in our society. But great effort will be needed to prevent it. To prevent poverty, we need a nationwide commitment behind the President's war on poverty.

If we are to be successful in ending poverty, leaders in public and private life must give this issue a much higher priority on the list of urgent things to be done than they have for many a day. When so many people are well-off, it is hard for most of us to believe in the hunger of others. Too often in recent years there has been the comfortable feeling that a successful economy has solved most of the problem of poverty and that the rest will take care of itself. This is not true. There are 35 million persons in the United States today living below the poverty line. It is going to take widespread public indignation to do the complete job. And it is going to take a high degree of cooperation, of imaginative working together, by private and public agencies-hard and dedicated work by all of us.

In his Economic Report this year, President Johnson said:

Perennial challenges to economic policy are not fully mastered: but we are well on our way to their solution. As increasingly we do master them, economic policy can more than ever become the servant of our quest to make American society not only prosperous but progressive, not only affluent but humane, offering not only higher incomes but wider opportunities, its people enjoying not only full employment but fuller lives.

Having had the vision of a country without want and seen the possibility, we cannot fail to devote our best efforts towards attaining that vision. A hundred and eighy years ago we undertook to "secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity." The challenge to us now is, while preserving that liberty, to secure the blessings of abundance to all our people. The fact that today we have the capacity to abolish poverty means that we must.
