penalizing mothers who have the misfortune—a misfortune thrust upon them, not chosen—to suffer inadequate incomes.

H.R. 16311 is even discriminatory as between recipient mothers. Those who have husband receiving benefits are not required to take suitable employment. Those who have the misfortune of being without a husband are subjected to this requirement.

Moreover, practicality instructs us that such a provision cannot work; mothers who object simply will not comply with this requirement that they take suitable employment. Mitchell Ginsberg, administrator of New York City's Human Resources Administration, clearly attested to this fact in his speech before the National League of Cities Conference on March 10, 1970.

Finally, this coercive work requirement levied against mothers with school age children is unnecessary. Most mothers do, in fact, seek work, if there are jobs for them and day care facilities for their youngsters. The April, 1970 issue of Nation's Business, certainly not a noted liberal magazine, states in an article entitled, "The Great Welfare Debate:"

Survey after survey has shown that most welfare mothers prefer to work but have been thwarted by the welfare bureaucracy, lack of training opportunities, lack of day care centers for children and lack of knowledge about job opportunities. (p. 60).

It is obvious from the deficiencies which are incorporated in H.R. 16311 that passage of this bill—which at least does achieve the commendable end of making a guaranteed annual income a reality—is only the beginning. Many provisions will have to be amended; many improvements will have to be made.

Because of this, I want to briefly detail the bill which I introduced, H.R. 14173, the Income Maintenance Act. By way of preface I would point to what I consider three of the most important differences between it and the Ways and Means Committee bill. First, the Income Maintenance Act provides for significantly higher benefits than does H.R. 16311—benefits for a family of four with no outside income reach $3,228 by the fifth year. Second, the Income Maintenance Act includes within its coverage married couples without children, and single adults. Third, the act contains no work requirement.

Now, I want to outline more extensively various aspects of the Income Maintenance Act.

First. Eligibility. The Income Maintenance Act, H.R. 14773, provides that all individuals and families are covered, with the exception of unmarried children under age 18 who are not members of an eligible family. This contrasts with H.R. 16311, which limits benefit eligibility under the family assistance plan to families with children.

Second. Benefits. The Income Maintenance Act provides for increasing payments over a period of 4 years. In the first year, a family of four with no other income would receive an annual benefit amount of $2,004. This breaks down to a monthly rate of $50 for the family head and $39 for each dependent—which includes the spouse. The maximum family benefit for families of seven or more persons is $284 monthly, or $3,408 annually.

By the fifth year, the maximum level of benefits would be reached. The benefits for a family of four would be $3,228. The maximum family benefit, for families of seven or more persons, would be $5,472.

An additional factor in this equation is cost of living adjustments. Benefits are adjusted to reflect variations in living costs, including regional housing cost differentials.

Third. Reduction of benefits. The Income Maintenance Act which I introduced provides for a sliding scale of reduced benefits, so that as outside earned income increases the percentage decrease in benefits rises. The purpose is a simple one. If there is a large reduction in benefits following upon a comparatively small amount of earned income, there will be a substantial work disincentive.

Thus, for the first and second years of the act's existence, earned income in an amount equal to one-fourth of the maximum benefit will cause benefits to be reduced by an amount equal to 25 percent of that income. Earned income in excess of one-fourth of the maximum benefit will cause benefits to be reduced by 50 percent of the income. For the third year of the act's existence, and thereafter, the same 25 percent tax, so to speak, will apply. Similarly, the 50 percent reduction will apply, but will be limited to earned income in excess of one-fourth of the maximum benefit but less than 1½ times the maximum benefit. All earned income above that will cause benefits to be reduced by 75 percent of the amount of the income.

In other words, there is a three-step tax, so to speak—25 percent, 50 percent, and 75 percent, applied to different proportions of earned income.

The way this works in dollar amounts is detmonstrated by looking at the break-even point: that is, the point at which outside income reduces the income maintenance benefits to zero. For a four-member family, for example, outside earned income in the first year of the Income Maintenance Act amounting to $4,259 would reduce benefits to zero. But the fifth year, when benefit payments reach their maximum, and the 75 percent reduction has come into effect, a four-member family would have to have outside income of $6,186 before reaching zero benefit payments.

Fourth. Coordination with present welfare. The assumption of my bill is that in States which now have higher average AFDC benefits than the base benefits provided by H.R. 14773, the State and Federal governments would make up the difference according to the present AFDC formula. Therefore, the present welfare recipient in those States would never be worse off than he is now. And, of course, where welfare benefits are below the standards of H.R. 14773, the recipients would be considerably better off.

Where the Federal income maintenance benefit is supplemented, my bill provides for State maintenance of present effort. The standards of need and the percentage of need provided are not to be reduced.

Fifth. Supplemental State programs. Under the Income Maintenance Act States may establish supplemental income maintenance programs patterned after the Federal program. Fifty percent of State expenditures under such a program would be reimbused by the Federal Government. As a condition of such Federal payment, however, eligibility under the State programs would have to be extended to all persons eligible under the Federal program.

Sixth. Work requirements. The Income Maintenance Act has no work requirement. Beneficiaries on a voluntary basis may request referral for participation in a work incentive program. Individuals actually participating in such programs would receive an additional allowance of $30 per month. Obviously, this is one of the chief differences from the Ways and Means Committee bill—H.R. 16311—which has a coercive work requirement, whose objectionable features I have already detailed.

Seventh. Assets. As for treatment of assets, under H.R. 14773, the Income Maintenance Act, there is no limitation on the amount of assets a family can own. While income would be imputed to each family on the basis of its assets, at a rate of 5 percent of their value, no income would be imputed on the basis of the family's personal effects, tools, home, household goods, or automobile except to the extent that the total value of such assets exceeds $30,000.

Eighth. Administration. As for administration, the Income Maintenance Act establishes a newly created Bureau of Income Maintenance within the Treasury Department. Investigations—other than routine examination of applications—would be limited to no more than 5 percent of the number of applicants, randomly selected except where there existed probable cause to doubt eligibility. Appeal rights would include the right to a hearing and also judicial review in cases where the results of a hearing were disputed. Overpayments could be recovered by withholding from future benefits or by direct recovery from the assets of the overpaid individual. However, no more than 50 percent of the overpayment could be recouped by recovery from assets unless the overpayment had been obtained by fraud.

I have devoted this time to outlining the bill which I introduced 2 years ago, not to complain about the fact that the rule under which this debate is being conducted precludes my offering an amendment so that the House may consider its merits, but because I believe H.R. 16311 to be deficient in many respects, and I want to make clear that alternatives and improvements are possible.

Those who reject the concept of a guaranteed annual income will certainly find no merit in either the bill I introduced, the administration bill, or in the bill reported out of the Ways and Means Committee. But to those who intend to support H.R. 16311, I urge diligent consideration of the improvements which must be made.

By accepting the concept of income maintenance, the administration has defined poverty and welfare as national problems which require national solutions. The Federal Government should move as rapidly as possible to assume the full costs of public assistance through an income maintenance program with an adequate level of benefits.

Of course—and this must be clearly understood—income maintenance is not the final answer. We must deploy a multi-faceted strategy to break the cycle of poverty. That strategy must include job creation and training; it must include expanded programs in education, health, and social services. Above all, this strategy to defeat poverty must be based on a firm, unremitting commitment to assure every American a life of dignity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the Committee that the time remaining to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) is 32 minutes, and the time remaining to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS) is 24 minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM).

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, it has been clear for some time that this Nation's approach to the task of providing a living income for all Americans who cannot reasonably be expected to earn one on their own has been in trouble. Both the recipients of income assistance, and the taxpayers who pay the bill, have grown deeply dissatisfied. It is, therefore, most encouraging that the House finally has before it legislation that offers a major overhaul of our entire welfare system. This may well be the most important bill to come before the 91st Congress.

I was among the first Members of Congress to introduce legislation to provide a living income for all Americans. The National Living Income Act, which I introduced last August along with Mr. CONYERS, Mr. WHALEN, and Mr. RYAN, was designed to solve the glaring weaknesses in our current welfare system which many of us in Congress, and citizens across the country, have long criticized. It was designed to improve both the adequacy of the income provided to the poor, and the conditions under which assistance is made available. It raised the minimum income for a family of four to $3,200. It greatly increased the Federal contribution for welfare, which has become such an impossible financial burden for areas like New York City where more is now spent on welfare than on education. It would have established more uniform national welfare standards making the program more equitable for recipients and removing the temptation for the poor to migrate to already overcrowded urban areas in the North.

The welfare reform program originally proposed by the President offered many of the same iprovements proposed in the national living income program, including the concept of assistance for the working poor, but fell short on others. It excluded, for example, the childless poor, and it proposed work requirements that have already proved impossible to enforce and questionable in value. It failed to make provision for regional variation in benefits to reflect regional cost-of-living differences, and the basic benefits were most inadequate—only $1,600 minimum for a family of four.

The modified version of the President's plan reported out by the Ways and Means Committee and now before the House would effect many of the changes in the welfare system I have long urged and which were essential ingredients of the National Living Income Act. In many respects, it is a great improvement over the President's proposal, for which I want to commend and thank the distinguished and very able chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, as well as the members of that committee. On the whole, this legislation offers a considerable improvement over existing approaches to income assistance, and I urge my colleagues to vote for it.

However, Mr. Chairman, we cannot afford to make the mistake of deluding ourselves by thinking that this bill makes all the improvements in our welfare programs that need to be made. On the contrary it contains many of the weaknesses contained in President Nixon's program. For example, the so-called family assistance program ignores the childless poor—giving disadvantaged young couples an incentive to have children to qualify for welfare when they cannot afford children—and this at a time when we ought to be doing everything we can to hold down our population.

Most importantly, however, the income level assured by this legislation is far from adequate. It will assure increased benefits in only eight States, and only a fraction of the families who qualify for assistance will be raised above the poverty level. Adding the $864 worth of food which a welfare family of four could receive, along with the minimum $1,600 in income which this bill provides, means that a family of four is assured of only $2,464 under this legislation—not including the States' contributions. But the Federal Government's poverty level for a family of four is currently set at $3,720—an average figure that does not account for the higher costs-of-living in urban areas. The low budget needed by a family of four living in an urban area, as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, is $5,500.

A guarantee of $5,500 for a family of four as a goal for our welfare programs is viewed in many quarters as unrealistic—a radical demand not to be taken seriously. In my judgment, such a view is a tragically mistaken one. Not only have a number of welfare groups, including most prominently the National Welfare Rights Organization, made a strong case for a $5,500 basic welfare benefit, but such a large and representative distinguished group as the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition, and Health, called together by the White House to advise the President on problems of hunger and poverty in America, adopted a final action resolution calling for a $5,500 annual income floor.

Mr. Chairman, so that the Members of the House may be reminded of the specific recommendations of the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition, and Health with regard to income levels in relation to this legislation, I have earlier asked unanimous consent to include the "Task Force Action Statement" adopted by the Conference in the RECORD following my remarks.

This bill comes before us under a closed rule, with no amendments permitted. This is a procedure which I deplore. How can the poor people of this country be expected to understand that Members of this House have no chance to vote for example, for an increase in the benefits provided?

I was opposed to the form of the resolution—or rule—bringing the bill before us and would have supported amendments to permit the bill to be opened up for amendment. But by vote of the House in closing off debate on the rule, no amendments to it could be considered either. Mr. Chairman, these practices are seen by the general public as undemocratic; they demean the House. It is time they were changed. It is time the Members of the House were treated as intelligent adults, capable of voting amendments to a bill up or down on the merits, instead of being told they must accept or reject the bill exactly as it emerged from committee.

I hope that the needed improvements in the bill, including a major increase in the minimum income, will be made in the Senate and that the House conferees will look favorably on such amendments. I know that many of my colleagues share these sentiments.

TASK FORCE ACTION STATEMENT

INTRODUCTION

In opening the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health, President Nixon said: "This meeting sets the seal of urgency on the national commitment to put an end to hunger and malnutrition due to poverty in America." We who have come here are already firmly dedicated to that goal. The President said: "Our job is to get resources to people in need, and then to let them run their own lives." He did not provide any new or meaningful program by which this can be accomplished. Obviously, he wanted us to do this, and intended that we should do so. To paraphrase the President we "not only accept the responsibility (we) claim the responsibility." Therefore, the combined task forces on Voluntary Action by Women, Consumers, Religious Organizations, Community Organizations, Health Organizations, Faculty and Students, and Organized Labor,[1] present the following action priority program:

I. A national emergency: There is a hunger and malnutrition emergency in this country today. Therefore the President must immediately declare that a national hunger emergency exists, and under existing authority must now free funds and implement programs to feed all hungry Americans this winter.

II. Guaranteed adequate income: The overriding remedy for hunger and malnutrition is a minimum guaranteed adequate cash income with a floor or $5500 annually (for a family of four). The government must also guarantee a meaningful job with a living wage to those who can work, elevation of wages and benefits to those presently underemployed, the "adequate income" to those unable to work or find employment, and maximization of the purchasing power of the food dollar for all.

III. Interim food programs: As interim measures only, present food programs must be reformed and expanded immediately in order to assure truly adequate benefits and participation by all who need them in all parts of the country.

IV. Universal school food programs: A national free lunch and breakfast program must be made immediately available to all children, through secondary school and regardless of income, that will provide at least ⅔ of the minimal requirements of the Recommended Dietary Allowance, while respecting cultural food preferences.

V. Running the programs: All administrative responsibilities for all hunger relief and nutrition programs must be shifted from the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture to the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, with corresponding shifts in Congressional committee responsibilities. The recipients of these programs must have responsibility for local administration of the programs under standards determined at the Federal level.

To put these priorities into action requires the following:

This nation today faces a national hunger and malnutrition emergency. This emergency situation requires emergency action.

While we initiate long-term programs to eliminate hunger in America, action must be taken immediately to deliver food now to the millions of Americans whose chronic malnutrition the nation can no longer tolerate. Only within the context of adequate food now can a program of nutrition education for all Americans have meaning.

We therefore call on the President to adopt immediately the following emergency program to feed hungry people this winter:

(a) Invoke Section 11 of the Disaster Relief Act of 1969 and like statutes in order to supply free food stamps to meet the needs of hungry people.

(b) Instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to immediately revise food stamp price schedules of less than $100 per month (based on a family of four) and at a maximum cost of 20% of income.

(c) Instruct the United States Department of Agriculture to implement directly a food program in every county and town in the United States within the next three months using all available funds, including the customs receipt funds (Section 32 funds).

(d) Actively support immediate passage and funding of the following essential legislation.

1. The Senate-passed Food Stamp Reform Bill (S. 2547).

2. A School Lunch Program Reform which consists of the Talmadge school lunch bill, the McGovern amendments and the Javits proposals.

3. The Economic Opportunity Act, particularly its section on emergency hunger relief (Section 401, Title X), and without the Green-Quie type state control amendments which will in effect destroy OEO.

(e) Instruct the Department of Agriculture to immediately require that all schools receiving Federal financial and commodity assistance for their lunch and breakfast programs provide free meals to all children whose families are receiving any type of public assistance.

Because each of these actions is either already authorized or embodied in pending legislation, action to meet this emergency can be taken within the next month.

II. GUARANTEED ADEQUATE INCOME

To implement this number one remedy to hunger and malnutrition, the following program is imperative:

(a) The adequate cash income presently at $5500 annually for a family of four sets a floor. It should automatically follow the cost of living as defined by the Low Standard Budget of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

(b) Establishment of government careers in nutrition and allied health professions, in connection with other private and public efforts to solve simultaneously social problems and unemployment problems. These suggestions alone should provide two million new jobs.

(c) Grants to encourage and support broadly based organizations of low income citizens in local ownership and operation of such services as food production and distribution.

(d) Establishment of housing factories on the order of the automotive industry to serve the dual function of provision of low-cost housing and the provision of jobs at desirable wages. This involves creation of 750,000 to 1 million new jobs to produce 3–4 million housing units.

(e) Extension to all working people of the right to bargain collectively for wages, hours, and working conditions, including the right to strike or boycott when necessary.

(f) Extension of unemployment insurance coverage to working groups presently excluded, such coverage to be on the same terms and conditions as provided for other workers now covered.

(g) Improvement of the scope of Social Security laws with a 50% raise this year, so that the program provides a reasonable return on investment.

(k) Reform of certain pricing, packaging, promotion and other food industry policies and practices which add unnecessarily to the cost of food. This cost inflation is unfair to every consumer and particularly disastrous to the poor. We need:

1. Price reduction through mandatory limitation of promotional and advertising expenditure and other means suggested in the Food Marketing Commission Report.

2. Mandatory price marking and posting which facilitates and simplifies price comparison.

3. Effective inspection and regulation to insure availability of safe nutritious food at fair prices and conditions of sale.

4. Mandatory processing, packaging, and labeling requirements to identify and preserve nutrient content and assure accurate and honest promotion.

5. Encouragement of retail distribution systems which take special account of the needs of the poor.

(l) Establishment of a national prepaid health insurance program and new methods for the delivery of health care and extension of existing health programs to all states. The Medicaid Bill should be fully implemented by 1971.

The task forces feel that it is especially important to note that many of the above programs can be self-supporting and/or income-producing, and none will require appropriations higher than a fraction of the cost of the space program. Together they should create substantial new tax revenue (4 million jobs should produce an average increase of $5 billion a year in taxes), substantial increase in income through increased buying power, and a saving of $7 billion of funds misspent under the present public assistance programs.

III. INTERIM FAMILY FOOD PROGRAMS

None of the existing family food programs—food stamps, commodity distribution, emergency food and medical services—provides an adequate diet or permits the participation of all who have need. Major reforms and expansions are necessary to make sure that all people in need have access to an adequate diet until an adequate income becomes a reality.

As an interim measure only, the food stamp program must be altered so that it can become the primary vehicle for providing an adequate diet to those in need in all parts of the United States and its territories, and on Indian reservations. Free food stamps to those whose income is less than $100 a month (for a family of four), modification of the price schedule so that no recipient must pay more than 20% of his income for food stamps, national eligibility standards, self-certification, a coupon issuance to all recipients equal to the Low Cost Food Plan of the Department of Agriculture, a several-food expansion of the program—all are necessary to make the food stamp programs adequate. The commodity distribution program should no longer serve as a means of surplus disposal but should provide direct food aid adequate to a nutritious diet wherever necessary, fully respecting the ethnic and cultural preference of the recipients, Hunger programs of the Office of Economic Opportunity should also be expanded to supplement the above.

[1] The AFL–CIO endorsed the policy statement in principle with no opposition on certain specifics. The Alliance for Labor Action (ALA), including the United Auto Workers, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, and the International Chemical Workers Union, endorses this statement as written.

We must do the following:

(a) The President should support, and the House quickly approve, the Senate-passed food stamp bill. The program should be fully funded and fully implemented in all parts of the United States and its territories, including Indian reservations, before the end of this fiscal year.

(b) The Economic Opportunity Act Amendments of 1969, particularly the new section on emergency hunger relief (Title 4, Section 401—Title X), should be quickly approved and fully funded by the Congress, without crippling amendments subjecting part or all of the programs to state and local government control.

(c) The Federal Government should immediately initiate food programs in the 321 counties still without them.

IV. UNIVERSAL SCHOOL FOOD PROGRAM

There must be established a national child feeding program which will make available at least ⅔ of the Recommended Dietary Allowance. This is to be accomplished by implementing a free lunch and breakfast program for all pre-school elementary and secondary school children.

To assure maximum participation in the program, the following steps should be taken:

(a) Nutritious food selected shall be consistent with the cultural preferences of the children to be fed.

(b) Funds shall be provided to enable schools, child care centers, and other participating groups lacking adequate facilities for food preparation, to obtain such facilities or to devise ways to provide meals by other means.

(c) Community groups shall be eligible to operate child feeding programs.

(d) Local poor residents must be trained for careers in nutritional planning and food preparation for employment in the program.

(e) Food provided at the schools shall be available at the choice of the children and their parents.

V. RUNNING THE PROGRAMS

There is a conflict of interest established in the U.S. Department of Agriculture in its dual role—primarily the advocate for the producers of food, and secondarily the distributor of food to the needy. Therefore, all programs relating to the provision of food, food services, food stamps, commodity distribution and nutrition services should be removed from the administrative jurisdiction of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and be established in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, whose primary concerns are the needs and well-being of the people these programs were created to assist. Within that department, the provisions of food services of all kinds should be tied as closely as possible to the provision of overall comprehensive health care. We call on the President to use his Executive authority to initiate these changes.

To provide maximum coordination, Congressional responsibilities for both funding and programming should be reassigned to coincide with the above administrative changes.

The provisions of food services has too often been thwarted by lack of responsiveness at the state and local governmental levels. The poor should run their own programs. Maximum dignified participation by recipients is insured by transferring organizational and operational responsibil ties to duly constituted, broad based, local community organizations of the recipients themselves. Certification, review and auditing must be done entirely at the Federal level to circumvent parochial political implications and to insure the protection of individual rights of those presently living in hunger and despair.

From all corners of this nation we have come together out of a deep concern to end hunger in America now. We feel a heavy sense of obligation to follow through on our commitment and on the commitments of this Conference. We brought with us the diversity that is the American people and we believe there is need for on-going active participation of all people in implementing the recommendations of this Conference.

Therefore, we call upon the organizers of this Conference to provide an effective continuing mechanism by which all of us who have this concern can contribute vigorous continuing leadership to ensure that this Conference produces action. Today is a beginning, not an end, of our commitment to end hunger in America.

And the appropriate beginning is conference-wide adoption of the 5 points:

1. A National Emergency.
2. Guaranteed Adequate Income.
3. Interim Food Programs.
4. Universal School Food Program.
5. Running the Programs.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I am impressed with the important questions raised by my two colleagues from New York (Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. RYAN) and earlier today by my colleague from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT). Important substantive issues have been raised pointing out directions in which the bill should be clarified or improved. I regret—along with many of my colleagues—that this bill—excellent as it is, and credit as it is to the distinguished Ways and Means Committee—came to the floor under a closed rule—and, therefore, cannot effectively be clarified or improved on the floor. I intend to vote aye on a motion to recommit so that the ambiguities and imperfections can be cured and the bill returned to the floor in improved form. If the motion to recommit fails I shall, of course, vote for the bill, for, with its shortcomings, it is nevertheless a great step forward in comprehensive welfare reform.

I know many of my colleagues join me in the hope and intent that the Senate will act on some of the testimony and other expert opinion on the bill—expressed during the months of hearings—and will clarify or improve the bill where the need has been established, and that the House conferees will approach such clarifications or improvements in a constructive and open-minded fashion.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WHALEN).

(Mr. WHALEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WHALEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16311.

During the past 200 years the United States has developed the greatest standard of living the world has ever seen. Despite this fact there are today 25 million Americans who do not enjoy the fruits of this great standard of living.

How to assist these less-fortunate Americans represents one of the great domestic issues confronting our country today.

The Social Security Administration has developed what it calls a poverty index. According to this index, in 1959, 22 percent of all Americans lived below the poverty income line. Due to the great productivity of our economic system, by 1968 this figure had been reduced to 13 percent of all Americans. Despite this great improvement there are still two very disturbing factors that are present in these statistics. First, while the statistics indicate that approximately 3 million nonwhite Americans got out of the poverty bracket, nevertheless, today 34 percent of all nonwhite Americans live in what we call the poverty category, according to the social security poverty index.

Second, in the 9-year period between 1959 and 1968 there has been absolutely no change in the number of Americans who are members of families headed by females.

It is these two groups and combination of groups that represent what we might call our hard-core poor. It is to these two groups that our welfare programs at the Federal, State, and local levels have been directed.

We have heard from previous speakers that these programs have simply not worked. The costs have mushroomed. Yet the hard-core poor have not been dislodged. The reasons are many for the failure of our welfare programs to work. You already have heard a number of them mentioned. Let me cite what I consider to be the two most important.

First, current welfare benefits do not always go to those who are in need. Let me give you a couple of illustrations. A very noted economist, Eli Ginsburg mentioned a couple of years ago that only about 1 out of 10 poor Americans receives any benefit from our Federal poverty programs. Another well-known economist, Dr. James Tobin, delineated a series of Federal, State, and local welfare and social insurance programs and he made the comment that less than half of the poor in America receive any benefits from these programs.

Second, our current welfare programs provide the wrong incentives. For example, when a person on welfare accepts a part-time or seasonal job, his welfare benefits are reduced by an amount corresponding to the additional income he receives.

Mr. Chairman, it is evident, therefore, that our current programs are simply not working and we must have a new approach. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, we do have a new approach in the family assistance program which we are considering today. This approach, in my opinion, overcomes the weaknesses that are present in the current Federal, State, and local welfare programs.

For example, the benefits under FAP will go directly to the needy because they will be based upon income. Second, FAP will provide a positive work incentive, whereas under present programs we have negative incentives.

I think it was the late President Kennedy in his inaugural address in January 1961 who repopularized an old Chinese proverb:

A journey of a thousand miles begins with the first step.

I think we are taking today a significant first step if we adopt the family assistance program.

As the previous speaker, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) indicated, there are some Members who feel that there should be broader coverage and that the benefit level should be greater than that which is proposed in H.R. 16311.

As a matter of fact, I joined the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) in presenting such a bill. But I think at the present time, due to the present Federal budget strictures, it is not very practicable to think in terms of broadening coverage right now.

Therefore, I would like to suggest to those of you who believe as I do that ultimately the program should be broadened, that the benefit level should be increased, that we are today indeed taking a significant first step. We are changing direction, we have come up with an innovative program. It is for this reason that I intend to vote affirmatively for H.R. 16311 and I would urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BURTON).

(Mr. BURTON of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of California. Initially, Mr. Chairman, I would like to record my support for the pending legislation and my commendation to the administration for demonstrating understanding to come forth with this proposal.

For those of our colleagues who are concerned that this proposal is too rich for their blood, I might note that a $1,600 annual base for a family of four hardly compares favorably with the Bureau of Labor Statistics findings that it takes some $5,500 a year for a family of four in the major urban areas of the country to live at some minimal level.

I must also state that I think the administration bill was somewhat preferable in the family plan than that which the committee reported, and I make specific reference to the fact that in the administration proposal the unearned income was permitted to be disregarded by 50 percent; the committee deleted this benefit to the poor which had the effect, lamentably, of taking some $600 million or $700 million per year out of their pockets.

However, with reference to the adult program the Nixon administration provided literally no assistance to the elderly, the blind, and the disabled in this country. It merely increased the Federal matching which wag going to result—essentially—in savings to the States. In this regard I think the committee is to be highly commended for their significant changes in the adult category by providing some minimum assurance of income for our aged, blind and disabled people.

And, finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to note this: A number of my colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle have privately noted that if the bill does not work, Republicans are going to have to take the full blame. Well, I happen to feel that that is just so much nonsense.

I am not sure this bill is going to work perfectly and I do not think the administration has said that. But anyone who knows anything about this field knows that our current program not only does not work and the costs of that program are skyrocketing. For those who are going to oppose this bill, I think the only way one can interpret that vote is that they are on record as supporting this current mess that we have and these skyrocketing costs under the current program will be theirs to defend and not mine. I am going to support the legislation.

I ask Chairman MILLS, it is my understanding that under present law and under this bill, the food stamp bonus will be disregarded in figuring the amount of adult assistance payments. Is that right?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of California. Under present law and regulations, home produce used by the household for its own consumption is disregarded as income or as a resource for adult public assistance recipients. This bill would permit this to continue, would it not?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of California. It is my understanding that under the adult assistance programs a scholarship of the type which would be disregarded under the family assistance provisions of the bill would also be disregarded as part of the rehabilitative services disregarded under the adult provisions, which apply in particular to the disabled and the blind. Is that right?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of California. It is my understanding that it is the intention of this bill that the authority of the Secretary to set the 25-percent Federal matching ceiling in the adult categories would not be invoked at a lower level of average payment, including full Federal participation, than the highest levels of average payment now made by the States under current State programs for the aged, blind, and disabled. Is that your understanding also?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of California. It is my understanding that the minimum payment to adults provided in section 1603 (b) shall be in the form of a cash payment which when added to an individual's other income, not disregarded under other provisions in the bill, will be at least $110 a month. That term would not include any amounts provided for medical care, except, of course, in the case of an institutionalized person. Is that right?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of California. If a State chooses Federal administration of the adult assistance categories, then the Federal Government would administer the program in accordance with requirements of Federal law whether or not the State plan was in full compliance with Federal law?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of California. Mr. Chairman, enactment of H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970, is a sound first step in reform of our public assistance structure. It provides benefits that are far below any objective gage of poverty and will provide only marginal assistance to all too many of our neediest citizens. Thirty Members of the House have joined me in signing the following statement in support of significantly higher income guarantees than those provided in H.R. 16311:

We believe all Americans are entitled to an adequate income from wages, welfare, or both. Surveys by the U.S. Department of Labor demonstrate that an urban family of four spends $5500 a year merely to live at a low level with an adequate diet. The Gallup Poll of January 25, 1970, says that the average American believes a family of four needs $120 a week ($6240 a year) to get along. Therefore:

1. A real welfare reform must be based on the amount of money that a family needs.

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics regularly compiles such data that reflects what people actually must spend to obtain decent food, clothing, and shelter.

We support the implementation of the Department of Labor's determination of need. H.R. 16311 does not use such an objective standard of need as already determined by government agencies.

2. We criticize, as inadequate, the income level in the H.R. 16311 Family Assistance Plan (FAP). At worst, it provides only $7.70 a week for each person in a poor family of 4 ($1600/yr.); at best, a ceiling of $17.90/wk. per person (3720 FAP ceiling for 4). This Poverty Line is based on the Agriculture Department's Economy Food Plan which, according to the Department, "is not a reasonable measure of basic money needs for a good diet" and allows a person to survive with adequate nutrition "for short emergency periods of time and only under very special circumstances." Furthermore, there is no provision in H.R. 16311 for automatic cost-of-living increases; yet the latest Labor Department statistics show the cost-of-living is increasing the rate of 6.2% a year.

While, as members of the House of Representatives, most of us intend to vote for H.R. 16311 as a sound step toward the elimination of poverty, we nevertheless retain these serious reservations about the inadequacy of the Family Assistance Plan.

Representatives BURTON of California, BINGHAM, BROWN of California, CHISHOLM, CLAY, CONYERS, DIGGS, EDWARDS, of California, FARBSTEIN, FRASER, FRIEDEL, HARRINGTON, HAWKINS, HELSTOSKI, KOCH, LOWENSTEIN, MATSUNAGA, MIKVA, MOORHEAD, NIX, OLSEN, OTTINGER, REUSS, ROSENTHAL, ROYBAL, RYAN, ST GERMAIN, SCHEUER, STOKES, TUNNEY, and CHARLES WILSON of California.

Mr. Chairman, since the beginning of this Congress I have served as the chairman of the Democratic Study Group's Task Force on Health and Welfare. Before the Committee on Ways and Means reported the bill we will vote on today, the task force submitted its recommendations both to the committee and to the Democratic Study Group's membership. A number of our recommendations have been incorporated into the bill, and as a result the bill has been measurably strengthened. I submit for the RECORD now these recommendations so that all Members may familiarize themselves with them. We will be working in the months ahead to further strengthen the bill along the lines the task force has recommended so that the final product will, while remaining within the administration's fiscal and programmatic guidelines, insure that every Federal dollar spent contributes to the welfare of recipients.

In addition I submit for the RECORD the Democratic Study Group's Fact Sheet entitled "Proposed Welfare Reforms." This analysis was coordinated and developed by our brilliant and hard working staff member, Rick Merrill. In my view this document provides an extremely useful summary of the bill and analysis of its key provisions and points of controversy.

The material follows:

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS ON PRESIDENT NIXON'S WELFARE REFORM PROPOSALS

The DSG Task Force on Health and Welfare herewith submits its report and recommendations regarding President Nixon's welfare proposals to the DSG membership. The report has also been forwarded to all Democratic members of the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Finance Committee and to appropriate Government agencies and officials.

The Task Force, at the request of the DSG leadership, has been studying this issue since last October, when H.R. 14173, the Administration's welfare reform bill, was introduced in the House. The Task Force held a number of meetings and briefings on the subject. Special separate sessions were held with Mr. Ben Heineman, Chairman of President Johnson's Commission on Income Maintenance, former HEW Secretary Wilbur Cohen, and an Administration briefing team headed by Presidential Counselor Daniel Moynihan and HEW Under Secretary John Veneman.

The Nixon welfare proposals contain a number of commendable initiatives, particularly with respect to coverage for all families with children and Federal participation in setting standards. The Task Force recommends approval of the Nixon Family Assistance Plan as a sound step toward the elimination of poverty. However the Administration Plan should be strengthened in a number of key areas, and benefits under adult assistance programs broadened. Specific Task Force recommendations for improvement of the Nixon proposals follow:

FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Labor standard safeguards contained in the Nixon Plan should be clarified, including definitions of wage levels and conditions under which job offers will be considered suitable.

2. Any work provisions for mothers should in all instances place the interests of the child or children first.

3. The Nixon Plan should contain a commitment to full federalization of family assistance, with benefit levels raised to the poverty level in equal stages within a specific time period.

4. Only net earned income, after deducting the expenses of seeking, obtaining, or holding employment—to the extent permitted by current law—should be considered in the reduction of the family assistance grant.

5. Food stamps should be provided automatically to all family assistance beneficiaries in amounts for which they are eligible.

6. States should be required to meet budgeted unmet needs in their family assistance programs, at the risk of loss of other Federal funds.

7. Assurance should be provided that no family receives a reduction in its grant (Federal and state) from what it is currently receiving.

CHILDLESS PERSONS

The Task Force does not recommend at this time the inclusion of childless persons, other than those eligible for assistance under aged, blind, and disabled programs, until and unless the unemployment rate reaches 6%.

In the event a 6% rate of unemployment is reached, the Task Force recommends that the benefit level for the then eligible childless persons be set at the family assistance rate.

AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED PROGRAM RECOMMENDATIONS

The Task Force recommends approval of the Administration proposals, with the following additions:

1. Increase to $150 per month (from the $90 proposed) the guaranteed income floor for the Nation's aged, blind, and disabled.

2. Provide for a cost-of-living escalator clause in the minimum monthly guarantee.

3. Reduce the age eligibility from the present 65 years to age 60 for men and age 55 for women.

4. Increase earnings permited to $100 per month for the aged and the same amount for the blind and disabled with an earning incentive to the later two groups of 50% in addition to the $100 disregard.

5. Require the states to fully meet any budgeted—but unmet—needs of aged, blind, and disabled recipients.

6. Assurance should be provided that no individual receives reduction in his benefit (Federal and state) from what he is currently receiving.

7. The provision of current law permitting the disregard of $7.50 per month of outside income should be made mandatory, and the current temporary $4.00 social security disregard should be made permanent, with a comparable increase for those not receiving social security benefits.

8. Food stamps should be provided automatically to all aged, blind, and disabled beneficiaries in amounts for which they are eligible.

FEDERAL ADMINISTRATION AND FUNDING RECOMMENDATIONS

The Task Force recommends that the administration of programs for the aged, blind, and disabled be assumed by the Federal government on January 1, 1971.

Program costs should be entirely borne by the Federal Government on January 1, 1971, except that:

For the calendar year 1972 the states shall pay the full amount they expended for the fiscal year ending June 20, 1970.

For the calendar year 1977 the states shall pay 66⅔% of the amount they expended for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970.

For the calendar year 1973 the states shall pay 33⅓% of the amount they expended for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970.

As of January 1, 1974, the full costs and administration of programs for the aged, blind, and disabled should be borne by the Federal Government.

PROPOSED WELFARE REFORMS

This DSG Fact Sheet deals with H.R. 16311, which contains President Nixon's basic recommendations for reform of public assistance programs. The bill establishes a new Family Assistance Plan (FAP) with Federal eligibility standards and benefit provisions for families with children. The bill also provides Federal eligibility standards and minimums for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled.

The Ways and Means Committee reported the bill (H. Rept. 91-904) on March 11 by a vote of 21-3. The Rules Committee is expected to grant a closed rule on Tuesday, April 7. Floor consideration will begin Wednesday, April 8, subject to a rule being granted.

SECTION ONE

Background

Current public assistance programs comprise two major components—aid to families with dependent children (AFDC), and adult assistance programs for the aged, the blind, and the disabled. Both components are administered by the States or by localities with State supervision, with widely varying eligibility standards, benefit levels, and work referral requirements. For a family of four AFDC benefits range from an average of $44 per month in Mississippi to $264 per month in New Jersey. Adult public assistance benefits range from an average of $40 per month for the aged in Mississippi to $160 per month for the blind in California. About 1.7 million families containing 6.7 individuals receive AFDC. Another 3 million individuals receive assistance under programs for the aged, the blind, and the disabled.

Concern over public assistance programs has focused primarily on AFDC due to the rising rate of families applying for such assistance. The last attempt at Federal regulation of AFDC was the 1967 Amendments to the Social Security Act, which provided:

An AFDC "freeze," never implemented and repealed in June 1969, on the number of eligible children in a given state receiving AFDC due to absence of a parent from the home.

Mandatory referral of "appropriate" AFDC recipients for work training projects, with wide latitude for state administrators to define "appropriate" under Federal-state guidelines.

Work incentives providing for exclusion of first $30 per month earned plus one-third of the remainder, after deduction of the expenses of working.

AFDC rolls, however, continued to rise and a number of Federal agencies began to systematically analyze the public assistance population. President Johnson appointed a Commission on Income Maintenance Programs which undertook an in-depth study of poverty in the United States. Welfare specialists generally began to question traditional assumptions about public assistance beneficiaries. Most importantly, welfare began to be viewed in the overall context of poverty in the United States.

As a result of these various studies, new information about welfare recipients and the poor generally came to light:

Income at the government-defined poverty level for a family of four allowed about $100 per year for items other than basic necessities, such as medical care, furniture, and school supplies.

The food budget for an average welfare family was discovered to be $1 per day per person—too low for a nutritionally adequate diet, according to the Department of Agriculture.

In a total public assistance population of about 10 million persons, only 50,000, or 1 in 200, were found to be able-bodied employable males.

On the basis of such findings and mounting public pressure from overburdened State administrations, taxpayers, and welfare recipients themselves, the Nixon Administration in August of 1969 announced its Family Assistance Plan (FAP) for welfare reform, along with recommendations for consolidation and a basic Federal minimum payment in the aged, blind, and disabled programs.

The President's proposals generally received widespread public support. On March 11, 1970, after extensive hearings, the Committee on Ways and Means reported H.R. 16311 containing the key elements of the President's proposals for Federal benefit minimums and eligibility standards for family assistance and for programs for the aged, blind, and disabled.

Summary

H.R. 16311 terminates Federal participation in AFDC programs and instead establishes a Federal floor of $1600 per year for a family of four with no other income. Work incentive earned income exclusions permit a family of four to earn up to $3920 before losing their Federal supplement completely. FAP provides Federal eligibility standards that would include families headed by an unemployed male in the home and, for the first time, families headed by a full time employed person.

The bill requires States to maintain programs to supplement FAP up to their January 1970 level of payment or the poverty level, whichever is lower. States receive 30% in Federal matching funds for these supplementary programs. States would receive no Federal funds for programs to assist the working poor.

The bill provides tight Federal requirements for registration and referral for job training and employment programs to be developed by the Depatment of Labor. Mothers of preschool children need not register, but the bill requires all others, including the working poor, to register for job training. The bill authorizes new job training programs and child care facilities for these new registrants.

For the aged, blind, and disabled, H.R. 16311 consolidates existing Federal-State programs and sets Federal eligibility standards and income exclusion provisions. The bill provides a minimum payment of $110 per month for all aged, blind, and disabled eligibles who have no other income.

The bill will extend coverage under family assistance from about 7 million to about 20 million persons and extend coverage to adults under aged, blind, and disabled programs from 3 million to about 4 million persons. HEW and the Bureau of the Budget estimate that the bill will add $4.4 BILLION to current welfare costs, including $600 million for expanded work training and day care programs.

Summary of key differences between administration proposal and H.R. 16311

The Committee bill drops the provision in the Administration proposal permitting disregard of unearned income, thereby removing an estimated $600 million in direct Federal assistance to families with children. The Committee bill adds an estimated $300 million in savings to the States in the FAP portion of the bill and an estimated $100 million in aged, blind, and disabled benefits.

With regard to work registration and training requirements, the Committee bill contains the following new features:

Protective labor standard safeguards although the exact wage level at which beneficiaries must take jobs is not clear.

A definition of job "suitability" derived from that in use under state unemployment compensation laws.

A requirement that the working poor register for job training in addition to those without full time jobs.

Increased emphasis on special work projects where employment on the regular economy is not available, and Federal financing arrangements for on-the-job training.

The Committee bill also provides full Federal funding for day care programs as opposed to 90% Federal matching under the Administration proposal.

The Committee bill provides for full Federal assumption of administrative costs where States opt to have the Federal Government make direct payments to beneficiaries in both FAP and the adult assistance programs. The Administration proposal provided for only 50% Federal assumption of administrative costs.

In the aged, blind, and disabled adult categories the Committee bill raises the Federal minimum to $110 per month from the $90 per month in the Administration bill for individuals with no other income. The new Federal minimum combined with the earned income exclusions in the Committee bill will add to the incomes of aged, blind, and disabled public assistance recipients and broaden coverage of these programs.

SECTION TWO. BASIC PROVISIONS OF H.R. 16311

Title I. The family assistance plan

FAP Benefits and Eligibility

The bill provides an annual Federal family assistance benefit of $500 for each of the first two family members and $300 for each additional family member. The benefit is reduced by the amount of the family's income over and above the following:

The first $720 per year of the total of earned income of all family members, plus one-half the remainder.

Irregularly received amounts of earned and unearned income up to $30 per quarter of each type, determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by HEW.

Earnings of a child if in school and the tuition part of scholarships and fellowships.

The training allowance for those in training and earnings used to pay for child care.

Food stamps and other public or private charity, and produce grown and used at home.

Families with more than $1500 in resources, other than the home, household goods, personal effects, and property essential to the family's self-support would not be eligible for the program.

A family is defined as two or more people living together, at least one of whom is a dependent child under 18 (21 if a full-time student). A parent who is temporarily absent due to employment or military service would be considered living in the place of residence. Persons receiving aid to the aged, blind, or disabled are not considered family members. Military families would be considered eligible.

Each member of a family found eligible would be required to register for employment or training with their State employment service, except for the following:

Those unable to work because of illness, incapacity, or age, and children under 16 (21 if in school).

Mothers of children under 6 and mothers in cases where the father registers.

Persons caring for an ill member of the household.

The bill requires child care for those in training or employment and vocational rehabilitation for those unable to work due to incapacity, and permits voluntary registration of those exempted. The working poor would also be required to register.

Persons refusing to register or refusing manpower training or employment without good cause would not be taken into account (but their income would be counted) in determining the family benefit. In determining suitability for employment, a person's fitness potential, and prior training and experience would be taken into consideration. Individuals could not be required to take jobs "if the wages, hours, or other terms or considerations of the work are contrary to or less than those prescribed by Federal, state, or local law."

State Supplementation of FAP

States whose payments under the old AFDC program are above the FAP level would be required to supplement the FAP benefit up to that level or to the poverty level, whichever is lower. The poverty level is defined in terms of family size as follows:

Family Size:	Basic Amount
1	$1,920
2	2,460
3	2,940
4	3,720
5	4,440
6	4,980

This level would be adjusted annually to reflect changed living costs. Thirty percent in Federal matching funds would be available for this supplementation. The Federal Government would pay 50% of the administrative costs of State supplementary programs.

States would have to supplement the benefits of all those currently eligible and all of those newly eligible under the FAP standards, except the working poor. All States would be required to supplement the benefits of families where the father is unemployed or where a child is between 18 and 21 and in school, both now at State opinion.

In computing benefits the States would be required to follow the rules for FAP, except in the case of the work incentive earned income exclusion. The complicated new earned income formula for the State supplement,[1] when combined with the FAP work incentive exclusion, would have roughly the same impact as the current disregard (all working expenses plus $30 per month plus one-third of earnings above this amount.)

Administration of FAP

The bill provides three possible administrative arrangements:

Federal administration of both the FAP and the State supplementary program, in which case the Federal government would pay all the administrative costs of both programs.

State administration of both the FAP and the State supplementary program.

Federal administration of the FAP and State administration of the State supplementary program.

In the latter two cases the Federal Government would pay the costs of administering the FAP and the Federal Government and the State would equally divide the costs of administering the State supplementary program.

The bill also contains a provision under which deserting parents would incur an obligation to the Federal Government for the amount of Federal payments to their families under FAP. Other provisions authorize $20 million for research and demonstration projects to improve FAP and technical assistance to the States.

Service Programs

Individuals registered under FAP would be provided an "employability plan" and services and training similar to those provided under the current work incentive (WIN) program. Existing manpower training programs would be utilized where possible and State welfare departments would be required to provide health care and other services to enable an individual to participate. Each individual participating in a training program would receive $30 per month and allowances to cover transportation and other associated training costs. The Federal Government would pay 90% of the costs of such training programs.

The bill authorizes grants up to 100% to public or private agencies for day care programs for children of manpower training participants. For school-age children, group or institutional care would be provided through local educational agencies whenever possible. Fees for child care could be charged on the basis of a family's ability to pay.

The bill authorizes 90% Federal matching grants for services supporting manpower training programs. HEW will make further recommendations for social services in the near future.

[1] The States would have to exclude the first $720 per year plus (1) one-third of the remainder up to twice the unreduced FAP benefit ($3200 for a family of four), plus (2) one-fifth of any earnings above that amount.

Title II.—Aid to the aged, blind, and disabled (AABD)

AABD State Plan Requirements

The bill would repeal current Federal provisions for separate programs for the aged (OAA), blind (AB), and permanent and totally disabled (APTD) and establish a new combined Federal-State program (AABD) with a monthly benefit minimum of $110 for aged, blind, and disabled persons with no other income. The bill provides for uniform Federal definitions for blindness and disability.

Existing Federal administrative requirements for State plans are retained in the bill, as are regulations designed to protect the rights of recipients. The bill also specifically excludes State plans which contain residency requirements, an age requirement over 65, or citizenship requirements which deny benefits to United States citizens or lawfully admitted aliens continuously in residence for 5 years preceding application.

AABD Eligibility and Income Disregards

In determining need for aid under AABD programs, States are required to exclude the home, household goods, and personal effects of an individual, and other resources up to $1500. States must also not impose responsibility on relatives unless the beneficiary is the relative's spouse, or a child who is under 21, blind, or disabled.

Income disregards are as follows:

For the blind and disabled, the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half the remainder, mandatory on the States.

For the aged, the first $60 per month of earned income plus one-half the remainder, optional with the States.

$7.50 per month of earned or unearned income before disregard of any of the above, optional with the States.

The bill also makes permanent a temporary provision in the 1969 Social Security Amendments requiring the States to pass along to AABD recipients a $4 per month social security disregard.

AABD Federal Matching Provisions and Administration

The Federal Government would pay 90% of the first $65 of the average payment made to AABD beneficaries and one-fourth of the remainder, up to a limit set by HEW. The bill provides for optional direct payment to recipients by the Federal Government, in which case all administrative costs would be borne by the Federal Government.

State plans providing certain rehabilitative services prescribed by HEW for AABD recipients would qualify for 75% Federal matching for such services and 50% of the remainder of administrative costs. The Federal Government in any event would pay 50% of administrative costs of AABD programs.

Section Three. Comparative Analysis of Key Provisions

President Nixon's welfare reform proposals raise a number of basic issues. Alternative proposals have come from a number of sources, including President Johnson's Commission on Income Maintenance Programs, Senator Fred Harris, a number of private organizations, and the Ways and Means Committee. Following is an analysis of Administration, Ways and Means Committee, and alternative proposals in key areas.

Benefit levels

The basic FAP benefit ($1600 per year for a family of four with no other income) is recommended in the Committee bill. This basic benefit is supplemented both in the Administration proposal and the Committee bill by exclusion of the value of food stamps ($864 for a family of four with the basic FAP income of $1600). This $2464 total compares with the basic benefits of $2487 recommended by the Harris bill and $2,400 recommended by the Commission of Income Maintenance. The Harris and Commission bills, however, also provide for automatic escalation to the poverty level in a specific period of time. A number of organizations recommend a basic benefit at the poverty level this year, currently set at 3720. The National Welfare Rights Organization recommends $5500, the Lower Standard Budget set by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for a family of four in an urban area.

The Administration contends that cost factors make any higher Federal guarantee impossible at this time and points out that State supplementary programs will add significantly to the Federal minimum. HEW estimates that the recommended $1600 basic FAP benefits will add $2.6 billion to current Federal welfare costs, and that adding $100 to the basic $1600 annual family of four benefit would cost the Federal Government $500 million.

Coverage

The Committee bill and the Administration proposal both limit payments to families (defining family as a group of two, one of whom must be a child), and make no provision for childless couples or single persons. Both extend present coverage to families headed by full-time employed males (the working poor) and families where the father is unemployed and at home. The Committee bill also makes provision for an estimated 12,000 eligible military families, excluded in the Administration proposal.

Alternative proposals recommend universal coverage with specific exclusions for obviously undeserving cases. The Administration points out that FAP will cover 20 million persons in 1971, compared to the 6.7 million currently on AFDC rolls, and that universal coverage would add 4.5 million beneficiaries and costs of $1 billion to the program.

Income exclusions

Both the Committee bill and the Administration proposal contain a basic work incentive earned income exclusion of the first $720 per year plus one-half the remainder. The Administration proposal, however, contained an additional disregard of one-half of unearned income (such as veteran's benefits, social security, and railroad retirement), which the Committee dropped, thereby reducing total benefits by $600 million.

The Committee bill sets the amounts of irregular earned and unearned income allowable at $30 per quarter for each type, left to the determination of HEW in the Administration proposal. Setting an amount may make this disregard more or less automatic, thereby in effect increasing the initial disregard from $720 to $960 per year and raising the breakeven point from $3920 to $4160.

The Harris bill excludes the first $900 per year of earned income, plus one-half the next $1800, plus one-fourth of the remainder. The bill also defines earned income as net income after deduction of the expenses of earning such income. These exclusion provisions would allow a family of four to earn up to $6300 and remain eligible.

Work registration requirements

Both the Administration proposal and the Committee bill contain strict new provisions requiring FAP beneficiaries to register for work training and employment. The Administration proposal, however, contained virtually no labor standard safeguards and left the definition of job "suitability" to the Department of Labor.

The Committee bill includes labor standard safeguards designed to insure that individuals are not placed in unsuitable or excessively low paying jobs, and that they are not forced to cross picket lines or join company unions. The bill contains a new requirement for mandatory registration of the working poor, doubling the total number of registrants from 1.5 to 3 million. The bill also reduces the mandatory registration age for non-students from 18 to 16.

Alternative proposals, including the Harris bill, contain liberalized work training requirements. The Harris bill permits persons to refuse work training in cases where suitable jobs are unavailable and excludes mothers of school-age children from registration and training requirements.

State supplementation

Since the Federal floor provided in both the Administration proposal and the Committee bill is below the level of payment in all but eight States, State supplementation programs are necessary to insure that beneficiaries do not receive less than they are receiving now. The Committee bill and the Administration proposal contain equivalent formulas for determining benefits, but the Committee bill formula for Federal participation (30% Federal matching) generally provides greater relief than the Administration proposal to States currently making greater effort. The Committee bill would result in an additional estimated cost to the Federal Government of $300 million. The provision for direct Federal matching funds also provides greater Federal leverage to insure State supplementation.

The Committee bill contains a provision not in the Administration proposal that sets the poverty level ($3720 for a family of four) as the maximum level to which benefits may be supplemented with Federal matching, thereby affecting the two States (New York and New Jersey) with benefit levels over $3720. The Committee bill also contains a provision absent from the Administration proposal permitting HEW to provide for individual cases that under FAP would receive less than they are receiving now.

Alternative proposals, including the Harris bill, recommend complete Federal financing of public assistance and therefore make no provision for State supplements. Such proposals include the working poor and therefore avoid work disincentives created by excluding the working poor from State supplementary programs, as in the case in the Administration proposal and the Committee bill. Providing Federal matching for State supplements to the working poor would add to Federal and State costs of the bill.

Administration

The Committee bill encourages Federal administration by providing for full assumption of administrative costs in cases where States choose to have the Federal Government make the basic FAP and State supplementary payment directly to the beneficiary. The Administration proposal provided for Federal assumption of only half of the costs of administering the State supplements in such cases. The Committee bill provides the same incentive for Federal administration of AABD programs while the Administration proposal recommended only a 50% Federal contribution.

The Committee bill contains a new provision for liability to the Federal Government for FAP benefits in cases of deserting parents during their period of absence. The Committee in its report indicates that spouses of deserting parents are expected to cooperate fully with authorities in tracking down miscreants under pain of loss of their benefits.

Alternative proposals, including the Harris bill, recommend complete Federalization of public assistance and therefore contain no provision for joint Federal-State administrative arrangements. Punitive administrative provisions are also not included in any alternative proposals.

Food stamps

Both the Administration proposal and the Committee bill permit food stamps for FAP beneficiaries. The Committee in its report noted the desirability of providing beneficiaries higher cash payments only, but said it could not devise a program to accomplish this end within Administration cost guidelines.

Alternative proposals, including the Harris bill, recommend abolishing food stamp assistance in favor of a higher basic income supplement. Rep. Gibbons of the Committee in additional views recommends an immediate integrated cash-benefit program, both to eliminate the inequities of the food stamp program and to save substantial administrative costs.

Manpower training and employment programs

The 1967 Amendments to the Social Security Act provided for a work incentive program (WIN) administered by the Department of Labor rather than HEW through state welfare administrations. The program fell below Congressional expectations because of Department of Labor and HEW slowness in promulgating guidelines, varying State interpretations of the guidelines for referral, inability of States to develop effective training programs, and inadequate provision for child care services.

Both the Committee bill and the Administration proposal abolish the old WIN program and establish in its place a new Federal program with tight referral provisions to eliminate differing interpretations of referral requirements. Both also contain specific guidelines for Federal-State cooperation and coordination with existing programs. Both authorize about $600 million for expanded job training and day care facilities.

In order to insure adequate day care facilities, the Committee bill provides for complete Federal financing for day care programs, as opposed to 90% Federal matching in the Administration proposal. The Committee bill also contains increased emphasis on special work projects where employment in the regular economy is not available, and on-the-job training with new financing provisions under the Department of Labor.

Alternative proposals recognize the necessity of providing work training opportunities for family assistance beneficiaries but stress the need to provide meaningful employment, with the Federal government the employer of last resort.

Costs

Both the Administration proposal and the Committee bill are estimated by HEW and the Bureau of the Budget to add $4.4 BILLION to current public assistance expenditures in the first full year of operation. Both provide about $600 million for job training and day care and $300 million for administration in appropriation estimates.

Estimates of costs are based on 1968 data and are predicated on 100% participation in the programs. Estimates for administrative costs were made before Committee provision for full Federal financing. Following are the breakdowns for the Administration proposal and the Committee bill:

The Administration proposal would have provided an additional $3 BILLION in payments to families, reduced by elimination of the unearned income disregard to $2.6 BILLION in the Committee bill.

The Administration proposal would have provided $100 million in relief to the States (the 50%–90% formula), raised under the new 30% Federal matching formula to $400 million.

The Administration proposal would have provided an additional $400 million for the aged, blind, and disabled, raised to $500 million due to the increase in the Federal minimum from $90 per month to $110 per month.

Alternative proposals are estimated to add from $7 billion (Harris bill) to $30 billion (National Welfare Rights Organization) to public assistance costs in the first full year of operation.

AABD minimum benefits

The Administration proposal contained a Federal minimum of $90 per month for aged, blind, and disabled persons with no other income. The Committee raised this minimum to $110 per month. The Committee bill also contains a new formula for Federal participation that makes it impossible for States to avoid a contribution, as they could have, under the Administration formula.[2]

Alternative proposals recommend raising the Federal family assistance minimum to a level that would adequately cover present AABD recipients and permit abolition of current AABD programs in favor of a single Federal program for the needy.

AABD income disregards and eligibility requirements

For the blind the Administration proposal and the Committee bill both contain a mandatory disregard of the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half the remainder. In the State option disregards for the aged and disabled, the Administration allowed the first $20 per month of earned income plus one-half the remainder up to $80 per month (current law). The Committee bill extends to the disabled the same earnings disregard accorded the blind and permits states to disregard the first $60 per month plus one-half the remainder for the aged.

The Committee bill contains a provision allowing a State option disregard of $7.50 per month of earned or unearned income, and a mandatory $4 per month disregard for Social Security recipients. The Committee bill also drops a provision in the Administration proposal that expressly prohibited States from imposing property liens against aged, blind, or disabled individuals on account of benefits paid them.

SECTION FOUR. FAP (H.R. 16311) POINTS OF CONTROVERSY

The family assistance plan as proposed in H.R. 16311 has raised a number of points of controversy—both in terms of general approach and in terms of certain features. Following are arguments for and against the basic plan and arguments for and against specific provisions.

Basic plan

Proponents of FAP contend that the plan makes significant improvements in the current family assistance structure. They make the following points in its favor:

FAP establishes Federal standards of eligibility that will eliminate inequitable treatment of recipients.

FAP extends coverage to families headed by an unemployed father and to the working poor, currently in effect in only certain States.

FAP contains incentives to encourage States to opt for Federal administration of all public assistance programs.

By establishing a Federal income floor, FAP will reduce State and regional differences in the level of benefits paid.

While the Federal guarantee of $1600 per year for a family of four with no other income is too low, adoption of the program will generate a constituency to press for higher benefits, as was the case with Social Security.

Some critics of FAP believe the plan does not go far enough. They make the following points:

The Federal guarantee of $1600 per year for a family of four with no other income is far too low, and the bill makes no provision for even gradual raising of benefits to the poverty level or for increases based on the rise in the cost of living.

FAP excludes childless couples and single individuals from coverage, denying benefits to millions of needy people.

FAP perpetuates the current Federal-State administrative tangle and contains no provision for even gradual Federal assumption of all public assistance payments.

Other critics of FAP believe the plan goes too far. They make the following arguments:

By extending coverage to unemployed fathers and the working poor, FAP will add between 10 and 15 million people to the welfare rolls and put us on the road to a guaranteed income.

Provisions for Federalization will only create a massive permanent Federal welfare bureaucracy.

FAP attempts too much with insufficient funds; available resources should instead be allocated to existing programs, particularly job training and child care, rather than initiating a new program.

Specific provisions

Work Registration Requirements

Pro: Work registration requirements will provide an additional tool in getting people off welfare rolls and onto employment rolls. Since 11 million mothers of children under 18 are now working, welfare mothers should not receive special treatment. Requiring the working poor to register will permit upgrading of skills and allow the Department of Labor to develop a more adequate data base from which to analyse poverty.

Con: Registration requirements only perpetuate the myth that most welfare recipients are shiftless chiselers. Requiring mothers of children over six to register is potentially harmful to the development of the children; mothers should be allowed to determine the extent to which their presence is needed in the home. The requirement that the working poor register will swamp State unemployment services. The bill in addition establishes no priorities for referral of registrants for job training. The working poor (including the members of the Armed Forces), mothers of children under six volunteering for training, and unemployed fathers will all get the same treatment.

Work Incentives

Pro: By permitting people to hold full-time jobs while still receiving family assistance the bill significantly reduces the incentive to quit work and go on welfare. The Federal uniform initial work incentive exclusion of $720 per month plus one-half the remainder allows individuals to keep enough earnings to make work worthwhile and supercedes with a greater incentive varying amounts allowed under existing law.

Con: The so-called initial $720 plus one-half the remainder work incentive in the bill in fact excludes only that amount of money needed to meet the costs of employment, already provided for in the 1967 Amendments. The much-advertised 50% marginal tax rate is deceptive, because when one takes other public assistance income such as food stamps and State supplements into account and deducts expenses such as State and local taxes, as much as 90% of each dollar over $720 is deducted, thereby eliminating the financial work incentives in the bill.

Work Training and Child Care Programs

Pro: Work training and employment programs are essential to provide individuals with the ability to obtain adequately paying employment and get off welfare. Since successful work training programs depend in large measure on adequate day care facilities, the Committee bill provides full Federal financing for day care, which will spur development of day care facilities by the States and localities.

[2] Under the Administration formula the Federal Government provided all of the first $50, half the next $15, and one-fourth the remainder (average Federal payment with a $90 minimum: $57.50). The Committee formula is 90% of the first $65 and one-fourth the remainder (average Federal payment with a $110 minimum: $58.50).

Con: Emphasis on work training programs diverts attention from the real problem—the lack of meaningful employment at an adequate wage in many areas of the country. Training people for non-existent jobs will only crowd an already tight job market. Work training programs in any event depend on adequate child care facilities, obstructed not by lack of Federal money but by State and local inability to develop quality programs.

Need Determination and Disregards

Pro: The new Federal need determination and disregard provisions will save State administrative costs and insure that recipients are treated equally in all jurisdictions. Disregards are necessary to keep costs of the program down and still provide for those in greatest need by providing for the wide variety of personal circumstances in which beneficiaries find themselves.

Con: The need determination and disregard provisions of the bill will prove almost impossible to administer and will require an immense new Federal bureaucracy. Such provisions should be eliminated in favor of an income guarantee for all Americans. Specific inequities in the bill include:

Discrimination against those of college-age receiving room-and-board scholarships, because of a provision for disregard of tuition only.

Incentive for families to spend their limited savings or life-insurance on additional household goods to qualify for benefits.

Unemployment Definition

Both supporters and critics agree that one of the major shortcomings of the bill is its reliance on the current definition of unemployment as working less than 30 hours a week. As long as the working poor are excluded from Federally assisted State supplementary programs, the current definition creates a work disincentive for many working poor. Individuals in States with a level of payment over $2100 can receive additional income (and, in some States, qualify for Medicaid) if they can come close to their present income by working 30 hours a week instead of full-time.

One remedy would be to define unemployment as working 20 hours a week or less, thus making it difficult for a person to earn near his present income and still qualify as unemployed. Alternatively, State supplements could be extended to the working poor, but this proposal would add to Federal and State costs of the bill.

APPENDIX I. HOW TO DETERMINE A FAMILY SUPPLEMENT

The amount of assistance a family could receive under H.R. 16311 will vary depending upon many factors, including the number of persons in the family, the family's income, and the State in which the family resides. To determine the family's total supplement for all but eight states [3] one must first determine the amount of the Federal supplement and then the amount of the State supplement.

Federal supplement

Determining the Federal supplement is a three-step process:

1. Subtract $720 from total family earnings;
2. Divide this amount by two; and
3. Subtract this figure from the basic FAP benefit ($500 for each of the first two plus $300 for each additional family member).

Thus a family of four with total earnings of $2,000 (and no disregardable income [4]) would receive a Federal supplement of $960, as follows:

1. $2000 (earnings) minus $720 equals $1280.
2. $1280 divided by 2 equals $640.
3. $1600 (basic FAP) minus $640 equals $960 Federal supplement.

State supplement [5]

Determining the State supplement is also at three step process: [6]

1. Find the difference between the following amounts: Earnings minus $720; one-third of earnings minus $720 (up to $3,200;
2. Add the family's Federal supplement to this amount;
3. Subtract this figure from the State's current level of payment (determined from table on reverse side).

Thus our family of four with $2,000 in earned income (and no disregards) if it lived in Illinois (level of payment: $3,228) would receive a State supplement of $1,415, as follows:

1. $1,280 minus $427 equals $853.
2. $853 plus $960 (Fed. supplement) equals $1,813.
3. $3,228 (payment level) minus $1,813 equals $1,415, State supplement.

Total supplement

Thus the total supplement for an Illinois family of four earning $2,000 a year would be $2,375, bringing the family's total income to $4,375, as follows:

Earnings	$2,000
Federal supplement	960
State supplement	1,415

APPENDIX II. A WELFARE GLOSSARY

AABD—Aid to the Aged, Blind and Disabled, the new assistance program for the aged, blind, and disabled persons. It combines three separate Federal-State programs for aid to the aged (OAA), aid to the blind (AB), and the aid to the permanent and totally disabled (APTD).

AFDC—Aid to Families with Dependent Children (formerly ADC), the currently operating Federal-State program for assisting families with dependent children.

Breakeven Point—That level of earned income at which the amount of public assistance available a beneficiary is reduced to zero. This point also denotes the coverage of the program.

Determination of Need—Features of a bill that outline eligibility for assistance, such as permissible assets, relative responsibility requirements, and age or disability definitions.

Disregards—Income that need not be counted in determining the benefit level of an individual receiving public assistance.

Earned Income—As used in H.R. 16311, all remuneration for services performed as an employee and net earnings from self-employment.

Minimum—The lowest amount of total income, set by law, that an individual on public assistance must receive. The minimum is therefore the combination of assistance payments and other income which is not disregarded.

Unearned Income—As used in H.R. 16311, all income that is not earned, including annuities, pensions, social security, workmen's compensation, unemployment benefits, railroad retirement, disability insurance, prizes, life insurance proceeds, gifts, rents, dividends, interest, royalties, alimony payments, and inheritances.

Work Discincentives—Provisions that reward an individual with additional benefits or do not significantly reduce benefits if he works less or quits his job altogether.

Work Incentives—Provisions for allowing an individual to retain that percentage of his earned income that, when combined with his benefit, will produce sufficient additional income to encourage the beneficiary to work.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. RUTH).

(Mr. RUTH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RUTH. Mr. Chairman, for several weeks I have been telling my constituents that I would like to hear the debate before making up my mind on this issue,

[3] Because they currently pay less than the basic FAP benefit, the Federal supplement would be the total benefit in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, South Carolina, Tennessee.

[4] Such dollar-for-dollar disregardable income would include training allowances, earnings of a child in school, the value of food stamps, and irregular or infrequent amounts up to $30 a quarter for each type.

[5] In order to be eligible for any state supplement, our sample family would have to earn $2,000 with no member working over 30 hours a week if the family lived in a State with no program for the working poor.

[6] An additional provision, applicable to families with an income past the FAP breakeven point ($3,920) but still eligible for state supplements, provides for exclusion of one-fifth of remaining income.

[7] Provided our family did not live in one of the few States that impose a maximum, if the maximum were below this amount.

and there are several points that I would like to mention.

First, for a bill of this magnitude I am disappointed that the proponents are not talking about the merits of the bill to the extent that they are saying: It is better than what we have.

Second, if a pilot program has been conducted in two States for about a year, it seems we should either have more definite evidence or wait until we have more evidence as to its effectiveness.

Third, it seems if this were a business enterprise the chairman would be saying "We have a failure on our hands. We are going to change a few formulas, include more people, refinance it, and try it some more".

Fourth, I hate to see the campaigns of the future become based on the amount of the guaranteed income promised by the candidates.

Fifth, I hope we do not vote for work incentives which turn out to be just the opposite. We should be less concerned with what we hope this bill would do, and more concerned with what the bill will actually do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the Members that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BYRNES) has 24 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS) has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND).

(Mr. CLEVELAND asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, I have taken this time to inquire further from the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Wisconsin concerning details of this bill. One of the questions I would like to ask of the gentleman from Arkansas, who is on the floor, is that I am concerned about the rural poor. The President stated in his state of the Union message that we probably should do what we can to redress the outmigration problem caused by people leaving the rural areas and piling up in the cities where they often create so many problems.

So, addressing ourselves to the provisions of this bill as they pertain to working poor families, I know that at least in my State some of the unemployment compensation offices are scattered. I wondered if the committee has studied the problem of how somebody would go, say, 40 or 50 or 60 miles to register for the provisions of this legislation.

Then another question comes up. If, after he has registered and under the provisions of this act he is going to be required to take training, if he comes from a small rural town, is it going to be possible to set up a training program in that small town?

I wonder if the chairman would respond to those questions?

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman will yield, yes, I have the same degree of concern, I might say, that the gentleman has in this very problem. Like the gentleman, I have a lot of these areas that are small communities in my district. I would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there are these employment services or security offices scattered all over with at least one in the counties. That is the case in my own State.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Yes, but we have some pretty large counties.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that. There would be no payment to an individual from any agency of the Government, unless the welfare department of the State would do it, to provide the transportation into the office to register. He would have to do that.

But if he is assigned to a training program, then it is possible for the employment security office to make available to him the cost of transportation to and from his training, if that is necessary, to make it possible for him to take a course in training.

This is not necessarily a matter of training 50 people at the same time, you understand, which might be training in automotive mechanics or something like that. This is directed more toward individualized training.

Mr. CLEVELAND. However, the fact is that some of these training programs could not possibly be set up in the rural areas and that they would have to travel?

Mr. MILLS. In my own area, I can envision a situation where three counties might be included for the purposes of one training center. But the employment security office would have to make available to the individual such transportation as necessary to enable him to carry out their instructions to attend a course of training. They would have to do that.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I would comment simply by saying that I do not think this can be considered as encouraging people to stay in the rural areas. I think it is, if anything, going to give an incentive to move into or toward urban areas where they can travel a short distance to apply and travel a short distance to their training program, and where inevitably the recommended job will be located.

Mr. MILLS. I have just the opposite view on it because I know in my area the tendency now is for many of our people who have been on the farms all their life, when adversity comes along and they find they are not making the living on the farm that they want to, to go to the city. I think that here we have some degree of opportunity to train these people in the rural areas for employment. It may be in a town where they get that employment or within the city. But they could take their training while they are at home, and at least they do not have to go into the city to get that.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I have another question that I would like to ask, if the chairman would be so kind.

Is there any provision in this bill which deals with the question as to whether people who register under the provisions of this act—whether their names will be made public under our public information laws?

Mr. MILLS. There is a special regulation within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare dealing with these matters prohibiting, say, a newspaper from going to an office and getting a full list of these names. The names of these people will be made available to prospective employers; that is, to people who have a right to know who they are.

Mr. CLEVELAND. To a certain extent, they will be published?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; to that extent.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that there is no more time to explore a number of other questions which I have about this program, and which I have not heard satisfactorily answered in this debate.

A significant point is that the proposed bill will more than double the number of persons who will be registered at the State employment security offices. Though Congress may get around to increasing the appropriation to provide for this, I personally tend to doubt it. Will we be prepared for the deluge of applicants which will descend upon the employment security offices?

A second aspect of this bill which I question is that social security recipients who qualify for family assistance payments will have to register with employment security for a job, and will have their FAP reduced by the amount of their social security payments. Yet if these same people want to help themselves instead of relying on the dole, they run into a $1,680 earnings limit. They are discouraged from working, and encouraged to subsist on their Government check. Is this not a basic contradiction?

The whole area of cost estimates for this proposal deserves thorough questioning. The data on which the cost guesses are made are based on a 1966–67 study which was updated to 1968, and now projected to 1971 and beyond. This is quite unrealistic.

Hard figures on which we will be able to base our estimates will soon be available, in the form of that long 1970 census which we all filled out recently. It is tragic to have to misuse bad statistics when good ones will soon be available.

Given our experience with medicare and medicaid, where the actual cost has far outrun earlier predictions, should we not be candid and admit that the actual cost will be much higher? I might add that it is interesting that some of the same people who are outraged by military cost overruns are now willing to accept low estimates of the cost of the family assistance plan in order to promote acceptance.

I also question very seriously estimates of proponents that the FAP, which will double the number of people on the rolls, will by 1975 be costing only a little more than existing programs would if we did not change them. In order to determine the anticipated cost of existing programs, if unchanged, it is assumed that both caseload and costs will continue to increase at the same rate as over the past 3 years. AFDC benefit schedules are adjusted upward yearly to compensate for cost of living increases, and the projected costs assume that this would continue. But, the estimates for the family assistance plan assume that until 1975 there will be no increase in the $1,600 level of benefits.

Can we honestly say that we are not going to give periodic increases to compensate for inflation, just as we do in all other programs? Yet if we do, the FAP will be much more expensive than even the existing program.

Not only are the cost projections suspect, but the Legislative Reference Service tells me that there is reason to believe that the recent rapid growth in the caseload of AFDC is leveling out. Yet the figures cited project that the rate of increase will be the same as that of the last three years. This too should be clarified.

Mr. Speaker, by no means am I opposed to giving to those truly in need and my record amply proves that. However, I raise these questions because I doubt whether the proposed reforms are any better than the existing situation which apparently we all deplore. About the only thing that is certain about the family assistance plan is that it will immediaely add at least 10 to 15 million people to the welfare rolls.

About the lowest estimate of its cost put forth is approximately $5 billion. For this same amount, we could adopt the Prouty proposals to give all social security recipients adequate retirement income—$1,800 for one person, $2,400 for two people—as well as eliminate the antiincentive earnings limit on social security for all people over 65. This certainly seems a better place to put our dollars, if we want to put them where they would do some real good at no additional administrative cost.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. Boggs) 5 minutes.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, we are coming to the end of this debate which, in my judgment, has been a most significant and enlightening one in attempting to show to the Members of the House the pressing need for welfare reform in our country.

As all of you know, this bill came to the floor after many weeks of intensive hearings and after many weeks of executive sessions in the Committee on Ways and Means, with only three of the 25 members on the committee against it.

I venture to say that more than a majority of the members on the Committee on Ways and Means at the beginning of the hearings approached the proposals with considerable misgivings. But after examining alternatives, and after looking hard, carefully, and critically at the existing welfare programs and how they have worked over the past 30 years—after that very intensive study and very intensive debate, the committee came, as I said, almost to a unanimous conclusion that this was the proper and right thing to do.

There is almost universal agreement among those concerned with our present welfare system that that system, particularly with respect to the program for needy families with children, has failed. This bill is being proposed to remedy this situation by an approach that recognizes that we can no longer attempt to patch up what is basically an unsound structure.

The present AFDC program is characterized by incentives to family breakup and by the inequitable exclusion from assistance of poor families in which the father is employed. The time has come to replace this program with an entirely new program—the family assistance plan. Under this plan, for the first time, on a nationwide basis, families with unemployed fathers would be able to receive benefits; at present, AFDC benefits are available to such families in some States but not in others. Also, working poor families would be provided assistance, for the first time, on a nationwide basis.

It is time we recognized that it is bad social policy to have families in like situations treated differently because of the employment status of the family head—a policy that has all too often made it more attractive to go on welfare than to go to work. The exclusion of families in which the father is working has acted as an incentive for fathers to become unemployed or leave home in order to qualify their families for assistance. H.R. 16311 would do much to correct these inequities.

Another inequity to which this bill addresses itself, and in my opinion successfully, is the wide variation in payment levels and conditions of eligibility among the present State programs. Under this bill, all dependent families with children in America, regardless of where they live, would be assured of a Federal minimum standard of income—$1,600 for a family of four—based upon uniform eligibility standards. Moreover, families will be able to keep a fair share of their earnings. The first $720 of earnings a year will be completely disregarded, and above this amount, benefits will be reduced by only $1 for every $2 of earnings. This treatment of earned income would provide a strong incentive both to take employment and to increase one's earnings. A family with a working member will always be better off than a family without a working member. This provision gives recognition in the case of the welfare recipient of a fact of life so fundamental and so obvious that the rest of us have always taken it for granted—simply that if a person would be better off working than not working, he will work. To illustrate the effect of this provision, it would be possible, for a family of four to receive some benefits under the program until its income reached $3,920. As the family's income increases over the basic $720 of exempted income, its benefit payment would, of course, be reduced.

In addition to the obvious advantage to the recipient of uniform eligibility standards is the fact that such standards allow for uniform administrative mechanisms, so that we could take advantage of the economies of scale that are possible with an automated and nationally administered system.

Another important reform provided under the bill is the requirement that every able-bodied adult member of a family—except mothers who have preschool-age children or others specifically exempted such as those with a disabled family member to care for—register for work or training. There is no other single provision in this bill that is more fundamental to the success of our efforts to transform welfare into workfare than these provisions for work and training.

Another important change this bill would make in the present welfare system relates to the programs which provide aid to our citizens who are in financial need due to old age or due to blindness or other crippling disabilities. It is important that we not allow the urgent need to reform the program of aid to families with dependent children to overshadow our concern for and commitment to our older citizens. I have been greatly concerned about the inadequacy and unevennness of assistance payments now being made to recipients of aid under the adult categories.

I am pleased that this bill would take constructive and very much needed steps to revise and improve the substance and operation of these adult programs. In particular, the bill would require that States assure that each aged, blind, and disabled adult will receive assistance sufficient to bring his total income up to at least $110 a month. This measure should be of great help to our older needy citizens who are finding it increasingly difficult under the inflationary conditions that prevail today to live on their present fixed inadequate incomes.

I am also glad to see that the bill would provide more uniform requirements under the adult programs for such eligibility factors as the level and type of resources allowed and the degree of disability and blindness required to qualify for assistance. In addition, the bill would liberalize the earnings exemptions under these programs. The earnings exemption for recipients of old-age assistance, which is optional with the States, would be made consistent with that under the family assistance program—the first $60 a month plus one-half of the remainder. The exemption for the severely disabled would be made consistent with that which has been in effect for some years for the blind—a mandatory exemption of the first $85 a month plus one-half of the remainder. I believe this latter provision should go a long way toward providing real encouragement to the severely disabled to accept rehabilitation services and employment within their capacities.

I am also pleased that under this bill, the Federal Government will make a strong contribution toward relieving the financial burden of the States. In order to assist the States in making supplementary payments, the bill provides that the Federal Government would pay 30 percent of a State's supplementary payment costs up to the poverty level. This represents an important improvement over the original proposal under which States were assured a savings of 10 to 50 percent of their costs in the federally assisted public assistance programs.

The inclusion of the new provision under which the Federal Government will pay 30 percent of a State's supplementary payment costs should go a long way toward providing relief for the financially overburdened States and in a way which would, in general, help States which have been making greater fiscal effort in their welfare programs to achieve more savings than they would have under the original proposal. Moreover, the provisions of the reported bill provide additional financial assistance to States that increase their supplementary payment levels up to the poverty index level, whereas the original version of the administration bill would have acted as a disincentive upon the States to keep their payments in line with increased living costs.

In voting for this bill we are recognizing that the vast majority of Americans do not want to be on welfare. They want to have the opportunity to earn decent livelihoods without the constant knock on the door by the social worker, the person who checks on them and makes their lives miserable, degrading, and embarrassing. In addition, the administration of the present program by the States is frightfully expensive.

This bill does not come here only with the recommendation of the members of the Ways and Means Committee. It comes here with the active support of the President and his Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. It has been suggested and supported by important segments of both political parties, both the Democrats and Republicans. It has today the active support of the business community. It has only recently been thoroughly examined by a most representative Presidential commission, which gave its full and entire approval to the proposals of the committee.

Obviously, Mr. Chairman, the bill is not the answer to all our problems, but it is certainly a step in the right direction. It is a step that states that we shall rely upon the ability of men and women to earn their own way. In this society where the gross national product approaches a trillion dollars, the idea that we will have continuing poverty is one that our Nation quite properly rejects.

This bill is a step in that direction. I congratulate the members of my committee for the tremendous amount of time and effort which they have given to the bill. It comes here not alone but as part of a reform package of many parts. We are now conducting intensive hearings into social security generally and into medicare and medicaid. Hopefully, by the end of this session, we shall have legislated constructively in the field of welfare, in field of family assistance, in the reform and extension and modernization of social security, and a similar reform and modification of medicare and medicaid. It is part of an overall package designed to realistically approach these problems of welfare and social security, and I hope that the committee will be sustained by a substantial majority of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

(Mr. CONABLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, and my colleagues, one thing that we have proven in the past 2 days of debate has been that Alexander Pope knew what he was talking about when he said in one of his famous couplets:

All looks yellow to the jaundiced eye.

I do not blame my colleagues for being a little jaundiced about this whole subject of welfare. It has been a very visible part of our social structure. It has been subject to a great deal of criticism because it has not been working. We are not so much trapped in a semantic sense as embarrassed by the emotional surcharge that the word has acquired over the years of misdirection of our welfare program.

And when we hear, as our leaders have explained that we are adding several million people to the welfare rolls, that means something to us that frightens us instinctively, because when we think of the welfare rolls we think of people who are not working but who are participating in the largess of the taxpayers, the productive elements of our society.

When we talk about adding people to the welfare rolls in this bill, we are not describing welfare in the traditional sense. Of the millions that are added, many are going to be added only in a peripheral sense. They are going to be people who will receive only a modest amount. They are people who are already working and who are ineligible for welfare now, because they are working. In short, under the bill they are going to be receiving supplements, not traditional welfare.

This is the only way in fact that we can design a bill that will make it worthwhile for people to work. I do not know about my colleagues, but I will tell Members that one of the toughest letters I have to answer is the letter which comes from a man who says that he works very hard, he has been working all his lifetime, and he has never been able to participate in the affluence of America. The fellow across the street from him, his wife and children are on welfare, and he is making more money than the man who works. Therefore, he asks, why should he continue to work when it is costing him money.

We have talked a great deal about incentives, and those who have been viewing this bill with a jaundiced eye have said the incentive program built into this bill is not going to work. In fact, they say we are just adding millions to the welfare rolls and increasing dependency rather than reducing it.

Mr. Chairman, this country has paid more than lipservice to the incentive system for 300 years. The incentive system has served this country well, although only 90 percent of our populace has been participating in an incentive system. The bottom 10 percent has had a disincentive to work. In fact, they have been criticized by members of their own families on occasion for refusing to go on welfare, because it was economically advantageous for them to do so.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONABLE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I was a little curious about this incentive, and I am sincere about it. If a man, say, with two children is eligible for a supplement under this bill, and across the street there is a man with 10 children, and he is also eligible, will the man with 10 children—as I understand it, he will—receive more supplements than the fellow with two?

Mr. CONABLE. That is correct.

Mr. HAYS. Then the question arises in my mind, is this an incentive to work or an incentive to have more children?

Mr. CONABLE. Let me say I do not think many people would consider $300 a year adequate incentive to generate another hungry mouth to feed. I question whether the generation of children is usually a matter of economic incentive. We have to deal with the families as they are, and nobody would want to give any family the incentive to dispose of children.

Mr. HAYS. I understand that, but there are people—for instance, there is a fellow in my hometown who has been on welfare all his life, and he has had 11 children and raised all of them on welfare, and they are raising their children on welfare. They are exactly the type, if they can get $300 for more children, who would have more if they could. There are no racial overtones in this, because the fellow happens to be a Caucasian.

Mr. CONABLE. The gentleman from Ohio is falling into the very same trap I have been talking about. He is talking about the welfare system as it is now, and that has, in fact, put many people in the situation where the only way they could improve their economic circumstances was to have more children. The fact is that this bill provides a new work incentive instead of a children-producing incentive in the sense the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. HAYS. I hope it does, but it seems to me that it provides both.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONABLE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call to the attention of my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), the fact that in this bill there is more incentive to work, bearing in mind that the person who was mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio will not continue on this program to get one penny for himself until he goes to the employment office and registers for work and/or training. He must do that before he can even get one cent.

Mr. HAYS. He will have a doctor's certificate to say that he is not able to work.

Mr. MILLS. Then he is not able to work.

Mr. HAYS. He is able, but he will get a certificate from his doctor stating he is not able.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman will yield further, the local office of the agency in the gentleman's hometown where the person applies for benefits or is referred for training and work will have their own doctors and they can examine that gentleman.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, the critics of this plan have attacked.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONABLE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to assure my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, that when he pointed out the case of the man the gentleman knew in his hometown, whom he knew all his life, and who was raising his kids, the gentleman suspected, to stay on welfare, when I started to rise it was not because I suspected that constituent to be of one particular race or the other.

I want to assure the gentleman of that. I am glad he explained who this person was.

I have some disagreement, not on the question of the ethnic background of that one single person mentioned. I am sorry he is in the gentleman's town and is a constituent.

I was questioning the premise of whether or not we are going to let one person like that stop this kind of a program. I believe there are probably some people like that in every Member's district, but I am not prepared at this time to say that this very minimal bill should not go through.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONABLE. I yield very briefly to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. I can say to the gentleman, this is not the only case like that I know of. I could cite many of them. I cited this one because it is an extreme case and because I know it better than others.

Mr. CONABLE. I hope the gentleman will give the incentive system an opportunity to work by acknowledging the obvious economic advantage this bill gives to those who go to work or continue to work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to address myself briefly to the issue of the suitability of the job offered the welfare recipient.

The point that must be made and cannot be made frequently enough is that the suitability is not going to be determined by the recipient himself or by a traditionally minded welfare worker. The issue of suitability is going to be determined by the Labor Department.

Frankly, we have to be tough on this issue because of the very type of welfare recipient the gentleman from Ohio was referring to. I believe the American people, the American taxpayers, except no less.

On this issue of suitability, it has been within our intent to limit it to the determination of the Labor Department from the word "go."

I realize there is a good deal of misgiving about this, and I hope it can be cleared up not only through our discussion of legislative intent but also in other ways.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields back 1 minute.

The Chair will advise that the gentleman from Wisconsin has 10 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Arkansas has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the minute yielded back be yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin. I consumed at least 1 minute of the gentleman's time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do that by unanimous consent.

The time remaining is 11 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin and 14 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman whether he has any other speakers, other than possibly himself?

Mr. MILLS. That is all.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COLLIER).

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COLLIER) for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from New York.

(Mr. ROBISON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, in the months of debate and discussion which have preceded our formal consideration of the administration's family assistance plan, I have been impressed with the overwhelming fact that no one seems prepared to defend our present system of welfare. Good men may argue about the advisability of the new program before us, but everyone seems to agree that the system we have developed, in patchquilt form, over the past 35 years is not fulfilling its purpose or achieving its stated objectives. The difficulties with the past program—both conceptual and logistical—are well known to all of us, and need not be detailed again. But, in retrospect, I am surprised at how long we have tolerated a social services system which actually encourages men to leave their families—so that their children, legitimate or not, would be eligible for increased welfare assistance. I am surprised that we have accepted, as a fact of our federal system, the wide diversity among States in the amounts given to families—who, after all, are as destitute in one State as in another. I am surprised that we have been so complacent about a system which provided such an incomplete incentive to work. I am surprised that we have not before seen the overriding need for widespread availability of day-care centers and training programs to be directly coordinated with any national program of assistance.

And it is with this backdrop, and with this appreciation of our basic problems with what has evolved in the past, that I am especially hopeful about the family assistance plan which we now consider. As a Republican who holds the belief that his party can well be the vehicle for peaceful and orderly progress, I am proud of President Nixon's leadership in providing what he has rightly called, "an income strategy to deal with our most pressing domestic problem."

This "strategy" is carried out under the family assistance plan in several ways. The working poor with children are incorporated into the social services system by having their earnings supplemented if their income is below the poverty level, so as to guarantee that they will always be making more money by working than they would by staying home. All adult recipients, who are not disabled, are required to register for work or job opportunity training, unless the individual is a mother of a child 6 years or younger. A Federal floor is established which will serve to narrow the gap among the various States in welfare payments. In addition, these specific components of the program are coordinated with a greater emphasis on providing day-care centers in the proximity of the affected families and on providing training opportunities for those without the skills necessary to procure dignified and worthwhile employment.

By a combination of these provisions, and together with food-stamp assistance, the early effect of this plan will be to lift some 7,000,000 low-income people above the official poverty level of $3,400 yearly for a family of four.

But it is not my purpose to scrutinize the details of the program itself. Instead, I wish to comment briefly on the manner in which this piece of legislation was developed and presented, because I believe that we can all learn something from it. This is one of the most fundamental and significant domestic reforms which has been considered in my 13 years in the Congress. Yet we do not herald in this program with slogans which go far beyond this one bill's promise; we do not guarantee to the American people that this bill alone will still the turmoil in this Nation; we do not insure that poverty will hereafter disappear or that the program will meet everyone's need in every way. Rather, from the President on down, effective action has been quietly taken without the unnecessary bravado which, in the past, has so often come back to haunt us.

The President often has been criticized for not being sensitive to the needs of the ghetto dwellers, the rural poor, the blacks, the Chicanos, the Indians, and so forth. And, in truth, he has not made some of the ringing, sweeping statements popularized by some of our recent Presidents. But here in this bill, as is the case in such areas as revenue-sharing, educational loans, executive reorganization, and reordering of budgetary priorities, Mr. Nixon has said less but done more than his detractors seem to want to admit.

The word "meaningful" has become milked dry by so many people for so many purposes that I hesitate to use it at all anymore. But if the word continues to have any vitality at all, it does so in describing legislation such as this, for the Family Assistance Act of 1970 is truly meaningful—as an indication of this administration's concern for the disenfranchised of our society; as a reform of the outdated, inequitable, chaotic welfare system we currently tolerate; and as a method by which we can better serve, and train, and educate families in need. This is a responsible and responsive piece of innovative legislation. I salute the President for initiating it, and I salute the leaders of both parties here in the House for their expeditious and careful study of it. The adoption of this measure, coming as it does so early in 1970, might well portend this shall be the decade of hope and real accomplishment; as contrasted to the 1960's, which became, sorrowfully enough, the decade of disillusionment and unfulfilled promises.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, all throughout the debate and discussion of this bill for the past 2 days it has become apparent that many Members of this House would firmly support the bill, believe in the fundamental concept and principle it embraces, but understandably have some reservation about the use of the word "suitable" in determining acceptance of employment by the welfare applicant.

They indeed have some reservation—and again understandably so—about the definition, which they contend is ambiguous and perhaps might be a loophole in terms of making the program work in accordance with the intent of the committee and the legislation itself.

Therefore, I intend at the proper time to offer a recommittal motion. I shall do so as a firm supporter of welfare reform legislation. The motion in sum and substance would remove the word "suitable" as a part of the language of the bill, as well as the definition. In order to do this we would strike section 448(b)(1) of the present bill but would make certain that the labor standards as they appear in section 448(B)(2) would be preserved.

I trust in offering this recommittal motion that this will eliminate what I think is the prime objection of many Members of the House who otherwise will support this bill.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. That sounds to me a good deal like gimmickry. Why not a motion to recommit striking out the guaranteed annual income?

Mr. COLLIER. I cannot be responsible for what the gentleman from Iowa construes this amendment to be. If he thinks it is gimmickry, the fact is that he is wrong.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I appreciate the gentleman's graciousness in yielding to me. I do so for the purpose of asking the question that now that those in charge of this legislation have denied the Committee of the Wole here any right to amend the bill is it the purpose of the minority to insure that there cannot be a vote on this particular matter with this minor amendment here which would not give us a clear vote on that issue?

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman from Mississippi has been in this House much longer than I have been. He is a distinguished legislator and parliamentarian. He knows full well that this procedure is entirely in order and is certainly in keeping with what I construe to be the proper and normal process of dealing with legislation in this body.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Of course, this is done under the rule. The rule provides that one motion to recommit shall be in order, and it is generally conceded in the normal concept that a motion to recommit will be with instructions. There is no variation here at all.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. I may say the gentleman stated when he began that he is a firm supporter of the bill, but he will offer a motion to recommit. Does that come in the rules?

Mr. COLLIER. It will make me a much firmer supporter with the motion to recommit adopted.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Yes. In reply to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Illinois himself, yes, it is in order, but it is the purpose of this minimum amendment—and I do not want to use the word "gimmick"—to be a way of preventing an outright vote on the matter.

Mr. COLLIER. I would have to disagree. On the other hand, I would construe it to be a method to provide the means by which Members who want to support this and who believe in the concept and principle can do so by a clarification of the provision of the bill which has caused them difficulty.

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may use to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS).

(Mr. CONYERS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time because we believe our task is larger. Over the course of this debate no one has quarreled with the fact that the present system of welfare payments needs revision. We now will consider changes in that system when we vote on House Resolution 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970. This bill, embodying President Nixon's welfare reform package, is purported to be a progressive and drastically different approach to meeting the crisis of poverty in America. We appreciate the significance of the proposal and the progress that would be made in reforming the present welfare system. However, if we vote for this measure it will be while fully recognizing that it falls far short of what is needed.

The basic annual Federal allowance proposed for a family of four is grossly inadequate. This Federal payment will raise assistance levels in only eight States. Of all those who would receive payments under the plan, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare reports that the incomes of only 301,000 families would be effectively raised above the poverty level. Is this really fighting poverty? Furthermore, nowhere in the Family Assistance Act is there a provision that would even raise gradually the payment levels to the poverty level, much less to a minimum adequate level.

We believe our commitment must be larger and more immediate. As a necessary first step we advocate that Congress set an adequate level of income for every American as a goal to be attained in the near future. Only in this way can the Government have a standard by which to realistically measure the problem and our progress toward its resolution. An adequate living income is required to guarantee the basic right of every human being—the right to life—a necessary precondition to all other constitutional, civil, and human rights. A major shortcoming of the President's categorical assistance plan is that it departs little from the social theories behind present welfare programs. We believe, on the other hand, that the Government of the richest nation on earth must insure a living income for every American as a basic right. Only such a restructuring of the basic premises of public assistance will yield a program that will meet the real needs of the poor and achieve the goals desired by Congress.

We do not believe that mandatory training and work requirements are the way to develop self-supporting independence in assistance recipients. To break the cycle of poverty, we must not only encourage meaningful employment but foster human dignity as well. The Family Assistance Act, which substitutes coercion in place of work incentives, will inevitably prove counter-productive. We believe mothers should be free to decide for themselves whether or not to leave their children and take a job or enter job training. Even so, to require job training that will lead to meaningful employment is one thing, but if there is no job guarantee at the end of the line it is another cruel hoax designed to placate critics of payments to the poor. Although House Resolution 16311 has been called a viable "workfare" plan, there has been no program for full employment instituted or even envisioned by the Federal Government. We believe the Government should supplement its public assistance programs with public service employment.

The immense and tragic proportions of poverty in America necessitates that we in Congress recognize the problem in its full dimension. We believe that our efforts now must be greater, our will more manifest, if ever we are to conquer it. The challenge we must accept is providing the strength and direction to create for each American adequate conditions in which to live and develop and so to become a fully contributing member of our society. The Family Assistance Act of 1970 does not meet this challenge.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I have only one further speaker on this side.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this is my final speaker. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. GERALD R. FORD).

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the gentleman from Wisconsin he has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I will give him all 6 at one time.

(Mr. GERALD R. FORD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I spoke at length yesterday and I am very grateful for the consideration given to me on that occasion by the Members of the House. I do not intend to take comparable time on this occasion.

However, let me say that I feel it my obligation to indicate my full support for this legislation. I honestly believe that the House has a unique opportunity today to make a major and long-overdue reform in our welfare system.

Seldom, in my 21 years in the House have I seen an atmosphere exist where you could find the high degree of unanimity from those on the left of the political spectrum and those on the right of the political spectrum who all agree on the need for change which means in this case that the existing welfare system needs to be totally abandoned.

I have yet to find a person in this body or a person in any one of the many places where I have spoken who defends the existing welfare system, not one person to my knowledge has risen to speak up on behalf of the present welfare program.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I pride myself in agreeing with what the gentleman from Michigan is now saying. I know there are problems with the present system. The bill before us today may not be perfect, but an overwhelming number of those members who serve on the committee that has had the responsibility for this matter have reported it out and have recommended it to the House as being better than the existing system.

Mr. Chairman, I associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished minority leader is making at this time.

Mr. GERALD R. FORD. I appreciate the observation and endorsement stated by the gentleman from Oklahoma, the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, we in this Congress today have a unique opportunity. We have near unanimity. Those on the extreme on the left and those on the extreme on the right all agree that we cannot defend the existing system. The existing system has been in existence for several decades, probably three, but it has been developed by patchwork. The net result has been that our everlasting tinkering has brought us a colossus that has to be scratched and when you scratch something, you have to begin with a totally new program. That was the condition faced by the new President when he took office 15 months ago. As a consequence, the President has recommended to the Congress a brand new approach to the problem of welfare.

I was honored, among many, to introduce that bill. I think that legislation is sound and constructive. It will open new paths to better solutions to the problems we want to solve.

I am delighted that the distinguished chairman of this committee has seen fit to recommend wholeheartedly this legislation.

I have talked to the President of the United States on a number of occasions about this legislation. As a matter of fact, I talked to him today about it. The President of the United States urged me to urge all of you as Republicans, particularly, to vote for this legislation. I hope that we can have on our side an overwhelming vote on behalf of the legislation.

I think it is unique that there is such strong bipartisan support for this far-reaching legislation. All of us can take credit for opening new doors to the solution of the difficult problem of welfare in America.

I simply want to state, Mr. Chairman, that if we pass this bill with the motion to recommit, I think the legislation will probably represent one of the finest legislative proposals that has come to the floor of the House during my term of service. It is my further opinion that we can all take credit for trying to solve the problem for the future which has been unsolvable up to date.

I urge as strongly as I can that all Members support the motion to recommit. It improves the legislation. And when that motion to recommit is approved, as I hope it will be, I trust that on our side of the aisle we will do everything we can, by our individual vote, to support the basic legislation recommended by the President so that we can do the kind of a job that is needed and necessary for the problem of welfare in America.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express disappointment in the Family Assistance Act of 1970, because it falls so far short of meeting the true needs of the people.

We have waited a long time for meaningful change in our welfare system, and it is a delusion to think that the President's welfare package even comes close to meeting the problem.

At a time when billions are being spent in our military budget, in heavy subsidies to special interest groups, when the President is asking for more money for a supersonic transport, I am appalled at the scant heed paid to the realistic needs of the poor. We do have the resources to meet the social challenges in this country; it is tragic to realize that our priorities are so misplaced.

As this bill comes to us under a closed rule, permitting no amendments, those of us who have serious reservations about the bill—and yet do not want to totally reject its limited structural improvements—simply must take this opportunity to speak out.

I have therefore endorsed the statements of my colleagues, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), and the gentleman from California (Mr. BURTON) who have also asked for a larger commitment to meet this challenge, and I would ask that my colleagues here and in the Senate seriously consider the recommendations of the National Welfare Rights Organization, and those of the Committee for Economic Development, and work toward a bill that will be a more realistic response to the problem, and that will offer true reform to the people commensurate with their dignity and self-determination.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to mention some of the recommendations of the National Welfare Rights Organization which merit our consideration:

The concept of guaranteed income based on "need." They have requested a "floor" of $5,500 a year, which is the figure determined by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics as the amount really needed for a family of four "just to get by." And with this, provisions for an automatic cost-of-living increase.

The request that jobs should be guaranteed first, so that job training will lead to meaningful employment and that public assistance programs be supplemented with public service employment.

The suggestion of an "emergency fund" for special needs, and a "startup" grant for those just being enrolled.

Further recommendations of the Committee for Economic Development, the research policy arm of the Urban Action Council, headed by former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare John Gardner endorse these principles and also recommend:

A phased takeover of State and local welfare costs during the next 5 years by the Federal Government.

The inclusion of the poor working single person and working childless couple who are not covered in this legislation.

A Federal program to assist in the construction of day care centers and to support fully the programs of day care centers enabling more mothers to work.

Mr. Chairman, because the bill does not touch on these provisions is why I say the Nixon package is a delusion and a disappointment. The only reason to support it is to create a vehicle to which true reform can be attached.

I include at this point in the RECORD for the urgent consideration of my colleagues a summary of the proposals of the National Welfare Rights Organization. These are proposals which this Congress should enact:

NATIONAL WELFARE RIGHTS ORGANIZATION PROPOSALS FOR AN ADEQUATE INCOME

The National Welfare Rights Organization is a nationwide grassroots organization of welfare recipients and other poor people. It has 350 affiliates in 48 states and more than 150 cities. NWRO is launching a nationwide campaign for an adequate income for every American citizen. NWRO is challenging the country to change its priorities from an emphasis on death and destruction to an emphasis on life and peace. We believe that every man, woman, and child has the right to live. We call upon our country to begin subsidizing life!

We believe a minimum adequate income for a family of four is $5500. This figure is derived from data collected in surveys conducted by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U.S. Department of Labor, which show how much families of four actually spend to live at a lower standard. We call upon the Federal Government to guarantee every American this minimum income.

Our plan includes the following features:

The income should be automatically adjusted for variations in size of family, costs of living in various parts of the country, and changes in cost-of-living and median family income as they occur.

Eligibility should be based solely on need, and should be based on a person's declaration of what his needs are, with spot checks as is done under our income tax system.

The system should provide a work incentive by permitting recipients to keep ⅓ of their earnings.

Recipients should be entitled to a fair hearing prior to the termination or reduction of benefits. The hearing should take place within fifteen (15) days of the application for appeal. Special grants should be provided for recipients to obtain lawyers or other advocates.

The regulations pertaining to rights and entitlements under this system should be public information. Simplified versions should be distributed to every receipient and potential recipient.

Persons eligible for these benefits should be entitled to free medical care, legal services, and day care facilities of a high quality in the neighborhoods where they live.

Other services to the recipients should be on a completely voluntary basis, administered by agencies separate from those administering the guaranteed income payments. Example of these are: family planning, homemaker services, family counseling, child welfare, etc.

Special grants should be available to take care of all emergency or unusual situations. These would include grants for clothing and furniture to bring the recipient's household up to minimum standards of health and decency at the time they come under the program. Replacement costs would be provided in case of fire, flood, or substantial change in circumstance.

A recipient should have the right to choose between a flat grant or an itemized assessment of his needs, taking into account actual cost of housing, transportation, clothing, and other special requirements he might have. This would be similar to the income tax system where an individual may either itemize his deductions or take a standard deduction, depending on which method of benefits suits him more.

TABLE I.—NWRO PROPOSED ADEQUATE INCOME DETAILED BUDGET FOR FAMILY OF FOUR

Category	Cost per— Year	Month	Week
FOOD
This allowance is a total of the BLS moderate budget cost for food-at-home ($1,999/yr., $166/mo., $38/wk.) and the BLS lower standard for food-away from home ($238/yr., $18 mo., $5/wk.) The latter includes stacks, school lunches, etc.	$2,237	$186	$43
HOUSING
These costs represent the BLS lower standard's costs, updated to spring 1969 levels. They are meant to cover all supplies and furnishings for the home and its operations including telephone and postage. Rental costs ($1,108 yr., $92/mo.) include all items like gas, elec., and water.	1,402	117	27
CLOTHING AND PERSONAL CARE
The items in this budget, shampoo and yard goods as well as clothing and clothing care are unchanged from the BLS lower standard. The cost has simply been updated to spring 1969 levels.	$784	$65	$15
MEDICAL CARE
Dental, eye care, and nonprescription drugs are included here. BLS consideration of doctor and hospital care has been omitted, as explained in the text. There is no provision for appliances and supplies.	312	26	6
Transportation. Includes schoolbus rides and all other use of public transportation by noncar owners.	484	40	9
Other. Reading, recreation, and education comprise about ½ of this category. There is no provision, according to the BLS study for club membership dues, hobby expenses or the acquisition of musical instruments.	322	27	6
Total	5,541	462	106

WHERE THE BUDGET COMES FROM

Table 1 outlines the adequate income proposal. It is based on the Bureau of Labor Statistics "Lower Living Standard Budget". This is the Labor Department's "lower standard for the maintenance of health and social well being, the nurture of children and participation in community activities."

We reject the income level in the Nixon Family Assistance Plan. At worst it allows a family of four $1600 a year. At best it would continue the present inadequate welfare system. The ceiling of benefits would be at the Poverty Line, now $3720 a year for a family of four.

The poverty line is based on the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Economy Food Plan which, according to the Agriculture Department, "is not a reasonable measure of basic money needs for a good diet." USDA points out that "the public assistance agency that recognizes the limitations of its clientele and is interested in their nutritional well-being will recommend a money allowance for food considerably higher than the cost level of the Economy Plan."

Under the Nixon Plan, states will have no incentive to raise grants above this level. The Economy Food plan used in the poverty line and the Nixon bill allows a person to survive, according to the Department of Agriculture, with adequate nutrition "for short emergency periods of time and only under very special circumstances."

The so-called "low income poverty line" is based on the USDA's "low-cost food plan." It sets an income of approximately $4650 a year for a family of four. Government surveys show, however, that only one fourth (¼) of the families with food budgets equivalent to the low-cost food plan actually have nutritionally adequate diets.

The NWRO adequate income budget, therefore, uses the USDA "moderate food plan" which would insure the average family an adequate diet. NWRO contends that providing adequate income is the only sure way to combatting hunger in America.

The adjusted budget excludes the basic costs of hospital and doctors care since it is assumed that free medical care would be available through national health insurance or Medicaid or some other program. It should also be noted that this budget includes no money for cigarettes (regarded by BLS as a health hazard), non-prescription drugs or medical supplies, out-of-town travel, long-distance telephone calls, dry cleaning, or use of a laundromat.

[1] Computed from the Bureau of Labor Statistics lower standard budget, as described in the text.

The budget is based on statistical averages and is subject to 10% per variations depending on the locality. The range runs from $5209 in most non-metropolitan areas to $6649 for Honolulu. The budget for several cities are estimated in Table 2.

The NWRO budget has been updated to Spring 1969 prices. Inflation has caused a 9.4% increase in the cost of living since BLS computed the cost of living in 1967.

The importance of continued recognition of special needs and of providing alternate ways of meeting needs, either through the adequate income (flat grant) or through individual consideration (computations), is important for two reasons:

1. BLS assumed in establishing the budget that the family had been established for fifteen (15) years and had an accumulated stock of clothing and furniture. The budget was intended only to cover replacements. This assumption does not apply to the average family in poverty. This is why we are asking for special grants for wardrobe and furnishings to bring persons up to minimum standards for health and decency.

2. The budget is based on statistical averaging formulas which do not necessarily apply to real people or real situations. For example, an individual family of four may or may not be able to obtain adequate housing in good condition at the $92 a month rent that the budget allows, even if that happens to be the average for the city in which he lives.

Similar arguments can be applied to transportation costs, where the transportation quantity for school children in the BLS budget was less than the number of days in the school year! This is because it was an average amount children who rode to school and those who walked. It can be assumed that some families would be over in one category and under in another. These statistical differences may not always average out in any given family. If a family has greater need in a number of categories, they should have the option of itemizing their family budget, and applying for a grant that meets the actual needs that they have.

Table 3 gives the minimum adequacy budget for various family sizes.

TABLE III.—MINIMUM ADEQUATE BUDGET—ADJUSTED BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS BUDGET[1] BY FAMILY SIZE

Family size	Budget Year	Month	Week
1	$2,000	$167	$38
2	3,500	292	67
3	4,500	375	87
4	5,500	458	106
5	6,500	542	125

[1] Family of four budget computed from the Bureau of Labor Statistics lower standard budget and as described in the text. Budgets for other family sizes are designed to provide adequate income and prevent families from breaking up.

Note: $1,000 per year for each additional family member. Under the NWRO work incentive a family of four will receive benefits up to $10,000 if it receives earned income.

HUNGER

The elimination of hunger in the United States requires that every citizen be assured an adequate income. Poor people know better than anyone else that the hodge-podge of programs set up by the Department of Agriculture are welfare programs for farmers and the food processing and distribution industry. They are not designed to serve the needs of poor people. Welfare programs which exclude people for reasons other than need and which do not provide adequate income are a basic source of hunger and malnutrition.

The Nixon Plan claims that the food stamp program will add about $800 to recipients annual budgets but only about 38% of welfare recipients currently receive stamps according to an Agriculture Department Report dated January, 1970. Recipients cannot afford to participate in the program because the stamps are not free. In the winter this means a recipient has to postpone buying warm clothing of paying a heating bill in order to buy food stamps. While the program is "voluntary" recipients are frequently made to feel obliged to buy food stamps.

The surplus commodity program cannot provide enough of the right kind of food and is operated so cumbersomely that recipients must queue up at a specified time and place or lose their food until the following month.

Both these programs brand recipients as poor people giving them bits of colored paper or marked items that single them out from other people. The best food program is money.

The solution to the problem of hunger and malnutrition is for every citizen to be guaranteed an adequate income to meet his basic food and other needs. Therefore, the money directed toward giving bonuses in food stamps could better be redirected toward providing a more adequate basic income for poor people.

WELFARE REFORM

Much has been said and written about the inadequacies of our present welfare system. Much has been said about the inadequacies of the President's so-called welfare reform. As we press toward an adequate income much can be done to improve the welfare system and the Nixon Plan NOW!

1. Adequate income goals: The bill should set an adequae income goal based upon the NWRO $5500 standard.

COMPARISON OF FOOD BUDGETS—FAMILY OF 4—JUNE 1969

	Per year	Per month	Per week	Budget based on this food plan	Annual budget for plan
USDA moderate food plan	$2,288	$191	$44	BLS moderate standard budget.	$7,813
				NWRO minimum adequacy budget.	5,500
USDA low cost food plan	1,778	148	34	BLS lower standard budget	5,285
				Social Security Administration low-income line.	4,650
USDA economy food plan	1,300	108	25	Social Security Administration poverty line.	3,720
				Nixon family assistance plan	1,600
Food Stamp program	1,272	106	24	Food stamp recipients
AFDC allowance for food	820	68	16	AFDC average State budget	2,460

2. Higher Federal income floors: The bill should provide a federally guaranteed income floor closer to the $5500 standard. Food stamp allotments could be converted toward raising the cash floor.

3. Time table to reach adequate income: The bill should provide a time table for reaching the adequate standard at the earliest possible date.

4. Emergency grants: The bill should provide for emergency grants to take care of special or unusual situations that poor people have because of the conditions they are forced to live in.

5. Cost of living adjustments: The bill should require annual cost of living adjustments for all federal or federally regulated assistance programs. It should prohibit states form eliminating special grant programs when this would have the effect of circumventing cost of living adjustments. State supplements must be based on state payment levels which reflect required cost of living adjustments as mandated by Section 402(a)(23) of the 1967 amendments.

6. Broadened coverage: Coverage should be extended to all persons (including single persons, childless couples and elderly persons) whose requirements fall below the benefit level.

7. Simple Federal administration: The bill should provide direct, unitified federal administration for all programs including aged, disabled and blind.

8. No forced work for mothers: All mothers must be exempted from requirements to accept work or training programs. The right to day care and the mother as judge of adequate day care should also be made clear.

9. Job standards: Work requirements for men must be regulated by strict national standards including minimum wage protection and fair labor standards at least equivalent to those used in unemployment insurance. First priority for jobs and training should be given to all those who volunteer.

10. Rights of recipients: Recipients must be given a clear explanation of their rights under the program. Recipient organizations must be recognized as parties in legal action and be given copies of all regulations and procedures issued under the Act.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, it has been repeatedly said here that today's existing welfare program is heavily criticized. This is true. But most of the criticism is that the present program is too expensive; and further that it benefits people who will not work, who are able to work.

On the first point, not even the most ardent supporters here have suggested that the legislation will cost less than the present program. The official report on the bill indicates, at page 43, that the cost will be at least $4.4 billion more than the present program, on an annual basis. Authorities have suggested that the increase in costs is probably nearer $10 billion a year; and one has suggested a figure of $14 billion additional each year. Even the most ardent friends of the bill admit that its passage will require increased Federal income taxes.

On the second point of criticism of the present welfare program, the prospect of the legislation before us is not all bright, nor all gloom. On the bright side, it will not require a man to leave his family to get welfare benefits; and that should provide a beneficial thrust toward holding families together. Yet, it has been acknowledged repeatedly in this debate that there is also a thrust in the opposite direction, by this legislation toward splitting families because of the permission under this legislation for a family to split itself in two and then draw full benefits as two separate families. To this extent the bill would provide a financial incentive for families to split. The legislation would also seem to give a financial incentive for a single man of low income to marry and beget children for this would provide him a Federal check not otherwise available, whether he was ever employed before or after establishing a family.

The greatest weakness of this legislation is that it tends to equate job training with job placement. There is nothing in the bill that would require anyone to work in fact; and it certainly cannot be termed a job producing type of legislation. H.R. 112, introduced by me on January 3, 1969, and referred to the Ways and Means Committee would produce the type of jobs that are needed among poor people today. It would provide a tax incentive for employers, hire persons among the hard-core unemployed. I have introduced another bill which seems to me to offer better answers than the legislation before us today, and at a much smaller cost. I refer to H.R. 13081, introduced on July 24, 1969, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

I appeared before that committee on October 21, 1969, and in my testimony for that bill I summarized as follows:

Finally, H.R. 13081 would encourage employment among the needy and provide job opportunities. Most people would prefer doing constructive work to being on relief and my bill helps in two ways. First. it provides that any individual receiving welfare assistance, financed in part with Federal funds under the Social Security Act shall not, because of earned income, have his welfare payments reduced by a greater percentage than $1 reduction for every $2 earned. Secondly, the bill authorizes the Secretary of Labor to create a register of individuals who have not been successful in finding employment. City and State governments and Federal departments and agencies would have the right to petition the Secretary of Labor for manpower from this pool. The Federal Government would in each case pay the minimum hourly wage for the work done.

It has been several times said here by members of the committee that Congressmen have not come forth with better suggestions than the bill before us. I think I have done so; and I think such remarks coming from the committee are not very persuasive in view of their request and attainment of a rule which precluded even the tiniest of amendments.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Chairman, I have followed the debate of the past 2 days on H.R. 16311, The Family Assistance Act of 1970, with great interest. The distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has, as usual, developed some very strong arguments in favor of this legislation.

I agree with the Members who have argued for reforms in our present welfare system. Without question, there must be change. But while this bill offers a number of highly desirable changes, I have some very serious reservations about the guaranteed income provision.

I am concerned that the institution of a guaranteed income may open the floodgates to revolutionary innovations which could all but break the back of the already overburdened American taxpayer.

It is my understanding, Mr. Chairman, that this legislation would add at least 15 million new people to the welfare rolls, at a cost of at least $4½ billion a year.

This is at the beginning. The program is sure to grow and cost more.

While I favor the overall thrust of the bill, namely to provide benefits to families in need in a manner that will encourage employment and family stability, I question whether H.R. 16311 will accomplish this.

Independence and self-sufficiency have long been the hallmark of the American family. Guaranteed handouts from the Government can only undermine the motivation of young people who are reared under these conditions.

I agree with my distinguished colleague from Georgia, (Mr. LANDRUM) that this bill puts the benefits in this order: Cash, food, and work.

What we need to do is turn this around and put work first and cash last.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot, in good conscience, vote to levy additional taxes on the American taxpayer in order to guarantee an income to any person who simply will not work. And I am afraid that is what would happen if we passed this bill in its present form.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this bill is too far reaching, too revolutionary, and must be modified. I would like to see some of the provisions become law. But I favor striking out the guaranteed income provision.

In my judgment, what this country needs most at this time is a reduction in spending and an intensive effort by the administration to lower interest rates.

Mr. HANSEN of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I rise to call the attention of my colleagues to the child care provisions of the Family Assistance Act of 1970. There is a growing awareness of the need to provide child care services as a means of encouraging mothers of small children who can and want to work to move from the welfare rolls into productive employment. There is also a growing recognition of the value of providing a wholesome atmosphere to stimulate the child's physical, emotional, and intellectual growth and development.

The Select Education Subcommittee under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS) has concluded lengthy public hearings on child development legislation. I am confident that we will soon report a bill that will be the product of an effective bipartisan commitment to provide services that are truly responsive to the needs of children in the preschool years. This will be landmark legislation in every sense of the word. The services to children provided in this bill will supplement and complement the services provided in the Family Assistance Act.

Mr. Chairman, in order to answer some questions the Members of the House may have concerning the operation of this part of the bill before us, I include as a part of my remarks a series of questions and answers furnished to me at my request by the Office of Child Development of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare:

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON THE CHILD CARE PROVISIONS OF THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1970

1. Question: What are child care services?

Answer: Child care services include the funding of care for the child in his own home, in a family day care program, or in a group day care program. It includes care both for preschool children and for school-age children during the summer, on school holidays and before and after regular school hours. HEW would propose to limit such care to children under the age of 15 except in special circumstances when an older child requires protective care (i.e., mentally retarded children, or handicapped children). There would be no minimum age limit. The length of program for a child will depend on the needs of the parent—it may be only a few hours a day or as long as 10 to 12 hours a day—it may be provided during night time hours as well as during the day. Child care services aim to provide activities that contribute toward the intellectual, physical, social and emotional growth and development of the child.

2. Question: Who is eligible to receive child care services?

Answer: Child care services may be provided for the following families:

(a) Those which have registered for employment or training under the provisions of Part D of Title IV as added by the Family Assistance Act.

(b) Those which are receiving supplementary financial payments from a state pursuant to Part E of Title IV as added by the Family Asssitance Act.

(c) Those which had formerly received benefits under Part D or Part E.

(d) Those with an adult family member referred pursuant to Section 447(d) of the Act to participate in vocational rehabilitation.

(e) Those which are receiving AFDC payments prior to the date when Part D becomes effective for a state.

In each case, the family is eligible only if the purpose for providing child care is to better enable an adult family member to engage in training, to take employment, to continue employment or to participate in vocational rehabilitation. HEW would intend to permit continued child care for short periods of time if the parent is ill, seasonally unemployed, temporarily layed off, or unemployed but actively looking for work. The Secretary is authorized to limit the length of time which an individual may continue to receive child care after they are no longer eligible for benefits under Part D or Part E.

3. Question: Who may receive funds for child care?

Answer: Funds may be provided either in the form of direct grants or contracts to any state or local public agency or non-profit private agency or organization, (only contracts may be arranged with a private-for-profit agency or organization) or through grants to any public or non-profit private agency which is designated by the appropriate elected or appointed official or officials in the area. A capacity to work effectively with the manpower agency is required. HEW would propose to establish criteria for use in determining the competence of organizations to carry out a child care program. Equal consideration would be given to all types of agencies as operators of child care service programs. HEW would give preference as to prime grantees to those organizations which either were themselves or were a part of coordinated efforts to deliver day care and preschool services (for example, the Community Coordinated Child Care—4-C—Program). This preference follows the philosophy of the statutory provisions found in Title V-B of the Economic Opportunity Act which mandates the Secretary and the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity to establish mechanisms for coordination at the local level. On the other hand, the absence of a coordinating mechanism would not be a bar to funding public or private agencies.

Grants could be made to employers, labor unions or combinations thereof. HEW would consider them as eligible grantees but would not give them preference over other public and private agencies.

Child care funds could not be given directly to individuals. It would, however, be possible to give grants or contracts to an intermediary organization which would provide an intake and referral service to parents assisting them in selecting among the many existing child care services in a community. In such cases the intermediary organization would then provide child care through the issuance of a voucher to, or the making of payments on behalf of the parents, to the service provider.

4. Question: What may be funded as a part of child care services?

Funds may be provided to carry out a program of daily activities, to provide transportation, to provide food for use in the program, to provide necessary supplies and materials, and to provide for medical and dental examinations and for referral and follow through with health care agencies. Treatment costs may be funded in the absence of other funds to provide for remedial health care and where it is determined that the absence of such care will adversely affect the ability of the child to participate in the program. Funds may be provided for all personnel costs and for the training of personnel. Funds may be provided for administrative costs necessary for operation of the program. Funds are also available for alterations to buildings, remodeling and for renovation. Funds are available for rent. Funds are NOT available for new construction.

HEW would plan to apply the standards developed under Title V-B of the Economic Opportunity Act (Federal Interagency Day Care Requirements) to the funding of programs under the Family Assistance Act. This is consistent with the requirements of Title V-B of the Economic Opportunity Act that standards be as uniform as possible among day care program.

5. Question: What proportion of total cost will HEW pay?

Answer: The Federal Government will pay up to 100 percent of the total cost of child care programs.

6. Question: Are families required to pay a portion of the cost of day care?

Answer: The law authorizes the Secretary to require families to pay for part or all of the costs of services in such amounts as may be reasonable in light of the family's ability. HEW would propose that no fees be charged when the individual is in a training status or in his first three months of employment. A sliding scale of payments would be developed for those individuals who have entered into employment. This sliding scale would take into account the relationship between income and family size. It would permit recognition of special factors such as unusual medical expenses which make it difficult for a family to pay for day care. The costs which the family pays itself are excluded from their income in calculating their eligibility for assistance under the Family Assistance Program.

7. Question: What role will the state government play in the administration of the program?

Answer: State agencies may be the grantee for child care funds in those situations where they are in the best position to provide for child care services. HEW will require that all child care programs meet the licensing requirements of the states. HEW will contract with state agencies to provide technical assistance to grantees to help the latter to meet licensing regulations. HEW would also propose to use state agencies under technical assistance contracts to assist grantees to improve their programs.

8. Question: Will funds be available for training and technical assistance?

Answer: There will be funds available for training and technical assistance. These funds may be provided in the form of grants to any public or private (including for-profit) agency or organization. HEW would propose to use training funds for all categories of personnel involved in the provision of child care services; for career development in the case of nonprofessionals, and for graduate level training in the case of those individuals who have supervisory or leadership potential. HEW will also propose to use these funds for the training of evaluation and research personnel.

9. Question: Are funds available for research or demonstrations?

Answer: Funds are available for research and demonstration projects to public and private (including for-profit) agencies or organizations. HEW would propose to coordinate research and demonstration funding under this authorization with research and demonstration funds available under the Head Start program, Section 426 of the Social Security Act and other Federal authorizations administered by the Department.

10. Question: When a family is required to pay a portion or all of the cost of child care, may such cost be deducted from earned income?

Answer: The Secretary may prescribe regulations which permit a family to deduct all or part of such costs from earned income. HEW would propose that the full cost of such care be deductible provided that the costs do not exceed those which the Federal Government would finance under the Federal Interagency Day Care Requirements.

11. Question: How will grants be made?

Answer: Agencies designated as applicants for child care grants will file an application with the appropriate HEW Regional Office of Child Development. Where a community has established coordination mechanisms, priority will be given to those applications for operation of child care service programs which have the approval of the coordinating organization. Where no coordinating agency exists, grants will be made on the basis of the quality and cost of the program proposed by each applicant.

12. Question: What do the words "renovation" and "remodeling" mean?

Answer: The legislation gives no definition of these terms. HEW would propose to give them a very broad interpretation, but would exclude purchase of land or construction of a new building. Minor additions to a building which did not involve an increase of more than 20 percent in the size of the building would be included in the definition of renovation and remodeling. Remodeling and renovation funds would be available for both family and group day care facilities.

13. Question: How much money is available for child care services?

Answer: The law authorizes appropriation of such funds as are necessary to carry out the purposes of the Act. It also requires that the Secretary shall make provision for the furnishing of child care services for so long as he deems appropriate to persons who, pursuant to registration under Section 447, are participating in manpower services, training or employment. Funds are expected to be available in sufficient amounts to ensure that child care services are available to eligible recipients.

14. Question: May the Secretary of Labor provide day care services?

Answer: The Secretary of Labor has authority to provide child care services in support of manpower and training programs under his jurisdiction. However, he must obtain the concurrence of HEW with regard to policies to be used in administering such child care programs. HEW would recommend that the Secretary of Labor provide child care service only in exceptional circumstances and that, in such cases, the Federal Interagency Day Care Requirements be fully applicable.

15. Question: What will happen to day care provided under the Work Incentive Program?

Answer: The Work Incentive Program will be repealed at the time the new Family Assistance Program becomes effective. During the interim period, day care may be provided under the Family Assistance Act in lieu of day care provided under the WIN program. The time at which this transition will be made will depend upon the availability of appropriations.

16. Question: What will happen to day care funded under Parts A and B of Title IV of the Social Security Act?

Answer: States may continue to fund day care programs under Parts A and B of Title IV subject to the policies and regulations presently in effect. It will usually be financially advantageous, of course, to provide such care under the Family Assistance Act rather than Title IV. There are, however, individuals who may not be eligible for services under the Family Assistance Act but who would qualify under the provisions of Title IV. This would be particularly true in the case of potential recipients.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the pending bill. It is being projected as a welfare reform measure, but in reality it would place 3 million additional families on welfare. A total of 15 million would, in one fell swoop, be added to the relief rolls.

The claim is made that such beneficiaries would be expected to apply for work, take job training if necessary, and accept suitable employment. But that requirement is so riddled with loopholes that in my judgment it is rather meaningless.

A highly objectionable provision would guarantee an annual income in the amount of $1,600, along with $800 per year in food stamps, for families of four.

Let us recognize this fact: Once this concept of a guaranteed annual income is given congressional approval, it will become a part of our welfare way of life. There will be no turning back. The pressures will be on to constantly increase the $1,600 base guarantee. Already the Americans for Democratic Action—ADA—is demanding $5,500, and so are the professional welfare organizations.

Now, what about the added cost, and where is the money coming from? Proponents estimate that initially the cost will increase by $4.4 billion, which is admittedly conservative. We must be prepared for two or three times that amount—in addition to what welfare is now costing. Does this mean an increase in taxes to the tune of an additional $5 billion or $10 billion per year? If not, then what about the inflation that will result from deficit financing?

Mr. Chairman, this administration bill should be defeated. Let us help the deserving but let us deny any welfare to those who are able bodied and refuse to work when employment is available.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Chairman, I have voted for H.R. 16311 today, the Family Assistance Act, but with some reservations, and with a particular regret that the closed rule did not permit us to offer floor amendments.

The most persuasive argument for this bill is that it provides an incentive for people to get off the welfare rolls and out of poverty.

I think the bill, however, also includes an indirect incentive to remain in poverty, that being its provision that the impoverished family will be allocated an additional $300 per year for every child they bear.

It has been recognized that high birth rates among the poor are not merely a result of poverty; they are also a cause of poverty. Reports by the Census Bureau and other organizations indicate that poor families have a disproportionate number of children relative to the resources at their disposal for raising and educating those children in a manner which would increase their chance for moving out of poverty. Additional children can cause a nonpoor family to drop below the poverty level.

It thus seems inappropriate in this bill to pay an additional $300 per year for each child an already impoverished family may have. It would be hard to concede this is anything but an incentive to continue bearing more children at a time when the impact of our population explosion is pushing us into both high expenditures and urgent concern for slowing if not halting population growth.

It was only a month ago that the President signed into law the population commission bill, directing a study of appropriate methods of achieving proper population levels.

Had an open rule been granted it was my intention to offer a general amendment to H.R. 16311 limiting the number of children to be included as family members to those children born before December 31, 1971, and to no more than two such children born thereafter. Such amendment would read as follows:

Certain Additional Children Ineligible

(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of this part or part E, no more than two children who are natural children of either or both of the parents in the family and who were born after January 1, 1972, shall be included as members of the family for purposes of determining the family's benefits under Section 442(a) or the amounts of such benefits under Section 442(b).

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, it is essential that the U.S. Government make a firm declaration of national policy that family sizes will have to be voluntarily limited if we are to preserve our environmental quality.

With the dawning realization that unlimited population growth can destroy both the environment and quality of life on this planet, it seems of doubtful wisdom to pass any law at this stage in history which includes encouragement for large families. It may be that after the new population commission has studied the problem, it will recommend that American population can increase 1 or 2 percent per year without endangering our national goals and way of life. If so, we may then have the luxury of returning to government laissez-faire with respect to family size. Recognizing, however, that the children born today or which will be borne under the encouragement of the bill before us, will have the same inalienable rights to life, liberty, equal protection of the law and the pursuit of happiness that we do, it seems worthwhile to suggest a moratorium until we have more knowledge on the question as to how many people can survive comfortably on this earth.

I appreciate that my remarks do not affect the passage of this bill under the closed rule, but would like to record my position at this point in the RECORD in the hope that it will furnish a basis for further reflection by the Congress on this point in the months ahead.

Mr. DENNEY. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 16311, the proposed Family Assistance Act of 1970, is significant because it proposes—for the first time in the history of this country—that the Federal Government guarantee an income to American families, regardless of their productive abilities or inclinations. In addition to substituting the family assistance program for the present AFDC program, this proposal would make substantial changes in three other existing Federal-State programs—aid to the aged, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently disabled. These three programs would be combined into a single adult assistance program.

The Ways and Means Committee report on H.R. 16311, indicates that if the family assistance plan had been in effect in calendar 1968, the Federal costs of benefits payments would have been $3 billion greater than the cost of the existing AFDC program. Even though H.R. 16311 would still require large expenditures of State funds, the bill would leave very little State or local control over welfare programs.

Americans long ago accepted the idea of helping those who truly need help and cannot help themselves. But, we have not as yet ever endorsed the idea that the Government should pay welfare to those already working. Once this principle is established in law, the only distinction between those who pay taxes and those who claim them is some arbitrary, Government decreed income level. And as this level is raised, proportionally fewer and fewer people will be paying higher taxes to support more and more welfare recipients. It is argued that a nationwide Federal minimum will eliminate the present differentials in AFDC payments and curb the incentive to migrate to those States which provide larger payments. In my opinion, the proposed Federal minimum will not eliminate these differentials, but the objective is unsound anyway because available studies show that the growth in AFDC in certain States was not caused by a large migration of people just to get on welfare. So, contrary to popular belief, the facts show that better welfare benefits have not caused migration and, therefore, this is not a valid basis for creating a Federal minimum standard.

Even granting the merits of the proposal, the Federal budget is not in shape to accommodate the cost of this new legislation. And it is seriously questioned whether the budgets of future years will be able to meet the rising costs of this welfare expansion program. The proposed budget for 1971 is extremely tight. It appears to me that unless we are willing to tolerate another wave of inflationary deficit spending, some additional taxation will be inevitable.

The objectives of the provisions relating to those unable to support themselves through their own efforts—the aged, the blind, and the completely disabled—are reasonable and sound. Meeting their needs is a responsibility of all—and financing the costs should be shared by all taxpayers through the Federal, State, and local government.

A constructive approach would be to pass legislation that will help those who need it most. There is justification for improving welfare aid for the aged, the blind, and disabled, and the families with dependent children, where the father is either unemployed or absent. And also for providing occupational rehabilitation for those who are able to benefit from it. Congress could accomplish this by eliminating that part of H.R. 16311 which authorizes a guaranteed income for families with working fathers. That would direct help where the help is needed.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is indeed a tragedy that in this country of affluence that their still exist in our midst over 45 millions persons living below or near poverty conditions. Yet it is a greater tragedy that the legislatures in our Nation have not been able to produce an adequate welfare program that can deal constructively with the problems of our poor.

It is obviously that the existing welfare program has failed miserably in its intended goal of reducing the numbers on welfare rolls and putting such recipients successfully back into the labor force. The participation rate in AFDC is rapidly increasing, and if costs rise at the present rate they will have doubled by 1975. This is indicated by the fact that in the last 15 years the number of children receiving assistance has increased 100 percent—from 30 per thousand in the population to 60 per thousand.

The AFDC has also failed in its basic system of paying bonuses to families that break apart. The existing program principally aids female-headed families with no provisions to assist families headed by fathers working full time for substandard wages.

There are also in this program unjustifiable inequities among various States and regions in our country. Reflective of this is the huge discrepancy between the lowest funding for a female-headed family of four—being $45 per month—and the highest benefits—$263 per month.

Another failure of the present system is seen in its built-in incentives to encourage a person to actually quit work. One of its major requirements is that the family have no working male head. In light of the rapid growth of participation rate and cost, encouragement of family break-up, State inequities, and the negative approach toward work, I feel there is an immediate necessity for the passage of this welfare reform bill.

Although there are definite and severe inadequacies in the proposal I find it a necessary and progressive move toward a workable solution to present welfare problems.

The proposed major accomplishments of the family assistance plan would blend strong work requirements with firm work incentive. It would treat the female head of the family on an equal footing with the male. Furthermore, there would be established a national minimum payment combined with national eligibility standards as well as major fiscal relief for the States. Of prime importance to the bill is the planned major expansion in job training and child care facilities for the working poor. Additionally, the bill proposes an increased national minimum payment to the aged, blind, and disabled.

The family, under this program, would receive assistance benefits in the form of Federal payments. This would include all families with children having an earning ceiling of $3,920, for a family of four, and most importantly this would include the working poor. To facilitate the Federal funding there would be established nationwide uniform eligibility standards. Most able-bodied adults would be required to participate in work registration or lose benefits. The family with no earnings would receive $500 for each of the first two members and $300 for each additional member thereafter. The family earning an income would have no reductions of benefits for their first $720 and 50 cents off benefits for each additional dollar earned. This would be an improvement over the present system, as it would include more working heads of families in need who could possibly become self-sufficient.

The States would be required to supplement Federal assistance benefits up to the AFDC payment levels, or poverty level—whichever would be lower. There is no supplementation of the working poor required, and Federal matching would provide for 30 percent of the State payments up to the poverty level. Under the current system there exists a huge burden on the States and this reform proposal encourages a more fully federalized system of funding which lifts some of the burden from the States, who are so often unable to provide adequate benefits.

Of prime importance in this bill is the increased attention given to the aged, blind, and disabled. The bill proposes to require the States to assure a minimum income of $110 per person each month. In addition there would be Federal matching of 90 percent of the first $65 of the average benefits, and 25 percent of amounts above that. Because these proposals would be combined with national eligibility standards as well as resources ceilings and earnings incentives,

I feel such assistance to this particular group of recipients is extremely necessary, although still not adequate.

The family assistance program offers certain work incentives which in itself is not a new principle. This program, however, extends the principle and makes it more effective. There would not only be a $30 minimum monthly training incentive, but also a $60 monthly cost-of-work disregard. Training for decent, acceptable jobs with a 50 percent retention of earnings is certainly a broader incentive plan than we are currently experiencing. Certain training expenses as well as transportation costs that would be reimbursed plus supportive services to encourage continued employment seem to me additional feasible incentives to participate in the work training program. Most importantly, however, the mother would be given a greater opportunity for successful employment by the establishment of quality day-care centers. This last proposal opens up a grand potential in the poverty struggle; and it is in this area that I feel the family assistance plan is not sufficiently developed.

There are specified work requirements that function with the incentive program. Training—with mandatory registration of recipients at a local employment office—and employment are compulsory for benefits, and there is required a referral of family assistance recipients with physical or mental disabilities for vocational rehabilitation.

Such are the major propositions of the family assistance plan. Recognition of the fundamental problem areas is adequate and I support any efforts in such a basic direction. I wish to emphasize, however, that this plan should be only the beginning of a massive awakening to our welfare programs and treatment of the poor. I agree that the Federal Government should provide minimum income standards for those unable to work. Similarily, able-bodied adults—of which 80,000 males are currently on the welfare rolls—should be given remedial education, training, and jobs. It must be remembered that mere funding does not guarantee wise application of dollars by the recipient. Mandatory training and work requirements are not the sole channel through which incentive will develop; the job, income, and living conditions of the breadwinner and family must also foster human dignity. For this reason, I wish to express my serious concern over the stifling effect of the inadequate income offered to the recipient, the lack of an effective job placement program, and the undeveloped potential of the day-care center program.

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics has not employed an objective standard of determining the genuine need for a family's minimum expenditures on decent food, clothing, and shelter. The Department of Labor, however, has offered $5,500 a year as a standard income needed for a family of four. Interestingly enough, American citizens have responded to nationwide poll questions establishing a minimum need at $6,240. It seems ludicrous that the family assistance program should construct a minimum level of $1,600 for the same family, and a ceiling of only $3,720. Thus, a four-member family receiving the highest assistance benefits would barely creep over the official poverty line of $3,552 per year. The program should also contain a provision for automatic cost-of-living increases, now rated at 6.2 percent each year. If a family is to help itself up the social and economic ladder, it certainly must be able to afford decent living conditions. I feel there must definitely and as immediately as possible be additional legislation furthering this goal of placing each American family above the poverty line.

Second, if a job training program is offered it is totally unrealistic to assume it a function of the work-incentive principle unless participants can be guaranteed a decent job at the conclusion of his training. What kind of incentive can there be in a program that could possibly force a person to do menial labor at substandard wages? And what measure of assurance is there regarding continued employment if the worker cannot even find meaningful satisfaction in his labor? Inclusion of the working poor is a revolutionary step in our welfare efforts, but success in raising the self-sufficiency and independence of the worker will not be achieved unless more adequate job placement programs are developed.

Third, I would like to suggest extended and varied use of the day-care programs. Six billion dollars—accommodating only about 500,000 children—has been sanctioned for such centers but truly effective utilization of them requires more funding and attention.

Quality day-care services are extremely important not only to the success of the working parent, but to the future development and growth of the children who have so unwittingly landed in a poverty striken home. A child should be able to remain in his own home and neighborhood. Effective and successful physical, emotional, social, and intellectual growth of the young child in the day-care center requires participation in and by the community.

These centers could provide not only health and educational programs for children, but they could become a focus of community participation and interests. Adult education and consumer information could be offered. Recreational potentials of such facilities are enormous as well as important and necessary to the poor community. Centers such as this could become a place of community concern, as local attitudes can aid in fighting our poverty crisis in this country.

The present AFDC program keeps assistance below the minimum necessary for a humane level of existence. There are so many persons desperately in need who are currently being excluded from help. The nature of the current system repeatedly implies that the recipients are lazy. The welfare worker must combine both his investigative and service functions which further alleviates the poor. The family assistance program could begin to ease these tensions, and pave the way to a newer economic and social orientation toward an old problem. The proposed Federal assistance and standards are a beginning, but I feel the need for more extended and conclusive programs is extremely critical if we are to genuinely help our poor citizens.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I cannot support the bill before the House in its current form. I cannot support it because, while I favor legislation to reform our welfare system, I do not believe that this bill would represent any significant progress toward that end.

This bill has been presented to us as an effort not only to reform and simplify the existing hodgepodge of welfare and assistance programs, but to provide an incentive to get people off of welfare. The objective is a noble one, but we have little assurance that it would be accomplished. Indeed, there is substantial reason to believe that it could have just the opposite effect: that persons who have always been among the "working poor" would find it to their economic advantage to stop working and depend on welfare altogether.

Mr. Chairman, last November Prof. Milton Friedman, the distinguished University of Chicago economist on whose proposal for a "negative income tax" this legislation is based, testified before the Committee on Ways and Means. While expressing his general approval of the concept of the bill, he drew the committee's attention to what he considered to be several serious flaws—and those flaws have not been corrected. I am not in total agreement with Professor Friedman, for reasons which I shall discuss shortly, but I nevertheless believe he made some important points in his statement to the committee, and I include that testimony in the RECORD at this point in my remarks:

STATEMENT OF DR. MILTON FRIEDMAN, PROFESSOR, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS, UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am glad to be here.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Burke, just a moment. I am a little bit out of place here.

Dr. Friedman, I want the committee to know that I have known you and know of you for many, many years, dating back to the time when I served with a great deal of pleasure on the Joint Economic Committee during the 1950's. I want to personally welcome you to the committee.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you very much, Mr. Mills. It is a pleasure to testify before this commtitee. My connections with it go back very much farther, to 1941, when I was an employee of the Division of Tax Research of the U.S. Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. I know that.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. I strongly endorse the basic principles embodied in President Nixon's proposal for reforming our welfare system: the provision of a strong work incentive; the equal treatment of equals; eligibility requirements based on the objective criterion of income; the separation of financial assistance from other social services. These are principles that I have long supported and long urged. The President's proposal does not go as far as I would like to go in replacing the present welfare system by a system incorporating these principles, but it is a major and welcome step in that direction.

The proposed reform has the potential of greatly improving the social and economic conditions of lower income families in the United States, while at the same time reducing the burden imposed on the taxapyer to help the disadvantaged. But these high hopes will be realized only if Congress can avoid a number of pitfalls in translating the principles into practice.

In my testimony, I wish to direct the committee's attention to three problems that require careful treatment if the principles are to be made effective. Unless this is done, there is real danger that actions taken on the details of the plan will have the effect of completely undermining its effectiveness and of converting it from a major step forward to a major step backward. These problems are raised by a number of specific features of the imaginative and thoughtful proposal that is before you.

The problems are—and here I summarize the three problems and then I am going to return mostly to discuss the first of these. The problems are:

(1) Keeping the marginal tax rate low enough to provide a real work incentive. This is by all odds the most important issue.

The basic marginal rate is stated to be 50 percent. However, social security and other taxes, and the method of handling State supplements and of integrating food stamps with welfare payments, threaten to raise the effective marginal rate to well above 50 percent, and in some cases to more than 100 percent.

(2) Assuring equal treatment to equals. Persons in similar circumstances who are at the same income level should be treated the same whether or not they are currently receiving welfare payments. The present proposals do not achieve this objective.

(3) Providing administrative arrangements that will best lend themselves to further improvement and development of the welfare system. In my opinion, this would be achieved far better by having the Internal Revenue Bureau administer the negative income tax features of the plan along with the positive income tax than by assigning administration to HEW.

I. RETAINING A WORK INCENTIVE

In my opinion, the most important need in welfare reform is to provide a strong incentive for persons receiving governmental assistance to become self-supporting. The President's proposal does so by two key provisions: first, disregarding the first $720 of earned income in computing benefits; second, disregarding half of the remaining earned income. As you are well aware, this is precisely equivalent to a tax schedule with marginal rates of zero at first and then of 50 percent.

For the class of persons involved, 50 percent is a very high rate. Yet, given the present low exemptions under the positive income tax, which requires that the payment of benefits be ended at a moderate income level, it is hard to construct a feasible scheme with a much lower rate. In my own proposals for a negative income tax, I have reluctantly recommended a 50-percent rate, viewing it as the highest that would give families a strong enough incentive to work themselves off relief.

The addition of an initial zero bracket seems to me an excellent idea. It provides maximum incentive where that incentive is most needed—to make the transition from no employment to some employment—and yet raises the breakeven point only modestly.

The two-step schedule of zero and then 50 percent is therefore an excellent compromise, and I support it fully. The problem is that, when additional features of the proposed plan, plus other features of current law, plus the proposals about food stamps, are taken into account, the final schedule is not a two-step schedule and the final rates are often far higher than zero and 50 percent.

This is clear from the figures in the accompanying table. I hope you gentlemen have this table, which is the last page of this prepared statement, because I would like to refer to it in explaining the further comments.

In constructing this table, I have described the proposal in tax terms, which seems the terms which would be most familiar to you gentlemen on this committee as well as the most effective way to present it.

(This description is different from the way I have usually described such plans. I have usually described them as involving an exemption and a schedule of rates for various brackets of negative taxable income (income minus exemptions). That description has the great advantage that it makes clear the relation between such plans and the positive income tax. For the present purpose, however, it has the disadvantage that both the exemptions and the rates are altered as additional items are taken into account. That is why I have used the equivalent alternative description embodied in the table.)

The way I have done it is to treat the benefit received by any family as the difference between two items: first, a basic benefit; second, a tax imposed on all income other than the benefit at graduated rates but with no exemptions. The excess of the basic benefit over the tax is the net amount the family receives (or the excess of the tax over the basic benefit the net amount it pays).

To keep matters simple, I have considered only a family of four with two adults and two dependents, and I have assumed that any income other than the basic benefit is earned income.

The first part of the table, part A, is for the 20 States in which the family assistance program would replace completely the present AFDC program. In these States, the basic benefit—the amount that would be received by a family with no other income—consists of two parts: (1) A family assistance payment of $1,600; (2) Food stamps worth $720—or a total of $2,320. This would also be the net benefit received if the family had no other income.

(In calculating the food stamp allowance, I have followed the President's proposal, which, as I understand it, would provide a maximum of $1,200, this amount to be reduced by 30 percent of total income, including any family assistance benefit. A family that received the $1,600 family assistance benefit only would therefore be entitled to $1,200 less 30 percent of $1,600 or $1,200 less $480, which equals $720.)

If the family earns up to $720 of income, its family assistance benefit is not affected, so the marginal tax rate, because of the family assistance plan, is zero. That is shown in the right-hand part of that first part of the table. The first column gives the income bracket, and the second the marginal rate for that bracket.

However, its food stamp allotment is reduced by 30 percent of its additional income, as I understand the proposal on food stamps that has been made, so the marginal tax rate because of food stamps is 30 percent. In addition, it will have to pay 4.8 percent for OASI and nothing for Federal income tax, so, going across the table, the total marginal tax rate on that first bracket is 34.8 percent, combining the food stamps plus the social security.

The next bracket runs to $3,000, the point at which the Federal income tax, under current law, becomes effective. Your committee has, of course, voted to change this provision of current law, but in view of the uncertainty about the precise nature of the final tax reform legislation, I have thought it best to stick to the present law, including the expiration of the surtax.

In this bracket, that is, the bracket between $720 and $3,000, the family assistance benefit is reduced by 50 percent for each additional dollar earned, so the marginal tax rate because of the family assistance program is 50 percent. The food stamp rate drops to 15 percent from 30 percent because the food stamp allowance is reduced only on account of the extra 50 cents of each dollar of earnings that is retained by the family. The other items are the same as before, so the total marginal rate is 69.8 percent.

At $3,000, the Federal income tax applies, making the total marginal rate 83.8 percent. At $3,920, the family-assistance benefit has been reduced to zero, so this item drops out, reducing the total marginal rate to 48.8 percent. At $4,000, the food-stamp allowance has been reduced to zero, so this item drops out leaving only social security taxes plus Federal income tax, which combined equal just under 20 percent.

For the crucial range from $720 to $3,920, these are extremely high rates—as high as or higher than the top rate under our positive income tax. In addition, under present law, families on welfare may keep up to $30 a week plus one-third of the balance of outside earnings without a reduction in benefits, so the effective rate for them for earned incomes between $360 a year and $3,000 is 66⅔ percent plus the social security rate, or a total of 71.5 percent, and for earned incomes above $3,000, when they become subject to Federal income tax, 85.5 percent.

The marginal rates implicit in the family assistance program are only trivially lower than the rates in current law, except only for earned incomes between $360 and $720 a year. Yet we are all cruelly aware that current rates do not provide an adequate incentive for families to work their way off welfare.

Moreover, the rates in part A of the table are the most favorable. They are for the States in which the family assistance program will completely supersede AFDC. For all the other States, the marginal rates are still higher.

The exact rates vary from State to State, depending on the maximum benefit now payable. In section B of the table, I have calculated the rate for a sample State that has a current maximum benefit of $3,400 a year for a family of four. I believe that this is roughly the maximum in New York and may be in others as well. In any event, it will serve to give approximate upper limits.

For such a State, the basic benefit has three parts, listed in the lefthand part of the table: (1) the family assistance basic benefit of $1,600; (2) the additional State supplement of $1,800; and (3) a food stamp allowance of $180 ($1,200 minus 30 percent of $3,400)—or a total of $3,580.

Under the proposal, the State is not permitted to reduce its supplementary payment on account of the first $720 of earned income. It is permitted to reduce its supplementary payment by up to 16⅔ percent of the next $3,200 of earned income and by up to 80 percent of still higher earned income.

I have assumed that the sample State applies these maximums. This explains the marginal rates in the column for the State supplement, which is the only additional column in the bottom half of the table compared to the top.

For this State, the food stamp allowance drops out at $600, reducing the total marginal rate from 34.8 percent to 4.8 percent. The rate then jumps at $720 to 71.5 percent, and at $3,000 to 85.5 percent. These are precisely the same marginal rates as under present law. Above $3,920, the rates are still more extreme, even exceeding 100 percent for a bracket just over $500 wide, and then declining to 20.8 percent.

And even this is not the whole story. I have completely neglected city and State taxes on earnings or income, which, in those cities and States where they exist, raise the marginal rates still higher.

These are clearly not very desirable tax rate schedules. They are irregular, declining and rising in a pattern that it is hard to justify on rational grounds. More important, for most of the range of incomes they are far too high to acheive the objectives of the President's proposal. In no State do they provide much more incentive than does the present law for recipients of welfare to work their way out of welfare. In some States, they provide decidedly less incentive than the present law.

Persuaded as I am of the merits of the President's general approach, I am convinced that it would be a tragic mistake to enact it in the form embodied in these tables. These high marginal races are, I am sure, inadvertent—the unexpected combined result or a series of separate decisions. In looking at them as a whole, this committee can enormously improve the present proposals by insisting that no combined marginal tax rate should exceed 50 percent.

The proposals that the committee has already made for reforming the positive income tax will help reduce the marginal rates. But this change, important as it is, will not bring them anywhere close to 50 percent for much of the income range.

The other measures that seem most promising are: (1) Reconsideration of the food stap allowance proposal; (2) alternatively, revising the family assistance basic grant and tax schedule so that, when combined with food stamps, they provide the basic grant and tax schedule now proposed for the family assistance program alone; (3) not permitting States to reduce their supplement for the first 3,920 of earned income, and then permitting them to reduce their supplement by not more than 50 percent of earned income in excess of $3,920.

II. EQUAL TREATMENT OF EQUALS

Under the present proposal, if Jane and Mary work side-by-side in a factory, receive the same low wages, have the same size family, and are in similar circumstances in still other respects, they may still receive different net benefits. They will do so if Jane was formerly a member of a family on AFDC while Mary was employed and received no welfare payments, and if they are in a State that now provides benefits higher than the family assistance benefits. In that case, the State is required to continue to supplement the income of Jane but not of Mary.

Similarly, as I interpret the proposed law, Jane and Mary may have differential access to manpower and training programs and to child care services. If the earned income of both is high enough to reduce the family assistance net benefit to zero, but low enough to entitle Jane, who was formerly on AFDC (to supplementary State benefits), then Jane will also have access to the other programs, while Mary will not.

This is highly inequitable. It is also perverse in its effect on incentives. It encourages the working poor to quit working and to qualify for welfare in order to get the additional benefits. Equals should be treated equally.

III. ADMINISTRATION OF THE PROGRAM

I believe that our ultimate goal should be a complete integration of assistance to low-income families with collection of taxes from higher income families. All persons should be treated alike. All should be required to file the same or equivalent tax returns. If the income as calculated turns out to be below the exemptions provided by law, the taxpayer will be entitled to receive a payment, a negative income tax. If the income as calculated turns out to be above the exemptions, the taxpayer will pay a tax.

This will end the present demeaning division of our population into two classes—people on welfare and the rest of us. It will end the present demeaning eligibility requirements for assistance. It will subject all to the same criterion of ability to pay—a reasonably objective measure of level of income. It will also improve greatly the administration of both the positive and negative tax by requiring essentially universal filing and thereby reducing the opportunities for avoidance and evasion of tax. Finally, it will be politically healthy, because no additional benefits could be legislated without simultaneously altering the tax structure, and conversely.

This goal is thoroughly feasible in the not too distant future. The main obstacle at the moment is simply the different definitions of income employed for the positive income tax and the proposed negative income tax and the limited scope of the family assistance program.

The goal will become far less feasible, however, if the administration of the new program is assigned to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare instead of to the Internal Revenue Service. That will assure the growth of two largely distinct administrative hierarchies, two sets of detailed regulations and rulings, and two sets of political vested interests.

In addition to keeping open the feasibility of an integrated income tax structure, there are other advantages in administration by the Internal Revenue Service, notably the contribution that would be made to the prompt and efficient collection of positive income taxes now avoided or evaded.

And I might add to my written testimony one minor example that I should have included. We now deduct tax at source through Internal Revenue withholding. The right way to provide an income supplement to people who are working but have incomes below the exemption level is to add to their paychecks in exactly the same process, which illustrates one way in which combining the two would render the administration of both efficient.

In deciding this issue of where the administration should be placed, I urge the committee to look not merely to the present but also to the future.

Thank you very much.

Mr. BURKE. Thank you, Professor Friedman.

Are there any questions?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Byrnes.

Mr. BYRNES. I was intrigued with your last statement about administration of income supplements. I think we do have serious problems. I have some great concern about using the Social Security Administration with the old age and survivors insurance system rather than having the administration of supplements stand separately. But I am intrigued with your statement that you would provide the benefits under the negative income tax through the paycheck.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Yes. You see, that is the appropriate way to do it for those people who are receiving benefits, what the proposal calls "the working poor."

Mr. BYRNES. I wonder where do we come out when we start making the employer——

Dr. FRIEDMAN. We now do it. We now do it for the subtraction from the paycheck.

Mr. BYRNES. Well, we do in part, but then we also provide for a recapitulation at the end. You would be taking out money that the employer has an obligation, in a sense, to pay to the employee in an employer-employee relationship. Now you would bring in an employer relationship to the Federal Government in terms of the money.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Representative Byrnes, I would also in administering this program have an annual recapitulation for those who receive as well as those who pay. I would treat both groups alike. You must do that in any event because you will be operating the family assistance program on the basis of advance estimates and you need a reconciliation in order to compare what happens after the event with what was planned.

So the same worker, for example, might in some weeks be receiving a supplement to his pay and in other weeks having his income tax subtracted, because the same worker might one week have a wage that was so low that if he continued on that level for the year, he would be——

Mr. BYRNES. We have so much trouble today, though, Professor, in my judgment, with respect to the refund recapitulation with such a higher percentage having refunds. Would we get into a morass of problems here as we add this factor into the——

Dr. FRIEDMAN. This reduces that problem, Mr. Byrnes, because now one of the reasons you have refunds is precisely that if a person who is employed falls below the level at which taxes should be subtracted from his pay, nothing is subtracted and nothing is added. And as a result he accumulates a benefit which later on provides him with a refund.

By treating him throughout the year symmetrically on both sides of the exemption, the problem of refunds, I believe, would in the main be reduced and not made worse.

In both cases, it seems to me, the employer would be acting as an agent of the Federal Government. He is now acting as an agent of the Federal Government in subtracting the withholding taxes. He would also be acting as an agent of the Federal Government in supplementing the wages by whatever provision was made for such supplementation.

In both cases the employee would have to provide once a year a form reconciling what was deducted or added during the year with what he was entitled to and with his other sources of income. And it is precisely this possibility of combining these different parts or our structure that seems to me a major argument in favor of having this administered by the Internal Revenue Service rather than linking it with social security.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, what we have done—and I think probably quite intentionally—is to have a system that in many cases overwithholds as a collection device.

Do you suggest that as far as the negative payments are concerned, you would underpay for the same basic reason, so that at the end of the year you would be more inclined to be paying the family some additional funds rather than having to require them to pay back some funds that they had already received?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Under our present withholding we do have a great many refunds because of overcollection, but we also have a great many people who underpay and have to pay subsequently, because with the best will in the world it is impossible to collect from all accurately. I would expect that doing the best job you could, you would find that in paying out the negative taxes just as in collecting the positive taxes, you would have a considerable number of people who would have to pay additional sums, but also a considerable number who would receive refund.

Clearly, if I were setting this up, I might try to veer us a little bit in the direction of underpayment but not much, because the contemporary cost to the people of being underpaid, it seems to me, would be rather important.

Mr. BYRNES. You address your whole paper here to the dollar-and-cents aspects.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Right.

Mr. BYRNES. And, of course, that can't be underestimated in its importance, but to me one of the major thrusts of equal significance and importance, and which in some respects may be even more important in the long run, is the thrust of the administration proposal placing the emphasis on job training, bringing job opportunities together with the individual.

And I wonder whether the emphasis you put here doesn't almost ignore that aspect.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. I believe not.

Mr. BYRNES. Or do you think it can be ignored?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Oh, no, I don't.

Mr. BYRNES. What is your attitude in that area?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. I don't believe it can be ignored. But I believe that those aspects of the proposal will not be effective unless the people involved have a very strong incentive to take advantage of the opportunities that are open.

Mr. BYRNES. That is your 50 percent?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Right. It seems to me you have two problems. One is to have opportunities available. The second problem is to make the people themselves who are involved have a strong incentive to take advantage of those opportunities.

No civil servant bureaucrat is going to be able, with the best intentions in the world, to pick out which people should get the training, which people should have the opportunities, and force them to do it. That has to come from the individual himself.

One of the most effective ways to have it come from the individual is to give him as great an incentive as possible to take advantage of the opportunities available. We are, seems to me, asking a good deal of a very impoverished person, a person of a very low income level, if we say to him, "You go take a job and work, leave your home and incur the extra expenses of going back and forth. But, of course, you are only going to get back 30 cents for every extra dollar you earn, or at a higher level you are only going to get back 16 cents for every dollar you earn."

It seems to me that unless we can say to people, "You will get back half of what you earn, anyway, at least," it is going to be very hard to provide them with the kind of incentive that you and I would like them to have to take advantage of the opportunities available.

I may say on one other point that is suggested by your comment, one of the major reasons why I would like to see this handled evenhandedly, and particularly the withholding arrangement, is for nonmonetary reasons. If the program is handled by HEW as proposed, those people who receive a payment are in a wholly different category from those who don't. They have to go and make special application at a different office. They are going to get a separate check somewhere else.

Particularly for the working people who are receiving a supplement, if you can integrate the whole thing, everybody in that factory working in the plant is on the same basis. There aren't two classes of citizens. Everybody gets his paycheck at the end of the week. Some of the people who have had high pay have a little deducted. Others who have had low pay have a little added. And a person may shift from one category to another from month to month. From the point of view of morale and of not making people feel that they are somehow pariahs and making them participate in the activity of the economy, it seems to me that is a very great advantage.

Mr. BYRNES. Your paper and your comments are most intriguing and most interesting. Thank you very much.

Mr. BURKE. Are there any further questions?

Mr. Corman?

Mr. CORMAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Friedman, would you agree that we really can't consider a negative income tax until we get to the point where we tax all sources of wealth? We get ourselves in this dilemma where people may have a rather substantial number of dollars at their disposal and yet they aren't subject to the income tax.

What would we do with them when we talk about the negative income tax?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. This is what was intended in the comment I made here when I said that the chief barrier at the moment is simply the different definitions of income employed for the positive income tax and the negative income tax. As an ultimate ideal I agree thoroughly with what you say. I would myself like to see a far more far-reaching reform of the entire positive and negative income tax structure so that all incomes would be treated alike.

But I believe we want to be very careful not to let the best destroy the good. I think we are now faced with a situation in which we have a chance to improve the system as a whole substantially by introducing the principle of a negative income tax but with a different definition of "income" than that which is used for the positive income tax. That is a step forward.

Let's not refrain from taking it because there is a still bigger step that you and I would like to take as the opportunity offers.

Mr. CORMAN. Another question I have concerns the supplement to the paycheck. In the long run what effect is that going to have on the willingness of employers to pay living wages out of their own pockets.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. It will have no effect, sir, because the willingness of employers to pay what they have to day does not derive from their social conscience. It does not derive from their concept of a living pay. It derives from competition. It derives from the fact that unless they pay as much as other employers pay, they are not going to get anybody to work for them.

So there is no reason that I can see why from the side of the employer he will be affected in any significant way by the fact that in part he is serving as an agent of the Federal Government.

Let me put it to you, if I may, another way. If his administering this for the Federal Government would affect him, then his knowledge that the individual is getting a supplementary check from the social security board or somebody else would have the same effect, and I think that it would be very hard on economic grounds to see any reason why that should have any measurable effect on the wages. Not that he wouldn't be willing to pay more. Any employer is willing to pay an indefinite amount if he can afford to do so. But he can't afford to pay more than the market requires him to pay to attract the labor, and he can't afford to pay less, because if he pays less, he doesn't get any workers. If he pays more, he is going to go out of business.

Mr. CORMAN. Yes, sir, but my concern is of the marginal worker, the person who doesn't have great skill, and there is competition for those jobs. It presents a dilemma. You don't want the man to live on less than a reasonable amount of money.

On the other hand, I would think that this employer might say, "I can pay you at the poverty level. The Government is going to subsidize a portion of it, and I will pay you the rest, and you take the job."

I think I would be concerned with whom we are really subsidizing with supplementary payments. It seems to me we have to hedge those with some protection for the other taxpayers, to require minimum wages or something of that sort. It seems to me we just compound the problem if we tell the employer, "You don't want to pay him any wages. We will supplement it, and you put it on the paycheck. And the employee is going to go home with enough dollars to keep body and soul together, even though it isn't going to cost you very much of it."

You really don't think that is a problem?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. On the contrary, I believe, sir, that it is really rather the other way around.

One of the reasons we have unduly high unemployment among the so-called "marginal" and "skilled" workers is because of the effect of the minimum wage rate, the legal minimum wage rate, which arises because of a confusion between a wage rate and income. It has always been a mystery to me how a teenage boy is better off being unemployed at $1.60 an hour than being employed at $1.40 an hour. And yet the effect of the minimum wage rate has been to render unemployed, people whose economic productivity does not equal the minimum wage rate.

What the well meaning proponents of the minimum wage rate have wanted to do is to provide some kind of a minimum income, not a minimum wage rate, which is of no value unless employment is available, on that rate. In fact, the effect of this kind of a negative income tax program is precisely that it serves the real function which the well meaning proponents of minimum wage rates have mistakenly believed that they could serve by minimum wage rates. It serves that real function of enabling people to earn what they can in the market, whatever their skill, and improve their skills through on-the-job training, while at the same time, through supplementing their income, you maintain a minimum level of take-home pay, which is available for them to purchase goods and services.

The fear that the employer would somehow be in a position to take advantage of this is a very understandable and natural fear. But I believe it does not correspond to the facts of the marketplace.

With respect to the group of workers we are now speaking of, there are, in general in most market areas in the country, a considerable number of potential employers. Those potential employers are in competition with one another, and they have no effective leeway to pay people less, simply because they are getting some supplement from somewhere else.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Gibbons?

Mr. GIBBONS. Dr. Friedman, I am intrigued by your testimony. I never had an opportunity to read much of your material except what has appeared in the newspapers, and you have thrown some new light on it here today.

You are suggesting that perhaps a way that this could be worked, your negative income, is by adding through a private business employer an additional amount of money, just as we now deduct an additional amount of money from the paycheck for the Internal Revenue. I would assume, following that on through, that eventually, the employer would have to get the money from somebody. He would get the money from the Government the same way he now pays the money to the Government. He would just submit a statement saying that, in effect, "I have so many people who are employed, and they have this kind of a social background. Therefore, I am entitled to money back."

This is a silly situation, but I could envision an employer perhaps going to employees and saying, "Maybe you better go home and have a few more kids. You don't want to work any harder, but I can get more money for what you are now doing."

Dr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. GIBBONS. You don't think it will work that way?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. No, it doesn't work that way now with the positive income tax. He doesn't say to the employees, "Why don't you go home so I don't have to pay over to the Government as much in withholding tax." The actual way it would work is that each employer would be withholding from most of his employees. The number of employees whose wages he would be supplementing would be relatively small. Given the kind of tax rates you have been thinking of, he would hand into the Internal Revenue a net payment. He would pay over. He would say, "This is the amount of money I have collected on your behalf. This is the amount of money I have paid out on your behalf. The difference is the amount I pay over to you."

Mr. GIBBONS. Wouldn't your program really encourage the employer to discriminate and to hire the poor and the disadvantaged and the large family person, as opposed to a single person, perhaps?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Not at all. His wage cost is exactly the same regardless of the family status. His personal wage cost that enters into business calculations is not affected by the family status of the person, just as now the fact that he has to deduct more from the pay of a man with a small family, of a single person, than of a man with a large family does not lead him now to prefer the man with the large family. His wage cost is a wage rate he pays for the job to the man whom he employs.

Then in addition to that, he now serves as an agent of the Internal Revenue in withholding at source from that man's pay the taxes that are due to the Federal Government in the same way he would serve as an agent of the Federal Government or the Internal Revenue in paying over an additional sum to which the man was entitled.

Mr. GIBBONS. Let me give you an illustration.

Suppose you have a man working on an assembly line and maybe he is making $2 an hour, and he is operating a machine or something like that. That would be pretty minimum pay. He turns out x number of products an hour, which result in an economic benefit to his employer, so much.

If that man were poor—of course, he would be poor at $2 an hour—but if that man were poor, let's say, then his employer would, in effect, get a refund from the Federal Government, which he would in turn pay to that man.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. That is right.

Mr. GIBBONS. Yet he would still be paying $2 an hour, wouldn't he?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. That is right.

Mr. GIBBONS. And maybe the man would then be taking home $2.25 an hour, or $2.50 an hour. It looks like to me that there would be a great encouragement in your system to hire the poor first.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. No.

Mr. GIBBONS. I wish you would draw me a picture of it. I don't want to take up the committee's time.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Let me give you this.

Here right now an employer hires people at $2 an hour, some of whom, for all he knows, have extra income and some of whom don't. Does that affect which ones he hires? Or does he pay those who have extra income outside less money than he pays those who don't?

Right now suppose you adopted the proposal as suggested by the President. Then the employer would know. He would know perfectly well that John Jones is getting an additional check from somebody because of the fact that he has six children and has a lower income than the income he would have to have in order not to receive a grant, so he knows what he is getting.

Employers are not fools. They know perfectly well what the other arrangements are, and so changing the bookkeeping by having somebody a block down the street hand the man the check, instead of combining it with the payroll operation of the firm itself, doesn't change the facts.

Mr. GIBBONS. I regret to say most of us live by forms. Have you ever gone so far in your thinking as to figure out what the new form 1040 would look like under your proposal?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Mr. GIBBONS. Do you have that?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. I don't have that with me, but I have in earlier cases when I have worked on this drawn up forms 1040 to handle the negative income tax.

Mr. GIBBONS. I wonder if you could just supply one, so we could put it in the record at this point.

Mr. Chairman, would that be all right?

Dr. FRIEDMAN. I will see if I can get one. "Unfortunately, I was unable to locate in time the forms I had drawn up earlier and time did not permit my writing out new ones in full. However, for form 1040, only changes that would be necessary would be (a) to add several lines in computation of tax parallel to those now used in computation of positive tax, e.g.:

"'(1) If deductions and exemptions exceed reported taxable income, enter excess here.

"'(2) See Tax Table—for payment to which you are entitled.

"'(3) Enter advance payments received during year.

"'(4) Enter any taxes withheld during year.

"'(5) If (2) and (4) is greater than (3), enter excess here. This is amount you will receive.

"'(6) If (3) is greater than (2) and (4), enter excess here. Remit this amount with tax return.'

"(b) To allow in b only of return of items of income on deductions treated differently for positive and negative income tax."

Mr. GIBBONS. At least mail me one, anyway.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Sure.

Mr. GIBBONS. And I would like to see what the form looks like that the employer would furnish the Internal Revenue Service to claim the additional compensation.

Those are all the questions I have, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURKE. Thank you. We thank you very much, Professor Friedman, for your appearance here today and your testimony.

I can assure you the entire membership of the committee and the committee staff will study your statement very carefully and also your chart.

Thank you.

Dr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you.

(The chart referred to follows:)

MARGINAL TAX RATES IMPLICIT IN WELFARE PROPOSAL

[Family of 4 (2 adults, 2 dependents); all income earned (other than welfare grants and food stamps); city and State income taxes neglected]

A. 20 STATES WHICH NOW PAY BENEFITS LESS THAN PROPOSED FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

Income bracket [1]	Tax schedule: Marginal tax rate (percent)					Basic benefit

[1] Income excludes basic grant and is all assumed to be earned income.
[2] Employee's tax under OASI.
[3] Present law, excluding surtax.
[4] Maximum permitted under proposal.

Professor Friedman objects to this bill on the following basis:

First, that when the value of food stamps and State supplementary benefits is figured in, the marginal tax rate on the earned income of the working poor is far higher than the apparent 50 percent—that, indeed, it may actually come to more than 100 percent, thus providing a serious disincentive to accept employment rather than the incentive that this program is designed to create;

Second, that families in similar economic situations should be treated equally, and that this is not the case under the provisions of the bill as it now stands, either in the regulations relating to State supplemental benefits or in the advantages it may give persons who do not work over those who do. Thus, the act does not require states to pay supplemental benefits to the working poor—which means that two men could be working at similar jobs and earning the same wages, but one would receive the state supplemental by virtue of the fact that he had been unemployed, but the other would not. This is a clear incentive for the working men to "arrange" unemployment category status in order to qualify for the extra benefit; and

Third, that the arrangements proposed to administer the provisions of this bill are cumbersome and costly, and that it could actually be administered far more efficiently through the system already in existence for payroll deductions and income tax payments.

Let me conclude this section of my remarks by noting that Professor Friedman—the father of the negative income tax—stated in a public meeting last Saturday, April 11, 1970, in Chicago that:

If I were a Member of Congress, I would vote against H.R. 16311, as it is presently written.

As I have indicated, however, I am not totally in agreement with Professor Friedman. One of the main objections that I have to the pending bill, that he does not share, is the inclusion of the working poor in the Nation's welfare population. I must object to this on several counts: First, its cost; second, its bureaucratic implications; and third, its moral and psychological implications.

My first objection is to the enormous financial burden that this extension of the concept of welfare will impose upon the American people. It is estimated that the cost of increasing the number of welfare recipients from the present 10 million to about 22 million under the pending bill will be $4.4 billion in the first full year, and that it will increase substantially thereafter. In 1 year we will add 12 million new persons to the welfare rolls—most of them the very people who have struggled for years to avoid subjecting themselves to that very indignity.

The second point is that the present bill would add a whole new bureaucracy under the Social Security Administration of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. As Professor Friedman so aptly pointed out in his testimony to the Committee on Ways and Means, the wrong administrators could use this new program to expand their own offices and staffs. It should also be noted that one of the ways in which our present welfare system is most in need of reform is in the bureaucracy that has grown up to administer it. We should not now be looking for ways to expand that bureaucracy or give it a new lease on life.

My third objection to the pending legislation as it affects the working poor is probably the most serious of all. Heretofore, we have always believed that work was the proper way for a family to support itself in our society. As a people, we have realized our obligations when it came to particular hardship cases, such as the disabled and the aged; but in general the work ethic has been an integral part of our whole national fabric and, I believe, vital to our national success.

In the past, welfare programs have sought to encourage those who are unemployed to seek employment. They have been, at least in theory, temporary or emergency measures. To be on welfare and to receive a Government handout has had a definite social stigma attached to it. And this is as it should be, if we are to encourage individuals, capable of doing so, to stand on their own two feet. Now, however, we are seeing this long-standing principle demolished. In recent years we have witnessed a new class of permanent welfare recipients come into being and produce a second and third generation of welfare families. And today we have before us a proposal that will even further institutionalize this new and tragic welfare class, this time under the aegis of the Federal Government.

I believe such a system will be truly demoralizing for those citizens who have long been too proud to accept a dole from the Government. Those who claim that the proposed legislation will provide incentives to the nonworking poor to get jobs, apparently have not looked at the other side of the coin—that it will also provide a disincentive for the working poor to stay employed.

NEW FEDERALISM

Mr. Chairman, the President has consistently expressed his belief that we should be returning to a reinvigorated federalism in our Nation's domestic affairs.

I support this viewpoint and heartily concur that we must redress the imbalance that currently exists in our State-Federal relations. We must enable the States to determine the priority of their own programs, so that dictation by the faceless Federal bureaucracy is not determining the lives of individuals in the Arlington Heights', Keokuk's, and Springfield's of the Nation.

The pending bill would move us in the wrong direction—it would move us toward more Federal control, and away from State determination of their own future programs.

It seems to me that this point has been completely overlooked by those who support the pending bill.

SUMMARY

To summarize, then, I oppose this bill because I do not believe that it takes into account the dangers involved in establishing a "guaranteed income" for American families. I am opposed to its enactment because it does not, in my opinion, provide any genuine incentives to work for anyone not now employed, but rather that it does the contrary. I further oppose this bill because it treats the working poor and the nonworking poor unequally, and to the disadvantage of the working poor. I oppose it because it would bring into being a new and extensive Federal administrative bureaucacy, including the social workers needed to police the system, at a time when we are supposedly trying to reduce the size of government. Finally, I oppose it because it represents one more step toward the centralization of government rather than decentralized federalism.

Mr. REID of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 16311, the family assistance plan.

The occasions are all too rare that I find myself honestly excited about innovative and original legislation on this floor, but today I think that we have before us a truly creative proposal which lightens not only my spirits, but also the spirits of poor people all over the country, who for too long have lived with a morass of residency requirements and broken, fatherless families.

So it is not for reasons of congressional courtesy that I now commend the President and the Committee on Ways and Means, who have respectively introduced a good bill, and made a good bill better, and together worked to propose what may well be the most constructive and original initiative I have seen over the past several years.

This is a positive program. It is a program which keeps families together rather than splitting them up; which induces economic independence rather than humiliating subservience; which provides day-care centers and manpower training programs; and which makes of what was once a stifling and even counterproductive system an open and productive one.

It is a program through which a recipient can see the light at the end of the tunnel. Where all too often the life cycle of an AFDC recipient was from dependency to stagnation, now it can be one of independence and dignity.

The precedents that this bill sets are invaluable—first of all, it has been recognized that family security is the responsibility of the Federal Government, and no matter how important States' rights are, it is basically wrong for a family in Mississippi to get $39 a month while a family in New Jersey gets $263 a month. Poverty happens to be national in scope and in origin—it should indeed be national in solution, and the concepts of national minimus and a Federal income floor are progressive steps in this direction. Second, been certified as deserving of Federal assistance; and third, it is the responsibility of the Federal Government to help people who want to work but cannot, by providing day-care centers and job training facilities.

This is not to say that I think that the program, as outlined in this document before me, is perfect. I come from a State which has served its poor relatively well; benefit levels in New York are presently the second highest in the Nation. Yet, this new plan threatens to substitute new inequities for the old. For instance, although New York State bears 15 percent of the national welfare caseload, under this plan it will get only about 6 percent of the funds. And New York City, which alone bears 10 percent of the national caseload, will get only 1 percent of the funds—a mere $40 million out of more than $4.4 billion in the program.

It is indeed unfortunate that the formula as presently stated in the bill appears to penalize New York and the wealthier States which have been progressive enough to institute decent benefit levels. To remedy this and to guard against this possible new inequity, I therefore would urge that the formula be changed and, as the National Governors' Conference has recommended and as both Governor Rockefeller and Mayor Lindsay have recommended, that within 3 to 5 years the Federal Government assume all benefit costs and all administrative costs. Federal matching funds should be provided for costs above the $1,600 floor, and they should be increased annually so that within 5 years all costs would be federalized.

I am concerned also about the eligibility requirement which precludes childless couples and single persons from receiving assistance under this plan. To deny benefits to people because they are unmarried, though they may be just as poor, just as destitute, as the families around them, is discriminatory. And to penalize a couple who choses not to bear children, though they too may be jobless and homeless, is unjust and unreasonable. In New York State, for example, there are at least 93,000 poor people who would fall into these categories but who are excluded from benefits under this bill. I would strongly urge, therefore, that the eligibility definitions be reconsidered to provide assistance based on need, not on numbers.

Second, I believe that the concept of, let alone the funds for, day-care facilities, should be broadened to be more than a welfare benefit. Families in a middle-income bracket who desire or need day care for their children should have this opportunity, and could pay for the services according to their ability. Although I will of course support the day-care authorizations in this bill for the poor, in New York State alone we need 300,000 to 400,000 day-care places, so I warn against limiting our horizons in this area. I urge broadening both the concept and the funds to include quality educational care as well as custodial care, and funds for construction as well as renovation of facilities.

Third, although I applaud the manpower training program and the work incentives, statistics differ as to the number of persons actually able to work, let alone the availability of jobs for them. It is important that the training be related to the local employment market, and that a decent job will be available upon completion of the training.

Finally, I am not at all sure that a mother with school-age children should be required to work, as she is in this bill. If she is, then the State is in fact dictating that her child must be cared for by a day-care center rather than by herself. Possibly it is old fashioned of me to suggest this, but I am inclined to believe that to involuntarily deny a woman the option of caring for her own child is wrong. I am under no circumstances saying that "a woman's place is in the home," but I am saying that she should be given the free choice of working or staying at home, as she would in a nonassistance family.

I submit these reservations basically as a cautionary note that this bill in and of itself may not end all poverty, and as a reminder that we must remain open to suggestions. Despite these reservations, however, I consider this legislation a monumental breakthrough. And although I will continue to urge that the Federal Government take a still larger portion of the responsibility by broadening eligibility, authorizing greater day care funds and employment responsibilities, and reconsidering the mandatory work provision for mothers, I continue to believe that this legislation represents a vital and historic step toward lifting the poor from dependency to dignity.

Mr. ABBITT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act.

This bill pretends to be a reform of the present welfare system when actually it opens a Pandora's box which will greatly increase the total cost of welfare in every county and city in the United States. In my opinion, the bill now before us, if adopted, will be a major step toward a Federal dole system.

This is a matter of much importance, and I believe that the so-called reforms which are now being considered may in fact be the most encompassing domestic legislation to come before the Congress since the adoption of the Social Security Act in the 1930's. This greatly concerns me and I am afraid that in our haste to reform the present system, we may in fact be creating far greater problems than now exist.

There is no question that the present system needs reforming to some extent. We have tolerated too long certain features of the present law which tend to benefit those who are not interested in working, but feel that they were entitled to support from the Government. On the other hand, there are certain aspects of the present laws which tend to penalize needy families simply because of the bureaucratic structure which does not take into account personal circumstances in individual cases. I also feel that the present system does not provide for adequate investigation and followup in some welfare cases.

However, I believe that the reform proposals now before us do very little, if anything, to change this situation. In fact, the bill incorporates most of the bad features of the present welfare system and makes provision for no improvement in the administrative tangle that makes the existing program so ineffective. This simply adds a new Federal layer on top of a system that is already buried in bureaucracy. The Family Assistance Act has all of the features which tend to foster indolence and encourage reliance on the Government. In addition, by establishing national standards, it undercuts the established patterns of welfare systems in many States.

The thing that concerns me most is that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is using unfairly the claim that the present aid for dependent children program encourages the breakup of families. The truth of the matter is that HEW is simply using this as a facade to get approval of a guaranteed annual income and once the door is open there is no telling what the eventual ramifications and cost will be.

According to my understanding, the statistics being used by HEW in support of the family assistance program were obtained in a survey of only 18,000 homes. This compares with approximately 50 million homes in the country and such a sampling would be only thirty-six one-hundredths of 1 percent of the total. It is incredible that Congress should be called upon to act on the basis of the meager information which has been presented to us in this instance.

I have looked over the figures supplied by HEW and frankly am at a loss to understand exactly how they have arrived at certain statistics. It is indicated on the one hand that there are now 1.7 million families receiving AFDC funds on a regular basis. This involves approximately 7 million persons. Under the proposed family assistance plan, the total would be increased to 3.9 million homes—including the 1.7 million under AFDC—and a total of 20 million persons. Still other figures which have been circulated show that the possible total to be covered by the program would include not 3.9 million homes but 5.2 million which would up the total number of persons to 26 million, so nobody knows exactly what the statistical situation is.

Enactment of the family assistance plan will eventually cost incalculable sums which must be made up some place. The guaranteed income is, of course, subject to rising living costs, so that it is a foregone conclusion that once the principle of guaranteed income is established, increases will surely follow. I am opposed to the guaranteed income as such but also realize that the figure provided in this bill is low enough so that if the law is passed, there will be an immediate clamor to raise the level.

I am diametrically opposed to trying to solve problems by creating new levels of Government bureaucracy with the idea that they may be able to grope toward workable solutions. We have had far too much of this and HEW is perhaps the most significant example in the Government of the inadvisability and inefficiency of such attacks on problems.

It is obvious to those who have taken the time to study the family assistance proposal that reform of existing programs is secondary to the objective of establishing a guaranteed income. I am opposed to this and feel that the vast majority of our people are against it. HEW is merely trying to camouflage its real purposes by putting forth the idea that this will encourage families to stay together. I do not believe that any action by the Government per se can be called the primary reason for the breakup of families. This bill would add to the Government welfare rolls vast millions of people and establish the precedent that the Government will guarantee to them a basic income. No one in authority seems to be able to give any idea as to how many people will be involved, how much the cost will be, how many more administrative personnel will be required, or where the road will eventually lead.

For this reason, I feel that it is a mistake to go into a program of this kind without more painstaking study by Congress. Past experience has shown that we cannot rely too much on the statistical information provided by HEW and we need only the recent experience with medicare to cause us to pause and raise questions as to where this all will lead.

It seems to me that we have gone far afield in this country as to our understanding of the role of the Government in relation to its citizens. The Government was never established to take care of the people but to simply provide a climate wherein its citizens may have the freedom to make a living and go about their daily pursuits without governmental interference. We have traveled already too far down the road toward socialism and the establishment of a dole system would be the final major step toward the completion of the socialistic pattern. Obviously there are many good features to the welfare program and the present bill makes improvements in aid to the blind and other handicapped persons, child care and certain incentives toward manpower training, and so forth. I am afraid, however, that taken on balance the bill before us would create more problems than it would solve and will establish patterns which will be difficult to reverse once it is obvious that they are wrong.

One of the main failings of the Federal Government is that we too often think of solving problems in terms of creating bureaucracy and making Federal aid available. In the instance of public welfare my feeling is that too much money has been spent to accomplish too little good and that along the way we have contributed to the establishment of a pattern whereby many individuals tend to rely on public support rather than to recognize their own responsibilities. I see nothing in the present bill which would reverse that trend but, in fact, feel that it is likely to be accelerated under its terms.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, we have before us today one of the most far-reaching pieces of legislation to be debated in the 91st Congress, the family assistance plan. I am pleased that we are moving in this direction, but I am concerned at the procedure under which the bill is proceeding. While I am in general agreement with the concepts contained in the bill, I was hopeful that the measure could have been presented to us under an open rule permitting amendments. It was for this reason that I voted against the closed rule yesterday. I intend to vote for the bill on final passage while at the same time expressing the hope and the belief that the Senate will refine certain of the provisions with which I am not in wholehearted agreement.

For a moment now, I would like to discuss a few of the more important features of the bill.

The President proposes a floor of $1,600 income for a family of four, paid entirely by the Federal Government. Additional payments to families with no income at all would be made by those States where current benefit levels exceed $1,600. For families where a member is working, the first $720 per year earned income will not be counted against the $1,600 floor. In addition, only one dollar of each two earned over the $720 will be taken from the floor payment. For the family of four, when earned income reaches $4,000, the Federal payment would no longer be paid.

I am pleased with this provision because it will represent a substantial improvement in the lives of the poor and the indigent in some States, but I do not believe that the inherent disparity in benefits among the States will slow or alter the trend toward uprooting and migration. I am pleased that the eligibility features for the family assistance plan will apply nationwide, and I hope that the bill is amended in the Senate to close even more the gap which exists in benefits among the States.

I regret that the President's program does not contain a new proposal to strengthen the hand of the welfare agency in obtaining support payments from deserting fathers, but two provisions should help to cut down on desertions: Removal of the "man in the house" rule and imposition on the deserting parent or spouse of a financial obligation equal to the amount of Federal assistance paid to his or her family as a result of the abandonment. This first provision is a humane and stabilizing feature because we are removing the incentive which exists for a father to desert his family when he is unable to provide for them and when his mere presence is a stumbling block to the family's receipt of public assistance. It replaces the incentive to desert with an incentive to find work or accept job training. The second provision moves in the direction of insuring that the Government is not picking up the tab for someone who is capable of picking it up himself.

One of the more negligent points in the bill before us, and one which I am sure the Senate will attempt to revise in its consideration, is the fact that the legislation does not move in the direction of providing relief for State and local taxpayers by assuming a greater Federal share of the costs of the program in the more progressive States like New York. The Nixon program requires the States to supplement the income of welfare families in the amount which exceeds the basic $1,600 up to the level of welfare paid in that State at the beginning of 1970. Unfortunately, the bill provides that the Federal Government will pay only 30 percent of the cost of these supplementary payments, and no Federal assistance will be available where the State makes a supplemental payment to the working poor. In my judgment, this provision of the Nixon program offers New Yorkers no relief to speak of from the burden of welfare. The bill has to be amended in the Senate to provide for a much larger share of the supplemental benefits and aid should be available for the working poor.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks today, of necessity, could not cover all of the features in this complex bill, owing to the time element. I am going to vote for the bill because, on balance, it is a good one. I did, however, want to take this opportunity to address the attention of my colleagues to some of the more obvious deficiencies in the measure and at the same time urge our colleagues over in the Senate to seriously consider amendatory language.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970. While I believe that this bill should have been brought to the floor under an open rule to allow us to offer much-needed amendments, the measure is a step in the right direction of reform of our drastically ineffective, inequitable, and misdirected welfare system. I have been advocating welfare reform since early in my congressional career, and I am gratified that we at last have a vehicle to enable us to carry forward the necessary struggle to eliminate hunger and poverty in the United States.

Our existing welfare system should have been discarded long ago. It places recipients in the awful position of having to refuse employment that would reduce their meager income from public assistance. It encourages dependency and creates generational cycles on relief rolls. It breaks up families in areas where "man in the house" rules have restricted eligibility. And it encourages the poor to flock to overcrowded cities where welfare payments are higher. When a family of four receives $44 a month in Mississippi and could be eligible for $264 a month in New Jersey, who could resist the impulse to emigrate?

It is heartening to witness the public support for overhaul of public assistance. Significant elements of the business community, the Presidential commission on income maintenance, key figures in the administration, public-service agencies such as the Urban Coalition, the National Welfare Rights Organization, and many, many more have lent their backing to this effort, and while the Family Assistance Act falls short of what needs to be done, it deserves our support because it will incorporate many desirable principles into the Nation's public assistance programs.

I specifically endorse the bill's emphasis on jobs and job training for all able-bodied welfare recipients who have no small children to care for; the establishment of minimum Federal standards for eligibility and expanded Federal financing and administration; complete Federal funding of day-care centers for working mothers; a floor on income for the very poor; assistance to the working poor whose income falls well below the poverty level; and a minimum guaranteed payment for aged, blind, and disabled individuals who have no other income. These initiatives embody much-needed principles if we are to break the pervasiveness of poverty which so debases the moral posture of a Nation with a gross national product nearing $1 trillion a year.

I was, however, among those who requested an open rule on this legislation to give all Members of this body a full opportunity to add still further innovations and increases needed to make this truly a welfare reform bill.

While the Family Assisance Act does provide for greater Federal involvement, it will still allow for variations in the amounts of assistance paid by different States and will, therefore, not completely discourage the migration of the poor to cities like New York where public welfare burdens distort the entire municipal budget. Equity demands full Federal funding and administration of public assistance, and we will not have a truly workable and adequate system until this basic step is taken.

Further, the principle of an income floor is a major breakthrough and a long overdue reform. But how any family of four in the United States can live with dignity on $1,600 eludes me completely. Instead of testing the water with our toe, we ought to act on our realization that even the official poverty borderline of $3,720 is not adequate in most sections of the country to maintain a decent standard of living. In New York $5,500 would be a more reasonable and realistic minimum, and we should not blanch at such a positive move toward social justice. For those who cry that we are establishing a new welfare population, we have many alternatives to prevent such an occurrence. It is my conviction that all men want the satisfaction and dignity of self-supporting employment, and by expanding the job-training provisions of this program, and also creating jobs if we must, we can bring this principle into operation. Thus the income floor will be but a springboard to a higher goal.

The Family Assistance Act does not penalize the working individual for earning minimal outside income, but the disregard amounts to only $720, beyond which 50 to 67 percent of earnings would be deducted from the person's income. Surely there is no equity in levying this steep a tax on family heads trying to support dependents on $2,320 a year, and a built-in disincentive to seek further work will be embodied in the program. This is the same fault in existing welfare rules, and by not deleting these penalties at low-income levels, we will once again encourage the search for hidden income and other subterfuges plaguing the relief system today. One of the most interesting proposals I have seen on the work-incentive problem has been developed and advanced by a distinguished and successful New York businessman, Mr. Leonard M. Greene, who has devoted considerable time and effort to removing the stigma of poverty from our national life. Mr. Greene's admirable plan is labeled "fair share," and in the belief that Congress should give full and fair consideration to this solution, I append Mr. Greene's position to my remarks. We simply must remove all government barriers and penalties on the working poor in the form of excessive taxation of meager earnings, and fair share deals eloquently with a remedy for this practice.

Mr. Chairman, I am also perplexed that H.R. 16311 excludes childless couples and single people from public assistance. This is a major shortcoming of the bill and belies the reform label. A poor person is a poor person, and by passage of this legislation we shall have failed to help untold numbers of the disadvantaged, while at the same time we will place a premium on family size at a time when we should rather be discouraging the accelerating growth of our population. There can be no justification for penalizing people for not bearing children.

Furthermore, while stress has been placed on the work-incentive provisions of this bill, let us not lose sight of the fact that over 90 percent of present welfare recipients are aged, blind, disabled, dependent children, and mothers caring for preschool children. With national unemployment zooming to 4.4 per cent, we need to be mindful of the limitations and not imply that we will force mothers to work. Certainly no able-bodied person should be allowed to refuse decent employment, and this bill includes safeguards to prevent exploitation of the employable poor, but we need to beware of allowing punitive action to intrude on our legitimate effort to ensure a life of dignity, with adequate housing and nutrition, for every American. The needs of children must be kept uppermost in mind as we attempt to uplift those in need of help.

In addition to raising family support levels, Mr. Chairman, we must increase the guarantee for the blind, disabled, the aged, from the proposed $110 to at least $150 a month. The staggering rise in the cost of living is a burden on most, but none more so than those on fixed incomes and unable to work. Age eligibility should be reduced to 60 for men and 55 for women, and cost-of-living clauses seem only fair. Cost-of-living increases are coming to be the recognized necessities in all wage determinations, Mr. Chairman, and we should include them in the overall provisions of the public assistance program.

Mr. Chairman, we have today an opportunity to begin—and it is only a beginning—to strike out in new directions in our society. We have among us 15 million malnourished, 30 million poor, and 77 million deprived people. We have the worst welfare system of all the developed nations of the world. Ten countries have lower infant mortality rates, and 15 have higher literacy rates than the United States. National pride and human decency impel us to move boldly to eradicate the flaws in our social fabric. We must compete not only in armaments and technology and trade, but in the far more fundamental reforms which will improve the quality of the lives of all of our people. Instead of taking one small step as men, let us take that giant leap for mankind.

FAIR SHARE—A FULL INCENTIVE PLAN TO REPLACE WELFARE

(By Leonard M. Greene)

THE PROBLEM

Recently, the widowed mother of five children living in Westchester County, New York, on funds provided by our present welfare system was delighted when her eldest daughter came home and announced proudly that she had obtained a job at the checkout counter of a supermarket.

The family's joy was short-lived. It quickly discovered that with a wage earner in the home, welfare payments were reduced. When simple costs such as lunches and bus fares were subtracted from the total, the family had less moneys to live on than it had had before. To be of real help at home, the disappointed youngster was forced to resign. The unhappy episode is a tragic example of how "second generation" welfare cases are created and how abysmally another "Noble Experiment" in America has failed because of a lack of imaginative planning.

WELFARE REFORM

In his current proposals for welfare reform, President Nixon has taken note of this "incentive pitfall." Reactions of leaders in various fields to his suggested improvements range from high to extremely faint praise. Certainly, almost any change from the utter chaos of the present system which sees welfare rolls zooming upward during years of national prosperity is welcome. A "step in the right direction" thus far has been the favored summation.

But is a step enough? I, for one, and a lot of other people with me, do not think so. For example, the new "welfare reform" still contains the same fatal flaw that doomed the original high-minded concept of help for the poor—it does not provide the vital full incentive that inspires a person to lift himself up and improve his lot in life.

Under the new plan, the basic Federal benefit for a family of four would be $1,600 per year; $500 for each of the first two family members and $300 per member thereafter. So far, so good. But here comes our old pitfall beneath a fresh camouflage. According to the official "Welfare Reform Fact Sheet" issued by the United States Government, "Benefits would be reduced by 50 per cent as earnings increase above $720 per year."

A 50-PERCENT TAX FOR THE POOR

In other words, a welfare recipient who labored to make $61 a month would immediately leap into a 50 per cent tax bracket! Figuratively, he would be rubbing elbows with highly-successful doctors, lawyers and business executives. Undoubtedly, his elbows would be considerably more frayed but he would be in that relatively exclusive company nonetheless.

His incentive to earn that extra dollar must evaporate by 50 percent according to the "law" of human nature. This "law" has not yet been repealed despite the hopeful administration declaration, "With such incentives, most recipients who can work will want to work. This is part of the American character."

It is also part of the "American character" to expect to be fully rewarded for one's efforts.

That is why I propose a complete new plan that we have named "Fair Share" which abolishes welfare altogether, wipes out the enormous bureaucratic machine that administers it, and, most important, gives every American citizen that spiritual spark, that incentive drive which says, "I can do better, and my efforts will be fully rewarded."

ABOLISH WELFARE

How can this be done? Remember that the welfare problem in this country is immense and the situation is growing more explosive daily. Bold, drastic measures reminiscent of the early days of the New Deal that met the Great Depression head-on must be taken. Abolishing welfare sounds as outrageous as closing the banks did then. But that courageous strategy worked and we who believe in "Fair Share" are confident that this equally forceful and daring plan also will succeed where any halfway measure, any patchwork stopgap is doomed before it starts.

FAIR SHARE

Briefly, this is how the "Fair Share" plan can replace welfare, providing the poor with the necessities of life while at the same time opening wide the door of opportunity and inviting them to better their standard of living.

Poor or not, every citizen (and that includes President Nixon, the butcher, the baker and you and me) would receive a taxable allowance. For example, Congress might set this figure at $900 for an adult and $400 for a child. This would give a family of four an annual "Fair Share" income of $2,600.

Disbursement of these "Fair Share" funds would be handled by and combined with our existing internal revenue service system.

A 100-PERCENT ENCOURAGEMENT TO WORK

Our present welfare system offers the recipient 100 per cent discouragement against working. The proposed "welfare reform" still offers 50 per cent work discouragement. In my opinion, that remains fatally high and it will not produce the miracle we need to solve our problem. "Fair Share" offers, instead, 100 per cent encouragement to take a job, and that is the kind of booster power we must have if we are ever to get this American society-saving missile off the pad.

Let's look at a table that shows how much better off a family of four would be under "Fair Share" than it would be under the reform proposal with its 50 per cent work discouragement.

Earned income	Welfare reform	Fair share
0	1,600	2,600
720	2,320	3,320
1,000	2,460	3,600
1,500	2,710	4,100
2,000	2,960	4,600
2,500	3,210	5,100
3,000	3,460	5,600
3,500	3,710	6,100
3,920	3,920	5,520

The recipient of reformed welfare who somehow fought his way to an annual income of $3,920 despite the 50 per cent benefit deduction on everything he made over $720 would at that point have $3930 in his pocket. He would have been dragging a 50 per cent ball and chain ever since he passed the $720 mark and now would be receiving no benefits at all for his tremendous effort.

But consider a recipient who adds his "Fair Share" of $2,600 to earnings of $3,920 to support his family of four. He has $6,520. Assume he takes the ordinary 10 per cent deduction plus $2,400 for members of his family and pays a surcharge of 20 per cent as all taxpayers would be required to do to finance the program. At present rates, he would return to the government $635.47 in taxes and still have $5,884.53 in his pocket.

He would have had full incentive to climb the ladder of earning power because as he climbed, his spendable income would have risen with him rung by rung.

REDUCE TAXES FOR MOST

It will not be until the higher brackets are reached that the "Fair Share" allowance is canceled out by increasing income taxes.

Those with low income receive the greatest benefit which goes hand in hand with incentive to earn.

And because "Fair Share" both gives and it takes—it gives in allowance and takes in taxes—it will pay for itself; these taxes plus the money saved by scrapping the bureaucratic anti-poverty programs that cost an estimated $50 billion a year would balance the "Fair Share" payments.

Admittedly, because of the 20 per cent income tax surcharge on present rates needed to get "Fair Share" started, persons in the highest brackets would at first pay more than they are paying now. But eventually they too, would benefit as America recovered its economic health and more of the people would be in a position to contribute taxes and the tax rates could be lowered.

CHECK INFLATION

Millions of persons now on welfare will instead be encouraged to seek jobs. They would begin to fit again into society, to perform services, to manufacture articles for sale. The Gross National Product could rise dramatically to a point where the value of the dollar would no longer be attacked by the threat of inflation.

Gone forever into the limbo of unhappy economic experiments would be the cost of welfare workers who are misusing their talents to examine shoes, poke mattresses and scan cupboards to determine if a person is entitled to relief. Gone with them would be the ghettos born of the rush to be where the handout is biggest.

"Fair Share" protects every American citizen from destitution simply because he is an American citizen. He would be able to hold his head high, to put his heart, his mind, and his hands to the business of earning a better living.

Mr. ROUDEBUSH. Mr. Chairman, we have before the House today welfare reform legislation which aims to revamp the chaotic welfare system in the Nation.

I certainly concur that there is ample need for improvement in our welfare program which has grown like Topsy and has placed a very heavy tax burden on our citizens.

All Americans share the concern and sympathy for the less fortunate in our society, but at the same time it is difficult for our productive and hard-working citizens to accept a system that seems to actually encourage indolence and dependence on assistance even though employment and the ability to work is available.

We are all willing to assist those who by physical disability or by economical circumstances cannot find work. But a new plan that will, according to some estimates, nearly double the number of persons receiving welfare does not appear to offer reform, but instead seems to be an expansion of an already ponderous and expensive program.

Therefore, rather than further compound the problems of the present program, it is my intention to oppose this legislation.

I do not think the Federal Government should be the encourager and multiplier of the welfare "way of life" in this Nation.

Our citizens will never turn away from those honestly and sincerely in need of assistance, but to tax our productive citizenry exorbitantly to prolong and expand an already misused program, is not good legislation.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, many of us have long looked forward to the opportunity to contribute toward the passage of basic welfare reform legislation. Therefore, I would like to commend those who have paved the way for today's vote on H.R. 16311, which will make very important structural changes in our present welfare system.

In particular, I want to call attention to the contribution of the Honorable WILBUR MILLS, whose role as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was crucial to the development of the proposal which is now before us. The committee, under the leadership of Mr. MILLS, worked both quickly and successfully in studying the proposal made by the administration and making amendments to strengthen it. The chairman is to be commended for his very constructive leadership for welfare reform.

The bill before us is a good one. It does not please everyone, but surely we must recognize that welfare legislation never will please everyone, whatever it contains. It does, however, go very far in the direction of rationalizing our present irrational system. It also introduces a much-needed element of equity into determining eligibility for—and the amount of—welfare assistance which families throughout the country are entitled to receive.

I have been concerned about the growing crisis in welfare for some time. In August 1967, Cook County began a growth in the number of recipients of aid to families with dependent children which was unprecedented, and which has not yet begun to slow. The number of families receiving AFDC in Cook County increased nearly 20 percent in the last year. Overall, the county now includes about 380,000 individuals who are receiving some kind of cash welfare assistance. We now have slightly more than two-thirds of all the welfare recipients in the entire State of Illinois.

What is distressing about all this is not only the numbers, but the human misery behind the numbers. A substantial number of those now on welfare, both those new to Chicago and old-time residents, might never have had to ask for assistance, or might have worked their way off by now, if we had a system which helped them at the time and in the way that they needed it.

We know that our public welfare system, although created to promote the general welfare, has in some ways undermined it. It has—too often—provided too little assistance for those in desperate need. It has—too often—promoted inequities both for welfare recipients and for taxpayers. And, finally, it has failed to provide assistance and incentives designed to promote family stability and independence.

H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act, is not a cure-all for the problems of poverty in this country. However, it constitutes a major departure from previous policy, and moves very definitely in the direction of providing a national floor for welfare payments, removing the discrimination against families in which the father is present and working, and toward uniformity in eligibility requirements.

The bill would provide at least $1,600 a year for a needy family of four, regardless of where in the United States it lived. This basic payment would be supplemented in several ways, depending on the family's circumstances. The working poor, who would be eligible for assistance for the first time, would, of course, supplement the payment through their earnings. Other families would, in all except a few States, be eligible for State supplementary payments. And all poor families would be eligible for food stamps to add to their cash income.

In addition to providing a minimum standard of assistance payments, the proposal contains very promising provisions for work incentives. The provision for disregarding certain earned income should give recipients strong economic incentive to maximize their incomes through employment.

I believe the manpower training features of the bill will also be of immeasurable value to those who need an opportunity to improve their employment potential. In Cook County we have had extensive programs for training recipients of AFDC in the past, but our efforts should be manifestly more effective under this new legislation. The bill makes possible a mobilization of all kinds of services to assist individuals in training for and finding jobs, and we know from experience that it is this kind of comprehensive approach which welfare recipients often need.

Perhaps the most valuable of the supportive services which the bill provides is for expanded child care services. Many people fail to realize that a large number of mothers on welfare are already working, but are haunted by the constant worry that their children are not being properly cared for. Many more mothers want to work, but have refrained from seeking employment because they could not arrange for appropriate child care.

The Family Assistance Act would assure that all mothers who participate in employment or training under the family assistance plan would have appropriate child care. It is estimated that 450,000 child care openings would be provided under the bill, including 150,000 for quality preschool care and 300,000 for after-school care.

The bill would also provide a greatly improved program of assistance for the aged, blind, and disabled. These people, who are the most disadvantaged of all in our society, would be assured a minimum welfare standard of $110 for each individual, or $220 for a couple. This standard, which was increased substantially by the Ways and Means Committee above the administration's proposal, will make it possible for many more Americans to live with some measure of decency and dignity.

Another major improvement in the bill is the strengthened role of the Federal Government in the administration of welfare assistance. The Federal payments for family assistance recipients would be made by a new Federal agency which could draw upon other Federal resources to assist it in making eligibility and payment determinations. For example, the vast record and computer resources of the Social Security Administration could be used to check earnings statements for purposes of family assistance.

By having the plan administered by the Federal Government, we can end the very wide discrepancies which have existed in the past in welfare determinations by the States. We can introduce a much needed uniformity, and a greater assurance that poor families will be treated in a dignified and fair way.

The Ways and Means Committee also improved the likelihood of having Federal administration of the State supplementary payments and of the adult programs by providing 100 percent Federal funding for the costs of administration in those States which make agreements with the Federal Government for Federal administration. This is another step toward equity and rationality in public welfare.

Mr. Chairman, the Members of the House of Representatives, Republicans and Democrats alike, cannot lose the opportunity now before us to legislate basic welfare reform. We have castigated the present system for years. We know its failings and weaknesses. We know that we cannot in good conscience let it grow and fester, and further contribute to our social problems.

H.R. 16311 offers a new and promising alternative. It does, as I have already outlined, accomplish some very important reforms: First, it eliminates discrimination against working poor families; second, it offers incentives to training and employment; third, it establishes Federal standards and requirements to promote equity among the States; and fourth, it provides new Federal machinery to improve welfare administration.

I believe this bill, as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, constitutes the kind of reform we have long been seeking. I strongly support its passage.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, our present welfare system is not succeeding and needs change. This is a generally accepted judgment and is supported by a margin of more than 6 to 1 by those citizens in my district who have responded to my inquiry. The question before us now is whether the costly changes proposed by the legislation before us constitute the proper solution. Actually, no one can say. Each of us must be guided by what seems to us to be the best evidence and by our own conscience in the matter as influenced by our individual search.

For our free system with expanding opportunity to survive, it is necessary that it be responsibly bulwarked by proper recognition of and aid to those who, through misfortune or circumstances generally beyond their control, are living or raising families under conditions of exceptional poverty and wretchedness.

Our present welfare system is failing and getting worse. Particularly is this true in the case of families with growing children where the head of the family is either unemployable or failing to be charged with clear responsibility to go to work. Cost of our present system is about $4.2 billion annually. The cost of this system which is generally acknowledged to be failing in important ways is projected to rise to $12 billion annually in the next 5 years, according to the Departments of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare. This Congress is faced with the challenge to act to acknowledge this failure of the present welfare system and to adopt a system which has prospects for success rather than the certainty of continued failure. It is time we stopped going downhill and that we find a path that goes up the hill, and we must run the risk, in my opinion, that the uphill path will be a costly and difficult one. But at least we will have the satisfaction of trying to fight our way up rather than continuing the easier road down.

This decision to decide on what I consider to be the upward leading path has not been an easy one for me or perhaps most of us, because the difficulties of this course are plain to see and we cannot even be sure such a course actually is an upward one. I am under no illusions. This plan, too, may end in failure. The Nixon administration has, however, conducted exhaustive research and has recommended this course without reservation. The greatly respected Ways and Means Committee of this House has conducted its own inquiries in depth and urgently recommends this course to us. We have ample testimony and ample evidence from qualified witnesses that this alternative upon which we vote today will in actual fact result in substantial transition to work where idleness now exists.

In making this difficult decision, I have been most mindful of an experience I had during the recent Easter recess. In answer to an inquiry in March of my constituents regarding their feelings on this issue, I received a letter from a citizen of middle to modest income, living in a clean and unpretentious neighborhood in which he stated that he and his wife had worked hard at unskilled and skilled labor for the past 23 years. He said that he was not able to give his children everything they perhaps needed, but that as a result of his work and that of his wife, they were getting along and paying their bills without having much of anything to save except the payment on their mortgage. But they were living in dignity and passing this pride down to their family. He said it was his view and that of his associates and neighbors in similar circumstances that it was unfair to them to add to their tax burdens in order to make increased welfare payments to those who were not willing to make similar efforts to work and to take care of themselves.

It was a very impressive letter to me and I wrote in reply asking that I might meet and talk to him during the recess. While home in my district, he invited me to his home one night, and there I gathered with his neighbors and friends. I am a Republican. This was a Democratic neighborhood. I did not ask them their politics, but I assume they were predominantly Democratic, since those are the clear figures of the district. They were not concerned with politics, however. In this room full of neighbors and friends, they were all devoted to taking care of their own needs. All hard, honest workers on modest income, and every one of these good citizens, without rancor and with good will, told me they believed an increase in welfare payments would increase the desire of many of their neighbors to remain or go on welfare, and add unfairly to the burden of those self-reliant citizens who desired to work and to raise their children in an atmosphere of work and dignity.

Memory of that evening has remained strongly with me making it even more difficult to reach the decision to vote for this bill. I can only say to them that my decision is based on the fact that I believe we have more chance of putting these idle people to work under this bill before us today which demands registration for work and willingness to work at suitable employment as a condition to receiving public welfare.

As to the charge by others that this represents a "guaranteed annual income," my reply is that in my view this legislation represents a conditional payment, conditioned upon willingness to work. As to a guarantee to those unable to work and unable to take care of themselves, we already have this type of guaranteed payment in every one of the 50 States, and by this bill we are merely acknowledging that conditions of poverty and wretchedness exist and we are raising our priorities in relation to aid and encouragement to this unfortunate segment of our society, and as I stated at the beginning, we cannot expect a healthy capitalistic, free system to survive if we do not establish this bulwark against actual misery.

The most expensive part of this legislation is the addition of the working poor to the welfare rolls. To the annual minimum guaranteed payment of $1,600 per year to a family of four—$500 for each parent, $300 for each child—we are adding the right to work and earn money up to $720 per year. Beyond that, 50 cents of each welfare dollar is deducted for each $1 earned, and the complete transition from welfare to self-reliance is reached at $3,920. This is not a perfect formula, but to allow the recipient to retain more than 50 cents would add improperly to costs of the program, and to require him to deduct more from his welfare would discourage him from working. I am not satisfied with this formula, but I know none better and we will have to learn from experience in order to make needed corrections.

To allow and to encourage the welfare recipient to work to supplement his income seems only civilized to me and we must face the initial cost of carrying the welfare recipient in order to promote him to self sufficiency.

There is widespread impression among many of my friends that the welfare rolls are filled with lazy persons who would not work. There are some, but the proved percentage is very low. Of all those on welfare, the figure for these individuals in my State, for example, is 6.7 percent. For those "lazy persons who would not work," this legislation has an answer, which is "work, or else." This applies to females who are heads of families and whose children are above 6 years of age. Our present welfare program contains no such ultimatum.

In conclusion, our present system is an economic and social disaster. If it continues unchanged, it can only lead to higher costs, more broken homes, and hopeless numbers of otherwise employable people living off Government welfare. The family assistance plan offers an alternative—an alternative which I believe I should support as Congressman from my Second Utah District, not because it offers a sure solution, but because it offers what my personal research and instincts lead me to believe is a better way, with reasonable hope of less cost in the long run than the present program, and with reasonable hope that there will result greater proportionate employment and less proportionate dependence on Government.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I take this minute to read the text of the following letter to me dated March 16, 1970, from the distinguished former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Honorable Wilbur J. Cohen, now dean of the School of Education at the University of Michigan and a recognized authority on welfare programs.

As sponsor of H.R. 13520, the Comprehensive Preschool Education and Child Day Care Act, which is now under consideration in the Committee on Education and Labor, I asked Mr. Cohen to comment on the relationship between that bill and the day care provisions of the bill under consideration today, H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970. Here is Mr. Cohen's letter:

THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN, SCHOOL OF EDUCATION,
Ann Arbor, Mich., March 16, 1970.

Representative JOHN BRADEMAS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR JOHN: This is in further reference to your request for my views on the relationship of your bill, the Comprehensive Preschool Education and Child Day Care Act" (HR 13520) to the Family Assistance Act of 1970 (HR 16311).

I have studied both bills very carefully and I find that the provisions of your child development bill are in no way in conflict with the Family Assistance legislation. In fact, your legislation is supplementary to the day care provisions of the Family Assistance program. As I see it, the child development provisions in your bill would provide the financial authorization for services to persons not on the family assistance rolls, and provide the basis for an educational and learning component which is so important.

The regulations of the Department of HEW which I approved during my tenure and which are still in effect provide for a mechanism to coordinate any and all day care and preschool programs, thus assuring that there will be effective cooperation among programs for those children on the family assistance program and those who are not.

I strongly favor the provision of your bill encouraging parent involvement (section 6(d)(9)(5)). I hope this feature will be implemented in the Family Assistance program.

I strongly support the objectives of your proposal. If there is anything else I can do please let me know.

Sincerely,

WILBUR J. COHEN, Dean.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to say that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS) has read Mr. Cohen's letter and has advised me that he agrees with the interpretation in this letter on the relationship between the two bills.

Mr. ICHORD. Mr. Chairman, like every other Member in this Chamber, I am highly discontented with the operations of the present welfare program. During this debate, several Members have characterized the present program as a "mess." With that characterization, I wholeheartedly agree. The present program has had the effect of destroying the will to work on the part of many welfare recipients. We need a new program—a new direction.

I believe that this legislation is an earnest effort on the part of the majority of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means to combine a "carrot and stick" approach to get welfare recipients who are able to work off the "welfare rolls" and on the "payrolls." There are many provisions in the legislation which would lead me to vote for the same. The establishment of a nationwide floor is definitely desirable. The "carrot" is provided in the form of incentives to work. The "stick" is present in the form of requirements on the part of certain recipients to either work or train to work. However, when I examine the specific provisions of the bill, I must conclude that the "stick" has not been fashioned sufficiently strong to reach the objectives so meritoriously sought. In fact, the "stick" in at least one instance is used to encourage the welfare recipient to have more children in order to stay on welfare. The distinguished chairman of the committee has stated that 75 percent of 1,700,000 aid to dependent children families now are receiving welfare are families where there has not been a marriage. This bill, I fear, rather than alleviate the present situation will operate to make matters worst. Why? Because of the provision exempting the mother of children under 6 years of age from having to work or training for work. Under the present program, the only possible incentive for the mother to have another child is the additional money she would receive for the child. I doubt that the small amount of additional money she would receive would operate as an incentive. But, under this legislation, if the mother does not have another child she is required to work or train for work. This, in my opinion, is using the stick to induce the mother to have further children. Rather than improve the situation, I believe we are burning down the house to destroy the rats. With the closed rule under which we are considering this bill, there is no opportunity to correct this most ill-advised provision. I must, therefore, cast my vote in opposition and I hope that the Senate in its consideration of the measure will fully appraise the ramifications of this exemption.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I am certain there is general agreement in this Congress that the present welfare system is badly in need of revision. In my judgment, however, it is of primary importance that we look before we leap.

Certainly, the President's proposal of the Family Assistance Act of 1970 is new and imaginative, and may indeed be what is needed to find our way out of the present welfare mess. I heartily commend the President for his efforts. Indeed, we are told that this legislation will get people off of welfare and put them to work. We are told that it will eliminate the seemingly paradoxical "incentives" of the present program, which seem to encourage the breakup of families, to penalize industriousness, and to create dissension by arbitrarily providing assistance to some of the needy while denying it to others.

If these benefits will be realized by the passage of H.R. 16311, then it will truly be a landmark piece of legislation. But I would ask this particular question: How do we know? A small number of similar but limited programs have been tested, but much of the data from these experiments is inconclusive. I suggest that a full-fledged pilot program should be instituted so that the family assistance plan can be adequately tested and studied for at least a year, in one or more States with major cities, before we commit ourselves to a program that might create a welfare mess greater than that with which we are now confronted.

Many questions must be answered, and in my judgment the answers will be available only after we put the family assistance plan into existence on a smaller scale and examine the results. To what extent might the Family Assistance Act undermine the work motivation of the millions of new recipients—the working poor—who will be added to the welfare rolls? Does this bill's implicit tax rate on other income really offer the best work incentive for the least cost? Will the employment and training programs in H.R. 16311 really be effective in moving people off the welfare rolls, or will they, like the similar provisions in present law, prove to be little more than expensive window dressing? As a practical matter, will the mandatory work provisions be effective, or will recipients who are so inclined to be able to evade them? Will this bill help to heal whatever animosity there may now be between welfare recipients and the working poor, who are ineligible for welfare? Or is it possible that any such animosity will be deepened when both groups are eligible for welfare but the working poor are excluded from State supplemental payments and from the benefits of the medicaid program?

Indeed, will a guaranteed annual income actually promote work? What requirements will be necessary to clarify the term "suitable" employment? In this time of financial stress, do we have the resources to find the program adequately? Are adequate provisions available to account for the different standards of living in urban and rural areas? And, perhaps most important, what will this legislation cost the Government in 5 years, or 10, or 20? I raise this last question because of our unpleasant experience with the skyrocketing costs of the medicare program. According to the Bureau of the Budget, the cost to the Federal Government of "providing or financing medical services" has increased an estimated 1,000 percent since 1966, accounting for approximately 15 percent of the entire increased Federal expenditure since that time.

The immediate cost of this program also concerns me. It is estimated that during the first full year of operation, the family assistance plan will cost the Federal Government an additional $4 billion, above and beyond the current Federal expenditure of $4.2 billion annually. An additional $4 billion of spending by the Federal Government in what still might be an overheated economy will not help ease our financial crisis. It is estimated that under the current welfare system costs will rise to $8.8 billion by 1975, double the present outlay, and I think we need to be very certain that a program of "workfare" will lift people off the welfare rolls to avoid the possibility that this program, too, might cost twice as much in 5 years.

Let me stress exactly what my thoughts are. Perhaps the Family Assistance Act is workable and practical, and it certainly is innovative. To take such a giant step—at least in its present form—demands in my judgment much more documentation and many more facts than we no whave at hand. I suggest, therefore, that this Congress give careful consideration to the idea of instituting a fully funded and legally authorized pilot program before we take off, since I am certain none of my colleagues would want to take a ride in an airplane that had not yet been flight tested. If such a program is instituted, and if the basic concepts of the Family Assistant Act prove workable, then this proposal can safely be made a permanent replacement for the present welfare system.

I would like to add one further thought. As yesterday's vote indicated, a number of my colleagues and I deeply regret that consideration of this legislation is limited by a closed rule. Such a rule prohibited not only possible amendment of the legislation to improve specific sections but also denied us the possibility to propose immediately what I believe to be a needed pilot program.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Chairman, I want to express strong support for H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970. As a welfare board member, as chairman of the Hamilton County Council of Social Agencies, as a State legislator, and as a Member of Congress, I have had personal contact with the hardships to people and the problems of society crowded or aggravated by the deficiencies of our existing welfare programs.

This measure proposes a broad frontal attack to correct family disruption, disincentive to work, inadequate levels, welfare-motivated desertion and migration, and a lack of adequate training and day care facilities. It may develop some problems on its own. Any comprehensive measure of this sort would be almost certain to do so, but it is, at least, a courageous assault on monumental existing difficulties, and represents an honest attempt to adapt our institutions to meet realistically present-day needs and challenges. The alternative is to stand by and watch family relationships deteriorate further, the relief cycle of generation to generation to continue, and the burden on our States, and metropolitan areas mount.

Much has been said already about the bill's provisions, I would just like to add emphasis that the approach of this legislation may well have the effect of stemming the flow to the cities of those in need of help and opportunity. It would do this by enabling our working and our nonworking poor of the nonurban areas to maintain a minimum standard of living where they are and thus to encourage the development of such areas commercially and as labor plentiful areas.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Chairman, the debate here today has contained much comment that we are revising our present welfare program. Well, there is no question that our present welfare program is in need of drastic revision, but this is not the answer.

What we are actually doing here is an entirely new concept which will add millions to the welfare rolls at a cost of billions of additional dollars to the American taxpayer.

I believe with many other Members of the Congress that the priorities of this legislation are wrong. They are: cash first, food second and work or productive lives third. I believe that there should be a reversal of these priorities, that our thrust should be to help people lead productive lives and secondly to provide food for the needy, and cash third.

Little has been said about the fact that an estimated 12 million persons could be added to the welfare rolls and the Federal cost of the program increased by as much as $5.5 billion.

The American people have simply not been told the facts about this proposal.

We need emphasis on job training so that those who are able to work can do so and not be relegated to the welfare rolls.

A guaranteed annual income would not serve as an incentive for an American to make a contribution to our society. Many will find that it is more advantageous to sit idly by while they receive a monthly dole from the Federal Treasury, making no effort to lead productive lives.

This is more of the something for nothing philosophy. The American people are going to be shocked when they understand the additional costs which they must pay through their taxes for this program.

Another thing that disturbs me is that once we start with this type of program, the only way it will go is for an increase in expenditures. And we are either going to raise taxes to support such a program or else suffer more deficit spending.

We need to improve our welfare program. We need to be concerned about the plight of the blind, the physically handicapped, the helpless child, and all of the other unfortunates of our society.

At the same time we have an obligation to make every effort to allow and encourage every citizen who can make a contribution to do so. This program, if adopted, will prove to be an expensive mistake and I hope that the Members of the Congress will vote against its passage and begin immediately to revise our present welfare laws to eliminate some of the inequities to truly serve the plight of the needy and those who will have to pay the costs of any such program.

Mr. MURPHY of New York. Mr. Chairman, for more than a generation, welfare programs throughout the Nation have grown in size and cost, but accomplished precious little in reclaiming human resources, providing dignified assistance to those genuinely in need, and providing a ladder out of poverty for millions of Americans. Indeed, these systems have been counterproductive—they have served to lock people into poverty and despair, rather than lift them out.

No single piece of legislation in the past 25 years has been as critical to the problem of welfare as the bill we are considering today, the Family Assistance Act of 1970. I strongly support this bill, and I extend my congratulations and compliments to Chairman MILLS and the members of the Committee on Ways and Means for bringing this vitally needed legislation before us.

I have long favored a greater Federal assumption of responsibility and participation in welfare programs because I believe that the Federal Government is the only instrumentality capable of tackling the problem on a national basis. The lesson of a generation is that no other solution will work, because poverty knows no regional, sectional, or other jurisdictional boundaries. It is truly a national problem, requiring a national solution.

Over the years, the large urban areas of America have borne the brunt of the national problem without having the national resources needed to provide effective and productive welfare assistance. Our cities can no longer be expected to shoulder this burden alone.

In my district in New York there is wide-ranging support for this bill—among those who must receive welfare, and among those who do not. All recognize that the existing situation is intolerable and should be changed. They recognize that only under the Federal plan will the welfare system fill the needs of those who it is intended to serve, and distribute the burden evenly throughout the Nation.

This legislation establishes a family assistance plan with Federal eligibility standards and benefits for families with children, and also provides standards and minimums for aid to the aged, the blind, and the inform. National standardization will stop the drift of poor into the already intolerable ghettos of the cities, and give hope to those who subsist on welfare.

It is important to note that this new approach to welfare contains strong requirements for Federal work-registration and referral-for-employment procedures. The bill authorizes a new work incentive program, and provides for additional day-care facilities. These important provisions will insure that those on welfare who are capable of working will work. There will be no more opportunity for those who have used the present system incorrectly to live on the system without a genuine effort to find and hold employment.

Support for this legislation has come from many quarters. The AFL–CIO supports the bill, and notes that it contains important labor standard safeguards. The American Labor Alliance, the National Association of Manufacturers, the National Association of Senior Citizens, and the Urban Coalition are on record in support of the national assumption of the welfare burden, and of the Family Assistance Act of 1970.

A major point of controversy in consideration of the bill has been the question of adequacy of income levels authorized by the bill. Some have argued that the guaranteed minimums are too low; an equally sincere number of people have argued for lower minimums. It is my belief that the levels contained in this bill are adequate for the initiation of the program. Of course, it is impossible to project with 100-percent accuracy how well these levels will work. However, the Congress is certainly free to adjust these levels as the future warrants—up or down—and the program should be permitted to operate for a time on the levels established by the bill.

The family assistance plan is a vitally needed first step toward the elimination of poverty and despair in America. It will give new hope to those on welfare—hope for a brighter future, filled with dignity and promise. It will also herald new hope for those in our society who support welfare, but understandably demand that the money and energy spent truly work for the elimination of poverty. The burden on these Americans will be eased, and the future of those on welfare brightened. I strongly support this legislation, and heartily commend it to my colleagues.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, we have had thorough debate these past 2 days on the merits of this legislation and I believe that the debate was consistently objective.

It is obvious that there is legitimate doubt as to the workability of the program, as well as legitimate concern over the cost and ineffectiveness of existing programs.

I was impressed by the argument that the existing welfare programs could and, therefore, were not being effectively administered and the proposal before us was at least a practical alternative.

After carefully reviewing the figures presented in the committee report and interpretation of the figures that many critics of the bill have produced, I am convinced that instead of replacing the welfare program, we are adding a new dimension to the welfare burden. Therefore, I will cast my vote against the measure, emphasizing that the questions raised by many Members have not been effectively answered.

May I also direct the attention of the Members to the possibility that the Senate will make drastic revisions of this plan, adding new costs, and administrative complications to it and the House conferees will be hard pressed to maintain the House position against the other body in the conference.

I am afraid the bill as drawn will substantially increase the tax burden of the residents of Illinois and other States, due to the great number of people that will be added to the welfare rolls. In turn, incentives to work will not produce the results needed to remove people from the rolls.

The bill does not contain enough emphasis on incentives for people to remove themselves from assistance rolls and, therefore, we are not solving the welfare problem through this measure but unfortunately compounding it. Therefore, for these and other reasons I will reluctantly cast my vote against the measure.

Mr. HALPERN. Mr. Chairman, the decade of the 1960's brought many of our social problems to the forefront, but none of them have struck our minds and our consciences more forceably than those involving our system of public welfare. We have become ever more aware that our present system has not provided the kind of support and incentives which poor families in this country need.

It is gratifying, therefore, that positive action toward welfare reform has been initiated by the administration and is being considered by the Congress. I believe that the Family Assistance Act, which we have before us today, will create a genuinely constructive welfare system. Its major purpose is to strengthen families, and by so doing it will strengthen our entire social structure.

Our present program of aid to families with dependent children, which is the public assistance program designed to assist families with children, has a number of basic flaws. First and foremost, it does not, in some States, provide even a subsistence level of welfare payments. It is, therefore, creating an ever-growing future welfare population through its failure to sustain the present one. Seriously deprived children, as we know, all too often grow into deprived adults who cannot hold their own in today's world.

Second, although it provides money, it does not provide additional kinds of encouragement and help to families in need. It has not helped adults prepare for and find employment, it has discouraged them. It has not helped people build their own secure futures, but has encouraged them to fall back on the security of a welfare payment. It also has embodied strong incentives for family breakup.

In short, what should have been a constructive program, has in fact been destructive. The many billions of dollars which we have invested in welfare have brought a bitter return.

H.R. 16311 represents a turning point in our efforts. It establishes the goal of encouraging stable and self-sufficient families, and provides the machinery to achieve this goal.

Perhaps the most important, and certainly the most controversial aspect of the proposal is for cash assistance to the working poor. The family assistance plan would cover some 20 million people, instead of the 6.7 million who are now receiving AFDC. This is an impossible hurdle for some. The very idea of helping so many millions of individuals is abhorrent to those who believe the only proper goal of a welfare program is to eliminate itself.

And yet, the President has stated, and as the Committee on Ways and Means has agreed, coverage of the working poor is a necessary investment in the future. By helping poor families in which the father is employed we are not simply providing them with needed cash assistance for the moment, we are helping those families retain their viability, and we are reducing the incentive for fathers to leave their families in order to qualify them for welfare.

We all recognize that one of our major causes of poverty and of many of our social ills is the broken family. One of the greatest contributions which we can make to the public welfare is to help families stay together. This bill would help them. And if the cost is great, I believe it is nonetheless a cost we must accept. It is, in any case, a far lower cost to society than the alternative of allowing the problems of our existing system to continue to grow.

The proposal also contains incentives for all families on welfare to undertake manpower training and to become employed. Much has been learned from the experience of the work incentive program in the last 2 years, and the new manpower provisions represent an improvement over existing law.

The bill would require all adults, with certain specified exceptions, to register with the employment service. This procedure would eliminate the current problem of irregular and uncertain referrals from the welfare agencies to the employment service.

The bill would also require the employment service to provide vital services to each individual who registers. An employability plan would have to be drawn up for each person, and a whole range of rehabilitative resources would be drawn upon in order to help the welfare recipient to be trained for and to find a suitable job.

Individuals who enter training will receive a training allowance. Perhaps even more important, mothers who require day care services for their children in order to participate in work or training will be provided them. The bill makes possible a major expansion of day care resources by authorizing the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to pay for up to 100 percent of the cost of necessary day care projects.

Studies of the present work incentive program have shown that one of the major impediments of welfare recipients to entering or retaining employment is the lack of adequate child care facilities. This bill would work toward eliminating this impediment, and at the same time provide the kind of quality child care services which many disadvantaged children need. The bill envisages preschool child care programs which will include educational, medical, nutritional, and social services. In this way, too, it will reduce the likelihood of rearing a new generation of welfare recipients.

The bill moves toward a greater federalization of welfare, and I believe that welfare recipients throughout the United States will benefit from this. A new Federal payment floor is established, and welfare recipients who live in the States which now pay amounts below that floor will benefit very obviously by being eligible for a higher cash payment. But needy families everywhere will benefit from Federal administration of family assistance payments and from the new Federal standards for eligibility. The family assistance plan will introduce greater equity, uniformity, and dignity into the treatment of welfare recipients.

The States will benefit, also. They can, if they choose, elect to have the Federal Government administer the entire welfare program for them, retaining only the obligation of providing supportive services to welfare recipients who are in training, and of contributing their share of the cash assistance payments.

Hopefully, then the proposal will help to equalize the current welfare burden among the States, at the same time that it contributes toward greater equity for welfare receipients.

Although I have concentrated my remarks on the provisions of the bill which relate to families, because as we all recognize that it is the heart of the welfare problem, I am also in strong support of the provisions which relate to the old, the blind, and the disabled. The new Federal minimum standard of need will be of very great assistance to this group of needy individuals. A payment of $220 for a couple, which is provided by the bill, will enable many to move out of poverty. This is surely the least which we can do for them. The new liberalized provisions relating to earnings exemptions will be of great help to those who are in a position to undertake employment, and will also encourage them to do so.

By combining the three existing adult programs into one single program and providing for Federal eligibility requirements, we will be promoting greater equity and uniformity for this group, just as we will be for recipients of family assistance.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has strong merits. Probably every Member of the House has some point, major or minor, with which he disagrees and would like to change. But the administration has worked long and hard over the bill. The Committee on Ways and Means has spent months in public hearings and in executive session refining the proposal. And we have now a well thought-out package of true welifare reform.

There will, in the future, be improvements which we will want to make. But I am satisfied that the bill moves in the proper direction. Levels of assistance will certainly have to be reconsidered in the future, as the administration has testified will be necessary. But the family assistance plan can stand now as a solid social program which will benefit both the needy and the general public. I urge my colleagues to join with me in voting for H.R. 16311.

Mr. MONAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting H.R. 16311, the Family Assistance Act of 1970.

The President has urged the passage of this bill as a means of reducing welfare loads and his request and assurance are entitled to great consideration.

Although there are many debatable points about this legislation, there are two principal considerations which impel me to support it. One is the fact that the proposed method of providing for poor families may bring about the elimination of the scandalous defects in the aid to the dependent children program. Certainly the present system has proved to be a disaster and I agree that we must embrace any reasonable alternative.

The serious shortcomings of the welfare system in its present form are obvious. In operation the system fosters family breakups, it encourages benefit recipients to stay on welfare by failing to have workable incentives and provisions for becoming employed, and it has failed to slow the steady movement of needy families from State to State in search of higher welfare payments. In short, the present welfare system is unworkable; it definitely must be changed in the direction of encouraging employment and family stability. No one can guarantee, of course, that this will work but I am convinced that we must try this method. It is significant, I think, that no one has offered any alternative.

The second important point is the provision in this bill for a reduction of variations in payment levels among the States through the introduction of a Federal floor for family assistance payments. This provision should help to eliminate the flow of people to the most generous States, such as Connecticut, where payment levels have been markedly higher. This is an objective which I have advocated for a long period of time and it would have a marked effect upon the increasing welfare rolls in the State of Conecticut.

In the first session of the 91st Congress I introduced legislation to require the establishment of nationally uniform minimum standards and eligibility requirements for public assistance, and I am gratified to see that my proposal is included in the provisions of this bill. The uniform eligibility requirements coupled with standardized welfare payments will help correct inequities in the present system which have resulted in my own State of Connecticut spending a staggering 30 percent of the State's gross general fund expenditures for gross welfare expenditures in 1968–69.

One of the most significant innovations of this proposal is to require that as a prerequisite to receipt of benefits every adult in assisted families register at an employment office for work or training or sign up for vocational rehabilitation. Although work incentives were put into Federal public asistance programs by major legislation in 1962 and again in 1967, the incentives have not been effective and there is a continuing need to tighten provisions tying the receipt of benefits to a firm commitment to work.

It is the children, our future citizens, who are my concern. In them lies the hope of tomorow. If we can contribute to greater stability in the family and eliminate the financial encouragement for fatherless families, I believe that we are taking a major step in the right direction, and I am convinced that this plan should have an opportunity to be tested.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, that evening last August when President Nixon announced his proposed welfare reform plan, a national radio network asked me to perform one of those "instant analyses" which later became so unpopular with the administration. My very first comment on the President's suggestions was that parts of the proposal should be recognized as meaningful and progressive, while others should be exposed as mere continuations of the atavistic mentality which created the current welfare problems in the first place. Eight months and innumerable contentions later, I find that my view has changed very little.

There is no question that the President deserves credit for opening up the issue of welfare reform and for a number of the specific recommendations in his bill. The minimum Federal payment guarantee, the inclusion of the working poor in the programs, and the nationalization of eligibility standards are all desperately needed changes in the present AFDC system.

The House Ways and Means Committee should likewise be complimented for several improvements they fashioned in the original proposal. I was especially pleased that the base payment for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled was increased by over 20 percent. The added incentives which should result in Federal administration of the entire family assistance program was also a very necessary betterment, as was the elimination of 10 percent local matching requirements for day care centers.

Collectively, these suggestions mark a significant forward thrust in the Federal Government's attitude concerning its responsibilities to the poor of this Nation, and for that reason I shall vote for H.R. 16311. Nevertheless, my colleagues should thoroughly understand that this bill falls far short of reaching what those responsibilities ought to be, and that all of us in this chamber who have worked so long for an adequate welfare system will not be satisfied until they are.

My primary objection to H.R. 16311 concerns the payment provisions, which are inferior even to those in the President's original bill. It is disgraceful, for instance, that the eight Southern States that have done the very worst job of providing for their needy citizens are rewarded in this legislation by allowing them to terminate all State payments.

Mr. Chairman, we have all been presented with documented proof that Americans are starving to death in these States—that children are often forced to eat clay to quiet their empty stomachs. How then can we justifiably turn around and tell those very State governments primarily responsible for creating these intolerable conditions that they need no longer contribute anything to their eradication? Surely no one rationally believes that a welfare mother in Atlanta, Birmingham, New Orleans, or St. Louis can raise her child on the 82 cents a day from the Federal minimum. At least the President's bill required these States to continue 50 percent of their former paltry share. I thought that provision was inadequate—the current one is unconscionable.

Of course, meager though it is, at least AFDC recipients in those eight Southern and border States will receive some increase in their monthly checks—which is more than can be said for recipients in Ohio or any of the other 41 States. If both Houses of Congress would pass H.R. 16311 and the President sign it today, these people would get the same unacceptable pittance tomorrow that they received yesterday. A rather unbelievable result from a bill heralded as a great humanitarian measure.

Moreover, the problems with the bill only begin with the amounts. The working requirements, while somewhat clearer after the committee's action, are still an administrative nightmare. The $30 per month allowable income is barely enough to cover the cost of going to and from the job. The welfare mother with school-aged children is deprived of raising them—the most blatant form of discrimination against the poor. There is no provision for cost-of-living increases. And perhaps most pernicious of all, the whole scheme seems to still be premised on the attitude that the recipient is basically a lazy, booze-guzzling ne'er-do-well—an attitude proved totally fallacious long ago to all who cared to listen.

So, Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the bill. However, neither I nor a number of my colleagues who believe that poverty should not exist in the richest country in the history of this planet will walk from the floor in any state of euphoria. But we promise you that we will be back.

Mrs. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, apparently a lot of votes are going to be cast for or against this very controversial piece of legislation, the so-called family assistance plan, or FAP, on the basis of hunch, or hope, or of sympathy for the poor or prejudice against the poor, or because of confidence in the judgment and wisdom of the President and Mr. Moynihan, or because of lack of such confidence. Any of these motivations may perhaps be defensible ones for casting a vote for or against this bill but they are not nearly as good reasons as listening to the full debate and trying to make an independent judgment. And, unfortunately, many of the deeply thought-out and well-reasoned arguments on this bill over the last 2 days have been made to a nearly empty House.

NEW DIRECTION OR DISASTROUS MISTAKE?

This is tragic. There is very little other legislation we will consider in this Congress of potentially more far-reaching significance. This bill challenges us to decide if we are on the threshold of a brilliant new direction in solving some of our most serious social problems, or on the verge of an economically and socially disastrous mistake of incalculable consequence.

I have been in attendance throughout the entire debate on this bill, hoping to find solid evidence that a far-reaching bill so strongly urged upon us by the President and so strongly supported by the Committee on Ways and Means, which includes Members who enjoy the highest degree of respect and esteem among all Members of the House, is one which I could support. I have found no such evidence.

I know from long exposure to the bitter problems in a major city that our welfare program, initiated in the early days of the New Deal to meet what were then well-understood family crisis situations—a program little changed since then except in details—is completely out of date in terms of today's problems. If this family assistance plan had been a part of the original Social Security Act of 1935, it would have made a great deal of sense. In those days, the concept of public asistance was new and people who needed welfare assistance could not wait to find the jobs which would get them off welfare. Most of them would have leaped enthusiastically to take advantage of the opportunity to learn new skills, and would have welcomed supplemental benefits while in job training and then when starting to work, benefits which would have speeded the economic rehabilitation of most of the families then eligible for the kind of help now called for in this bill.

WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAMS ALREADY ENACTED

We made repeated attempts during the Kennedy and Johnson administrations to establish programs to achieve what this bill is now intended by its sponsors to do—that is, to encourage people on public assistance to take training and gradually become self-supporting. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means (Mr. MILLS), who played an enormouse role in the passage of those programs, referred to them yesterday. The States, he said, have not accepted their responsibilities to make those programs work as intended, and so the results have been disappointing.

Therefore, this bill would place almost the entire burden of responsibility—administrative and financial—on the Federal Government, getting rid of the case-by-case investigation of eligibility and letting people just file a form saying they are eligible and immediately receiving checks from the Government to bring their income up to specified levels.

In view of the degree of welfare cheating which is already regarded by the public as being so widespread as to be absolutely shameful and indefensible, I wonder what public reaction would be to a plan of this nature—where you could just rate yourself as eligible, whether you are or not, and hope the computer will never catch up with you. Catching the cheats is not insurmountable if you have enough computers and enough people to check the computers, but in a democracy even the best-intentioned law cannot survive if there is public conviction that it is being widely abused by chiselers at the expense of the moderate-income taxpayer who has just noted once again this week, with shock and dismay, how high a percentage of his pay is going to Uncle Sam.

PUBLIC UNDERSTANDING AND ACCEPTANCE ARE ESSENTIAL

This is one of the reasons I am so much against turning the food stamp program into a free handout, giving the stamps to people to buy enough food to eat well without having to pay anything for them. It is not the cost of the stamps which disurbs me. We can afford, out of our tremendous abundance of food in this country to help every American to eat a proper, nutritious diet. What worries me about giving the stamps out free is the implication that the Government has the obligation to give every poor family all the food it needs without any cost to it whatsoever, so that the money that family would normally spend for food could be spent for other things.

Once that principle were established, the moderate income family, which struggles to pay its bills and struggles to afford a decent diet, would so resent the idea of other families receiving absolutely free more food than the self-supporting family can afford to buy that such resentment would destroy the basis of public support for any kind of food stamp program.

I feel that this so-called family assistance plan invites a similar reaction—not envy for someone who is needy getting a little help or even a lot of help; rather it is the likelihood of indignation by the taxpaying family that its taxes are being used to subsidize someone who abuses the program.

Most people will gladly pay taxes at personal sacrifice to help children break the welfare cycle. But they insist that any such program be tightly administered to weed out adult chiselers who use the welfare payments for their own indulgence rather than for the children for whom the money is intended. And this is why the aid to dependent children program is in such bad public repute. If I thought this bill would solve the problems, I would not hesitate for a second to endorse it wholeheartedly.

MAIN NEED IS FOR ADEQUATE DAY CARE CENTERS

But throughout the long hours of debate on this bill, I have not been able to see or learn how this bill would solve our real welfare problems. All it would do, it seems to me, would be to give the impression the problems were in some way being solved, as if an income of $31 a week—which is what this bill would assure a family of four, including their own earnings—would unify broken homes, prevent deserting, encourage job training, and so on.

I do not know what the figure would have to be to serve as incentive enough to accomplish those objectives; no one in the debate has ventured to give such a figure. We all know that if the figure were set high enough to really achieve these goals, the sums needed to carry out the program could never be appropriated.

Probably the main key to getting more welfare mothers motivated into taking job training and getting off welfare is to provide adequate—and I mean adequate—daycare centers for their children. This bill does not do that. It nibbles at the problem. I would gladly vote to spend all the money the bill authorizes to be spent for the supplementary benefits if it were used instead to build and operate the kind of day care center one can find, for instance, in the center of downtown Singapore, but hardly anywhere in the United States. We had such centers during World War II, and mothers gratefully left their young children there each day to take jobs where their skills and hands were needed. If we can do it in a war, we can certainly do it in the achievement of the social objectives of this bill—knowing that we would be cutting right to the heart of this whole issue.

I have never pretended, even to myself, that everyone else is wrong and I alone am right because I know that could not happen in the Congress or anywhere else. But I have deep reservations about this bill after hearing the entire debate—reservations so deep about the eventual direction or cost of this program, compared to its anticipated results, that I have reluctantly decided I must vote against it.

The fact that it would cost so much to do so little, and the fact that the cost of doing what would have to be done if the concept of the bill were really to solve anything would be so prohibitive, fortify my conclusion.

DEFEAT OF BILL COULD RESULT IN BETTER PROGRAM

My whole record in the Congress has been directed toward helping all of our people, and particularly our very low income people, to enjoy a better standard of living. I have often been criticized and even attacked for my efforts in behalf of social welfare legislation, and I have been willing to stand on my record because I think we all prosper in this country only as every American has a decent opportunity to advance himself economically. If I thought this bill would solve any of our serious welfare problems, I would be delighted to vote for it.

Perhaps other Members have more wisdom, more knowledge of this issue, more confidence in the draftsmanship of this program, and do not suffer the same doubts I feel so strongly. I recall that a lot of Members of Congress could not see the good in the social security bill in 1935, and made a partisan issue of it, and voted against it, and of course were wrong. On a measure like this bill, one can imagine that a "no" vote, for whatever reason, might stand forever as a monument to one's lack of foresight. Thus, with so many Members ready to accept this bill, I feel somewhat lonely in taking a negative position, but I think the Members here know that I do not cast my vote lightly on any issue or without feeling in my heart that my vote is the right one. On that prayerful basis, I will vote "nay."

On the unlikely possibility that it might be defeated here, or is recommitted. I am sure the Committee on Ways and Means could give us a bill its members were convinced could do what they know this bill can never accomplish in achieving a real, thorough, reform of our whole welfare program.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, as we approach a determination on the measure before us, H.R. 16311, I think we should be mindful of two basic facts.

First, experts of all political persuasions agree that the present welfare system is a tragic failure.

Second, it is the Federal Government's responsibility to try to establish a workable system; one that will restore human dignity to those caught in the welfare trap; one that eases the plight of the taxpayer by moving persons, by work incentives and requirements, from welfare rolls to payrolls; one that preserves, rather than attacks, the basic family structure.

The present program of aid to families with dependent children—AFDC—actually discourages recipients from accepting jobs. In almost all States, allotments are reduced customarily by the amount of family earnings, so that the effect is to put a 100-percent tax on earnings. Even more disturbing, a family with the father employed full time is ineligible for benefits, no matter how small his income or how large his family. This situation inevitably encourages the worker to quit his job to increase his family's income.

Under the measure before us a family's payment will be reduced by only half of total earnings. The principle will be firmly established that a family with earned income from a job will be better off as a result of that job.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, an experiment conducted in New Jersey over the last 3 years confirms the tendency of incentives to encourage people to work themselves out of poverty. An early report on the experiment concluded that—

The work effort of participants receiving payments increased relative to the work effort of those not receiving payments.

Let us realize further that in most States the present AFDC program creates a financial incentive for the breakup of family units. Since families with a male head of household are cut off from any AFDC benefits, a father, by deserting his wife and children, can entitle them to public assistance. How can we hope to survive as an individual nation, Mr. Chairman, and as the leader of the civilized world, if we encourage by Government policy the disintegration of the basic unit of society, the family?

The bill before us would eliminate this family instability incentive, and encourage the father to stay and seek employment.

Also, Mr. Chairman, the wide variation in State levels of public assistance permitted under the present welfare system has placed an unfair burden on those States attempting to shoulder the responsibility for their needy and deprived.

With the family assistance program providing a nationwide set of benefits and eligibility standards, these inequities will be eased, and every State system will be relieved to some extent, with an overall reduction of almost $600 million.

There are many other features of this bill, of course, designed to insure that it accomplishes its goal of moving persons from welfare rolls to payrolls. Able-bodied adults will be required to register for work or work training, unless caring for preschool children or sick adults. Day-care facilities will be expanded, to make it possible for welfare mothers to work while their children get adequate supervision. A nationwide, computerized job bank is to be set up, and manpower programs will be bolstered.

Mr. Chairman, this is in no sense a partisan matter. President Nixon's basic proposals are contained in H.R. 16311, along with significant revisions voted by the distinguished House Ways and Means Committee. The bill is supported by groups as diverse as the AFL–CIO and the National Association of Manufacturers. The family assistance plan is designed and intended to offer to the poor not a handout, but rather a hand-up.

Let us extend that encouraging hand in conscientious effort to project wholesome, farsighted reform into an admittedly antiquated welfare system while we remain ever watchful and ready to promptly repair any unexpected weaknesses or even initiate repeal review of the whole program if administration and congressional anticipations are not quickly fulfilled.

Mr. COHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16311. I do so, however, with mixed emotions.

This bill provides for a Federal assistance payment of $1,600 for a family of four with no other income. This basic benefit is increased by the exclusion of the value of food stamps from the definition of earned income so that it is possible to have Federal assistance for a family of four at the level of $2,464.

In addition to this Federal assistance there are provisions for a State supplemental assistance, of which the Federal Government could pay up to 30 percent. These supplemental payments are to be maintained payments at January 1970 AFDC levels or up to the poverty level, which ever is lower. Under the provisions of the bill the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be required to annually update the property levels to reflect the increased cost of living. This bill also consolidates the assistance for the blind, disabled, and aged.

The coverage under this bill will increase those assisted from 7 million to 20 million under family assistance plan—FAP—and from 3 to 4 million under the blind, disabled, and aged. The total Federal-State cost is estimated to be increased by an additional $4.4 billion for FAP including $500 million for blind, disabled and aged and $600 million for job training features and day-care centers.

In analyzing this bill, I share the concern of a number of my colleagues that the $1,600 Federal minimum is inadequate to cover even the barest necessities of food, clothing, and shelter for our less-fortunate citizens. Although this will be increased by the State supplement, I would like to see a cost-of-living feature in the direct Federal contribution. Since this bill comes to the floor under a closed rule, we cannot amend the bill, but I think that the final version should include a higher Federal base and the cost-of-living feature in the Federal contribution so that our poorer citizens are not left out in the cold by fluctuations in our economy.

The coverage of this bill is commendable but in some areas falls short. The bill quite correctly extends coverage to the poverty-level families headed by full-time employed males—working poor—and families where the father is unemployed and at home. This hopefully will curb the trend in the dissolution of the family structure of the poor.

This bill also requires FAP beneficiaries to register for work training and employment. Those specifically exempt are: the aged, disabled, and ill; mothers caring for children under 6 years of age; mothers in cases where father register; citizens caring for ill members of the household; or citizens under 16 or under 21 and in school. All others are required to register. Under the bill, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is required to provide for child-care centers for working mothers and those in job training. These centers can be funded 100 percent by the Federal Government.

The House Ways and Means Committee has to be congratulated because of its improvements over the administration's work-requirement proposals, but I still have serious reservations about the required registration of mothers for job training and job referrals. In addition, I am concerned that there will not be enough high quality day-care centers or job training programs even though they are carefully delineated in the bill. Also, I am not convinced that the food stamp program feature of the family assistance plan should not be replaced by a cash equivalent.

Yet, the bill represents a step ahead of the crumbling AFDC structure it replaces. The AFDC has, as some Members point out, institutionalized poverty. The projected cost of AFDC this year is $4.3 billion, and HEW projects the cost to exceed $12 billion by 1975. This new family assistance program attempts to redress some glaring weaknesses of the present structure:

It establishes Federal standards to eliminate inequitable treatment but the $1,600 Federal minimum seems painfully inadequate;

It extends coverage to families headed by an unemployed father and extends coverage to the working poor;

It will reduce State and regional differences although some States will still have reductions;

It establishes Federal standards and minimums for the Nation's aged, blind, and disabled; and

It attempts through stronger Federal participation to extend job training and job placement.

All of these new directions should be subject to the most rigorous testing and analyses to correct difficulties that arise.

This new family assistance plan is not a panacea for ending poverty but I do feel that it offers an increased opportunity for many of our less-fortunate citizens to break out of the poverty cycle. The existing welfare structure has not been effective, I think the family assistance plan represents a prudent first step in correcting some of its deficiencies.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I am against the passage of H.R. 16311, labeled "the Family Assistance Act of 1970."

There are so many good and valid reasons to oppose the passage of this bill that it becomes a problem to enumerate such reasons in their relative importance or to decide which deserves the greater emphasis. It will take too much time to provide detailed statistics to prove the danger of this bill. But all of these back-up figures can be fully documented and substantiated.

This welfare package is a 100-page bill with an accompanying report of 85 pages. It will entail a first annual Federal cost of $4.4 billion in three categories. By 1975, it is estimated the annual cost will have increased to $7.3 billion.

Under the provisions of this bill a family which consists of the parents and two children will be assigned a family benefit level of $1,600 per year. If their income falls below this amount, supplements will be paid to elevate their income to the $1,600 level. So far as I have been able to find out, this is the first time in the history of our country the Federal Government has agreed by law to provide a guaranteed annual income to its citizens.

In my opinion, this is a wrong turn for our country to take at this time. Regardless of the magnitude of the figures that are involved, under the provisions of this bill, there is a philosophy which is closely akin to a pure socialistic philosophy.

In the present law administered by the States it is true there is aid or welfare for the aged, the badly disabled and the blind. This is true welfare. On the other hand, to pay able-bodied people to do nothing is a shame. Such people who can sit at home and be guaranteed a fixed amount of income may very well soon lose their own self-respect. As much as I deplore the depression conditions which necessitated WPA at least this was a true work program for the able-bodied. With all of the jobs that go begging in our country today, people ought to work and should not be encouraged to stay home in idleness.

Of course we are all mindful of the words that have been used to make this act saleable. It is argued that "workfare" should replace the word "welfare." Yet, careful study of those portions of the bill which require each member of the family to register for employment or training, will reveal there is a long list of exceptions, exclusions as well as a long list of exemptions. One member suggested that the bill took at least three pages of print to provide all the loopholes for those who want to receive welfare but do no work.

One of the worst things about this entire welfare package is that the guaranteed annual income amounts to a kind of foot in the door that could very well be open ended. True, we have established a definite figure for this current year but I have reason to believe that those who vote for this measure today will have opponents campaigning against them who will be promising an increase in guaranteed annual income if they are elected. Each of those who support this bill today should pause long enough to ask themselves the question, Will they be for larger payments next year? And the next year? And the following year?

If we pass this bill today we, in effect, establish a policy that the Federal Government will reward those who will choose to take advantage of every exclusion, exception, and exemption under the beautiful description of workfare. This beginning of a national guaranteed income, instead of proving any kind of an incentive, could well be described as a disincentive to improve earnings or occupational capacities, and a disincentive for recipients to improve their lot in life.

Today, we hear so much about revenue sharing with the States and the desirability of decentralization toward greater State responsibility. Has anyone taken the time to consider what this bill will do to such concepts? It should be recalled that benefits payable under title II of this measure spells out that there must be a State supplement in order to receive Federal funds. The very natural question to follow is how well can the already improverished States afford these additional demands on their treasuries for welfare funds?

In passing, it should be noted that if the present program is repealed a new Federal program is substituted under which the States are forbidden to impose restrictions such as duration of residence requirements and the prohibition of payments to aliens. Then this means that the recipients in low-benefit States will flock to States where higher benefits are paid with the result of further overcrowding of the already teeming cities in those States where higher paying State programs are in effect.

I hope I am making it clear that I am not opposed to all of the provisions of this bill. I am unalterably opposed to that part which commences or begins for the first time a revolutionary guaranteed income plan. Because of the gag rule under which all the Members of this House are muted, muzzled, and have had their voices stilled to offer any amendments, there is no way to eliminate this most objectionable provision, unless the minority is fair enough to offer a motion to recommit or else hope for the defeat of the bill or final passage.

Nearly all of the Members of the House are for welfare reform, but most of us are also against welfare expansion. If the figures which have been made available to me are correct, this bill will provide for tripling the number of persons on welfare. It would add about 3 million more families, or 15 million more persons. These figures have been rather carefully concealed in most of the discussions. It is little wonder that they have, because therein lies the entry wedge for the guaranteed annual income.

The present measure extends the guarantee to families with fully employed fathers. I recognize that the proponents will counter such a statement by saying that if the head of a family refuses to work or take a better-paying job he will lose his welfare. That is true. But what really happens is that his share—$300 per year—will be deducted from the family welfare allotment and the rest of the family allotment will continue to be guaranteed with nothing required and no questions asked about the expenditure of the remainder of the money.

One of the best criteria of the weakness of the so-called workfare section of the bill is that it is the subject of criticism by conservatives because they believe there are too many loopholes and at the same time is the target of criticism by the liberals because there are not enough loopholes. Both groups thus seem to admit that it will take a costly, cumbersome bureaucracy which will grow to supervise the assignment of job opportunities and the training of millions of people if such provisions are to be really and truly enforced. The bill deserves a lot more consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means and should be restudied in detail if we expect to reform our welfare programs rather than the vast expansion of these programs.

Search as carefully and as frequently as you choose and you will find nowhere in this bill any provisions to finance it. Even if all the surplus anticipated by the present administration in this current year's budget materializes, there would not be enough money to pay for the benefits of H.R. 16311. No matter how hard an effort is made to conceal the fact, if this bill is passed, this same Committee on Ways and Means will have to propose a tax increase to pay for this handout. Does this Committee on Ways and Means expect to extend the surtax, with increased rates back to 10 percent in order to finance what has been so cleverly called the Family Assistance Act?

Does the Committee on Ways and Means intend to raise the payroll tax provisions? Do they propose a social security payroll tax increase, doubled in order to provide family assistance benefits? These are questions which no one has answered during this debate and so far as I know, no one has made an attempt to answer.

I had hoped I could be granted a few minutes out of the 6 hours of debate to propound some questions to those three members on the Committee on Ways and Means who were opposed to this bill. Even with 6 hours, like any other Members, I was denied by the floor managers of this bill even a few minutes to interrogate some of the members of the committee. The questions I would have asked would have been to explain how the distinguished members of this most distinguished committee proposed to finance the cost of H.R. 16311. I would have also asked the proponent members of the committee who wrote this measure, to try to explain that if the present program is a failure how do they expect to resuscitate it by spending 4 billion more money on a program that is quite similar, but differing only in the machinery for paying out money for nonproductiveness and adding about 15 million people to the welfare rolls as H.R. 16311 will do?

To recapitulate, our principal objection is directed to that part of the bill which begins guaranteeing incomes to families with employed fathers. Once we start this it could well be that it will not be too long before one-third or more of our national population will be receiving income supplements at a cost of $20 billion more annually. The bill offers no improvement in the present administrative tangle that causes the present welfare program to be so ineffective. As those three members of the committee who joined in dissenting views put it "for all the rhetoric about work incentives the bill merely puts cash payments first."

We commenced consideration of this bill on April 15 which is the day on which everyone in America must file their income tax returns for 1969. It is significant that we conclude debate 1 day later giving all of our taxpayers an additional day to think of the potential impact that this legislation will have upon them in future years.

The truth is that the provisions of H.R. 16311 providing for a guaranteed income is a dangerous snowball that can grow and grow to where it can saddle future generations of taxpayers with an unbearable burden.

Mr. RARICK. Mr. Chairman, our forefathers who carved this civilization out of a wilderness did so without any expectation of a guaranteed income or livelihood. As free men they sought individual liberty under God.

Immigrants from foreign lands who have come to our country to become Americans were not induced by the promise of a guaranteed dole—most sought escape from tyranny, and a chance for a better life through freedom.

I care not what name it bears, any measure of law which would take from the worker and give to the nonproducer—who is not ill or handicapped—is recognized by the people as a guaranteed income plan—legalized theft. It is an accursed philosophy which will demoralize every worker.

Have we not tormented and politically exploited the poor long enough? Must they be blamed further? For, ironically, the motivating force behind this sinister plan flows stronger from the wealthy—the successful and upper-income groups of our society—than from the misfortunate poor who do not understand who benefits from controlled economics.

Who gains from distribution-of-the-wealth programs? In four generations of rehabilitative welfare, many of the same families remain on welfare while the rich, the manipulators of the program, have become richer.

Few among us would have ever feared that a controlled Socialist plan such as guaranteed income would be the announced goal and program of a Republican President. Had this proposal arisen under a Democratic President, one doubts it could have received such a bipartisan support?

The positive thinkers urge us to look at the good side of the plan—to ignore the evil—while the progressives say give the plan a chance to see what will happen.

I say neither time or experience is needed to know a scheme born of upside down fantasy. Socialism but begets socialism.

In our lifetime we have seen empire building by a central government under both national parties exert more and more power and control over our lives and institutions, and, as always, through the inducement of our moneys.

Federal funds are but followed with Federal control. Witness the downfall of State authority, local government, industries, public schools, labor unions, and now this latest attack on the basic unit of our society—our families.

This bill is a menace to the family—with its expected guidelines and the ever-present threat of a removal of funds for noncompliance with some bureaucrat's ideological dictates.

Today's bill places a ceiling of $1,600 a year for coverage. Who will guarantee that next year the ante will not be $10,000 or $20,000?

We have all witnessed socialism with its foot-in-the-door advance. It survives only on growth and requires expansion to bring more and more people under its nefarious umbrella.

If H.R. 16311 passes this body and becomes law, we are participating in the creation of a new feudal system in the United States, in which case we are attending the funeral of the American traditions of our fathers—work, pride, thrift and individuality.

The class war will then have officially been instituted.

I would never cast my people's one vote for such an un-American measure.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time. I had some time to reserve for myself, but I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments are in order to the bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Are there any committee amendments?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, there are no committee amendments.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential motion. Is it in order to offer a preferential motion at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman advise the Chair what sort of preferential motion he has in mind?

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. To strike the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the gentleman from Texas that that motion is not in order unless amendments are in order, and are offered. There being no committee amendments, that motion will not be in order at this time.

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire, if there are no committee amendments to be offered, if the bill is perfected?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the gentleman from Texas that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. MILLS), has just advised the Chair that there are no committee amendments. That being so, the motion is not in order at this time.

Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DINGELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 16311) to authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 916, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Speaker a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Speaker I have a preferential motion which was not permitted to be made in the Committee of the Whole. The preferential motion is to strike the enacting clause. Is it in order in the House at this time?

The SPEAKER. Due to the fact that the previous question has been ordered on the bill to final passage, the motion is not in order at this time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. COLLIER

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. COLLIER. In its present form I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Speaker, is it not true under the rules of the House that the motion to recommit should go to one who is unqualifiedly opposed to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that a Member who states that he is opposed to the bill in its present form qualifies.

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Speaker, is that not a modification of the rule that a Member in order to qualify must be opposed to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COLLIER) qualifies because he has stated he is in opposition to the bill in its present form, which is the bill now before the House.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has repeatedly stated, as recently as a few minutes ago, that he firmly supports the bill.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I said I firmly support the principle and the concept of the bill. That is what I said, but I am opposed to the bill in its present form.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has stated that he is opposed to the bill in its present form. Therefore, the gentleman, with that statement, and upon his responsibility, qualifies.

The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLIER moves to recommit the bill (H.R. 16311) to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendments:

Page 21, line 1, strike out "suitable".

Page 21, lines 2 and 3, strike out "suitable".

Strike out line 21 on page 21 and all that follows down through line 17 on page 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) No family shall be denied benefits under this part, or have its benefits under this part reduced, because an individual who is (or would, but for subsection (a), be) a member of such family refuses work under any of the following conditions:

"(1) if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lockout, or other labor dispute;

"(2) if the wages, hours, or other terms or conditions of the work offered are contrary to or less than those prescribed by Federal, State, or local law or are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality;

"(3) if, as a condition of being employed, the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization; or

"(4) if the individual has the demonstrated capacity, through other available training or employment opportunities, of securing work that would better enable him to achieve self-sufficiency."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 69, noes 60.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 248, nays 149, not voting 33, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I have a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his motion?

Mr. HAYS. I move that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that that motion is not in order. The Chair passed on it awhile ago. That motion is not in order.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the instructions of the House in the motion to recommit, I report back the bill with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment:

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

H.R. 16311

An act to authorize a family assistance plan providing basic benefits to low-income families with children, to provide incentives for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, to achieve greater uniformity of treatment of recipients under the Federal-State public assistance programs and to otherwise improve such programs, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, with the following table of contents, may be cited as the "Family Assistance Act of 1970".

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TITLE I—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

SEC. 101. Title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) is amended by adding after part C the following new parts:

"PART D—FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 441. For the purpose of providing a basic level of financial assistance throughout the Nation to needy families with children, in a manner which will strengthen family life, encourage work training and self-support, and enhance personal dignity, there is authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year a sum sufficient to carry out this part.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"Eligibility

"SEC. 442. (a) Each family (as defined in section 445)—

"(1) whose income, other than income excluded pursuant to section 443(b), is less than—

"(A) $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family, plus

"(B) $300 per year for each additional member, and

"(2) whose resources, other than resources excluded pursuant to section 444, are less than $1,500, shall, in accordance with and subject to the other provisions of this title, be paid a family assistance benefit.

"Amount

"(b) The family assistance benefit for a family shall be payable at the rate of—

"(1) $500 per year for each of the first two members of the family, plus

"(2) $300 per year for each additional member, reduced by the amount of income, not excluded pursuant to section 443(b), of the members of the family.

"Period for Determination of Benefits

"(c)(1) A family's eligibility for and its amount of family assistance benefits shall be determined for each quarter of a calendar year. Such determination shall be made on the basis of the Secretary's estimate of the family's income for such quarter, after taking into account income for a preceding period and any modifications in income which are likely to occur on the basis of changes in conditions or circumstances. Eligibility for and the amount of benefits of a family for any quarter shall be redetermined at such time or times as may be provided by the Secretary, such redetermination to be effective prospectively.

"(2) The Secretary shall by regulation prescribe the cases in which and extent to which the amount of a family assistance benefit for any quarter shall be reduced by reason of the time elapsing since the beginning of such quarter and before the date of filing of the application for the benefit.

"(3) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which income received in one period (or expense incurred in one period in earning income) shall, for purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits, be considered as received (or incurred) in another period or periods.

"Special Limits on Gross Income

"(d) The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, prescribe the circumstances under which the gross income from a trade or business (including farming) will be considered sufficiently large to make such family ineligible for such benefits.

"Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam

"(e) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"INCOME

"Meaning of Income

"SEC. 443. (a) For purposes of this part, income means both earned income and unearned income; and—

"(1) earned income means only—

"(A) remuneration for services performed as an employee (as defined in section 210(j)), other than remuneration to which section 209 (b), (c), (d), (f), or (k), or section 211, would apply; and

"(B) net earnings from self-employment, as defined in section 211 (without the application of the second and third sentences following clause (C) of subsection (a)(9)), including earnings for services described in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of subsection (c); and

"(2) unearned income means all other income including—

"(A) any payments received as an annuity, pension, retirement, or disability benefit, including veteran's or workmen's compensation and old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, railroad retirement, and unemployment benefits;

"(B) prizes and awards;

"(C) the proceeds of any life insurance policy;

"(D) gifts (cash or otherwise), support and alimony payments, and inheritances; and

"(E) rents, dividends, interest, and royalties.

"Exclusions From Income

"(b) In determining the income of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) subject to limitations (as to amount or otherwise) prescribed by the Secretary, the earned income of each child in the family who is, as determined by the Secretary under regulations, a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment;

"(2)(A) the total unearned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $30 in such quarter, and (B) the total earned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which, as determined in accordance with such criteria, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $30 in such quarter;

"(3) an amount of earned income of a member of the family equal to all, or such part (and according to such schedule) as the Secretary may prescribe, of the cost incurred by such member for child care which the Secretary deems necessary to securing or continuing in manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, employment, or self-employment;

"(4) the first $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods) of the total of earned income (not excluded by the preceding paragraphs of this subsection) of all members of the family plus one-half of the remainder thereof;

"(5) food stamps or any other assistance (except veterans' pensions) which is based on need and furnished by any State or political subdivision of a State or any Federal agency, or by any private charitable agency or organization (as determined by the Secretary);

"(6) allowances under section 432(a);

"(7) any portion of a scholarship or fellowship received for use in paying the cost of tuition and fees at any educational (including technical or vocational education) institution; and

"(8) home produce of a member of the family utilized by the household for its own consumption.

"RESOURCES

"Exclusions from resources

"SEC. 444. (a) In determining the resources of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) the home, household goods, and personal effects; and

"(2) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion.

"DISPOSITION OF RESOURCES

"(b) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to the period or periods of time within which, and the manner in which, various kinds of property must be disposed of in order not to be included in determining a family's eligibility for family assistance benefits. Any portion of the family's benefits paid for any such period shall be conditioned upon such disposal; and any benefits so paid shall (at the time of the disposal) be considered over-payments to the extent they would not have been paid had the disposal occurred at the beginning of the period for which such benefits were paid.

"MEANING OF FAMILY AND CHILD

"Composition of Family

"SEC. 445. (a) Two or more individuals—

"(1) who are related by blood, marriage, or adoption,

"(2) who are living in a place of residence maintained by one or more of them as his or their own home,

"(3) who are residents of the United States, and

"(4) at least one of whom is a child who (A) is not married to another of such individuals and (B) is in the care of or dependent upon another of such individuals, shall be regarded as a family for purposes of this part and parts A, C, and E. A parent (of a child living in a place of residence referred to in paragraph (2)), or a spouse of such a parent, who is determined by the Secretary to be temporarily absent from such place of residence for the purpose of engaging in or seeking employment or self-employment (including military service) shall nevertheless be considered (for purposes of paragraph (2)) to be living in such place of residence.

"Definition of Child

"(b) For purposes of this part and parts C and E, the term 'child' means an individual who is (1) under the age of eighteen, or (2) under the age of twenty-one and (as determined by the Secretary under regulations) a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment.

"Determination of Family Relationships

"(c) In determining whether an individual is related to another individual by blood, marriage, or adoption, appropriate State law shall be applied.

"Income and Resources of Noncontributing Adult

"(d) For purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of family assistance benefits for any family there shall be excluded the income and resources of any individual, other than a parent of a child (or a spouse of a parent), which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is not available to other members of the family; and for such purposes such individual—

"(1) in the case of a child, shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determining the family's eligibility for such benefits but not for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits, and

"(2) in any other case, shall not be considered a member of the family for any purpose.

"Recipients of Aid to the Aged, Blind, and Disabled Ineligible

"(e) If an individual is receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under a State plan approved under title XVI, or if his needs are taken into account in determining the need of another person receiving such aid, then, for the period for which such aid is received, such individual shall not be regarded as a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the family assistance benefits of the family.

"PAYMENTS AND PROCEDURES

"Payments of Benefits

"SEC. 446. (a)(1) Family assistance benefits shall be paid at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary determines will best effectuate the purposes of this title.

"(2) Payment of the family assistance benefit of any family may be made to any one or more members of the family, or, if the Secretary deems it appropriate, to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(3) The Secretary may by regulation establish ranges of incomes within which a single amount of family assistance benefit shall apply.

"Overpayments and Underpayments

"(b) Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of family assistance benefits has been paid with respect to any family, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments to the family or by recovery from or payment to any one or more of the individuals who are or were members thereof. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropirate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with respect to a family with a view to avoiding penalizing members of the family who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this part, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration of this part.

"Hearings and Review

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall provide reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any individual who is or claims to be a member of a family and is in disagreement with any determination under this part with respect to eligibility of the family for family assistance benefits, the number of members of the family, or the amount of the benefits, if such individual requests a hearing on the matter in disagreement within thirty days after notice of such determination is received. Until a determination is made on the basis of such hearing or upon disposition of the matter through default, withdrawal of the request by the individual, or revision of the initial determination by the Secretary, any amounts which are payable (or would be payable but for the matter in disagreement) to any individual who has been determined to be a member of such family shall continue to be paid; but any amounts so paid for periods prior to such determination or disposition shall be considered overpayments to the extent they would not have been paid had such determination or disposition occurred at the same time as the Secretary's initial determination on the matter in disagreement.

"(2) Determination on the basis of such hearing shall be made within ninety days after the individual requests the hearing as provided in paragraph (1).

"(3) The final determination of the Secretary after a hearing under paragraph (1) shall be subject to judicial review as provided in section 205(g) to the same extent as the Secretary's final determinations under section 205; except that the determination of the Secretary after such hearing as to any fact shall be final and conclusive and not subject to review by any court.

"Procedures; Prohibition of Assignments

"(d) The provisions of sections 206 and 207 and subsections (a), (d), (e), and (f) of section 205 shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as they apply in the case of title II:

"Applications and Furnishing of Information by Families

"(e)(1) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations applicable to families or members thereof with respect to the filing of applications, the furnishing of other data and material, and the reporting of events and changes in circumstances, as may be necessary to determine eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits.

"(2) In order to encourage prompt reporting of events and changes in circumstances relevant to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, and more accurate estimates of expected income or expenses by members of families for purposes of such eligibility and amount of benefits, the Secretary may prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which—

"(A) failure to so report or delay in so reporting, or

"(B) inaccuracy of information which is furnished by the members and on which the estimates of income or expenses for such purposes are based, will result in treatment as overpayments of all or any portion of payments of such benefits for the period involved.

"Furnishing of Information by Other Agencies

"(f) The head of any Federal agency shall provide such information as the Secretary needs for purposes of determining eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, or verifying other information with respect thereto.

"REGISTRATION AND REFERRAL OF FAMILY MEMBERS FOR MANPOWER SERVICES TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 447. (a) Every individual who is a member of a family which is found to be eligible for family assistance benefits, other than a member to whom the Secretary finds paragraph (1), (2), (3), (4), or (5) of subsection (b) applies, shall register for manpower services, training, and employment with the local public employment office of the State as provided by regulations of the Secretary of Labor. If and for so long as any such individual is found by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to have failed to so register, he shall not be regarded as a member of a family but his income which would otherwise be counted under this part as income of a family shall be so counted; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for family assistance benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for purposes of determination of the amount of such benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(b) An individual shall not be required to register pursuant to subsection (a) if the Secretary determines that such individual is—

"(1) unable to engage in work or training by reason of illness, incapacity, or advanced age;

"(2) a mother or other relative of a child under the age of six who is caring for such child;

"(3) the mother or other female caretaker of a child, if the father or another adult male relative is in the home and not excluded by paragraph (1), (2), (4), or (5) of this subsection (unless the second sentence of subsection (a), or section 448(a), is applicable to him);

"(4) a child who is under the age of sixteen or meets the requirements of section 445(b)(2); or

"(5) one whose presence in the home on a substantially continuous basis is required because of the illness or incapacity of another member of the household.

An individual who would, but for the preceding sentence, be required to register pursuant to subsection (a), may, if he wishes, register as provided in such subsection.

"(c) The Secretary shall make provision for the furnishing of child care services in such cases and for so long as he deems appropriate in the case of (1) individuals registered pursuant to subsection (a) who are, pursuant to such registration, participating in manpower services, training, or employment, and (2) individuals referred pursuant to subsection (d) who are, pursuant to such referral, participating in vocational rehabilitation.

"(d) In the case of any member of a family receiving family assistance benefits who is not required to register pursuant to subsection (a) because of such member's incapacity, the Secretary shall make provision for referral of such member to the appropriate State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, and (except in such cases involving permanent incapacity as the Secretary may determine) for a review not less often than quarterly of such member's incapacity and his need for and utilization of the rehabilitation services made available to him under such plan. If and for so long as such member is found by the Secretary to have refused without good cause to accept rehabilitation services available to him under such plan, he shall be treated as an individual to whom subsection (a) is applicable by reason of refusal to accept or participate in employment or training.

"DENIAL OF BENEFITS IN CASE OF REFUSAL OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, OR EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 448. (a) For purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits under this part, an individual who has registered as required under section 447(a) shall not be regarded as a member of a family, but his income which would otherwise be counted as income of the family under this part shall be so counted, if and for so long as he has been found by the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing (which shall be held in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as a hearing under section 446(c)(1) and (2)), to have refused without good cause to participate or continue to participate in manpower services, training, or employment, or to have refused without good cause to accept employment in which he is able to engage which is offered through the public employment offices of the State, or is otherwise offered by an employer if the offer of such employer is determined by the Secretary of Labor, after notification by such employer or otherwise, to be a bona fide offer of employment; except that if such individual is the only member of the family other than a child, such individual shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determination of the family's eligibility for benefits, but not (except for counting his income) for the purposes of determination of the amount of its benefits. No part of the family assistance benefits of any such family may be paid to such individual during the period for which the preceding sentence is applicable to him; and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for payment of such benefits during such period to any person, other than a member of such family, who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family.

"(b) No family shall be denied benefits under this part, or have its benefits under this part reduced, because an individual who is (or would, but for subsection (a), be) a member of such family refuses to work under any of the following conditions:

"(1) if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lockout, or other labor dispute;

"(2) if the wages, hours, or other terms or conditions of the work offered are contrary to or less than those prescribed by Federal, State, or local law or are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality;

"(3) if, as a condition of being employed, the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization; or

"(4) if the individual has the demonstrated capacity, through other available training or employment opportunities, of securing work that would better enable him to achieve self-sufficiency."

"TRANSFER OF FUNDS FOR ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS

"SEC. 449. The Secretary shall, pursuant to and to the extent provided by agreement with the Secretary of Labor, pay to the Secretary of Labor amounts which he estimates would be paid as family assistance benefits under this part to individuals participating in public or private employer compensated on-the-job training under a program of the Secretary of Labor if they were not participating in such training. Such amounts shall be available to pay the costs of such programs.

PART E—STATE SUPPLEMENTATION OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS

"PAYMENTS UNDER TITLES IV, V, XVI, AND XIX CONDITIONED ON SUPPLEMENTATION

"SEC. 451. In order for a State to be eligible for payments pursuant to title V, XVI, or XIX, or part A or B of this title, with respect to expenditures for any quarter beginning on or after the date this part becomes effective with respect to such State, it must have in effect an agreement with the Secretary under which it will make supplementary payments, as provided in this part, to any family other than a family in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed.

"ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

"SEC. 452. (a) Eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments under the agreement with any State under this part shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be determined by application of the provisions of, and rules and regulations under, sections 442(a)(2), (c), and (d), 443(a), 444, 445, 446 (to the extent the Secretary deems appropriate), 447, and 448, and by application of the standard for determining need under the plan of such State as in effect for January 1970 (which standard complies with the requirements for approval under part A as in effect for such month) or, if lower, a standard equal to the applicable poverty level determined pursuant to section 453(c) and in effect at the time of such payments, or such higher standard of need as the State may apply, with the resulting amount reduced by the family assistance benefit payable under part D and further reduced by any other income (earned or unearned) not excluded under section 443(b) (except paragraph (4) thereof) or under subsection (b) of this section; but in making such determination the State may impose limitations on the amount of aid paid to the extent that such limitations (in combination with other provisions of the plan) are no more stringent in result than those imposed under the plan of such State as in effect for such month. In the case of any State which provides for meeting less than 100 per centum of its standard of need or provides for considering less than 100 per centum of requirements in determining need, the Secretary shall prescribe by regulation the method or methods for achieving as nearly as possible the results provided for under the foregoing provisions of this subsection.

"(b) For purposes of determining eligibility for and amount of supplementary payments to a family for any period pursuant to an agreement under this part, in the case of earned income to which paragraph (4) of section 443(b) applies, there shall be disregarded $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods), plus—

(1) one-third of the portion of the remainder of earnings which does not exceed twice the amount of the family assistance benefits that would be payable to the family if it had no income, plus

(2) one-fifth (or more if the Secretary by regulation so prescribes) of the balance of the earnings.

For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"(c) The agreement with a State under this part shall—

"(1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State;

"(2) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to carry out or supervise the carrying out of the agreement in the State;

"(3) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency carrying out the agreement to any individual whose claim for supplementary payments is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(4) provide (A) such methods of administration (including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods) as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the agreement in the State, and (B) for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff, with particular emphasis on the full- or part-time employment of recipients of supplementary payments and other persons of low income, as community services aides, in carrying out the agreement and for the use of nonpaid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that the State agency carrying out the agreement will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(6) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants for and recipients of supplementary payments to purposes directly connected with the administration of this title; and

"(7) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for supplementary payments shall have opportunity to do so, and that supplementary payments shall be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 453. (a)(1) The Secretary shall pay to any State which has in effect an agreement under this part, for each fiscal year, an amount equal to 30 per centum of the total amount expended during such year pursuant to its agreement as supplementary payments to families other than families in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not employed, not counting so much of the supplementary payment made to any family as exceeds the amount by which (with respect to the period involved)—

"(A) the family assistance benefit payable to such family under part D, plus any income of such family (earned or unearned) not disregarded in determining the amount of such supplementary payment, is less than

"(B) the applicable poverty level as promulgated and in effect under subsection (c)

"(2) The Secretary shall also pay to each such State an amount equal to 50 per centum of its administrative costs found necessary by the Secretary for carrying out its agreement.

"(b) Payments under subsection (a) shall be made at such time or times, in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in such installments as the Secretary may determine; and shall be made on such conditions as may be necessary to assure the carrying out of the purposes of this title.

"(c)(1) For purposes of this part, the 'poverty level' for a family group of any given size shall be the amount shown for a family group of such size in the following table, adjusted as provided in paragraph (2):

"Family size:	Basic amount
One	$1,920
Two	2,460
Three	2,940
Four	3,720
Five	4,440
Six	4,980
Seven or more	6,120

"(2) Between July 1 and September 30 of each year, beginning with 1970, the Secretary (A) shall adjust the amount shown for each size of family group in the table in paragraph (1) by increasing such amount by the percentage by which the average level of the price index for the months in the calendar quarter beginning April 1 of such year exceeds the average level of the price index for months in 1969, and (B) shall thereupon promulgate the amounts so adjusted as the poverty levels for family groups of various sizes which shall be conclusive for purposes of this part for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation.

"(3) As used in this subsection, the term 'price index' means the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"FAILURE BY STATE TO COMPLY WITH ARGEEMENT

"SEC. 454. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to a State with which he has an agreement under this part, finds that such State is failing to comply therewith, he shall withhold all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of the payments to which such State is otherwise entitled under this part or part A or B of this title or under title V, XVI, or XIX; but the amounts so withheld from payments under such part A or B or under title V, XVI, or XIX shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such part or title. Such withholding shall be effected at such time or times and in such installments as the Secretary may deem appropriate.

"PART F—ADMINISTRATION

"AGREEMENTS WITH STATES

"SEC. 461. (a) The Secretary may enter into an agreement with any State under which the Secretary will make, on behalf of the State, the supplementary payments provided for under part E, or will perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon, or both. In any such case, the agreement shall also (1) provide for payment by the State to the Secretary of an amount equal to the supplementary payments the State would otherwise make pursuant to part E, less any payments which would be made to the State under section 453(a), and (2) at the request of the State, provide for joint audit of payments under the agreement.

"(b) The Secretary may also enter into an agreement with any State under which such State will make, on behalf of the Secretary, the family assistance benefit payments provided for under part D with respect to all or specified families in the State who are eligible for such benefits or will perform such other functions in connection with the administration of part D as may be agreed upon. The cost of carrying out any such agreement shall be paid to the State by the Secretary in advance or by way of reimbursement and in such installments as may be agreed upon.

"PENALTIES FOR FRAUD

"SEC. 462. The provisions of section 208, other than paragraph (a), shall apply with respect to benefits under part D and allowances under part C, of this title, to the same extent as they apply to payments under title II.

"REPORT, EVALUATION, RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATIONS, AND TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 463. (a) The Secretary shall make an annual report to the President and the Congress on the operation and administration of parts D and E, including an evaluation thereof in carrying out the purposes of such parts and recommendations with respect thereto. The Secretary is authorized to conduct evaluations directly or by grants or contracts of the programs authorized by such parts.

"(b) The Secretary is authorized to conduct, directly or by grants or contracts, research into or demonstrations of ways of better providing financial assistance to needy persons or of better carrying out the purposes of part D, and in so doing to waive any requirements or limitations in such part with respect to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits for such family, members of families, or groups thereof as he deems appropriate.

"(c) The Secretary is authorized to provide such technical assistance to States, and to provide, directly or through grants or contracts, for such training of personnel of States, as he deems appropriate to assist them in more efficiently and effectively carrying out their agreements under this part and part E.

"(d) In addition to funds otherwise available therefor, such portion of any appropriation to carry out part D or E as the Secretary may determine, but not in excess of $20,000,000 in any fiscal year, shall be available to him to carry out this section.

"OBLIGATION OF DESERTING PARENTS

"SEC. 464. In any case where an individual has deserted or abandoned his spouse or his child or children and such spouse or any such child (during the period of such desertion or abandonment) is a member of a family receiving family assistance benefits under part D or supplementary payments under part E, such individual shall be obligated to the United States in an amount equal to—

"(1) the total amount of the family assistance benefits paid to such family during such period with respect to such spouse and child or children, plus the amount paid by the Secretary under section 453 on account of the supplementary payments made to such family during such period with respect to such spouse and child or children, reduced by

"(2) any amount actually paid by such individual to or for the support and maintenance of such spouse and child or children during such period, if and to the extent that such amount is excluded in determining the amount of such family assistance benefits; except that in any case where an order for the support and maintenance of such spouse or any such child has been issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, the obligation of such individual under this subsection (with respect to such spouse or child) for any period shall not exceed the amount specified in such order less any amount actually paid by such individual (to or for the support and maintenance of such spouse or child) during such period. The amount due the United States under such obligation shall be collected (to the extent that the claim of the United States therefor is not otherwise satisfied), in such manner as may be specified by the Secretary, from any amounts otherwise due him or becoming due him at any time from any officer or agency of the United States or under any Federal program. Amounts collected under the preceding sentence shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"TREATMENT OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS AS INCOME FOR FOOD STAMP PURPOSES

"SEC. 465. Family assistance benefits paid under this title shall be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining the entitlement of any household to purchase food stamps, and the cost thereof, under the food stamp program conducted under the Food Stamp Act of 1964."

MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, CHILD CARE, AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES PROGRAMS

SEC. 102. Part C of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 630 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"PART C—MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, CHILD CARE AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES PROGRAMS FOR RECIPIENTS OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS OR SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS

PURPOSE

"SEC. 430. The purpose of this part is to authorize provision, for individuals who are members of a family receiving benefits under part D or supplementary payments pursuant to part E, of manpower services, training, employment, child care, and related supportive services necessary to train such individuals, prepare them for employment, and otherwise assist them in securing and retaining regular employment and having the opportunity for advancement in employment, to the end that needy families with children will be restored to self-supporting, independent, and useful roles in their communities.

"OPERATION OF MANPOWER SERVICES, TRAINING, AND EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

"SEC. 431. (a) The Secretary of Labor shall, for each person registered pursuant to part D, in accordance with priorities prescribed by him, develop or assure the development of an employability plan describing the manpower services, training, and employment which the Secretary of Labor determines each person needs in order to enable him to become self-supporting and secure and retain employment and opportunities for advancement.

"(b) The Secretary of Labor shall, in accordance with the provisions of this part, establish and assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment programs in each State for persons registered pursuant to part D or receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E.

"(c) The Secretary of Labor shall, through such programs, provide or assure the provision of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities necessary to prepare such persons for and place them in regular employment, including—

"(1) any of such services, training, employment, and opportunities which the Secretary of Labor is authorized to provide under any other Act;

"(2) counseling, testing, coaching, program orientation, institutional and on-the-job training, work experience, upgrading, job development, job placement, and follow up services required to assist in securing and retaining employment and opportunities for advancement;

"(3) relocation assistance (including grants, loans, and the furnishing of such services as will aid an involuntarily unemployed individual who desires to relocate to do so in an area where there is assurance of regular suitable employment, offered through the public employment offices of the State in such area, which will lead to the earning of income sufficient to make such individual and his family ineligible for benefits under part D and supplementary payments under part E); and

"(4) specal work projects.

"(d)(1) For purposes of subsection (c)(4), a 'special work project' is a project (meeting the requirements of this subsection) which consists of the performance of work in the public interest through grants to or contracts with public or nonprofit private agencies or organizations.

"(2) No wage rates provided under any special work project shall be lower than the applicable minimum wage for the particular work concerned.

"(3) Before entering into any special work project under a program established as provided in subsection (b), the Secretary of Labor shall have reasonable assurances that—

"(A) appropriate standards for the health, safety, and other conditions applicable to the performance of work and training on such projects are established and will be maintained,

"(B) such project will not result in the displacement of employed workers,

"(C) with respect to such project the conditions of work, training, education, and employment are reasonable in the light of such factors as the type of work, geographical region, and proficiency of the participant,

"(D) appropriate workmen's compensation protection is provided to all participants, and

"(E) such project will improve the employability of the participants.

"(4) With respect to individuals who are participants in special work projects under programs established as provided in subsection (b), the Secretary of Labor shall periodicaly (at least once every six months) review the employment record of each such individual while on the special work project and on the basis of such record and such other information as he may acquire determine whether it would be feasible to place such individual in regular employment or in on-the-job, institutional, or other training.

"ALLOWANCES FOR INDIVIDUALS UNDERGOING TRAINING

"SEC. 432. (a)(1) The Secretary of Labor shall pay to each individual who is a member of a family and is participating in manpower training under this part an incentive allowance of $30 per month. If one or more members of a family are receiving training for which training allowances are payable under section 203 of the Manpower Development and Training Act and meet the other reqirements under such section (except subsection (l) (1) thereof) for the receipt of allowances which would be in excess of the sum of the family assistance benefit under part D and supplementary payments pursuant to part E payable with respect to such month to the family, the total of the incentive allowances per month under this section for such members shall be equal to the greater of (1) the amount of such excess or, if lower, the amount of the excess of the training allowances which would be payable under such section 203 as in effect on March 1, 1970, over the sum of such family assistance benefit and such supplementary payments, and (2) $30 for each such member.

"(2) The Secretary of Labor shall, in accordance with regulations, also pay, to any member of a family participating in manpower training under this part, allowances for transportation and other costs to him which are necessary to and directly related to his participation in training.

"(3) The Secretary of Labor shall by regulation provide for such smaller allowances under this subsection as he deems appropriate for individuals in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

"(b) Allowances under this section shall be in lieu of allowances provided for participants in manpower training programs under any other Act.

"(c) Subsection (a) shall not apply to any member of a family who is participating in a program of the Secretary of Labor providing public or private employer compensated on-the-job training.

"UTILIZATION OF OTHER PROGRAMS

"SEC. 433. In providing the manpower training and employment services and opportunities required by this part the Secretary of Labor, to the maximum extent feasible, shall assure that such services and opportunities are provided in such manner, through such means, and using all authority available to him under any other Act (and subject to all duties and responsibilities thereunder) as will further the establishment of an integrated and comprehensive manpower training program involving all sectors of the economy and all levels of government and as will make maximum use of existing manpower and manpower related programs and agencies. To such end the Secretary of Labor may use the funds appropriated to him under this part to provide the programs required by this part through such other Act, to the same extent and under the same conditions as if appropriated under such other Act and in making use of the programs of other Federal, State, or local agencies, public or private, the Secretary may reimburse such agencies for services rendered to persons under this part to the extent such services and opportunities are not otherwise available on a nonreimbursable basis.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"SEC. 434. The Secretary of Labor may issue such rules and regulations as he finds necessary to carry out his responsibilities under this part.

"APPROPRIATIONS; NONFEDERAL SHARE

"SEC. 435. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Labor for each fiscal year a sum sufficient for carrying out the purposes of this part (other than sections 436 and 437), including payment of not to exceed 90 per centum of the cost of manpower services, training, and employment and opportunities provided for individuals registered pursuant to section 447. The Secretary of Labor shall establish criteria to achieve an equitable apportionment among the States of Federal expenditures for carrying out the programs authorized by section 431. In developing these criteria the Secretary of Labor shall consider the number of registrations under section 447 and other relevant factors.

"(b) If a non-Federal contribution of 10 per centum of the cost specified in subsection (a) is not made in any State (as required by section 402(a)(13)), the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may withhold any action under section 404 on account thereof and if he does so he shall instead, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the appropriate State agency or agencies, withhold any payments to be made to the State under sections 403 (a), 453, 1604, and 1903(a) until the amount so withheld (including any amounts contributed by the State pursuant to the requirement in section 402(a)(13)) equals 10 per centum of such costs. Such withholding shall remain in effect until such time as the Secretary of Labor has assurances from the State that such 10 per centum will be contributed as required by section 402(a)(13). Amounts so withheld shall be deemed to have been paid to the State under such sections and shall be paid by the Secretary of Heatlh, Education, and Welfare to the Secretary of Labor.

"SEC. 436. (a)(1) For the purpose of assuring that individuals receiving benefits under part D or supplementary payments pursuant to part E will not be prevented from participating in training or employment by the unavailability of appropriate child care, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization, for part or all of the cost of projects for the provision of child care, including necessary transportation and alteration, remodeling, and renovation of facilities, which may be necessary or appropriate in order to better enable an individual who has been registered pursuant to part D or is receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part, or to enable an individual who has been referred pursuant to section 447(d) to participate in vocational rehabilitation, or to enable a member of a family which is or has been (within such period of time as the Secretary may prescribe) eligible for benefits under such part D or payments pursuant to such part E to undertake or continue manpower training or employment under this part; or, with respect to the period prior to the date when part D becomes effective for a State, to better enable an individual who is receiving aid to families with dependent children, or whose needs are taken into account in determining the need of any one claiming or receiving such aid, to participate in manpower training or employment.

"(2) Such grants or contracts for the provision of child care in any area may be made directly, or through grants to any public or nonprofit private agency which is designated by the appropriate elected or appointed official or officials in such area and which demonstrates a capacity to work effectively with the manpower agency in such area (including provision for the stationing of personnel with the manpower team in appropriate cases). To the extent appropriate, such care for children attending school which is provided on a group or institutional basis shall be provided through arrangements with the appropriate local educational agency.

"(3) Such projects shall provide for various types of child care needed in the light of the different circumstances and needs of the children involved.

"(b) Such sums shall also be available to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization, and contracts with any public or private agency or organization, for evaluation, training of personnel, technical assistance, or research or demonstration projects to determine more effective methods of providing any such care.

"(c) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may provide, in any case in which a family is able to pay for part or all of the cost of child care provided under a project assisted under this section, for payment by the family of such fees for the care as may be reasonable in the light of such ability.

"SUPPORTIVE SERVICES

"SEC. 437. (a) No payments shall be made to any State under title V, XVI, or XIX, or part A or B of this title, with respect to expenditures for any calendar quarter beginning on or after the date part D becomes effective with respect to such State, unless it has in effect an agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare under which it will provide health, vocational rehabilitation, counseling, social, and other supportive services which the Secretary under regulations determines to be necessary to permit an individual who has been registered pursuant to part D or is receiving supplementary payments pursuant to part E to undertake or continue manpower training and employment under this part.

"(b) Services under such an agreement shall be provided in close cooperation with manpower training and employment services provided under this part.

"(c) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall from time to time, in such installments and on such conditions as he deems appropriate, pay to any State with which he has an agreement pursuant to subsection (a) up to 90 per centum of the cost of such State of carrying out such agreement. There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

"ADVANCE FUNDING

"SEC. 438. (a) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available under this part, appropriations for grants, contracts, or other payments with respect to individuals registered pursuant to section 447 are authorized to be included in the appropriation Act for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which they are available for obligation.

"(b) In order to effect a transition to the advance funding method of timing appropriation action, subsection (a) shall apply notwithstanding that its initial application will result in enactment in the same year (whether in the same appropriation Act or otherwise) of two separate appropriations, one for the then current fiscal year and one for the succeeding fiscal year.

"EVALUATION AND RESEARCH; REPORTS TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 439. (a)(1) The Secretary shall (jointly with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare) provide for the continuing evaluation of the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part, including their effectiveness in achieving stated goals and their impact on other related programs. The Secretary may conduct research regarding, and demonstrations of, ways to improve the effectiveness of the manpower training and employment programs so provided and may also conduct demonstrations of improved training techniques for upgrading the skills of the working poor. The Secretary may, for these purposes, contract for independent evaluations of and research regarding such programs or individual projects under such programs, and establish a data collection, processing, and retrieval system.

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums, not exceeding $15,000,000 for any fiscal year, as may be necessary to carry out paragraph (1).

"(b) On or before September 1 following each fiscal year in which part D is effective with respect to any State—

"(1) the Secretary shall report to the Congress on the manpower training and employment programs provided under this part in such fiscal year, and

"(2) the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall report to the Congress on the child care and supportive services provided under this part in such fiscal year."

(2) Section 422(a) (1) (B) of such Act is amended by striking out "provided for dependent children" and inserting in lieu thereof "provided with respect to needy families with children".

(o) References in any law, regulation, State plan, or other document to any provision of part A of title IV of the Social Security Act which is redesignated by this section shall (from and after the effective date of the amendments made by this Act) be considered to be references to such provision as so redesignated.

CHANGES IN HEADINGS

SEC. 104. (a) The heading of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601, et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE IV—FAMILY ASSISTANCE BENEFITS, STATE SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS, WORK INCENTIVE PROGRAMS, AND GRANTS TO STATES FOR FAMILY AND CHILD WELFARE SERVICES".

(b) The heading of part A of such title IV is amended to read as follows:

"PART A—SERVICES TO NEEDY FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN".

TITLE II—AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SEC. 201. Title XVI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1381 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE XVI—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND AND DISABLED

"APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1601. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance to needy individuals who are sixty-five years of age or over, blind, or disabled and for the purpose of encouraging each State to furnish rehabilitation and other services to help such individuals attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year sums sufficient to carry out these purposes. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States having State plans approved under section 1602.

"STATE PLANS FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AND SERVICES TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1602. (a) A State plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled must—

"(1) provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer or supervise the administration of the State plan;

"(2) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Secretary to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis (but the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of individuals employed in accordance with such methods);

"(3) provide for the training and effective use of social service personnel in the administration of the plan, for the furnishing of technical assistance to units of State government and of political subdivisions which are furnishing financial assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled, and for the development through research or demonstration projects of new or improved methods of furnishing assistance or services to the aged, blind, and disabled;

"(4) provide for the training and effective use of paid subprofessional staff (with particular emphasis on the full-time or part-time employment of recipients and other persons of low income as community service aides) in the administration of the plan and for the use of non-paid or partially paid volunteers in a social service volunteer program in providing services to applicants and recipients and in assisting any advisory committees established by the State agency;

"(5) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for aid under the plan shall have opportunity to do so and that such aid shall be furnished with reasonable promptness with respect to all eligible individuals;

"(6) provide for the use of a simplified statement, conforming to standards prescribed by the Secretary, to establish eligibility, and for adequate and effective methods of verification of eligibility of applicants and recipients through the use, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, of sampling and other scientific techniques;

"(7) provide that, except to the extent permitted by the Secretary with respect to services, the State plan shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them;

"(8) provide for financial participation by the State;

"(9) provide that, in determining whether an individual is blind, there shall be an examination by a physician skilled in the diseases of the eye or by an optometrist, whichever the indiivdual may select;

"(10) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency to any individual whose claim for aid under the plan is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness;

"(11) provide for periodic evaluation of the operations of the State plan, not less often than annually, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, and the furnishing of annual reports of such evaluations to the Secretary together with any necessary modifications of the State plan resulting from such evaluations;

"(12) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(13) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants and recipients to purposes directly connected with the administration of the plan;

"(14) provide, if the plan includes aid to or on behalf of individuals in private or public institutions, for the establishment or designation of a State authority or authorities which shall be responsible for establishing and maintaining standards for such institutions;

"(15) provide a description of the services which the State makes available to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain self-support or self-care, including a description of the steps taken to assure, in the provision of such services, maximum utilization of all available services that are similar or related; and

"(16) assure that, in administering the State plan and providing services thereunder, the State will observe priorities established by the Secretary and comply with such performance standards as the Secretary may, from time to time, establish.

Notwithstanding, paragraph (1), if on January 1, 1962, and on the date on which a State submits (or submitted) its plan for approval under this title, the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title X was different from the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title I and the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of the plan of such State approved under title XIV, then the State agency which administered or supervised the administration of such plan approved under title X may be designated to administer or supervise the administration of the portion of the State plan for the aged, blind, and disabled which relates to blind individuals and a separate State agency may be established or designated to administer or supervise the administration of the rest of such plan; and in such case the part of the plan which each such agency administers, or the administration of which each such agency supervises, shall be regarded as a separate plan for purposes of this title.

"(b) The Secretary shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) and in section 1603, except that he shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for aid under the plan—

"(1) an age requirement of more than sixty-five years;

"(2) any residency requirement which excludes any individual who resides in the State;

"(3) any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States, or any alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence who has resided in the United States continuously during the five years immediately preceding his application for such aid;

"(4) any disability or age requirement which excludes any person under a severe disability, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, who are eighteen years of age or older, or

"(5) any blindness or age requirement which excludes any persons who are blind as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary.

In the case of any State to which the provisions of section 344 of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1950 were applicable on January 1, 1962, and to which the sentence of section 1002(b) following paragraph (2) thereof is applicable on the date on which its State plan was or is submitted for approval under this title, the Secretary shall approve the plan of such State for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled for purposes of this title, even though it does not meet the requirements of section 1603(a), if it meets all other requirements of this title for an approved plan for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled; but payments to the State under this title shall be made, in the case of any such plan, only with respect to expenditures thereunder which would be included as expenditures for the purposes of this title under a plan approved under this section without regard to the provisions of this sentence.

"DETERMINATION OF NEED

"SEC. 1603. (a) A State plan must provide that, in determining the need for aid under the plan, the State agency shall take into consideration any other income or resources of the individual claiming such aid as well as any expenses reasonably attributable to the earning of any such income; except that, in making such determination with respect to any individual—

"(1) the State agency shall not consider as resources (A) the home, household goods, and personal effects of the individual, (B) other personal or real property, the total value of which does not exceed $1,500, or (C) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations in regulations of the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support as to warrant its exclusion, but shall apply the provisions of section 442(d) and regulations thereunder;

"(2) the State agency may not consider the financial responsibility of any individual for any applicant or recipient unless the applicant or recipient is the individual's spouse, or the individual's child who is under the age of twenty-one or is blind or severely disabled;

"(3) if such individual is blind, the State agency (A) shall disregard the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half of earned income in excess of $85 per month, and (B) shall, for a period not in excess of twelve months, and may, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, disregard such additional amounts of other income and resources, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of such plan;

"(4) if such individual is not blind but is severely disabled, the State agency (A) shall disregard the first $85 per month of earned income plus one-half of earned income in excess of $85 per month, and (B) shall, for a period not in excess of twelve months, and may, for a period not in excess of thirty-six months, disregard such additional amounts of other income and resources, in the case of any such individual who has a plan for achieving self-support approved by the State agency, as may be necessary for the fulfillment of the plan, but only with respect to the part or parts of such period during substantially all of which he is undergoing vocational rehabilitation;

"(5) if such individual has attained age sixty-five and is neither blind nor severely disabled, the State agency may disregard not more than the first $60 per month of earned income plus one-half of the remainder thereof; and

"(6) the State agency may, before disregarding any amounts under the preceding paragraphs of this subsection, disregard not more than $7.50 of any income.

For requirement of additional disregarding of income of OASDI recipients in determining need for aid under the plan, see section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969.

"(b) A State plan must also provide that—

"(1) each eligible individual, other than one who is a patient in a medical institution or is receiving institutional services in an intermediate care facility to which section 1121 applies, shall receive financial assistance in such amount as, when added to his income which is not disregarded pursuant to subsection (a), will provide a minimum of $110 per month;

"(2) the standard of need applied for determining eligibility for and amount of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled shall not be lower than (A) the standard applied for this purpose under the State plan (approved under this title) as in effect on the date of enactment of part D of title IV of this Act, or (B) if there was no such plan in effect for such State on such date, the standard of need which was applicable under—

"(i) the State plan which was in effect on such date and was approved under title I, in the case of any individual who is sixty-five years of age or older,

"(ii) the State plan in effect on such date and approved under title X, in the case of an individual who is blind, or

"(iii) the State plan in effect on such date and approved under title XIV, in the case of an individual who is severely disabled, except that if two or more of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are applicable to an individual, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than the higher (or highest) of the standards under the applicable plans, and except that if none of such clauses is applicable to an individual, the standard of need applied with respect to such individual may not be lower than the higher (or highest) of the standards under the State plans approved under titles I, X, and XIV which were in effect on such date; and

"(3) no aid will be furnished to any individual under the State plan for any period with respect to which he is considered a member of a family receiving family assistance benefits under part D of title IV or supplementary payments pursuant to part E thereof, or training allowances under part C thereof, for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits, payments, or allowances (but this paragraph shall not apply to any individual, otherwise considered a member of such a family, if he elects in such manner and form as the Secretary may prescribe not to be considered a member of such a family).

"(c) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

"SEC. 1604. From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary shall pay to each State which has a plan approved under this title, for each calendar quarter, an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each month of such quarter as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan—

"(1) 90 per centum of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditures as exceeds the product of $65 multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month; plus

"(2) 25 per centum of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under paragraph (1), not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to such month as exceeds the product of the amount which, as determined by the Secretary, is the maximum permissible level of assistance per person in which the Federal Government will participate financially, multiplied by the total number of recipients of such aid for such month.

In the case of any individual in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the maximum permissible level of assistance under paragraph (2) may be lower than in the case of individuals in the other States. For other special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"ALTERNATE PROVISION FOR DIRECT FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO INDIVIDUALS

"SEC. 1605. The Secretary may enter into an agreement with a State under which he will, on behalf of the State, pay aid to the aged, blind, and disabled directly to individuals in the State under the State's plan approved under this title and perform such other functions of the State in connection with such payments as may be agreed upon. In such case payments shall not be made as provided in section 1604 and the agreement shall also provide for payment to the Secretary by the State of its share of such aid (adjusted to reflect the State's share of any overpayments recovered under section 1606).

"OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

"SEC. 1606. Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of payment has been made to any person as a direct Federal payment pursuant to section 1605, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments of the overpaid individual or by recovery from him or his estate or payment to him. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with a view to avoiding penalizing individuals who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this title, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 1607. If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under this title, finds—

"(1) that the plan no longer complies with the provisions of sections 1602 and 1603; or

"(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such provision; the Secretary shall notify such State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State or individuals within the State under this title (or, in his discretion, that payments will be limited to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure), until the Secretary is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no such further payments to the State or individuals in the State under this title (or shall limit payments to categories under or parts of the State plan not affected by such failure).

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR SERVICES AND ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 1608. (a) If the State plan of a State approved under section 1602 provides that the State agency will make available to applicants for or recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled under the State plan at least those services to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care which are prescribed by the Secretary, such State shall qualify for payments for services under subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) In the case of any State whose State plan approved under section 1602 meets the requirements of subsection (a), the Secretary shall pay to the State from the sums appropriated therefor an amount equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during each quarter, as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan—

"(1) 75 per centum of so much of such expenditures as are for—

"(A) services which are prescribed pursuant to subsection (a) and are provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan to help them attain or retain capability for self-support or self-care, or

"(B) other services, specified by the Secretary as likely to prevent or reduce dependency, so provided to the applicants for or recipients of aid, or

"(C) any of the services prescribed pursuant to the subsection (a), and any of the services specified in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, which the Secretary may specify as appropriate for individuals who, within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe, have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of aid under the plan, if such services are requested by the individuals and are provided to them in accordance with subsection (c), or

"(D) the training of personnel employed or preparing for employment by the State agency or by the local agency administering the plan in the political subdivision; plus

"(2) one-half of so much of such expenditures (not included under paragraph (1)) as are for services provided (in accordance with subsection (c)) to applicants for or recipents of aid under the plan, and to individuals requesting such services who (within such period or periods as the Secretary may prescribe) have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of such aid; plus

"(3) one-half of the remainder of such expenditures.

"(c) The services referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) shall, except to the extent specified by the Secretary, include only—

"(1) services provided by the staff of the State agency, or the local agency administering the State plan in the political subdivision (but no funds authorized under this title shall be available for services defined as vocational rehabilitation services under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act (A) which are available to individuals in need of them under programs for their rehabilitation carried on under a State plan approved under that Act, or (B) which the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under that Act are able and willing to provide if reimbursed for the cost thereof pursuant to agreement under paragraph (2), if provided by such staff), and

"(2) subject to limitations prescribed by the Secretary, services which in the judgment of the State agency cannot be as economically or as effectively provided by the staff of that State or local agency and are not otherwise reasonably available to individuals in need of them, and which are provided, pursuant to agreement with the State agency, by the State health authority or the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act or by any other State agency which the Secretary may determine to be appropriate (whether provided by its staff or by contract with public (local) or nonprofit private agencies).

Services described in clause (B) of paragraph (1) may be provided only pursuant to agreement with the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan for vocational rehabilitation services approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act.

"(d) The portion of the amount expended for administration of the State plan to which paragraph (1) of subsection (b) applies and the portion thereof to which paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (b) apply shall be determined in accordance with such methods and procedures as may be permitted by the Secretary.

"(e) In the case of any State whose plan approved under section 1602 does not meet the requirements of subsection (a) of this section, there shall be paid to the State, in lieu of the amount provided for under subsection (b), an amount equal to one-half the total of the sums expended during each quarter as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, including services referred to in subsections (b) and (c) and provided in accordance with the provisions of those subsections.

"(f) In the case of any State whose State plan included a provision meeting the requirements of subsection (a), but with respect to which the Secretary finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the plan, that—

"(1) the provision no longer complies with the requirements of subsection (a), or

"(2) in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with such provision,

the Secretary shall notify the State agency that all, or such portion as he deems appropriate, of any further payments will not be made to the State under subsection (b) until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until the Secretary is so satisfied, no such further payments with respect to the administration of and services under the State plan shall be made, but, instead, such payments shall be made, subject to the other provisions of this title, under subsection (e).

"COMPUTATION OF PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 1609. (a)(1) Prior to the beginning of each quarter, the Secretary shall estimate the amount to which a State will be entitled under sections 1604 and 1608 for that quarter, such estimates to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in that quarter in accordance with the provisions of sections 1604 and 1608, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in that quarter, and, if such amount is less than the State's proportionate share of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, and (B) such other investigation as the Secretary may find necessary.

"(2) The Secretary shall then pay in such installments as he may determine, the amount so estimated, reduced or increased to the extent of any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made under this section to the State for any prior quarter and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under this subsection.

"(b) The pro rata share to which the United States is equitably entitled, as determined by the Secretary, of the net amount recovered during any quarter by a State or political subdivision thereof with respect to aid furnished under the State plan, but excluding any amount of such aid recovered from the estate of a deceased recipient which is not in excess of the amount expended by the State or any political subdivision thereof for the funeral expenses of the deceased, shall be considered an overpayment to be adjusted under subsection (a)(2).

"(c) Upon the making of any estimate by the Secretary under this section, any appropriations available for payments under this title shall be deemed obligated.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 1610. For purposes of this title, the term 'aid to the aged, blind, and disabled' means money payments to needy individuals who are 65 years of age or older, are blind, or are severely disabled, but such term does not include—

"(1) any such payments to any individual who is an inmate of a public institution (except as a patient in a medical institution); or

"(2) any such payments to any individual who has not attained 65 years of age and who is a patient in an institution for tuberculosis or mental diseases.

Such term also includes payments which are not included within the meaning of such term under the preceding sentence, but which would be so included except that they are made on behalf of such a needy individual to another individual who (as determined in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary) is interested in or concerned with the welfare of such needy individual, but only with respect to a State whose State plan approved under section 1602 includes provision for—

"(A) determination by the State agency that the needy individual has, by reason of his physical or mental condition, such inability to manage funds that making payments to him would be contrary to his welfare and, therefore, it is necessary to provide such aid through payments described in this sentence;

"(B) making such payments only in cases in which the payment will, under the rules otherwise applicable under the State plan for determining need and the amount of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled to be paid (and in conjunction with other income and resources), meet all the need of the individuals with respect to whom such payments are made:

"(C) undertaking and continuing special efforts to protect the welfare of such individuals and to improve, to the extent possible, his capacity for self-care and to manage funds;

"(D) periodic review by the State agency of the determination under clause (A) to ascertain whether conditions justifying such determination still exist, with provision for termination of the payments if they do not and for seeking judicial appointment of a guardian, or other legal representative, as described in section 1111, if and when it appears that such action will best serve the interests of the needy individual; and

"(E) opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency on the determination referred to in clause (A) for any individual with respect to whom it is made.

Whether an individual is blind or severely disabled shall be determined for purposes of this title in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary."

REPEAL OF TITLES I, X, AND XIV OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

SEC. 202. Titles I, X, and XIV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 301 et seq., 1201 et seq., and 1351 et seq.) are hereby repealed.

ADDITIONAL DISREGARDING OF INCOME OF OASDI RECIPIENTS IN DETERMINING NEED FOR AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED

SEC. 203. Section 1007 of the Social Security Amendments of 1969 is amended by striking out "and before July 1970".

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO OVERPAYMENTS AND UNDERPAYMENTS

SEC. 204. In the case of any State which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this section, any overpayment or underpayment which the Secretary determines was made to such State under section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603 of such Act with respect to a period before the approval of a plan under title XVI as amended by this Act, and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under subsection (b) of such section 3, 1003, 1403, or 1603, shall, for purposes of section 1609(a) of such Act as herein amended, be considered an overpayment or underpayment (as the case may be) made under title XVI of such Act as herein amended.

TRANSITION PROVISION RELATING TO DEFINITIONS OF BLINDNESS AND DISABILITY

SEC. 205. In the case of any State which has in operation a plan of aid to the blind under title X, aid to the permanently and totally disabled under title XIV, or aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under title XVI, of the Social Security Act as in effect prior to the enactment of this Act, the State plan of such State submitted under title XVI of such Act as amended by this Act shall not be denied approval thereunder, with respect to the period ending with the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which begins after the enactment of this Act, by reason of its failure to include therein a test of disability or blindness different from that included in the State's plan (approved under such title X, XIV, or XVI of such Act) as in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

TITLE IV—GENERAL

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 401. The amendments and repeals made by this Act shall become effective, and section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950 (25 U.S.C. 639), is repealed effective, on July 1, 1971; except that—

(1) in the case of any State a statute of which (on July 1, 1971) prevents it from making the supplementary payments provided for in part E of title IV of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, and the legislature of which does not meet in a regular session which closes after the enactment of this Act and on or before July 1, 1971, the amendments and repeals made by this Act, and such repeal, shall become effective with respect to individuals in such State on the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which closes after July 1, 1971, or (if earlier than such first July 1 after July 1, 1971) on the first day of the first calendar quarter following the date on which the State certifies it is no longer so prevented from making such payments; and

(2) in the case of any State a statute of which (on July 1, 1971) prevents it from complying with the requirements of section 1602 of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, and the legislature of which does not meet in a regular session which closes after the enactment of this Act and on or before July 1, 1971, the amendments made by title II of this Act shall become effective on the first July 1 which follows the close of the first regular session of the legislature of such State which closes after July 1, 1971, or (subject to paragraph (1) of this section) on the earlier date on which such State submits a plan meeting the requirements of such section 1602;

and except that section 436 of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, shall be effective upon the enactment of this Act.

SAVING PROVISION

SEC. 402. (a) The Secretary shall pay to any State which has a State plan approved under title XVI of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, and has in effect an agreement under part E of title IV of such Act, for each quarter beginning after June 30, 1971, and prior to July 1, 1973, in addition to the amount payable to such State under such title and such agreement, an amount equal to the excess of—

(1)(A) 70 per centum of the total of those payments for such quarter pursuant to such agreements which are required under sections 451 and 452 of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act), plus (B) the non-Federal share of expenditures for such quarter required under title XVI of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act) as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled (as defined in subsection (b)(1) of this section), over

(2) the non-Federal share of expenditures which would have been made during such quarter as aid or assistance under the plans of the State approved under titles I, IV (part (A)), X, XVI had they continued in effect (as defined in subsection (b)(2) of this section).

(b) For purposes of subsection (a)—

(1) the non-Federal share of expenditures for any quarter required under title XVI of the Social Security Act, referred to in clause (B) of subsection (a)(1), means the difference between (A) the total of the expenditures for such quarter under the plan approved under such title as aid to the aged, blind, and disabled which would have been included as aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under the plan approved under such title as in effect for June 1971 plus so much of the rest of such expenditures as is required (as determined by the Secretary) by reason of the amendments to such title made by this Act, and (B) the total amounts determined under section 1604 of the Social Security Act for such State with respect to such expenditures for such quarter; and

(2) the non-Federal share of expenditures which would have been made during any quarter under approved State plans, referred to in subsection (a)(2), means the difference between (A) the total of the expenditures which would have been made as aid or assistance (excluding emergency assistance specified in section 406(e)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act and foster care under section 408 thereof) for such quarter under the plans of such State approved under title I, IV (part A), X, XIV, and XVI of such Act and in effect in the month prior to the enactment of this Act if they had continued in effect during such quarter and if they had included (if they did not already do so) payments to dependent children of unemployed fathers authorized by section 407 of the Social Security Act (as in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act), and (B) the total of the amounts which would have been determined under sections 3, 403, 1003, 1403, and 1603, or under section 1118, of the Social Security Act for such State with respect to such expenditures for such quarter.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR PUERTO RICO, THE VIRGIN ISLANDS, AND GUAM

SEC. 403. Section 1108 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) In applying the provisions of sections 442(a) and (b), 443(b)(2), 1603(a)(1) and (b)(1), and 1604(1) with respect to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the amounts to be used shall (instead of the $500, $300, and $1,500 in such section 442(a), the $500 and $300 in such section 442(b), the $30 in clauses (A) and (B) of such section 443(b)(2), the $1,500 in such section 1603(a)(1), the $110 in such section 1603(b)(1), and the $65 in section 1604(1)) bear the same ratio to such $500, $300, $1,500, $500, $300, $30, $1,500, $110, and $65 as the per capita incomes of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, respectively, bear to the per capita income of that one of the fifty States which has the lowest per capita income; except that in no case may the amounts so used exceed such $500, $300, $1,500, $500, $300, $30, $1,500, $110, and $65.

"(2)(A) The amounts to be used under such sections in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam shall be promulgated by the Secretary between July 1 and September 30 of each even-numbered year, on the basis of the average per capita income of each State and of the United States for the most recent calendar year for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce. Such promulgation shall be effective for each of the two fiscal years in the period beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation.

"(B) The term 'United States', for purposes of subparagraph (A) only means the fifty States and the District of Columbia.

"(3) If the amounts which would otherwise be promulgated for any fiscal year for any of the three States referred to in paragraph (1) would be lower than the amounts promulgated for such State for the immediately preceding period, the amounts for such fiscal year shall be increased to the extent of the difference; and the amounts so increased shall be the amounts promulgated for such year."

MEANING OF SECRETARY AND FISCAL YEAR

SEC. 404. As used in this Act and in the amendments made by this Act, the term "Secretary" means, unless the context otherwise requires, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and the term "fiscal year" means a period beginning with any July 1 and ending with the close of the following June 30.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
1102 LONGWORTH HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING,
Washington, D.C. 20515

CHAIRMAN WILBUR D. MILLS (DEMOCRAT, ARKANSAS), COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, ANNOUNCES DECISIONS MADE BY THE COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL SECURITY, MEDICARE AND MEDICAID

The Honorable Wilbur D. Mills, (Democrat, Arkansas) Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, U.S. House of Representatives, today announced the decisions made by the Committee on Ways and Means on the subject of Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid for drafting purposes. The staffs have been instructed to prepare a draft embodying these decisions and bring it back to the Committee.

The decisions are as follows:

I. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO THE SOCIAL SECURITY CASH PROGRAM

1. CASH BENEFIT INCREASE

Social security payments to the 26.2 million beneficiaries on the rolls would be increased by 5 percent beginning with payments for the month of January 1971 (payable on February 3, 1971). This benefit increase will mean additional payments of $1.7 billion in the first 12 months.

2. RETIREMENT TEST

The retirement test, which provides for reducing benefits of social security beneficiaries who have earnings. would be amended by increasing the annual exempt amount from the present level of $1,680 to $2,000. For each $2 of earnings up to $3,200, a recipient's benefit would be reduced by $1. For each $1 of earnings over $3,200 per year, a beneficiary would lose $1 in benefit payments. An additional $475 million would be paid out for months in 1971 under this provision.

3. 100 PERCENT WIDOW'S AND WIDOWER'S BENEFIT AT AGE 65 AND REDUCED BENEFITS FOR WIDOWERS AT AGE 60

Under present law a full widow's (or dependent widower's) benefit applied for at age 62 or later is equal to 82½ percent of the primary insurance amount of the wage earner. An actuarially reduced benefit may be received by a widow at age 60. Under the bill a widow or widower would be entitled to a benefit equal to 100 percent of the primary insurance amount if first applied for at age 65 or later. Benefits applied for between age 62 and 65 would be proportionately increased over the present 82½ percent rate according to the age of the applicant at the time of application. In addition, widowers under age 62 would be granted the same privilege of applying for benefits on an actuarially reduced basis as now applies to widows. There are 3.3 million widows and widowers on the rolls who will receive additional benefits. $700 million in additional benefit payments will be made in the first 12 months.

4. Age 62—Computation Point for Men

Under present law, the method of computing benefits for men and women differs in that all years of earnings up to age 65 must be taken into account in determining average wages for men, while for women, only years up to age 62 must be included. This discrepancy, which presently favors women over men, would be eliminated by applying the same rules to men as now apply to women. In the first 12 months, an additional $925 million would be paid out. An estimated 10 million on the rolls on the effective date will receive larger benefits under this provision and in addition 60,000 persons—workers and their dependents not eligible under present law—will be added to the rolls.

5. Eliminate Reduction in Spouses' Benefits in Certain Cases

Under present law, when a woman applies for a retirement benefit prior to age 65, it is computed under the actuarial reduction formula; if she later applies for a spouse's benefit, it is reduced in the same proportion as her retirement benefit. The bill would eliminate the actuarial reduction in such cases when the spouse's benefit is applied for. The same rule would apply to dependent husbands entitled to spouse's or widower's benefits. Approximately 100,000 beneficiaries would be affected by this provision, which will result in additional benefit payments estimated at $10 million during the first 12 months.

6. Disability Benefits for Blind Persons

Under present law one of the general requirements for disability insurance benefits is that the disabled person must have worked 5 out of the 10 years before he becomes disabled. This requirement would be dropped for blind people. As a result a blind person could qualify for benefits when he had sufficient work to qualify for retirement benefits.

7. Workmen's Compensation Offset for Disability Insurance Beneficiaries

Under present law a disability insurance beneficiary who also qualifies for workmen's compensation has his Social Security benefit reduced so that his combined payment will not be more than 80 percent of his average earnings before he became disabled. Under the bill the combined payments allowable would be raised to 100 percent of his average earnings.

8. Military Service Credit

Present law provides for a credit of $100 a month, in addition to pay, for military service performed after 1967. This credit would also be provided for service provided from 1957, the date military service was covered under social security. Approximately 130,000 beneficiaries will be affected immediately. $35 million in additional benefits will be paid out in the first 12 months.

9. Disabled Children

Under present law a person disabled prior to age 18 may continue to receive a child's benefit without regard to his age for as long as he is disabled. Under the bill persons disabled prior to age 22 could qualify for such a disabled child's benefit.

10. Other Amendments

The Committee also adopted other amendments relating to Social Security coverage for policemen and firemen in Idaho, the coverage of Home Loan Bank employees, the treatment of earnings of self-employed persons paying taxes on a fiscal year basis, the treatment of earnings under the retirement test of persons in the year they attain age 72, and payment of disability insurance benefits on the basis of applications filed after the death of the disabled person.

11. Financing

In order to pay the additional cost of the new benefits provided and to meet the existing actuarial deficit in the hospital insurance (part A of Medicare) program, the tax base would be increased from $7,800 a year to $9,000 a year, starting January 1, 1971, and a new schedule of tax rates would be provided as follows:

[In percent]

	OASDI	HI
January 1, 1971	8.4	2
January 1, 1975	10.0	2
January 1, 1980	11.0	2

II. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO THE MEDICARE, MEDICAID AND MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH PROGRAMS

Coverage and Benefit Changes Under Medicare

1. Relationship Between Medicare and Federal Employees Benefits.—No payment would be made under medicare for services covered under a Federal Employees Health Benefits plan effective with January 1, 1972, unless in the meantime the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare determines that the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program has been modified to make available coverage supplementary to medicare benefits and to assure that Federal employees reaching age 65 will continue to have the benefit of the government contribution towards health insurance.

2. Hospital Insurance for the Uninsured.—People reaching age 65 who are ineligible for hospital insurance benefits under medicare would be able to enroll, on a voluntary basis, for hospital insurance coverage under the same conditions under which people can enroll under the supplementary medical insurance part of medicare, provided that those who enroll must pay the full cost of the protection—$27 a month at the beginning of the program, rising as hospital costs rise. States and other organizations would be permitted to purchase such protection on a group basis for their retired employees age 65 or over.

3. Health Maintenance Organization Option.—Individuals eligible for both Part A and Part B medicare coverage would be able to choose to have their care provided by a health maintenance organization (a prepaid group health or other capitation plan). The government would pay for such coverage on a capitation basis not to exceed 95% of the cost of medicare benefits provided to beneficiaries in the area not covered under the health maintenance organization.

Improvements in the Operating Effectiveness of the Medicare, Medicaid and Maternal and Child Health Programs

1. Limitation on Federal Payment for Disapproved Expenditures.—Reimbursement amounts to providers of health services under medicaid, medicare, and maternal and child health for capital costs, such as depreciation and interest, would not be made with respect to capital expenditures (in excess of $100,000) which are inconsistent with state or local health facility plans.

2. Experiments and Projects in Prospective Reimbursement and Incentives for Economy.—The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be required to develop experiments and demonstration projects designed to test various methods of making payment to providers of services on a prospective basis under medicare, medicaid and maternal and child health. In addition, the Secretary would be authorized to conduct experiments with methods of payment or reimbursement designed to increase efficiency and economy, and with community-wide utilization review mechanisms.

3. Limits on Costs Recognized as Reasonable.—The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be given authority to establish and promulgate limits on provider costs to be recognized as reasonable under medicare based on comparisons of the cost of covered services by various classes of providers in the same geographical area. Hospitals and extended care facilities could charge beneficiaries for the care not covered (except in the case of an admission by a physician who owns an interest in the facility).

4. Limitation on Recognition of Physician Fee Increases.—Charges determined to be reasonable under the present criteria in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health law would be limited by providing: (a) that for fiscal year 1971 medical charge levels recognized as prevailing may not be increased beyond the 75th percentile of actual charges in a locality during calendar year 1969; (b) that for fiscal year 1972 and thereafter the prevailing charge levels recognized for a locality may be increased, on the average, only to the extent justified by increases in the cost of production of medical services, levels of living and the earnings of other professional, managerial and technical personnel; and (c) that for medical supplies, equipment and services that, in the judgment of the Secretary, generally do not vary significantly in quality from one supplier to another, charges allowed as reasonable may not exceed the lowest levels at which such supplies, equipment and services are widely available in a locality.

5. Changes in Federal Matching Percentages with Respect to Certain Services.—The Federal medicaid matching for certain outpatient services would be increased and the Federal matching with respect to long-term institutional care would be decreased and certain other limitations would be imposed. Specifically, (1) the Federal matching percentage for outpatient hospital services, clinic services and home health services would be increased by 25 percent; (2) the Federal percentage after the first 60 days of care in a general or TB hospital would be reduced by one-third; (3) the Federal percentage after the first 90 days of care in a year in a skilled nursing home would be reduced by one-third; (4) the Federal matching for care in a mental hospital after 90 days of care would be reduced by one-third and no Federal matching would be available after 275 days of such care during an individual's lifetime; and (5) the Secretary would be authorized to compute a reasonable cost differential for reimbursement purposes between skilled nursing homes and intermediate care facilities.

6. Payments for Services of Teaching Physicians.—Medicare and medicaid would not pay for the services of teaching physicians unless other patients who have insurance or are able to pay are also charged for such services and the medicare deductibles and coinsurance amounts are regularly collected. Medicare payment would be authorized for services to hospital patients by staff of certain medical schools that now furnish these services without charge to the hospital.

7. Termination of Payments to Providers Who Abuse the Medicare Program.—The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be given authority to terminate or suspend payment for services rendered by a supplier of health and medical services found to be guilty of program abuses. Program review teams would be established to furnish the Secretary professional advice in carrying out this authority.

8. Repeal of Medicaid Provision Requiring Expanded Programs.—The requirement in present law that States have comprehensive medicaid programs by 1977 would be repealed.

9. State Determination of Reasonable Hospital Costs.—States would be permitted to pay hospitals on the basis of their own determination of reasonable cost, provided there is assurance that the medicaid program would pay the actual cost of coverage of hospitalization of medicaid recipients.

10. Government Payment No Higher Than Charges.—Payments for services under the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs would not be higher than the charges regularly made for those services.

11. Institutional Budgeting.—Health institutions under these programs would be required to have a written plan reflecting an operating budget and a capital expenditures budget.

12. Federal Matching for Modern Claims Processing Systems.—Federal matching at the 90-percent rate would be available under medicaid for the states to set up mechanized claims processing and informational retrieval systems. Federal matching for the continuous operation of such systems would be at the 75-percent rate.

13. Guarantee of Payment for Extended Care Services.—The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would establish specific periods of time (by medical condition) after hospitalization during which a patient would be presumed to require extended care level of services in an extended care facility. Similar provision would be made for post-hospital home health services.

14. Prohibition of Reassignments.—Medicare and medicaid payments to anyone other than a patient or his physician would be prohibited, unless the physician is required as a condition of his employment to turn over his fees to his employer or unless there is a contractual arrangement between the physician and the facility in which the services were provided under which the facility bills for all such services.

15. Utilization Review in Medicaid.—Require hospitals and skilled nursing homes participating in the medicaid and maternal and child health programs to have the same utilization review committee with the same functions as in the medicare program.

16. Medicaid Deductibles for the Medically Indigent.—States would be permitted to impose a flat deductible or cost sharing provision with respect to people eligible under medicaid programs but not eligible for cash public assistance payments. (Present law requires such deductible or cost sharing to vary directly with the amount of the recipient's income.)

17. Stopping Payment Where Hospital Admission Not Necessary.—If the utilization review committee of a hospital or extended care facility in its sample review of admissions finds a case where institutionalization is no longer necessary, then payment would be cut off after 3 days. This provision parallel sthe provision in present law under which long-stay cases are cut off after 3 days when the utilization review committee determines that institutionalization is no longer required.

18. Role of State Health Agencies in Medicaid.—State health agencies would be required to perform certain functions under the medicaid and maternal and child health programs relating to the quality of the health care furnished to recipients.

Miscellaneous and Technical Amendments

1. Retroactive Coverage Under Medicaid.—States would be required to cover under medicaid the cost of health care provided to an eligible individual during the 3-month period before the month in which he applied for medicaid.

2. Certification of Hospitalization for Dental Care.—A dentist would be authorized to certify to the necessity for hospitalization to protect the health of a medicare patient who is hospitalized for noncovered dental procedures.

3. Christian Science Sanitoria under Medicaid.—Christian Science sanitoria would be exempted from the medicaid requirement that they have a licensed nursing home administrator and from other inappropriate skilled nursing home requirements.

4. Physical Therapy Services Under Medicare.—Under medicare's supplementary medical insurance program, beneficiaries would be covered for up to $100 per calendar year of physical therapy services furnished by a licensed physical therapist in his office or the patient's home under a physician's prescription. Hospitals and extended care facilities could continue to provide covered physical therapy services to inpatients who have exhausted their days of hospital insurance coverage. Where physical therapy is furnished under contractual arrangement with a hospital or extended care facility medicare reimbursement to the institution will in all cases be based on a reasonable salary payment for the services.

5. Grace Period for Paying Medicare Premium.—Where there is good cause for a medicare beneficiary's failure to pay supplementary medical insurance premiums, an extended grace period of 90 days would be provided.

6. Extension of Time for Filing Medicare Claims.—The time limit for filing supplementary medical insurance claims would be extended where the medicare beneficiary's delay is due to administrative error.

7. Enrollment Under Medicare.—Relief would be provided where administrative error has prejudiced an individual's right to enroll in medicare's supplementary medical insurance program. Eligible individuals would be permitted to enroll under medicare's supplementary medical insurance program during any prescribed enrollment period and would no longer be required to enroll within 3 years following first eligibility or a previous withdrawal from the program.

8. Waiver of Medicare Overpayment.—Where incorrect medicare payments were made to a deceased beneficiary, the liability of survivors for repayment could be waived if the survivors were without fault in incurring the overpayment.

9. Medicare Fair Hearings.—Fair hearings, held by medicare carriers in response to disagreements over amounts paid under supplementary medical insurance, would be conducted only where the amount in controversy is $100 or more.

10. Collection of Medicare Premium by the Railroad Retirement Board.—Where a person is entitled to both Railroad Retirement and Social Security monthly benefits, his premium payment for supplementary medical insurance benefits would be deducted from his Railroad Retirement benefit in all cases.

11. Medicare Benefits for People Living Near U.S. Border.—Medicare beneficiaries living in the United States close to the U.S. border would get covered care if the hospital they use is in Canada or Mexico and is closer to their residence than a comparable hospital in the U.S.

12. Chiropractors' Services.—The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare would conduct a study on covering chiropractors' services (on a very limited basis) under medicare, utilizing the experimental authority under the medicaid program. A report on the study, including the experience of other programs paying for chiropractors' services would be submitted to the Congress within 2 years.

1970 SOCIAL SECURITY LEGISLATION

To Administrative, Supervisory, and Technical Employees

Yesterday, Secretary Richardson testified before the Senate Finance Committee on H. R. 17550, the "Social Security Amendments of 1970." Enclosed is a copy of his prepared statement.

The Finance Committee had previously, on June 17, held one day of hearings on H. R. 17550. At that time, the Assistant Secretary for Legislation, Creed C. Black, gave a short statement highlighting the most significant parts of H. R. 17550, and I presented a series of charts explaining in greater detail the provisions of the bill.

After the Secretary had finished his statement yesterday, the Committee questioned him on the various provisions of the bill. The Committee will continue questioning Department officials today. No date has yet been fixed for testimony on the bill by public witnesses.

Statement
by Elliot L. Richardson,
Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, before the Committee on Finance
U.S. Senate
July 14, 1970

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee:

I am pleased to testify before your Committee today on H.R. 17550, the Social Security Amendments of 1970. The bill embodies practically all of the proposals submitted for the consideration of the Congress by the President in his September 25, 1969, Message on Social Security, and other proposals, such as the Cost Effectiveness Amendments of 1969, that were later submitted by the Administration are included in the bill. The legislation will improve the protection afforded by the social security cash-benefits program and improve the Medicare, Medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with regard to both overall effectiveness and the potentials for control of health care costs. The President has endorsed the major provisions of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, on June 17th Commissioner Ball went into some detail concerning H.R. 17550 in his chart presentation. Today, therefore, I would like to confine my opening remarks to the most significant proposals in the bill and, with your permission, submit a more detailed statement for the record.

Automatic Adjustment of Social Security Benefits

H.R. 17550 provides for automatic adjustment of social security benefits to increases in the cost of living. In my opinion, this proposal is the most important one in the bill concerning the cash-benefits program. Both political parties included it in their 1968 national convention platforms, and there is widespread support for it among both contributors to the program and beneficiaries. This is a proposal whose time has come.

Over the years Congress has established a policy of restoring the purchasing power of benefits when price increases have eroded their value. Sometimes, however, there have been long periods during which benefits have remained unchanged and beneficiaries have had to get along on these benefits while the cost of living increased substantially. On the other hand, the Congress has occasionally set new and higher benefit levels than had previously been established, actually increasing the purchasing power of the benefit in real terms.

Here is what has happened: there were no general benefit increases between 1940, when monthly benefits were first payable, and 1950. Then the benefit level was increased to about make up for the rise in prices that had occurred during the 1940's. As a result of the amendments of 1952 and 1954, the Congress established a somewhat higher level benefits in real terms. Then, during the next 15 years, three across-the-board benefit increases were enacted that approximately restored the purchasing power of the benefits as they were established in 1954. The 15-percent benefit increase earlier this year again established a somewhat higher level of benefits in real terms.

Although Congress has established a policy of restoring the purchasing power of benefits, and indeed on occasion increasing the real level of benefits, there have been substantial time lags between the increases in price levels and the increase in benefits. For example, there were no increases between 1940 and 1950, although the purchasing power of the benefits declined by about 37 percent. There was no general increase in benefits between 1959 and 1965 although the purchasing power of the benefits declined by about 8 percent.

When substantial time lags occur between increases in price levels and benefit increases, congressional action increasing benefits cannot make up for the hardships beneficiaries endure while awaiting such action. Older people, widows, orphans, and disabled people, who have had to get along for years on benefits that were declining in purchasing power, have suffered hardships during those years that cannot be overcome by a later restoration of the purchasing power of the benefits.

The automatic adjustment provision controls the time lag and adds predictability to the increase. Writing the established congressional policy into the law will give both beneficiaries and covered workers the peace of mind that comes with the certainty that the purchasing power of their benefits will not be eroded by future price increases. Had this provision been in effect during the last 15 years, instead of the four benefit increases that occurred in 1959, 1965, 1968, and 1970, there would have been seven benefit increases. Thus, beneficiaries who were on the rolls during those years would have had the purchasing power of their benefits maintained throughout the period at a level much closer to the purchasing power of the benefit level established in 1954. The somewhat higher level of benefits established this year would have required congressional action.

To take account of price increases occurring during this calendar year, 1970, the bill provides an across-the-board 5-percent increase in benefits effective January 1, 1971. The 5-percent benefit increase will go to more than 26 million beneficiaries and will total $1.7 billion during the first 12 months the increase is in effect. The first automatic benefit increase could take place in January 1973, based on an increase in the cost of living from 1971 to 1972, if that increase is at least 3 percent.

Increase in the Contribution and Benefit Base

The House bill also provides for increases in the contribution and benefit base--the amount of a worker's annual earnings that is subject to social security contributions and counted towards social security benefits. The base would be increased from the present $7800 to $9000 effective for 1971. Thereafter, the base would be automatically adjusted on a regular basis--but no more often than once in 2 years--as earnings levels rise.

The Congress has clearly established a policy of adjusting the contribution and benefit base as earnings levels rise, just as it has with respect to the adjustment of benefits to prices. Here again, a provision for automatic increases in the base to keep it in line with increases in earnings levels would write into the law already established Congressional policy, thus giving greater assurance to workers who earn higher wages in the future that they will get credit toward benefits for those higher earnings. The automatic increases in the base, in line with rising wages, would also provide adequate financing for the automatic benefit increases.

The contribution and benefit base was originally established at $3000 in 1935. No action was taken to increase the base until 1950, when it was set at $3600. At this level it covered 81 percent of payrolls and all of the earnings of a little over 75 percent of covered workers. Since that time, through legislative changes, the percentage of payrolls covered has been maintained at about 80 percent, and the percentage of covered workers who have all their earnings covered has been maintained at about 75 to 80 percent. The increase in the base to $9000 in 1971 will restore the relationship between the base and earnings levels generally that was established in 1950 and that has been maintained by Congress over the last 20 years, and the provision in the bill for automatic adjustment in the base would mean that similar relationships would be maintained automatically.

These provisions would not delegate to the executive branch any discretion whatsoever. The power to increase taxes would remain in the hands of the Congress. What this provision does is to provide a specific formula in the law that determines what the social security tax base shall be. The base would be increased only in direct proportion to increases in average earnings for all workers in covered employment.

Retirement Test

H.R. 17550 improves the social security program's retirement test. This is the provision under which social security benefits for an individual under age 72 are withheld or reduced if he earns more than the exempt amount--currently $1680--in any year.

In his Message to the Congress last September the President expressed his concern about this provision. He said:

> "The present retirement test actually penalizes social security beneficiaries for doing additional work or taking a job at higher pay. This is wrong."

As you know, the Congress has on a number of occasions made changes designed to minimize this effect. Yet, a problem remains under the present retirement test because benefits are reduced dollar-for-dollar on earnings above $2880 in a year. Because of taxes and work expenses, a beneficiary's spendable income--that is, his social security benefits plus his earnings after taxes--may be less if he earns somewhat more than $2880 than his income would be if he had earned less than $2880. The bill remedies this by eliminating the dollar-for-dollar reduction and providing that social security benefits be reduced by only $1 for each $2 of earnings above the annual exempt amount, regardless of how much is earned.

The bill also increases the retirement test annual exempt amount from $1680 to $2000. This change takes account of increases in general earnings levels that have occurred since the present $1680 exempt amount became effective.

The bill also provides for the future automatic upward adjustment of the retirement test as earnings levels rise, similar to the automatic adjustment provision for raising the contribution and benefit base. This change would prevent hardships to beneficiaries that have sometimes occurred because there was a lag in updating the test.

The retirement test changes in the bill would result in about $570 million in additional benefits being paid in 1971. These benefits would go to about 1.3 million beneficiaries, including 400,000 who would not receive benefits under present law.

Increase in Widow's Benefits

Surveys of social security beneficiaries show that, as a group, widows have less regular income than most other classes of beneficiaries and in general are financially worse off. Under present law, a widow cannot be paid more than 82-1/2 percent of the benefit amount her husband would have received if he started getting benefits at or after age 65. We believe that a widow should not be expected to live on less than her husband would have been paid if he had lived.

H.R. 17550 would increase benefits for aged widows and widowers. For those who become entitled to benefits at or after age 65, the benefit amount would be increased to 100 percent of the amount which the widow's deceased husband would have received if he had lived and his benefits had started at or after age 65. For those becoming entitled to benefits before age 65, the 100-percent amount would be reduced in a way similar to the way in which the worker's benefit is reduced if he elects to receive it before age 65.

Some 3.3 million widows and widowers on the rolls at the end of January 1971 would receive higher benefits under this provision. Additional benefit payments in the first 12 months would total $700 million.

Uniform Computation Method for Men and Women

Under present law, the computation of retirement benefits for men is different from the computation for women. The result is that a man who has had the same earnings as a woman may in many cases get benefits that are lower than hers. Under the bill, benefits for men would be calculated in the same way as they are for women under present law. As a result, the retirement benefits payable to men, the benefits payable to their wives, and the benefits payable to survivors of men who live beyond age 62 would be increased.

Approximately 10 million people on the rolls in January 1971 would have their benefits increased under this provision, and additional numbers would become eligible for benefits in the future because of the change in the eligibility requirements. In the first 12 months after the provision goes into effect an additional $925 million in benefits would be paid.

MEDICARE AND MEDICAID PROVISIONS

Mr. Chairman, the Committee will recall that when HEW representatives testified here in February, they emphasized the need to take steps to encourage changes in structure and to improve the operation of the Nation's health care delivery system. Inefficiencies and discontinuities in that system underlie a significant part of the extraordinary increase in the costs of health care that has been experienced throughout the Nation in recent years. It is one of the highest-priority objectives of this Administration to have government programs contribute to improving the Nation's health-care system to the greatest extent possible. We believe that the Medicare and Medicaid programs have a special responsibility in this regard.

MEDICARE

With about 20 million people protected under the hospital insurance part of Medicare and more than 19 million people enrolled in the medical insurance part, this program is the major federally operated health insurance plan and, indeed, by far the largest single plan in the United States. Overall, Medicare payments in fiscal year 1969 accounted for about 70 percent of the expenditures of the aged for hospital and physicians' care. We believe that Medicare, which has done much to alleviate the financial burden of health care for the aged, can be a powerful force in improving the system on which we all rely for health care.

There are four major provisions in H.R. 17550 designed to affect over the long run the cost of delivering quality health care to the American people. One of the most significant of these provisions is the one which would establish, under Medicare, a health maintenance organization option.

Health Maintenance Organization Option

We believe that enactment of the HMO option will have the effect of stimulating the Nation's voluntary health system to offer new choices to individuals and families and to organize new ways of delivering health care.

Under this provision, doctors, hospitals, and other providers of service could receive payments from the public programs under terms that encourage prudent management of utilization.

Several types of existing health organizations and plans have shown evidence that payment arrangements with physicians can make a difference in the utilization of a broad spectrum of health services. Payment to these organizations on a per capita instead of a straight fee-for-service basis provides incentives for early diagnosis and treatment, an important factor in the success the organizations have had in reducing the incidence and duration of high-cost institutional care. This method of payment also shifts motivation away from the provision of high cost services and towards the provision of less expensive levels of medically appropriate care. We believe that with encouragement by the Federal Government and with the removal of legal barriers which exist at the State level, more of these organizations can be developed.

Health maintenance organizations are, essentially, organizations which will contract to provide to Medicare eligibles all services covered by Part A and Part B of the program in return for a fixed annual payment per enrollee. The fixed annual sum, which would be determined in advance, would be less than the Government now pays on the average for conventional Medicare benefits. Prospective payments to health maintenance organizations (HMO's) would be determined annually, taking into account the organization's regular premiums, and would not exceed 95 percent of average per capita payments under Parts A and B in the locality (with appropriate actuarial adjustments for expected cost differentials due to such factors as age and sex variations in membership composition of an organization). Thus, the economic incentive of the provider and the health interests of consumer more closely align because the provider bears the financial risk of ill health. Both parties will have, therefore, an interest in the maintenance of good health.

When a health maintenance organization offers membership opportunities in a community, the individual Medicare beneficiary could choose whether to continue under the present Parts A and B arrangements or to elect the HMO option. For Medicaid recipients, sufficient authority currently exists under title XIX for the States to contract with these same health maintenance organizations to provide a defined scope of services, on a negotiated per capita basis.

This proposal represents a significant departure from the more traditional approach in which the individual patient must largely find his own way among the various types and levels of services. Under the health maintenance organization option, a single organization will have the responsibility for determining the covered services a patient needs and then delivering those services.

These two features of the proposal--first, the introduction of economic incentives to control unnecessary utilization and assure effective early treatment; and second, the requirement that an HMO be responsible for all phases of covered services--will result in a greater assurance of medically appropriate care.

There are a variety of health maintenance organizations already in existence. I would like to emphasize, however, that we do not think any particular structure or sponsorship is a prerequisite for a health maintenance organization. Indeed, we think the country will benefit, by diversity and competition among different kinds of HMO's and between HMO's and other providers of health care.

One of our goals is to open the market place and provide opportunities for new delivery systems. The capacity of existing HMO's (essentially, group practice prepayment plans) is limited, so that only a very small proportion of Medicare and Medicaid recipients will, in the beginning, be able to receive services through them. We hope that HMO's, and their use by beneficiaries, will expand greatly in the future, and we believe that there can be significant long-run savings in program costs due to the HMO option.

Prospective Reimbursement

When representatives of the Department last discussed the Medicare and Medicaid programs before this Committee, we urged moving as quickly as possible to a system of prospective reimbursement to institutional providers under these programs.

The House has endorsed the principle of prospective reimbursement and has directed the Department to experiment with and evaluate alternative methods for setting reimbursement on a prospective basis, and to recommend to the Congress by July of 1972 specific methods for the full implementation of a prospective reimbursement system. This is a major step forward. We recommend, however, that the House-passed bill be revised to provide authority for the Department to implement desirable methods for reimbursement as soon as they can be worked out by agreement with providers, without having to wait for further congressional action. We think that statutory language requiring that the Committees receive reports on the proposed experiments and projects before they can be implemented is unnecessary. Such a requirement could result in delays in the implementation of projects. Considering the fact that a great deal of research and analysis must be completed within a very short period of time, any delays in implementing projects and experiments may be costly. For this reason, we recommend the deletion of the reporting requirement in section 222.

Reimbursement of Practitioners

Another major change relating to Medicare reimbursement that was recommended by the Administration and adopted by the House is one that would make Medicare recognition of prevailing charge levels for medical services more closely related to general economic trends. Under this provision, physicians would still ordinarily be reimbursed on the basis of the customary charge that they made for a specific procedure to their patients generally. However, the overall maximum set in terms of the prevailing charges in a community would be allowed to rise in the future only in relation to rises in prices and the general earnings level.

It is true that over the long-run past physicians' fees have not risen quite as fast as earnings generally, and if this were to continue to be the case, the proposed amendment would ordinarily not have any effect. However, the amendment is needed as a guarantee that this would indeed be the case in the future. We are faced with a substantial shortage of physicians in a period of rapidly increasing demand, and there may be, therefore, a tendency for fees to rise out of proportion to other economic indices.

Planning

Although there is a clear need to achieve balance in and improved distribution of health-care facilities, there is also a need to assure that improvements will be accomplished in ways which avoid the duplication or random growth of health care facilities that would result in inefficient use of the facilities and, therefore, in unduly high health care costs. Under H.R. 17550, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would be given authority to withhold or reduce reimbursement to providers of service for depreciation and interest for capital expenditures that are found to be inconsistent with State or local health facility plans. The Secretary's determination would be based on findings and recommendations submitted by qualified planning agencies in the States--organizations which have consumer representation and which will be designated by agreement between each State and the Department. If the Secretary determines, however, after consultation with a national advisory council, that withholding or reduction of reimbursement in a given case would be inconsistent with effective organization and delivery of health services he would be authorized to make reimbursement without such withholding or reduction. As the Committee will recall, a proposal with the same general objectives passed the Senate in 1967.

Other Medicare Provisions

The House-passed bill contains a considerable number of other Medicare provisions which I have not discussed. In large part, these provisions are aimed at improving the operating effectiveness and the administration of the Medicare program. They include the Administration's Health Cost Effectiveness Amendments, previously presented to this Committee. Among these proposed amendments are those relating to authority to terminate payments to suppliers of services who abuse the Medicare program, authority to base payments to institutional providers on charges where these are less than cost, and expanded authority to conduct experiments and demonstration projects to develop incentives for economy in the provision of health services. In addition, the bill makes provision for advance approval of benefits for extended care and home health services. Under this provision, the Secretary would be authorized to establish specific periods of time, related to medical condition, during which a patient would be presumed, for payment purposes, to require a level of institutional services available only in an extended-care-facility setting.

Review of Utilization

The most difficult, as well as the most important, area of program controls relates to determinations of medical necessity for the volume and type of service provided. These determinations, of course, can be made only by the medical profession reviewing the actions of its own members. There are several features of the present law which are directed to this problem, including the requirements of a physician's certification of medical necessity for many types of service and the requirements for utilization review committees in hospitals and extended care facilities.

The House bill provides for some additional strengthening in this area by, for example, modifying utilization review procedures to allow for payment cutoff when unnecessary utilization is discovered in the course of a sample review of hospital admissions. In addition, the bill authorizes experiments with the use of areawide utilization review mechanisms.

However, this is an exceedingly difficult area of administration, and we welcome the opportunity to examine additional approaches which might have the effect of strengthening peer review of the utilization of medical services. The approach recently outlined by Senator Bennett, for example, represents a possibility that might be most helpful.

As is indicated in the Senator's statement appearing in the Congressional Record of July 1, the objective of greater physician participation in and responsibility for reviewing and evaluating utilization cannot be implemented at once, but will require a great deal of careful planning. It would be impossible, for example, and I believe in many ways undesirable, to supplant entirely the present Medicare administrative system of conducting utilization reviews and to substitute new review organizations. Even in areas where review organizations exist, it may be both desirable and necessary to approach their full implementation in stages.

The Senator's proposal warrants careful consideration, and the Department is eager to collaborate with the Committee in developing a sound and effective system of professional peer review.

MEDICAID

As I have stated earlier, I believe we are now at a time when significant new Federal initiatives should be taken in the health field. You are all aware of the President's announcement of June 10 that this Administration is committed to the reform of the Medicaid program and to the development and implementation of a Family Health Insurance Program for low-income families. We believe that this proposal, which we will discuss with you in more detail in the future, will effectively integrate the Nation's major health program for the poor with the proposed Family Assistance Program (FAP). This strategy will fundamentally restructure the Medicaid program for families with children.

In addition, there are other, less critical, changes which should be made at this time. Let me turn the Committee's attention for a moment, if I may, to some of the strengths and weaknesses of the current Medicaid program.

Few can deny that the title XIX program has moved a long way in a short time toward achieving its goal of improving the availability and accessibility of medical care and services for the Nation's poor. More than 12 million people will receive medical care with Medicaid's help this year. This is more than double the number who received Federally-aided medical assistance in 1965.

Medicaid is providing health care for children whose families have enough money for their daily needs but not enough for special medical needs. From 1965 to 1969 the number of children who received Federally-supported medical assistance rose from 1.5 million to 5.9 million; about half the children in the latter group were not in families receiving AFDC payments. We believe it is important to recognize the achievements of this program and to maintain our commitment to improving and expanding health programs for the poor until medical services are available to all who require them but cannot afford to pay.

Clearly, however, there have been serious problems with the Medicaid program; the ability to finance care doesn't guarantee the availability, adequacy, or reasonable cost of care. The health system has severe problems in the supply and distribution of facilities, manpower, and services, as well as in the organization and delivery of care.

In addition, the Medicaid program itself has been difficult to administer--partly because of the title XIX legislation, partly because of the nature and administration of the welfare program it has supplemented, and partly because Medicaid has been a Federal-State program. Medicaid, as you know, has operated not as one but as 52 separate and distinct programs. Each program is different in design, varying according to the people it covers, and in the services offered. Serious geographic and other inequities have, therefore, resulted.

We know that Medicaid has been an expensive program placing heavy fiscal burdens on the States and the Federal Government. Because of program variations, a disproportionate share of Federal matching funds has been spent in support of programs in only a few of our States.

We have been aware of the need to undertake fundamental reforms of the Medicaid program to deal with these problems. We were also concerned with the difficulties pointed out by your Committee, of meshing the current Medicaid program with a reformed welfare system. The "sudden death" loss of Medicaid benefits when income reaches a specified level--the so-called "notch" problem--is an unacceptable defect in the current structure of Medicaid.

I can assure you that the Department has given the most serious consideration to these issues. They are not problems which lend themselves to easy or quick solutions. Some months' time will be necessary before we can present you with our final legislative proposals on the Family Health Insurance Program and with the related proposals dealing with broad reforms in our health care system. We will continue to work with the Committee staff as we develop these proposals.

In the meantime, we believe there are important immediate steps that can and should be taken immediately to amend title XIX to make it a more effective and economical vehicle for financing health care. We think these improvements should be made before the Family Health Insurance Plan becomes an operating program, since title XIX will continue to support health care for those in the adult assistance programs.

We propose to require that the State health agency be responsible for establishing and maintaining health standards for institutions in which title XIX beneficiaries receive care and services. The same agency shall be responsible for maintaining, to the maximum extent practical, uniformity or consistency of determinations relating to eligibility of institutions for participation in the titles XVIII, XIX, and V programs.

As your Committee has pointed out, some of the most serious problems of Medicaid relate to the lack of adequate information systems for surveillance, rigorous claims review, utilization review, and program evaluation. This is caused in part by the lack of capability in the States to develop the necessary systems. We are, therefore, requesting authorization for Federal payment of 90 percent of the costs incurred by the States in the design, development, and installation of mechanized claims processing and information systems. The Federal Government would also pay 75 percent of the cost of operating such approved systems. States would not be eligible to receive this increased Federal support until they have developed the capacity to furnish each recipient with a notice and explanation of health care paid for on his behalf by the program--a suggestion made by this Committee. We are currently designing information systems for the States to use as models.

Providers have been reluctant in many instances to care for potential Medicaid eligibles because frequently the patient has not applied for Medicaid prior to his illness and, therefore, the providers would not be eligible to receive payment for their services. Thirty-one States have dealt with this problem by providing payment for care of eligibles for periods up to 3 months prior to the month of application. We propose to make 3 months retroactive coverage mandatory on all States having title XIX programs.

This bill also includes a provision, in line with earlier suggestions by the Congress, to prohibit reassignment of benefits, except in specified cases, in order to prevent vendor payments from being made to independent collection and bill discount agencies.

We are hopeful that in this, and other programs, we will establish a more consistent policy of aiding the States to help themselves. Although we will provide technical assistance and models, the States will be encouraged to develop and operate their own systems.

Medicaid Reimbursement Changes

The President, in his message sent to the Congress on February 26, suggested changes in the Federal matching percentage for medical assistance that would encourage States to substitute less expensive care for more expensive care when it is equally beneficial. Our proposal, adopted in the House-passed bill, provides for increased matching to encourage use of selected outpatient health services and for decreased Federal matching to discourage the States from permitting overutilization of institutional services.

This provision would permit the Federal Government to institute a reasonable cost differential between reimbursement made to skilled nursing homes and to intermediate care facilities, thereby incorporating another useful suggestion made earlier by your Committee. Reimbursement disincentives for nursing home care are expected to increase placement of patients in intermediate care facilities (institutions that provide care that is more custodial in nature and at a more appropriate level for many of those in nursing home and mental institutions) and use of home health services.

Experimental Authority

We are aware of your Committee's concern about ways to restrain the increases in cost arising from the relatively open-ended Medicaid program, including the use of insurance carriers, capitation arrangements, and changes relating to eligibility. We agree that there are apparent defects that will be remedied ultimately only by changing the structure of the program. But while we are moving toward a complete change in the program's nature, we need to gain experience with different approaches to providing the benefits, different approaches to eligibility, underwriting, administration, and organization and delivery of services.

We are, therefore, asking Congress to make changes in title XIX to authorize the States to conduct experiments on a Statewide, areawide, county, city, or neighborhood basis. We are interested in encouraging experiments with pre-enrollment of adult categories on an annual basis, the use of different combinations of benefits and different types of benefit packages for different population groups, and limited use of copayments and deductibles for medically needy.

We need to experiment in the way of risk-sharing with private insurance companies, foundations, prepaid group practices, and health maintenance organizations. We would use the authority in this provision to experiment in these types of areas: purchasing private insurance for Medicaid eligibles, capitation or contract payments to States for specified groups, and capitation arrangements with prepaid groups, neighborhood health centers, foundations, and medical societies.

We are also proposing that the Secretary be permitted, through experiments or demonstration projects, to make payment to organizations and institutions for services which are not currently covered under titles V, XVIII, and XIX. These new services would have to be provided in addition to services already covered under these programs, and their inclusion would have to offer the promise of program savings without any loss in the quality of care. The Secretary could also authorize experimentation with the use of rates established by a State for administration of one or more of its own laws for payment or reimbursement to health facilities located in such State.

FINANCING PROVISIONS FOR SOCIAL SECURITY CASH BENEFITS AND MEDICARE

To meet the cost of the proposed changes in the social security cash-benefits program and to bring the hospital insurance program into closer actuarial balance, H.R. 17550 would revise the social security contribution-rate schedules. Under present law, the current contribution rate for cash benefits of 4.2 percent each for employees and employers is scheduled to go to 4.6 percent for 1971 and 1972 and to 5.0 percent for 1973 and after. Under this schedule, there would be unnecessarily large accumulations in the trust funds in the near-future years. For example, the funds would increase by $7 billion in 1971, about $8 billion in 1972, about $12 1/2 billion in 1973, and much more in future years.

Under the bill, for these reasons, the present rate of 4.2 percent for the cash-benefits program would remain in effect through 1974, would go to 5.0 percent for 1975 through 1979, and then would rise to an ultimate rate of 5.5 percent for 1980 and after. Maintaining the present rate of 4.2 percent through 1974 is consistent with past decisions by the Congress to delay scheduled increases in the rates so as to avoid unnecessarily large accumulations in the cash benefit trust funds. Under the bill, the funds would increase by $1.6 billion in 1971, $2.1 billion in 1972, and $3.3 billion in 1973.

The bill would also make changes in the contribution rate scheduled for the hospital insurance program. The hospital insurance fund requires additional income over and above that scheduled under present law in near-future years. Under the bill, the contribution rate scheduled for 1971 and 1972 would be increased from 0.6 percent for employees, employers, and the self-employed to 1 percent each. The rate would then be kept at 1 percent. Under present law it would be gradually increased from 0.6 percent in 1970 to 0.9 percent in 1987 and after.

With the revisions in the contribution-rate schedules, the combined contribution rate for cash benefits plus hospital insurance in 1971 would be 5.2 percent each for employees and employers--the same as present law. The actuarial balances would be -0.15 percent of taxable payroll for the cash benefits program and -0.11 percent of taxable payroll for the hospital insurance program. The estimate for the hospital insurance program takes no account of the saving that should result from the cost-control provisions of the bill, and not taking account of these potential savings represents some margin of safety. The long-range deficit of 0.11 percent of payroll indicated in the estimates, if it actually does develop, would not result in a decline in the HI trust fund before at least 15 years from now.

CONCLUSION

These then, Mr. Chairman, are the major provisions of H.R. 17550. We think they go a long way toward improving all of the programs affected. The Administration, as you know, is continuing to study the social security program with the aid of the statutory Advisory Council on Social Security, which Secretary Finch appointed in May 1969. We recognize that there are several social security matters of importance to members of this Committee and other members of the Senate that are not included in H.R. 17550. These matters will be included in the study being made by the Council, which is reviewing every social security proposal pending before the Congress. As you know, the Council is required to study all aspects of the program and to submit its findings and recommendations not later than January 1, 1971.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer one important cautionary note. The Federal budget is severely strained. I urge this committee to weigh this carefully in its consideration of H.R. 17550. Substantial changes, particularly in total costs or financing techniques, might upset the delicate balance with the requirements of our economy that this bill now enjoys. I sincerely hope that the principal features of this bill remain intact, so that its prompt enactment into law can be assured.

For the present I believe the changes in H.R. 17550 represent significant progress, and I urge enactment of the bill with the changes I have mentioned and the more minor ones referred to in the statement I will be submitting for the record.
